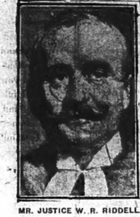
MRS. ANNIE OLDHAM, COMMITTED FOR TRIAL ON THE CHARGE OF MURDER

Mrs. Annie Oldham, of Mount Albert, Ontario, being escorted up the steps of the jail, after being committed for trial on a charge of murder, of administering strychnine to her granddaughter, Shirley. Arriving at the jail she protested against being brought there, and the officers had a brief struggle to get her to walk up the steps. In the attempt she knocked her hat off. The bunch of flowers she carries was brought to her at the court by her daughter.



MR. JUSTICE W. R. RIDDELL.

Who, together with Justice F. R. Latchford, has just handed down the report of the Ontario special commission appointed to enquire into the administration of crown forests. The commission found much o censure in the regime of the former minister, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, M.P.P., who disposed of valuable timber limits to personal and political friends, without competition. The report of the commission recommends a thorough reform of the system of timber control in Ontario.

SCENE OF HOTEL ROBBERY.

A daring sneak thief entered the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, and entered two rooms, stealing over $5,000 worth of precious stones and cash. The owner of the jewels had invested all his money in them. The thief, who is suspected of being an international criminal, took rooms of his own in the hotel, and in the night walked along the ledge, marked by a dotted line, at a height of 125 feet from the street, and thence into the bedrooms of his two victims.

A GIANT GOT FRISKY AND KICKED OUT THIS CHUNK

This is the myth of the natives about this extraordinary rock formation at Lake Okanagan in British Cloumbia, but the government didn't fear the giant's wrath and laid an automobile road right under this stupendous rock formation, rounding this beautiful northern lake. Electric wires driven deep into the rock are connected with a seismograph which tells scientists what is happening within the rock mass and will give warning the first moment the road becomes unsafe.

attitude which has roused comment, it is because I know that this case will figure in criminal annals as the greatest case perhaps in the Dominion of Canada—one which has re-echoed far beyond the seas. People will ask: 'What was the result in the Delorme case?'"

The answer that has come to this question is none the less deplorable because it was generally expected. The verdict is in favor of the priest, but it was against the jury that rendered it.

THE FREE STATE TRIUMPH

The capture of Rory O'Connor and the utter defeat of his rebel forces in Dublin is not only a triumph for the Free State Government, it is the triumph of law and order—the triumph of common sense over pig-headedness. It is to men of the stamp of O'Connor, who combine superstitious ignorance with forcefulness of personality and natural mental astuteness, that Ireland owes her turmoil and her sorrows. Bigotry and the nursing of ancient grudges are the sources of Ireland's unrest and the incentives to vindictive and bloodthristy conflict.

Civil conflict will doubtless continue in other parts of Southern Ireland but the victory of the Free State troops in Dublin coming on the heels of the popular pronouncement at the polls against the Republicans, will go far toward the re-establishment of peace in the troubled Isle of Erin.

PASSING COMMENT

Good morning! Have you been down for a bathe?

It would appear that Scapa Flow was not the grave of Germany's grand fleet.

Toronto is making itself into a holiday resort as well as an industrial centre. Belleville should follow suit.

Rain may be a great thing for making the hay grow, but it might go off till we get it in when it is grown—which leads the staff songster to remark:

"Rain, rain, go away!
Come again when we've made our hay."

Lloyd George is still on deck and will steer the ship of State through the mists into the harbor.

If there were treasure at the bottom of the Moira River, it would be quite safe from divers.

HERE AND THERE

"UP THE HATCH."

Many Londoners of to-day may not know that "halfpenny hatches" were to be found in the 18th century and in the early 19th all round London. These were gates or barriers placed in footpaths over private ground, or in new neighbourhoods, whose owners took halfpennies as toll from strolling Cockneys. The particular hatch mentioned in the following pleasant old song is a Curtis's Halfpenny Hatch, which guarded a passage across St. George's Fields' in Lambeth, behind St. John the Evangelist's Church in Waterloo Road. Some years ago I found that people in this neighbourhood still spoke, as they probably do still, of Palmer Street as "up the Hatch," not knowing, most of them, what they mean. Curtis was, of course, the great nurseryman.

John O'London's Weekly.

THE HALFPENNY HATCH

While some are admir'd,
For charms bought or hir'd;
With neither pride, paint, or patch,
More charming by far
Than all of them are
Is the lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

So neat although plain,
So graceful her mien,
Althought she lives under the thatch;
Though the linen be coarse,
The skin's ne'er the worse,
Of the lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

What though she can't boast,
Like many a gay toast,
Of her jewels, her trinkets, her watch;
Such toys she may scorn,
For they could not adorn
The lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

Her every action
Drives me to distraction;
To see her but lift up the latch
Sets my heart all on fire,
And all I desire
Is the lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

Oh! were she but kind,
And like me inclin'd,
I'd the first opportunity catch
A flame to impart,
Like mine, to the heart
Of the lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

In some happy time,
When our love's in the prime,
If one willing kiss I could snatch,
I'd envy no peer
His lady less fair
Than the lass of the Halfpenny Hatch.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE PROGRESSIVE PARTY.

L'Action Catholique.

"It is still too early to pass judgment on the real political value of the third party, the Progressives, in the House of Commons. In regard to this party group, too much evil has been said on one side and too exaggerated praise bestowed on the other. According to our view, the Progressive element in Parliament has not yet given the full measure of its worth, but it would be misleading to pretend that if has not exercised a very effective influence on the policy the Government has pursued. The splitting of the parties into three groups has compelled the Ministry to move with extreme circumspection, and in this way has inevented a too sudden transition from one policy to another radically contrary, a thing which is rarely desirable considering the disturbing effect such a change is bound to have on the economic condition of the country. The birth of the Progressive party thereof has not; up to the present time, had the mischievous consequences that many politicians and other predicted. With regard to the future, the exigencies of time and space do not permit the moment the comments the occasion, perhaps merits. Events are bound to happen in the early future which will facilitate comment and clear the situation.

BERLIN SIDE-STEPS.

London Free Press.

Quite recently all Berlin was agog with the report thta the Government surely would ask a representative of a neutral nation to be present at the salvaging of the Lusitania.

The idea was that a neutral would be able to testify that the said Lusitania, at the time she was attacked and sunk by the Germans, bore a military character and that by reason of her warlike equipment German military authorities were justified in torpedoing her.

Now the time has come to raise the bulk of the misfortune vessel, the German Government issues a statement that whereas the raising of the vessel is to be the undertaking of a private company, it would not be within the Government's province to make any requests regarding the vessel much less "to demand the presence of a neutral observer."

The present Government is not directly responsible for the acts of the Governmenut under whose authority the vessel was torpedoed, that is true, but very shame's sake, at least, would withhold it from the calling on outsiders to witness the raising of the vessel, the sinking of which is one of the blackest deeds in the crimes.

No wonder the Wirth Government side-steps.

WHAT IS "SECURITY"?

"New and Beautiful" Catchword, Says H. G. Wells.

By "security," in the national sense, is meant the safeguarding of interests. Britain, with her widely scattered colonies, wishes for security for her shipping, and desires a navy of sufficient size to feel sure of this security. France, with the memory of 1870 and 1914, wants to feel sure that she will not have to face another German menace, and so she desires to keep up an army of sufficient size to ensure this. America, with her eyes on Japan, wishes to feel secure against a yellow peril.

There is no harm in the desire for safety, but the trouble is that we demand too much as security.

Mr. H. G. Wells, in his book on the Washington Conference, waxes very sarcastic over the word "security." He says it is a "new and beautiful catch-word," by which nations hide their old-time aggressive and pre-war preparations.

The distinguished writer's impression after Washington was that no power with a coast-line considered itself secure without a fleet at least twice the size of any other fleet that could operate on its coast.

This, of course, leads to the revival of the old rivalry, and a new armament race for "security" instead of for "supremacy." What's in a name?

A curious story concerning "security," which occurred long ago in some eastern equivalent of Versailles, is quoted by Mr. Wells.

The great Abbassid family had suffered heavily at the hands of the Ommayyad Caliphs, and at last it rose in revolt, overcame them, and secured the leadership of Islam.

The remnants of the Ommayyad clan were summoned to witness and celebrate the new peace. But some of the Abbassids, intent on "security," had all the Ommayyads massacred before the banquet began. A beautiful carpet was then spread over the dead and the dying, and on this the Abbassids feasted.

Here was "security" to satisfy the most exacting modern European ideals.

Yet the Abbassids gained little by their struggle for security. They never rose to the glory of the Ommayyads. The drive and strength seemed to have gone out of Arab Islam; despite all this "security," their history is one of division, decline, and decay.

A Pictureless Land.

That the religion of the Arab forbids him to make a picture of any living thing has had a somewhat startling effect.

Forbidden to portray anything that has life, the Arab has apparently thought it not worth his while to portray mere inanimate objects. Thus the land of the Arab, though it blazes with light and color that would make an artist's finger itch, is virtually a pictureless land.

Indeed, unless a native has been much among Europeans he will scarcely understand a picture when he sees one.

But curiously enough there are pictures on a wall of the Bey's palace at Constantine in Algeria. Ships, forts, and houses are painted there so crudely that one might suppose a child had done them.

According to Mr. Willard Price, who recently visited the palace, it seems that an old-time Bey, one El Hadj Ahmed, careless of the Koran and its laws, brought a French captive up from the dungeons, gave him paint pots and brushes and, setting him in front of the wall, ordered him forthwith to adorn it with pictures.

"But I am not an artist; I am a cobbler," the prisoner objected. "All Frenchmen are artists," insisted the Bey. "You will receive twenty-five lashes a day until you begin. But if you make pretty pictures for us you shall go free."

The cobbler promptly turned artist and created what are perhaps the most childish daubs that adorn any palace wall in the world. But the Bey thought they were pretty and set the shoemaker free.

Equatorial Hooch.

The second highest mountain in Africa, Mount Kenia, towers to an elevation of nearly three and a half miles. Its western slopes are 125 miles east of the great Victoria Nyanza Lake. Though it straddles the Equator, its summits are clad in everlasting snow; and, in climbing from bottom to top, one passes through all the climatic zones from the torrid tropics to the Arctic. Th the black people of that region c choose their own climate when selec ing a spot in which to dwell. The have also a cooling luxury which w have not. It is unlimited beer. Th negroes of the Mount Kenia region are great beer-drinkers, and their method of imbibing the beverage is particularly sociable. A number of them gather in squatting posture about a great bowl of it, each of them provided with a long "straw," which is the hollow stem of a vine native to the country. By this means they suck from the common receptacle in a true spirit of conviviality.

Oriental Women.

Women are beginning to do the work of men in the near eastern countries, a thing unheard of before the war, according to Mary Mills Patrick, president of Constantinople Woman's College. "To-day we are called upon to teach practical subjects;" she said. "We have opened a commercial department to train girls for office work. They are in such demand that we can scarcely keep them through to finish a short course. If they have the slightest knowledge of business methods and can speak a little English they are snapped up for office work in Constantinople." Women are also taking up courses in scientific agriculture, she said.

Diamonds.

Diamonds are in many colors, such as black, blue, red, pink, green, and yellow. Black diamonds are extremely rare, and come from Borneo.

Bells and Their Tone.

The quality of tone in many old European bells could be accounted for only by their age. After careful investigation, an ingenious bell-maker determined that with a century of use the bell clapper and the inner surface of the bell became so worn that they fitted exactly and a considerable surface of each came in contact. Accordingly he cast a bell and a clapper in a form that gave them a considerable contact surface to begin with. The result was all that he had hoped. A month of lively ringing is still needed to give any given bell a tone of the desired quality, but the economy in time is obvious.

Young Brides Please Note

Halos or husbands, rubber gloves, hanging up father's coat and providing him with dry socks when his feet are wet are a few important secrets of holding a husband, in the opinion of Canadian statesmen. Government researches show that husbands are not nearly so slippery when clutched with rubber gloves as when caught barehanded.

The federal government at Ottawa have invaded the realm of the women's pages in our daily newspapers. That gallant French gentleman, the minister of health, is official sponsor of a series of little blue books which are designed as a guide through life for engaged girls. Each volume of wisdom is prefaced by a poetical gem such as

"I lift her little toes
"And there behold . . ."

"If you want to grow beautiful roses
You must first grow them in the heart."

Young Bride's Fatal Mistake

The young bride is warned that the most fatal mistake she can make is to attempt to tell her husband anything he does not know.

"Do not hurt his feelings, as men are over sensitive," says the official adviser when discussing the perils of trying to tell one's husband anything.

"Wives should listen to what their husbands have to say, and should always keep a mirror handy in the kitchen. Pretty arms should be allowed to show."

Ah, here is a gem of real wisdom. "Pretty clothes help you a lot," announces the pamphlet. "We can all put things over better if we are properly dressed."

But how exasperated we are a little farther on when we are cautioned thus: "Do not spend all your money." Just when we had decided to buy a perfectly wonderful evening gown we saw marked down to $145 and find out how our charms were holding out with our eleven-year-old husband (eleven years since he lost his liberty).

The Family Washing

"Before you know it, the head of the house may find himself doing the family washing for the fun of the thing" is another prophecy in the government publication. Ah, Dr. Beland has never met ours or he wouldn't be so optimistic.

"Ashes should be kept in ash cans," is the next revolutionary statement that hits us in the eye. We have always preferred to keep ours in cut glass bowls until the dustman calls for them.

"Learn to cook early," is a sensible adjuration. Fair warning is given that culinary experiments are death to romance. We have all heard the joke about the bride's stony biscuits.

"Don't forget how father feels. To make him welcome and keep him comfortable, happy and healthy is a great achievement and a great pleasure," says the little book. "Never mind all the hard knocks you have had. Things don't matter if you don't let them matter." Have some fun. Save up and have it. Hurrah for a holiday.

Every husband and every prospective husband in Canada should write to the department of health at Ottawa and ask to have the little blue books sent to his best girl. It is reported that the males of the United States are up in arms since they read the solicitous advice for the care of husbands given gratis by the Canadian government. The American men feel that their Congress has treated them like neglected children.

WOMEN AND LITERATURE

"It is less than a hundred years," says Mr. J. C. Squire in the "Book of Women's Verse," since Southey wrote to Charlotte Bronte: 'Literature cannot be the business of a woman's life, and it ought not to be.' But the work of Mrs. Browning, Christina Rosetti, and Emily Bronte, was very soon to give the lie to Southey's words, characteristic as they are of the popular opinion of his day. For these literature did indeed become the passionate business of life.

"Eminent among recent and contemporary women singers stands Mrs. Alice Meynell; then there is the excellent work of Dora Sigerson Shorter, Margaret L. Woods, Rose Terry Cooke, Violet Jacob, Anna Bunston de Barry, Moira O'Neill, Frances Cornford, Eva Gore-Booth, Katherine Tynan, Rose Macaulay, and Sylvia Lynd—and that list is, of course, by no means exhaustive. Women have indeed won and consolidated their position upon Parnassus, and we shall never hear again the male critic condescendingly appraising the 'Female Muse.'"

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Both Mother and Daughter

Lumsden, Saskatchewan.—"My mother had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and when I needed something for my periods I took it and got good results. I recommend it to women with any female troubles and I know other women who have been helped by it and do the same."—Mrs. Max Retzer, Lumsden, Saskatchewan.

Many cases like this come to our notice. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is often recommended by the mother and the grandmother too, for bear in mind, it has been helping women for nearly fifty years.

DOUBLE FEATURE BILL AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

If you want to make a journey back stage, you should see William DeMille's splendid production, "After the Show," which is being exhibited on the double feature bill at Griffin's to-night to Wednesday. The picture mirroos the lives of those behind the footlights, who mask the sorrows and tragedies of their own lives with a smile and a song, that the world may be amused.

A complete theatre setting with audience hall, orchestra pit, stage and back stage areas, with dressing rooms, wings, flies and all the typical stage accoutrements, was constructed at the Paramount studios in California where the picture was filmed.

For the theatre sequence, a gorgeous musical show was staged, in which thirty beautifully gowned and costumed girls took part.

The sketch was rehearsed for some weeks before actual filming started. The studio grips, stage carpenters and electricians employed in the scenes were all perfectly at home in their roles. The scenes were perfectly at home in their roles. The scenes were prepared at an enormous expense.

The principal characters of the story are Jack Holt, the wealthy backer of the show; Charles Ogle, the old stagedoor man and Lila Lee the little chorus girl who, having played in amateur theatricals in her home town, comes to the city to win fame. Out of the lives of these three characters comes a powerful and gripping drama.

The Universal City Flying Field, a completely equipped area of a quarter section, was used for filming some of the scenes of "Heading West," the 5 reel western drama starring Hoot Gibson which is being exhibited on the same program. The hero enters the story by airplane and adds breath taking air stunts to the theme, being the story of a war veteran who came home in time to impersonate himself in a plot to steal a great land inheritance belonging to him.

A 2 reel Sunshine comedy is also announced for presentation on the same program.

FALL OF CHURCH IN RUSSIA

Control of Church Affairs Turned Over to "Red Clergy"

Moscow, June 30.—The great Russian Orthodox church, which for centureis was probably the most important social factor and one of the most important politically in Russian life, seems to have gone to pieces itself, rather than to have had any effect upon the Bolshevik government, in its first direct conflict with the Soviet regime.

Whatever may have been the underlying purpose of the Communist government in directing the requisition of church treasures for relief of the famine sufferers, the requisition itself has succeeded in splitting the church. Scores of priests are under arrest and revolutionary tribunals throughout the country are trying them for counter-revolution for theft and secretion of church valuables without any particular resentment on the part of the parishoners. Patriarch Tikon the head of the church, abdicated when faced with trial by the civil courts on the charge of opposing the requisition. One of the men he suggested as his possible successor, the Metropolitan Benjamin, of Petrograd, is also to be put on trial, and in the meantime the control of church affairs has been turned over to a group known popularly as the "red clergy."

This group, pledged to simplify the church services and to work in harmony with the Bolshevik government already has taken over a number of churches. It is headed by Bishop Antonin, of Moscow, who early in the conflict that developed over the requisition of treasures, volunteered to assist the Soviet government. Now Antonin's planning to secure close co-operation between church and state by appointment in the Russian cabinet of a commissar for church affairs.

The actual value of church treasures of Russia probably was several hundred million dollars, but the requisitioners obtained but a small proportion of this amount. They secured tons of silver, much gold, and thousands of precious stones, but for every diamond studded mitre, the requisitioners found one or two similar articles listed as stolen or missing. For the theft of these, and for open agitation against requisition there is scarcely a province in Russia where churchmen have not been arrested. In addition to the eight priests, one woman and two laymen sentenced to death at Moscow, and the four sentenced at Shuya, other death sentences are being imposed. Except at Shuya, however, none has been carried out, and it is generally believed in Moscow that most of those convicted will be pardoned or receive reduced sentences. General Brusiloff, one of the heroes of the Russian war against Germany and Austria, has interceded for his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Barbara Ivanova, Brusiloff, the woman sentenced to death in the Moscow trial.

Old residents of Moscow have told the correspondent that the arrests of the clergy were not resented because Russians ordinarily had very little respect for the priests. They were devout in their church worship but regarded the clergy, particularly in the villages, as men who charged them for all the services the church rendered, making them pay for births, marriages and deaths.

ANGLICANS AGAINST MISSION SCHOOLS

Toronto, June 30.—A protest against Anglican participation in the missionary educational scheme of the Canadian school of missions has been circulated and it is intended to present a petition to the house of bishops at their meeting in Toronto in September.

The petition sets out in part that this document in its acceptance of the ecumenical councils, that is to say, the decisions on matters of faith morals and government set forth by the assemblies of all the bishops and lay representatives of the undivided church—accepts and endorses the action of the primitive and undivided church in her treatment of those who through pride, wilfulness, malice or ignorance held false doctrines within the body of Christ. It also accepts the statements of the ecumenical councils that who hold such doctrines have thereby [illegible] division, have broken the [illegible] of the body, and have destroyed their fellowship with that visible society known in history as the Catholic church.

MARSEILLES HAS RED TENDENCY

Great French Port Wants Trade Relations With Soviet Russia

Marseilles, June 30.—Soviet Russia has firm supporters in Marseilles. Everyone from the docklaborers to the wealthy manufacturers wants Bolshevik Russia's trade. The petition of the Marseilles Chamber of Commerce for the reestablishment of trade with Russia produced such an impression on former Premier Briand that he went far toward bettering Russian relations. Northern France rebelled and France's attitude at the Genoa conference did not appeal to Marseilles with its idle shipping and smokeless factories, and pressure is being brought by Marseilles interests of all sorts to effect some settlement at The Hague conference which will facilitate France's trade relations with Black Sea ports.

Marseillles is the greatest flour milling city on the Mediterranean. Before the war one-fifth of its flour mill products went to Russia. It also had a great Russian trade in soap and oil.

The population of Marseilles is so largely industrial that the Socialists are always in the majority. While the Marseilles Socialists frequently fly red flags and display sympathy for Bolshevik Russia, they are really "faint pink" in contrast to the Russian Communists. On the occasion of the recent municipal elections in which the Socialists won their usual overwhelming victories there were many parades in celebration of their successes. Red flags and banners demanding the release of French sailors who are still in prison for refusing to fight the Bolsheviki at Odessa, were displayed. The mutiny of the French navy at Odessa, when it was ordered to attack Soviet forces in 1918, has always been a favorite theme with French Socialists of the extreme type, who also opposed the Wrangel and Denikin movements.

To the party of American bankers who were visiting here at the time of the recent election excitement the residents of Marseilles, who realize how largely Russia's collapse has contributed to economic depression in France's great Mediterranean port.

Marseilles has an immense foreign population engaged in shipping and industrial pursuits. Italians, Greeks and Levantines outnumber Frenchmen on the docks, Arabs, Turks, Mohammedans, Algerians and Egyptians, frequently wearing their native costume also contribute to the international character of Marseilles' waterfront.

Plenty of work at good wages clearly means more to this cosmopolitan crowd than political beliefs, but Bolshevist agitators have found willing listeners among the unemployed.

SOVIET OFFICIALS VISIT PALACE

Parliament of Russia Gets Glimpse of Former Royal Quarters

Moscow, June 30.—Three hundred members of the All Russian Central Executive Committee, the Parliament of Russia, mostly peasants and workmen recently had their first glimpse of the magnificent quarters in which the Czar lived when in Moscow. The committee met in the Great Palace at the Kremlin which has not been in any way deranged during the revolution, except for the placing within its great reception and ball rooms of red covered wooden tables and ordinary benches which contrast startlingly with the gilded columns, marble walls, jasper fire places, silk hangings, and gilded and crystal chandeliers.

The throne room was used as a meeting hall. The hall of St. George in white and gold with its parquet floor of rare wood, which was once a ball room where the royalty and nobility of Russia danced when in Moscow, was a lounging room tramped over by booted peasants who lined up like soldiers when the call for dinner to be served in an adjoining room was sounded.

The committee men were served with cabbage soup and black bread, a meat dish and tea at tables covered with Royal linen but equipped with cheap china and tin spoons. While most of the members were roughly dressed and soft shirts or blouse coats predominated, higher officials of the Soviet government who appeared to present legislation wore stiff white collars, and some of them could even be described as "smartly" attired

PUMPKINS AND PEAS GROWN 300 YEARS AGO

London, Ont., June 29.—W. Wintenburg, Government archeologist, who has been engaged for several months investigating the old Indian fort on the farm of R. Lawson, on the Fourth Concession of London Township, is reported to have located many interesting relics revealing something of the life of the unwarlike Attawandaron tribe, nearly 300 hundred years ago Pumpkins and peas were part of the Indian diet, if evidence discovered in various caches are to be relied upon.

CLOVER CROP YIELDS WELL

Most Grain Crops in the Province Also Look Promising

The cutting of alfalfa and sweet clover has been the feature of the week in field work. Yields of both crops have been good. Some of the sweet clover has been put in the silo, but a number of farmers are curing it for hay. Several farmers in Waterloo are cutting the crop with the binder and then curing it by shocking.

Red clover is looking much better than was expected in the spring, and an average yield is now looked for. Cutting will soon start.

All the grains are more or less promising. Fall wheat has headed out well and a good general crop is looked for. The same may be said of winter rye. Barley is starting to head, and gives promise of a good yield. Oats are also vigorous looking. All the grains, however, are hardly as long in straw as in some years.

There is a good outlook also for nearly all varieties of orchard fruits, taking the Province over. The ravages of the canker worm in some districts, however, have been discouraging.

Strawberries have been yielding well this season. During the last week prices were running at about 10 to 12 cents a box to growers, with higher prices for fancy picked. Raspberries are not doing so well, owing to winter injury.

Early sown corn is looking fine, but that put in late is not promising very well. South Simcoe reports a poor germination of seed corn generally.

Elgin says that beans have a larger acreage than last year and are coming up well.

Considerable millet and buckwheat has been sown by farmers in Lennox and Addington.

Prince Edward reports that tomatoes are somewhat backward in growth on account of cold and wet weather, but that the stand is good. There is an increased acreage of seed peas in the county, but about ten per cent of it has been attacked by blight.

In the Kenora district a few bales of last year's hay were selling to teamsters at $20 a ton.

Several representatives speak of the fine appearance of cattle on the grass, as copious showers during the last three weeks have afforded excellent pasturage.

Oxfords holds that men who are selling cream and feeding hogs are making out better than the cheese factory patrons this year.

Some cheese factories in Middlesex are paying as low as 85 cents a cwt. for milk. The price in some factories in Lennox and Addington has sunk to 75 cents a cwt.

Lennox and Addington says: "Cheese factory owners are all testing milk in accordance with the rules of the Dairy Standard Act and are finding the work much easier and simpler than they at first anticipated."

Grey observes that many young cows are to be seen around the farms, and also "quite a number of colts."

Haldimand reports a shortage of hogs, with a strong demand for young pigs, which are selling at from $8 to $10 each when six weeks old. In Middlesex prices are quoted at from $6 to $8.

Kenora reports that there is every indication of a heavy honey crop in that district. The bees that were brought from Texas this spring have done well, and have already had from two to four supers.

Bruce states that there are six trucks on one concession line, and that there is a danger of too much duplication and added cost for the business to be done.

Farmers are finding themselves without sufficient labor at the beginning of harvest, as efficient men are hard to get, although from $35 to $45 and even more, is paid per month with board. Many farmers will rather drag through the season than use indifferent help.

THESE TORONTO LADS WANTED TO BE JOCKEYS

Hamilton, Ont., June 28.—With visions of the successful careers as jockeys, John Fraser, 113 Bristol Avenue, and Thomas Roberts, 87 Bristol Avenue, Toronto, left their homes late Sunday night, and catching a truck on the Highway, stole a ride to this city and commenced "training." Their hopes were shattered by the sudden appearance of the East End police at the track this afternoon, who arrested the pair aged 15 and 14 respectively, for the Toronto authorities on a complaint laid by their parents. The boys had obtained employment at one of the stables and were quite happy until the police informed them that they must return home. They were taken from the track to the Children's Shelter where they will spend the night. Their parents have been wired and are expected here to-morrow to take home the young adventurers.

Introducing Mr. 14.

At half-past two of a sunny, sultry afternoon late in the month of August, Mr. Benjamin Staff sat at table in the dining-room of the Authors' Club, moodily munching a morsel of cheese and a segment of cast-iron biscuit and wondering what he must do to be saved from the death-in-life of sheer ennui.

A long, lank gentleman, surprisingly thin, of a slightly saturnine cast; he was not only unhappy, he looked it. He was alone and he was lonely; he was an American and a man of sentiment (though he didn't look that) and he wanted to go home; to sum up, he found himself in love and in London at one and the same time, and felt precisely as ill at ease in the one as in the other of these, to him, exotic circumstances.

Inconceivable as it may seem that any rational man should yearn for New York in August, that and nothing less was what Staff wanted with all his heart. He wanted to go home and swelter and be swindled by taxicab drivers and snubbed by imported headwaiters; he wanted to patronize the subway at peril of asphyxiation and to walk down Fifth Avenue at that witching hour when electric globes begin to dot the dusk of evening—pale moons of a world of steel and stone; he wanted to ride in elevators instead of lifts, in trolley-cars instead of trams; he wanted to go to a ball-game at the Polo Grounds, to dine dressed or he pleased, to insult his intelligence with a roof-garden show if he felt so disposed, and to see for himself just how much of Town had been torn down in the two months of his exile and what they w going to put up in its place. He wa in short, his own people; more fically he wanted just one of them, ing to marry her if she'd have him.

Now to be homesick and lovesic at once is a tremendously distu state of affairs. So influenced, strongest men are prone to folly. for instance, had excellent rea doubt the advisability of leaving just then, with an unfinished play hands; but he was really no m a mere, normal human being, want very badly to go home. a sharp struggle, it was a short prefaced his decision.

Of a sudden he rose, called f and paid it, called for his hat got them, and resolutely—y furtive air, as one who wou dogging conscience off the the premises of his club, sh through Whitehall and Cha Cockspur Street, where, wit ing instinct of a homing dodged hastily into the boo a steamship company.

Now Mystery is where and Romantic Adventure is be come upon infesting the cal premises. Mr. Staff was mysteries and the last role in in which he could fancy himsel of Romantic Adventures. Bu spect he can see quite clearly there, in the humdrum and prosa ting of a steamship booking-office, that he first stumbled (all unwittingly) into the toils of his Great Adventure.

When he entered, there was but one other person on the outer or public side of the booking-counter; and he, sticking close in a far corner and inaudibly conferring with a clerk, seemed so slight and unpretending a body that Staff overlooked his existence altogether until circumstances obliged him to recognise it.

The ignored person, on the other hand, showed an instant interest in the ap ance of Mr. Staff. You mig thought that he had been waiti latter to come in—absurd as t seem, in view of the f that made up his mind to b within the last quart less, on sight of him of the company, wi then to be of two m wanted, straightene freshened interest which the clerk had counter for his advis ment after Staff had wishes, the other pe of the chart with a thin finger.

"I'll take this one," he said q

"Upper'r lower?" enquired h

"Lower."

"Then-Q," said the clerk.

Meanwhile Staff had caught the eye of an impregnable young Englishman behind the counter; and, the latter coming forward, he opened negotiations with a succinct statement:

"I want to book on the Autocratic, sailing tomorrow from Liverpool, if I'm not mistaken."

"Quite so," said his clerk, not with condescension. "For yourself, may awk?"

"For myself alone."

"Then-Q." The clerk fetched a plot.

"I'm afraid, sir," he said, remo pencil from behind his ear the be make his meaning clear, "there much choice. It's quite late to you know; and this is the rush for westbound traffic; everything about full up."

LEAFS SHUT OUT AT ROCHESTER

WISNER SHUTS THEM OUT 5—0; GONZALES AGAIN INJURED

Rochester, N. Y., July 2.—The Toronto Leafs played a one-day stand here this afternoon, losing by 5 to 0. Long John Wisner, aided by sterling support, turned back the Toronto clubers, while the homesters hammered Bill Tayler out of the game in less than three innings, John Enzmann, with his age and experience, was a successful relief pitcher.

"Red" Wingo, who was a hero in the last Toronto series here, could do nothing to-day. The home-run clouter had a chance to break up the game in the third with men on first and second, but missed an inside curve for the third strike. Archdeacon robbed Wingo of a triple in the eighth, catching the ball on the terrace in centre field.

INJURED AGAIN.

Mike Gonzales, who was hurt in a collision with Hillis in the sixth, made the feature play of the day, a one-hand catch of Fothergill's line drive in the fifth. The Cuban converted his circus catch into a double play, as Merkle had started with the crack of the bat, and could not regain first base. Onslow and Jones also "kicked in" with some brilliant work.

Rochester sewed up the game in the first inning. Archdeacon opened with a double to left. Brady "died" on strikes, but Connolley planted a single in a left, Archdeacon scoring. Merkle crashed a double against the left field fence, and Connolley counted. Fothergill was passed, and Murray drove a single to centre, scoring Merkle with the third run of the inning. Hillis struck out, and Jones made a pretty play on Lake's hopper.

LL DAY RAIN STOPS GAME WITH LEASIDE

AM MOTORED DOWN BUT THE BALL DIAMOND HERE WAS FLOODED

What it was, the Belleville Base- Club ever did on the god of Thor known, but surely there must be hing between them.

rday was the third time this sea- hat wet weather has prevented a l Ontario League baseball game s city, for Leaside and the Trunks o call their game off. Rain fell ily during the greater part of the , and the ball park was flooded. The s tried to get word to the Leaside yers early Saturday morning but they left early, and motored all the way down in a fleet of Durant motor cars.

The opening game of the season, between Cobourg and the Trunks, was called off on account of rain, but has been re-played. Then another day they were slated with Port Hope, and it again thundered and rained.

It is expected that if these two postponed games do not affect the standing in the first schedule, that they will not be re-played, but just the same it means the loss of two good gates, (one a holiday gate) to the local club.

It is to be hoped that the locals get at least their share of the breaks during the cond schedule, in play and otherwise.

N. Y., July 2.—Employ- s as caddies on golf cours- icinity has aroused to ac- yside Civic Association. receiving a vigorous protest Mrs. Jennie L. BURWASH INMATES HAVE HOLIDAY SPORTS

Burwash, Ont., July 2.—The third annual track and field meet of the Burwash Industrial Farm on Dominion Day was most successful. In addition to nearly 400 inmates and the institution's staff and families there was a large attendance from Toronto. Sudbury and other points.

There were twenty-two events on the very interesting program. In the morning a baseball game was played between Byng Inlet and the Burwash inmates, the visitors winning. Excellent prizes were awarded for all of the contests and were presented by Magistrate James Edmund Jones of Toronto in the evening. The meet was held under the auspice of the Burwash Athletic Association of which Superintendent N. S. Oliver is Honorary President; J. R. Elliott, President, and George W. Boag, Secretary-Treasurer. Among those from a distance were Lorne Fowler and F. M. Stafford of Sudbury.

NOT ALL PRANKS ARE ON CIRCUS PROGRAM

An Impromptu Skit Behind the Scenes of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus.

Psychologists who have made a study of the circus and its people, state that continuous practice is not the only thing that keeps the performers youthful. Light-heartedness, the merry games in which they enter into between shows and the atmosphere of pure fun and play that at all times attends them, is, so students say, responsible for their wonderful physical condition.

The accompanying picture is typical of the spirit of fun that always prevails in the "behind the scenes" portion of the big circus. An admirer has presented the pretty equestrienne with a box of bon-bons. The clown is the possessor of a "sweet-tooth," but before he is allowed to share in the sweetmeats the rider demands that he bark his very best bark.

The followers of the "white tops" are indeed "children grown tall." Age plays little part in their actions. Jules Turnour, a clown past his seventieth year, is as agile as the youngest of his fellows. He can turn a "flip-flop," walk the length of the hippidrome track on his hands or, without the slightest effort place both heels at the back of his neck. Yet Turnour is not a contortionist. He is merely a circus performer who has retained the spirit and suppleness of youth. In the great new Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined Shows are several aerialists between forty and fifty years old.

What is undoubtedly the greatest galaxy of arenic stars that have ever been assembled on one program is now touring America's two most famous circuses. Aside from the entertainment furnished by these hundreds of daring artists it is said to be worth much to watch them from a purely physical culture viewpoint The mammoth super-circus with its new wonders is to exhibit here on July 6th.

NUKOL MEN FOUND GUILTY

Conspiracy and Theft of Company's Funds is Established

Toronto, June 30.—Found guilty, after a trial which lasted 17 days, on three counts of conspiracy, theft of, and receiving "a large sum of money," Hiram F. Slater and Leslie J. Thompson, Nukol Company promoters, were remanded in custody until Monday morning by Judge Coatsworth in Criminal Sessions yesterday afternoon. The jury was out about an hour and a half. Some of the jurors stood for a recommendation to mercy, but sentiment was divided. Arthur G. Slaught, K. C., will apply for a reserved case this morning.

Slater and Thompson were charged with conspiracy, theft of and receiving $400,000 belonging to the Nukol Fuel Company during the years 1919, 1920 and 1921. The company was formed to place briquettes on the market and shares were advanced from 10 cents to two dolars in market prices. Slater and Thompson in promoting the company, received thousands of shares, some of which were sold to persons who were not made aware of the fact that they were buying personal holdings. Mr. White, in addressing the jury, contended that the case against the men existed only because of the activities of a certain faction on the board of directors.

"With respect to the ten counts of forgery against Slater, they will not be proceeded with," said J. C. McRuer, Crown Attorney. It was Mr. McRa- capabl conduct it was co

NO CIRCUS PARADE.

There will not be a street parade of the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circus which plays in this city on Thursday of this week.

Many enquiries have been received regarding the rumor to this effect, so The Intelligencer investigated the rumor and found it to be true.

The reason that there is no parade, according to the circus advance men, is that the show is so large that it takes the employees all their time to prepare for the afternoon show, let alone the mid-forenoon parade.

GERMANS LIKE CHOCOLATE CANDY

SINCE THE WAR THIS "LUXURY" HAS BECOME VERY POPULAR

Berlin, July 3.—Chocolate candy, the war-time "iron ration" of armies has become increasingly popular since the war among the laboring people of Germany despite the hand-to-mouth existence in which they are forced to live because of low wages and high prices. The workers here are said to have usurped the pre-war position occupied by the middle classes as the greatest consumers of this "luxury."

Simultaneously with comment in the press on this anomaly in the workingman's budget, figures are announced which show that the German laborer today is receiving wages barely sufficient to keep him and his family in the necessities of life.

Clara Bohm-Schuch, Socialist member of the Reichstag, reporting in VORWAERTS the results of an inquiry into worker's living conditions, declares higher wages are necessary and that the present state of affairs is due to the practice of usures in agriculture, industry, and trade.

Interviewing an industrialist, she writes, she was told that diligent workers in his establishment received "good" wages at about 1,150 marks a week, equal to about $4.00 in American money. She sought out a mechanic and found that was the exact amount of his stipend, and that he supported a wife and child on it.

She cites also the case of a barber's family of five, including three children between 10 and 15 years of age, which lived on the man's salary of 1,000 marks a week. In a third family of four, the budget was based on earnings of 3,800 marks a month.

LARGE CONCOURSE ATTEND FUNERAL OF MURDERED FARMER

Moult was expecting him to come in to his dinner at any moment. Barry, it was stated, put his head out of the barn door and called to the house, saying that Mr. Moult had gone across the field to mend the fence.

Shortly afterward Barry came into the house, but refused to eat any dinner, as he said he had been hit in the stomach with a baseball the day before. Mrs. Moult, however, prevailed upon him to take some pudding, which he did.

Barry, according to the story told by Moult's relatives, then took out the car and drove to Plainfield. There he met a young man named Fred Cameron, whom he asked to go with him to Belleville that evening. Cameron promised that he would do so.

Barry at once returned to the Moult farm and drove the car into the garage, but he seemed restless and backed it out again. He then drove down the road to Parks' Creek where he met Fred Barber who was fishing.

Accused Gets Away.

Barry asked Barber if he would drive the car back to the farm while he stood on the foot board, as he said he wanted to see what was wrong with the engine. Barber said he could not drive the car, but he rode back up the road with him.

By this time Mrs. Moult was greatly concerned about her husband's absence for so long a period, but Barry kept telling her not to be uneasy as he would be sure to return shortly.

After he had milked the cows, Mrs. Moult insisted upon Barry going to the farm of Mr. Coffey, where he said Moult had gone. He pretended to go to this farm and returned, saying that Mr. Moult had gone to Shannonville.

By eleven o'clock in the evening Mrs. Moult was greatly alarmed and neighboring farmers were called in and began a search. Barry began to make plans for his escape. While the men were searching the barn he is said to have put a ladder to Mr. Moult's bedroom window and taken about $75.

About 1.30 in the morning Barry tried to make off in the Moult car, but, owing to there being no lights on, he ran the car into a fence, upon which he made off.

Later he tried to take a car out of the Sargent farm, but the switch had been removed. A revolver was also missed from the house of Mr. E. R. Wilson, father of Mrs. Moult.

Had Revolvers.

The Intelligencer was also informed by the relatives that Barry had two revolvers, and that one was a 32 calibre. They stated that Wesley Moult had no firearms.

The Moult family is one of the oldest in the district. Samuel Moult, father of Wesley Moult, is 77 years of age and lives within a mile or two of Wesley's farm on the old homestea d. Mr. Samuel Moult' s father was a native of Staffordshire, England, and settled on the site of the present homestead when the country was covered with forest.

Mr. Samuel Moult has two other sons: one, John Franklin, is a jeweller in New York; and the other, William Claud, is a farmer in Alberta.

Wesley Moult was married twice, and had one son by the first, and four children by the second, the youngest being only five months old, the eldest, four years.

THEATRICAL MAN FOUND DEAD

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 3.—William C. Strachan, known in Canadian theatrical, brokerage and advertising circles was found dead in his room at McGill College Avenue over the week end following the inhaling of gas. He was married to Lotta Linthicum, well known actress of early nineties. A letter found in his pocket read in part, "Maude you doubted my word when I told you that I was doing jumping off act and laughed, tell them to cremate me and not bury me in family lot. Scatter ashes." His wife entered divorce proceedings some time ago.

Yeast No "Fad" Say Scientists

The greatest scientific minds agree that yeast is one of the most important medical discoveries. No method of banishing skin eruptions or building health has yet been found which can equal it. This is because yeast contains certain vital elements which are lacking in the modern diet. Already millions of people have secured amazing benefits from yeast. Recently, however, a new process has been discovered, called "ironization," through which people are securing benefits from yeast in just half the usual time. This process, embodied only in Ironized Yeast, helps to immediately convert the vital yeast elements into firm tissue and rich pure blood. If weak, thin or run-down—or if troubled with pimples, blackheads or boils, it will pay you to try Ironized Yeast at once. To try Ironized Yeast entirely free simply mail postcard for Famous 3-Day FREE Test. Address Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Dept. 87, Toronto. Ironized Yeast is recommended and guaranteed by all good dealers.

30,000 Islands-Georgian Bay

It is impossible to describe this wonderful waterway with any degree of satisfaction, Nature having been so generous in beautifying and adorning it and having dowered it with so many gorgeous scenic effects, including rugged promontories, intricate channels and narrows, and vast amphitheatres of open water. This entire district is so full of interest and altogether so charming that to go there once is to want to return and take your friends. The air is dry and bracing, and a sure cure for hay fever. There is no end of good fishing—deep fishing for big fish and fly fishing for black bass. And for those who do not care to fish, there is motor-boating, a row or sail, bathing and dancing, lawn tennis and other pastimes. And always there is the wildwood that welcomes, rejuvenates and sends the visitor home with happy memories. The principal gateway is Midland, 101 miles north of Toronto and reached by the Grand Trunk. Free copy of interesting publication with map and list of hotels sent for the asking. HIKERS WAY AGAIN VISIT OUR FAIR CITY

Brantford, July 3.—General Riley and his assistants, who have been here organizing local veterans for another march on Ottawa, are confident that the hike which commences from Brantford on Wednesday will be an impressive one. They have signed up about 250 veterans here. Route of march has not been announced, but it is known that detachments are expected to join Hikers at Hamilton, Toronto, Port Hope, Cobourg, Belleville, Napanee and Kingston.

Surplus Strength of the Mutual of Canada

THE Mutual Life of Canada is the first life insurance company in the Dominion to assign definitely the whole of its surplus funds to specific objects.

After strengthening its reserves beyond the government requirements, the company's general surplus, representing the excess of assets over liabilities, amounts to

This fund has been assigned as follows:—

First—Provision for dividends under Deferred Dividend policies issued prior to 1911	$3,688,146.75
Second—Provision for interim dividends under Quinquennial policies	277,897.66
Third—Provision for dividends payable 1922	1,500,000.00
Fourth—Provision for Mortality fluctuation and other Contingencies	324,476.29
	$5,790,520.70

This statement, more complete than has been called for by the Government, discloses a notable financial strength. Indeed the financial position of the company is so sound and its dividend earning capacity continues to be so favorable that a further increase in dividends has been decided upon for the year 1923.

SOCIALIST GOVT. IN AUSTRIA

SEVERAL SUCCESSIVE MINISTRIES HAVE FAILED IN LAST TWO YEARS

Vienna, July 3.—With the Christian Socialist-Pangerman coalition ministry formed in succession to the Schober non-partisan bureaucratic cabinet which fell recently, Austria enters upon another experiment in government.

Ministry has succeeded ministry since the Social Democratic majority was overthrown in the elections two years ago and left no party with a working majority in the National Assembly. Each has assumed office under greater difficulties than its predecessor. Despite the superficial betterment in living conditions due to widely bestowed charities and foreign credits sufficient at least for food, and the fact that the constantly depreciating money increases in quantity and still has internal purchasing power, this new ministry faces an actual economic and financial situation conceded to be worse than has hitherto existed.

When the Seipl government took office the krone was 11,300 to one dollar. It is stated that the recent British credit was virtually used up in an effort to stabilize the currency. For two months this policy succeeded in holding the krone around 7,500 to the dollar, but recently the dam broke and it fell at the rate of 1,000 kroner a day.

Prices of necessities have risen to world parity and above, and the new municipal socialist rental tax, while yielding the landlord nothing, has increased rents enormously. This tax goes to the city for a building and repair fund for the amelioration of housing conditions.

The consequence has been the natural one, of demands for higher pay by all classes, from government employes to unskilled labor. The recent Schober government granted the enormously increased demands of the civil servants and met them, together with other obligations, by means of the money printing presses until the currency circulation has reached the astounding total of over 420,000,000,000.

Industrial employers, however, have offered resistance and in instances affecting some 200,000 employes, they have denounced existing wage agreements. The issue has become a sharp one. So far the labor unions have shown a moderate and conciliatory spirit and have avoided an open break.

Employers claim that they can no longer manufacture for export in competition with Germany where wages and living are far lower than in Austria, even on a gold basis. The instability of the krone, its wide and sudden fluctuations, also make it impossible, they say, to deal in future contract. Export is practically at a standstill and there is wide unemployment.

This is the situation which confronts the bourgeois ministry of Monsignor Seipl, by far the most reactionary in its make up that the republic has had. The new chancellor is a cleric and considered one of the cleverest politicians in the country.

The Christian Socialist-Pangerman combination throws the Socialists into a hopeless minority in the National Assembly and it is very freely predicted that the new conservative coalition will undertake to wipe from the statutes many of the laws placed there by the Socialists when they were in control. The Socialists still have one weapon, however, in the fact that financial legislation requires a two-thirds vote of the Assembly, which the coalition cannot muster.

The Pengermans have made it distinctly understood that the working agreement with the Christian Socialists must terminate with the generally believed imminent elections. At the same time they have not abandoned the slogan of fusion with Germany. In a recent speech their President, Dr. Dinghoeffer, emphasized the statement that the absence of any clause in the Austro-American peace treaty stipulating that Austria remain an independent state was a "great and joyous asset."

BERLIN IN STATE OF PANIC FEARING NEW REVOLUTION

Max. Harden Is Assaulted In Berlin

Jewish Journalist and Socialist Leader is Marked for Assassination—Seriously Injured by two Men With Blackjacks.

BERLIN IS IN FEAR OF REVOLUTION

Berlin, July 3.—Maximilian Harden, the Socialist leader, while walking home to his villa in the Grunewald, a suburb of Berlin, at 8.45 o'clock tonight, was assaulted by two men with blackjacks. Covered with blood, Harden was just able to reach his home, where he collapsed and was taken to a hospital. His injuries are serious, but not fatal.

One of his assailants who was captured had a blackjack and a dagger in his possession, and a card of membership in "The Association of Nationally Minded Soldiers," a reactionary, Monarchistic and anti-Semitic organization of war veterans.

Rumors of Attack

A sensational telephone report has just reached me to the affect that armed reactionary forces are secretly gathering at Potsdam, prepared to invade Berlin tomorrow afternoon while the workers and radicals are demonstrating. This is a sample of the wild and disquieting rumors which are rampant in Berlin, largely owing to the fact that the newspapers are not appearing and the public, accordingly, is completely cut off from all news.

Will there be bloodshed in Berlin streets tomorrow? That question many are anxiously asking tonight, including the Wirth Government. There is no evidence of a highly organized plot, backed by serious military force, to capture Berlin and overthrow the Government, as on the occasion of the Kapp counter-revolution, but there is real danger of counter-demonstrations by reactionaries and Monarchists, causing clashes with the workers and Socialists and provoking the security police into firing on the crowd.

Soothing Mob Passions

The leaders of the Labor unions and the three Socialistic parties, who are staging tomorrow's gigantic demonstration, and who have been active in inflaming the masses of their followers, are now trying to put on the soft pedal. A proclamation from the leaders of the demonstrating working masses warns against the demonstrators letting themselves be "provoked" by agents provocateurs of the reactionaries, saying: "The Monarchists and reactionaries hope for disorders and clashes tomorrow. It would be all in their interest if blood flowed. Maintain order and discipline tomorrow, for the good repute and the honor of your Labor unions and political workers' parties are at stake."

To Enlarge Cabinet

Tomorrow's demonstration against reaction and for the new law for "safeguarding the public" takes place at a new and more dangerous scene. Instead of being held in the centre of Berlin, in the Lustgarten, opposite the ex-Kaiser's palace, it will be held in the fashionable West End section, with the central point at the Kaiserin Augusta Victoria Memorial Church, thence extending up and down the Kurfuerstendamm, along the broad, handsome avenue, lined with expensive restaurants, cafes, expensive shops and highclass residences. The workers for the first time are determined to demonstrate on Berlin's Fifth avenue, which is also the main highway leading to Potsdam. The most important political development of the last 24 hours is that it is inevitable that the Wirth Coalition Government will be enlarged and reconstructed to include the Independent Socialists, who are only one remove from the Communists. This would result in the Government of Germany being preponderantly radical in character.

Coalition in Sight

The Rathenau murder has had the effects of drawing the rival Socialist parties together. The Majority Socialists have written a letter to the Independent Socialist party, asking if the latter was willing to enter a Coalition Government. The Independent Socialists have replied that they are

THEY DID AND THEY DIDN'T

(Canadian Press Despatches.)

Dublin, July 4.—An official bulletin issued at noon today says the Glenfarn Barracks at Leitrim, near the Ulster border, held by National Army troops, was attacked simultaneously by Irish irregulars and Ulster specials from different positions. The small garrison stubbornly resisted, says the bulletin, but eventually was forced to yield to combined forces.

"Absolutely Untrue."

Belfast (Later).—Ulster constabulary headquarters this afternoon stated that the Free State report saying Ulster specials participated with Irish irregulars in the capture of Glenfarn Barracks at Leitrim, was absolutely untrue.

CITY PLAY GROUNDS OPENED FOR SEASON

Large Crowds of City Children Congregate for Opening Monday

Both East Belleville, and West Belleville play grounds were formally opened on Monday morning for the season, when a large crowd of children were in attendance at both play grounds. More than 150 children were present at the West Belleville play ground which is at the rear of Queen Mary School, and an equally large crowd attended at the East side play ground.

Miss Gertrude Lloyd is supervisor of the West side, and Miss Bessie Vanderwater is her assistant. Miss Marjorie Bird is supervisor of East side with Miss Doris Roe as her assistant.

The play grounds will be in operation until September 1st; and are opened from 10 a.m. till 12 noon and then from 2 p.m. to 5.30 p.m.

Through the thoughtfulness and kindness of the late Thomas Ritchie, the children of the city, which he loved so well, now benefit by his generosity. The late Thos. Ritchie presented the grounds and all the apparatus necessary for the success of a children's play ground, to the city, and to-day we find the toddlers playing in the sand piles, the elder children swinging, sliding, playing basket ball, enjoying the miniature round-a-bouts and the other recreations made possible by him.

They are away from the household, where, (collectively) they have been known to be more or less mischievous. They are off the streets where dangerous motor cars abound, and they are enjoying healthy exercise, with their pals and under supervision. Can you beat this service?

Much talk is heard about how to make our children better Canadians, but this is one commendable and concrete example of the actual making. That's what Canada desires to-day too, service, not frills or words.

Children of all ages, to the number of 300 were in attendance at the East Bridge Street Childrens' Play Grounds this morning when the Intelligencer man passed by.

This is an ideal spot for a play ground and the children take full advantage of all the equipment provided for their enjoyment. This year much new and difficult work will be taken up, such as the teaching of folk dancing and the singing of childrens songs. All these services are free of charge.

These play grounds have been in operation for the past ten or twelve years at no cost to the city whatever, the late Mr. T. Ritchie having paid the supervisor's salary. The ladies in charge, through donations and otherwise have equipped and maintained it and have now a very complete play ground.

CECIL OUTLINES WORLD PEACE

Scheme for World Disarmament Presented to League of Nations.

PLANS RECEIVED

To Come to Aid of Nations in Time of Aggression

Canadian Press Despatch.

Paris, July 4.—The plan for general world disarmament which was laid before the temporary mixed commission on disarmament of league of nations yesterday afternoon by Lord Robert Cecil of Britain was presented in full detail at this morning's session of the commission. The plan is said to have been favorably received by most of the delegates.

According to the plan, all nations would sign the general disarmament agreement and would agree to go to the defence of nations in their respective regions or continents in case of aggression. The permanent military commission would be divided into four regions and only the powers in each region would be obligated to aid the menaced nation upon the commission's recommendation.

Paris, July 3.—Three projects for general world disarmament were placed before the temporary Mixed Commission of Disarmament of the League of Nations by representatives of Great Britain at the Commission's opening session, this afternoon. Despite a lengthy speech by the chairman, M. Viviani, of France, to the effect that the disturbed political situation throughout Europe imposed the greatest caution on all the powers who were considering disarmament, Lord Robert Cecil declared that the League must make some definite progress toward world disarmament in the near future.

The first of the three projects, which were carefully prepared by the British Admiralty, calls for extension of the obligations of the Washington naval limitation treaty to 15 other powers who were not signatories of the Washington pact, thereby making the Washington agreement universal. The plan, which was laid before the commission this afternoon by representatives of the Admiralty, has been approved in detail by the British naval experts. It is in the form of a treaty. After a short discussion it was decided to refer it to the naval section of the permanent military commission of the League.

The second plan, proposed by Lord Esher, calls for land disarmament on a ratio basis similar to the ratio system worked out for naval reductions. The third scheme was suggested by Lord Robert Cecil. It provides for general disarmament, naval, military and aerial, in return for which all the powers are to enter into a pact to protect each other from aggression.

BOY SHOT WHILE SNIPING FROGS

Donald Gunn of Toronto Wounded on Saturday But X Ray Fails to Reveal Bullet

Peterboro, July 4.—Donald Gunn, son of Brigadier-General John A Gunn, of Toronto, received a bullet wound in the left side from a small calibre rifle while shooting frogs near Kawartha Park on Saturday morning in company with the son of Mr. E. Wyly Grier, the widely known Toronto artist. He was brought to Peterborough on Saturday evening and at the Nicholls Hospital was attended by Doctors G. S. Cameron and C. H. Amys. Several examinations by X-ray had up to noon to-day failed to locate the bullet, which is believed to have been ejected from the wound. It was reported that two small holes were found in the boy's sweater and one in his undershirt that would correspond with only one puncture of his flesh near the ninth rib.

Dr. Amys said the boy's condition appeared to be highly favorable, and that he had rested well since he was admitted to the hospital. The accident is said to have been caused by the jamming of the breach of the rifle while in the hands of young Grier.

DELORME MUST STAY IN ASYLUM

Question of Insurance Raised—Priest Elated as he Goes to Confinement

Montreal, July 3.—Miss Rosa Delorme, full sister to Father Delorme, could not be reached this morning, but her half-sister, Lily, who was adjudged mentally deficient by alienists during the trial when asked what the family would do about the insurance on Raoul's life, said: "Don't bother me about that. I don't know anything about it. Why do you ask me, anyway? Go 'way."

GOING TO ASYLUM.

Judge Monet's report to the provincial authorities was forwarded to Quebec to-day requesting the transfer of Delorme from the Bordeaux Jail to one of the provincial asylums. One copy of the report went to the sheriff; another to the Bordeaux prison, the authority to deliver the prisoner; and the third to Quebec. This procedure removes Delorme from the status of ordinary asylum inmates in that he can never leave the institution of his own accord or upon an application of the family. Should he ever leave, it will be to stand trial on the charge of having slain his half-brother.

A life of ease and plenty confronts him, however, as, while in the asylum, he may enjoy a private apartment, have his own private wine and liquor, and everything that he enjoyed within his own home, except the privilege of giving parties. He will be permitted to entertain on a modest scale and his sisters will have free access to visit him regularly.

As Delorme was taken away from court on Friday last, he seemed particularly elated and turned to one of the Crown alienists under whose charge he will be, if ordered to St. Jean de Dieu Asylum, remarking: "Now I'll have my opportunity of setting myself right with the public. I shall write my story for the newspapers and let them know what my defense would have been if my lawyers had only listened to me, instead of going ahead as they did without my consent. I'll tell the public everything, and then, they will see that I should not be sent to the asylum and that I should be freed immediately of the unjust charge which was laid aginst me."

While in the asylum every little comfort which Delorme may desire will be given him providing of course, his sisters or his administrator who will be appointed by the family council, will agree to pay for them. Personally, Father Delorme will not have one word to say about the spending of his own fortune henceforth.

NORWOOD REUNION REACHES CLIMAX

Old Boys and Girls to the Number of Over 2,000 Spend Day in Town

Norwood, Ont., July 4.—The Old Boys' and Girls' Reunion reached its climax here to-day, when over 2,000 visitors were in town. The best of weather did not prevail, but the spirits of villagers and their hundreds of guests were in no way dampened. The day's program started when at 9 o'clock the public and high school bells summoned the grown-ups back to school. Addresses were delivered, and the Secretary, Miss B. Pearce, reporting having received a letter from Major-General R. W. Leader, an old Norwood boy now stationed in India, expressing his deep regrets at being unable to be home for the affair. G. A. Brethen, M.P., delivered one of the addresses.

In the afternoon a program of sports and horse races at the exhibition grounds had the crowd. An Inter-County baseball league game was played between Warkworth and Norwood. It was started in the morning, but after two innings, when Warkworth had two runs and Norwood none, on account of the rain, the game was called. It was finished in the afternoon, with Warkworth ending at the best end of a 7 to 6 score. The result of the game was to tie Hastings, Norwood and Warkworth for second place in the league standing, with two wins and four losses.

Campbellford defeated Hastings in an exhibition junior lacrosse game by the score of 14 to 12.

One thousand dollars in prizes drew out a good racing card. Bub, owned by P. Moyse, Port Hope, won first money in the 2.15 class; Darky Todd, owned by M. Storey, Peterboro, won the 2.20, and City Princess, owned by W. Elmhirst, Keen, the 2.40.

A large number of concessions established on the grounds did a land office business. Music was furnished by the First Northumberland band, Campbellford. The evening's program was featured by a garden party and dance in the Armories. Latest figures on the registration show that over 700 have so far signified their presence. Tuesday is the last day of reunion, and on Wednesday the army of old boys and girls will begin to leave for their homes in all parts of the country and United States. The officers of the Reunion Association were highly pleased to-day at the ease with which the entire program was unfolded, and in every way the affair has come up to expectations. It is hoped to make it a decennial event, and before the curtain is finally rung down it is hoped there will grow out of it a historical association that will begin working on plans for an accurate record in picture and print of the early days of the thriving East Peterboro village.

FLYING SQUAD. TO ENFORCE LAW

Thirty Motorcyclists to Serve Ontario in Triple Capacity

BERTILLON BUREAU

Fingerprint Records to be Kept in Systematic Manner

Toronto, July 4.—The addition to the provincial police force of a squad of thirty motorcycle policemen, and the establishment of a central bureau for the filing of criminal records on the Bertillon system, are two of the changes at present being considered by police officials at the Parliament Buildings.

Although plans have not yet been perfected, it is proposed that the motorcycle squad should act in a triple capacity—as enforcers of the traffic laws, the O.T.A. and the ordinary criminal law. At the present time the traffic laws are under the administration of the Highways Department, which has fifteen men patrolling the provincial highways. The relation of the proposed force to this feature of their work is to be the subject of discussion between General Victor Williams, provincial police commissioner, and Hon. F. C. Biggs, Minister of Highways, during the week.

General Williams intimated yesterday that the creation of the new bureau for criminal records would be only a matter of time. His purpose was to secure the services of an expert who would be able to give instruction in the taking of finger prints and recording data on other methods of identification, he said yesterday when interviewed. This expert would have charge of the new bureau.

Trail Motor Bandits.

Touching on the addition of the motorcycle squad to the police force, the commissioner stated that the increased use of motor cars by criminals made it absolutely essential that the police be equipped with a similar high-powered means of transportation. Under the proposed plan, the province would be divided into districts, and one or two men would be responsible for patrolling the main roads in each district. Immediately a crime was committed in any one district, word would be sent out to the patrols in the surrounding districts, who would watch all likely routes of escape. Under such a system, pointed out General Williams, escape, once a crime was known, would be much more difficult than at present.

The motorcycle "cops" would also keep an eye out for transportation of bootleggers' supplies via the highways. The commissioner further explained that if the scheme went through the men in each district would have complete responsibility for enforcing the law on the roads within that district. Headquarters would be established in each of the districts, where the patrolmen might be found by the public when not actually on the road.

Bertillon Bureau.

Although the Bertillon system of identification of criminals is in use in practically all the larger cities of the world, it appears from the General's remarks that there has been no systematic keeping of records at the Parliament Buildings. Measurements were taken in the past only in some cases, and usually the records were sent to Ottawa. The result was that when a provincial police officer wanted to secure information he was forced to go to the City Hall or to send to an outside point. The new bureau to be established at provincial police headquarters will do away with that difficulty.

In conjunction with the bureau, the commissioner proposes to employ an expert, who will be sent out through the various inspectorates to give certain officers in each district instructions as to how to take finger prints and other records. These when taken, will be forwarded to the bureau at Toronto for filing purposes.

PREMIER KING ADDRESSES ZIONISTS

Ottawa, July 4.—Premier King addressed the Zionists in convention here this afternoon and expressed his sympathy with the aspirations of the Jews world over, for some land of their own. Man without country had lost what was best in citizenship, he said, and love of homeland was one of the contributing factors to the highest and best in humanity.

WHAT MOTIVE FOR MURDER?

Father of Mrs. Moult Says Moult had Words Over Breakfast About Not Feeding Horse

Conjecture is still rife as to the motive of the alleged murder of J. Wesley Moult, the Tyendinaga farmer, by Maurice Barrie.

Mr. Edward Wilson, whose daughter Lillian married the late Wesley Moult six years ago, stated that at the breakfast talk on Thursday, the day of the tragedy, Wesley Moult said to Barrie, "Did the horse get away on you last night?" referring to a horse Barrie had been driving.

"No," replied Barrie.

"Why didn't you feed it then," queried Moult.

"I did."

"No you didn't," retorted Moult. "I put grain in the box and the horse hadn't touched it. It was outside."

On Thursday morning Barrie was working out in the fields and he had a little twenty-two calibre rifle with him that he usually carried. At noon Barrie did not come in, and Moult made no remark beyond saying, "Go on, we won't wait any longer." The last thing Moult did in his home was to put his little boy Wesley, two years old, to sleep, and then he went off to the barn, making the laughing remark to the hired girl, "You had better come out and look for him—he may have fallen into the well."

Twenty minutes later, Mrs. Moult went out to the barn, where Barrie met her at the door of the cowshed and asked, "What are you coming out here for?"

"I am coming out to feed the chickens," Mrs. Moult explained. She did not see her husband around, and wondering, she asked Barrie where he had gone.

"He's gone out to the field," replied Barrie.

MR. MILLIGAN TALKS TO LIONS ON "JOURNALISM AND LIFE"

"Journalism and Life" was the subject dealt with today at the weekly luncheon of the Lions Club, held at the Chamber of Commerce building. The speaker was Mr. J. Lewis Milligan, who recently assumed the editorial chair at The Intelligencer office. Mr. Milligan emphasized the importance of the profession of journalism and referred to its far-reaching influence.

He expressed the opinion that there was not sufficient personal journalism in Canada, and that many brilliant writers were covering their lights beneath a bushel. In closing Mr. Milligan said it was fitting that he should make his first address on Journalism in Belleville, as it was here he started out on his journalistic pilgrimage, in June, 1913. The speaker thanked the members of the Lions Club for the courtesy extended to him and wished for the club the best things dreamed of in life.

Burns' Grandson in B.C.

By John o' London

It may be news to a great many readers of this paper that there is now living a great-grandson of Robert Burns. This is Mr. Robert Burns Hutchinson, who is sixty-five years of age. Descended from Burn's second son James Glencairn Burns, he was educated at Cheltenham College, and he practiced for some time as an accountant in London. Many years ago he found an opening in British Columbia, where he has been greatly respected as a hard-working professional man. Up to fifteen months ago, when there came a serious depression in trade, he had been able, through a long married life, to maintain and educate his family. But as Burns said, "the best-laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft agley." So it has been with his male descendant, who now on the threshold of old age, and with a wife and two younger children dependent on him, finds his resources gone and the future dark. An appeal is now being made for funds to give him a helping hand, and I am certain that thousands of readers of this paper who have received untold inspiration and happiness from the poems and songs of Robert Burns will be glad to know of it. Among the patrons of this fund are the Earl of Rosebery, one of the most ardent Burns-lovers in the world and the Honorary President of the Burns Federation; Lord Shaw of Dufermline, and Sir George Younger. The committee, headed by Sir William Noble, is also a most distinguished one, and it is by its permission that I draw my readers' attention to this effort.

A Poet of Pity

No British poet has known more of the ills and distresses of life, or has written of them with manlier courage and sympathy, than Burns. His own troubles made him feel deeply for the troubles of others. Success, as the world defines it, never came his way, or only as a mocking mirage. It is true that he was often his own enemy but he was the friend of all who were poor, disillusioned, and assailed by "misfortune's bitter storms."

He was a man of many moods, and he sang of the sorrows of life, as he did of its joys, in many keys. If he is ever bitter, his bitterness is as short-lived as it is restrained.

"Poortith"

Yet with all his quenchless courage Burns understood the chill of poverty, its galling tethers, its closing doors. In his song "O Poortith" (O Poverty) he sings from a full heart:—

O poortith cauld, and restless love,
  Ye wreck my peace between ye;
Yet poortith a' I could forgive
  An' 'twere na for my Jeanie

O why should Fate sic pleasure have,
  Life's dearest bands untwining?
Or why sae sweet a flower as love
  Depend on Fortune's shining?

"O, Wert Thou in The Cauld Blast!"

In one of the most exquisite of all his songs, written on his death-bed in honour of the young woman Jessie Lewars, who tended him while his faithful Jean was unable to do so, he makes of compassion and love one great emotion. He told Jessie one morning, from the bed on which rheumatic fever had laid him, that if she would play him any favourite tune she loved, and for which she would like to have new words, he would do his best. On the piano she played, several times, the air of the old Scottish song:—

The robin cam to the wren's nest,
And keekit in, and keekit in.

The dying bard caught the melody, and in a very short time gave to his young nurse, and to the world, the the beautiful lines beginning:—

O, wert thou in the cauld blast,
  On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
  I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee.
Or did misfortune's bitter storms
  Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield should be my bosom
  To share it a', to share it a'.

After this, Burns was able to rise occasionally from his bed, and was even able to pay a short visit to Brow, on the Solway Frith, to try sea-bathing. Here he met his old friend Mrs. Walter Riddel, and dined with her one day. "The stamp of death," she afterwards wrote, "was imprinted on his features." They had much to say to each other. In greeting his hostess Burns said, with a brave gleam of humour, "Well, madam, have you any commands for the other world?" He was now thinking much about his family, and about the child which Jean was expecting.

"Why am I Loth?"

He returned safely from Brow in July of 1796, and a few days later all Scotland was in tears. Men and women knew then, to the full, what a great heart had burst, and what a great voice was hushed. Years earlier Burns had written his touching "Prayer in the Prospect of Death," beginning:—

Why am I loth to leave this earthly scene?
  Have I so found it full of pleasing charms?
Some drops of joy with draughts of ill between:
  Some gleams of sunshine mid renewing storms.

I have shown that human help is needed to-day for Burn's great-grandson, and I cannot doubt that it will be sent from our readers in all parts of the world. For Burns is the world's as he is Scotland's, possession. Statues of him have been multiplied more than those of any other man, and his songs have braced and sweetened every air that Anglo-Saxons breathe. The opportunity arises to fulfil toward Burns and toward ourselves some part of his noble prayer:—

That sense and worth, o'er a' the earth,
  May bear the gree, and a' that
For a' that and a' that,
  It's coming yet for a' that,
  That man to man, the warld o'er,
Shall brothers be for a' that.

ENGLISH STILL CONTROLS SUDAN

GEN. ALLENBY SAYS BRITISH WILL CONTINUE TO AID COUNTRY

Alexandria, Egypt., July 4.—General Allenby, British High Commissioner for Egypt, during a recent visit to Khartoum, delivered an address in which he indicated British purposes in the Sudan. He said in part:

"I notice some fears among the Sudanese peoples regarding a less intimate future association between Great Britain and the Sudan for the development of the country. Such intentions are not those of the British government, and as a confirmation of these words I cannot do better than mention to you the speech of the British Premier in the House of Commons Feb. 28, 1922, when the question of independence of the Sudan was discussed. Here are his words:

'I must speak first of the Sudan which is very important for the British Empire. Sudan deserves our good attention. The combined efforts of England and Egypt have been necessary to preserve the country from devastation and ruin.

"For the last 20 years England and Egypt have worked both with men and money to re-establish peace and prosperity in a country which must and will be some day in the near future as fertile and as populous as it could ever possibly be. The British Government will never allow the progress already realized and the great promises of the future to be put in danger, nor will it ever consent to any change in the by-laws of the country which would deminish the safety of the millions of British capital devoted to the development of the Sudan.

"On the other hand, Egypt has got the undeniable right of demanding full guarantees so that the development of the Sudan may not threaten the actual water distribution in coming years. The government is ready to give these guarantees, and there are no reasons why these should prevent or delay the progress of the Sudan."

"I think these words are sufficient to reassure you and I hope that, once back to your homes, you will tell your people that England is not abandoning this country."

DIAMOND MINES ARE CLOSED

PEOPLE OF KIMBERLEY, SOUTH AFRICA, SUFFER AS A RESULT

London, July 4.—Every class and industry in Kimberley, South Africa, is suffering as a result of the closing of the De Beers Company, diamond mines, and an appeal for help has been made by the Bishop of Kimberley, Bishop Gore Brown, for his diocese. This appeal is backed up by Lords Buxton, Gladstone and Selbourne, who have put it forward to the people of this country through the medium of the Times.

The closing of the mines which was due to the unsatisfactory condition of the diamond market, has affected practically the whole population of Kimberley, which depends almost for its very existence upon the diamond industry. Both whites and natives are employed in the mines ordinarily, but a large number of white men have been discharged and are out of work, while those who have been kept on are receiving only half-pay, or less. The natives, for the most part, have been returning to their homes and are receiving no wages. The shops are dependent upon the employment of the miners, and the farmers depend upon the workers for the sale of their product.

The closing up of the mines has dried up the sources of supply for the Bishop of Kimberley's diocese, which is twice the size of Great Britian, with a sole endowment of £530 a year for the Bishop's stipend. Stipends and allowances to the amount of £400 a year, formerly paid by the De Beers Company, have been suspended, and it is not possible to raise money in Kimberley for the diocese. "If help is not forthcoming," say their Lordships Buxton, Gladstone and Selbourne in a letter to the Times, "the greater part of the spiritual work among the natives and whites must be stopped."

An emergency fund has been started here. A minimum sum of £2,000 to £3,000 is required to tide the Bishop and the diocese over the abnormal difficulties in which they are involved until the mines reopen.

Regina, July 4.—"Give us a little more of what you call a square deal," asked Chief Loft, President of the League of Indians of Canada when addressing members of the Rotary Club here yesterday. "Do not think so much of the almighty dollar and of station. It is to you white men that we are going to appeal on behalf of the Indians."

A thousand horses tried and 800 found wanting. In other words, but 200 out of the entire number were sufficiently equipped with "horse sense," coupled with physical beauty, to "make good" as performers.

That is the assertion of Manuel Herzog, John Mayer and M. Dupree, the master trainers who spent a year in Europe assembling the companies of acting horses that are this season one of the big, new features of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined Circus. Contrary to popular belief, elephants are more intelligent than horses.

"One out of every two elephants can be taught to perform an average number of tricks," says Herzog. "But it is rare when one out of four horses will have the necessary qualifications. Very often an extremely beautiful horse will prove to be absolutely rattle-brained."

One of the finest of the equine companies is that performed by Herzog. The animals are arrayed in blue and silver trappings and that the audience may better follow the intricate drills, bear metal numbers ranging from 1 to 12. At the conclusion of their act the horses are led into a state of confusion by their grooms after which merely to the music of the band and without the slightest word of command, they find their places in sequence of numbers.

Twenty blooded high-school horses ridden by riders of international fame form another unusual display. These include an absolute novelty in the introduction of performing Percherons—handsome fellows weighing more than two thousand pounds each who strive to outdo their more agile Arabian cousins.

Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Combined will exhibit here next Thursday afternoon and night for the first time since the consolidation of these two famous shows.

RUSSIAN REFUGEES A MENACE IN EUROPE

Geneva, July 4.—Russian refugees are present in such large numbers in the countries of Eastern Europe that they have become a serious and threatening problem. Millions of them are scattered over the country; labor markets are depressed, and they are in want. The commissioner here of the various societies engaged in Russian relief has issued an appeal to public opinion in "the great overseas countries" to help solve this menacing problem by relaxing their immigration restrictions and taking in some of these unfortunates.

SWEDEN ADOPTS POLICY OF ECONOMY

Following United States, They Will Standardize All Manufactured Products

Stockholm, July 4.—Sweden has launched a country-wide movement for the standardization of manufactured products. There is to be a central standardization organization, under government control, under which subsidiary committees will conduct research work and make recommendations for various lines of manufacture.

In the building, machine and electrical industries standardization has existed for some time; the present purpose is to extend the idea, and cause standard types to be officially and universally recognized.

In this move Sweden is following the United States. It is cited here that a certain American tool manufacturer has reduced the number of types of hammers, axes, files and sledge-hammers he makes from 2,752 to 751, and that an American paper concern reduced its types of 10 per cent of the number previously manufactured. Great economy resulted in each case.

A CIVIC SWITCHBACK

The "rocky road to Dublin" has "nothing on" Station street. Visitors to Belleville who board the bus at the Grand Trunk station must think they have got on a switchback railway by mistake.

A motion to mend that roadway would be quite in order, as it is a poor advertisement for Belleville at the present time. This is not the only road within the city limits that needs immediate attention, but it would be a good place to begin upon. Here is a job for our new engineer—when we get him.

PROTECTION IN SHIPPING

"Should Canada sell her ships?" is the subject of a timely editorial in the Toronto Daily Star, in which the Ottawa Government is asked some pertinent questions. "It appears to be taken for granted in the press—or rather in the despatches which come from one source and another to the daily press—that the Canadian fleet of government-owned steamers will be sold or given away and the country go out of the shipping business"—says The Star. "Has the Ottawa government arrived at any such decision? It is true that the fleet of steamers cost a great deal to build because they were constructed in war time to relieve the shortage of ships, and it is true that they are not making money. The excess cost of these ships should properly be written off as a war cost. This should be done now when the nation owns and operates them, for we may rest assured that it would be done before any private corporation would buy and operate them."

It is pointed out that shipping in Canada is in its infancy and that every industry has to creep before it walks. We entirely agree with the Star's attitude on this matter, and we are glad to note that it has thereby endorsed whole-heartedly the first principle of protection.

IS LIVING CHEAPER?

It will be of interest to many householders and particularly to housekeepers to learn that the cost of living in Canada has declined since July, 1920, approximately 40 per cent. This will come as good news to many people, and most of us would like to know when it is to become operative. So far, while some things have come down in price, the descent has not been felt to the extent of 40 per cent. in the last two years, at least we have not been able to save that proportion of our incomes.

But it must be so, for we are confidently assured that it is so by the Dominion Department of Labor at Ottawa. The items which have declined most, so we are told, are food and clothing, while the only item which, instead of declining, has increased, is rent. The principal reason for this latter unpleasant fact, it is stated, is that there has been no reduction of wages in the building trades, similar to the redustion which has taken place in general industry.

The Intelligencer would like to mildly challenge the statement of the Department of Labor when it tells us that the cost of living has been reduced 40 per cent. in the last two years. In comparing the records of prices of articles of food in Belleville in December, 1920 with those that prevailed in this city at the end of May last, we find no such reduction, and nothing like it. Here are a few facts:

Beef (sirloin), in December, 1920 was 35 cents per pound, in May last it was 28 cents per pound. Bacon (not sliced) was 48 cents per pound in December, 1920, and it was the same price in May last. [illegible] price of fish has not changed; milk has decreased in price from 14 cents to 8 cents and flour from $1.75 to $1.45 for a 24-pound sack. Sugar is the only item in the food bill that has been cut down in price to anything like 40 per cent.

The foregoing are a few of the staple commodities and from a rough reckoning of comparative figures we estimate that the reduction in food prices on the whole is not more than 15 per cent. If, as we are informed, rent has gone up, what becomes of our saving on food? We have not here touched on the matter of clothing, but if there is a reduction in this line it certainly does not amount to 40 per cent. in the last two years.

PASSING COMMENT

Nova Scotia is welcome to its distinction as the Canadian 'quake zone.

The Methodist Stationing Committee is not always able to make its decisions stationary.

We are told that only half of the people of Toronto go to church—fie! Toronto the good!

The Council should advertise for tenders on Station Street pavement at the earliest date.

De Valera is reported to be with the rebel garrison in Dublin—his position would be the inner Court.

The City Council should not engage a new engineer until it is sure it has the right man.

We are now told that Palestine is not to be the home of the Jewis race. Few Jews in Canada nad the United States appear to be home-sick.

A man was fined in Toronto for driving his car without lights. We have met motorists who should have been jailed for driving with lights that render pedestrians blind.

First impressions, they say, are the most impressive and judgments are based upon them—what then must the judgment of visitors be when they enter Belleville via Station street?

HERE AND THERE

JAPS SHOW GOOD TASTE.

The Japanese are crazy over the moving pictures, and they particularly like American plays that have a lot of gun-play and Wild West scenes. Their greatest trouble is that there is so much kissing in American movies, and the Japanese consider that the spectacle of a man kissing a woman is a highly shocking one, and one not fit to be shown on the screen. Therefore the films have to be carefully censored, and one poor over-worked censor complained that in one week alone he had to cut out twenty thousand kisses, and he demanded, with tears in his eyes, to know whether Americans spent all their time kissing each other.

Mr. E. V. Lucas writes in Punch of his friend Golateer, who recently unbosomed himself as follows:—

"Nothing is so tiresome as to be asked, as I continually am, if I have read this and that new book, usually a novel, and what I think of it. . . . The rule is that a man who writes must want to talk about writing. We are credited with understanding or desiring nothing more exciting than a busman's holiday.

"Useless, however, to state the contrary: the examination still goes on.

"'Have you read "Sexuality Made Easy"?'

"'No.'

"'I think you ought to. It's so extraordinarily clever, and handled with such discretion, too. Of course you've read "The Happy Mormon?"'

"'No.'

"'How odd! But there's a treat in store for you. And Mr. Hyacinth Gore's new story—you've read that?'

"'No.'

"'You surprise me. I always thought that writers were so eager to read what their rivals are doing, even if they don't care much for sheer beguilement, as I do. But you can't have missed Ora Fedora's "Passion Fruit"? It's the modernest thing and the most ancient. Surely you've read that?'

"'No.'

"And so it goes on."

NEW LESSONS.

"No more school!" said the boy one day,
As he hastened to put his books away.
And he laughed as he gave his cap a turn—
'School's out! No more lessons to learn!"

The June wind smiled as he softly blew;
"Such a silly boy I never knew!"
He chuckled aloud. "Why, I can show
Him a thousand things he ought to know!"

Then a honey bee buzzed as he passed him by,
And glanced at him with a puzzled eye;
"No more lessons? How can that be,
When I know a great deal more than he!"

And a robin aloft on a leafy spray,
Laughed as the boy put his books away;
"Does he think all knowledge is writ in those!
Why, he knows not the life of a single rose!"

And a wind-blown daisy, swaying low,
Winked her golden eye as she saw him go—
"Oh, the school is small and the world is wide!
He'll find lessons are taught outside.'

So the boy put his books safe away on the shelf,
And into the field he went himself—
Learning new lessons (unguessed) from the breeze,
And the birds, and the flowers, and the honey bees!

WIT AND HUMOR

Dear Little Souls!

"I don't understand why mothers can't see the faults in their own children," said Mrs. Grey to Mrs. Green.

"Do you think you could?" asked Mrs. Green.

"Certainly I would, if my children had any."

Familiar Sound

The static was such that the radio transmitted nothing but a babble of voices and a jumble of sounds.

"What's that?" asked Henrietta, who sat near the horn.

"I don't know," replied Robert "but I think some women's club is just letting out."

Force of Habit

"Enter," said St. Peter, at the gate The shade hesitated, gazed about uncertainly and started back to earth.

"What's that matter with that spirit?" asked an idolent angel who was lounging near the pearly turnstile.

"He used to be a plumber's assistant," said St. Peter. "He thinks he forgot something."

Certainly

"What can I do for you, Lars?" asked Lawyer Brown, in his Main street office.

"Vell," said Lars, "Ay vant some damages on Olson."

"Olson, the veterinary? Tell me why?"

"Oh, you see, my cow won't eat, so I tell Olson, and he give me bottle medicine to fix it. He say to put funnel in cow's face, den pour in med'cine and cow vill get hungry.

"Ay ent have regular funnel, so I ask Olson vil dinner horn do. He say it vill do.

"So Ay shove small end of dinner horn in cow's face and pour in med'cine. At vonce dat cow get so hungry she try to eat de horn. But she can't—it stick in her neck. Den she cough and de horn go toot. Cow get scared and run up de road, coughing and tooting.

"Purty soon she come to de river. De man on de drawbridge tenks a boat ban tooting, so he open bridge and my cow fall in. She get drowned, too, so I tenk Olson should pay."—Judge.

THE GHOSTS OF BATH

The folowing is an extract from an article on the city of Bath that recently appeared in the Times:—

"It was fortunate in the Roman invasion. It played a memorable part in the history of England. It was the place in which Beau Nash first proved himself to be a great reformer of manners—to be a man who, crowned with a white silk hat, ruled society with a prophetic sense and knew the power of humour in good governance. It was a place where royalties disported themselves, and lords and ladies—not always too lordly or too lady like—lived in the finest mansions that the eighteenth century could build.

Not an Ignoble Street

"There is not an ignoble street in the old part of the city. Indeed, there is not a 'street' at all. Every thoroughfare is a parade or a crescent, with here and there a court. It was a place where, for their sins, the elder aristocrats took the waters, and it is to be feared not for their virtues, the young danced and frolicked. It was a place where, one can well believe many a buck and beau might have whispered to a beauty:

'Would you could make of me a saint,
Or I of you a sinner.'

"It displayed a strange mingling of the daintiness and the coarseness of life. Imagine a water festival in a tepid bath, the men in canvas waistcoats and breeches and the women in yellow robes with various coloured ribbons and their hair dressed with all the skill of a barber, 'by appointment.

Sheridan did His Courting

"Imagine, too, floating upon the waters little bowls of sweetmeats and cosmetics. Think of its company. Here Sheridan did his courting, Edmund Burke found a wife, Goldsmith ate Lord Clare's vension, Wordsworth attended his daughter's wedding, the other members of the Lake School dreamt of a pantisocracy, Sir Walter Scott went through all the usual discipline of the Pump Room and the Baths, Lady Blessington and the Count d' Orsay and Walter Savage Landor were the guests of Napoleon III.; here—but the procession of ghosts, grave and gay, would stretch to the crack o' doom, and would include one that Thackeray made terrible.

"'An if you and I had been alive then and strolling down Milsom Street—Hush! We should have taken our hats off, as an awful, long, lean, gaunt figure, swathed in flannels, passed by in its chair, and a livid face looked out from the window—the great fierce eyes staring from under a bushy, powdered wig, a terrible frown, a terrible Roman nose—and we, whisper to one another, "There he is! There's the Great Commoner! There is Mr. Pitt."'"

First

FIRST to discard their old-type razors for the original Gillette Safety Razor and first to adopt the New Improved, were the engineers, draughtsmen and technical men of the country.

They recognized at once the soundness of its principle; saw at once the reality of its improvements

—the cutting angle found and fixed;
—rigidity of blade;
—the channelled guard for greater safety;
—to give the cutting edge free access to the beard
—and keep it clear from soap and hair.

It is these improvements that have eliminated the need for shaving experience and skill; made it impossible to get anything but a perfect shave; doubled the efficiency of the blades and lengthened their lives by many shaves.

If you would know the newest luxury of science — a velvet smooth, clean, soft shave every morning of your life—call at any store catering to the needs of men and buy

Woman's Sphere

WINDOWS.

By Anna Blake Mesquida.

My house has windows that are wide and high;
I never keep the curtains drawn,
Lest I should miss some glory of the sky,
Some splendor of the breaking dawn.

My heart has windows; the long years have shown
That they must never be shut fast,
Lest I should come to find the ivy grown,
And warm Love cold and dead at last.

My soul has windows where God's sun streams in;
They never, never shuttered are,
Lest their closed blinds hide in my soul some sin,
And keep some lovely thing afar.

WHAT "LUCILLE" SAYS

These are hot days. Most of us wish they were not. Very few of us are completely satisfied with them. We complain, we snap and we quarrel; but we don't mean it. We simply can't help it. The weather alone is responsible.

Now, in England the weather is never exactly right. In Paris—ah, but it is magnificent. In Italy it is wonderful; in Switzerland superb, and Canada we might say is too extreme.

The weather nearly always makes some of us irritable; but nothing makes us quite so much so as a spell of heat. Shakespeare says, "now these hot days is the mad blood stirring."

In an amusing scene he goes on to describe a gallant entering a tavern, laying his drawn sword on the table with the pious ejaculation. "Heaven send me no need of thee," and using it almost upon the instant.

This clever bit of character study illustrates well the result of hot weather upon the general mind. It has a stimulative effect upon the imagination.

Letting off Steam

A man in a state of irritation loses his sense of humor, and with it his sense of proportion. That is the reason why there is more wordy warfare rife at this season than at any other.

For instance, everybody wants to stand outside of the bus. This causes inconvenience to the conductor, which he resents audibly and scathingly. It is natural for him to be annoyed; but it is also natural for the passengers to wish to go outside.

Theatres cease to charm, the wittiest play has holes picked in its careful construction. Comedians have to work harder to raise a laugh, for cross people cannot see a joke.

In the good old days tournaments and bouts at single-stick were provided for the relieving of heat wave irritability. The upper classes could shut themselves up in sweltering iron and steel cases and batter themselves to a pulp, if they wished; while the lower could belabor each other to their heart's content.

Both could let off steam in a manner natural to the human race. Now we are civilised, so we merely cut each other up with sharp retorts and general grousing.

The Daily Recipe

Tea Rusks

Take one cup of butter, two cups of sugar (white), two eggs, three cups of sweet milk, one cup of liquid yeast a very little salt. Put in one-half the quantity of butter at night, beat up rather stiff and let them rise over night. Add the remainder of the butter, in the morning, add a trifle of cinnamon or nutmeg if you wish, let rise the second time. Now make them stiff enough to mold, and add a few currants, roll in hands into balls, do not roll out and cut, let rise in pans when baked a light brown color, glace with a little milk and molasses mixed.

FASHION FANCIES

Paris has announced a complete victory for long skirts—long even according to the standards of 1914, being only a few inches from the ground. The cables say that the most ardent upholders of short skirts were routed at Longchamps, and many Americans spent the following day letting down the hems of the frocks they had insisted on having short.

Whether American women as a whole will adopt this fashion in its present form is a question that hangs in the balance, and "to be or not to be" is the problem that confronts many designers for the New York shops when deciding on the length of the skirts. There is no doubt we have become used to the comfort of a skirt that clears the ground by at least eight or ten inches, and it will be interesting to note how this question of length is met in the fall dresses. This summer we shall probably continue happily on our short-skirted way, with perhaps an occasional adventure into picturesqueness. One such model is an intriguing combination of organdy and taffeta, with a skirt that suggests the crinolines of our grandmothers and shows three flounces. Flounces are a favorite diversion with the Parisian designers this summer and appear on most of the sheer bouffant frocks.

These wide-skirted frocks naturally call for broad-brimmed hats, and Paris, which thoroughly enjoys the deceptively simple, delights in making them the size of cartwheels, with very little in the way of trimming to help them. They are mostly bound in bright-colored satin, with a band of flowers around the crown, though occasionally they have a great bunch of coq or burnt ostrich perched on the extreme edge of the brim, as only the Parisienne knows how.

Organdy is very smart this summer, and not only are the shops featuring organdy frocks, but frocks of all materials have their touches of this charming fabric.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS INAUGURATE MOTOR CAR SERVICE BETWEEN PICTON AND TRENTON

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

"I understand; but still you can make room for me somewhere, I hope."

"Oh, yes. Quite so, indeed. It's only a question of what you'd like. Now we have a cabine de luxe—"

"Not for me," said Staff firmly.

"Then-Q. . . . The only other accommodation I can offer you is a two-berth stateroom on the main-deck."

"An outside room?"

"Yes, sir. You can see for yourself. Here it is: berths 432 and 433. You'll find it quite cosy, I'm sure."

Staff nodded, eyeing the cubicle indicated by the pencil-point.

"That'll do," said he. "I'll take it."

"Then-Q. Upper'r lower berth, sir?"

"Both," said Staff, trying not to look conscious—and succeeding.

"Both, sir?"—in tones of pained expostulation.

"Both!"—reiterated in a manner that challenged curiosity.

"Ah," said the clerk wearily, "but, you see, I thought I understood you to say you were alone."

"I did; but I want privacy."

"I see. Then-Q."—as who should say: Another mad Amayrican.

With this the clerk took himself off to procure a blank ticket.

While he waited Staff was entertained by snatches of a colloquy at the far end of the counter where the other patron was being catechised as to his pedigree by the other booking-clerk. What he heard ran something to the following effect:

"What did you say the name was sir?"

"The name?"

"If you please—"

"What name?"

"Your name, sir."

"I didn't say, did I?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! I thought not."

Pause; then the clerk, patiently: "Do you mind giving me your name, sir, so that I may fill in your ticket?"

"I'd r'ally rather not; but seein' as it's you and you make a point of it—Iff."

Pause. . . . . "Beg pardon?"

"Iff."

"If what, sir?"

"I-double-F, Iff: a name, not a joke. I-F-F—William Howard Iff. W. H. Iff, Whiff: joke."

"Ow-w?"

"But you needn't laugh."

With dignity: "I was not intending to laugh, sir."

Staff could hardly refrain from refreshing himself with a glance at the individual so singularly labelled. Appraising him covertly, he saw a man whose stature was quite as much shorter than the normal as his own was longer, but hardly less thin. Indeed, Staff was in the habit of defining his own style of architecture as Gothic and with reasonable excuse; but reviewing the physical geography of Mr. Iff, the word emaciation bobbed to the surface of the literary mentality; Iff was really astonishingly slight of build. Otherwise he was rather round-shouldered; his head was small, bird-like, thinly thatched with hair of a faded tow colour; his face was sensitively tinted with the faintest of flushes beneath a skin of natural pallor, and wore an expression curiously naive and yet shrewd an effect manufactured by setting the eyes of a child, round and dimly blue, in a mask of weathered maturity.

Now while Staff was receiving this impression, Mr. Iff looked sharply round; their glances crossed. Primarily embarrassed to be caught rudely staring, Staff was next and thoroughly shocked to detect a distinct if momentary eclipse of one of Mr. Iff's pale blue eyes. Bluntly, openly, deliberately, Mr. Iff winked at Mr. Staff, and then, having accomplished his amazement and discomfiture, returned promptly, twinkling, to the baiting of his clerk.

"Your age, sir?"

Mr. Iff enquired in simple surprise "Do you really care to know?"

"It's required, sir, by the—"

"Oh, well—if I must! But, mind you, strictly as man to man: you may write me down a freeborn American citizen, entitled to vote and more'n half white."

"Beg pardon?"

"I say, I am an adult—"

"Oh!" The clerk wrote; then, bored, resumed: "Married or single, please?"

"I'm a spinster—"

"O-w?"

"Honestly—neither married nor unmarried."

"Then-Q" —resignedly. "Your business—?"

But here Staff's clerk touched the exasperated catechist on the shoulder and said something inaudible. The response, while equally inaudible, seemed to convey a sense of profound personal shock. Staff was conscious that Mr. Iff's clerk glanced reproachfully in his direction, as if to suggest that he wouldn't have believed it of him.

Divining that he and Mr. Iff were bargaining for the same accommodations, Staff endeavoured to assume an attitude of distinguished obliviousness to the entire proceeding; and would have succeeded but for the immediate and impatient action of Mr. Iff.

That latter, seizing the situation, glanced askance at dignified Mr. Staff, then smiled a whimsical smile, cocked his small head to one side and approached him with an open and ingenuous air.

"If it's only a question of which berth," ... to forfeit my ... Mr. Staff."

That gentleman started and stared.

"Oh, lord, man!" said Iff tolerantly—"as if your portrait hadn't been published more times than you can remember! —as if all the world were unaware of Benjamin Staff, novelist."

THEME OF DeMILLE'S "AFTER THE SHOW" IS ELEVATING

Appealing, dramatic and at times highly pathetic is the theme of William DeMille's new Paramount picture production of "After the Show" which achieved a veritable triumph at Griffin's theatre last night. Jack Holt is a millionaire "angel" of a musical comedy of the chorus of which Lila Lee is a member, and Mr. Ogle as an old disappointed stage door keeper, contribute much to the enjoyableness of the picture.

The production as a whole is fully up to the high artistic DeMille standard. It rivets one's attention and it is in every respect a production of the highest grade

Laughs are in order for those who see "Headin' West" in which Hoot Gibson is starred and which is the second feature offering on the same program.

The star's broad grin and his nerve are put to good use in the action of a breezy story written by Harvey Gates. From the beginning the familiar Gibson smile is called for by one situation after another, and the only better smile is the audiences when the humor strikes home.

An Al St. John comedy was exhibited during the evening and was well received by the large audience present.

AMERICAN ENGINEER CHOSEN FOR IRRIGATION PROJECT

Cairo, July 3.—French colonial authorities have selected an American engineer to report on a project of irrigation in the Niger Valley, in West Africa. He is Dr. Herbert H. Forbes, former dean of the College of Agriculture of Arizona, and lately agronomist of the Royal Agricultural Society of Cairo.

The work on the Niger contemplates an irrigation dam similar to the Assouan dam of the Nile, and it will be carried out under the direction of the Governor General of French Occidental Africa.

ITALIAN IMMIGRANTS SEEK OTHER FIELDS

Rome, July 4.—Three hundred thousand yearly was once the average number of Italian emigrants to the United States. Since Washington has taken restrictive immigration measures, however, this exodus has had to seek other fields.

In March of this year 10,120 went to France; 5,244 to Belgium, and a total of 4,170 to Luxemberg, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugoslavia and the Balkans. During the same month only 4,837 Italians emigrated to both North and South America, the United States getting 967.

Plans are on foot to send 25,000 to Russia to work in the coal mines of the river Don.

GRAND TRUNKS WILL MOTOR TO PETERBORO

Meet "Jake" Solomon's Squad in Electric City on Wednesday

The Grand Trunks leave Wednesday morning by motors for the Quaker Oats citadel where they will be the guests of "Jakie" Solomon & Co., Ltd., for the day.

That may read like a "personal column" item, but it should, for the local squad are going to be quite personal with Heckman and his squad. We've seen the odd ball lost in the Otanabee river before, and the best thing for Jakie to do tomorrow will be to station the city life-savers in that section of the river behind the outfield, and wait for business.

The Trunks are heavy hitters when they get going, and it was not the hitting department that lost the Lindsay-Belleville game here a week ago, as they got 6 clean hits including 2 three-baggers.

Mallen and Williams will be "all set" to take treir places on the "firing step," and hand them over. The remainder of the team will be practically the same as on Wednesday last.

GAME WEDNESDAY IN TRENT LEAGUE

Tiger Tire Squad, League Leaders Meet Madoc Here To-morrow

Trent Valley League baseball game will be the half holiday attraction at the Agricultural Grounds here on Wednesday (tomorrow) afternoon.

The game which will go nine innings is between Madoc and Belleville Tigers of the Tiger Tyre Company, and promises to be a hummer.

The boys from the northern village spend all their spare time on their ball park just south of the village, and are rounding themselves out a formidable crew. They have a real nice ball park, too.

The Tigers are leading the Trent Valley League and are anxious to stay right in at the top of the heap, and hope to see a large crowd of fans up to cheer them on to victory.

The game will be called at 5 p.m.

RED SOX DEFEAT REDNERSVILLE

Local Nine Take Neighbors' Measure Once More by Score of 14-6

The Belleville Red Sox pulled out another victory last night by defeating the fast Rednersville nine by the score of 14-6. Arnott and Lee twirled for the Sox, while Mits and Strand pitched for the opposing team. All pitched fairly good ball especially the Sox twirlers and everybody for the home team played good ball, there being only one error while Rednersville had five. The line-up for the Sox was Welch, Cummins, Cook, Ashley, Joss, Townley, Stark, Miles, Arnott and Lee. Mr. Harry Pringle was umpire in chief while Mr. Myrle Locke looked after the bases. Both umpired to the satisfaction of both teams.

ROYAL REGATTA NEXT WEEK

HENLEY-ON-THAMES WILL BE SCENE OF AMATEUR ROWING CONTEST

London, Eng., July 4.—For the next beautiful week Henley-on-Thames will be the lodestone for those whose fancy turns to the greatest aquatic sport, amateur rowing. Competitors from many countries will be on hand to match their speed and endurance, to the successful athletes will go the highest honors that can be won by amateur oarsmen.

Henley Royal Regatta for well on to a century has gathered together the best oarsmen of the world. It was founded in 1839 when at a public meeting it was decided to raise a subscription and purchase two Challenge cups the Grand Challenge Cup to be rowed for annually in eight oared boats, open to all amateur crews, and the Town Challenge Cup, for four-oared crews residing within five miles of Henley. Two years later the Stewards Challenge Cup for four-oars, open to competition under the same conditions as the Grand Challenge Cup, was added to the programme. Additions were made periodically, and there are now eight events which make up the four days' regatta.

One-half the events—the Grand Challenge Cup, the Stewards Challenge Cup, the Silver Goblet for pair oars, founded in 1845, and the Diamond Sculls, for single scullers, founded in 1844, are open to all amateurs as defined by the Amateur Rowing Association. Two of the remaining events, the Ladies' Challenge Plate (eight oars) and the Visitors' Challenge Plate, (four oars) are open to crews from schools and colleges in the United Kingdom. Restrictions are also attached to the Thames Challenge Cup (eight oars) and to the Wyford Challenge Cup, (four oars) which complete the programme.

Entries for this year's regatta, which opens on Wednesday, July 5, compare very favorably with those of the last pre-war regatta, 1914. For the Grand Challenge Cup, entries have been received from four foreign countries, Norway, Switzerland, Belgium and France. The reappearance of the Ghent Club of Belgium is particularly welcome, as this club in its seven quests for the Grand Challenge between the years 1900 and 1911, was successful three times, 1906, 1907 and 1909. The Christiana Club of Norway won the Thames Cup last year, and the experience gained by that young powerful crew a year ago should prove invaluable when they meet the much stronger English crews in the major event this year. This year will mark the second time that France has sent in an entry, the former occasion being in 1892, while Switzerland will make its debut in the Grand Challenge at Henley next week. The Grasshopper's Club, as the Swiss Club is named, has a very strong crew. At the Olympic regatta in 1920 they put up an excellent fight against the powerful Leander club representing England. The Grasshoppers have also been entered in the Stewards Cup.

Keen competition is expectd for the Diamond Sculls, Baynes, amateur champion of Queensland, has undergone a strict training course at Marlow under George Towns, ex-champion of the world, in preparation for the event. M. Schmid of Switzerland, has entered for the Diamond Sculls, as has also Walter Hoover, of the Duluth Boat Club, who some three weeks ago won the Gold Cup Race at Philadelphia in record time. The Canadian entrant for the Diamond Sculls, Hilton Belyea of St. [illegible] wick, withdrew his Henley entry immediately following his defeat by Hoover at Philadelphia. F. E. Eykens of Delft University, Holland, the winner of the sculls last year, has not entered for this race this week.

The course over which the regatta is rowed is one mile and 550 yards in length, and about 110 feet in width. The races are rowed against the stream and the time usually ocupied by the winning crew of the Grand Challenge Cup is within a few seconds of 7 minutes. The fastest time in recent years was that of last year when the crew from Magdalen College, Oxford, rowed the course in 6 mins. and 54 seconds. During the war years of course rowing was out of the question, but at the first regatta following the war Magdalen were victorious in the Grand Challenge, winning again last year.

As might b expected in any event with such an extended lifetime, many unique incidents have featured the Henley regatta. In 1843 the famous "seven oar" episode took place. At the last hour one of the members of the Oxford crew were incapacitated through illness and the opposing crew refused permission to the Oxford crew to put on a substitute. Nothing daunted, the Oxford crew took to the water with one man absent and won undying fame by winning the Grand Challenge Cup with seven oars. Ten years later Oxford defeated Cambridge in the Grand Challenge by only eighteen inches. In 1897, New College, Oxford set up a record for the course for the Grand Challenge when they won from the Leander Club by two feet, in six minutes and 51 seconds. From 1897 and onward the competition from the foreign crews has been a feature of the regatta. In 1906 the Club Nautique de Grand, Belgium, carried off the Grand Challenge, and the Belgium club repeated in 1907 and 1909. In 1912, the Sydney Rowing Club, New South Wales, was the winner, and in 1914, the last regatta before the war an eight from Harvard University carried off the rowing tid-bit.

The Diamond Sculls left England for the first time in 1892, when J. J. Ooms, a Hollander, won the finals. In 1904, L. F. Scholes of Toronto, Canada, won the Diamond Sculls, defeating F. S. Kelly of the Leander Boat Club. Scholes' time created a new record for the event, but in the following year Kelly, in winning the Sculls lowered the record to 8 mins. and 10 seconds, which stands to this day. Kelly, though winning the Sculls in two successive years and then winning in the year following his defeat stands out very prominently in the records of the Diamond Sculls.

LONDON WANTS SUNDAY GAMES

People Should be Allowed To Play in Public Parks

London, July 4.—Many people are demanding that the London County Council allow the playing of cricket, tennis and other games in the parks on Sundays. The movement has the support of most of the newspapers, and not a few of the clergy. They say that if people go to church in the morning they ought to be allowed to play games in the afternoon.

"London spent yesterday out of doors," says the Daily Chronicle. "It was a perfect Sunday for games. Every private cricket ground, bowling green and tennis ground was occupied. The only grounds where tennis was forbidden were those controlled by the London County Council. While members of the County Council themselves play tennis on Sunday they prohibit others from doing so in the public parks. Thousands of young men and women who would have played but for the County Council kill-joy ban, dawdled about doing nothing.

"It is the same with cricket. The thousands of pitches controlled by the County Council are not allowed to be used on Sunday, and boys were standing about smoking cigarettes [illegible] games on Sundays." There is a growing storm of public anger at this prohibition of Sunday games."

"I shall certainly see the triumph of this movement for Sunday games," said a reformer who is behind the movement. "In England every Briton has the right to get drunk, if he wants to, between certain hours on Sunday. It is absurd to permit a man to get drunk on Sunday but prohibit him from playing games in the public parks on Sunday. A man cannot get drunk while playing games. Therefore I am for game on Sunday if only in the interest of temperance."

REGATTA COURSE IS INSPECTED

A Party on Board Yacht Temerairia Visits Big Bay and Park

The yacht Temeraria which is owned in this city is in the very best condition for sailing and will take part in the regatta to be held here on the 17th inst. Yesterday afternoon a party was taken out on the yacht, and an inspection made of the triangular course in Big Bay, where the regatta will take place. The indications are that it will be one of the most successful sailing events ever held in this locality. The party on board the yacht also inspected the proposed site for the erection of a yacht club building at Massassaga Park by the Lake Yacht Racing Association. This club house will be up to date in every respect. Those who comprise the party on the Temeraria yesterday were Messrs.: E. G. Porter, K. C., M. P., Geo. Caldwell, Secretary of the local yacht club, W. E. Schuster, P. K. Wills and Capt. Fagan, skipper. The sail was a delightful one and much enjoyed by the party.

RUSSIAN LOAN IS LAUNCHED

First Internal Loan, Payable In Grain After Next Harvest

Moscow, July 4. Soviet Russia has launched its first internal loan to the value of 10,000,000 poods of rye, receivable in money, but payable in grain after the next harvest. Posters advertising this "bread loan", which is designed to stabilize Russian currency, have been put up throughout Russia and subscriptions already are being received.

Six million Soviet rubles are calculated to be worth one pood, or 36 pounds of rye, in receiving the subscriptions and the loan is put out at 25 repayable at par in December and January next. Special grain funds are to be set aside, guaranteed by the government gold reserve, to repay the loan, and peasants will be permitted to meet their natural grain tax in loan certificates, instead of rye, if they so desire.

The loan was authorized by the All Russian Central Executive committee as the first of its measures, after the close of the Genoa Conference, to relieve the financial situation.

The death penalty as a permanent institution has been eliminated from the code of laws approved by the All Russian Central Executive Committee. But as a temporary measure, in case of a counter revolution, the revolutionary tribunals are authorized to inflict it until such time as the committee decides it is no longer necessary. Under the new code terms of imprisonment may be from six months to ten years; the previous limit was five years.

Nevertheless the death penalty is being frequently imposed throughout Russia today by military and civil revolutionary tribunals. In one day ten persons were shot at Yaroslav for robbery of Red Army supplies while

The new mercantile class which has sprung up in Russia during the past year's freedom of trade is now paying a tremendous proportion of its earnings to the government in the shape of taxes.

In addition to fixed license fees luxury taxes collected from customers and the rental of premises paid to the government, a "turn over" tax has now been imposed, ranging from one to two per cent. monthly. This tax is upon gross receipts, or business done each month.

Paris, July 4.—Count de Boury once noted figure in Paris society and former member of Chamber of Deputies has decided to enter the Benedictine Order.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

His lordship had engaged a new butler, and a week later the man had to announce the guests at a ball.

"Mr. N. Jimpams, Mrs. Jimpams and Miss Jimjams!" called out the butler.

This got on his lordship's nerves.

"James," he said, "be more brief when you announce the next arrivals."

The next people to arrive were Mr. Crown, Mrs. Crown and Master Crown.

The butler waved his hand to indicate which direction they should take, at the same time calling out: "Fifteen bob!"—Tit-Bits.

JUST AN ORDINARY MAN.

One of the new rich who grew fat on war contracts had invited the vicar to dine with him at his house on the hillside. He did himself very well, and when they came to the walnuts and the port he grew lyrical over the vanities of life.

"Vicar," he said, "when I stand at the window there and look down on the town. I says to myself, 'Bert, you're a great man—a very great man!' But when I lifts up my eyes to the hills over there, I feels humble again, and I sees I'm only just a common ordinary sort of man, same as you, vicar.

A Wonderful Trip for Motorists That Take In All the Glories of the Pacific Coast From Banff South to Los Angeles.

A SLENDER blue ribbon of trail, 5,000 miles long, threading together the ten finest scenic jewels of the western continent—that is what western motor maps will show by the end of the coming summer. It is called "Grand Circle Tour" and it will offer the most wonderful variety of natural scenery accessible by motor road in the world. One last link in the chain, only a few miles now in length, remains to be completed. Then the road will be open to the motorists of the continent. This unfinished section, from the Vermilion summit near Banff, Alberta, in the Canadian Pacific Rockies, down to the Columbia Valley, will, Canadian Government engineers say, be ready for traffic by September next. All that remains to be done is the grading and widening of the unfinished portion of the road. Then the great loop, dream of a few far-visioned men, will be completed, and the stream of tourists may flow along this unparalleled motor highway.

What will it mean? It will mean that the motorists may start at Calgary, Alberta—as this is a loop highway, of course, start at any other point on it he desires—travel west through the grassy foothills to the great front door of the Rockies which is, incidentally, the gateway to the Banff National Park. At Banff, where there is already a motor campsite as well as several good hotels, he may linger to bathe in the radium hot springs, play golf among the clouds or fish in some of the numerous well stocked lakes or streams of the locality. From Banff the road proceeds westward to Castle, thence by a short detour to the wonderful Lake Louise region and on to Moraine Lake and the rugged sublimity of the Valley of the Ten Peaks. Returning, it climbs by easy grades to the Vermilion Pass, 5,264 feet, then drops down to the Columbia Valley through the Kootenay National Park, to Lake Windermere and the village of Invermere on its shore.

Every mile of the way through the Canadian Parks has been built with an eye to easy travelling and scenic grandeur. Giant peaks, often helmeted with a snow cap centuries old, guard the way. Deer, wild sheep, elk and goat may be seen feeding fearlessly on the slopes and practically every valley holds a blue lake stocked with trout. From the Divide the road runs through hitherto unopened country, which is one of the richest both in scenery and big game in the Rockies. From Invermere it drops south, skirts the beautiful Windermere and Columbia Lakes, the latter source of the mighty Columbia river, through deep-shaded forests to the International Boundary which it cuts just north of Metaline, Washington. From Bonner's Ferry it swings south over excellently constructed roads through Spokane, Walla Walla, and Pendleton, where it links up with the Columbia Highway from Portland. Then it drops down past the eastern entrance to Crater Lake National Park, to San Francisco and on to Los Angeles.

From this point a short detour will allow the motorist to see the famous Yosemite as well as Grand Park and Sequoia Park, the home of the giant redwoods. Then, travelling east, he may visit the Grand Canyon and proceed north via Salt Lake City to the Yellowstone Park. From Yellowstone one day's journey will take him north to the United States Glacier National Park and less than two hours more to the International Boundary. Following the trail to Cardston, he may make a short detour to Waterton Lakes Park in Southern Alberta, thus completing his tenth National Park.

Thousands of motorists, it is expected will follow this scenic highway as soon as it is thrown open. American motorists will want to come north to see the glories of the Rockies; Canadian motorists will want to see beautiful California and the wonders of the Grand Canyon and the Yellowstone. This will mean an international exchange of money as important as many an industry, as well as increased international good will.

The new road also opens up an all Canadian circle tour, via Banff, Lake Windermere, the Columbia Valley and returning over the Crow's Nest Pass to the prairies. This will afford a 600 mile trip for Canadian motorists through the heart of the most wonderful scenery in the Rockies, in which for the whole distance the tourist will either be among or in full sight of the snowpeaks.

BRIT. CRUISERS AT MONTREAL

H.M.S. Raleigh and Constance of the North Atlantic Squadron Steam Into Port

Montreal, July 4.—With their bands playing and the crews standing at attention, H.M.S. Raleigh and H.M.S. Constance, cruisers of the North Atlantic Squadron of the British Navy, majestically steamed into port yesterday morning. The impressive sight of the lean gray ships slowly coming up the river with their crews lining the rails was seen by few, because of the early hour of arrival. The ships will remain in port for about ten days, and will be joined by H.M.S. Calcutta on Thursday. Admiral Sir Wm. T. Pakenham, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., K.C.V.O., is in command, and was on board the Raleigh, which he uses as a flagship.

The programme which the officers and crew will follow while in Montreal has not been definitely arranged as yet, but will be made public later. Mr. M. P. Fennell, jr., was at the dock this morning, and immediately boarded the Raleigh, and was closeted with Admiral Pakenham for some time. No decision was arrived at during the conference, but Mr. Fennell will arrange the programme, subject to the wishes of the Admiral.

It is likely that visitors will be allowed on board both ships this afternoon and four days of this week.

The warships, scheduled to arrive in port at 9.30, were on time, and anchored in midstream, while a boat, commanded by a midshipman, put off. After a short conversation wth the harbor master, a seres of flag signals was given, and two tugs brought the ships into dock at Laurier Pier, near Nicolet street. The sailors gladly sprang ashore to tie up, and judging by their exclamations, were pleased to return to Montreal. The officers, too, stated that they were glad to see Montreal again, as they received such a splendid welcome during their visit last year.

The new organ donated by Mr. J. F. Walsh to St. Patricks' Church, Napanee, as a memorial to his late beloved wife, will be installed next week. It is hardly necessary to say that the repeated liberality of John Francis Walsh to his native church is deeply appreciated by pastor and people, and that this his latest offering is not only a suitable climax to his former unstinted and timely benefactions, but is also a fitting memorial to his devoted and much beloved spouse, who in the years of youth took such lively interest and gave so willingly the services of her splendid voice in the choir of St. Patrick's. The new organ is from the firm of the Esty Company, Vermont, and fills a long felt want, while it completes the religious furnishings of the beautiful Church of St. Patricks.

SMUGGLE DIAMONDS OUT OF RUSSIA

Underground Trade in the Sparkling Gems Proceeds in Mysterious Manner

Reval, Esthonia, July 4.—Diamonds have been pouring out of Russia during the last two years in such quantities that individuals interested in jewel transactions assert that the land of the Soviets has ben pretty well drained of the sparkling gems. Most of them have found their way to London, Paris and Berlin.

The underground diamond trade has been carried on in a most mysterious manner, ever since Russia's troubles began, the transactions baffling even the famous cheka, or secret political police. Strenuous efforts on behalf of the Soviet authorities to break up the diamond smuggling business have been made almost from the beginning, but despite the watchfulness of the customs authorities, the police and even the army, the trade has thrived and within Russia there is common talk of various individuals who have made fortunes in it.

Soviet authorities accuse "diplomatic smugglers", some of whom have been arrested from time to time, as being one of t he main sources of trouble, the Soviets contending that certain couriers have been taking diamonds out of t he country systematically on every trip. Diplomatic couriers are exempt from search at the frontiers.

Dealers say it is still possible to purchase diamonds in Odessa, Petrograd, Moscow and other cities, at a "bargain" rate, compared with American prices, but that most of the stones on the market to-day are far from being of the first water variety.

SIX WAR HEROES OF BELGIUM LEFT

Sir Remain of Original 16 Intelligent and Daring Dogs

Ghent, Belgium, July 4.—Only six of Belgium's "War Heroes" remain. They are not human heroes, but brilliantly intelligent and daring dogs who distinguished themselves for valor and fidelity on the field of battle. Originally there were 16, but ten proved that even dogs can be martyrs. Three were killed in action at the front, three died of wounds, two were poisoned by the Germans, one died of grief over the loss of his soldier-master, and one was mercifully put out of misery when the enemy came to seize him.

The six survivors were proudly exhibited by their owners at the Palais des Fetes recently. Some have gallant acts of peace to their credit as well as honors of war. They have saved children from drowning, stopped runaway horses, caught burglars, protected sheep and stood silent guard over their masters' lives and homes. Three of them have the Cross of War for heroism and devotion in the field.

LIFE SAVER DEAD

Ottawa, July 4.—Known all over Eastern Canada as the champion life saver, Louis Beauchamp, 53 had to acknowledge defeat at hands of the grim reaper yesterday. He had saved more than forty lives and possessed numerous medals and certificates. He was born in Scholastique, Que., and lived at Hull, Que., and Sudbury, Ont.

The columns of names on the roll of honor may be seen plainly, and heavy mourning lines divides the columns. In London this picture is being called the "Premonition" photograph.

An extraordinary aspect of the incident is that a second photographer found a precisely similar result when he developed his plate. At the moment the photographers were busy with their developing, Reginald Dunn, alias James Connolly, and Joseph O'Sullivan, alias John O'Brien were assassinating Sir Henry at the doorway of his residence, No. 18 Eaton Place.

MOTOR BOAT STOLEN AND DRIVEN AWAY

Belleville's Motor Boat Squadron One Less Since Friday Last

Some time since Friday last, a motor boat belonging to Mr. Higgs of this city, was stolen. The boat is 33 feet long with a 6 foot beam. It is painted a cream color and decked half way back. It is trimmed with brass and mahogany, and has a fawn colored top over it. The name of the boat is "Dawn."

It appears that it has been seen out on the bay in charge of a respectable looking young man wearing a grey suit and a peaked cap.

Detective Sergeant J. Truiasch is on the case, and circulars will be printed and broadcasted.

SAVING CHILDREN OF RUSSIA

Belleville Has Provided a Considerable Sum for Worthy Object

Surely there is no man or woman in Belleville who, having heard Mr. Thos. Skeyhill last week at the Chautauqua, is not now convinced that in assisting these poor starving and dying little ones they are doing one of the finest bits of human work of the present age.

Belleville has given the sum of $887 and lack yet in completely paying for the maintenance of two kitchens by only $103.00, but surely, in view of the straightforward, open account as given by Mr. Skeyhill, many hearts and purses will respond generously this week and assist in putting into that stricken country one more kitchen to help save another hundred children.

Please make contributions in the usual way: deposit in the Standard Bank, crediting to the account of the Russian Save-the-Children Fund. Much credit must be given to the little children of Belleville who each week in the public schools have taken up their little collections which have regularly been deposited by the Principal of each school. The children are asked to make a greater effort though to swell these collections during the holidays by denial, and to make the deposits themselves with the Treasurer, Mr. Elliott, at the Standard Bank.

Miss Pearson, who has been energetic in securing contributions to this worthy cause, was recently in receipt of the following communication:

Ottawa, June 14th, 1922.

willing to enter a coalition on the condition that the Government's policy be along the lines laid down in the joint demands of the Labor unions and the Socialists, for the law safeguarding the Republic, and for stringently enforcing the new law after its passage. The Social Democratic party has agreed to these conditions.

Socialists in Majority

The Democratic and Centrist parties have not yet reached a decision as to whether they care to continue in the Coalition Government with the radical Independent Socialists, but Chancellor Wirth and the majority of the Centre are said to favor it. In political circles to-night there is talk of the Independent Socialist Leader, Hilfering, becoming Reconstruction Minister; of an Independent Socialist and foreign political expert, Dr. Breitscheid, receiving a seat in the Cabinet without portfolio; of the Centrist Finance Minister, Herr Hermese, becoming Foreign Minister, and of a Democrat, George Bernhard, Chief Editor of The Vossische Zeitung, becoming Finance Minister.

The Bourse was panicky this morning, and the mark fell to 435 to the dollar, recovering to about 412 late in the afternoon.

MARGOT ASQUITH ON PROHIBITION

Has Changed Her Mind on the Drink Question—Declares Liquor a Menace

Mrs. Margot Asquith, who recently completed a lecture tour of the United States and Canada, has evidently recanted in some of the statements which she made concerning the effects of prohibition in the United States. In her original statements she declared that, as the situation appealed to her, the working out of the prohibition enactments was a "farce," but in a recent letter to The Westminster Gazette she admits that possibly it was unwise of her to write at all upon prohibition, as during her short stay in America she saw only particular kinds of people in the big cities, and she now writes:

"I understand since I wrote my 'Impressions' that I have been wrong, and that, though there is a great deal of drink concealed and consumed, and even corruption on a considerable scale going on in the United States, it is infinitely less than there was before prohibition came in. All Dr. Saleeby's health statistics prove this abundantly.

"Although my opinions are not likely to be of interest to anyone," she continues, "I do not wish to be quoted as 'lining up' with those who think drinking alcohol in moderation is harmless. The enemies of temperance are those who drink alcohol in moderation, more than the habitual drunkards, as the latter disgust everybody. Drinking alcohol can never be harmless. The medicinal value of brandy is annulled in this country, and both the health and the pleasures of youth are impaired by our apathy over this burning question. I am in complete agreement with Dr. Saleeby when he says: 'Only the race that regards its young renews its youth.'"

These latter statements do not accord at all well with the previous opinions as expressed by Mrs. Asquith, but she is apparently sincere in her desire that she be not included in that category of persons who regard the beverages with a somewhat apathetic tolerance.

NEW BRUNSWICK BOY ARRIVES BY FREIGHT

At an early hour this morning a boy about fourteen years of age was discovered riding upon the top of a box car when a westbound freight train pulled into the G.T.R. yard here. A railway officer took the boy in charge and learned that his name was Lawrence Ganier, and that his home was at Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Ganier stated to the officer that he had been travelling for over two weeks in the manner described above, and had obtained food from persons along the road. He is now anxious to return to his home and his parents have been communicated with for the purpose of supplying him with the necessary funds.

LINER SINKING IN ST. LAWRENCE

Donaldson Steamer Orthea in Collision is Reported to be Sinking

Quebec, July 5.—The Donaldson line freight steamer Orthia, inward bound, is reported to be sinking in the St. Lawrence River, west of Father Point as result of a collision with the steamer Airdale, which cleared from this port on Tuesday afternoon.

Montreal—(later)—The Government signal service station here this morning reported that it had been advised that the Donaldson line steamer Orthia, which collided with the steamer Airdale last night, has been abandoned by its crew.

The Airdale, which stood by after collision, picked up the crew.

Albert College Summer School

Rev. Archer Wallace, M.A., Speaks on What Jesus Taught of Himself

Yesterday morning at Albert College the Summer School effected organization of prayer groups at the breakfast hour for men and for ladies. Completing a fifteen minute song service at 9 o'clock, Rev. Archer Wallace, M.A., of Toronto, Associate Editor of Methodist and Presbyterian S.S. publications, proceeded with a series of daily addresses upon the teaching of Jesus. His opening subject was "What Jesus Taught About Himself." In characteristic and simple language of a scholar, the remarks were authenticated by ample Bible references.

Our judgment of many modern sects could be proven in what was contended about Christ's divinity. Was He more so, and as no other could be, Divine? The consciousness of sinless experience was His, and the pre-existent Sonship of Jesus was uniquely Eternal. Humanity feels its unworthiness; even did John the Baptist; though standing above the average person, he realized how far distant his merits were to Christ's. Jesus could defy and challenge any accusation concerning Himself. While identified with God and clothed with supreme authority, He was yet humble. Still He never hesitated nor delayed to follow the path of duty however fraught with danger. Our hesitation often is a sign of immaturity. Jesus had to face great prejudice. Just as the shadows of weather are foretold through understanding the heavenly bodies, so it seemed that Christ had ever resting over Him the knowledge of the Cross of Death awaiting, even amidst the popular clamor of the multitude. He believed in His death not as a defeat or disappointment to others, but rather a momentous victory.

Crimean veterans, and those relieved from the siege of Ladysmith, have revelled in celebrating those glorious victories, just as many other than Germans will continue to do as a result of the great European war. The adoration of the materialistic world, the remarkable evidence of baptism by John, the wonderful Transfiguration on the Mount, did not concern Jesus so much as the enjoining to remember His death. We should not look upon it so much as sacrificial, but for its resurrection value and ever-living influence. From university life the speaker related how effectively a great picture of Christ overshadowed those on the walls of a student's room.

Mission Study.

At 9.45 a.m. the students were allotted to Mission Study classes under the following subjects and teachers: "China," by Rev. Geo. W. Sparling, missionary on furlough; "Japan," Rev. S. A. Kemp, of Warkworth; "Home Missions," Rev. D. R. Clare, B.A., B.D.; "The Church as a Community Centre," led by Rev. W. P. Woodger, B.A., of Trenton.

Team Games.

From 10.30 to 10.45 o'clock leaders and students indulged in team games out on the lawn in refreshing style, then assembled again in the College chapel for a discussion upon Young People's Work conducted in Round Table Question manner by Rev. R. T. Richards, 1st Vice-President of the Bay of Quinte Conference Epworth Leagues. This proved to not be a "Quaker" type of meeting, but helpful suggestions were made regarding Prayer Groups in individual societies, and the pledge requirements for membership in the Leagues.

Training Course.

From 11.30 to 12.15 o'clock the students again met in the various class rooms of the College for a Teacher Training course arranged thus:—

The Pupil, by Miss M. Luxon.

The Teacher, by Rev. Rev. F. J. Horwood.

The School, by Rev. E. Harston.

Programme of Christianity, by Rev. W. H. Clarke.

Evangelism, by Rev. John Coburn.

EMULATING THE MILITARY CAREERS OF THEIR SIRES.

Scenes reminiscent of the days of 1914 and 1915, when countless Canadians went under canvas for the first time in their country's cause, were witnessed this week at Long Branch, Ontario, when a thousand school cadets went into the first summer cadet camp which has been held for some years. On the left above the lads are seen turning out to the sound of reveille in the early morning, and on the right they are undergoing medical inspection.

CONFLAGRATION IN TORONTO

Old Royal Theatre Building Bursts into Flames at Noon To-day

WIND FANS FLAMES

Girls Have Narrow Escape—Damage Estimated at $200,000

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 5.—Fire broke out a few minutes before one o'clock to-day in old Royal Theatre Building, at present owned by Mrs. J. H. Herman Toronto and situated in densely built business and factory block bounded by King, Bay, Wellington and York streets.

Twenty minutes after this outbreak the roof fell in and the flames which soared to a great height were fanned by a strong southwind, causing much anxiety to owners and occupants of surrounding buildings.

At 1.30, however, the fire was brought under control.

The Ives Bedding Company, of Cornwall, and Standard Hat Co. of Toronto, were the principal losers. The damage is estimated at $200,000. Four girls who were employed in the Bedding Company rooms reached street by the fire escape.

"GENERAL" RILEY IN FUNNY VEIN

Seems to Like Ottawa Better Than Toronto

Toronto, July 5.—"General" Riley was in humorous vein last night when he addressed a meeting several hundred strong, in Queen's Park. "We are shortly going to take to Ottawa again," he said. "The members of Parliament will not be there, but they will soon come back. Mackenzie King is supposed to have gone away to get married. I pity the lady. He might break his promise to her the same as he did to the returned soldiers."

Riley went on to say that when he went to Ottawa on the previous occasion he was told by the Premier that a committee was sitting and considering the case of the returned soldier. "That is all they do," he exclaimed, "sit and consider." The King Government, the "General" continued, would have to do something for the returned men before the Winter came on. Personally, he could have had a job because he had been offered one both at Parliament Hill and at the Parliament Buildings, Toronto. He was not going to take anything, however, until the returned men got their rights. Although he had no visible means of support, he was going to carry on.

In conclusion, Riley said that the people were tired of the "fanaticism" of the Drury Government. "We are tired of the kind of Sundays we are getting in Toronto. It reminds us of Goldsmith's "Deserted Village," and we have had enough of it," he said.

WILL DELORME YET BE TRIED?

Detective Asks Whether the Public is Satisfied with Verdict

Montreal, July 4.—Criminal lawyers are devoting considerable attention to the Delorme verdict, as a result of which Adelard Delorme, alleged slayer of his half-brother, has been committed to an insane asylum.

The formal interpretation of the committal is that the accused man will be confined until such time as he may be adjudged mentally fit to stand trial, otherwise he is to remain a life prisoner with the asylum walls.

Chain of Evidence May Break

One point, however, is being emphasized by lawyers who have followed the case through all stages as it progressed from court to court; that should Delorme remain a prisoner for 10 or 15 years, then be found sane, how could the Crown build a convincing case against him? All the evidence which was collected by Detective George Lajoie was purely circumstantial, and its merits have not been determined. While it may be powerful at the moment, will it remain so or will the lapse of long years weaken its fabric? Legal men take the latter view.

Mr. Lajoie's Point of View

Detective Lajoie, who built up the entire prosecution case, when commenting on the verdict this morning, declared:

"Naturally, I bow to the verdict in the legal sense. But I ask, is public opinion satisfied? What does society think of the result? If society is not satisfied, then I must be of that opinion also. I can only say that it seems amazing, to view it mildly, that Delorme, who, according to the evidence heard during the insanity proceedings, frequently displayed the exercise of all his mental faculties, and who has repeatedly protested against the plea of insanity advanced by his lawyers, should have been sent to an asylum while protesting that he was quite sane.

"My opinion on this verdict I consider no disrespect to the court. My stand is that an individual is entitled to criticize a Government even while bowing to its edicts. Governments, however, have been overthrown by public opinion before now."

2-YEAR SENTENCE FOR HIRAM SLATER

Toronto, July 5.—Hiram F. Slater was sentenced yesterday by Judge Coatsworth, in the County Judge's Criminal Court, to two years, less one day, and Leslie P. Thompson to eighteen months. Both men were convicted of the theft of a large sum of money, conspiracy to defraud, and of receiving stolen moneys, in connection with the Nukol Company flotation. Neither will have to serve out his term in a penitentiary.

WEST IS PROMISED A BUMPER CROP

Winnipeg, July 5.—Western Canada is promised more than an average crop, the outlook being certainly brighter than at this time last year, states the third crop report of the Manitoba Free Press, published this morning. Naturally there has been some damage and deterioration from drought, insects and hail, since the last report was issued on June 13, but the total damage does not appear large or serious, the report states.

FREE STATE TO ISSUE NATIONAL CALL TO ARMS

Dublin, July 5.—It is learned on excellent authority, says the Press Association this afternoon, that the Provisional Government intends to issue a national call to arms tomorrow.

RAILWAY TIE-UP IN U.S. AVERTED

No General Strike of Maintenance Men in the Near Future

Chicago, July 4.—There will be no strike of railway maintenance-of-way employees at least for months.

Fears that these 400,000 workers would join the army of shopmen who walked out last Saturday were definitely dispelled late to-day.

Following an all-day conference in the United States Railroad Labor Board offices here, E. F. Grable, President of the maintenance men's brotherhood, and six other members of his Executive Council, issued a statement in which they said it had been concluded "it is not wise for our membership to leave the service of the carriers until every resource has been exhausted that affords hope of a peaceful adjustment."

Blow to Strike.

Railway officials here seemed agreed that credit for checking the threatened spread of the strike movement was chiefly due to Ben W. Hooper, Chairman of the Railroad Labor Board, and W. L. McMennmen, one of three members of the board's Labor group. President Grable also was lauded for his stand.

That failure of the maintenance-of-way-workers to lend support to the effort to tie up transportation will prove a serious blow to the striking shopmen's cause was generally regarded as a foregone conclusion.

B. M. Jewell, head of the six federated shop crafts, declined to comment on the latest development. From other sources, however, it was learned President Grable's decision did not come as a surprise.

COMMUNITY DANCE FOR RUSSIAN FUND

William street was this afternoon closed to traffic owing to community dance being held, the proceeds of which was for stricken Russia. The dance will be continued this evening.

The community dance has become an institution in the great centres of the country. In New York, Baltimore and Washington—ladies of great social distinction at home and abroad lend themselves a couple times a year to this form of bringing together the people of their own centres and always in aid of some great relief work.

CHURCHILL CERTAIN OF A NEW IRELAND

London, July 4.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons to-day as to what the British Government was doing about the three British officers who were hanged in Ireland, Colonial Secretary Churchill said the Government had to rely on the Provisional Government, which was engaged in trying to bring the murderers to justice. Everything that had happened in the past week had increased his confidence that the Free State Government would suppress the horrible spirit of anarchy in Ireland and establish decent and civilized government.

ONTARIO TIRED OF GROUP GOVT.

Says Hon. G. Howard Ferguson—Drury is a Fabian Socialist

IS A UTOPIAN

Ontario Administration of Prohibition a Scandal

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Vancouver, July 5.—"Ontario is tired of group Government, and when we have the next election, which will be either this fall or next, the issue will be which of the two old parties will be returned to power," declared Hon. G. Howard Ferguson, leader of Ontario Conservatives here yesterday. Premier Drury he said was an educated and a clever, but was an idealistic and a Fabian Socialist, whose legislation is always utopian in its objectives. He declares that Ontario's administration of prohibition was a scandal which was doing much to weaken respect for law.

CITY ON HOLIDAY.

Business generally throughout the city was suspended today, the stores and other concerns being closed. Many patronized the Tabernacle Church Sunday school picnic at Twelve o'Clock Point, also the fishermen's picnic at Victoria Park. A number enjoyed the day fishing at various places where the finny tribe disport themselves.

PROFESSOR DISMISSED FOR INSUBORDINATION

Winnipeg, July 5.—Professor W. G. Smith, of the philosophy and sociology department of Wesley College has been dismissed by a majority vote of the board of directors of the college on the grounds of insubordination.

The professor announced to-day that he intends to fight the charge preferred against him as an "unmitigated falsehood."

Action by the board follows a dispute of long standing between Professor Smith and President J. H. Riddell, which resulted in an open breach at the Methodist conference held recently in Winnipeg when the professor told the delegates that moral conditions among students at the college were not what they should be.

FIRE DAMAGES BLOCK & STOCK

Originated in Dry Goods Store of J. Rubinoff, Front Street

DAMAGE $4,000

Excellent Work on Part of the Fire Brigade Prevents Conflagration

Damage estimated at upwards of $4000 was sustained by a fire which broke out at 11.50 last night in the dry goods store of J. Rubinoff situated in the Hanley block, east side of Front Street and which spread to the adjoining flour and feed store of Mr. Findlay, situated in the same block. When discovered the fire had gained considerable headway the interior of Rubinoff's store being a mass of flames, which spread to the adjoining premises. It was only by the excellent work of the fire brigade under the capable leadership of Chief Brown that the fire was confined to the place where it originated.

The cause of the fire is unknown. Mr. Rubinoff states that at 9.30 in the evening in company with a gentleman friend he left his store and every thing was apparently all right, with no signs of a fire. The interior of the latter's store was badly damaged also his stock of dry goods and some general merchandise.

The loss sustained is only partially covered by insurance. The fire extended to Mr. Findlay's store at the north side but fortunately was checked before any extensive damage was done to the store premises. There was, however, considerable damage to the stock of flour, grain, etc., by water which was of necessity poured into the store. The loss sustained is covered by insurance.

Families who occupy apartments above where the fire originated were naturally considerably excited and vacated the premises temporarily owing to smoke. No particular damage was sustained to the apartments.

ROYAL REGATTA OPENS IN UNSETTLED WEATHER

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Henley on Thames, England, July 5.—Unsettled weather marked the opening day of the Royal Regatta, but these conditions failed to check the flow of enthusiasts eager to watch the first heats of the various events, chief of which is the grand challenge cup race between the crews of the Leander boat club and Pembroke College, Cambridge. Three heats for diamond sculls are also down for decision.

TIP BURN OF POTATOES

Disease is Somewhat Arrested by Spraying With Bordeaux Mixture

This disease is first seen on potato plants about the latter part of July, with the most severe effects from the middle of August to the first week in September. The leaves exhibit a burning of their tips and margins, later the whole top withers and the plant dies prematurely. This condition is most noticeable in hot, dry, windy weather and particularly during periods of dry and sunny weather following rain.

With regard to the cause of this disease, there is much difference of opinion, and several agencies have been suggested as responsible for the burning of the leaves. The effect of excessive evaporation of water from the surface of leaves in extreme heat and sunshine with the consequent death of certain cells in the leaf, has been suggested as the cause of tip burn. Other authorities claim to have definitely demonstrated that the potato leaf hopper is the cause of tip burn; thus the name "hopper burn," which is also applied to this disease. More recent investigators associate the leaf hopper with the disease, but claim that there is some "specific," either normal or extraneous, which is transmitted by the leaf hopper a[illegible] the direct cause of the burning [illegible] the potato leaves. This was shown [illegible] the fact that tip burn could be [illegible]duced by inoculating macerated [illegible] hoppers into potato leaves.

The regular Bordeaux mixture spray has been found to be beneficial in the control of this disease. Those believing in extreme heat and sunshine as the principal causal agency, associate this control with the layer of Bordeaux mixture on the leaf acting as a protection from severe evaporation. Others claim that it destroys the hoppers and again the spray is also supposed to act as a deterrent for the hoppers.

In any case the Bordeaux mixture has been demonstrated as capable of arresting the development of the burning and this is but further proof of the importance of careful and systematic spraying of potato plants.

GIANT RATTLER AT OTTAWA

Rattlesnake Five Feet in Length Caught by Ottawa Man

Ottawa, July 4.—A giant rattle snake measuring five feet three and a half inches from the end of the snout to the tip of the tail, was killed in the vicinity of Blue Sea Lake by a young French-Canadian resident of Ottawa, who had gone up the Gatineau on a fishing trip over the holiday. The young man who did not give his name, brought his trophy back to the city and took it to Mr. Hames W. Stuart, taxidermist, 178 1-2 Bank street, to have it stuffed and mounted.

IS OF VENOMONOUS TYPE.

The rattler which belongs to the most venomonous type of snake on the North American continent was seen by the young fisherman sluggishly making its way across a seldom frequented country road. The young man, who at first mistook the rattlesnake for a big garter snake which are fairly common in the Ottawa district, grabbed a stick, and with a few vigorously applied and well directed blows soon killed it. The snake when attacked did not show fight. It was only after examination of the dead viper that the cloal angler made the somewhat startling discovery that the snake he had just dispatched was a rattler.

FIRST ONE KILLED NEAR HERE.

The tail is tipped off with no less than six horny rings or rattles which taper off gradually. The sound of [illegible] distinct when the tail [illegible] at Mr. Stuart's shop. [illegible] inquiries can establish, the [illegible] killed near Blue Sea Lake is [illegible] first rattlesnake ever seen or killed in the Ottawa district. Rattle snakes have never been known to live in the Ottawa or Eastern Ontario district, although this snake which belongs to the sub-family of pit vipers has been known to exist in the Niagara district, in Saskatchewan and in the mountain fastnesses of British Columbia. This snake killed has a diamond shaped neck, and the gray-brown colored body is marked with a series of diamond or shield shapes. The snake's belly is yellowish-white. The exact genus of reptile at Mr. Stuart's taxidermy has not been clearly established.

AN AWFUL PENALTY FOR MOONSHINER

Sentenced to the United States for Keeping an Illicit Still

Toronto, July 4.—"Committed to the United States."

Such might aptly be set down as the awful sentence imposed by Mr. Jones this morning upon Samuel Sager, the twin, but innocent brother of Benjamin Sager, who must remain in custody for one week awaiting sentence on three charges: Having a still, keeping liquor for sale, and false pretences, the last named referring to the use of good labels on bottles of bad liquor, said liquor having been manufactured by twin brother, Benjamin at his junk warehouse, third floor, 422 Wellington street, west, when Plainclothesmen Brawn and Jeeves did some great work and made an immense haul of mash, some 1,300 gallons, bottles by the score, bottling machine, coloring material, etc., etc., and then more detectives.

There was no proof that the labels were false, but twin Benjamin admitted they were used on false liquor. And as his booze manufacturing business had been on a good scale, a great number of thirsty souls in Toronto must have licked their lips delightfully at the labels and ignorantly swallowed quarts of rot-gut liquor. The sick list and obituary columns told the rest of the story.

Shakespeare Was Censored

Shortly before the war Sir Sidney Lee, the great Shakespearean authority, received from Spain the Second Folio of 1632 with the request that he should examine it and describe it to the English public. Only lately has Sir Sidney had the opportunity to comply with this request and the result is a communication to the London Times. The folio is unique in this respect, that within a few years after Shakespeare's death it was censored and expurgated by the officers of the Spanish Inquisition, who struck out passages of which they did not approve on political, religious or moral grounds, and the surprising thing seems to be that they expurgated it so gently. The plays were sent from England to the English college at Valladolid, which was christened St. Albans and founded by the noted Jesuit agitator, Father Parsons. His aim was to train young Englishmen for the priesthood under the instruction of suitable Spaniards so that they might return to their native land later on and try to reconvert the people to the Roman Catholic faith.

Shakespeare abounds in ribaldries at the expense of popes, monks and nuns, and these of course were all removed. Sir Sidney says that the censor's forbearance lends small support to the claim put forward by some modern Catholic writers that Shakespeare's religion was the same as their own and he believes that the Spanish censor, who was a Jesuit named Guillen Sanches, considered the question of Shakespeare's personal creed not at all. His conciliatory mood was doubtless due to the tolerance commonly bestowed at the time by the censors of the Holy Office on dramatic literature. The contemporary native drama was enjoying a special popularity throughout the orthodox cities of the peninsula.

Certainly this alien Spaniard was much more lenient and understanding in his treatment of Shakespeare than were Shakespeare's own countrymen, Dr. Bowdler and Nahum Tate, both of whom are remembered chiefly because of their efforts to improve and correct his writings. Only a single play did he wholly condemn and that, as might be expected, was "Measure for Measure.' Nineteen of the thirty-six are left untouched, and we wonder what theologian or modern uplifter in Sanches's position would have been as tolerant? Seven of the fourteen comedies are left untouched, five of the ten histories and eight of the twelve tragedies. The unexpurgated pieces are: "Two Gentlemen of Verona," "Merry Wives," "Comedy of Errors," "Midsummer Night's Dream," "Taming of the Shrew," "Twelfth Night," "Winter's Tale," "Richard II." 2, "Henry IV.," "Henry V." 3, "Henry VII.," "Richard III.," "Coriolanus," "Titus Adronicus," "Timon of Athens," "Romeo and Juliet," "Julius Caesar," "Othello," "Anthony and Cleopatra," and "Cymbeline."

Four comedies, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," "The Comedy of Errors," "Much Ado," and "The Merchant of Venice," received a special mark of commendation. At the head of the text of each of these plays the Inquisitor has inserted the word "good." "The Merry Wives" and "The Comedy of Errors" are wholly untouched, and "Much Ado" and the "Merchant" come off scot free, save for the deletion in the first comedy of some frank remarks by Margaret, Hero's waiting woman, while she is dressing her mistress for her wedding, and the excision from "The Merchant" of a licentious reflection on the Jew when he is lamenting his daughter's elopement. The rest of the comedies are mildly handled. In "The Tempest" only two expressions are inked out, viz.: "an unstanched wench," and the epithet "holiday" in the phrase a "holiday foole." In "Love's Labor's Lost," Boyet's free jesting with Rosaline, the lady in waiting on the French Princess, is scored through, and "Saint Cupid" is deprived of his canonisation by the erasure of the word "Saint"; nor is "Saint Denis" allowed to retain his prefix when the Princess couples him with "Saint Cupid." In "As You Like It" Rosalind's remark about Orlando, that "his kissing is as full of sanctity as the touch of holy bread," disappears, like the Clown's remark in "All's Well" "as the nun's lips to the friar's mouth," when the speaker is jesting about the harmonies of nature.

Falstaff's ribaldry in "Henry IV." escapes, but his oath, "By the Mass," is deleted. The only two history plays which appear to have excited the sustained reprobation of the censor are "King John" and "Henry VIII." Both, of course, have much to say about the Papacy, most of it of a denunciatory character, and naturally these references are struck out. In the latter, too, there are some frank obscenities. The censor will have none of the prophetic eulogies which the archbishop utters concerning the Princess Elizabeth, and all praise of Cranmer is expunged. Hamlet escapes with the excision of some of the prince's indelicate jesting, and nothing is taken from Lear but some of the coarser expressions of his Fool.

America's Millionaires.

Some huge incomes are disclosed in the United States Revenue Bureau report for 1919. There were then five Americans with over $5,000,000, two with over $3,000,000, and sixty-five with over $1,000,000. The average net income of each American liable to income-tax is $3,724, and the average tax amounts to $238.

SEEKING FOR HUSBANDS

WHY SO MANY ENGLISH GIRLS COME TO CANADA.

There Are Not Enough Men to Go Round in the British Isles, and Emigration Agents Tells Women That the Overseas Dominions Contain Numerous Bachelors.

It is a happy dispensation of nature that, while there are in Great Britain some two million females for whom there are no mates, across the seas, in the overseas dominions, there is a vast army of hard-working, decent men, with hundreds of acres of snug homesteads of their own, who are asking for wives to share their homes and their success.

In Canada alone British girls can have the choice of fifty thousand eligible bachelors. Probably thirty thousand of them own farms, and the rest are well-paid artisans in the smaller towns.

They are, with few exceptions, decent fellows, industrious, thrifty, and ambitious, and I assure you they are not seeking wives to make domestic drudges of them. As a rule, they have most comfortable homes and quite good incomes, and their only wish is for companionship.

During recent years, with the exception of the war period, the British girl has been awake to the attractions of this escape from a life of loneliness and drudgery.

Some time ago an official of the British Women's Emigration Office said that their society alone was superintending the emigration of about a hundred women every month; and, in addition, the Salvation Army and other agencies have been sending out women to Canada and other countries, with a view to getting work, in the first place.

"Do many of them marry?" I asked.

"Of course they do!" was the emphatic answer; "and over there it's not a question of a proposal being a woman's one and only chance. She can pick and choose."

Of course, if matrimony doesn't appeal to them, these women emigrants can have their pick of jobs and comfortable homes. And it must be remembered that in Canada the term "servant" is unknown. The woman who assists in the house is called a "help," and she is treated as one of the family. That appeals to the English girl's democratic ideas.

It is not long since Mr. Howell, the immigration agent, went to England in search of five thousand girls willing to become the wives of young Canadian farmers

He said, "We have thousands of inquiries from young farmers in the outlying districts, asking for domestic servants who, should their housekeeping trial prove mutually satisfactory, would not be averse to matrimony.

When Mr. Howell was asked what type of woman was wanted, he answered:

"It is difficult to single out any one type as the ideal. Certainly she must be domesticated; and, without doubt, there must be in her the germ of 'making good'."

In company with two lady-helpers, Mr. Howell made a tour through the south and west of England, and recruits poured in, until the five thousand were quickly procured — all domesticated women, healthy, and of good character, and between the ages of eighteen and forty. They were sent out to Canada under the care of a number of ladies, were placed in good homes, and to-day most of them have husbands and happy homes of their own.

And Canada is by no means the only part of the world that is clamoring for wives. In Australia, too, there are hundreds of thousands of young men who would make good life-partners if suitable girls and women were on the spot. In New South Wales alone there are one hundred thousand more bachelors than spinsters.

In Victoria there are seventy thousand desirable husbands awaiting wives; in Queensland, over fifty thousand; in South Australia, seventeen thousand; in Western Australia, ten thousand; and in Tasmania and New Zealand, fifty thousand. Thus, in Australasia alone, there are approximately three hundred thousand potential homes awaiting as many wives.

The cry is being taken up by the newspapers of the Australian continent, with appeals under such attractive headings as, "Don't be an old maid! Emigrate to Australia and find a husband."

2,000-Gallons Cows.

Forty-six British cows have reached the 2,000 gallons milk record in a year, and 44 are Friesians. The latest one to accomplish the feat is a Friesian, Beccles Cynthia, belonging to Mr. J. C. Bailey, of New Park, Trentham, Staffordshire, England. This cow has given 20,126 pounds of milk in 305 days and has produced in that time 1,058 pounds of butter. She is the fourth British cow with an annual butter production exceeding 1,000 pounds, all being of the British Friesian breed.

A Natural Conclusion.

"What," asked the teacher, "is meant by 'divers diseases'?"

Bashful or ignorant, the little scholars clung tenaciously to the doctrine that little boys should be seen and not heard. "Come," said the teacher, "can't any of you tell me?"

Up shot the hand of Johnny: "Please, miss," he said, "water on the brain."

Up to the Mark.

Father: "What? You say you are engaged to Fred? I thought I told you not to give him any encouragement?"

Daughter: "I don't. He doesn't need any!"

Field Secretary of Toronto.

These study classes of the School can scarcely be reported upon. It is necessary to visit them in person and catch the inspiration and interest from the presentation of the text books. For a small fee those not boarding in the College can avail themselves of this opportunity as day students to take notes also.

The Summer School reveals a fine sympathy by leaders and those in association there.

The "re-creation" of the physical is an important factor and necessarily emphasized. A baseball schedule is being drawn up and a tennis tournament is in course of arrangement.

Twilight Gathering.

The twilight gathering last evening at 7 o'clock on the steps of the College residence was in charge of Rev. D. R. Clare, who gave an inspiring talk on "Courage." This applied forcibly to the delegates upon their dispersing next week to more obscure scenes. The mountain top vision was apt to be followed by trying ordeals in the valley of human activity and experimental service. Courage manifested itself in results such as Peace, Joy and Perseverance.

Place of Music.

After a half hour intermission and then hearty songs, the public gathering in the College chapel was addressed by Rev. F. J. Horwood, Mus. Bac., A.T.C.M., upon "The Place of Music in Religious Education."

The theme was handled in a masterly way, yet within the reach of a listener no matter how much of a novice. Of course church music was solely dealt with. The Bible gives us our sacred literature, while we get our classical literature from the Greek. Our music dates back to the Chinese scale, and has been derived from the Egyptian, Persian and Italian eras, nevertheless some believe the birds of the air have furnished us with many notes. Through the mediaeval period in the world's history the beautiful masses of the Roman Catholic Church were developed, and we owe much to the same

Often music has appealed more to the emotions than to the intellect, as it should. The lecturer demonstrated this on the piano in various settings of the Doxology, and these proved to be quite amusing. In his opinion the organ was the king of instruments, and Persian music adaptable to the violin. Good music required rhythm, melody and harmony, the latter a long time delayed in Belgian and Roman culture.

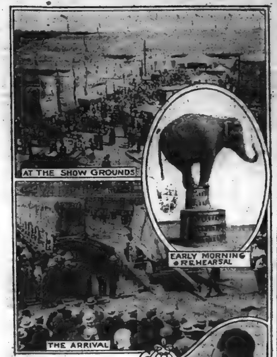
In sketching the founders of the art, mention was made of Martin Luther furnishing considerable of Anglican music. Such oratorios as "The "Messiah," "The Creation," "Elijah" and "Hallelujah Choruses" have revolutionized our conceptions of God. The great masters were John Sebastin Buck in his Preludes; Handel, in his "Hallelujah Chorus"; Hayden, with his "Creation"; Mozart and Beethoven in compositions and symphonies. Mendelssohn was, according to the artist's own viewpoint, the greatest organist known. Back of all music there should be spirituality, especially if it had a Biblical influence. Luther held that music was next to religion and could not very well be separated from it. The aesthetic side of our natures ought to be catered to more. Orchestra music is valuable. It is a regrettable thing that in recent years there is a dearth of ordinary organ music.

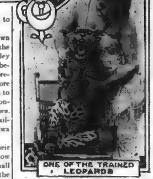
The reverend gentlemen referred with much interest to vocal and choir music, placing the cause of much lack of harmony therein to the varied scope of the human voice in contrast to instrumental selections. Solo assistance meant a lot, but congregational singing was likewise inspiring. Instruction in singing among the public schools of the British Isles had made it possible for most every one there to learn how to sing. The musical part of church services was often side-tracked by the elocutionary resources. He paid high tribute to the new edition of the Canadian Methodist Hymnal. Any difficulties experienced were due to unfamiliarity with proper and ideal tunes and substituting other than suited to the words. He pleaded for endeavors in learning new pieces.

The large audience enthusiastically applauded Rev. Horwood and he responded by a delightful number on the piano. The School is fortunate in having his services as accompanist, besides his presence as a member of the Bay of Quinte Conference, assisting on the programme of the Summer School.

Tonight another treat is in store in the form of a dramatic recital by Miss Lenore Hurd-Best, of Toronto, who comes most highly recommended. A silver collection only is taken at the evening sessions, and no doubt the weather man is contributing to a large attendance at the College assembly hall.

Sights You See At the World's Biggest Circus Tomorrow





The big double circus is on its way to Belleville.

Some time between midnight and dawn that greatest of all tent shows—the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey colossus of 1922—made greater than before by the addition of Europe's foremost trained wild animal acts and more than 200 performing horses, is coming to town for the first time since the consolidation of America's two big circuses. The different sections, totaling 100 railroad cars, will come here from Ottawa over the Grand Trunk railway.

As quickly as the trains arrive their contents will be transferred to the show grounds. First in interest to the small boys will be the vast menagerie—the biggest ever traveled. There will be a baby hippopotamus, six giraffes, a picturesque cavalcade of zebras, camels, zebus and sacred cattle and six herds of elephants. Added to these will be an endless procession of closely covered cages housing hundreds of strange menagerie animals.

The morning will be utilized in erecting the 30 tents of the tanbark town. One houses the dens occupied by the wild animal actors. Another shelters the stables of trained horses which the Ringling Brothers imported from Europe last winter.

Those who watch the building of the "big top" will in addition to three rings and five stages, note a trio of immense steel arenas. It is in these that the wild animals will be performed tomorrow. These many additions have so increased the task of putting this great double circus in place that it has become necessary to eliminate the street parade.

There are more than 700 performers with this season's circus and fully half that number of trained animals. Two hundred superbly schooled horses representing Europe's finest equestrian acts form a big new feature. Another includes twenty high-school horses ridden by riders of international fame.

The wild animal acts include jungle beasts who ride upon swiftly running horses, juggle like humans, perform tricks of balancing or play at games with their keepers. The arenas are time after time filled, emptied and refilled with entire troupes of tigers, lions,polar bears, leopards, panthers, jaguars and trained pumas. Most remarkable among these are the mixed groups of tigers, black panthers and leopards presented by the world's foremost women trainers, Mabel Stark and Olga Celeste. Women trainers are to the fore this season. One of the six herds of trained elephants is in charge of the noted Belgian breaker, Mme. Clare Hildegarde.

Comedy acts are offered in prodigious number. There are Pallenberg's bears that walk upon tight ropes or ride old fashioned bicycles; shaggy white bruins that "shoot the chutes"; Huling's famous troupes of acting seals; Loyal's wonderful French poodles including the whirl-i-gig dogs; and no end of trick monkeys, donkeys, Shetlands, pigs, goats, geese and pigeons.

Among the hundreds of men and women stars are Lily Leitzel, queen of all aerial gymnasts; Ernest Clarke and the noted Clarkonians in hazardous casting acts; the Siegrists, Silbons and Neapolitans, supreme on the flying trapeze; the Ernestos, Reifenraths, Tarneffs and Sevillos—all newly imported European equestrian acts of extraordinary skill; the Bagonghi, Rooney-Meers, Brada and Clarkdon troupes of riders;the Sie Tahar company of gymnasts for the first time introducing the women athletes of Arabia to American audiences; the four "Golden Girls in the Silver Swings"—a sensational old world novelty; aerial ballets, ten groups of statuary horses and perfectly formed women; eight of the world's highest perch acts, and many other high-air sensations.

The main tent program opens with a grand introductory pageant magnificently costumed, replete with nursery tales enacted in pantomime by hundreds of story book characters. A hundred clowns in five times as many original stunts promise no end of fun for juvenile patrons.

To-morrow's performance will begin at 2 and 8 p.m. and the doors to the menagerie open an hour earlier. Tickets will be on sale at Doyles drug store, 221 Front street, throughout show day.

Crowded China.

Why is China crowded? Her population is nearly four times as great as that of North America. But would this country be crowded if our people numbered 400,000,000? Surely not. And China, be it realized, is one-fourth larger than Canada.

Julian Arnold explains the matter by saying that there is really plenty of elbow-room and to spare in China. The Chinese are crowded because they are huddled together in a comparatively small area, leaving vast regions, abounding in rich resources, undeveloped and sparsely populated. It is this fact that has created the impression that the country is over-peopled.

The chief reason why the Chinese are thus crowded is lack of railways and other means of transport and communication. Six-sevenths of the population of China to-day lives in one-third of its area. There are in China 2,000,000 square miles of territory with an average of less than four persons to the square mile. But China is building railways, and they are altering this condition of affairs. The iron horse is opening up Inner Mongolia, a region which until recently was sparsely populated, and the Chinese are flocking thither by the tens of thousands. Building of railways in Manchuria has been followed by the migration of millions from over-populated Shantung, who are transforming the Manchuria province into a granary for a very large part of Asia.

The most strangely situated people in the world are 70,000,000 in West China (embracing the province of Szechwan, Shensi, Shansi and Kansu), who are virtually cut off from economic communication with the rest of China, and hence with the world. But, for this very reason, West China is the cheapest part of the world to live in. Wheat costs twenty-five cents a bushel, and six cents is the price of a dozen eggs.

Boat Race Colors.

It is interesting to recall that in the first Oxford and Cambridge boat race (1829) the Oxford colors were modelled upon those of Christ Church. The men wore dark blue and white striped jerseys and black straw hats with broad blue ribbons. The time was June. Cambridge wore white shirts, with a pink tie or sash. In the second race Oxford again wore dark blue and white stripes, and Cambridge for the first time carried light blue as their color. The account of that race tells us they were about to start without any color in their bows, when some one suggested carrying a piece of Eton blue. In 1842, and ever since that date, Oxford have worn white gauze jerseys trimmed with dark blue, and Cambridge similar jerseys.

IMPORTANCE OF QUEEN BEES

Should be Renewed Systematically, Method Advised by Apiarist

Serious losses are caused each year in Canadian beekeeping by many beekeepers failing to replace, with young and prolific queens, the old and failing queens in their colonies. With our more progressive beekeepers it is becoming a common practice to systematically requeen each colony every two years and in some cases to requeen every year as young queens are more prolific as a rule than queens more than one year old.

In requeening the apiary it is not advisable to allow the bees to rear their own queens promiscuously, but to adopt some method of queen rearing by which only queens from the best strains are produced, thereby improving the strain of bees kept.

Although queens can be safely introduced at any time during the active season, the best time of the year to requeen is during a honey flow. Ripe queen cells or mated queens can be used. The giving of ripe queen cells is perhaps the easiest method of requeening, but there is a danger of the queen cells being destroyed or the young queen being lost on her mating flight, leaving the colony hopelessly queenless. The system recommended is to rear queens by the cells cup method at the commencement of the main honey flow from clover and to have these queens mated from small nuclei, specially prepared for that purpose. As the queens become mated and laying ed can be destroyed and the young laying queen introduced. Where only a few queens are required and the beekeeper is unable to rear his own, they can be obtained at a nominal price from a beekeeper making a specialty of queen rearing.

Before introducing a new queen be sure that the colony is queenless and that no queen cells are present. Directions for introducing accompanies each queen sent out.

The following method of requeening has given entire satisfaction at the Central Experimental farm at Ottawa:

As soon as a colony is making preparations for swarming by having larvae in queen cells at the beginning of the main honey flow from clover, the old queen is removed from the hive and all the queen cells are destroyed. Nine days later all cells are again destroyed and a young laying queen of select parentage is introduced; this effectively controls swarming and provides the colony with a young prolific queen in time to build up the colony with young bees for the winter and makes the colony more profitable the following spring. Where a beekeeper has no spare queens on hand, or is unable to obtain them, and it is necessary for the colony to produce its own queen, one cell can be left at the time the old queen is removed from the colony but the colony should be examined later to see if the young queen is safely mated and laying.

HOTEL FORTRESS HELD BY REBELS IS IN FLAMES

ing was raged for days. It was reported to be de Valera's headquarters but he was not among the defenders who were captured when Free Staters stormed it after it had burst into flames, presumably from the explosion of a mine.

To-night finds the Irregulars confined to three hotels, the Gresham, the Granville and the Crown. How long they will hold them is problematical.

Almost as mysterious as the whereabouts of de Valera, is that of the Countess Markievicz. Like him, she has been reported everywhere the fighting has raged in Dublin. A persistent rumor to-day casts her in the role of leader of a "sniping battalion of death." She and her Amazonian band were captured, so the rumor goes, when Hammond's Hotel fell. There has been no confirmation.

AN UNLIKELY MERGER

Reports from Ottawa indicate that there is a movement on foot, promoted by Mr. Crerar and Mr. Drury for the linking up of the Progressives with the Liberal Party. On the other hand, The Intelligencer hears authentic reports from the West to the effect that Mr. Crerar may at any time be asked to either give up his position as Progressive Leader or resign as executive head of the Grain Growers' Association.

One thing seems to be certain, that there can be no merging of the Progressive Party as a whole with the Liberal Party. All farmers under the U.F.O. and the Grain Growers' Association are not Liberals. Most of the Western farmers may favor a lowering of the tariff, but they are by no means solid for free trade.

The only reason for a merging of the Progressives with the Liberal Party would be the bolstering up of the King Government, which has no working majority. Quebec Protectionists would find some strange bed-fellows among the Agrarians.

THE DECLINE OF ACTING

Acting seems to be a declining art in England so far as public support is concerned. We are told that thousands of actors and actresses in England are out of work. The hot summer, the closing down recently of six London playhouses, and the exodus of the theatre-going public to the seashore have been the main factors. In their efforts to keep the wolf from the door, men and women of the histronic art have accepted small parts in cinema productions.

An endeavor is being made to relieve the situation by the formation of a kind of co-operative theatrical company for the benefit of the workless actors and actresses. Those taking part receive $15 a week. "East Lynne" was the first play given, but after a four-weeks' season it was found that the company had lost $250, after paying artists' salaries, so the venture went on the rocks.

England has produced some of the finest actors in the world, and they hold the leading place in American theatrical circles. Many of the most brilliant English actors have emigrated to the United States on account of the larger field and the better pay. The moving picture shows have done much to destroy the theatre, but they can never take the place of the drama as an educational and humanizing influence. The theatre will probably come back into its own. It is now doing so as an amateur institution in Canada. Toronto has a number of players' societies which provide profitable and cultural recreation for young people in the winter months.

CALL IN REVOLVERS

The shooting of John Wesley Moult is one more convincing argument against allowing civilians to possess firearms. It has been stated that the youth accused of the crime had two revolvers, yet no one thought that he would use them to take human life, although it would be difficult to imagine what else he would use them for. Men do not, as a rule go out shooting rabbits or birds with pistols. There should be a law against the possession of revolvers, and anyone found with such a weapon should be arrested on suspicion and punished.

The whole of this continent is infested with gun-men, and even people of the most peaceful dispositions sometimes think it necessary to carry a pistol or keep one in their bedroom drawer or even under their pillows. The possession of a revolver is a great temptation to certain weak-minded persons and the chances are that they will make use of it if they are provoked or moved by a spirit of retaliation or revenge. The depicting of wholesale shooting in the movie shows is also an incentive to such crimes. Young and immature minds are unbalanced and perverted by these picture displays of playing at murder. Shooting is looked upon as something manly and heroic, and to be emulated.

This is a matter which might well be taken up by the Federal Government at once. There is no need to wait for the next session of Parliament; an Order-in-Council could be issued calling in all revolvers in the possession of private individuals, and a thorough search should be made for such weapons. Any person other than a policeman or guardian of the law who owns a pistol is a potential man-killer. In a civilized community in time of peace, there is absolutely no excuse for a man being armed either in public or in his own home.

PASSING COMMENT

A Bolshevist by any other name would not smell any sweeter.

Miss Macphail has returned her salary of $1,500 as an M.P. to the Dominion Treasury. The Government might devote the money to the carrying out of its great naval program.

Home Rule for Scotland is said to be the next move. There might then be a chance for England to get home rule, for the Scot seems to do most of the ruling South of the Tweed.

A "Workers' Party of Canada" is the latest contribution to class-consciousness. From the manifesto issued one would conclude that it was affiliated with the Bolshevists of Russia.

The Farm and Ranch Review of Calgary says the Liberal budget was "a colorless proposition." It was the product of a colorless government.

Twenty murderers have escaped the Toronto police in the past five years, and the police are not worrying. The Small affair was no credit to the vigilance of the police of the Queen City.

Dublin seems to be a blazing furnace at the present time. May the smelting process result in the moulding of a peaceful as well as a Free Irish State.

Red flags are flying in the streets of Berlin, and the Royalists are in retreat. The only permanent government for Germany would be something between the Reds and the Royalists.

HERE AND THERE

ADVERTISING A CITY

As water by its steady flow wears away the hardest granite, so does constant, steady, ADVERTISING break away all barriers to steady progress, and wear smooth, well-traveled, highways to those fortunate cities which have sufficient vision and faith to push ahead and utilize, bu vertiging the resources of their city and trade territory.

In some cities, everybody's business seems to be nobody's business.

The citizens owe something to a community besides the payment of taxes. Some people are citizens of a city, while others just live there. Their home city is worth their very best efforts. They should BOOST FOR IT! BE PROUD OF IT! And, by so doing, make it a better city in which to live and make a living.

GRUDGES NOT WORTH WHILE.

Do you carry grudges? Cast them aside. Your burden in life is heavy enough without them. Do you boast of your grudges as a sign that you are a free man? Don't do it. Though you may have created your grudges and though you may feed them, they are your masters. You may carry your grudge uphill through life, but it will carry you only down.

How often we hear the voice in the street in violent impatience. Smith cries: "If Jones is for it, I am against it." Then Jones controls Smith's mind more firmly than if he were his closest friend.

It is not worth while to waste our energies and vitiate our minds in hate and resentment. It is right to hate evil, but merely pity evil men.

If you have been wronged, forget. Why keep the injury fresh? You suffered enough at the time.

Do you long for revenge or to "get even" with some enemy, actual or imaginary? You magnify his triumph. You continue his ascendancy. You hypnotize yourself within his spell.

It doesn't pay.

A MEMORY SYSTEM

Forget each kindness that you do
As soon as you have done it;
Forget the praise that falls to you
The moment you have won it;
Forget the gossip that you hear
Before you can repeat it;
Forget each slight each spite, each sneer,
Wherever you may meet it.

Remember every kindness done
To you, whate'er its measure;
Remember praise by others won
And pass it on with pleasure;
Remember every promise made,
And keep it to the letter;
Remember those who lend you aid,
And be a grateful debtor.

Remember all the happiness
That comes your way in living;
Forget each worry and distress,
Be hopeful and forgiving;
Remember good, remember truth,
Remember heaven's above you,
And you will find, through age and youth
True joys and hearts to love you.

PRESS OPINIONS

CANADIAN MERCHANT FLEET

Toronto Star

It would be well for public opinion not to allow itself to be influenced by propagandist despatches in favor of selling or giving away the Canadian fleet. Let nobody forget that a man so little prone to rash adventures in national ownership as Sir Thomas White, when minister of finance before the war, found so great a shipping monopoly governing ocean freights that he went to England and sought to induce the British government to join with Canada in establishing a publicly owned fleet of merchant vessels to ply between Canada and the mother country.

LARKIN LINGERS

Toronto Telegram

Beset with difficulties, Great Britain will see a ray of hope in the assurance given by Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canada's High Commissioner, that he is not resigning. And Canada, having become accustomed to the mental contemplation of Mr. Larkin's tall hat moving about amongst the crowds on the British Isles, will feel better also.

The round of banquets which heralded Mr. Larkin's departure would have a strange result in the reappearance of the Larkin millinery in these parts. As every amateur gardener knows, seed so well and truly planted must come up into something some time.

IRISH PACIFICATION

Mail & Empire

The fall of the Four Courts may or may not mean an early end of the Republican resistance to the authority of the Provisional Government of the Irish Free State. Rory O'Connor has submitted, but the insurgents have not by any means all ceased firing. In Dublin itself they still hold some positions and in various parts of the South defiance is being kept up. The Four Courts was not the only nest of adherents of De Valera's bitter-enders, and the success of the Provisional Government in ousting O'Connor and his handful of irregulars is not criterion of that Government's ability to maintain order througout the South.

WIT AND HUMOR

The Two Versions

Jones (in the golf club smoking-room, describing an unusual triumph) Yes, to start with everything was in Smith's favor. Rub of the green against me, though I was playing a top-hole game. Four down and five to go! And then I finished ab-so-lutely like a tiger: won all the last five holes, and took the beggar's money, begad!

Smith (simultaneously in the dressing room): I had Jones boiled to a rag. Four up, I was, and five to go. But then—the bounder's flukes! Never in all my life have I seen anything like it Cannons off bunkers, topped approaches, blind putts—all trickling down. To make it worse, the bumptious idiot fairly talked me out of it at the end.

JUST ONE WIFE

"Git married again?—why, mister,
I wouldn't have the name.
What'd Lizzie think of me?
"T'would fill my soul with shame.
Git married again—say, stranger,
I take that for a slur;
I've got a wife, I reckon,
An' I'll be true to her;

"They say she's dead—'taint so!
Why she is with me yet,
My comrade, wife, my sweetheart,
My guiding star, my pet.
An' I kin hear at evening
The rustle of her dress,
Her small hand on my shoulder,
Falls like a soft caress.

"My wife was ill—the Healer
Touched her—she was whole!
My wife is since that winter's day
A fair and lovely soul.
As soon's I git the harvest in,
The harvest of my life,
I'll turn the ole team out to grass,
An' go'n see my wife!

'Git marired agin—why, mister,
That's bigamy, of course,
So long as Lizzie sticks to me
I won't git no divorce
You see that I am satisfied,
Contented with my lot;
So if you've no objection,
I'll keep the wife I've got."

I'd like to ask this question:
Is this here chap a crank?
Are there bats in his belfry
And tadpoles in his tank?
Is he wormy in the nut?
This question I'm rehearsin',
Is he a perfect gentleman or
A most unusual person?

Good Old Days "At Sea"

Other days, other ways. "Old times have changed, old manners gone," someone has very sapiently declared. Very much has changed for the better in some things in the interregnum however. Life at sea for one thing has had a steady evolution upward and onward.

Seafaring as an Occupation.

Seafaring as a trade or occupation has certainly steadily improved in an infinite variety of ways. Few if any nowadays hear of the word "shanghaied," which used to be a favorite occupation of unprincipled habitues of deep water ports. To be shanghaied in the good old days of yore meant to be shipped as a seaman on board a sailing ship against one's will and very frequently without the knowledge of the person concerned until after the event. Webster defines the word "shanghai" as "To drug, intoxicate or render insensible and ship as a sailor usually to secure money in advance." It is interesting to go back into history and explore some of the stories of this very extraordinary procedure of a "game" of a former period which was played with constant success and much to the chagrin usually of the victim. Most sailing ship men and those of the older seafaring school can recount reliable stories in this connection.

Members of All Professions.

Members of all professions, as well as tradesmen, clerks and others, were made the victims of this pernicious practice. It was chiefly in foreign ports that the nefarious occupation—if it can be called such—originated and was practiced. San Francisco and Callao were two notorious cities where "shanghai-ing" did a thriving trade and where some of the worst cases were reported from. The shanghai "trick" would come about thus:—A couple of A.B.'s arriving in a ship in one of these foreign ports, "signed on" for the round trip back to the port of embarkation, and who were perhaps only getting a small wage per month, would be met on arrival by "touts" and induced to desert that ship on the promise that a very much larger rate of remuneration would be forthcoming. But all this was a "fake" and part of the diabolical scheme of things.

When these "gulled" seamen found themselves in their new quarters it was customary for one thing to present them with a bill for goods of various kinds, which, of course, they had never had, and loans of cash were represented as having been obtained, which the poor unfortunate individuals knew nothing of and could not well dispute. On the day of signing-on, there were a number of shore accomplices, who helped in the wicked work. Some of these merely joined the ship as a "blind," later on their places being taken by those who were "shanghaied." The latter were usually conveyed on board ship under cover of darkness, being smuggled there as the ship lay at anchor away from the docks—very frequently rascally boarding-house masters being active participants in the game of kidnapping. If the requisite crew by any chance were not procurable by the ordinary channels of bribery, corruption and other questionable tactics, it very often occurred that a parson leaving his home to go on an errand of mercy; a clerk quitting his work for the day for home; or a doctor scudding hurriedly to see a patient, would be tricked away by a decoy message. The call came to anybody. There was no respecting of persons. It did not matter, if seamen were short seamen had to be found and had to be found quickly—it mattered not how—and they were found. The sand bag, the black cloak and the drug all played their part in the evil work of shanghai-ing.

Next Day's Awakening.

When finally the ship got under way, and the journey out to sea had begun, there were many cruel and exciting scenes staged during the process of "falling-in," mustering the crew, and selecting "the watches." Weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth were of no avail. The plea of anxious relatives and friends ashore made no difference. The discipline of the old sailing ship days was the discipline of the iron hand—not necessarily perhaps always cruel—but sternly firm. Nevertheless those "shanghaied" had to go through with it willingly or unwillingly, and their experiences in this regard can better be imagined than described. Some of the cruel hardships of those days at sea can be surmised. The sea was a different place a century ago from what it is today. Pirates and others of old made the deep waters have anything but a healthy atmosphere at times. Much of the old time romance as well as suffering had better be left unchronicled. The conditions obtaining to-day have all improved for the better, and that great and glorious profession of those who go down to the sea in ships stands high in the estimation of mankind. Officers of the mercantile marine, like those of the royal navy, have a glorious heritage, which they most worthily conserve. Long may the red and white ensign float gaily in the breeze.

THE BOSS

You may think the Boss is pretty near all-powerful. But he isn't. He's as helpless in the hands of Time and Events as you are. Especially is he helpless as to you. Don't think that the Boss can make you or break you.

He can't.

He cannot keep a poor man up or a good man down. He can pile titles and salary on top of a man, but if the man is weak the result will be only a grease spot.

On the other hand, the Boss may drape overalls and a ten-a-week salary around a fellow, and put him at work cleaning cuspidors, but if the chap has brains and guts he will get the Old Man's job sooner or later, or some other job just as good.

The thing for the worker to do is to work to satisfy not the Boss but himself. Let him ask himself each night, "Have I delivered the goods to-day? How do I stack up? Have I accomplished anything? Is the case in which I am engaged any further ahead by reason of my thought or effort? Have I earned my salt to-day, and a little more? Has the Boss made a profit out of this day's work of mine?—American Mutual Magazine.

Jobs Depend on the Safety of the Forests

DON'T

DON'T take any chances with fire in Ontario's forests.

DON'T throw away cigarette or cigar butts, pipe "heels" or burnt matches until you are dead sure they are out.

DON'T neglect to drown out your fire with lots of water.

DON'T build your camp fire against a rotten log or stump; nor on windy points; nor near moss patches; nor at the base of a tree.

Build it in a former fireplace, or on a flat rock, or on a spot cleared down to the true soil below, or by the edge of the water.

DON'T forget that the upper layer of ground in the forest consists of partially rotted wood which will burn.

RIVER DRIVERS, shanty men, pulp loggers, and all men who work in the lumber woods, on the river or at the mill—get this: Your job depends on keeping forest fires from burning up the bush.

Every time you leave a camp fire or a smudge burning you are taking chances on a forest fire that will do you out of a job. Every time you throw away a burning match or a cigarette, or drop the "heel" of your pipe on the ground, you are taking a chance. In summer time, moss, dead wood, dry leaves or the regular wood-fibre soil of the forest are all ready to burn. Millions of feet of timber and pulp are being burnt up that way every year.

Ontario's forests are not growing fast enough to keep up. Forest fires will do you out of a job if they keep on a few years more. Watch yourself.

Woman's Sphere

A LITTLE BIT OF VERSE.

It may be early, ere the morn has lost its crimson flush,
Or 'mid the noonday clamor, or the fragrant vesper hush;
Sometime before the hours of light their tale of toil rehearse,
I seek a treasured volume for a little bit of verse.

When Keats or noble Tennyson a rhythmic stanza sings,
I bathe my soul in beauty and forget life's mundane things.
In Browning's mine I deeply delve for grains of golden ore,
And Ingelow sets my feet in paths they never trod before.

I honor them, the mighty ones, the laureled poet band:
But oh! I love the singers of our own
Canadian land.
The eager years await to crown with stars their younger brows,
And proudly weave about their names
the myrtle and the rose.

They sing of dear, familiar things in measures wildly sweet,
Like bird-songs in our native woods
when night and morning meet.
But not alone these home-born themes
—wide as the universe,
As high as Heaven as deep as death, the limits of their verse.

There's Lampman, Campbell, Carman,
Scott, there's Crawford, Watson,
Rand,
With others, who have climbed the heights and in the starshine stand;
A kinship sweet with them I claim as softly they rehearse—
Lifting me skyward, too, awhile—a little bit of verse.

—Lilian Leveridge.

THE DISAPPEARANCE OF "MARY ANN"

Where is the "faithful family servant" of yester-year? Where is the Mary Ann who did almost everything for the family, from blacking the boots to whitening the silver? Some of our readers will recall a "Maggie" or a "Susie" or a "Rose," who, in far off years, did the family washing and ironing, cooked the meals, swept the floors and cleaned the front steps every morning—for eight or nine dollars a month—and considered herself lucky if she had one night "off," in the week—She was sometimes called a "treasure" and instances were known where she remained with the family until the children grew up. Mary Ann is disappearing—we can almost see the last flutter of her skirt—and the time is coming when, in our cities, cooks, house-maids or parlormaids will be engaged by the hour or the day and will be found highly useful, if not so unlimited in time and toil as the "general servant" of long ago.

In fact, the overwhelming majority of Canadian housewives have no useful maid-of-all-work in their homes, and yet seem to manage the household with efficiency. There is a helper near at hand which must not be ignored, in considering modern domestic emergencies. When the housewife of to-day is in doubt or distress, she presses the button and electricity does the rest.

An ancient newspaper joke which used to be highly popular concerned itself with the tribulations of the husband as he lighted the fire in the morning. Getting the breakfast used to be a sad and serious business, especially on a winter morning, and it was no wonder that breakfast meant the most quarrelsome meal of the day. In the towns and cities of the present, all we have to do is to turn on the electricity and the bacon, toast and coffee will soon be all that our early morning appetite craves. The small electric stove is equal to many demands, and, when you can command its services, you will find them a clean and prompt substitute for Mary Ann. If you have a "little electric" and the power behaves properly—as it usually does—you may indulge in a feeling of superiority as you think of the struggles of our pioneer forefathers over the morning fire. Of course, it really is not to our credit that we have a little electric domestic servant in our home. Someone else did the thinking for us long ago, and many wise heads put themselves together and a toiling band of Sons of Martha worked for weary hours over wires and connections, in order that we might press that convenient button, turn the electric force in the direction of our kitchen and enjoy a little morning toast and coffee, to say nothing of the poached egg.

STRAWBERRY RICE MERINGUE

By Bertha E. Shapleigh
Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University.

This dessert can be made using any fruit canned or fresh, but is particularly good with fresh strawberries, raspberries or peaches.

It being a hearty dessert the dinner preceding should be rather light.

Cook in a double boiler (or in a sauce pan set in another pan containing boiling water) one quart of milk, the grated rind of half a lemon and one cup of well washed rice. It will take from one to one and a half hours to cook the rice thoroughly.

Add one-half cup sugar, the yolks of three eggs and one-fourth teaspoon of salt. Cook five minutes and turn into a border mold. In 10 minutes turn out into a dish or platter which can be placed in the oven. Have ready a box of strawberries, sweetened to taste, and a meringue made as follows:

Whites of three eggs beaten until stiff and one-half cup powdered sugar added gradually while continuing the beating until the mixture will hold its shape. Add one-half teaspoon vanilla.

Fill the center of the rice border with the berries, completely cover rice and berries with the meringue. Set in a moderate oven eight minutes, or until a light brown. Serve warm or cold.

NOTE: If you have no border mold use any mold and surround with the fruit, covering all with the meringue. Bake.

FASHION FANCIES

White As a Summer Mode.

As the summer advances, there is a strong feeling that white will be more and more worn, and most of the better shops are showing a great number of white dresses both for daytime and for evening wear. This is true also of sport clothes, and new models in serge, ratine, wool eponge, and all the interesting home-spun materials that are so much in favor this season are being shown in white, to say nothing of the silk crepes and tussurs that adapt themselves so well to simple treatment, and the myriad cottons. Sometimes these white dresses are combined with color and have banding and pipings in some gay shade, and often, the little, separate coat, which is apt to be an important part of this year's dresses, is of a solid color.

The Vogue of Patterned Fabrics.

At Deauville and Torquay patterned and embroidered fabrics were worn a great deal, and they have repeated their success in New York this summer. Most of the largest houses in New York are showing frocks of these gaily figured silks and foulards, which are interesting and lovely.

Cretonne or printed linen dresses that may be as expensive or as inexpensive as one chooses to have them according to the price of the material are delightful for the country. In the nature of things they cannot be made elaborately, and are most successful with plain facings and collars.

Jeanne Lanvin is showing a great many embroidered tussurs, that were much worn on the Riviera. Embroidery in peasant colorings is still used a great deal, particularly on the dresses of young girls and children.

GLAD TO BE ABLE TO WORK

Toronto Woman Gives Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toronto, Ontario.—"I suffered with irregular periods, was weak and run down, could not eat and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging-down pains, so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy, and I seemed to be smothering. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not seem to work. I tried all kinds of medicines and had been treated by physicians but received no benefit. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it and now I keep house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends and if these facts will help some poor woman, use them as you please."—Mrs. J. F. Peasey, 337 King St., West, Toronto, Ontario.

Various forms of female weakness many times make work almost impossible. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped thousands of women over these troubles.

WILLIAM DeMILLE'S NEW TRIUMPH

William DeMille's new production "After the Show," featuring Jack Holt, Lila Lee and Charles Ogle, has proven delightful entertainment to two large audiences at Griffin's on Monday and Tuesday, and it is receiving its final exhibition tonight.

The story deals with the fortunes of a chorus girl, the "angel" of the show and an old stage doorkeeper who watches over the unsophisticated maid. The situations are thrilling at times and the picture as a whole shows marked advance in cinema production, and William DeMille has achieved another triumph in this production.

"Headin' West" the second feature offering on the same program, featuring Hoot Gibson, is the story of a man who went through the war and came out of it broke, like many another. He hoboed to his old home section via airplane and dropped out on the familiar scenery in a parachute and from then on the split is between humor and thrills. Louise Lorraine plays the chief feminine role.

ELITE OF NEW YORK IN SCENES OF "EXPERIENCE"

The elite of New York was recruited for the big Paramount picture "Experience" which comes to Griffin's to-morrow to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday. Wives of the most prominent business men of that city, put aside their special duties for a day to appear in the gorgeous cabaret scene which is an important feature of the picture.

As the habitues of cabarets along the Great White Way are, in a great number, society folk, George Fitzmaurice, the director, induced the social lights of the city to come to the Paramount studio on Long Island and appear before the screen as "extras." The response was most generous.

Never before, perhaps in the history of motion pictures, has there been such a showing of brilliant costumes and glitter of jewels, as was apparent among the distinguished "extras" in his scene in "Experience."

The story of "Experience" deals with an ambitious young country chap who goes to the big city to make his fortune and who learns the bitter truths about life from personal experience. There is a charming love story and there are many dramatic moments. Richard Barthelmess is the featured player and in the supporting cast are such players as Marjorie Daw as "Love," John Miltern as "Experience," Edna Wheaton as "Beauty," and whom the Daily News, of New York designated as the most beautiful girl in New York, Nita Naldii as "Temptation," Sybil Carmen as "Excitement," Betty Carpenter as "Hope," Lilyan Tashman as "Pleasure," Kate Bruce and many others.

A 2 reel Baby Peggy comedy, George Walsh in the latest chapter of "With Stanley in Africa," and a Travelogue are also announced for exhibition on the same program.

The Bandbox

Louis Joseph Vance

There was subtle flattery in this; and flattery (we are told) will warm the most austere of authors—which Staff was not. He said "Oh!" and smiled his slow, wry smile; and Mr. Iff, remarking these symptoms of a thaw with interest and encouragement, pressed his point.

"I don't mind an upper, really—only chose the lower because the choice was mine, at the moment. If you prefer it—"

"The trouble is," Staff interrupted, "I want the whole room."

"Oh! . . . Friend with you?"

"No; but I had some notion of doing a little work on the way over."

"Writing? I see. But if that's all—!" Mr. Iff routed a negligible quibble with an airy flirt of his delicate hand. "Trust me; you'll hardly ever be reminded of my existence—I'm that quiet. And besides, I spend most of my time in the smoking-room. And I don't snore, and I'm never seasick. . . . By the way," he added anxiously, "do or a re you?"

"Never—"

"Then we'll get along famously. I'll cheerfully take the upper, and even should I tumble out on top of you, you'd never know it: my weight is nothing—hardly that. Now what d'you say? Is it a go?"

"But—I don't know you—"

"Business of making a noise like an Englishman!" commented Mr. Iff with bitter scorn.

"—well enough to accept such a favour from you. I'll take second choice myself—the upper, I mean."

"You won't; but we'll settle that on shipboard," said Mr. Iff. "As for knowing me—business of introducing myself. Mr. Staff, I want you to shake hands with my friend, Mr. Iff. W. H. Iff, Whiff: sometimes so-called: merry wheeze based on my typographical make-up; once a joke, now so grey with age I generally pull it myself, thus saving new acquaintances the mental strain. Practical philanthropy what? Whim of mine."

"Indeed?"

"Believe me. You've no notion how folks suffer in the first throes of that giddy pun. And then when it falls flat —naturally I can't laugh like a fool at it any longer—blooie!" said Mr. Iff with expression— "like that—blooie!—they do feel so cheap. Wherefore I maintain I do humanity a service when I beat it to that moth-eaten joke. You follow me?"

Staff laughed.

"Then it's settled. Good! We shan't be in one another's way. You'll see."

"Unless you talk in your sleep, too."

Mr. Iff looked unspeakable reproach. "You'll soon get accustomed to me," he said, brightening— "won't mind my merry prattle any more'n the song of a giddy humming-bird."

He turned and saw their book-clerks a patient waiting behind the counter. "Ah, there you are, eh? Well, it's all settled. . . ."

Thus was the thing accomplished.

And shortly thereafter these two paused in parting at the door

"Going my way?" enquired Mr. Iff.

Staff named whatever destination he had in mind.

"Sorry. I go t'other way. Take care of yourself. See you tomorrow."

"Good-bye," said Staff, and took himself briskly off.

But Mr. Iff did not at once go in the opposite direction. In fact, he moved no more than a door or two away, and then stopped, apparently fascinated by an especially stupid shop-window show.

He had very quick eyes, had Mr. Iff, so alert and observant that they had made him alive to a circumstance which had altogether escaped Staff's notice—a trifling incident that took place just as they were on the point of parting.

While still they were standing in the doorway, a motor-cab, plunging down Haymarket, had swooped in a wide curve as if meaning to pull in at the curb in front of the steamship company's office. The cab carried a solitary passenger—a remarkably pretty young woman—and on its roof a remarkably large and ornate bandbox.

It was, in fact, the bandbox which had first fixed the interest of Mr. Iff. Only an introspective vision, indeed, such as that of the imaginative and thoughtful Mr. Staff, could have overlooked the approach of a bandbox so big and upstanding, so profusely beflowered and so prominently displayed.

Now before the cab could stop, its fare, who had been bending forward and peering out of the windtow as if anxious to recognise her destination, started still farther forward, seized the speaking-tube and spoke into its mouthpiece in a manner of sharp urgency. And promptly the driver swerved out from the curb and swung his car away down Pall Mall.

If it was mere inquisitiveness that held Mr. Iff rooted to the spot, gaping at that uninteresting window show, it served to discover him in the guise of an admirably patient person. Fully fifteen minutes elapsed before the return of the motor-cab was signalled unmistakably by the blatant bandbox bobbing back high above the press of traffic. And when this happened, Mr. Iff found some further business with the steamship company, and quietly and unobtrusively slipped back into the booking-office.

How to Make the Most Delicious Raspberry Jam You Ever Tasted

New Certo process astonishes housewives

Never fails—only one minute's boiling—retains the delightful, natural flavor of the raspberries—so easy to make—and your jam costs less—keeping quality excellent

Raspberries are now plentiful at very moderate prices. Sugar is cheap and housewives are putting down more raspberry jam than ever because they have discovered that by the use of Certo they can make the most delicious jam with so little work and at less cost than the old way.

Just take 4 level cups or 2 lbs. crushed raspberries, add 7½ cups or 3¼ lbs. of sugar. Stir and bring to a vigorous boil over a hot fire. Boil hard one full minute, continually stirring. Take from fire and add while stirring, one-half bottle (scant half cup) of Certo. Allow jam to stand a few minutes to cool and then stir again and pour into glasses. This recipe will make, from two lbs. of raspberries, about fourteen 6-ounce glasses of delicious raspberry jam for less than six cents a glass.

Certo is just concentrated fruit pectin. Contains no gelatine or preservatives. It is Mother Nature's "jell-maker." Try it right away with fresh fruit like cherries, currants or raspberries, then you will do all your preserving the new and modern way—the easy, economical and better Certo way.

If your grocer does not have Certo we will mail you a bottle, to save delay, postage paid, for 40c in stamps. Send us his name and we will send you a recipe book of fifty-three recipes for making jams and jellies.

THE UNSPOILED WILDERNESS

The lover of Nature has to search farther and farther for the unspoiled wilderness as the years go by. Every year miles and miles of the "forest primeval" are being sacrificed to the onward march of civilization. Soon the majority of the great Northland's forest playgrounds will be things of the past, and the sportsman and the wilderness lover will have to go farther afield to find the unbroken haunts of their finned, feathered, and furred friends. Resting in the midst of the green widerness of the Timagami Forest Reserve (300 miles north of Toronto) like some gigantic octopus with its innumerable legs, and arms and feelers, lies Lake Timagami.

There you must go if you really wish to enjoy Nature. Imagine this lake with its 1,600 islands. The fishing is excellent. Lake trout tipping the scale up to 35 pounds, small mouthed black bass, speckled trout and wall-eyed pike abound. Altitude of the district 1,000 feet above the sea level. Illustrated publication with good map, list of hotels and camps and all particulars has been issued by the Grand Trunk Railway and can be had free on application to any Grand Trunk Ticket Agent or C. BRENNAN MACHINE NO USE IN WAR

Colonel says Helicopter Would be Easy Mark For "Archie"

London, July 5.—While the Brennan helicopter is expected to revolutionise civil flying, an artillery colonel opines it will not be of much benefit to armies in the event of war.

According to the GRAPHIC this officer says such a machine would prove an easy mark for a modern "archie" or aircraft gun, its very stability proving its downfall. "It was difficult," he declared, "to hit an ordinary airplane flying 10,000 feet at the rate of 100 miles an hour, but we did it. What about a stationary one?"

When it was pointed out to him that the new machine claimed to be practically invisible at 5,000 feet, the officer replied: "With modern developments in anti-aircraft artillery we could plaster the whole area with high explosive shells, from the explosion of which nothing could escape. Don't think that the 'archie' is an effete weapon by any means; it was only in its infancy during the war."

COINCIDENCE IN DEATH IN NEW YORK HOSPITAL

New York, July 4.—A mother and son died yesterday in Bellevue Hospital. Neither knew the other was fatally ill, and each gave the name of the other as that of "nearest relative and best friend." The son was David Cronin, forty-five, who was taken to the hospital yesterday afternoon from his home, No. 110 East 41st Street, suffering from acute kidney trouble. He died at 10.30 this morning.

An hour later Mrs. Kate Cronin, eighty, with whom David had made his home, was taken to the hospital suffering from pneumonia. She died a half hour later. The nurses and doctors in the hospital were unaware of the relationship of the two patients until their cards were compared.

CAUSES OF DESTITUTION

Toronto, July 5—Interesting data which explained causes of the normal destitution in the city are contained in the annual report of the House of Industry. Of the 1,234 cases handled during the past year, aside from those occasioned by unemployment, 507 were due to sickness, 102 being soldiers. Assistance was given to 229 deserted wives; the authorities state that this is a normal figure, in line with the necessary number in the last ten years.

Cases from causes other than illness divided:

	Civilians	Soldiers
Blind	14
Father in prison.......	34	3
Insane	18
Cripples	31	6
Deaf and dumb	3
Deserted wives....	211	18

PETERBORO MEETS BELLEVILLE TO-DAY

One of the Best Games of the Series is Expected Between These Teams

Referring to the Belleville-Peterboro Central Ontario baseball league game to be played at the latter place at 5.30 this evening the E xaminer of Peterboro has the following reference.

There is always a battle when Belleville play here and to-morrow's game will be no exception whether Belleville uses Jack Williams, their Indian southpaw or Mallen, the right-hander from the East. Belleville have Mills brothers, Weir, Ross, Casey and other well-known performers of last season in line again and among the new comers is Cook, well known as a Senior O.H.A. goal minder. Cook is playing a snappy game at second base for the Trunks.

Heckman will do the gunning for the Petes. He has had a week's rest since his last appearance, and should be at the top of his form against the Railroaders. Everything points to a real old time struggle between the rival outfits and as the Petes have to win to stay in the running for the first half there is enough at stake to keep the interest at fever heat. A victory over Belleville here tomorrow and a win in Bowmanville Saturday would put the Solomon crew right up with the leaders and they are confident of their ability to deliver the goods although they recognise that Belleville have always been a tough nut for them to crack.

Umpire Jack Rosevear will get the teams away at 5.20 o'clock sharp and the fans should have a real enjoyable evening.

SNAKES ARE WELCOME ON GOLF COURSE

Blacksnakes are the Natural Enemies of the Ground Mole

Coatesville, Pa., July 5.—Blacksnakes seeking a comfortable home, rent and tax free, are invited to the golf links of the Coatesville Country Club. Along the sides of the course underbrush has been permitted to grow thick, and tempting rock piles with full southern exposures have been placed to lure the snakes from adjacent lands.

An educational campaign has been inaugurated among golfers with an aversion to reptiles in order that there may be no repetition of the deaths by violence which came to two of the organization's pets.

Champions of the blacksnake declare that it is the most efficient natural enemy of the ground mole, which admittedly is the natural enemy of golf greens. Not only does the snake go right into the mole's borrings and discourage that animal's operations, but it is alleged to kill off rattlers and copper heads. It is harmless to mankind and is unlikely to appear suddenly to disconcert a player about to putt, for it works at night.

TORONTO EVIDENTLY LIKES PUNCH DERRY

In describing a recent game between Leaside of Toronto and Cobourg, the latter having "Punch" Derry of Kingston as pitcher, the Toronto Star says:

The portly "Dick" Turpin, who pilots the Cobourg team, evidently underestimated the strength of the Leaside team when he sent in First-baseman McCaffery to carry the hurling burden, but after Jones and Maguire had singles and Mahoney doubled for a trio of tallies in the fourth Southpaw Norman Derry was substituted, and with his appearance on the mound vanished all chance of a Leaside victory. In the face of some dumb support, especially from his third-baseman, "Punch" hurled a magnificent game and also helped himself to a triple that tied up the game.

DECISIVE DEFEAT IN CRICKET MATCH

Toronto July 4(Canadian Press)—An All-Toronto eleven administered a decisive defeat to All-Ottawa in yesterday's match of the Cricket Week at Varsity Campus, winning by an inning and 47 runs.

A DAY IN THE WOODS

Now let the nations rise or fall,
Or work their will as best they may,
Where, just above, the maples call
And, just below, the brook trout play,
The crowded streets, the haunted faces
Where, off here in the hidden places,
A hooked trout is the only strife.

Ten thousand leagues away, or more,
The worn and haggard hold their ruts
The wild fan babbles of the score,
The duffer growls above his putts.
But, just above me, now, clear ringing
The brown thrush warbles in the pine
And, just below, the brook is singing
The while I wish their songs were mine.

Yes, I should be at work, I know,
For duty beckons back to town.
But through the trees the golden glow
Of summer's morning sun drifts down.
And, after all, what is ambition
With all its gay and gaudy gleams
Compared to the complete fruition
Of peace, contentment, rest and dreams?

BOUT FOR JOHNSON WAS DECLARED OFF

Hamilton, Ohio, July 4.—The Jack Johnson-"Tut" Jackson July 4 bout, transfered here when a court order prevented its being held in Washington Court House Ohio, has been declared off. Roland Miller, secretary of the boxing commission said the fight will not be held because Johnston refused to post his $2,000 forfeit and because he demanded 33 per cent. of the receipts. The local commission will recommend the former heavyweight champion of the world be barred from Ohio.

HOME-BREW CONTEST

Saskatoon, Sask., July 5.—A home brew-making contest, open to women only, is a novel feature planned for the sports day which is to be held at Biggar, Sask., to-morrow, July 5.

A special prize is to be offered for the best sample of home brew made by a woman, according to a poster advertising the sports day which has reached Saskatoon.

Under the Saskatchewan Temperance Act, persons making home brew must have a permit from the liquor commission in order to make it legally. Therefore persons entering the contest might be able to get around this difficulty. But how about the judges? If they decide the issue by tasting they may precipitate an infraction of the Saskatchewan Temperance Act.

TALKED IN FIRELIGHT.

They Entertained a Famous Poet Unawares.

"Your cook-fire made such a contented-looking picture against the dark, you don't mind if I sit and watch you two?"

This remark from a "tall, broad-shouldered, big-nosed, open-countenanced-man, who lifted one moccasin-shod foot out of his canoe and then the other, deliberately, not ungracefully, is quoted by T. Morris Longstreth in his new book, "The Laurentians." The author and a friend were camping in the Laurentian wilderness in northern Quebec when the unexpected visitor agreed. "From his reticence he might have been a shanty-man, but the firelight disclosed a face of sensibility as well as strength; from his hair of a soft and errant shagginess, he might have been poet or musician; but then his modesty! We should have thought him fifty but for a certain shy magnetism that goes with youth. Sprawled there along the sand in an unperturbed silence, smoking, he piqued us to the brink of interrogation."

The trio talked in the firelight, first of the mountains, now of mosquitoes, then of the stars, and, by and by, reached poetry. "I have a cousin down in New Brunswick you may have heard of, Charles G. D. Roberts," said the stranger. "Now, there's a poet for you—a man who is at his best on a big theme in nature, and worth quoting at times like this, if one has the memory." Pressed further, he quoted the names of several Canadian poets of note, and then one of the listeners said: "You left one name from the list. Isn't Bliss Carman a Canadian?"

"Yes, but one of the wanderers, the wapiti, and little known."

"I didn't realize he was a Canadian, though everybody knows his name," said the listener.

"His name, perhaps," said the other, dryly, "but his work hardly; that is what counts. I can scarcely recall a dozen poems by him, and I am interested in poetry."

"I'd give a hand to meet that man Carman," said one of the listeners.

"He is not much to meet," said the stranger. "A shy and awkward old bachelor, who confines his conversation to the business of the day. I know him, or did when we were younger, and still occasionally get glimpses of him. He is a whimsical, pondering sort of giant. New Brunswick born, but forced to hunt his bread in the States. He was starting off for Montreal the other day on a lecture tour and vowing when he got it over that he'd never go again where he couldn't go in moccasins."

They talked for hours, and once the stranger said he was trying to remember something, and wrote for fifteen minutes on envelopes and things from every pocket. When he had gone they picked up some letter paper, also scribbled over, and found on the letter-head:

BLISS CARMAN,
New Canaan,
Conn.

In Old Ontario.

In the early days of the settlement of the "Queen's Bush," in the fifties of the last century, Mr. George Jackson, a good combination of "John Bull's" peppery manner and kind heart, acted as local land agent for the county of Grey. Later he ran for Grey county as a Conservative candidate and was elected. In the course of a subsequent debate he charged the late Archibald McKellar with unfairness in making false accusations against him during the campaign, the offence having been aggravated by the fact that they were made in the Gaelic language, so that they could not be answered.

"To whom did I make the alleged false statements?" said Mr. McKellar.

"To Mr. McDiarmid of Proton township," said Mr. Jackson; and then came the rejoinder.

"Mr. Speaker, I know Mr. McDiarmid very well, and when I visit him we talk to each other in Gaelic; and if I said anything to him in that language it must have been true, for, Mr. Speaker, there never was any provision made in Gaelic for telling a lie."

The whole House laughed, Mr. Jackson with the rest, and he and Mr. McKellar became good friends to one another ever afterward.

As a specimen of the election effusions of those jolly times, at a local banquet to celebrate Mr. Jackson's election an original song was sung. The defeated Reform candidate was Jesse T. Purdy, a "grist-miller" of Meaford, who had, with the aid of George Brown, defeated at a recent by-election Hon. Joseph C. Morrison, later a Superior Court judge. One stanza of the lyric may be quoted. It purports to be George Brown's lament:

I sent big McKellar, McNab and Macdougall
To hunt little Joe through the drear swamps of Grey;
My fly-sheets I scattered like leaves of the forest
To gull the backwoodsmen and lead them astray.
It is true, by these means, I put in Silent Purdy,
To vote at my bidding and do as I'd say;
But Jesse's gone back with his meal-bags to Meaford,
And Jackson's returned for the county of Grey.

It must not be supposed that there was any personal animus on Brown's part against Morrison, for in one House of Assembly of which they were both members, Morrison was able, at a critical time, to render Brown valuable service and cheerfully did so; "but that is another story."

Oak Trees Have Smallpox.

Oak trees in California are often pitted as if by smallpox. The holes are made by woodpeckers, and in every hole is an acorn placed there by squirrels. The nuts are so firmly embedded that it is impossible to remove them with the fingers.

THE PLAY OF LAMBS.

These Innocent Little Animals Have a Game.

"The favorite game of lambs is King-of-the-Castle," says Mr. Marcus Woodward in "John o' London's Weekly." "Any little mound, like a mole-hill, will serve for castle. Any bright lamb that springs to the top of it is king, and cries, 'Come on, who dares!'

"The challenge is promptly accepted, and one charges to butt him off. There may be an old beech tree in the pasture, with roots high above the ground. A lamb runs up the root to some ledge of the trunk—as its ancestors ran before it—and as he now fights with his back to the wall, those rushing to the assault are hurled back as fast as they come. They grow tired of this, and refuse to play. The king of the castle, much annoyed, cuts all kinds of capers to incite competitors to try their luck.

"Like pigs and fawns, lambs delight in running races. They run fine steeplechases, taking feeding-troughs in their stride, or leaping dykes. One has only to set off down the field at a gallop, and twenty follow. In the old days nothing could be more important to the lamb than to be able to leap, longways, sideways, and straight into the air, as soon as it could walk, and to jump obstacles when in flight. The importance of this gave springs to the feet of the primitive wild lambs. The instinct to jump crops out oddly later in life. Let one sheep take a leap as it goes through a gap in a hedge, every one of the flock flings heels into the air on passing the gap, jumping an imaginary obstacle.

"There is genuine humor about some of the lambs' games. They have great fun in assailing ewes not their mothers, and demanding mother's milk. A sudden charge is made by one or two lambs, that butt some grave ewe forcibly in the flanks, as though trying to take her so suddenly by surprise that she will mistake them for her own offspring. When she indignantly drives them off, they rush away to try their luck with another ewe.

"Play is so essential to little animals that most mothers teach their young games; the bloodthirsty weasel plays prettily with her ferocious kittens, and even a cart-horse will play with her foal. But the sheep and the cow are exceptional in this. Judging by their expressions, their dispositions are sad."

Seeking Pearls in Fresh Water

Recently news despatches chronicled the fact that a boy resident of London, Ont., was the lucky discoverer of two fresh water pearls. The gems were found in mussel shells in the river near London and, as upon being reduced and polished their market value was estimated at approximately three hundred dollars each, the organization of a syndicate to exploit the possibilities of fresh water pearl fishing, has been mooted.

It has been known that pearls of varying quality were to be found in Ontario waters and last fall a prospector went very carefully over the ground at Port Rowan, Ont. His success was not startling, but he did find it worth, while for among his discoveries was a baroque of wonderful lustre, almost translucent, of 19 grains' weight, two common place slugs of unusual size and an exquisitely tinted spike found in a mussel bed near Long Point Bar. All these were sent to New York for valuation, but the prospector has kept the report to himself.

Some forty years ago, Port Rowan was a live little timber town, but long since then has become a quiet fishing port and resort for sportsmen, with some 630 inhabitants — 104 miles from Toronto.

Quaint and picturesque it is. Seen from a hill above the pier by moonlight, a fleet of fishing boats and launches lay quietly at anchor while three miles beyond, Long Point sand bar with its fisherman's huts, stretched majestically its 27 miles length.

The prospector in this game of pearl hunting is more or less a Mystery Man known by various names, "Doc," "Jim King," and "Slim"; it was with considerable difficulty that the Toronto Sunday World tracked him to his lair.

He was standing on the sand bar, mussel shells strewn carelessly at his feet, gazing intently at one he held in his hand when we found him. Clad in a blue serge suit, with soft hat pulled well over his eyes there was nothing in the pearl hunter's appearance to suggest the adventurer save the returned soldier's button on his coat. Nearby, a rowboat containing a drag net—his own design and contrivance for pearl hunting — was tethered.

"Have you ever discovered a pearl of much value?"

He glanced up quickly at the question. "Once I found one worth about $80, on the lower delta of the Mississippi."

Further queries elicited the information that he had been engaged in the industry on the Wabash river, and with others had found baroques and slugs—some of good value. Engaged in fishing during the season this year at Port Rowan, the quantities of mussel shells brought in with the seine nets attracted his attention and the thought came—"Here indeed might be a pearl bed." The idea—had been strengthened later, on discovery that many shells were of irregular shape—often an indication of valuable contents, also that certain "cripple" shells of peculiar formation, "three ridges," "warty back" or "pimple back" as well as the malformed "Cripples" of other varieties were amongst the lot. The fishing season ending he had gone prospecting with the above result.

As to the expectation of valuable finds or whether he considered it worth while to engage in the pearl industry to any great extent the hunter was reticent. "At present I'm merely prospecting," was his answer.

Permitted a view of his drag net, it proved to a bar three feet long with steel teeth three inches in length and two and a half inches apart. On the bar was attached a steel hoop with net and two ropes or "bridle" as he termed it. A long rope was attached to the bridle and the iron frame sinking the net, the hunter could sit at ease in his rowboat and scrape the floor of the mussel bed.

It is on record that in the United States pearls were found hundreds of years before Columbus appeared upon the scene and that the clever little mound builders used to deck themselves in gorgeous fashion, also their weapons, the fact borne out by the discovery in Ohio of large collections; also that the first great American find was in 1857 near Patterson, N.J., when a pearl was found weighing 93 grains. Later sold to the Empress of France, it became known as the "Queen Pearl." It was shortly after this episode that a regular pearl fever broke out in the new world.

Canadian rivers have been found to contain pearls and it is on record that a fine round pink one weighing thirty grains was found near St. John, New Brunswick.

According to the last Canadian report the Grand river contains more mussels of commercial value than any other Ontario waters. This river rises in the Township of Melancthon, Dufferin County, within twenty-five miles' distance from Georgian Bay and its source at the elevation of approximately 1,700 feet above sea-level marks the Highlands of the southwestern Ontario plateau. From its source to its outlet into Lake Erie at Port Maitland by the river, the distance is 175 miles and the drainage area about 2,500 square miles.

The origin of the pearl has been the cause of much speculation and numerous have been the theories as to same advanced—the breaking of the mollusc's shell, the presence of a foreign substance such as a grain of sand which causes irritation, marks of which are often reflected on the outside of the shell itself, or the presence of a small worm or parasite are amongst reasons given. The majority of scientists, however, seem to favor the latter suggestion.

A WORLD WITHOUT AIR.

Nothing Could Be Done In Such a Vacuum.

"Air makes life possible; every one realizes that, but it needs a little thought and imagination to realize how great a part it plays in our life, and how utterly different the world would be without this intangible, invisible mixture of gases," writes M. Martinnant in Everyday Science. "Imagine yourself carried by Prof. Goddard's rocket to the airless, or practically airless, moon, and able in the few seconds before you died to observe the conditions.

Whatever your feelings, you would not be able to talk about them, for you would be in the midst of absolute, unbreakable silence. Speech, music, sound of every kind would have disappeared, because sound is the effect produced on our eardrums by vibration of the air. You would, however, be able to see, since light is independent of air as a medium. If it were daytime, a weird sky would be visible, the sun an intensely brilliant globe of reddish light in a pitch-black sky, spangled with far more and brighter stars than are visible in our frostiest night.

"The ground would be bone-dry, no seas, lakes, or rivers, since all water would have evaporated when the air disappeared. Hence there would be no moisture particles to produce a blue sky. There would be no clouds, no mists, and no fogs. Encircling the sun we should see a ring of beautifully colored flames, the corona, visible all the time instead of being hidden by the dazzle effect of light diffused by the air.

"We should see the world itself illuminated brilliantly, but in sharp relief, the effect being similar to, but more striking than, that produced by a powerful searchlight, sweeping the countryside on a very dark night. Everything would be either fully lit up or in black shadow; there would be no 'half-tones'.

"During the day, winter and summer, there would be heat, such as would make our tropics seem by comparison a polar region. At sunset the sun would sink as hot and brilliant as ever until he went out and night rushed upon us like a cloak thrown over our heads. There would be no twilight; one minute the burning sun, the next black night and intolerable cold, the cold of utter extinction. If during the day time we could escape the furnace of the sun's heat by hiding in the shadows or underground, at night we should have no escape from the cold; even the sun-scorched rocks would be frozen cold a few minutes after sunset. Fire would be impossible, and a hundred blankets would make us no warmer, for the warmth of our clothes depends on the air which is trapped in the pores of the material.

"Meanwhile, we should be subjected to an incessant bombardment of meteorites, or "thunder-bolts," arriving at the rate of from seven to twenty miles a second, in size varying from dust to rocks as big as mountains, exploding on impact into white hot vapor, churning huge holes in the ground, and giving us a very fair representation of one of the artillery barrages so popular in the recent war. This performance, however, would be silent like a battle picture on the films."

INTERESTING FIND IN GREENLAND

Men's Costumes of 13th and 14th Centuries are Unearthed

Copenhagen, July 5.—Men's costumes of the 13th and 14th centuries have been found in Greenland. They are in an excellent state of preservation, and resemble the clothes worn by Dante in the published pictures of the Italian poet. They are not yet open to public view, but may be exhibited at some future date.

These interesting finds were made by Dr. Noerlund, a Danish scientist, while excavating in ancient burial grounds in the south-western part of Greenland. They are the only existing specimens in the world of garments worn by men in the 13th and 14th centuries. Being deposited in the frozen earth for about 600 years has preserved them from destruction by moth and age. The garments are now in Copenhagen and deposited in the Danish collection in the Museum housed in the Prinsen's Palace.

Dr. Noerlund has found also several old wooden crosses in the frozen earth. They are covered with inscriptions in the Gothic rune script, and are considered by scientists to be of great historic value.

BIGAMY CASE AT COBOURG

Suspended Sentence Meted Out to the Guilty Parties

The prosecution of William Henry Doxtator, lately teacher in a rural public school section near Harrow, in the county of Essex, and Mrs. Mary Grace Borland, wife of William Borland, a farmer of that locality, at whose home Doxtator boarded, on bigamy charges, was concluded before His Honor Judge Ward, in the county judge's criminal court on Tuesday.

Doxtator and Mrs. Borland went through the form of marriage at the home of Rev. J. P. McClennan, pastor of the Baptist church here, following their flight together a few days previously from the county of Essex.

Subpoenaed on behalf of the Crown, the husband, William Borland, accompanied by his brother-in-law, Mr. Renno, also a farmer residing near Harrow, whose wife is a sister of the female prisoner, came down to Cobourg on Monday and after conferring with Crown Attorney Kerr, saw his wife at the jail, and later consulted Mr. F. M. Field, K.C., counsel for the prisoners, with a view to endeavoring to arrange for such disposition of the case as would permit him to take his wife back home if she were willing to go. The solution of the case of Mrs. Borland appealed to Mr. Field and we understand was urged by him upon Mrs. Borland, with the result that at the trial on Tuesday he was able to give his undertaking to the court that Mrs. Borland's release on suspended sentence, following conviction on her plea of guilty would bring about reconciliation and return of his client to her husband and family. Under the provisions of the code, at the suggestion of counsel for the prisoners, the public were excluded from the court room during the trial proceedings, but we understand that following the arraignment of both prisoners, and their plea of guilty by their counsel, Mr. F. M. Field, called Mr. Alexander Doxtator, a well known and reputable farmer of the township of Alnwick, father of the prisoner, W. H. Doxtator, who testified as to his son's blameless life during the past thirty years and to his record under the Military Service Act and as a public school teacher, and incidentally told of his having on or about the year 1914 been almost killed by the kick of a colt in the face, which, in the judgment of the witness, had greatly affected his son's physical and mental condition.

Mrs. Borland was then called to the witness box and, after some brief account of her family history, gave some details of the condition of her home, and her flight therefrom with Doxtator to Detroit, thence to Toronto, Belleville, Shannonville, Roseneath, Cobourg and Rochester, N.Y., where, as has been previously reported in The Post, they were taken into custody and brought back by Chief Ruse and lodged in the Cobourg jail. It appeared from the evidence of Mrs. Borland that she was the dominant character in the affair and the facts thus having been thus fully submitted to the court Mr. Field did not put W. H. Doxtator in the box. His Honor disposed of the case of Mrs. Borland first, and in addressing her, highly commended the conduct of her husband, and, under the circumstances, deemed the ends of justice best attained by releasing the prisoner on suspended sentence, in order that she might return to the care of her six little children in the company of her husband, as she and her counsel undertook would be done. A somewhat painful scene occurred as, retiring from the court room supported by her husband, Mrs. Borland burst into a paroxysm of tears and, passing by the prisoner's dock, where Doxtator was seated, reached out toward him for a last embrace.

His Honor then dealt with the case of W. H. Doxtator, whom he described as the weak one in the disgraceful and lamentable affair. Nevertheless, he thought that on account of his superior education, he should not have been led into a violation of the criminal code. He was greatly influenced, however, by the evidence of Alexander Doxtator, father of the prisoner, above referred to, and in view of the disposition made of the case of Mrs. Borland, he did not deem it expedient to make other disposition of the charge against Doxtator and allowed him to go on suspended sentence, in each case giving due warning to prisoners that they might, in the event of any transgression of the law in the future, be brought before him and sentenced for the crime of which they had each been convicted.—Cobourg Post.

CARD OF THANKS

Fishes That Live Out of Water

Some More Missing Links

To call a man who is out of place "a fish out of water" is insular and unscientific, in fact mediaeval. The modern survey of Nature has discovered a score of species of fishes which can live out of water. When it was first known that all life was in the ocean during at least half the story of life on earth, many wondered how the evolutionist was going to start the story of land life. Already, however, the naturalist was supplying the missing links, and to-day we have no difficulty.

There have been Europeans in India and the islands of the Indian Ocean for a couple of centuries; but in the early days they were too busy making money to study the wonders of life in that region. There is, for instance, a wonderful fish called the Climbing Perch which prevents an Anglo-Indian from calling a man a fish out of water.

CLIMBING TREES.

You may, on a hot summer's day, meet a company of these fishes strolling—rather clumsily—across the fields. Their pool has dried up, and they seek a "better 'ole." They can live for a day or two out of water, because they have a special chamber in the head for assisting their breathing out of water. Early observers claim that they climb trees occasionally, and even their scientific name (Anabas scandens) sanctions this, but the evidence is not very good.

There is, however, another fish in tropical Asia and Africa which undoubtedly does a little climbing. The bommi, as the natives call it, remains on the shore when the tide goes out, hunting whatever the waters have left behind. Its breast fins are bent like elbow joints, and are very strong, and by means of these it skips or jumps about the shore. A close observer will, however, notice that it is very apt to retire speedily to a little pool and dip its tail therein. It has a supplementary breathing apparatus in its tail, and it may remain a long time resting on a stone with its tail in the water, its great goggle eyes staring around for some victim.

LIVING IN TWO WORLDS.

These are what we may call rude experiments in the power of living in two worlds. There are, however, many kinds of fishes with lungs as well as gills, and these show us best how, ages ago, part of the population left the over-crowded ocean and began the story of life on land. We do not think today that these are actual survivors of the first fishes to leave the land, but they are relics of a large population which at one time more or less, developed the power of living on land.

The best known is the "Burnett Salmon," as it is poularly called, of Queensland. There is, of course, no salmon in Australia, but the "digger" has a facetious way of giving aristocratic British names to native things, and more than one British politician has fallen into the trap and marvelled at the cheapness of "salmon" in Australia. The Ceratodus is a coarser fish, but it is one of the marvels of Nature. It has a lung as well as gills. The Queensland one-lunger is not properly called a "mud fish." It never lives in the dry mud when a stream ceases to flow. In the Burnett and Mary rivers it lingers in the pools at the bottom of the water, and the water never entirely disappears. It may however, become so low and foul in the summer that every other type of fish will be killed, while the Ceratodus suffers no more inconvenience than a sewage-man in a crowded Tube. It just rises to the surface now and again, and "spouts" like a miniature whale. Then it fills its one lung with air, and sinks again to the bottom.

TWO LUNGS.

But there is a cousin of the Ceratodus, found over the greater part of Africa, which lives entirely out of water during about six months of the year. It has two lungs in addition to gills. As a rule it is found in the marshes near the rivers. For half the year it gorges on frogs and worms and other delicacies, for it must live on its fat during the long "summer sleep." It fins are really limbs. They are useless as paddles, and at the bottom of the water. The tail is the propeller.

When the dry season comes, the fish bores down about 18 inches into the mud, coil itself up, and wraps itself in a sort of cocoon made of mucus from its skin. Above its head it makes a sort of lid, to keep out the inquisitive, and it even has the remarkable instinct to make small holes in the lid to let the air through. So it remains sleeping for months, breathing entirely by its lungs. We now know that these lung-fishes use their lungs even during the wet period, in addition to their gills.

WALKING ON THEIR FINS.

Still more advanced are certain fishes of Brazil. In an aquarium they will walk on their fins (which are really limbs) to take bread from the hand of the keeper. Even in the water it does not swim, but wriggles like an eel, its limbs moving like those of a biped. Like its African cousin it spends the dry season asleep in a burrow which it hollows out in the mud. It carefully closes the tube with a plug of clay, through which it bores air-passages. At the return of the waters it pushes out the plug and gaily returns to its feeding. Both the African and American lung-fishes lay their eggs in nests; and they have the further high distinction that it is the papa who guards the eggs and the babies while mother disports herself.

The development of these lungs is simpler than the inexpert would think. All the higher fishes have air-bladders in their bodies. They are submarines, and need to alter the weight of the body by compressing or enlarging this air-bladder, which is often double, and connected with the gullet.

SILENT IN HOUSE FOR 22 YEARS

English M.P. for Berwick Breaks Record as a Speechless Politician

London, July 4.—John Hope, M. P., coalition Liberal member for Berwick, claims to have broken all parliamentary records by having sat in the House of Commons for twenty-two years without making his maiden speech.

He is a regular attendant at the sessions of the House, has survived seven hot elections in his district, proving his popularity there,' but his voice has never been heard by his colleagues except in conversation.

When asked recently why he never spoke in the House, he said "a man can do more in life by not talking about it. When I first entered the House I never had any other idea but that I would make speeches but as time has gone on the occasion has never arisen when it would not be just as well to leave the speech undelivered.

"I have been tempted more than once and friends have urged me to make my maiden speech but I have not, simply because it wasn't necessary for the good of the country. Now I am afraid my maiden speech will never be delivered."

His prolonged silence is not due to inability to speak, for Mr. Hope gets along very well conversationally outside the house. He is regarded as a successful member and he says that whenever he wants anything he goes directly to the responsible minister. Because he has never attempted to browbeat ministers across the floor of the house, he finds he is always received with cordiality and he generally obtains satisfaction. That is one of the reasons Mr. Hope maintains what he calls his successful silence.

There are only two records in Commons to compare with his. There was the case of William Hamilton in the eighteenth century, who was known as "Single Speech Hamilton." During a long service he made but one speech.

There is a legend of another member who spoke only once in the house in the hearing of his colleagues and on that occasion he asked that a window behind him be closed.

MANY ART SCHOOLS BUT NO ARTISTS

Declares Study of Art in U.S.A. to be Most Discouraging

London, July 5.—An income of $1,500 in four years from the painting of pictures has been confessed by C. R. W. Nevinson, an artist known both in England and the United States. Seeking an explanation, a representative of the London Morning Post heard some hard things about art from Mr. Nevinson, both in this country and America.

Across the water the study of art is most discouraging, worse than in England, Mr. Nevinson declared. "Was there ever a country with so many hundred thousand million art schools—I am never any good at American noughts—and so few artists?" he asked. "No wonder the American public only buys the gilt edged dead masters, and second-hand junk from European auction rooms. America is admittedly only interested in the dead and the antique, so she might as well close her art schools."

TO PLAY IN PETERBORO.

Peterboro, July 4.—The Peterboro Ball Club received word from Secretary J. G. Knott of the Central Ontario League this morning that the Cobourg game postponed from July 1 will be played in Peterboro on Wednesday, July 12. Lindsay and Cobourg were to have played in the latter town on that date, but Lindsay objected because of the Orange demonstration in Lindsay, and Peterboro gets the game as a result. No word has been received as to when the two postponed games with Leaside or the replay game with Lindsay will take place.

Sir Robert Horne's Life

Started in Scottish Manse

Career Has Been Brilliant

William Pitt and Robert Horne are the only two British statesmen who became Chancellor of the Exchequer with no more than two years of Cabinet experience.

Who is Horne? was the question asked when Sir Robert succeeded Mr. Austen Chamberlain.

This guardian of the public purse is a Scotsman. Like many other Scots destined to eminence he is a son of the manse. Being a son of the manse, he was very poor in his youth and education came through rigid economy. Strangely enough for a future chancellor, he shone at philosophy, but this is getting ahead of the story.

Robert Stevenson Horne was born in 1871. His father was the Established minister at Slammanan, a moorland mining district of unprepossessing visage in the heart of Stirlingshire, which is to say, the heart of Scotland. At fifteen years of age he took the eighteenth place in the Glasgow University bursary competition, graduating from George Watson's College, Edinburgh.

After shining in Latin and taking first in logic in a class of 200 in his first two years, he turned to sit under Edward Caird to study philosophy. He was first prizeman in each of his two sessions with the future Master of Balliol, then called "a kind of washy, right-wing, Neo-Kantian-Hegelion" by the English and a great man by the Scottish.

But study was not all. He was president of the dialetic society and of the students' representative council. In his fourth year he nailed his colors to the Conservative mast and was elected president of the University Conservative Club, an organization which used to elect a Lord Rector every three years, distribute much personal and scurrilous campaign "literature," and throw much peasemeal at voters on the polling day.

SIR ROBERT HORNE.

Graduating, Horne went back to Edinburgh to study law. It was the custom in those days to spend one year in idleness between final examinations and final admission. But he did not have sufficient money, laziness or snobbishness to undertake this bit of etiquette. His humble petition to be permitted to work during the year being granted, Horne lectured on philosophy in University College, Bangor, North Wales, for the year.

Then he remembered his mining town home and turned to mining law and politics. In the former he was successful, but twice Stirlingshire, a traditional home of Liberalism, sent him—to Edinburgh instead of Westminster. In 1910, aged 40, he took silk, that is at a very early age.

In 1916 Mr. Horne surrendered a lucrative practice to help re-organize transport in France. He was one of Eric Geddes men. In 1917 he was assistant inspector-general of transportation, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel in the Royal Engineers. When Geddes went to the Admiralty in that year, he borrowed Col. Horne to act as director of material and priority. On the principle that the willing horse gets the burden, says a writer in the Strand Magazine, the Admiralty Labor Department was added to his duties in 1918.

Recognition came, and he was appointed third civil lord in 1919 and in the same year was promoted to the first Minister of Labor, at a time when it was being suggested that such newly-fledged politicians should be strung up on the lamp posts of Whitehall, that is to say, hanged beside their office doors. But he handled labor questions with tact and in 1920 succeeded Sir Auckland Geddes as President of the Board of Trade.

What sort of man? In the Asquithian phrase he "has charm." Also he has a will, having given up tobacco "because it was getting a hold on me and taking off the edge for work in court." He is a keen game shot, golfs well enough to enjoy it, plays a sound game of bridge, and refuses to get married. His home life has been fine, thanks to a shrewd, kindly mother. She always prayed that he would become a minister, and when he became Minister of Labor she pawkily admitted that the Lord sometimes took unexpected ways of answering prayer.

In the fifteen century the term vaudeville was applied to a certain old Norman folk song.

RED FLAGS IN BERLIN CITY

Republic Said to be Safe From Royalist Uprising

Berlin, July 4.—The Republicans owned Germany to-day. Throughout the nation the Monarchists stayed at home or fled from the cities, cowed, frightened and fearful of the people's revenge. A red, white and black flag was not seen for the first time since the end of the war. Instead, the Republicans flag flew everywhere, augmented and supplemented by red banners of the Socialist and Extremist parties. Germany's great Fourth of July celebration "for the protection of the Republican form of government" passed with only minor fireworks, chiefly one bomb outrage at Mannheim, where the Monarchists stole a march on the Republicans by blowing up a Labor Temple where two are reported to have been killed and four injured. In other cities there were minor conflicts, with numerous casualties, but none fatal.

Held in West End.

Berlin's great demonstration against the Monarchists was held in the aristocratic West end section, where all afternoon columns of from one to ten thousand persons converged upon Kaiser Wilhelm Church from every street. Upon the Kaiser Church red flags were hoisted. Here for hours Democrats and Socialists passed in endless parade.

"Down with reaction, down with Monarchy!" yelled megaphone youths. "Down, down!" came answering guttural roars from the crowds. "Long live the Republic!" screamed the leaders. "Hoch, hoch, hoch!" gutturaled the crowds.

So passed five hours while columns wearing red bands or bearing Republican flags passed through every aristocratic street, frightening Monarchists into temporary, trembling seclusion.

FREE STATE CALL TO ARMS---DE VALERA TAKES TO FLIGHT

Irish Free State Mobolizes for Active Service

Insurgents Surrender—Arrest of Leaders are Made. Former Minister of Defence Mortally Wounded —Twenty Buildings Destroyed

DE VALERA ESCAPES WITHOUT A SCRATCH

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Dublin, July 6.—The Provisional Government has instructed the General Headquarters Staff of the volunteer organization to place the entire establishment on an active service basis. Headquarters Staff is directing the officers commanding the local units to appeal to all members to accept service for three months.

All other citizens who desire to join the national ranks will also be recruited for the volunteer organization. These instructions preceded a call to arms today in the form of a proclamation opening the way for the enlistment of these citizens who last week were declined by the Government because it was confident of the ability of the army single-handed to meet and defeat any attack made upon it.

De Valera Bolts.

Dublin.—The Independent declares today that it is informed that De Valera left the Sackville Street stronghold on Tuesday night.

Cathal Brugha, the new Free State prisoner, was operated on at midnight and this morning was reported to be sinking rapidly.

Ex-Minister Arrested.

Dublin, July 6.—Twenty buildings in O'Connell street, Dublin's main thoroughfare, were completely destroyed by fire following the surrender last night of the insurgents. Robert Barton, former Minister of Economics in the Dail cabinet, was arrested at the home of Erskine Childers.

Dublin, July 5.—The siege of the strongholds of the insurgent Irish forces was virtually ended tonight with the surrender of small groups of the men who had been fighting for the past week behind the barricades, and the capture of one of the principal leaders, Cathal Brugha, former Minister of Defence. But the success of the National cause has been purchased at the cost of blazing buildings and terrible destruction in O'Connell street, to say nothing of the loss of life and the many seriously wounded.

There is still no information as to the whereabouts of Eamon de Valera, who has apparently escaped from the Free Staters' net

In the later afternoon, when ten buildings, including three hotels, were aflame. The remainder of the irregulars, driven into Granville Hotel, with fire on all sides, still maintained a desperate resistance with automatics and rifles, but it was already seen that they could not long delay the inevitable end.

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, July 6.—The application to interdict Adelard Delorme, who was found unfit to be placed on trial on the charge of murdering his half-brother, Raoul, was made by Adelard Tetreault, brother-in-law, in Superior Court this morning before Mr. Justice Lafontaine in Chambers.

The request asks also that a council of the family be called on July 18 in accordance with the legal practice on this point.

RURAL SCHOOLS ARE DISCUSSED

Brant County Plan Favored by Conference of County Councils

Toronto, July 6.—Representatives of a majority of the county councils of Ontario attended a special conference called by Hon. R. H. Grant, Minister of Education, to meet in the Normal School Building, Toronto, to consider the equalization of support of secondary schools throughout the province, and the extension of secondary school education. At the afternoon session yesterday the conference, by what the chairman, High School Inspector, G. F. Rogers, called "a narrow majority," approved the new scheme known as the "Brant County Plan," which calls for the forming of a "county organization," the latter, and the county councils each to bear 50 per cent. of the cost of supporting high and continuation schools. When the meeting resumes this morning, the matter may be reopened and voted on again.

Mr. Grant pointed out that his reason for calling county council representatives together was that county councils are concerned with both the extension and support of secondary schools because they pass on applications for organizing new high school districts, and the law makes them provide for the cost of educating pupils living outside of districts in which high and secondary schools are established.

EXPRESS CAR CAUGHT FIRE: 150 PERSONS OVERCOME

Albert College Summer School

School a Marked Success—100 on the Roll—Rev. Archer Wallace Continues His Series of Addresses

The Summer School at Albert College is progressing with marked success. About one hundred are in attendance and this number is constantly being swelled in the public gathering each evening.

Another Able Discourse

Yesterday morning Rev. Archer Wallace continued his series of addresses the particular theme being "What Jesus Taught About the Kingdom of God." The universal church is a separate entity from the Kingdom. It is true that Christ is permitting both. Where Jesus is the church is established, and wherever the true church is located Christ is part of it. We may be members of the kingdom of God but not identified with any branch of the church. On the other hand membership in churches may not signify our allegiance to Chirst's kingdom.

Christianity is a life, not simply a creed, to be expressed in action every day in a social sense as well as individually. The Kingdom of God is not maintained in seclusion or by aloofness. Too often in the past some have looked upon the church as a water tight compartment to enable the soul to reach eternal safety. The church has been like a life boat going to the rescue of a select few. It is all right to realize our own responsibility in A Charge to Keep I have, but we need to sing the second verse also of that hymn to learn that we "should serve the present age our calling to fulfill."

Saved to Serve

We are "saved to serve". Of late again extremists are altogether concerned about the Second Coming of Christ and oblivious to the significance of His first coming. There is a tendency to glorify the past too instead of assuming Apostleship for the pilgrimage of the future.

For Present Day

Christ's kingdom is a present affair Entrance thereto is in self renunciation just as the rich young ruler was

MURDER INQUEST HELD TO-NIGHT

Hearing Will Take Place at the Court House Here

Before Dr. Boyce, coroner, of this city, the inquest to enquire into the circumstances regarding the murder of John Wesley Moult of Tyendinaga Township, will be resumed at the court house here this evening. The latter place was selected as the place of hearing owing to the number of witnesses summoned and the number of spectators who are expected to be present. Mr. Carnew, K.C., County Attorney, will conduct the examination of witnesses on behalf of the Crown, whilst the interest of Barry, the accused, will be looked after by a member of the law firm of Porter, Butler & Payne. Considerable interest centres in the proceedings of tonight and the verdict which will be recorded by those selected as the coroner's jury.

Moosejaw, July 6.—James Somerville, international Vice President of the Machinists Union, who returned here last night after a tour of Canadian Railways from Montreal to Vancouver, declared that the shopmen throughout Canada are prepared to strike if the railways persist in their attempt to impose the terms announced in May upon the men.

CANADIAN TRADE WITH THE FAR EAST

Canadians Urged to Cultivate Fields of Commerce in Orient

(Special Despatch)

Vancouver, July 6. "We would like to see more Canadians in the trade of our country," said Hon. A. G. Stephen, general manager of the Hong Kong Shanghai Bank, who was a passenger on the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Russia" which reached Vancouver Monday night from the Orient

"Canadians have been paying very little attention to the trade possibilities of the Orient," he added. "There are wide fields of commerce there, and I think that it would be to the advantage of both nations if your business men took it up seriously. The Americans have been very aggressive in this field and have been devoting more and more attention to it."

U.S. NAVY NOT TO BE SCRAPPED BIG PROGRAM FOR SEA DEFENCE

Despite Treaty on Disarmament the United States Still Prepares to Defend Her Shores—Latest Estimate Provides for Over Three Times Amount Spent on Navy Before the War

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Washington, July 6.—The United States navy is a long way ahead of the pre-war appropriations, in spite of the recent naval agreement, and in spite of public pressure for economy and for going slowly in the matter of preparedness.

It is a fact that comparatively few people in the United States have a real understanding of the facts with respect to the scope of naval preparedness as indicated by the naval appropriations bill just passed. Actual reduction in expenditures by the United States for the present fiscal year as compared with the fiscal year which ended June 30 is almost negligible, while the expenditures provided for the present year will be nearly three times those of the pre-war period.

The remarks in the naval discussion of Representative Byrnes of South Carolina, a democrat, and a member of the sub-committee that framed the naval bill in the house, are illuminating. Mr. Byrnes' figures were not successfully controverted and are undoubtedly correct. He said

Big Increases

"It is true that the bill as agreed upon makes a direct appropriation of $289,336,577, but this is not the total amount which the bill authorizes the navy to spend under the head 'Increases of the Navy', unexpended balances amounting to $46,250,000 and an additional $8,000,000, which the navy department is authorized to collect on certain notes due the government. The bill authorizes no appropriation at all for clothing, but by a bookkeeping transaction it makes available $1,800,000 for the navy. By a similar transaction it makes available $450,000 for clothing for the Naval Reserve.

"These amounts total $56,500,000, which when added to the direct appropriation made in the bill makes a total amount that the navy is authorized to spend for current operations during the next fiscal year of $345,836,577. In addition to this amount for current expenses of the government during the next fiscal year there is appropriated in another bill an amount to cover the expenses incident to the cancellation of contracts, the most conservative estimate of which is $60,000,000, but which the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Kelley) to-day stated might reach $75,000,000. Taking the conservative figure of $60,000,000 it makes the total amount available for naval expenditures during the next fiscal year $405,836,577.

"The total naval appropriations for the current year ending June 30, 1922, amounted to $412,673,289, so

JAPANESE ARE ALL SOLDIERS

The Little Men of the East are After Supremacy Of the Air

(Special Despatch)

Vancouver, July 6. "Civilian aviation is at present non-existent in Japan," said Maj. G. De Woolbidge, who arrived on Monday night on the Canadian Pacific liner "Empress of Russia," after spending three years in the Orient doing advisory work for civilian aviation firms.

"But the time is not far distant when it will become a real factor in the commercial life of the nation, and it is important that British firms be prepared for that development if we are to maintain our supremacy in the air." The army and navy of Japan have been taking up the flying game progressively and splendid results have been achieved. Colonel Sempill's Missions, consisting of about thirty airmen from Britain flying all types of machines has accomplished a great deal in training army and navy pilots. The Japanese have turned out no outstanding pilots, but they have very few poor pilots. They are all a very high class average."

TAKES A THIEF TO CATCH THIEF

Bandits Rounded up by Express Agent Who Plays Part of Highwayman

RECOVERS LOOT

Bonds and Property Worth $300,000 Recovered by Clever Detective

New York, July 6.—A human bloodhound who for seven months tracked his quarry through many States, finally caught up with them and, in the assumed role of a Western highwayman, mingled with the members of the alleged bandits he had trailed, gained their confidence and wormed their secrets from them on joy rides, at gay dinners and Broadway theatres and cabarets before springing the trap which resulted in their arrest yesterday, is Special Agent Gordon McCarthy of the American Railway Express.

Postoffice inspectors, Department of Justice officials and police authorities were loud today in their praises of McCarthy's detective work, which, with the arrest of "Count" Edward Bryce and Charles Lambert of New York and Charles Heines of Rochester, promises to clear up the $1,500,000 bond robbery of a mail truck at Leonard street and Boardway last October 24, and a $65,000 American Railway Express wagon hold-up at Niagara Falls two months later. Charged with complicity in the theft of the bonds from registered pouches among the 28 the auto truck carried, the trio, alleged leading members of a long-sought robber band, were arraigned today before Magistrate Hitchcock.

Part of the loot of October has been recovered—$300,000 from the bottom of a trunk in Bryce's luxurious apartment at 12 Gramercy Park, and the balance from a burlap bag buried under a tree in a field near Silver Lake.

FINE SAMPLE OF HASTINGS COUNTY OATS

That grain in this locality will be not only tall but well filled out, is evidenced by a sample which The Intelligencer received today. It was a sample of oats grown upon Somerset dairy farm in Tyendinaga Township, and was planted on April 27th by Mr. P. G. Eastman, manager of the farm. The sample measured 4 feet, 9 inches in length and the head was well filled out.

SPEEDY CLOSE TO RAIL STRIKE

Conciliation in the Air—Way Cleared for Compromise

Chicago, July 5.—Hope for the speedy settlement of the country-wide strike of the railway shopmen was seen tonight in statements issued by Ben. W. Hooper, Chairman of the United States Railway Labor Board, and B. M. Jewell, leader of the shop crafts, who ordered the walkout.

In a reply to a letter from Mr. Hoop, which was regarded as conciliatory, Mr. Jewell declared that the strikers were willing to "consider any negotiations with anyone in authority for settlement of the strike."

"We are willing to confer with any body authorized by the railroads to bring peace proposals to us," said Mr. Jewell. "I include or exclude nobody, but if the Labor Board, for instance, came to us with a definite proposition we would not hesitate to consider it."

Three Separate Ballots.

Mr. Jewell made public the exact figures on the strike vote taken by the 400,000 members of the six shop crafts. The vote was divided into three separate ballots: the first on accepting a $50,000,000 reduction in wages ordered by the Labor Board; second, the restoration of seven working rules altered by the board, and third, the abolition of outside contracting by the roads.

The tabulation showed only 94.7 per cent of the men had voted to strike on the question of wages, the heaviest vote for a strike being on the question of outside contract labor, which polled 97.1 per cent. of the vote cast. The ballot on rules came second, with 96.2 per cent. for strike. Union leaders said that the vote displayed the relative importance attached to the three points at issue by their membership.

AUSTRALIAN WINS IN HENLEY BOAT RACE

Henley-on-Thames, (later).—A. A. Baynes, of Brisbane, Queensland, defeated Earl, of England, by one length in the Diamond Sculls.

FISHERMEN'S ANNUAL PICNIC ATTRACTS MANY SPECTATORS

A Good Programme of Sports Provided and Addresses Given by Prominent Speakers

The second annual Fishermen's picnic held under the auspices of the Bay of Quinte and Eastern Lake Ontario Fishermen's Union No. 27, which jurisdiction extends from Bath in the east to Brighton in the west, was held at Victoria Park in this city on Wednesday. It proved to be a success in every particular and it is estimated that during the afternoon upwards of 3000 persons were upon the park which by the way is a most beautiful spot for such events. The day being a holiday in the city gave many citizens the opportunity of being present and enjoying the programme presented.

At an early hour in the morning white fish and salmon was cooked and given away free. It is estimated that upwards of 1800 pounds was consumed and a considerable quantity left uncooked was given to various institutions in the city, and needless to state, was acceptable.

Motor Boat Races.

The programme of sports provided was chiefly motor boat races and these were quite interesting and exciting. Four valuable silver cups were offered for competitions the donors being Hon. N. Parliament, Bert Black, Thomas McQuain and William Root. The results of the races were as follows:

Three and a half horse power boats—David Belnap 1st, and winner of the Root cup; Frank Belnap 2nd.

Six horse power boats—Wesley Kiser 1st, and winner of the Black cup; John Belnap 2nd.

Seven horse power boats—Wm Larue 1st and winner of the McQuain cup. Manson McDonald 2nd.

Nine horse power boats—Carter Alyea 1st and winner of the Parliament cup; Marshall Gerow 2nd.

Walking the greasy pole—A great number of boys attempted to regain a ticket which was nailed on the end of the pole which was extended out over the water, the ticket entitling the holder to $2. Laurence Latourney proved to be the winner.

Oldest Union Fisherman.

A years subscription to the Picton Gazette was offered as a prize to the oldest fisherman upon the grounds who is a member of the Union. Mr. Daniel Belnap, of Rossmore, Prince Edward County, was awarded the prize. He is 82 years of age and has been an active fisherman for many years.

Baby Show.

Some thirty-eight babies all under 1 year of age were in competition for three prizes offered, and the judges had no easy task in selecting the prize winners. After considerable time had been occupied in judging, the awards were made as follows: Mrs. Hector, 1st; Mrs. L. Dougherty, 2nd; and Mrs. Looker, 3rd. The judges were Messrs R. Howard, R. Kiser and E. Hickey.

Speech Making.

From the band stand addresses were given by several prominent gentlemen, of Hastings and Prince Edward Counties. All the addresses were of a brief nature and were to the point and liberal applause were bestowed upon some of the remarks made. Capt. A. Hunter, of this city, who was for some years a Game Warden was chairman.

Mr. H. K. Denyes, M.P.P., for East Hastings congratulated the Fishermen upon the success of their second annual picnic which he characterized as a movement in the right direction. The speaker referred to the sports provided and the able manner they had been carried out. The fishing industry of this country was a great industry and one of the most successful. In 1920 it amounted to 60,000,000 and $42,000,000 worth of fish was exported out of this country. There were 52 fish hatcheries in the country to replete the lakes and the reduction in naval expenditures for the next year, after the ratification of the treaty for the limitation of armament, will amount to $6,836,712.-33.

"Even if we disregard the $60,000,-000 appropriated for the cancellation of contracts, the amount appropriated for the current expenses of the navy next year amounts to $245,536,577 and that is only $36,536,712 less than the appropriation for the year ending June 30, 1922. Now in order to fully appreciate the importance of these figures let me say that for the year ending June 30, 1914, the year previous to the beginning of the European war, our naval appropriations amounted to only $141,000,943. After the European nations engaged in hostilities we appropriated for the year ending June 763,563. Then for the year ending 30, 1915, $146,493,177. For the year ending June 30, 1916, we appropriated only $149,763,563. Then for the year ending June 30, 1917, when there was imminent danger of our becoming engaged in war and the great battleship program had been authorized, our total appropriations amounted to only $315,886,080. In Conclusion Mr. Byrnes scored Congress for authorizing this heavy expenditure after the holding of a conference for the limitation of armaments which the people believed would result in greatly reduced naval expenditure."

CIRCUS DAY IN THE CITY

Ringling Bros. and Barnum And Bailey's Large Aggregation Here

This is Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Day and in consequence the youngsters and their elders are bubbling over with that particular brand of enthusiasm that only the tanbark and tented marvels can arouse.

In all probability excitement runs higher than usual because the colossus being entertained today is made up of the world's two greatest shows combined and made even bigger tran ever by the addition of many trained animal acts and more than 200 of Europe's finest performing horses. Then, too, there are many added zoological novelties such as a baby hippopotamus and its giant mother—the first ever taken on tour in America.

It is because of the enlarged size of this circus of 1922 that the traditional street parade was eliminated today. In fact no parade is given anywhere nor has been given for two years past. All the morning hours are now required to get this biggest of all circuses from the railroad yards to the show grounds.

Long before the sun s——— up in the heavens this mornin, the circus trains—more than one and a third miles long—wound into the Grand Trunk railroad yards. Then started the work of unloading the biggest amusement institution that has ever toured America. Out on the show grounds hundreds of working men awaited the loads of canvas, ropes, poles and paraphernalia which the boss canvasman quickly metamorphosed into the vast double circus encampment with its thirty or more tents with gaily fluttering flags and pennants at the mastheads of the long spars required to support the acres of canvas.

Thousands of persons, young and old, big and little, sedate and merry, rich and poor, thronged the streets this morning and proved again, if proof were necessary, the alluring charm the circus holds for the young in heart.

Most everybody went out to the show grounds to see the various sights. The greatest interest centred around a special tent in which are housed the many dens containing the trained wild animals that the Ringling Brothers imported from Europe this spring. These number entire troupes of lions, tigers, leopards, black panthers, polar bears and other splendid beasts. A whole train of wagons loaded down with enough steel fencing to enclose a city park transported the arenas in which the new animal acts were exhibited at this afternoon's performance.

Circus fans who make it a point to keep in touch with things soon discovered that a brand new and additional horse tent had been added since the great double circus last exhibited here. This special pavilion is used for the two hundred trained stallions, the troupes of midget horses, Shetland ponies and menage horses that were last winter purchased by the famous brother showmen and transported to America.

Everything about this mammoth double circus has increased in size. Not only are the tents bigger than before but there are more of them. It was estimated that more than four hundred massive vans and wagons were used in transporting the wonders of this show from the many railroad trains to the circus grounds this morning. Fifteen hundred persons are carried on tour and of this number fully one-half take part in the gigantic main-tent program that began at 2 p.m. and will be repeated at 8 p.m. tonight.

CECIL'S SCHEME IS ADOPTED

By Special Sub-Committee of League of Nations—Yet to be Endorsed by League

Paris, July 5.—Lord Robert Cecil's proposed Mutual Protective Association, by which nations would combine by continents to maintain peace, was adopted this afternoon by the sub-committee of the League of Nations temporary mixed armaments commission.

The only opposition voiced was that of granting the demands of the representative of Sweden, who showed reluctance to commit his country to any alliance involving potential use of its troops for the protection of another state. Lord Cecil finally gained the Swedish statesman's acceptance of his scheme in principle.

When reduction of armaments, which is an obligatory appendage to the Cecil plan, comes to be considered to-morrow, a heated controversy is expected. ormer Premier Viviani, chairman of the Commission, strongly opposes Lord Esher's project for fixation of the military ratio, which would have the effect of limiting the French army to one hundred and eighty thousand men. He also desires precise indications as to the extent of the armed aid each nation would be called on to supply to safeguard the integrity of any other nation on the same continent.

POLICY IS VOID IF PRIEST IS INSANE

Insurance Company Says Family History Not Told When Policy Issued

Montreal, July 5.—When Father Adelard Delorme secured the $25,000 insurance policy on the life of his brother, Raoul, whom he was subsequently charged with having slain, he withheld the important information from the Sauvegarde Insurance Company that the Delorme family was heavily tainted with insanity.

When inquiries were made to-day at the head offices of the company, officials were reluctant to make any positive statement on the Delorme application in particular. Their attitude is that of watchful waiting is formally submitted to them by the four Delorme sisters or the prisoner's administrator.

Administrator Bans Policy.

The same officials, however, do admit that the question: "Is there any insanity in your family?" is one of the most important of a lengthy list submitted to intending policy holders. Insanity is generally placed on an equal basis with tuberculosis, and applicants in whose family it exists find is almost impossible to secure life insurance.

"While I have not examined the Delorme application personally," one official declared, "I am certain that had the entire family history been disclosed when the application was made, the policy would never have been issued."

An amusing report was brought to the city today from the asylum to the effect that the lunatics are plying their keepers with the question, "When's Delorme coming with us?" Apparently details of the case have filtered through the asylum walls to the inmates.

BOOTLEGGING IN JAIL

New York, July 5.—Barney Conway, found guilty of conduct unbecoming a convict, nursed an old-fashioned "hang-over" in solitary confinement at Sing Sing today.

"Hurrah for prison reform," shouted Barney, weaving down the corridors of the jail.

Investigation showed that Barney had made within the shadows of the grey walls, home brew from a mash concocted with potatoes, sugar, yeast and other ingredients.

Where Barney got the ingredients no one knows, but Warden Lawes pointed to the fact that Barney was a burglar until he got caught at it.

Barney not only drank to the saturation point, but he passed his brew around to other prisoners in way of celebrating Independence Day.

MAD CAT FOUND IN TRUNK

Toronto, July 5.—From the baggage room of the Union Station this afternoon the most mysterious and weird cat-calls were heard every few moments, apparently issuing from a large travelling trunk packed beneath some 20 other large trunks.

The staff after some hours of trying work ran the calls down to one large trunk. Believing the calls came from this particular trunk with no name on it —only the tag, Provincial Inspector Dave Ballingall and Inspector Robinson, of the Humane Society, were sent for.

They broke the trunk open. Halfway in buried in the clothes, was a half-mad large kitten, screaming madly and clawing and snapping.

After a pitched battle, during which claws scratched and hands attempted to catch the elusive kitten, it was finally trapped and taken to the Humane Society headquarters. For some 15 hours the kitten had been imprisoned in the trunk which came all the way from New York. The box was also taken and is being held until the owner claims it. "It is an absolute case of cruelty and one which we will investigate," said Inspector Ballingall. In a cosy cage at the society's headquarters the cat did all sorts of funny antics, performing somersaults and climbing the walls.

SOVIET ARMIES ON THE MOVE

Russian Forces Concentrated on Polish and Rumanian Frontier

Washington, July 5.—Soviet Russia's steady concentration of military strength upon the Polish and Rumanian frontiers to date has resulted in the massing of no less than 350,-000 men on those borders, according to authoritative advices reaching here to-day. Of these, nearly one-half are on the Polish or so-called 'Western' front, while approximately 125,000 are on the Rumanian border. The remainder are concentrated in the Karkoff area.

The entire strength of the Red armies, including 125,000 of the so-called Cheka, or Secret Service troops is estimated at approximately 1,500,000 men.

While this movement of troops toward the frontier has occasioned considerable alarm both in Poland and Rumania, those here who are most competent to speak on the situation say all the information indicates that the movement probably was in the nature of a gesture toward Europe, originally undertaken for its moral effect upon the Genoa Conference, and continued with the idea of giving Soviet Russia a more authoritative voice in The Hague parleys.

HIKERS' ARMY STARTS BUT NOT THE 600

Force Dwindles From 250 to 6 When Roll is Called

Brantford, July 5.—"Over the top to Ottawa or bust"— this was the slogan of the returned men who left Brantford this morning by motor truck, commanded by Lieut. Price, to join in the march on Ottawa. But in place of the 250 announced as having signed up to join in the march only six were on hand and in line when the signal was given this morning, although there were many other veterans as onlookers.

The object of the march, according to announcements made here by "General" Riley, was to secure for the veterans their "pre-war independence."

The going of the hikers was not without one incident. Words passed between a hiker and a local veteran and blows were struck.

Lieut. Price thanked the citizens of Brantford for their hospitality. Asked by a limping veteran what he got out of it, Price answered, "Not one single meal."

ANOTHER "BULLOCK" CASE

New York, July 5.—A case which closely parallels that of Matthew Bullock, which caused international attention last March, is reported in despatches received from Rome, Georgia, this morning. Governor Davis, of Ohio, has refused to honor extradition papers from Georgia for Henry Maxwell, a negro, wanted in Floyd County, Georgia, on charges of murder, declaring the negro would be lynched if brought back to Georgia. Sheriff Wilson, who went to Cleveland to bring back the fugitive, reported Governor Davis action on his return to Rome this morning.

HUNT FOR MISSING BOY CAUSES DEATH OF TWO MEN

Sydney, N.S. July 6.—When little Jimmie Macdonald failed to come home at dinner time at Port Hood, his father, Alexander Macdonald, set out to look for him, accompanied by a neighbor, Dan R. Macdonald.

The quest led to an abandoned mine shaft near which the boy had been seen playing. The father descended a ladder into the pit, and when he did not return within reasonable time Dan Macdonald also went down to see what was keeping the first man. He also failed to reappear.

A search party of miners which finally succeeded in penetrating the mine found the bodies of both men lying at the foot of the shaft, overcome by the deadly black damp which gathers in disused mine workings. Up to noon to-day the body of the boy had not been found. It is thought he is dead in the pit.

ABOUT TILE DRAINING

What the Provincial Act Does for the Farmer.

Tiling Improves Land Year After Year — Comparison of Cost and Benefit — Government Money Loaned at Low Rates — How Fruits Ripen.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

In spite of the fact that Government loans for farm underdrainage have been available for a number of years, it is still news for many farmers who have not sufficient capital to tile their farms. Too much cannot be said in support of this aid to increased production and enhancing the value of property. No other farm improvement will give equal returns and become a permanent improvement. Improved machinery, although very desirable, depreciates year by year, and in time is discarded and replaced by other and new equipment. Fertilisers are available for a year or two and have to be renewed, whereas tile drains become more efficient year after year. The soil becomes better aerated, more friable, and in a better physical condition when maximum crops will be produced with the minimum amount of work.

Matching Cost and Benefit.

Suppose for instance it takes $40 to tile drain an acre of land systematically, but by so doing several hollows which never produced more than half a crop before now yield more than any place else in the field. Supposing another wet area which always drowned out does likewise, and in all we have twenty-five bushels of wheat instead of twenty, or we have sixty bushels of oats instead of fifty. These estimates are much too low, but conservative estimates are safe. Let us see what interest we make on our money. Taking the present price of wheat as $1.40 per bushel, we have made $7 on an outlay of $40, which is 17½ per cent. on our investment. With oats at 45c we have 11¼ per cent. on our investment, and if these are not good returns I don't know where to find them.

Government Loans at Low Rates.

For the use of this money, on which you make large interest, the Government asks you only 5 per cent. You have twenty years to return it, long before which you have been repaid several times. Under the present act anyone wishing to tile can borrow 75 per cent. of the cost of his work up to $2,000 per hundred acres. The loan is obtained through the township council, which is responsible for passing the necessary by-laws and the issuing of the debentures for sale to the Provincial Treasurer. No township council alive to the necessity of underdrainage would refuse to become interested in obtaining such a loan for any of their ratepayers.

Further Government assistance by way of surveys, plans and specifications for drainage work may be obtained by applying to the Drainage Department, O. A. C., Guelph. They will also be glad to assist individuals or councils in discussing with them the Tile Drainage Act, or in mailing them copies in which they can get the details.—F. L. Ferguson, O. A. College, Guelph.

How Fruits Ripen.

The place which fruits are assuming in the dietary of man is one of growing importance. Certain species like the apple and pear, the plum and the grape, have long enjoyed a deserved popularity; others which were once among the rarities in the United States are now in great favor.

The ripening of fruits plays so important a part in their availability, and some of the problems of transportation, that authentic information on this subject is much to be desired. Some fruits, like the apple, may be allowed to ripen almost fully on the tree, and may be kept in the ripened condition for relatively long periods, if proper attention be paid to their manipulation and storage.

The physical changes, like the variation in color of ripening fruits, are familiar, since they are evident to the senses; but these alterations are merely indicative of changes in the chemical make-up of the fruits under the conditions which determine ripening. Heat, moisture, air and light may all participate in determining the characteristic changes that ensue. Laboratory reports of statisticians' investigations in recent years have given clearer indications of what takes place. Among the changes are the transformation of the starch into sugar, the conversion of soluble tannin compound with their astringent properties into insoluble forms, the actual lessening of the quantity of acid, or the masking of the acid flavor by the accumulation of sugar, the softening of woody tissue, and the increase and storage of juice.

With the growing knowledge of what the ripening of fruits really involves, we are certain to acquire better ideas of what a properly ripened product should really be. The fact that unripened (winter) apples are unfit for consumption in the early fall, because instead of sugar they contain a large amount of raw starch, which will disappear with the "mellowing" process, will be understood in a more intelligent way than has usually been the case.

Shade Trees on Highways.

Our highways would be much more attractive if lined with shade trees. These trees could be set 50 or more feet apart and would do little damage either to the adjoining property or the roadway. They would make the road pleasanter to travel over and also to live by.

WATER IN FARM HOMES

Compression System Will Give General Satisfaction.

Water Pumped Into a Metal Tank Against Compressed Air—Various Methods of Working the Pump—Air Valves a Necessity — Seven Steps to Success In Poultry Culture.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

In my last article I described briefly the attic tank system of water supply for the rural home. This system has given very good satisfaction in the past, but I doubt if it will be installed in many homes in the future, as there is now on the market something very much superior in many respects. I refer to the compression water system, which I will try to describe in a few words.

How the System Operates.

The chief feature of this system is that water is pumped into a strong air-tight cylindrical metal tank against the entrapped air which is compressed in the upper portion of the tank, and the compressed air constitutes the power to drive the water out of the tank when a faucet is opened on the discharge line. This is very simple. The metal tank will vary in size according to the amount of water used, but a common size is 6 feet by 2½ or 3 feet. It should be kept about full of water and at a pressure varying from 40 to 45 lbs. Greater pressure, if required, may be secured by pumping the water to a higher level than named in the tank, or by pumping some air into the tank before any water is pumped in. A water gauge is attached to one side of the tank to indicate the height of the water in the tank, and on the discharge pipe close to the tank is a pressure gauge. The tank must be kept in a frost-proof place—say the cellar, or an underground pit. The water keeps cool, clean and fresh in this tight tank.

Methods of Working the Pump.

There are many different ways of operating the pump in order to fill the tank: By hand, by windmill, by gasoline engine, or by electric motor. A few minutes of pumping each day by hand will keep the ordinary-sized house supplied with plenty of water. When the pump can be operated by windmill or electric motor, there is the great advantage of automatic starting and stopping of the pump. The automatic electric water systems of the present day are very convenient and also very efficient. In case of shallow wells and cisterns the pump and motor can be located inside the house or barns. As farmers get electric current these automatic systems will become very common both for shallow and deep wells. The automatic systems require very little attention and are very noiseless. There are several styles or designs, but any of them of reputable firms will give good satisfaction if the installation has been done properly and if the outfit be given good care.

If soft water as well as hard water is required under pressure, two tanks are necessary, one for soft and one for hard. Only one pump is required in this double tank outfit.

Air Valves a Necessity.

Pumps used in connection with compression systems must be provided with an air valve for renewing the air in the tank because the air dissolves in the water and escapes with it. If means for pumping in air were not provided for, the tank would eventually become waterlogged and the system would be rendered absolutely useless.

The compression water system is described and illustrated in Bulletin 267, entitled "Farm Water Supply and Sewage Disposal." A copy may be secured without cost by dropping a line to the Department of Physics, O. A. C., Guelph, Ont. Give us a chance to help you to solve your water supply problem.—R. R. Graham, O. A. College, Guelph.

Seven Steps to Success In Poultry Culture.

1. Keep accurate records. Little progress can be made without this first step.
2. Feed a properly balanced ration. Such a ration furnishes nutrients for growth, maintenance, fattening and eggs. The production of eggs must be a constant aim.
3. Give proper care and comfort by good housing and management. Discomforts are: Extremes of heat and cold, hunger and thirst, four air and dampness, and diseases and parasites.
4. Keep standard-bred, utility stock. There are five good breeds for the farm: Plymouth Rock, Rhode Island Red, Leghorn, Wyandotte and Orpington. Varieties of these have been bred for heavy egg-production.
5. Breed from the best, both male and female.
6. Sell unprofitable stock.
7. Market graded products. Maximum returns are secured from graded products. Markets demand a constant supply, and this calls for community co-operation.

Age of Cows.

It is more difficult to determine the age of a cow than of a horse, say the live stock men at the State College at Ithaca, New York. They agree that some estimate of a cow's age may be made from her teeth and horns. The number of "annual rings" on the horns, plus two, for example, usually gives the animal's age, but remembering that the pairs of permanent teeth come nine months apart and the first pair comes at about 18 to 24 months of age, will help to verify it.

HOW TO FEED FOR MILK

Rations Must be Well Balanced and Also Generous.

Special Indoor Feeding Required—Silage, Pulped Roots, Chopped Clover, Etc., Recommended—Feed the Cows Liberally.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Pastures may produce sufficient nutriment for the average producing cow, but the heavy producer cannot eat enough grass to satisfy her hunger and the demand of her milk producing organs. To such heavy producers supplementary grain mixtures should be fed in quantity sufficient to satisfy the cow's hunger and make possible the full functioning of the milk secreting organs. On good pasture the average producing cow cannot make profitable use of grain feeds, but when on poor pastures the feeding of grain as a supplementary may be the only way by which the milk flow can be kept up.

Pastures Must Be Supplemented by Grain.

Cows producing 50 pounds of milk per day, testing three per cent. butter fat, should receive in addition to good pasture 8 to 10 pounds of mixed grain chop per day. Cows producing 30 pounds of milk per day testing three per cent. butter fat would benefit by the addition of four pounds of mixed grain chop each day at the milking time on return from pasture. In some districts the season of flush pasture may be very short. If such is the case provision for supplementary coarse feeds must be made. This may be most easily done by providing good silage. Many of the more progressive dairymen feed silage during the entire summer period in quantity in keeping with conditions in the pasture field, increasing or decreasing the quantity at the demand of the cow. The growing of soiling crops such as the oats and pease mixture, the growing of alfalfa and red clover corn, and roots in season are ways of keeping the cows working should the pasture fail. The cow's stomach should be kept well lined with feed if she is to be profitable as a producer of milk. As the grass or pasture crop dwindles, other feeds must be supplied or milk cannot be made. Many good feeders supplement the failing pastures in August with green fodder corn and second growth clover, newly made silage from peas and oats or corn may follow these. During October and early November, greystone turnips and sorghum are frequently used. All these feeds go the same route and produce much the same effect on the animal body, differing but little in degree. It is not so much what we feed if we would only feed enough and use a variety of feeds so that the cow can perform the work required of her.

Special Indoor Feeding Required.

With the closing of the autumn and cessation of outside feeding, necessitating all indoor feeding over a long period, provision for which should have been made during the growing season, by way of producing an amply quantity of silage, clovers, roots, grain feeds, and straw. How many cows can I carry through the winter, is the viewpoint too frequently taken by many dairy men. For profitable work this viewpoint is generally wrong and should be turned about to read, how few cattle can I keep to eat up all the feed. Lack of definite knowledge as to the feed requirement per animal, and of an easy method of figuring this requirement, has caused much loss through many farmers trying to winter more stock than the feed supply in their barns would warrant. When cows do so well on June pasture, it should be an incentive to all feeders to imitate in so far as possible the succulence of June grasses.

Silage, Pulped Roots and Chopped Clover Recommended.

Well made silage is the best substitute, with pulped roots and chopped clover a good second. Good red clover and alfalfa hays while not succulent are highly nutritious and palatable. With silage, clovers, roots and straw at hand, a sufficient variety has been provided and it is considered good practice to give producing dairy cows all of these feeds that they will take, without waste. In addition to these bulky feeds one pound of mixed grain chop per day should be fed for each three pounds of milk produced, over and above 10 pounds. That is a cow producing forty pounds of average market milk per day would require all the coarse feeds she cared to eat and ten pounds of mixed grain chop per day. The grain feed requirement can also be expressed as one pound of mixed grain chop per day for each pound of butter fat produced in a weekly period. That is if a cow were producing four gallons or forty pounds of milk per day, that tested four per cent. butter fat, she would produce in seven days eleven and one-fifth pounds of butter fat. This would entitle her to eleven and one-fifth pounds of mixed grain per day.

Liberal Feeding Is Absolutely Necessary.

Another rule that is practiced by the best dairymen is to feed all of a well-balanced ration that good dairy cows will take without making any appreciable gain in weight while in full flow of milk. The balancing of rations for dairy cows is very important, and is practiced by many careful, business-like dairymen and farmers, but unfortunately many of those having the responsibility of cow feeding hate the sight of paper, pencil and figures; and consequently hesitate or neglect this very important item in dairy cow management. —L. Stevenson, Secretary Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

SILAGE FERMENTATION

Gives Ease or Benefit to Contents of the Silo.

Well-Packed Green Fodder Usually Comes Out Well — Various Conditions From the Same Class of Plants — Prevention of Tuberculosis In Poultry.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

When a large quantity of finely-cut or divided green fodder is packed within the silo fermentation begins at once. The temperature will gradually rise and considerable carbonic acid gas will be given off during the first five days. The temperature of the surface six inches may go up considerably above 100 deg. Fahrenheit, due to air entering and permitting fermentative processes which are not possible deeper in the mass out of reach of the free air or oxygen supply. Under good practice, where the ensiling has been well done, the temperature two feet down will not exceed 140 deg. Fahrenheit during the first five days, the temperature will then gradually drop back to 100 deg. or less.

Green Fodder For the Silo Should Be Well Packed.

Well-packed green fodder carrying a normal amount of moisture will contain within the small spaces just enough air to carry the fermentation to the desired point for proper silage making. If an excess amount of air is present through improper cutting and packing of the fodder the fermentations will be carried too far, moulds will form and spoil part of the silage. Numerous agents are present and ready to function should conditions favor their development in the ensiled mass. The plant enzymes, invertase and zymase, together with the acid forming bacteria lactis acidi and vini acetali are of the greatest importance in silage making. Numerous other bacteria are present, and if conditions favor their development to a greater degree than they favor the development of the lactic and acetic acid formers the silage produced will not be of the highest grade. The plant cells of the cut or shredded green fodder that is placed in the silo are still alive and carry the chemical substances commonly known as enzymes. These enzymes are the agents that break down the starch and increase the sugar content during the first few days of the fermentative process, apparently preparing the way for the acid forming bacteria which become very active after the fifth or sixth day and control the completion of the silage making process if conditions are normal.

Many Activities In the Silo Useful and Otherwise.

The vast difference in the condition of the various fodders used in silage making at the time of ensiling gives rise to various activities both useful and otherwise within the silo. Different degrees of greenness or ripeness, different classes of plants, difference in moisture content, presence or absence of desirable bacteria in quantity, will have their influence on the final product. So we see silage of various colors, odors and flavors made from the same class of forage plants. The temperature within the silo after the silage making is completed may vary from freezing near the wall to 85 degrees near or at the center of the silo.—L. Stevenson, Sec., Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Prevention of Tuberculosis In Poultry.

It is absolutely useless to treat poultry which is suffering from tuberculosis with any sort of medicine or patent poultry tonics. Preparations which guarantee to cure this disease are pronounced frauds by scientists. Once the bird is infected there is no cure. All effort should be directed to prevent the healthy birds from contracting the disease.

If the flock is small and not of great value and if several birds have died or are known to be affected, it would probably be the part of wisdom to destroy the whole flock and start over again. The poultry house should be scrubbed out with good disinfectant and the walls whitewashed. If the floor of the house is dirt, remove about six inches and bury it out of the way. Resurface with fresh, clean soil. If the floor is well made of either concrete, tile or wood, soak thoroughly with disinfectant. If the floor is not of good material or hard to clean, lay a new one over the old. Turn over the soil in the runs. Boil drinking cups and cleanse all other utensils. After this is well done, secure the new birds, being very careful to purchase them from a flock which is free from the disease.

If the flock is large or valuable and it is decided to attempt eradication without destroying all the fowls, great care and attention, even to the smallest details, are necessary. One will, of course, overlook some of the diseased birds on the first examination, but they may be observed later on when the symptoms are better developed. Keep the floor as free from drops as possible, and clean out and disinfect at least once a week. Do not allow the young birds to run with the older ones, for they are easily infected. After the first general weeding out, watch the rest and as soon as one begins to appear diseased, remove it from the flock and keep it alone, and then if it develops further symptoms destroy it at once.

DESTROYING MUSTARD

How to Get Rid of a Very Unwelcome Weed.

Iron Sulphate Will Give Satisfaction —Clean Cultivation Will Eradicate Bladder Campion or Cow Bell — Fitting the Horse Collar an Art.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Following is a continuation of last week's discussion on the best methods of destroying certain weeds affecting Ontario farms:

Spraying With Iron Sulphate to Prevent Mustard From Seeding In Cereal Crops.

Iron sulphate or copperas can be successfully used to destroy mustard in standing grain without injury to the crop.

Preparation of Solution.

A 20 per cent. solution should be applied. This can be prepared by dissolving 80 pounds of iron sulphate in forty gallons of water. Iron sulphate is dissolved quite readily in cold water. The solution should be strained through a cheese cloth, as it is put into the spray pump tank. This will remove dirt and small particles that are apt to clog the nozzles.

Time to Apply.

Apply on a calm clear day just as soon as the first few plants in the fields show flowers. It is very important to spray early. If the plants are left too long the treatment is not nearly so effective. If a heavy rain comes within twenty-four hours after the solution is applied, it will be necessary to spray again.

How to Apply the Solution.

An ordinary hand pump barrel sprayer, such as is employed to spray fruit trees may be used, or a potato sprayer can be rigged up to do this work. Many of the up-to-date sprayers have a special broadcast attachment for spraying weeds. These are excellent for large areas, as they cover a wide strip at each round. Care must be taken to see that every Mustard plant is covered with the solution in the form of a fine spray.

The results of the ten years' cooperative experiments show that Mustard may be prevented from seeding in oats, wheat or barley by spraying with a twenty per cent. solution of iron sulphate without any serious injury to the standing crop or to the fresh seedings of clover.—J. E. Howitt, O. A. College, Guelph.

Method of Cultivation For the Eradication of Bladder Campion or Cow Bell.

Badly infested fields should be ploughed deeply in the fall and then cultivated and cross-cultivated with a broad-shared cultivator in order to break up and weaken the under rootstocks. In the spring this cultivation should be repeated frequently enough to prevent the plant making any growth above ground until it is time to put in a hoed crop, which must be kept thoroughly clean in order to be effective. A well-cared for corn crop planted in hills so that it can be cultivated both ways has been found to give excellent results. Special attention must be given to hoeing out any bladder campion plants which may appear in the corn crop and which are not destroyed by cultivation. One fall and one spring's thorough cultivation, followed by a well cared for hoed crop, has been found to destroy practically all the bladder campion in a field, except in exceptionally wet seasons.—J. E. Howitt.

Fitting the Horse Collar Is An Art

Much trouble results on the average farm each year from sore shoulders on horses caused by the improper fitting of collars, and improper adjustment of hames.

The collar should fit the shoulder so that in length there is just room for the flat of one's hand between the collar and the neck at the bottom. In width the collar should fit snugly against the sides of the neck from a point three inches above the shoulder point, to a point about half way up to the top of the neck. The upper one-third to one-half of the collar should be wide enough to allow one to pass the thick of the hand between the collar and the side of the neck. If the upper part of the neck is thick a "Quarter Sweaney" or "Half Sweaney" collar should be used, so as not to pinch the neck. A collar too wide at the top will produce a sore neck on account of side motion of the collar as the horse walks.

Sweat pads should be avoided as they hold the heat and sweat and produce a tender shoulder, often causing a galled condition.

The hames should be adjusted so as to hold the collar snugly against the sides of the neck, and so as to bring the line of draft right angles to the face of the shoulder as nearly as possible.

The collar should be kept clean by washing with a damp cloth each night when it is removed from the shoulder.

Washing the shoulder each evening with cold salt water will help to toughen the skin and prevent shoulder galls.

TEST YOUR SEED CORN

Seed With Strong Vitality Is an Absolute Necessity.

Give Your Seed a Careful Germination Test—It Should Run 95 Per Cent—The Mulberry In Ontario—Home-made Spray for Flies.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Two ears of corn may be used to plant two rows side by side. The seed may weigh the same and look the same, but the results in plant development and yield is frequently vastly different. Two stalks may stand together in the same hill, enjoying similar conditions for growth and development. One may produce a good ear while the other produces an inferior nubbin.

Seed With Good Vitality a Necessity.

The difference is traceable to the seed. Good vital seed from select stock will generally give strong plants and full ears. Unselected seed will give a few good plants and many medium or barren plants. Enormous loss and waste would be prevented each year if care were exercised by all purchasers of seed corn. A few hills missed in each row, a few weak or barren plants distributed over the corn field, reduces or eliminates all opportunity for profit. The interest, taxes and wages have to be paid in full no matter what the crop is, and the more frequent the missed spaces, barren stalks, and weak stalks in the corn field the less there is to pay with.

Give the Seed a Germanation Test.

All seed corn should be given a germination test before planting. One poor seed ear going into the planter means a waste in land, and labor that is best expressed by one thousand weak or worthless stalks. The corn grower can't afford to neglect the quality of the seed he sows.

Plant one hundred seeds two or three weeks in advance of the regular corn planting date, using a box of moist sand placed in a warm window as a germinator. Count the strong plants at the end of ten days; there should be at least 95 of them. If the test shows any weakness discard all the seed and secure another supply with a guaranteed germination test.—L. Stevenson, Secretary, Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

The Mulberry.

The old-time fruit-bearing mulberry has lost its place in the gardens of southern Ontario. Better fruits have crowded it out, until it is rarely seen in the modern garden or fruit plantation. Sometimes planted as a food tree for birds by bird enthusiasts or by those desiring to play with silk worm culture in this northern climate. During the past year, through southwestern Ontario mulberry trees have been offered to the public by traveling agents. The experiences of the past with the mulberry as a fruit producing tree and as a food producing tree for silk worms in Ontario and the United States would indicate that nothing very great by way of achievement or profit is likely to follow the planting of any of the mulberry varieties in Ontario. One tree for the birds is probably all any one farm can afford. As for the development of mulberry plantations for silk culture, such hardly seems profitably possible under the climatic and labor conditions of Ontario.—L. Stevenson, Secretary, Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

Home-made Spray Keeps Flies Away.

By preventing flies from tormenting the cows a much greater flow of milk is obtained during the summer months and the remainder of the lactation period. The following home-made mixture has given good results. It is better than several other mixtures tried and quite as efficient as the prepared sprays costing a dollar per gallon. It is made as follows:

1½ quarts of any standard coal tar dip,
1½ quarts fish oil,
1 pint oil of tar,
1 quart coal oil,
½ pint oil of eucalyptus.

Mix in ten gallons of lukewarm soft water in which a bar of laundry soap has been dissolved.

Spray twice a day, in the morning after milking and in the afternoon when cows are brought in for silage or green feed. When a half-barrel cart with spray nozzle attachment is used, two men can spray a herd of forty cows in ten minutes. This mixture is not perfect and does not keep all the flies away and, furthermore, it leaves the coat rather harsh and causes dust to adhere; however, it is very beneficial and practical.

Shelter from the hot sun of summer must be provided if efficient and economical production is to be expected.

Importing Quail.

A consignment of live quail from Spokane has been received by the Provincial Game Board, for release in the uplands district. These birds were given in exchange for Mongolian pheasants. Another consignment is expected from the Eastern States in exchange for pheasants.

The results of the ten year periments would warrant the r mendation of the following for the eradication of Twitch and the Perennial Sow Thistle. to prevent Mustard from seedi cereal crops, and how to era Bladder Campion or Cow Bell, be dealt with next week.

The Rape Method for the Con Perennial Sow Thistle and T Grass.

Cultivate the field until abo middle of June, running over quently with the cultivator so keep the tops down and thus w the "roots." A cultivator with points should be used, which w off the Sow Thistle or Twitch below the surface of the groun not break up the root stock much. About the middle of apply manure at the rate of twenty tons per acre (twelve loads). Cultivate the manure in oughly and with a double board plough slightly ridge u land, making the ridges twenty-six inches apart. On ridges sow pasture rape (D Essex variety) at the rate of one and a half pounds per ac is important that the right a of rape be sown, for if too li sown the stand will not be enough to smother the weeds a on the other hand, too much is the rape plants will be too cro and not grow vigorously enou keep ahead of the Twitch Gr Sow Thistle. Sow the rape whe land is sufficiently moist to quick germination of the seed the rape is slow in starting Twitch Grass or Sow Thistle m a start in the rows and thus sitate hand cultivation. Cultiva rape every week or ten days u occupies all the ground and further cultivation impossible when the rape is cut or pasture of the weeds remain the field s be ridged up last thing in th and put in with another hoed the following year. This has no found necessary when a good of rape has been secured.

In our co-operative weed e ments it has been found tha is a much more satisfactory c use in the eradication of T Grass than buckwheat and tha gives much better results in the dication of Twitch Grass and P nial Sow Thistle when sown in and cultivated than it does sown broadcast.—J. SILENCE AND GARRULITY

John Hope, M.P. for Berwick, England, claims to have broken all records by sitting in the House of Commons for twenty-two years without making a maiden speech. We are assured that the gentleman is not dumb, but that he is a good conversationalist. When asked why he remained so long silent in the House he said: "A man can do more in life by not talking about it." He had on several occasions thought of breaking the silence, but kept deferring the ordeal.

The question arises as to whether we have not too much talk in our Parliaments and in public life. John Hope, M.P., is doubtless an extreme example, but we have too many examples of the opposite extreme. Garrulity does not generally go with depth of thought, and very frequently the desired effect of an address is defeated by the verbosity of the speaker.

INLAND SHIPS AND OCEAN WATERS

The Globe may regard itself as an authority on most things, but it appears that it is a little astray on things nautical. In a recent editorial on the St. Lawrence Channel, that newspaper stated that the large freight steamers of the Great Lakes could carry half a million bushels of grain through the inland waters and out into the ocean via the St. Lawrence Channel.

The Canadian Shipping and Engineering News reads The Globe a little lesson on the subject, and is inclined to be rather irreverent toward that venerable journal, it says: "It is perhaps rather too much to expect of a newspaper editor that he should be familiar with the differences of construction in the lake and ocean steamer. That there is such a difference is well known to those who know anything about ships."

The journal goes on to say that "the bulk freight carrier in use on the lakes is a development purely of the grain and ore trade. "She is of comparatively light draft, with engines and boilers placed in the extreme after end, and is invariably under-powered in comparison with a seagoing steamer of the same capacity. She is not meant to stand up against heavy weather, and, as a matter of fact, rarely attempts to do so, but makes for shelter at the first sign of an oncoming blow. The history of the lakes tells many tragic stories of those vessels unfortunate enough to be caught far from port when the storm fiend is abroad.

"The reason she can carry freight so cheaply, is that she is practically self-loading and self-trimming. Being of low power and speed, she is economical of coal. Her crew is smaller than the crew of an ocean steamer of the same capacity. In a word, she is utterly unfitted for ocean service.

"Outside of these few drawbacks, the possibility of the five hundred thousand bushel steamer carrying a cargo of grain to Liverpool or Rotterdam remains remote."

Is this the last word on the St. Lawrence development scheme?

FASHIONS AND FACES

Carlyle has already written at some length on the philosophy of clothes, but Sartor Resartus was a book of yesterday; no one reads it to-day. Not because that philosophy has become obsolete, or has become subsidiary to some other philosophy or religion. That oldest of all philosophies is the very newest; it is the one and only thing that is new under the sun. "The fashion of this world changeth," cries the pessimist—how else can we have anything new if the fashion did not change? We would all become as antique as the Pharaohs in twelve months but for the flux of fashion. Who would look twice into a milliner's window if this were a world of Quakers?

A man may love his wife for fifty years and more for her own sake alone; he may see in her eyes the depths of an infinity of love which he can never fathom. He may behold in her form and countenance the image of immortal beauty and affection, even though Time writes his old, sad tale of mortality thereon. But the finest picture is always enhanced by a frame. A new hat or a new dress sets it at a new angle and brings up the perspective. A frame does not make a picture, but it seldom mars one. There are pictures that are all frame, in which case there is no picture to mar. Herein lies the danger of high fashion and extravagant adornment.

"God gave you one face and you make yourself another,"

said Hamlet to Ophelia, who was in the habit of painting and puffing. This is where the artificiality of the frame gets into the picture itself. No one is ever deceived by the gilding on a picture frame; its artificiality is the very thing that heightens the value of the beautiful reality to which it draws our attention. If the thing in the frame is a mere smudge or daub, lacking reality and soul, then it has no appeal save to the smudge and the sensual in the gazer.

Paint no more, ladies, puff no more!
Men were unbelievers ever!

A DESPERATE PROBLEM
Vancouver World

The problem of India is increase of population. When the British first took reasonably accurate count in India there were about one hundred and twenty million people, the population being held at about this level by famine, pestilence and civil war.

Under the safety of British rule that population has increased to over three hundred million; and there is a net increase of something over three million each year. In spite of everything possible which can be done to stimulate industrial expansion and agricultural production, in spite of vast transportation and irrigation undertakings, it is hardly possible to keep the resources of the country equal to the task of supporting the immense and increasing population. Here, and here alone, lies the secret of the unrest in India.

RELIEVE CANADIAN PUBLISHERS

It should be the aim of any Government and any country in this era of enlightenment to make all reading matter as little costly to the people as possible. It is the last thing in the world that should carry a tax, and in effect that is what the idea proposed to Parliament would mean—simply another tax upon the people of Canada. They would not cease reading American periodicals or periodicals from other countries (the tax could not be imposed against the magazines of one country only). They would have to pay a tax upon their reading material, and to read The Atlantic Monthly or The Hibbert Journal or The Bookman would mean to pay a heavier tax than to read "Snappy Stories." The far better way, as Mr. Crerar pointed out, would be to remove the customs tariff on coated papers, on printing machinery and so forth, and give Canadian publishers a better chance to compete on even terms.

WIT AND HUMOR

Wife (heatedly)—George, I wonder you can maintain that Mr. Jones is kind to his wife! He has been away for two weeks, and has not sent her a penny. What kindness do you call that?

Husband— Unremitting kindness, my dear.

Edwin, aged 4, owned a picture-book in which a fierce-looking cow was running after a small boy. He looked at it a long time, then carefully closing the book he laid it away. A few days later he got the book again, and turned to the picture. Bringing his chubby fist down on the cow, he exclaimed in a tone of triumph, "She ain't caught him yet!"

A little girl whose father was a photographer, was taken for the first time to a courtroom while a case was being tried. On returning home she was asked concerning what she had seen and heard. Her description of the Judge's charge was this:

"The Judge made a long speech to the jury of twelve men and then he sent them into a dark room to develop.

Governor Glasscock of West Virginia while travelling through Arizona, noticed the dry, dusty appearance of the country.

"Doesn't it ever rain around here?" he asked one of the natives.

"Rain?" The native spat. "Rain? Why say pardner, there's bullfrogs in this yere town over five years old that hain't learned to swim yet."

"No," complained the Scotch professor to his students; "ye dinna use your faculties of observation. Ye dinna use them. For instance—" Picking up a jar of chemicals of vile odor he stuck one finger into it and then into his mouth. "Taste it, gentlemen!" he commanded, as he passed the vessel from student to student. After each one licked his finger, and felt rebellion through his whole soul the old professor exclaimed triumphantly:—"I tol' ye so. Ye dinna use your faculties. For if ye had observed ye would ha' seen that the finger I stuck into the jar was nae the finger I stuck into my mouth."

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

Is It Possible?

It hath been said, and it hath been truly said, that every man has his price. True it is that there be some men whom you could not buy with all the gold in King Solomon's mines. All the money paid in fines under the O. T. A. in any one day wouldn't —coudn't buy some men. And yet it is conceded that every man hath his price! Gold is not the medium of trade. The only thing really worth while can be got without money and without price. There are a whole lot of beautiful and desirable things in this world which can't be had for money, and here is where the great law of compensation comes in—the mighty and inexorable law of equilibrium. You may have tons of gold, but there is some little common thing that you can't buy. It may be a little thing clad in gauze, called Honor, it may be an invitation to Miss Belden's select garden party, it may be your election as People's Warden, in St. Martin's in the Sugar Bush, but you haven't got money enough to buy any of them. The law of compensation compensates. It is evident that the Lord loves the poor, for they get things that us rich folks can't get with all our money. How many men are there about us to-day who have climbed to wealth on a ladder, every rung of which was the broken body of a man or a woman or a child? They ground the faces of the poor; they robbed the window and the orphan, and the cripple and the broken soldier, and now they are rich, and they can't buy an appetite or a sleep, or the love of a woman or a child with it! I know a man—I won't give his address for obvious reasons—lead us not into temptations— who hath ten thousand dollars worth of liquor stored in his wine cellar, and what good is it to him? He can't even drink tea, let alone whiskey. He has got ten thousand dollars worth of booze, but he will never drink himself to death. He is a total abstainer. He is not, I admit, a prohibitionist. People of the Raney type look upon him with loathing, nevertheless he is one of the elect in that he doth not touch, taste, nor handle the accursed thing. Did you ever hear of l'il ol' Acute Indigestion? Not cute indigestion, but his comical l'il twin, 'Acute''? Our hero knows that there is a $700 casket, silk-lined and everything, awaiting him the moment he puls a bottle of old Scotch. That's all he gets out of his millions. Some folks think that the angels have no fun. This feller tickles them all to pieces. They extract more entertainment in one minute out of that old skinflint than you'll get out of the picture shows, baseball games, tennis, etc., all the summer.

But here is an appalling thought If every man hath his price, then—but wait till I get all set.

Before women got the vote, before they asked and obtained equal rights and equality with men, I would not have dared to propound the question I am going to ask. I am a chivalrous cuss and a gentleman, and don't you forget it. But it is different now. The girls are hail fellows well met, and each of them takes her medicine like a little man. This is the question:

"Hath every woman got her price?"

When I look at my dear, dead June lying in her coffin, and her only thirty days old; when I see the cluster of perished peonies and withered roses, the faded white lilacs, the lilly of the valley, the jonquils and the iris dead in her lifeless arms, I ask, hath every woman her price?

How much did Jim Spulpin pay for Doris Sevenpiper? They were married on the 3rd. of June. She loved me, but she married Jim Spulpin. Now, I wonder how much he paid for her?

The most successful auctioneer in the world is a party by the name of Cupid. Charley Henderson would look like thirty cents alongside of him.

"How much am I offered for Miss Duckunder? Gentlemen, here is something choice. Here is an opportunity which presents itself but once in a lifetime. What am I bid for her? Make me an offer. Fifty acres of land with a frame house and a stone stable on it! No advance? Gentlemen, this is a shame. Where are your eyes? Where are your hearts? Going at fifty acres—ah! A hundred of acres of land with a brick house, ten acres of orchard, and a concrete barn! What's that I hear? A grocery store in Gumbo and a used car Nothin' doing! Come again, son. What's that? A parsonage, and probably $800 a year and two sermons on Sunday, Rock Chapel and Losee's Mills? Don't make me laugh, I've got a sore lip. No advance on the hundred acres with the brick house onto it? Hnh! What's that? a carpenter with three rooms in his mother's house, and a right to use the clothes line in the backyard Tuesdays and Fridays? Go 'way back and sit down, young feller, you are gumming up the works. No advance on the hundred acres and the brick house? The third and last time—fair warning. Sold to Mister Sockdologer, and my congratulations, sir!"

When we look back on the history of politics in this country and estimate the number of men who have tttt ttttttt hhhnnnn ooooooo onnnn been bought with money or collateral—and see our girls swarming into the great political market-house, we wonder how many of them can be bought, and what will be the medium of sale!

LIBERAL-CONSERVATISM AND ITS LEADER

Mail and Empire

The country is to be congratulated that at a time when things are at sixes and sevens in the world generally the frame-work of its political organizations and social system remains unimpaired. It is true Canada has not been altogether unaffected by aberrations that came as an aftermath of the war to various countries. We did not escape the class movement, which, however, because of its unsound and unnational character ought not to have long life in this country. Already the class politicians seem to have lost their way and are groping about to find the road from which they strayed —the road of party politics. On the part of not a few of the United Farmers in the House of Commons who "hiked" to Ottawa under the banner of a new party they called the Progressives, there is a yearning to link up with the Liberals under Mr. King. There is no doubt that their leader, Mr. Crerar, was ready for this re-union six months ago, and was disappointed when the stricter sect of United Farmers from Alberta declined to sanction the match that Mr. King proposed to him. They may still leap into each other's arms. If that happens it may torpedo the combination between the English-speaking Liberals and the French bloc, and the majority of the French members may find themselves once more in the state of isolation over which they were grieving between the general election of 1917 and that of 1921.

Though the Liberal-Conservatives were beaten at the polls, they form to-day the saving remnant of the nation. They have not gone back on their principles. On the contrary, in season and out of season, in office and in Opposition, they have boldly and proudly confessed their political faith, and have consistently put honor, put duty to Canada, before the lure of power.

A visitor to a Sunday-school was asked to address a few remarks to the children. He took the familiar theme of the children who mocked Elisha on his journey to Bethel—how the young ones taunted the prophet, and how they were punished when two she-bears came out of the wood and ate forty and two of them. "And now, children," said he, "what does this story show?" "Please Sir," came from a little girl in the front row, "it shows how many children two she-bears can hold.

A Scotsman, on his first visit to London, had been warned by friends to be careful when buying anything, and always count his change.

After making his first purchase he stood counting his change so many times the shopkeeper, thinking he might have made a mistake, said to him:

"Well, Jock, and is your change all right?"

"Aye," replied Jock slowly, once again counting it, "but only just."

One day small Mary, who was making her first visit to the country, went with her grandmother to hunt eggs. "Look in the nest dear," said her grandmother, "and see how many eggs there are."

"One egg," reported Mary.

"Are you sure there are no more? Look again." Mary knelt down on the straw and peered carefully into the nest.

"Yes, grandma, that's all," she said "it's just as one as it can be." Then, as the hen gave a loud cackle, she added, "The egg's mama says that she hasn't any more."

Woman's Sphere

A SONG OF DUSK

By Nancy Byrd Turner

When he comes home at twilight,
I hear, above the beat
Of hoof and wheel on stone and steel,
His footfall in the street.

I see, though daylight darkened
And faded long before,
Across the gloom that fills my room
His dear face at the door.

When he comes in at twilight
The world that seemed so vast,
So broad outside, and wild and wide
Shrinks very small at last—

Shuts very safe and quiet
From dangers and alarms,
A happy space, a sheltered place;
The circle of his arms!

SOME FAMOUS COMPLIMENTS

"What is the prettiest compliment on record?" asks G. Greenhough Smith in John o' London's Weekly. Some may be inclined to give the preference to Dr. Johnson's compliment to Mrs. Siddons, where there happened to be no chair ready for her when she came into the room. "Madam," said the doctor, smiling, "you who so often occasion a want of seats to other people will the more easily excuse the want of one yourself." And certainly the effect of such a witty, pretty speech from the gruff doctor has all the piquancy of contrast; it is a blossom growing on a rock.

Dr. Young was walking in his garden at Welwyn with two ladies, one of whom was the lady of his heart, and afterwards his wife, when a servant came to him that a person wished to see him. As he refused to go, one lady took him by the right arm and the other by the left, and led him to the garden gate, where, finding resistance useless, he bowed, laid his hand upon his breast, and spoke the following impromptu:—

"Thus Adam looked when from the garden driven,
And thus disputed orders sent from heaven.
Like him I go, and to go am loth
Like him I go, for angels drove us both.
Hard was his fate, but mine is more unkind—
His Eve went with him, but mine stays behind."

Who would not rather have said anything so charming than have been the author of "Night Thoughts"?

Then there is that compliment of compliments which, familiar though it is, can no more be omitted from such a list than a king from his coronation. "Oh, Mr. Smith," cried a pretty girl in a flower garden, "I shal' never bring that rose to perfection!" "Then,' said Mr. Smith—need we add that his Christian name was Sydney!—taking her by the hand and leading her forward, "permit me to bring perfection to the rose."

BIRTHPLACE OF FEMINISM

A new Babylon ruin, a city known as Burna, and dating back 2,000 years before the Christian era, has been discovered at Kolsa Nyek, Asia Minor The cuneiform inscriptions seem to indicate that it was possibly the birthplace of feminism, for the city was ruled by men and women jointly.

AN ANCIENT NECKLACE

A recent exhibition of ancient necklaces opened in London shows once more that there is nothing new under the sun. There were amber bead neclaces in 900 B.C. You can see one of them at the exhibition, the amber turned to a thick, muddy brown by time. There is a jade necklace which some lucky woman possessed about 200 B. C., and that, too, turned from green to brown with the passage of the centuries.

FASHION FANCIES

Capes and the Separate Coat.

While capes and cape wraps are still in the front rank of fashion, the three-quarter coat, slightly flared, is running a close second in favor. This separate coat appears in convert cloth, serge, and other wool fabrics in a great variety of colors, being most often seen in mauve, yellow, blue, green, brown or black. One delightful model of this type was of black satin lined either with white or a bright color. There is no doubt that these coats will be very much worn at the resorts this summer, and should prove very practical and charming.

Although colors are worn again this season, particularly for evening, black has not been neglected for afternoons Some of Jenny's newest models are fashioned of the finest black rep, trimmed with white pique or with black or bright-colored braid.

The Revival of Tucks.

Tucks as a trimming come into their own every few years—sometimes they are wide and sometimes narrow. This year Molyneux and Madeleine and Madeleine have chosen to bring them back on their summer dresses. A new Molyneux model of white cotton voile is trimmed solely with inserted bands and patches of tucked voile. The simple, straight, tuck-trimmed bodice extends to the hips, and the much-tucked tunic skirts flares over a slightly longer underskirt of plain voile.

Madeleine and Madeleine's new tailored models have bands of tucks set into the jacket, and groups of tucks divide the skirt into narrow panels At this house, as elsewhere, white frocks are shown in profusion, including a full-length coat of white lace.

Indeed, lace in all forms is very smart—red or blue lace, bright green lace, ivory or black lace, white cotton lace, Irish lace, Cluny or Milan. In addition to frocks, we see it in sleeves and corsages above a crepe de Chine or satin skirt of the same shade. A flounced skirt of lace appears on a frock of crepe de Chine, lace capes are worn over frocks of similar lace, and lace is combined with crepe de Chine, georgette, chiffon and all sheer materials.

THE MUSKOKA LAKES.

The Muskoka region of the "Highlands of Ontario" was for centuries the chosen hunting ground of the Hurons. It was the red man who gave the musical name Muskoka (signifying "clear sky") to this land which held supremacy over all others in his affections, and he christened the islands, promontories, massive rocks, lakes and rivers in a manner that showed his appreciation of the beauties of his forest home. No happier appellation than "clear sky" could have been adopted, as the altitude of the region—one thousand feet above sea level—gives splendid atmospheric conditions. Muskoka spreads its manifold charms to blue skies flecked with soft, white clouds. It is a delectable land, brilliant with rich coloring, its air pungent with the fragrance of the pines, its waters cool and clear; moreover, a land of many pleasures offering a wide variety of health-giving, open-air sports and pastimes suited to all ages. There are about 100 hotels in the district that cater to those of modest taste as well as to those who are most fastidious. The Canadian National-Grand Trunk Railways have issued a handsomely illustrated booklet with list of hotels and which can be had free on application to any Grand Trunk Ticket Agent or C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont.

Music and Drama

FAMOUS PLAY "EXPERIENCE" PICTURIZED BY PARAMOUNT

There are few better known plays than "Experience," by George V. Hobart, which was presented in New York in 1914. In George Fitzmaurice's Paramount picturization of this stage success, the story was enlarged and put into scenario form by Waldemar Young. It will be shown as the feature attaction at Griffin's tonight to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday.

As the screen affords greater possibilities for detail in stories than the stage, those who have seen the play will have the added interest of seeing just how the scenario has been handled. One feature which was added, much to its value, is the character of "Gloom," which does not appear in the original play. The part is the antithesis of "Intoxication." Mr. Fitzmaurice decided that "Gloom" would add a modern touch to the allegorical play that was written before the anti-liquor law went into effect.

Another feature of the screen version of "Experience" is the costly array of furs worn by the principal feminine characters of the story, $100,000 worth of fur coats, wraps, stoles and scarfs are used in the picture.

Yvonne Routon, as "Fashion," Nita Naldio as "Passion," Lilyan Tashman as "Pleasure," and Edna Wheaton, who plays "Beauty," appear gorgeously attired in furs that will give those who see the picture a glimpse of the latest styles in fur pieces. In one scene "Pleasure" wears a $3,500 Russian sable stole and in another a $39,000 chinchilla coat. "Passion" appears in an ermine coat valued at $20,000; "Fashion" displays several fur pieces of great value and 'Beauty' is attired in an evening cloak of maner velvet, embroidered in crystal and trimmed with Russian sable.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

As he did so the cab stopped at the curb and the pretty young woman jumped out and followed Mr. Iff across the threshold—noticing him no more than had Mr. Staff, to begin with.

II

THE BANDBOX.

In the playhouses of France, a hammering on the stage alone heralds the rising of the curtain to disclose illusory realms of romance. Precisely so with Mr. Staff, upon the door of whose lodging, at nine o'clock the next morning, a knocking announced the first overt move against his peace of mind.

At that time, Staff, all unconscious of his honourable peril, was standing in the middle of the floor of the inner room (this lodgings comprised two) and likewise in the approximate geographical centre of a chaotic assemblage of assorted wearing apparel and other personal impedimenta.

He was wondering, confusedly, how in thunderation he was to manage to cram all that confounded truck into the limited amount of trunk space at his command. He was also wondering, resentfully in the names of a dozen familiar spirits, where he had put his pipe: it's simply maddening, the way a fellow's pipe will persist in getting lost at such critical times as when he's packing up to catch a train with not a minute to spare. . . . In short, so preoccupied was Staff that the knocking had to be repeated before he became objectively alive to it.

Then, confidentially, he said: "What the devil now?"

In louder tones calculated to convey an impression of intense impatience, he cried: "Come in!"

He heard the outer door open, and immediately, upon an impulse esoteric even in his own understanding, he chose to pretend to be extravagantly busy—as busy as by rights he should have been. For a minute or longer he acted most vividly the part of a man madly bent on catching his train though he were to perish of the attempt. And this despite a suspicion that he played to a limited audience of one, and that one unappreciative of the the finer phases of everyday histrionic impersonation: an audience answering to the name of Milly, whose lowly station of life was that of housemaid-in-lodgings and whose imagination was as ill-nourished and sluggish as might be expected of one whose wages were two-and-six a week.

Remembering this in time, the novelty of make-believe palled on Staff. Not that alone, but he could hear Milly insisting in accents not in the least apologetic: "Beg pardon, sir. . . ."

He paused in well-feigned surprise and looked inquiringly over his shoulder, as though to verify a surmise that somebody had spoken. Such proving to be the case, he turned round to confront Milly—Milly true to type, wearing a grimy matutinal apron, an expression half sleepy, half sullen, and a horrid soot smudge on her ripe, red, right cheek.

In this guise (so sedulously does life itself ape the conventions of its literature and drama) Milly looked as lifelike as though viewed through the illusion of footlights. Otherwise, as Staff never failed to be gratified to observe, she differed radically from the stock article of our stage. For one thing, she refrained from dropping her aitches and stumbling over them on her first entrance in order to win a laugh and so lift her little role from the common rut of "lines" to the dignity of "a bit." For another, she seldom if ever brandished that age-honoured wand of her office, a bedraggled feather-duster. Nor was she by any means in love with the tenant of the first-floor-front.

But though Staff was grateful for Milly because of this strong and unconventional individuality of hers, he wasn't at all pleased to be interrupted, and he made nothing whatever of the ostensible excuse for the interruption; the latter being a very large and brilliantly illuminated bandbox, which Milly was offering him in pantomime.

"It have just come," said Milly calmly, in response to his enquiring stare. "Where would you wish me to put it, sir?"

"Put what?"

Milly gesticulated eloquently with the bandbox.

"That thing?" said Staff with scorn.

"Yessir."

"I don't want you to put it anywhere. Take it away."

"But it's for you, sir."

"Impossible. Some mistake. Please don't bother—just take it away. There's a good girl."

Milly's disdain of this blandishment was plainly visible in the added elevation of her already sufficiently tucked-up nose.

"Beg pardon, sir," she persisted coldly, "but it's got your nime on it, and the boy as left it just now asked if you lived here."

Staff's frown portrayed indignation, incredulity and impatience.

"Mistake, I tell you. I haven't been buying any millinery. Absurd!"

I. E. B.

While in Chicago recently, and during the dinner hour between six and seven, I noticed a quieting of the taxis and on looking out saw a solid mass of human heads across Michigan Boulevard.

Very prominent on a dray was an elk (stuffed) and just behind it a very much alive goat. This is at the corner of Congress and Michigan streets on the lake front. After this had passed the heads stopped and one felt that something was in the air. Quickly, one after another, came revolver shots, and, forgetful of the elk or goat, we came to the conclusion that it was another strike.

I could not see why the people did not move away from the windows, but came to the conclusion that they had grown so used to strikes in Chicago that they stood quietly and looked on. As I had seen my first strike 48 years before, I asked the waiter what they thought they were doing. He said:

"Madam, I don't believe they know themselves; we don't."

Nobody seemed to know what it was. Nobody seemed to use their brains, even I, who had an elk's tooth set in gold in a little box in my bag, never dreamed at the time that it was what they called "Oh, just some pranks of the Elks ,and firing a salute to the encampment some distance away on the lake front."

Some Interesting Facts About Grasses and Cropping.

Sod-Bound Fields and the Remedy —How Pasture Plants Grow—Good Pasturage Cheap Stock Food —Treatment of Beef Calves.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

We frequently hear the word "sod-bound" applied to grass areas, when people are discussing the failure of pastures. The meaning that the word sod-bound is intended to convey is that there are too many plants to each square foot of area. Such condition is rarely true. Pastures seldom fail because of too many plants or over population, but they do fail through the exhaustion of the available plant food supply. The ploughing up of old sod lands, thereby causing the roots and stems to decay, brings about increased available plant food, and this followed by reseeding, while effective, is very expensive. It is cheaper and usually better practice to adopt methods of turf improvement. It takes years to develop a good sod, so why destroy by inverting it with the plough, when surface applications of available plant food will make such profitably productive. To those who may think that the "sod-bound" condition cannot be remedied by any practice other than ploughing and reseeding, I would suggest that they stake off a square rod of dense sod and apply to it either one pound of nitrate of soda or a wheelbarrow load of stable manure. Conviction guaranteed.—L. Stevenson, Secretary Ont. Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

AN AID TO WEARING THIS SEASON'S FASHIONS

(Helps to Beauty)

Here is a simple, unfailing way to rid the skin of objectionable hairs: With some powdered delatone and water make enough paste to cover the hairy surface, apply and in about 2 minutes rub off, wash the skin and every trace of hair has vanished. This is quite harmless, but to avoid disappointment be sure to get the delatone in an original package.

GRAND TRUNKS TIE PETES

Ten-Inning Twilight Battle Called on Account of Darkness

NINTH INNING RALLY

Trunks Make all Their Runs in the Ninth Innings

In one of the hardest fought battles ever staged on the Peterboro baseball park, the Belleville Grand Trunks and the Petes battled away Wednesday evening trying to break a 3-3 deadlock tie, until Umpire Jack Rosevear called the game on account of darkness at the end of the 10th inning.

It was the first twilight game in which the Railroaders participated this season, and the first game to go the extra innings to break a tie.

Apart from the unusual feature of the game going the extra inning in an attempt to break the tie, it was most unusual in other respects.

Belleville, for instance did not get one run until the ninth inning, Peterboro having tallied 1 in the 5th and 2 in the 7th. The score then, stood 3-0 for Petes at the ninth frame, and Heckman and the remainder of the squad went out in the field with a warning from "Jake" Solomon to play as tight as possible, for though it was the supposedly last inning, he feared for the fighting spirit of the Railroaders.

"Peenie" Mills was first man up, and he started the fireworks by busting a 2 bagger out to deep centre field. Harry flied out to Rutherford, and "Cap" Smith batting for Mallen got a lovely single to right garden, Peenie going to 3rd. Heckman then made a wild throw to 1st in an effort to catch Smith leading off, and "Peenie" crossed the home plate for the initial counter. Ross followed with a hit to centre field, and scored Smith. Ross stole second. Casey walked, and J. K. Williams hit a nice pop fly to Soden who muffed, Ross coming in for No. 3, Casey going to 3rd. J. H. Williams flied out to Rutherford, who doubled Casey at third, after he had led off.

The extra inning was then played with no score, and then the game was called. The Trunks were rapidly getting to Heckman, and had the game gone one or two innings more, it is quite likely the Trunks would have forged out in front, as Williams was at the zenith of his form.

Williams twirled the whole game for the Trunks, and Heckman likewise for the Petes, and both pitchers were seen at their best yesterday. Heckman, especially during the early part of the game, was working to perfection, and indeed struck out some of the Trunks heaviest sluggers. Williams never had his curves working so nice before this season either, and after the first inning or two served them over to perfection. Heckman had 13 strike-outs and Williams had 10. Heckman passed 3 men and Williams 5.

Both teams played nifty ball in the field, and apart from the inning in which the Trunks made 3 bad throws owing a great deal to the strong rays of the setting sun, in the eyes of the players who faced it, they played good ball.

As for hitting, while the Trunks were not so formidable in the earlier stages, they came back strong in the dying stages, and everybody could hit it on the nose.

The Trunks had a swell chance to score in the 4th inning when Harry Mills pounded out a 3 bagger. Both Mallen and Ross who followed him however, failed to connect.

"Peenie" whipped the ball to third, but it was a low throw and went through. Immediately Swanston saw this opportunity, though he had not yet reached first, he cut across and beat it for second. Johnston scored, but umpire Rosevear called Swanston out for cutting first base, and would not allow the run to count.

Rutherford made a dash for second, and Harry Mills on getting the ball, shot it down, but it hit the runner and went pass Meagher. Mallen got it and whipped it at J. K. Williams. Williams flied out to Rutherford, who threw to 3rd and caught Casey at 3rd, making a double play and retiring the side.

TIGER TIRES WIN EXCITING GAME

Ten Innings Were Necessary to Decide the Game

Baseball fans of this city who wended their way to the Agricultural Park on Wednesday afternoon witnessed a rather thrilling Trent Valley League game staged between the Tiger Tire team of this city and the Madoc team. The game was thrilling, especially in the eighth inning. In the early part of the game the visiting team had a decided lead, the score at the end of the seventh inning being 6 to 2 in their favor. In the eighth inning the Tiger Tires found Watson, the Madoc pitcher, and secured a few hits. These, with some errors made by the Madoc players, were responsible for four runs, which tied the score. In the ninth inning the Tiger Tires won out, Smith coming across with a hit after two were out. It was a rather exciting game, especially towards the close. At times both teams played well. DIAMOND DUST

It was a lovely game to watch, and every one was satisfied that they got their money's worth.

There certainly was some crowd out for the game at that, and everybody seemed to be saying something, judging by the noise.

Crook did not accompany the team to Peterborough yesterday, Meagher replacing him at 2nd, and Mallen replacing Meagher at left garden.

Although Jack Williams did not have as many strikeouts yesterday as he had against Leaside or Bowmanville, yet he pitched the best variety of ball yesterday that he ever pitched in this league.

Al Heckman, Peterborough's blond heaver was also working very nice, and kept the boys guessing at times.

"Jakie" Solomon was as usual trying to stop the game occasionally alleging that Williams was balking, when with a runner at first, he shrugged his left shoulder at the runner as a final warning to stay right on 1st. sack; before he delivered the ball to the batter. Rosevear refused to give Jake a hearing however, who felt that no runner could ever steal second if a pitcher were allowed to do this thing.

You know that "Jakie" is a wonderful actress. The way he runs out to the umpire, and embraces him is heart rending. A stranger would almost think he were attempting to kiss Jack Rosevear. After he has his say, he is gently shoved off the diamond by the umps.

It's a wonder that Jake does not weary of having been so often shoved over into the coacher's box by those umpire persons.

Johnston also had to be reminded by Rosevear that if he would not be more careful with the English language when discussing a strike, which he thought was a ball, that an officer would escort him off the park altogether.

Belleville and Peterborough always did make an interesting argument when it came to baseball, and Wednesday's game was a glaring example of their record.

Bowmanville will be here on Wed nesday next for the final game of th 1st. schedule.

UNSETTLED WEATHER HARD ON CLOVER HAY

Farmers Experience Diffi culty in Curing and Saving Clover Crop

Fine weather which we have no been experiencing for the past tw days, will be very welcome to the farmers no doubt. There has been a heav crop of clover hay, alfafa, and swee clover this year, and a large acreag through this district, especially we of Belleville. Unfortunately howeve the unsettled weather came just a the haying was in full swing, with th result that many fields of good ha were partially and in some cases almo totally spoiled.

One farmer between Belleville an Trenton, evidently had a bee on ye terday, for no less than four team were drawing the hay off the larg field, and dumping it in piles in tw corners of the field, where in all probability a match will be touched to it. It was badly discolored, no doub musty and of no use to fodder, eve for cattle owing to the incessa rains.

Other farmers were busily engaged in turning out the coils of hay, that the sun's rays might dry it ou and others were cutting clover. Th most of the clover is cut, however, an timothy hay is now almost ready.

In some of the alfafa fields the s cond crop is up about 4 or 6 inche around the discolored coils, which ar yet in the field. Other fields are spotted, the clover having killed out unde neath the coils.

CALLED BY DEATH

SARAH ANN OSTROM

On Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Sarah Ann Ostrom who has been unwell for some time was the victim of a stroke which she sustained whilst sitting upon the verandah at the home of her son, Ald. G. F. Ostrom, Cedar street, city. The stroke proved fatal as the victim expired shortly after. Mrs. Ostrom was the widow of the late Mr. Joseph K. H. Ostrom and in the year 1845 was born at Kingston, being a daughter of the late Mrs. Mathias Duke. For a number of years the deceased resided at Rednersville, Prince Edward County, but of late years had made her home with her son, Ald. Ostrom of this city. Deceased was a lady who was much esteemed by a large circle of relatives and friends. She had been a life long member of the Methodist church and for a number of years took deep interest in church work. She was a lady whom to know was to admire and her demise will be sincerely regretted by many. Her husband predeceased her some years ago. A family of two sons and three daughters survive. The sons are Ald. G. F. Ostrom of this city, and Walter K., of Rednersville, P. E. County. The daughters are Mrs. Anson Young, Mrs. Murchison McLaughlin and Mrs. Fred Leonard, all of Montreal. To those called upon to mourn the loss of a devoted and loving mother will be extended the heartfelt sympathy of numerous friends.

SARAH KISER

At an early hour this Thursday morning Mrs. Sarah Kelly, wife of the late Mr. Charles Kiser, passed away at the family residence, 13 Bay street city. Deceased was 78 years of age and had resided here for some time. Her husband predeceased her some time ago. Three sons survive also five daughters. The sons are Charles, of Belleville, George, of Rochester and William, of Oshawa. The daughters are Mrs. A. Balcom, of Williamsburg, N. Y., Mrs. J. Bowler, of Oshawa, Mrs. Thos. Carter, Mrs. W. Stapley and Mrs. B. Simpson, of Belleville. Two sisters, Mrs. E. Hutchison and Mrs. H. Thomp- live in Belleville. Deceased was a Methodist in religion.

ELLEN GAY

Mrs. Ellen Grant, wife of Mr. G. A. B. Gay, of the 2nd Concession of Sidney Township died yesterday at the Belleville hospital. Deceased who was 47 years of age was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grant and was born in P. E. County. She had resided in this locality for some time. Mrs. Gay was a member of Holloway street Methodist Church and a lady much respected. In addition to the husband, one son and four daughters survive. The son Austin lives at home and the daughters are Mrs. E. Cummings, of Lacombe, Alta., Mrs. C. McMullen, of Sidney, Grace and Irene at home. Two brothers, Sandy and F. J. Grant reside in Chicago.

Stop Scalp Itch With Parisian Sage

Thousands of men and women use Parisian Sage because it so quickly stops itching scalp.

Besides speedily ridding the head of every particle of dandruff this delightful invigorator keeps the hair from coming out and gives it a beautiful lustre and softness that compels admiration. That's why McKeown's Drug Store and all good druggists sell so much of it and guarantee it. Parisian Sage does not change the natural color of the hair.

Fishermen's Picnic

rivers with fish. The fish is of a superior quality and is in great demand. There are 85,000 engaged in the fishing industry. He hoped this would be an annual event where all could mingle together for a good and profitable time.

Mr. R. A. Norman, ex-M.P.P., of Picton, referred to the fishing industry in a general way. In 1920 the revenue taken from the fishermen was $470,000 in Ontario. This shows what the total revenue must have been. It costs $240,000 to administer the law. The fishermen were a noble band, and he would advise them to vote for themselves. From the Bay of Quinte in 1903 $240,000 in money was realized for fish taken out.

Mr. A. E. Calnan, of Picton, spoke briefly stating that he was always pleased to speak to sea-faring men, as the navy was the back bone of the success of the British Empire. Mr. Calnan spoke of the fishing industry in British Columbia and a great problem there was owing to different nationalities. He hoped the fishermen every success.

Col. E. D. O'Flynn spoke in favor of pound nets being allowed to local fishermen who could collect the spawn themselves. In regard to the confiscation of net from which tags are lost the fishermen should be protected and he would favor a finer mesh net for coarser fish. He could not understand why the Bay of Quinte west of the bay bridge was closed to the fishermen. It should be opened the same as it is east of the bridge. In closing the speaker said that if a Liberal Government was elected in Ontario it would look after the fishermen's interests.

Mr. H. S. Colliver, of Picton, spoke a few words in reference to the fishermen being protected by the Governments in every way possible. He stated that Hon. N. Parliament speaker of the Legislature had done much for the fishermen.

Hon. Speaker.

Hon. N. Parliament, speaker of the Legislature and the representative from Prince Edward County, referred to the pleasure it was for him to address the fishermen, not as a politician but as one who was desirous that they should get a square deal. He did not think that the fishery department of the Government should be for the purpose of revenue producing. The license to fishermen should be reduced rather than increased. The fish overseers should see that the law is observed and should work in harmony with the fishermen. The fishermen should make their wants known and go to the government in person if there was any trouble. A minister of the Government gets his advice from inspectors and sometimes that advice is given for a political purpose. The fishermen should, however not ask for anything that is unreasonable. It was not a pleasant thing for any representative to know that there was any trouble amongst his constituents. The Hon. speaker referred to pound nets and would favor their use. We have started something and the prospects were that the whole Bay of Quinte will be opened up to the fishermen, and the close season say from the 25th of October to the 25th of November. He was willing to help the fishermen all he could. Since the closing of Legislature he had visited Ottawa with others and there was every prospect that the Dominion Government would ask the Provincial Governments to take charge of all the fish hatcheries in the country. The small mesh nets would not be seized and fishermen can continue to use them just the same. In concluding his remarks the Hon. speaker said that there was unrest in the country at the present time and that the milk of human kindness is not flowing through our veins as it should flow. Let us all work together and not be distrustful of each other. Trust your fellow men and if this was done among the fishermen their industry would prove even more prosperous. Do not let the politician stand up for your interest but stand up for it yourself.

This concluded the speech making and the cup won in the motor boat races were presented to the successful competitors by Hon. N. Parliament.

Notes.

The Sills orchestra was upon the park and furnished an excellent programme of music which was thoroughly enjoyed.

Many from the adjoining county of Prince Edward were present upon the park as were members of the union from various points along the bay and lake front.

Everything passed off in a most harmonious manner, nothing occurring to mar the pleasing proceedings.

Mr. Cousins, the genial secretary of the Union, was on hand to offer any suggestions and impart any information that was required.

told. No aristocratic descendancy counts in this respect but we may become aristocrats of the divine spirit. The pious-appearing Pharisees had their only reward in the applaudits of the day. Genuine service is coupled with a willingness to deny self and to sacrifice.

Heroic Obligations

Heroic obligations are involved. It is an old saying that 'tis better to wear out than rust away. Labor circles have problems regarding restrictive output and it would appear many churches are so afflicted. We can best extend the kingdom of God through the medium of the church. As an aftermath of the great war a cynical regard is displayed by some toward the church. Rather loyalty is due and demanded in finding out our profession. Each member of an orchestra co-operates in producing great effects, some individuals have only a special part to perform with quality and distinction.

Rev. Wallace pleaded that the same devotion if not more, be rendered to church enterprise as is given to fraternal orders and other modern community endeavors.

REGULAR DAILY ROUTINE

Besides the early morning prayer group for men, there are three groups arranged for ladies, devotions led by qualified directors.

Intelligent interest is taken in the forenoon mission study classes, that of China conducted by Rev. Sparling, missionary on furlough is curiously the largest.

Again the informal games out on the College lawn served as happy respite for the keen minds of students and teachers.

Teacher Training

Several students have expressed a desire to write upon examinations in the Teacher Training Courses.

Yesterday after dinner a local photographer took a snap shot of the summer school staff and pupils.

LITTLE GIRL KILLED UNDER STONE WAGON

Elmvale, July 5.—Margaret Isabel Anderson, a little girl of six years of age, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Anderson, died yesterday morning as the result of injuries received when the wheel of a wagon loaded with stones passed over her head.

The little girl, who was an exceptionally bright and attractive child and a great favorite in the whole district, had gone to the field with her brother John and the hired man who were gathering stones. How the little girl got underneath the wagon is not known.

FORMER JANITOR RISES IN WORLD

New York, July 5.—Ignatius Perlah is a man of remarkable business acumen. Two years ago he was janitor of the five-story apartment house at 105 East 96th. street. He lived in the basement of the place, and was paid $20 a week salary. His rent was free.

To-day it was learned that I. Perlah now owns the property unencumbered. It was not through ardor as a janitor or by thrift in saving his wages that he prospered, for prohibition agents charge he waxed wealthy by conducting a very modern still in the basement where he once lived.

As the moonshining outlook brightened, says the prohibition agents, Perlah had to move to make room for his distilling apparatus. And so he just bought the whole place and moved into the finest apartment in the house and rented the others.

The basement was divided into two departments. In one were two five-gallon stills, in another a complete bottling and labelling room, equipped with the latest bottling appliances.

In the stock room the agents seized 146 gallons of finished whiskey, most of it in 15 and 20-gallon kegs. They also took the stills, bottling equipment and labels. A summons was left for Perlah, who was said to be on a motoring trip to Atlantic City over the holiday.

Is Now a Healthy Bo

"From a puny, delicate child, my little Johnny has become a strong sturdy boy."

One mother writes:—"If you ha seen my little Johnny four months ag and you were to see him to-day, yo would never believe that he is the sam boy. Then he weighed only 49 pounds To-day he weighs 90 pounds, almost double what he weighed four month ago. His trouble first started with cold, which we never noticed becaus he was strong and like all boys of hi age occasionally caught cold. After while we began to notice that his cough instead of getting better, was getting worse, that he was looking pale and losing weight. He seemed to be tired all the time, had no energy to do any thing. Before he caught this cold h had no trouble with his lessons and remained at the head of his class withou much study. But we began to notice change. He didn't seem to care whethe he knew his lessons or not and nothing seemed to interest him. He coughed so much and so hard at times that hi face would become purple and we though he would surely burst a blood vessel. Medicines and cough mixtures didn' do him any good. Finally, in desperation and as a last resort, we tried Carnol. In a short time his cough had almos disappeared. His appetite was returning and he was beginning to take interest in his studies. And, thanks t Carnol, he has become as strong an healthy as he has ever been."

WOMEN'S VOTE IS WATCHE

Exclusion of Peeresses fro Lords May Affect Coalition Government

London, July 5.—Coalition me bers of Parliament are manifest alarm as to what effect the refusa allow peeresses to sit in the Ho of Lords may have on the votes women at the next general electi Should women in any large numb vote against the governmental didates it is certain that many them would be defeated, and prob ly Premier Lloyd George would longer be able to command a ma ity in parliament. Therefore they anxious that the government be saddled with responsibility for a cision which was made by the Lo themselves and in which the gove ment was not openly involved.

Viscountess Rhondda and lea of the women's movement gener are determined that the governm shall be saddled with the respo bility which belongs to it and be allowed to shirk it if they help it.

Lady Rhondda herself says the decision to exclude peere from the upper chamber was virtu that of the government and no the House of Lords. She points that the original House of L Committee on privileges decided seven to one in favor of the righ peeresses to vote in the Ho Ordinarily such a decision, suppo by such a majority, would have adopted by the Lords without tion. But the Lord Chancellor, Pirkenhead, a member of the Cab intervened with an amendment re ring the matter back to the C mittee for reconsideration. And consideration by a committee w in the interval had been strengthe by lords of Lord Birkenhead's way of thinking, resulted in rever the seven to one decision. The C mittee decided 20 votes to four peeresses should not sit and vot the House of Lords.

"It seems pretty certain," Lady Rhondda, "that had it not for the Lord Chancellor wo otherwise qualified would not be cluded from the House of Lords the ground of sex."

The Sex Disqualification rem act starts with the opening gene zation. A person shall not be qualified by sex or marriage from exercise of any public function" was loudly acclaimed as wom new charter of liberty. But the which purports to give equal op tunities for men and women, Rhondda points out, has availed men nothing when challen Women in the civil service have refused the same rights as Women doctors in the employ of cipalities have been deprived of positions when they married, though the act specifically stated marriage should no longer be a to public service.

The government has made thousands of enemies, Lady Rho says, by its failure to support its act. "The question today is," Lady Rhondda, "does the Sex qualification Removal Act mean it appears to mean, or was it si a clever fraud perpetrated on a tion of the community new to cal dodges by an unscrupulous ernment.

STOCKING LAKES WITH BASS FRY

Hon. Nelson Parliament, Speaker, M.P.P. for Prince Edward County, today, in company with an official from the Brantford hatchery, visited East and West lakes in Prince Edward County and deposited 10,000 bass fry in each lake. Last year the four lakes in the county, namely, Roblin's, Consecon, East and West, were each stocked with 50,000 pickerel fry, and the former two lakes with 10,000 bass fry.

ARCHITECTURE.

Canada Is Conservative But Americans Want New Types.

Copy cat! Copy cat! You have heard the children shout in derision at the little wretch who has stolen the big idea from a class-mate.

It is the same with musicians and artists as with school children. Of all copy cats a nation of copy cats is the worst. Americans have reached the point of development where they are hurling this charge at themselves—"Copy cats!"

Is it true? The Christian Century of Chicago thinks it is horribly true in architecture, particularly in the building of Gothic churches on this continent. "Grotesque sacrilege" is the gentle term it flings at the building of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York. "Copy cats!" That is what it means to call the Wall Street multimillionaires, who are paying for that enormous structure.

"A blundering copy of monuments from a sincerer age, imposed on our civilization by an inconsequential minority of ecclesiastics and artisans, in whom neither religion nor art runs deep enough to express the aspirations and realities of their age." So says the Christian Century concerning the New York Cathedral. How Bishop Manning, Financier Morgan and Architect Cram must blush! But not so Bertram G. Goodhue, designer of the Nebraska Capitol, Cram's former partner, who is putting on the flat prairie around Lincoln, a strange structure which shall be visible for forty miles away; not so Jacobs of New York, who combines his town residence, architect's offices and tenants' flats in one narrow frontage on a crowded street.

Perhaps Yale University will have to plead guilty to the charge of imitation and plagiarism, for the Harkness tower is nothing if not Gothic. All orthodox persons will defend Yale and sneer at Nebraska. A few exuberant spirits will rejoice that ground was broken at Lincoln for the greatest experiment ever undertaken to create an American style of architecture.

The new state capitol of Nebraska is a war memorial and skyscraper, combined with legislative, judicial and executive buildings. On the ground floor in the great quadrangles are the wonderfully-lit offices for the civil servants. The roofs of the legislative chambers, library and supreme court room just peep above the office portion. Elevators run up the tower, which is eighty feet square, broad enough to contain offices on every side. Just beneath the roof is the museum of war relics. A gigantic figure, the Sower, overtops all.

The architect Goodhue boasts that no known style of building has been followed. The tower is concrete, steel and glass. The offices are actually business offices. Tradition, which demands that all American capitols shall have domes, is rudely shattered. Won't Nebraskans shout "Copy cat" if anyone dares to follow their precedent!

But will anyone follow? England is building war memorials which fit into her landscapes as snugly as if centuries old.

Canada is building cathedrals which glory in the Gothic tradition. The Toronto and Halifax Cathedrals are but examples of the tendency in the Dominion, among Anglicans and non-Anglicans alike, toward the reproduction and development of mediaeval Gothic. This country is British enough to abhor non-Christian styles in churches and new-fangled styles in other public buildings.

There is, however, a marked tendency since the war toward radical departures in the United States. Whether the aspiring arches of Yale or the concrete towers of Nebraska are the "grotesque sacrilege" of this age, is a question which must be left to the reader. Meanwhile, Nebraska is spending five millions on "an elevated building which could be at once an object of beauty and a source of inspiration, with a tower eighty feet square, and terminating in a graceful dome of colored or gilt tile."

Whatever else may be said about the capital and capitol that have been named after Lincoln, it cannot be said that they are conservative. If the architect has imitated, no layman will be able to excuse him of such a merit or demerit, for nothing quite like the proposed building has been found either in the Aztec ruins, or in Pompeii, or Babylon.

And the capitol is an office building. Many builders of public buildings have threatened to make them office buildings. None have succeeded; witness the Toronto City Hall. Nebraska's elevators are the hall mark of its utilitarianism.

As a war memorial this is a good office building. To tuck a war museum up under the roof of the dome is not to make a war memorial.

Contrasted Names.

Because most all of the noted successful leaders had names containing, at the very most, only eight letters, "Brevity" is the latest answer to the mooted question, "Who won the war?" On the successful side are placed the names of Foch, Haig, Diaz, French, Byng, and Joffre. On the defeated side are placed such names as Von Hindenburg, Von Ludendorf and Prince Rupprecht.

The Wrong Occupation.

"You discharged your assistant?" "Yes," said the magician. "He never had anything when I wanted it. If I started to manipulate a bowl of goldfish, he'd hand me a net to catch invisible pigeons out of the air. When I announced that I would do a few card tricks, he'd saunter up with a billiard cue. If I'd known he'd been a plumber's' helper, I never would have hired him."

A Business Suggestion.

Traveler: "Last week I sent a wire from London to Wilson & Co. of this town."

Telegraph Clerk: "Yes, sir—what about it "

Traveler: "Well, if you know where to find it, I'll take it round to them myself."

Ma'am.

The Victorian term "Ma'am" is still in vogue in royal circles, and in future it is by this her acquaintances and less intimate friends will address Princess Mary. The majority of royal English ladies are so styled.

HOW THE PACIFIC COAST PROVINCE GOT ITS NAME.

Queen Victoria Suggested an Appropriate Description For the Country—Some Memories of Kamloops and Other Spots That Possess Historic Interest.

One cannot take even a short trip in British Columbia without coming upon historic ground. The name "British Columbia" is supposed by most people to have been given to this region by the inhabitants at an earlier date.

In reality the appellation was bestowed upon this outpost of empire by Queen Victoria of immortal memory. Bulwer Lytton, the famous author and publicist, had much to do with the formative period of this western coast country, and it was in official correspondence with him, as a member of her Government, that the Queen expressed her wishes in the matter of a name for the country.

Queen Victoria then wrote that the only name that seemed to be on all the maps she had consulted was Columbia. But as there was a Columbia in South America and as the people of the United States, in their poetic moods, called their land Columbia, the only course that remained was to place a prefix which would denote the allegiance of the country, and so the Queen suggested the name of British Columbia.

And British Columbia the province remains to this day, frankly and proudly British, as evidenced by the fact that no part of the empire, in proportion, gave more lavishly in men and money to help "the old sea mother" when she called on her overseas children for assistance in the recent great war.

Thus there is much interest attached to the name of this province. It was, as recorded, given by the good Queen whose long reign brought such great lustre on the empire that it will always be known in history as the Victorian Age—famous in literature, art, science and religion. And no one encouraged these great elements by which empires live so much as the illustrious woman who held her throne secure, "broad-based upon her people's will and compassed by the inviolate sea."

When we visit the different places in British Columbia we come in contact with ground where adventurous feet trod in long years gone by. There, for instance, is Kamloops itself. Around it we have suggestions of the name and fame of David Thompson, who built a trading post or fort in the locality as far back as 1810.

The well-known river was called after Thompson by that other great explorer, Simon Fraser, who came to the coast by the great stream which bears his name. Kamloops was always a point of importance, being the centre of the Thompson trading district, the rendezvous and place of transfer for the annual brigades passing north and south to and from Fort Vancouver on the Columbia river and, later on, the trading point that connected the interior with Fort Langley, which was founded on the Fraser river in 1837.

Back in my boyhood I knew a man in the Red River country, a school teacher and later a member of the Legislature. He rejoiced in bearing the name Alexander Kamloops Black, and was a man of massive mould as well as strong mental power. He bore the name he did because he was born in Kamloops in the days when his father, Samuel Black, a grim sturdy and devoted Scot, was in charge of that mountain post for the Hudson Bay Company.

Samuel Black, who was in charge at Kamloops, was—like most Hudson Bay men—intensely devoted and loyal to that great fur-trading organization. And like all Hudson Bay men also, he was the soul of hospitality, delighting to entertain all who came his way. One night Black had as his guest a brother Scot in the person of David Douglas, the botanist, after whom our most famous tree, the Douglas fir, is named. There is a story that the guest rather forgot himself and made some disparaging remark about Hudson Bay men in general. Black promptly challenged the scientist to fight a duel. Douglas suggested that it be postponed till the morning. At the hour indicated Black tapped at the parchment window where the botanist was supposed to be in the guest room and called on him to come out and take back what he said or fight. Douglas, however, was not there. He had wisely concluded that be could serve his country better by botanizing than by running risks in a personal encounter with the grim Hudson Bay factory.

It is gratifying to find parts of the old Hudson Bay quarters still in Kamloops. The citizens ought to restore these in some degree and keep the place as a small but historic park before modern goths and vandals turn it into ordinary commercial use.

Tranquille, B.C., is called after a famous Indian chief of the locality some eighty years or so ago. The name calls up the tragedy of Samuel Black's death. Tranquille, the chief, had died after a brief illness, and his nephew, a young Indian blood, got into his head that Samuel Black had "charmed away" the life of his uncle. So, this young blood, with the Indian passion for revenge burning hot within him, went armed to the fort and assassinated the old Hudson Bay man.

Those were stirring days. But every generation has its own part to play upon the world's stage. Thus we all can influence the times in which we live and rejoice in the thought that our efforts will bear fruit in generations to come.—Rev. R. G. MacBeth, in the Beaver.

Banknotes were originally called goldsmiths' notes because the bankers were all goldsmiths.

Mrs. A. E. Hutchison, of Montreal, is the proud possessor of a scrap of Princess Mary's wedding cake. The souvenir was sent to her by her brother, an officer in the 1st Royal Scots, of which regiment Princess Mary is the honorary colonel-in-chief.

MOULT INQUEST OPENS--BARRIE AT THE POLICE COURT

What Happened Before Moult Met His Death

Inquest Opened and Adjourned — Widow Tells Story of How She Missed Her Husband and His Relations With Maurice Barrie — Strange Movements of Accused Before and After Moult's Disappearance.

WITNESS ON STAND FOR TWO HOURS

The Court House was crowded to the doors last night long before the inquest into the death of the late George Wesley Moult, farmer of 7th concession Tyendinaga township, who was found dead, was commenced at 8 p.m.

Dr. W. W. Boyce, of this city, Coroner for the County of Hastings, presided, and the inquest was conducted by Mr. Wm. Carnew, K. C., County Crown Attorney.

Messrs. J. E. Butler and Chas. Payne, of the legal firm of Porter, Butler & Payne, were present in the interests of the young man, Maurice Barrie or Pearson, who stands charged with murder at the present time. Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., solicitor for the estate of the deceased, was also present in the interests of the widow, Mrs. Lilly Mae Moult.

Inspector Frank Naphan, who has charge of the case, and County Constable Soules were also present, as well as four constables of the Ontario Provincial Police and Inspector J. Adams, of the Provincial Police, one of whom was the first witness examined.

On Stand For Two Hours.

Mrs. Lilly Mae Moult, the widow, was the chief witness, being on the stand over two hours, and then had only given about half of her evidence.

Mr. J. Tinney, of Trenton, is the official court stenographer.

Inquest Adjourned.

The inquest was adjourned owing to the fact that it would be impossible to conclude the evidence last night. Mr. Carnew pointed out that the important portion of Mrs. Moult's evidence had not yet been given and it would cause her considerable nervousness, especially after she had already been on the stand for over 2 hours, and he wished her to be fresh and at her best when giving it. The inquest will be resumed on Monday morning(July 10th) at 9 a. m. when it will be resumed in the court house room of the county building.

Widow a Brick.

Mrs. Moult sat in a chair while giving her evidence, attired in mourning. Only twice during the 2 hours on the stand did she show signs of breaking down, and both occasions were momentary. She gave her evidence very clearly and proved an ideal witness. Indeed, when it was suggested that the inquest be adjourned she exclaimed, "I'm perfectly willing to go ahead and finish it out, its the only satisfaction I will have now."

More than a dozen witnesses have yet to be heard, two or three of whom have

350 LIVES IN DANGER

Passengers of New York Express Trample Down Each Other in Panic

New York, July 6.—Fire, smoke, carbon monoxide gas and panic imperilled the lives of more than 350 men and women trapped in a short-circuited Interborough subway express train, 50 feet below the surface of Lexington avenue, at east 59th street, shortly after 11 o'clock to-day, and 125 passengers were overcome by the choking gas and smoke, with several burned or injured by falls or trampling, and three firemen hurt in effecting rescues.

Eighty-seven persons were attended in Bellevue, Flower and other hospitals in the central section of the city for partial asphyxiation. Of that number 57 were able to go to their homes after being treated, but the condition of thirty was so serious that they had to remain at the hospitals.

Was Ten-car Train.

The comfortably filled ten-car train, bound uptown, had just left Grand Central Station, when passengers and guards smelled smoke. The train's next stop would have been Eighty-sixth street. It dashed down to the lower level of the subway tunnel at terrific speed. Just before it reached Fifty-ninth street, where there is a local station, and the express tracks are depressed ten feet below the level of the local track there was a flash of fire and a loud detonation.

Clouds of smoke rolled up from burning insulation as the train came to a stop in darkness broken only by small storage battery lights at either end of each car. Guards played the chemicals from small emergency hand extinguishers on insulation ablaze beneath the three forward cars and one fire in the emeggency motorman's switch box in the front of the third car.

Albert College Summer School

Wednesday Evening's Gathering.

Following the usual afternoon of Rest, Recreation and Sports enhanced by team games, the school assembled at 7 p.m. for a Twilight Talk by Rev. Geo. Brown. The delegates were pleased with the treat of a local speaker who in his own pithy manner dealt with the timely subject of Sabbath observance.

The main features gathered from his remarks were that Religion and the Sabbath went hand in hand. Without one the other would not amount to much even if the day is to be curtailed for worship. Voltaire admitted that much depended upon the "sacred observance of Sunday." It was instituted at Creation as a Divine law and re-affirmed at Sinai. Just as the rainbow was given as a sign of the covenant between God and His people, so the new Sabbath today commemorates not only the Creation but also the Resurrection of Christ and the institution of the Christian religion.

Jesus denounced the Pharisaical treatment of their Sunday. Aside from remembering the Sabbath to keep it holy,- not as a holiday-because of Divine command we should consider that such was not arbitrariness on the part of God. Rather look upon it from the standpoint of man's need in which God is chiefly interested. The Sabbath is a physical advantage and necessity. Medical, economic and business investigations under governmental support prove this. Intelligent beings, dumb animals and dead machinery require rest.

Before the days of transcontinental railways, Western drovers found that animals on trek to the sea board made better time when resting on the Sabbath. The Jews claimed that faithful observance of the seventh day added 10 years to the average life. An idle Sunday left room to be occupied with evil tendencies. The pleasure of a few and wealthy folk entailed labor and deprivation of the many. Wilbur F. Crafts defines true statecraft as liberty under authority. While certain regulations are the law of any country, it is impertinence to disregard conformance to law.

Immigrants particularly needed time for moral culture. The dykes stemming the tide of desecration of the Sabbath were the statutes secured by pioneer effort, the arousing of a

MAURICE BARRIE IN POLICE COURT

Prisoner Calm and Collected—Preliminary Hearing Adjourned

SMILES AT OFFICERS

Crowds Assemble at the Police Station

Maurice Barrie, charged with murder in connection with the death of George Wesley Moult, farmer of 7th concession of Tyendinaga Township, June 30th; appeared in police court here this morning before Police Magistrate H. H. Bedford of Deseronto, under whose jurisdiction the preliminary hearing was held.

Owing to the fact that the inquest was not finished last night, Crown Attorney Carnew asked that the preliminary trial be laid over, as the witnesses at the inquest were also to be witnesses at the preliminary hearing. The hearing was therefore adjurned until Saturday morning, July 15th at 10 a.m. in the Police Court room in this city.

Accused was Present

Maurice Barrie, the accused was, present in court this morning, sitting between Provincial officers Hughes and Davis. He seemed quite collected and calm, and very alert, his bright, brown eyes being constantly changing their gaze, as Magistrate, Crown Attorney, or other officers spoke and moved about the court room. He smiled once or twice as he spoke to one of the officers.

Barrie is rather a good-looking boy, tall and slim, with long, straight, black hair combed straight back. He has a dark complexion, and his hands appear as though he had worked hard at farm labours.

He was dressed in a black smock, military riding breeches, puttees and low shoes. He held a military forage cap in his hand.

After the adjournment of the hearing, Inspector F. Naphan had a conversation with the prisoner, and Mr. Chas Payne of the legal firm of Porter Butler & Payne was also in the room for a short time. Mr. G. E. Butler was also present until the adjournment.

A large number of citizens congregated in front of the Police Station, eagerly awaiting the time when officers would take Barrie out to the car, and thence back to the county jail.

A few minutes after 12 o'clock he was taken out, where he posed an instant for a Toronto nespaperman, who took a photograph of him as he stood between the Provincial constables.

He was then driven back to the County jail.

HOBOES' UNION FOR CANADA

President of Migratory Workers Says the Hikers are "Wonderful"

WOMEN HOBOES ALSO

Toronto, July 7.—With his secretary, Miss Neal Kellogg, of Los Angeles, Cal., who is also connected with the Casual and Migratory Workers' Union, generally known colloquially as the Hobo's Union, and Miss Inez E. Newton, of Oklahoma City, a delegate from the Oklahoma City local of the union to the recent convention in Buffalo, Dr. James Eads How, millionaire hobo and graduate of Harvard University, paid a visit to Toronto yesterday. Dr. How is President of the union.

His purpose in visiting the city was to discuss the organization in Canada of Casual and Migratory Workers with Secretary James Bramhill, of the Employment Council of the District Trades and Labor Council. He met Mr. Bramhill and extended to him the best wishes of the international union, hoping at the same time a local would be established in Toronto which would have its representatives at a convention to be held in Pittsburg in October.

"Wonderful!" said Dr. How when he was informed of the details of the march of "General" Frank Riley and his army upon Ottawa. "This is what we need in our country. I understand they are leaving again for the Capital of Canada tomorrow. It is unfortunate that I cannot stay over."

ALL SPEEDERS BEWARE!

Inspector Adams Issues Warning to Motorists on Highway

Inspector J. Adams of the Provincial Police here, informed The Intelligencer this morning, that drastic action would immediately be taken, in an effort to put a stop to the altogether too prevalent practice of speeding on the Provincial highways here.

"I always did believe it was better to prevent crime than to punish crime", said the Inspector, "and I would like the press to issue a warning, so that everyone will be given a chance to get over their speed ideas, before the officers begin their drive." The Provincial officers will look after this department from now on.

"There are two very good reasons for asking anyone to drive a motor vehicle at a moderate rate of speed", said the Inspector. First: The safety of the people on the highway should receive first consideration, and, secondly, when a motor car is tearing down the road at break neck speed, it is swerving to and fro, and scooping the gravel off the road, with the result that the road will wear out much more rapidly.

"The speed limit on the highway is 25 miles an hour, and unless in special cases of sickness or police duties, is plenty fast enough for anyone to travel.

"Let this be a fair warning then, and may a word to the wise be sufficient," said the Inspector.

NO RECEPTION FOR THE HIKERS

Mayors of Cities on Route of March to Ottawa Are "Fed Up"—No More Pork and Beans

In view of there being another hike to Ottawa of unemployed veterans residing in Toronto and other western cities, Mayor Hanna of this city addressed a communication to several Mayors along the proposed route of march relative to what action would be taken by the municipalities to care for the hikers. Several replies have been received and all are in effect that the municipalities will not assist the men in any way as their action is not approved of.

The Mayor of Brockville in his reply stated that if the municipalities would unite in refusing aid of any description the pilgrimage would no doubt be abandoned. The mayor of Kingston's reply was to the effect that the hikers could not expect to be welcomed in that city. Mayor Maker of Cobourg stated that the residents of that town had been "fed-up on this stuff" and would not welcome the hikers. Mayor Graham of Napanee stated that no aid would be given to the hikers in that town. Mayor Rosnigh of Trenton stated that their reception in that town would be a cold one.

COMMISSIONER OF PROVINCIAL POLICE WILL VISIT BELLEVILLE THIS MONTH

Major-General Victor A. S. Williams, V.C., Commissioner of Ontario Provincial Police, will visit Belleville some day during the present month. Inspector J. Adams of the local detachment of Provincial officers, informed The Intelligencer of this effect today. The General will send word of his visit ten days ahead of his arrival.

SOLDIERS' HOMES ARE IN FLAMES

Fire Raging in Soldier Settlement on Vancouver Island—Two Dead

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Merville, Vancouver Island, July 7—Two dead, several missing and ten houses destroyed, is early toll in casualties in the fire which descended on the soldier settlement here last night.

A check of the casualties could not be made until daylight this morning. Citizens of Courtney, nine miles away are fighting the flames with the soldier settlers.

Mereville, Vancouver Island.—(later)—A change in the wind brought into settlement the fire which has been raging in the bush for two weeks. Jack Clifford 16, and Ernest Layland 12, are two victims of the fire.

GHOSTS DID NOT MATERIALIZE

Report of Tests of Seances Denies That Materialization Took Place

Paris, July 7.—Experiments in metaphysics by Mme Bisson, with the aid of the celebrated medium, Eva, officially supervised in the Sorbonne Laboratory by Professor Lapicque, Georges Dumas and Henri Pierson, gave an entirely negative result according to the official report of the supervising committee published to-day.

Seances, organized by Paul Heuze, author of "The Dead; Do They Live?" have been in progress since March and have given rise to unofficial reports of remarkable cases of materialization. The supervising scientists, however, say: "The experiments produced results that can be characterized only as entirely negative."

The committee recognized the good faith of Mme Bisson, who admitted that the report was in accord with the facts, but explained that the medium was not in possession of her faculties and that the experiments were not sufficiently prolonged to be fruitful.

On two occasions a glutinous substance was observed protruding from the medium's mouth during trances, but was regarded as not amounting to the promised materialization of substances of various forms coming from the body.

QUEEN ALEXANDRA NOT ON SHELF

Queen Mother Makes Only Two Concessions to Old Age

London, July 7.—Queen Alexander, the Queen Mother, now in her 78th year, is far more active than most women of her age. She might take life far easier than she does, but she evidently is opposed to the idea of being laid on the shelf.

She likes to show herself among the people and she is gratified by the applause with which her appearance always is greeted. Undoubtedly it acts as a sort of psychological tonic upon her and helps her to feel as young as she looks.

She crowds many activities into a day. One day recently she appeared in public at the Cart Horse Parade for prizes in Regent's Park; then at a concert in aid of workshops for disabled soldiers, and finally at the Richmond Horseshow. But she makes two concessions to advancing years. She seldom goes out of an evening and she goes to bed early, usually playing a game of "Patience" before retiring.

GRAIN GROWERS DEMAND ST. LAWRENCE CHANNEL

Saskatoon, July 7.—The demand for the deepening of the St. Lawrence channel was made by representatives of the Grain Growers' Locals of Wolverine, Waterloo and Sydneham, at their meeting yesterday at Guernsey, Sask.

CANADA IS STILL AT WAR

No Alien Enemy May be Naturalized Until 10 Years After War

Ottawa, July 7.—Canada is still at war—for purposes of naturalization This came out when inquiries were made this morning in respect of Canadian action regarding births, nationality and status of aliens bill, which has just been given second reading in the British House of Commons. The Home Secretary indicated in the British House that similar action would be taken by the overseas dominions.

As far as Canada is concerned the enactment of legislation of this character was postponed by the Government last session A bill was withdrawn owing to criticism of other features of its provisions.

At present a German or an Austrian cannot obtain naturalization in Canada until ten years after the end of the war and, it was stated at the department of the Secretary of State to-day, so far as the Naturalization Act is concerned, the war has not yet ended. To end the war for naturalization purposes a proclamation must be issued. And the date of issue of the proclamation has not been decided.

GAVE HIS LIFE FOR A FRIEND

Boy of 13 Drowns in Grasp of Frantic Comrade Who is Saved

Montreal, July 6.—In an attempt to save the life of a friend, Berthal Ferland, 13, was drowned in the river at Verdun yesterday. Ferland's friend, Napoleon Gendreau, 15, was saved by Joseph Menard. He was unconscious when brought to shore.

Gendreau was seized with cramps while swimming. Ferland went to his assistance, but Gendreau grasped him about the neck, and the two boys sank. Menard rowed out in a boat, and managed to rescue Gendreau. Later he found young Ferland and brought the two boys ashore, but only Gendreau could be revived.

REBEL LEADER DIES OF WOUNDS

De Valera's Henchman Dead—Eamonn is in Hiding

FREE STATE SECURE

700 Rebels Taken Prisoners by National Army

(Canadian Press Despatches).

Dublin, July .—Cathal Brugha, one of Eamon de Valera's chief lieutenants," died this morning from the wounds he received on Wednesday while trying to fight his way clear at the surrender of the insurgent garrisons in Sackville street area.

London, July 7.—The Provisional Government, by its substantial win over the insurgents in Dublin, is believed to have considerably established itself in bringing law and order and peace to Ireland. The ready response to the national call to arms is regarded as very encouraging and as further proof that the great majority of Irishmen are back of the new government.

Indications are not lacking, however, that Collins and his colleagues will require all the support they can get to put down the remaining resistance, and it is predicted that the government will enroll soldiers to the full strength allowed under the treaty.

Dublin, July 7.—Approximately seven hundred irregulars were taken prisoner by the National army during the struggle in Dublin which was brought to a virtual close by the surrender of the remnant of republicans in the Sackville street area on Wednesday, as nearly as can be ascertained from reliable quarters.

GERMANY MAY ASSIGN, SLUMP IN EXCHANGE

Paper Currency Increase Causes Slump in German Mark

(Canadian Press Despatch)

New York, July 7.—Alarming reports that Germany is likely soon declare herself bankrupt, and the German bank statement revealing an increase in paper currency issue last week of over eleven billion marks is largely responsible for slump in German marks which fell to level of one hundred marks for 18 ½ cents or three cents per hundred marks below yesterday.

The situation is reported to be causing grave concern in European capitals. French exchange has also slumped.

BELLEVILLE'S INDUSTRIES CONTINUE TO EXPAND

New Lectro-Melt Furnace Will Place City in Unique Position and Will Attract Trade

Belleville's industrial expansion continues. Passing reference has been made in a previous issue to the organization here of the National Castings Limited. This new industrial corporation has come into being and now occupies a commodious foundry building on George Street, south, and so quietly has the work of promotion and of building gone along that only a very small proportion of the citizens of Belleville have been aware of the existence of the newcomer.

The company is organized under Dominion Charter with a capitalization of $50,000. The president is Norman L. Turner, the vice-president and foundry manager, F. A. Daniels and the secretary-treasurer H. Terrill.

An Expert at Head.

The president, Mr. Turner, is a graduate in Arts of Queen's University at Kingston. He took his M. A. Degree in 1907 and immediately moved to Belleville to become head of the Ontario Government Assay office then established here. He remained in that position until 1912 when the office at Belleville was closed and moved to Toronto. After a year in Toronto, Mr. Turner went to Ottawa where he was employed as expert in the Bureau of Mines. During the war he volunteered his services and was assigned to the Department of the Ministry of Munitions as advisor in the Chemical and Metallurgical Department. He had charge of the five government laboratories whose principal work was the testing and inspection of shells and shell steel. A research laboratory was also established for the investigation of shell steel effects. In this way Mr. Turner had fine opportunity for increasing his knowledge of iron and steel, which will serve him well in his present position.

Mr. Daniels the vice-president, is an expert in casting and foundry work generally. He has been connected with some of the most important foundries and machine shops in the United States and has also done similar work in Canada prior to the present undertaking. He is regarded as one of the most highly skilled experts in the practical handling of metals, in Ontario.

The new foundry on George St., S., near the plant of the Steel Company of Canada has been fitted up primarily for the casting of grey iron and has special facilities for the casting also of bronze, brass, aluminium and their various combinations.

First of Its Kind.

But more important and more interesting is the announcement that National Castings, Limited, has purchased from the Pittsburgh Electric Furnace Corporation, one of their celibrated Lectro-Melt furnaces which will be installed in the National Castings' plant as soon as it can be delivered. This is the first electric furnace of its kind to be introduced into Canada and its erection here will be viewed with the deepest interest by the iron and steel men all over the eastern part of the Dominion. ALBERT COLLEGE SUMMER SCHOOL public conscience and sentiment carried out in example. Rev. Mr. Brown dealt with the many excuses for laxity. The mis-use of the auto and motor-boat affected church attendance. Unnecessary Sunday visiting and travelling came in for comment, as did also undue preparation, fatigue and Saturday night shopping and other plans to cutting off the Sabbath at both ends. There is a tribe of "Gad" in connection with some respect for the Sabbath. We may even discuss worldly matters on Sunday and thus fall short of Biblical ideals. The interference of lofty and sweet home life is, a serious menace through Sabbath breaking.

Entertainment Concert.

Once during the term of the school there is a relaxation by means of dramatic art. For the occasion Miss Leanore Hurd-Best of Toronto was secured. She proved to be an artist of rare ability combining skill in elocution, vocal and instrumental music to a high degree of accomplishment. Though a stranger to many in these parts she soon had the sympathetic appreciation of the audience, and by a commanding personality and spirited interpretation, Miss Best impressed one as possessing surpassing genius bordering on the role of a musical prodigy. Her first group numbers were Pauline Johnson's "How Red Men Die" and "Canadian Born." Next Scotch selections revealed her powers of expression in "She Liked Him Rale Weel" and a monologue on Bad Memory.

In dispensing Scotch airs on the piano the audience was delighted and "Miss Duffy on Baseball" was portrayed to perfection.

The artist has been associated with Owen A. Smiley, and when again in the city at a different season of the year will no doubt be greeted with a much larger audience. Those there this time certainly got the worth of a good admission.

Rev. Archer Wallace in his inimitable style, contributed humorous baseball experiences from the afternoon, and discerned the difference in English, Scotch and Irish wit. The refreshment booth and Book Room tables were well patronized at the close by visitors from the city.

Quarrels Diagnosed.

Continuing the series of daily Bible studies, Rev. Archer Wallace yesterday morning dwelt upon "What Jesus Taught About the Forgiveness of Injuries." This possibly is one of the hardest matters for most people to comprehend. However, the gifted preacher and editor brought out indisputable conclusions on the subject. If we looked more at our faults than those of others, there wouldn't be so much occasion for trouble. The unforgiveness of a few church people is contrary to the teaching of the Bible and Christ's mission of peace on earth, good will to men. For one's own sake a spirit of hate and misery should not be tolerated in life because of the gloom it brings. Generally we do not hurt our opponent as much as ourselves. The worldly often set us an example in willingness to be charitably-minded, thus Christians are expected to exceed in this respect . Misunderstandings cause much spiteful feelings and the root of serious troubles lies at this door of our lives.

Let us be sure of knowing the facts before taking offence. If we really knew an individual we could scarcely hate, but make allowances. Love is not blind. Love sees and understands. A forgiving spirit is a sign of strength, not weakness. Because of our country's sake, church progress and the interference of our opportunity as leaders in a community ,do not allow ourselves to be hampered by lack of putting into practice the spirit of our Master.

Competitive Forces.

The presence of a circus in town yesterday somehow or other caused slight distraction only to the afternoon exercises of the Summer School for recreation and outing. The ministers and teachers were tied to duties all forenoon, and then there was no street parade down city, rather to the show grounds at all times of the day.

A Spiritual Appeal.

Rev. John Coburn, of Toronto, Field Secretary of the Dept. of Evangelism, gave the regular Twilight Talk at 7 o'clock on the steps of the College. As a background for his remarks the account of Isaiah's vision was read. First we need to catch a view of God. A great deal depends on our knowledge and conception of Him, and consequently we learn of His holiness, purity and opposition to sin. Next we should get a vision of our own selves, our unworthiness before God. When there is a holier, deeper consciousness of sin within, we can understand better our relation to the Father. Not simply with our own sin should we be concerned but also that of the nation. Thirdly, vision brings assurance, fortunately, of cleansing and deliverance. We can be purged of evil, and have removed the cause of constant defects.

Lastly, vision leads to a call to service. Christianity is not just an experience of ecstasies, but the privilege of being heralds of the cross at home and abroad. It may be the display of Christian character in business or the home. Before deciding avocations of life, young people ought to weigh the world's need in advance of their own preferences. In these times of test and the crisis of history demands are made upon us. Real consecration is to volunteer for anywhere and for anything. Allow God to determine where best we can be used. Our summons is more easily discerned than Isaiah's because of possessing the Bible, Christ's record on earth, the leadings of the Holy Spirit and the advantage of the church established. God has a divine plan; what about our willingness to conform to it?

Another Feast.

Those in attendance at Albert have a double course for the night digestion. It is sandwiched by a half hour period of social intercourse and aided by a spell of rousing songs. At 8 o'clock a former pastor of the Tabernacle Methodist Church here, and a previous teacher of the Summer School in the person of Rev. W. G. Clarke, B.A., of Trenton, held forth in an address upon "Reserve Power." The story of the Five Wise and Five Foolish Virgins was related. Wedding ceremonies produce interest from different aspects. No oil in the oriental vessels is typical of Reserve Resources or Power. Business firms must meet contingencies. There are resources necessary in the physical sphere. Carousing limits acquisition of strength. Science in the tempering of steel discovers that there is an aging process from extremes of heat and cold. Nature has endowed us with valuable capital in health and it is necessary to conserve it.

From personal experiences Capt. Clarke gave an insight into the military reserves of power during the European war . Mentally excess resources are exhibited and concentrated upon truth. Over-indulgence of intellect is a matter for ministers disposed to long orations. In the spiritual realm patience will guide reserves of power. Just as an engine works regularly with a governor or balance wheel, correspondingly so religious activity should be coupled with patience. Character is our storage battery. How often we live on happening of events, and are prepared only for the good things of life. Character, like a railroad ticket, is not transferable. We must act for ourselves. Even parental virtues do not suffice. Graces in conduct may be the oil of smoothness in everyday affairs. Opportunities on all sides afford a chance to share with others what we can give. Canada presents wonderful advancement. By apt anecdotes and forceful delivery Rev. Clarke left a great impress upon the audience.

Today the routine program of the school will be carried out. Following the twilight talk Rev Archer Wallace will also speak pon "The Unpurchasable Things of Life."

"DAWN OF MORNING" IS HEAD OF ROTARY

Brantford, July 6.—A big surprise was sprung at the annual country meeting of the Rotary Club, held today at Onondaga, where President W. B. Preston was initiated as a Chief of the Six Nations Indians, with the title "Dawn of the Morning."

Six Chiefs carried out the ceremony, which took company and candidate by surprise, the Chiefs being clad in the traditional war dress, with paint, tomahawks yells and dances.

STILL FOLLOWING THE CIRCUS.

Edgar Allarie, aged 16 years, who stated that he hailed from the Capital, and was a son of Mr. and Mrs. L. Allarie, of 34 Ogilvie street, in that city, was picked up by the police here during the day on Thursday, while the big circus was in progress.

The boy, who was following the big show, was seeking employment, so he stated. He was kept over night and allowed to proceed on the sometimes rough pathway of life, again this morning.

GREAT CROWDS AT CIRCUS

Close to 18,000 People at Each of Two Performance of Big Show

Circus lovers (and who does not look forward to circus day?) anticipated a wonderful show when the announcement was made that the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey circuses combined, were coming to Belleville. Their anticipation certainly became a realization when the monster tent show set up here on Thursday and played both afternoon and evening.

The circus was one of the best ever seen in this city, was the largest tent that ever was erected here, housing 18,000 people, it is estimated, in the afternoon, and almost an equal number in the evening. Belleville has been the best city for this circus in Canada so far, except one day in Montreal.

During the afternoon performance in the big tent, almost every conceivable feat ever seen in any circus was presented, there being three rings and four platforms down the centre of the huge hippodrome. Almost every animal was there, and nearly all of them were trained to do tricks, many of which were wonderful.

The parade, announced by the trumpeters mounted on white steeds, was a magnificent spectacle, from the baton-juggling drum major to the funny painted clowns. The Spanish effect was noted in a number of costume outfits and one of the distinctive features of this circus was the beauty and originality of the costumes. The parade in the main tent was a glittering spectacle with every garment, float and animal spotlessly clean and of refined appearance. The floats depicting Cinderella, Little Boy Blue, Cleopatra, Jack the Giant Killer and other fairy story characters were a delight to the thousands of children present.

The horses were beautiful, and were trained to dance, lie down, bow to the audience, and many other almost human feats. Horse racing trick riding, wild west and broncho riding, were some of the features of the horse show. Everyone likes to see the elephants do their tricks, and there were no less than twentyfive big fellows in the rings. One of the feature animal acts, however, was the performance of the dogs, who raced, turned somersaults, did some good leaping and provided no small amount of comedy for good measure. Then there were the trained tigers, lions, sea lions, leopards, polar bears and brown bears.

Big bruin on roller skates and as a cyclist provided great amusement. The dogs, two white horses, and a flock of snow-white doves, artistically arranged in the white buggy, piloted by the young lady in charge of the act, was one of the prettiest sights of the entire performance. Later a clever exhibition of statuary posing was given which was also good.

The trapeze artists did some daring feats requiring nerve, practice, skill and physical endurance. Tumbling and the work of the contortionists was also well done. Possibly the most unusual feature of this department was the slide to terra firma from a high pole, on a thin wire stretched to the earth at an angle, the artist sliding down on his head. Two men completed this feature act, and made a decided hit.

Interspersed with all this was the grotesque but amusing burlesquing of the large party of clowns, whose tricks were new and funny. There were no dull moments, and it was impossible to see all, at the one showing.

The tented city left last night for Toronto.

DRURY WORRIED OVER RACES

Hesitates to Deal With Proposed Race Track at Port Credit

Toronto, July 7.—Caught between the upper and nether millstones of a professed aversion for race tracks and a disinclination to use the high-handed measures which would give its protestations concrete effect, the Drury Government is having its troubles in trying to decide what it is going to do about the proposed construction of a new mile track near Port Credit by the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association. If the Premier has his way, and there is not much doubt but that he will, the new track will come into existence.

There is a good deal of humor of the comic opera variety in the situation which, in short, is as follows: Back in 1903 the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association received a charter under the Ontario Companies Act. Trotting races were held from time to time, but the activities of the association were pracically a negligible factor so far as they concerned the controversy over race tracks and gambling in general. On June the 18th of this year the association applied for supplementary letters patent with regard to its capitalization and intimated intention of opening an up-to-date and fully modern track on a 200-acre site near Port Credit. That put the fat in the fire, so far as the Government was concerned.

Could Revoke Charter.

Cabinet consultations revealed the fact that three alternatives were possible—revoke the original charter, refuse the supplementary application, or sit tight and do nothing. As admitted by Hon. H. C. Nixon, Provincial Secretary, yesterday, the charter was absolutely legal. But Section 29 of the Ontario Companies Act, under which the association was incorporated, declares that letters patent may be revoked and declared void "on sufficient cause being shown." Now the Premier has come to the conclusion that there is a good and sufficient reason why the Government should make no attempt to revoke the charter.

THE GRAY SQUIRREL.

Small Animal Taken From America to England.

For many years the sight of the gray squirrels at liberty in Regent's Park, London, England, has been one of the attractive features of the place. Contrary to popular belief, however, this squirrel is not a British animal at all. Mr. R. L. Pocock, superintendent of the Mammalia at the Zoological Gardens, writing in "Conquest," says—

"It comes from North America, where it ranges on the eastern side of the continent from Southern Canada to the northern shores of the Gulf of Mexico, and westwards to the edge of the prairies. It thus occupies a very large area of country, and is sufficiently abundant to supply a large percentage of the squirrel furs used for lining cloaks.

"It is a very different-looking animal from our own species. If you never had the chance of seeing an England squirrel in the woods of fir or beech it mostly frequents, you will know what it is like, and what a pretty little creature it is from books on natural history. Its general color, varying according to the season, is reddish or brownish above and white below. In the winter the body is grayish brown, with the tail dark drab, and the tips of the ears carry long erect tufts of drab-colored hair, adding greatly to the beauty of the creature. In the summer these tufts are moulted, the tail bleaches to creamy buff, and the body turns redder, particularly upon the flanks and the outer side of the limbs.

"The gray squirrel, on the contrary, as its name indicates, is mostly gray, but it is tinged above with buff, which in some cases quite disappears in the winter, and the hairs of the tail are brown at the base, then black, and broadly banded with white at the tip. The ears, too, which have a large white spot behind, never develop tufts at any time of the year. The gray squirrel also surpasses the red in size, exceeding it by an inch or more in the length of the head and body, and being correspondingly more bulky and clumsily built all over. There are great differences in character and temperament as well. The gray squirrel is comparatively bold. It soon loses its fear of man, and thrives and breeds well in captivity. The English squirrel, on the contrary, unless artificially reared and handled from its earliest days, is, as a rule, exceedingly timid; it is much less hardy under the conditions imposed by captivity, and is usually sterile when kept in confinement.

"Wherever the gray squirrels are to be found there are no red squirrels, and to find red squirrels it is necessary to visit woods which the gray squirrel has not yet reached. This is a very instructive instance of the inability [illegible] two [illegible] species to live side by side in the same habitat; and it is evident that unless the invasion of the gray squirrel is checked, the red squirrel will become a thing of the past.

"In most of the current natural histories you will find our squirrel described as if it were identical with the squirrel of Continental Europe, known as Sciurus vulgaris. If that were the case our decreasing or lost stock could be reinforced or made good by the importation of fresh blood from France, Holland, or elsewhere. But about a quarter of a century ago careful comparison between our squirrel and continental specimens showed that the former is a distinct animal, restricted in range to Great Britain and Ireland."

Threshing in Tibet.

The threshing of barley in Tibet is an amusing process. The barley is strewn several inches deep in an enclosure of hard beaten earth of about half an acre in extent. Into the enclosure 40 or 50 yaks are driven. All the drums, rattles, bells, and empty kerosene tins are requisitioned and beaten and sounded simultaneously. The frightened yaks, with their tails in the air, are driven backwards and forwards over the barley. Whenever their energies flag, the drums and kerosene tins are waved and beaten with renewed vigor. The winnowing presents few difficulties in Tibet; there is always a strong wind.

C. G. SMITH, B.D., OF MONTREAL, WILL ASSIST WITH ALL THE SERVICES.

Wherever this child wonder has appeared the largest churches and largest theatres have failed to meet the requirements and hundreds are turned away.

Mary Agnes, as she is familiarly called, was first introduced to the public at the age of 9 years by J. R. Hainer, Superintendent of the Union Rescue Mision, Pittsburg. From that time to the present she has continued her work in the ministry and it may be truthfully stated thousands have been led to Christ through the ministry of this child. It was shortly after her ninth birthday when she was baptized and preached her own baptismal sermon to the largest congregation that ever assembled in the Mount Washington Baptist Church, Pittsburgh. Her first public appearance was at the Presbyterian Orphanage, Pittsburgh, where she spoke to three or four hundred orphan children and others who had gathered to hear her message. Following her appearance at the Presbyterian Orphanage she was made a welcome messenger at the Union Rescue Mission, Pittsburgh, Pa. There it was her custom to preach about once a month. There she saw the most dejected specimens of humanity that the human mind can conceive. There she met the shipwrecks and derelicts that seemed to have been washed ashore. Men without hope, without God, hardened in sin and calloused with a conviction that the world had nothing in it for them; they were friendless and no one cared for them. None but this child seemed to be able to reach the hearts to melt these hardened sinners. How she did pour out her little life to them; she pointed them to the cross and to the tender love of a compassionate Christ. In her pleadings she would frequently burst out in tears and in her appeal would say, "Some dear little girl like me is praying tonight for her papa. Are you her papa? Some little child may be at mother's knees praying, 'Dear Lord, send home my daddy. He's somewhere, I don't know where, but you know. Please, dear Lord, send him home to mama and me.' Are you that daddy? Do you hear the Saviour speaking to you?"

Under her impassionate pleas strong men would rush to the front falling upon their knees and pleading for mercy. Large numbers crowded the altar and many were brought back to God and sent home to be reunited with their familites.

She became a licensed preacher at the age of ten years. Her calls have come from practically every one of the leading denominations. She has filled the pulpits of the largest churches. She knows no denominational lines. She takes naturally to mission work since her first appointments were in this line, but she has responded to calls from orphanages, the Y.M.C.A., W.C.T.U., the Salvation Army, Sunday School Associations and Young People's societies whenever these calls are directed toward the salvation of souls and the labor of her Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. She makes no charge for her services, but when offerings are given to her these are devoted to supporting an American who is her Foreign Missionary in the Sudan, young men preparing for the ministry and others who are devoting their lives to preaching the unsearchable riches and unadulterated Gospel. Mary Agnes believes implicitly in prayer. She pins her faith in her Saviour to carry her through. Never has she had any fear of crowds while but few have enjoyed the privilege of speaking at larger gatherings.

She is a natural-born pulpit orator, not mechanical but perfectly natural, knowing absolutely nothing about homiletics, elocution or the art of public speaking. Her voice is strong and her gifts are rare. At the Practical Bible Training School Conference held last year she was honored with the evening service while on the program were the leading Bible scholars, Bible teachers, and interpreters of the Word in this country, among whom were Dr. Gray, of the Moody Bible School; Dr. Massey, of Termont Temple, Boston, and other Divines of national and international reputation.

She is 14 years old and keeps up her school work without the slightest apparent interruption. There is nothing mechanical about her. Her ability to prepare sermons is remarkable. She absorbs what she reads with astounding ease and her genius to use what she reads and gets from other ministers or orators is almost beyond belief. Her schedule of calls for the summer vacation season are sufficient to keep her busy during the entire summer, extending from July, when she opens in Niagara Falls, to September, which carries her through the New England states and back to Cincinnati, thence out into Indiana, where she conducted a week's meetings last year, returning through Kentucky to Pittsburgh in time to begin her fall school term in the High School.

ADVICE TO MOTORISTS

Causes of motor accidents are discussed in the annual report of the Provincial Department of Highways. The report states that accidents may be divided into two classes: those that are unavoidable and those that are avoidable. It points out that all motor drivers, no matter how skilful and careful they may be, are subject to the possibility of accidents. Steering gear or other mechanism may go out of order, or a thoughtless pedestrian may step off the side-walk in front of the car.

Excessive speed is said to be the most prolific cause of accidents, and a more rigorous enforcement of the present speed laws is urged. We commend the following paragraph in the report to the serious consideration of all motorists:

"Too many accidents occur to children. The presence of children on a street should be a warning to the driver of a motor car to drive with extreme care. The horn should be sounded to warn children playing on the sidewalk that a motor car is approaching. Children absorbed in play are thoughtless, irresponsible, and it is the plain duty of the driver of a motor vehicle to recognize these conditions. That a child runs from the sidewalk in front of a motor car is not always a sufficient excuse for an accident; for the driver of a motor vehicle, if he is competent to drive, should know that children do such things, and he should be reasonably prepared for the emergency. Accidents to children are in many cases an evidence of reckless driving."

Motorists should constantly bear in mind that a toot of the horn does not relieve them of all responsibility, in case the person tooted at does not jump out of the way. The person may be deaf, or stupid, but whatever be the reason, there can never be any excuse for a driver taking a chance of missing a person crossing the roadway. No driver unless he be driving a fire engine, has the freedom of the road so that he can peremptorily order people out of the way with a toot.

We are glad the report refers to the glaring headlight nuisance. Apart from the danger to other vehicles on the road, the motorist who casts a strong searchlight up a street is, to say the least, a selfish creature. By so doing he claims th eentire thoroughfare as his own and painfully blinds and stupifiies every person who happens to be facing his car. On this point the report says: "Glaring headlights are a fruitful cause of accidents, particularly on country roads; and a simplified method of determining and overcoming glare is greatly to be desired, in order that the anti-glare law may be more effectively enforced."

CIRCUS MEMORIES

To thoroughly enjoy a circus it is necessary to forget many things that seem to be essential to modern civilized life. You must get rid of your political conviction, you unload your heavy philosophies, your science is cumbersome, and as for your particular views in theology, even these must be left at home. If you would enter within the charmed circle you must become as a little child.

A circus is the only relict of the picture-book age that is comparatively unspoiled by modern conventionalities. Here we see the denizens of the Orient, the camels of Arabia in their grotesque and dreamy dignity; the same camels we saw in the picture of Palestine which forms the background of every child's mind whose religious education has not been neglected.

What memories of past circuses arise as we look into the "dim backward and abysm of time." We recall "the greatest hippo alive"—an assertion that no child would dare dispute! Rhinos' with two horns, and elephants with two tails! Lions, tigers, hyenas, leopards, and all the carnivorous inhabitants of the jungle. Bears, antelopes, long-necked giraffes, "striped donkeys", and choice but unflattering specimens of our Simian ancestry.

Who does not recall with a thrill the equine performances with the pie-bald, docile horse, trotting around the ring with a lady poised gracefully on tip-toe. And the clowns! How two of these gentlemen would entertain the grand stand with a sketch of "William Tell"; one announcing that he would "shoot the head from underneath the apple without disturbing the apple." It was all very foolish, flashy and fleeting, but it shook us for a moment out of the ruts of life.

CANADA'S CHEAP NAVAL DEFENCE

The despatch from Washington in The Intelligencer yesterday relating to the naval program of the United States, is worthy of special consideration by all Canadians, especially those of the little-or-no-navy type. We are not disposed to criticize the American Government for "extravagance" in maintaining a big navy, indeed the Congress is rather to be commended. The United States has coast-lines on the two greatest oceans in the world, and to ignore the possibility of danger from attack would be to invite the invader.

Canada is in a similar position. Canadian orators are repeatedly telling us of this vast Dominion, stretching "from sea to sea", but they generally stop at the sea coast and thrust their heads in the sand at the thought of a possible enemy. Canada has no enemies, and she has nothing to fear from attacks—why should she have a navy?

This was the attitude of the present Government at Ottawa when it scrapped the "Laurier navy"—a most ungracious act, surely.

We are not pleading for big naval programs, but we wish to point out to this Government and to all who believe that Canada can very well forget all about sea defence, that this Dominion is safe to-day because it is living under the protection of the British and the United States fleets—fleets that are paid for by the tax-payers of America and the British Isles.

PASSING COMMENT

The circus did not parade yesterday, but quite a number of "Lions" were at large on Front street.

The Intelligencer received a sample of oats by mail yesterday, standing nearly 5 feet in height, and with well filled heads. Surely the "heavens dropped fatness" during those latter rains.

HERE AND THERE

DEFINITIONS OF POETRY.

Poetry is a sword of lightning, ever unsheathed, which would consume the scabbard that contained it.

Poetry turns all things to loveliness; it exact the beauty of that which is most beautiful, and it adds beauty to that which is most deformed; it marries exultation and horror, grief and pleasure, eternity and change; it subdues to union, under its light yoke, all irreconcilable things.

Poetry defeats the curse which binds us to be subjected to the accident of surrounding impressions.

The most unfailing herald, companion, and follower of the awakening of a great people to work a beneficial change in opinion or institution, is poetry. At such periods there is an accumulation of the power of communicating and receiving intense and impassioned conceptions respecting man and nature.

Poets are the unacknowledged legislators of the world.

Poetry ... redeems from decay the visitations of the divinity of man.—Shelley.

FRAGMENT.

Make me a song with a light-hearted melody,
Gather me clusters of may-flowers and thyme,
Go to the brook-side and find there a shell to be Soft elfin trumpet to echo my rhyme.

Call from the cowslip the bee with his blundering,
Spread out a carpet of gossamer light.
Summon the storm-cloud to boom forth its thundering:
Sprinkle the first crystal dews of the night.

Through forest and meadow-land set the song rollicking,
Hill-top and valley shall chorus it back;
Over a young world it dances a-frollicking,
Taking for high-road the wild heron's track.

—BY BURKE BOYCE.

CALLING.

The skies of blue that bend above the bay
Seem listening for your voice; and all
The rounded hills lift up their heads and call,
But hear no echo. Down the sunny day
The soft winds wander, but I hear them say
They can not find you; and the birds that fly
Across the hillside seek in vain. The shy
Wild flowers droop, and wonder why you stay.
Beneath the same blue sky the old friends wait;
The flowers bloom, the birds sing sweet and clear—
And hark! The waves that break in snowy foam
Against the rocks that guard the Golden Gate
Are calling to you—surely you must hear!—
The throbbing summons, "Home!
Come home! Come home!"

PRESS OPINIONS

THE JURY AND MENTAL EXPERTS

(Toronto Star)

The mental experts will tell you that everyone is more or less insane, or that impulses which are not sane are acted upon at times. The whole question of expert testimony before courts of justice needs to be considered. The average jury can scarcely be deemed competent to pass upon the subtle evidence of experts, and, where a plea of insanity is entered, a special court to dispose of the points as to the mental fitness of a prisoner to undergo trial might be created.

DISINFECTING LARGE STEAMSHIPS

It is now recognized that the health of those who go down to the sea in ships depends upon the efficient fumigation of the living quarters. Certain Governments insist upon the regular fumigation of first and second class passenger accommodation. One method of carrying this out is by means of prussic acid, but this has the grave disadvantage that elaborate precautions have to be taken in order to prevent fatal accidents, while in addition there is no satisfactory respirator for the use of those engaged on the work of fumigation. Another method is to burn sulphur throughout the vessel, but this has the draw-back that the sulphur fumes tarnish many forms of decoration. The British Ministry of Health has therefore set on foot an investigation with a view to discovering some gas which will act efficiently as a disinfectant and yet be free from the deleterious and dangerous properties of the other gases at present in use.

AN ALL-ELECTRIC BRITISH SHIP

In very few of even the most magnificent large ships afloat today is the use of electricity carried to such a high degree as in the British-built "Pittsburgh" which recently made her maiden voyage from Great Britain to America. This vessel, which has accommodation for 600 first class and 1700 third class passengers, is equipped with a complete electric generating station capable of developing over one thousand horse power. The extent to which electricity is employed on board this vessel may be gauged from the fact that no fewer than eighty miles of distributing cable are used. Electricity works the steering gear, lowers the boats, operates the cargo winches, drives the lifts and hoists, starts the engines, controls the sounding machines, and works the printing presses. All the cooking on board is done electrically, the kitchen equipment including three large ranges, three circular roasters, a baker's oven, electrically-driven dough mixers, and many small labour saving appliances such as potato peelers, vegetable choppers, meat mincers, coffee grinders, and so on. All the ventilating and heating arrangements are electrically operated, and the clocks are driven by electricity and synchronised and controlled from the bridge.

PLAYGROUNDS OF ONTARIO.

Nature, who ordained that man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow, also endowed him with a capacity for play. She further provided him with playgrounds wherein he might exercise that natural instinct. The Canadian National-Grand Trunk Railways have issued a booklet that provides an introduction to some of Nature's finest playgrounds, set down in the Province of Ontario. In these vast playgrounds of Ontario, Nature is at her best. Ages ago, giant glaciers from the north carved out the beds of Ontario's rivers, lakes and valleys with prodigal profusion and in splendid disarray. To such an ideal setting for a summer sojourn, Nature has added yet one boon more, that of a perfect summer climate. The air is pure and bracing, laden with the scent of the pine. A very brief sojourn in these delightful altitudes brings sure relief to those afflicted with hay fever. To all—old and young, the strong, the weak—this beautiful land, where summer lingers long with its cool nights and halcyon days, brings rest and vigor. A handsomely illustrated booklet entitled "Playgrounds of Ontario," may be had for the asking by applying to any Grand Trunk Ticket Agent or C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont.

WATER POWER PROGRESS IN GREAT BRITAIN

A large and important hydro-electric scheme for Scotland was recently sanctioned by Parliament. This scheme covers a large area of the Grampian hills and involves the raising of the water level of more than one well-known Scottish loch. There will be four power stations capable of giving a continuous supply of fifty six thousand horse power. The electricity so produced will be distributed over a wide area for all purposes.

Centenary of Death of Shelly

A POET WHO PERISHED IN A STORM.

On some day between July 8 and July 18 falls the centenary of the death of Percy Bysshe Shelley. On July 8, 1822, he set sail in a boat from Leghorn; ten days later his body was washed ashore. He had perished in the storm, but on what day remains unknown. Whether his death was the result of accident or whether he was murdered is also uncertain, though the possibilities point to the fact that his little craft, in which his friend, Williams, and a sailor boy, named Charles Vivian accompanied him, was deliberately run down by a larger vessel containing a crew of Italian brigands and pirates, who mistook Shelley for Byron, who was known to be rich, and who was supposed to carry a large supply of gold about him on his sailing expeditions. The little Ariel, when found, had a smashed stern, and this tends to confirm a confession made long afterward by one of the pirate crew, who said the craft had been murderously rammed.

His Heart Rescued.

Byron, Leigh, Hunt and Trelawney, all friends of Shelley, were in Italy when the tragedy occurred. They knew Shelley had put out, and for days their eyes strained seaward, and they searched the shore for traces of him. On July 18 the bodies were found. Trelawney had written: "The tall slight figure, the jacket, the volume of Aeschylus in one pocket, and Keats' poems in the other, doubled back as if the reader in the act of reading had hastily thrust it away, were all too familiar to me to leave a doubt on my mind that this mutilated corpse was any other than Shelley's." According to a curious Italian law, everything that drifted ashore had to be burned, and so the poet's body was cremated in the presence of his friends. Trelawney snatched from the pyre the poet's unburned heart, while the rest of the body, and even the brine-soaked copy of Keats, were consumed. If the latter had been saved, one wonders what record-breaking price it would fetch at auction today.

Buried With Keats.

The ashes of Shelley were placed beside the body of his friend, Keats, who had also died in Italy, and was buried in the little Protestant cemetery in Rome. This was the spot of which Shelley himself had exclaimed when he had visited Keats' tomb not long before: "It might make one in love with death that one should be buried in so sweet a place!" But in the case of neither did death still the controversy that raged about them in his lifetime. In his lovely "Adonais" Shelley had done much to call attention to the genius of Keats and to silence the tongue of envy and ignorance. But Keats had lived no such life as Shelley. He could not be condemned as a man without moral sense, as a cruel deserter of women, and a betrayer of the innocent, these reproaches were heaped on Shelley's head and not without some warrant.

The Ways of Genius.

The difficulty was not less a hundred years ago than it is now to convince the world that a man who abandoned his wife when she was about to have a child, and because of whose cruel conduct two women committed suicide, might be a great genius, and might also be inspired by motives which he considered to be of the highest. If one can leave to one side, Shelley's treatment of the women who fell under his spell, a mountain of evidence could be accumulated to show him to have been of the tenderest-hearted and one of the noblest minded men. Never was one more generous. He would give away every coin he had in his pocket if he came across a person in need. He more than once took off his own shoes and returned barefoot because he had met someone without shoes. Nor did his charities consist wholly in disposing of things that he might replace. He nursed and visited. He gave his time and his sympathy, one might say even his love, to the unfortunates with whom he came in contact.

Influenced by Godwin.

Early in life, and to his own misfortune, he came under the influence of Godwin, who, according to Leslie Stephen, represented the tendency of the revolutionary school toward the deification of pure intellect. Before this Shelley had been an atheist. He became what one would now consider an anarchist, and was unable to see in what plight the world would be if anarchy were to be accepted. He disbelieved in marriages, in kings, in priests. He believed that he was born to bring a new conception of life into the world, a conception in which love would take the place of all laws. He chose Ireland as a likely place to launch his new philosophy, and spent much time, distributing pamphlets. But later he found his true expression in poetry. Some of his poems are unsurpassed in our language. No English poet came nearer the archangels than Shelley in some of his most majestic flights. Had he lived to be Wordsworth's age, as has been said of Keats, he might have taken rank with Shakespeare.—Mail and Empire.

Why Join the Church?

By Daniel A. Poling

1. I ought to belong to the Church because I ought to be better than I am. Henry Ward Beecher once said, "The Church is not a gallery for the exhibition of eminent Christians, but a school for the education of imperfect ones."

2. I ought to belong to the Church because of what I can give to it and do through it as well as because of what I may get out of it. The church is not a dormitory for sleepers, it is an institution of workers; it is not a rest camp, it is a front line trench.

3. I ought to belong to the Church because every man ought to pay his debts and do his share toward discharging the obligations of society. The Church has not only been the bearer of the good news of personal salvation; it has been and it is the supreme uplifting and conserving agency without which, "Civilization would lapse into barbarism and press its way to perdition."

4. I ought to belong to the Church because of memories; memories of things I can never forget; memories of faces that will never fade; memories of vows that are the glory of youth.

5. I ought to belong to the Church because of hope; hope that lives when promises are dead; hope that paves the way for progress; hope that visions peace and social justice; hope for time, and hope for eternity—the great hope that casts its anchor behind Jesus Christ.

6. I ought to belong to the Church because of the strong men in it who need reinforcing; the weak men in it who need encouraging; the rascals in it who need rebuking. If I say that I am not good enough my humility recommends me. If I sit in the seat of the scornful my inactivity condemns me.

7. I ought to belong to the Church but not until I am ready to join a going concern; not until I am willing to become an active partner with Jesus Christ.—Association Mess.

How Nature Taught Man to Fly

By H. Boylston Dummer

When we say "flying," we think of birds, insects or aeroplanes, but also there are in the nature world fish, squirrels and frogs which fly.

Among the birds, take first the eagle, which has been chosen to represent the strength and freedom of more than one great country; and any one who has watched one of these grand birds has seen him wheel in great circles for hours, far up in the sky, and with each turn, as the sun strikes his snow-white head, flashing a light as if signalling back to earth all the wonders he saw.

Next, we will take the dragon fly, to represent the insects. His name smacks of fairy stories, and his body looks as if it were the original model of an aeroplane. The men who have constructed the great planes which go with far greater swiftness than any of Mother Nature's flying children, have studied the why and wherefore of every living thing that flies, and incorporated these ideas into their mechanical flyers.

The flying squirrel of this country is the original glider, and the beginning of all flying machines. This little animal, with a web-like joining of the feet, launches itself from the highest trees, volpaning down lightly as a falling leaf, or, if it wishes, by using its tail as an elevating plane, it can glide up into the next tree.

In the flying fish, we have the first hydroplane, as they skim along the surface of the water, and then getting headway, rise into the air.

The East Indian frog makes me think of the man who tied things to his feet, and jumped off the top of his barn, with only this difference—the frog can do the trick, but the man was all broken up as a result of his flight.

Man has gone one better than any of the natural flyers. The eagle's record of hours in the air is smashed; also, no bird ever sailed to the almost unbelievable heights of man's flyers. The speediest bird that ever shot like an arrow across the sunlit sky is as slow in comparison with the modern aeroplanes and has as much chance as the tortoise with the hare.

Unless the aviator lacks gasoline or has engine trouble; then the story ends, as did that time-honored fable of the Hare and the Tortoise.—The Congregationalist.

MY LITTLE HOUSE IS GREEN AND QUAINT.

By Ethel Kirk Grayson.

My little house is green and quaint,
And softly tucked away
Among demure old poplar trees,
And dreams of yesterday.

Sometimes, from ancient picture-frames,
Hung close upon the wall,
The friendly ghosts come out at dusk,
When tender shadows fall.

I meet them in the garden dim,
And on the oaken stair,
In ruffled shirt, or stiff brocade,
And buckles shining fair.

And once there drank, from Dresden cup,
A bride of other years,
With pensive yearning in her face,
And gentle hopes, and fears.

The young folks smile to see me here,
When they drive from the town—
"Why will you stay alone?" they cry,
And ramble up and down.

The primly bordered garden walks,
Where grow the mignonette,
The larkspur and the candytuft,
The pinks all sweet and wet.

But cannot see the friendly ghosts
As they go flitting by,
And think it very dull and strange,
And often wonder why

I still cling to my little house,
So softly tucked away
Among demure old poplar trees,
And dreams of yesterday.

HERE IS THE IDEAL APARTMENT HOUSE

The last word in convenience and efficiency has recently been attained in a newly-constructed apartment house in Toronto, which will be a boon, not only to the newlyweds, but to the bachelor girl or man, as they are almost completely furnished. The apartment consists of two rooms and a bathroom, which, by a simple twist of the wrist, can be converted into four good-sized rooms by means of revolving walls and doors. On entering one finds oneself in a small hall which leads into a large living-room, is furnished with a very nice writing desk, with many drawers which could be used for the household linen. A narrow living-room table stands at one side which in a moment can be quickly changed into a dining table for six, with a sideboard to be used for many things.

There are rugs on the polished floors, and all that is required to make the room complete will be some chairs, perhaps a chesterfield, a lamp or two, some pictures, and all the delightful belongings dear to the feminist heart.

The scene changes, a spring is pressed, the wall turns and carries the desk and chiffonier away and a large double spring bed appears. A door at one side revolves, bringing a most luxurious dressing table with plenty of drawers, into view. And there you are in a large and airy bedroom, with plenty of light and plenty of space. Morning comes and, to the magic sesame a most complete breakfast room and kitchenette appears on the scene, with a table which comes down from a niche in the wall, and which, when not otherwise employed, can be folded for an ironing board.

At the far end is a white gas range, with large oven, with numerous drawers. A good-sized laundry tub stands next, with a draining board on top and then a modern enamel sink, and over all a plentiful array of shelves look down. Opening onto a summer balcony, large enough for an outdoor sitting-room, is a built-in refrigerator, which is filled from the outside. Every inch of space has been utilized, and everything in the way of comfort thought out, even a spring door leading into the living-room when only the kitchenette is required. In half an hour the whole work of the house could be done and the busy housewife would be free for a perfect day.

ICE STILL COMING IN NORTH ATLANTIC

Washington, July 5.—The Naval Hydrographic Office today warned officials of the Shipping Board and other operators of United States ships that ice is still coming into the North Atlantic in dangerous quantities and the southern trans-Atlantic lanes should be followed indefinitely.

While the lanes now generally travelled are somewhat longer, the Hydrographic experts feel that the safety factor should receive first consideration so long as ice continues to come down from the north in dangerous volume.

GLAD TO BE ABLE TO WORK

Toronto Woman Gives Credit to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Toronto, Ontario.—"I suffered with irregular periods, was weak and run down, could not eat and had headaches. The worst symptoms were dragging-down pains, so bad I sometimes thought I would go crazy, and I seemed to be smothering. I was in this condition for two or three years and could not seem to work. I tried all kinds of medicines and had been treated by physicians but received no benefit. I found one of your booklets and felt inclined to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I received the best results from it and now I keep house and go out to work and am like a new woman. I have recommended your Vegetable Compound to my friends and if these facts will help some poor woman, use them as you please."—MRS. J. F. PEASEY, 337 King St., West, Toronto, Ontario.

Various forms of female weakness many times make work almost impossible. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped thousands of women over these troubles.

The Daily Recipe

SMALL CAKES

½ cup butter
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
½ cup milk
1¾ cups flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon vanilla

Work butter and sugar together until creamy. Add well beaten eggs, and beat thoroughly. Sift the flour with the baking powder; add to the butter and sugar mixture alternately with the milk—first a little milk, then a little flour, until all are used.

Bake in well-buttered muffin or patty tins 20 minutes in a moderate oven. Will make 18 or 20.

A good rule to follow for baking is this: During the first quarter of the time the mixture should rise but not brown; the second quarter of time the mixture should continue to rise and begin to brown. The remainder of time the cake finishes baking.

This last half of the time allowed is the most critical. Up to that time the cake may be turned or moved without danger of falling.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

"Beg pardon, sir, but you can see as it's addressed to you."

It was: the box being held out for examination, Staff saw plainly that it was tagged with a card inscribed in fashionably slapdash feminine handwriting with what was unquestionably the name and local address of Benjamin Staff, Esq.

Because of this, he felt called upon to subject the box to more minute inspection.

It was nothing more nor less than the everyday milliners' hat-box of commerce: a capacious edifice of stout pasteboard neatly plastered with wall-paper in whose design narrow stripes of white alternated with aggressive stripes of brown, the whole effectively setting off an abundance of purple blossoms counterfeiting no flower known to botanists. And one gibbous side was further decorated with bold black script advertising the establishment of its origin.

"Maison Lucille, New Bond Street, West," Staff read aloud, completely bewildered. "But I never heard of the d— the place!"

Helplessly he sought Milly's eyes, and helpfully Milly rose to the occasion.

"Nosir," said she; and that was all.

"I know nothing whatever about the thing," Staff declared severely. "It's all a mistake. Take it away—it'll be sent for as soon as the error's discovered."

A glimmer of intelligence shone luminous in Milly's eyes. "Mebbe," she suggested under inspiration of curiosity—"Mebbe if you, was to open it, you'd find a note or—something."

"Bright girl!" applauded Staff. "You open it. I'm too busy—packing up—no time—"

And realising how swiftly the golden minutes were fleeting beyond recall, he cast desperately about for his pipe.

By some miracle he chanced to find it, and so resumed packing.

Behind him, Milly made noises with tissue-paper.

Presently he heard a smothered "O sir!" and looked round to discover the housemaid in an attitude of unmitigated adoration before what he could not deny was a perfect dream of a hat—the sort of a hat that only a woman or a society reporter could do justice to. In his vision it bore a striking resemblance to a Gainsborough with all modern improvements—as most big hats do to most men. Briefly, it was big and black and trimmed with an atmosphere of costly simplicity, a monstrous white "willow" plume and a huge buckle of brilliants. It impressed him, hazily, as just the very hat to look ripping on an ash-blonde. Aside from this he was aware of no sensation other than one of aggravated annoyance.

Milly, to the reverse extreme, was charmed to distraction, thrilled to the core of her and breathless— though by no means dumb. Women are never dumb with admiration.

"O sir!" she breathed in ecstasy—"it's a real creashun!"

"Daresay," Staff conceded sourly. "Did you find a note?"

"And the price-tag, sir—it says twen-ty pounds!"

"I hope there's a receipted bill, then. Do you see anything remotely resembling a note—or something?"

With difficulty subduing her transports—"I'll see, sir," said Milly.

Grunting with exasperation, Staff bent over a trunk and stuffed things into it until Milly committed herself to the definite announcement. "I don't seem to find nothing, sir."

"Look again, please."

Again Milly pawed the tissue-paper. "There ain't nothing at all, sir," she declared finally.

Staff stood up, thrust his hands into his pockets and champed the stem of his pipe—scowling.

"It is a bit odd, sir, isn't it?—having this sent to you like this and you knowing nothing at all about it!"

Staff said something indistinguishable because of the obstructing pipe-stem.

"It's perfectly beautiful, sir—a won'erful hat, really."

"The devil fly away with it!"

"Beg pardon, sir?"

"I said, I'm simply crazy about it, myself."

"Oh, did you, sir?"

"Please put it back and tie it up."

"Yessir." Reluctantly Milly restored the creation to its tissue-paper nest. "And what would you wish me to do with it now, sir?" she returned when at length the ravishing vision was hidden away.

"Do with it?" stormed the vexed gentleman. "I don't care what the d—ickens you do with it. It isn't my hat. Take it away. Throw it into the street. Send it back to the place it came from. Give it. . . . or, wait!"

Pausing for breath and thought, he changed his mind. The hat was too valuable to be treated with disrespect, no matter who was responsible for the mistake. Staff felt morally obligated to secure its return to the Maison Luicille.

"Look here, Milly . . ."

"Yessir?"

"I'll just telephone . . . No! Half a minute!"

FASHION FANCIES

CLOTHES FOR THE SUMMER VACATION.

Once away from town, simple clothes are preferable, and this year, whether one is at the beach or in the mountains, they will be the main wear during the day.

The vogue of all-day sports clothes was particularly noticeable this spring at such smart resorts as White Sulphur and Hot Springs, where the best-dressed women wore skirts and sweaters from daylight to dusk, merely changing to an informal dinner dress in the evening. One cannot have too great a variety of sweaters, especially in light colors, to wear with white skirts. The vogue of figured sweaters is still pronounced, and the Faire Isle and Navajo patterns are being worn by the younger people. For the older woman, the tuxedo model is much more suitable and can be had in light or dark colorings, as desired.

For the strenuous young sportswoman the knickerbocker suit has come into general use, being much worn for golf or for long walks. A straight line skirt is very often worn with it and thus the wearer may be absolutely conventional in her less active moments.

Tub silks are always very practical on account of being easily laundered. The same applies to all varieties of crepe, both silk and cotton.

In planning her vacation wardrobe the wise woman will include only those things that will not require a great deal of laundering and fabrics that are not easily crushed. This is particularly true of underthings. She should include a few glove silk garments that may be easily washed and some silk crepe blouses and dresses.

If she takes along an electric iron and a folding aluminum ironing board that will pack into a suitcase she can be entirely independent of laundries and pressers. There will be no need to wear mussed blouses or crushed evening dresses. In buying an iron for travelling, however, it is wise to buy one that may be used on either alternating or direct current as very often the appliances that one can use in one town are quite useless in another.

It is impossible to include a great number of hats in the vacation wardrobe, even if one travels with a wardrobe trunk which has a special compartment to take care of them. The hat should be close-fitting and comfortable; there is nothing worse than fly-away hats, and they cannot fail to spoil the best-planned holiday.

Shoes should be of the flat-heeled variety and may be of white with brown or black bindings, or all white. One pair of dark oxfords for cross country walking or wet days should be included, and a pair of light slippers for the evening.

If you plan to swim, bathing clothes will be of paramount importance to you, and may be of such diverse fabrics as gingham, jersey, satin, taffeta, or velvet. If you are planning a new bathing suit, however, it is well to take your old one along, so that you may always have a dry one for the second swim of the day.

THE ART OF LIVING.

With all the improvements that have been made in recent years in the "art" of living, it is doubtful whether we can get as much out of life as did our forefathers.

They lived more in the open, saw the starry heavens at night, the sunsets and the sunrise, communed with nature until their spirits were attuned to the universe. They were unafraid of hardships, but cowards when it came to practicing deception.

Reverently appreciative of the divine hand that poured out its blessing upon them, they lived and worked by faith, which the men and women of the present era seem to consider of slight use to them, often questioning its value and doubting its virtue.

We are said to be very brave and progressive.

Yet, when everything is considered, we are more afraid of life than were our ancestors; more reluctant to face its hard problems and less prone to be honest with one another.

Our forefathers laboured for existence; we fight for luxury and ease.

They were happy in their homes with their loved ones, glad to be with them in the evening and sorry to leave them in the morning.

The present generation is not contented anywhere, at home or abroad, constantly seeking adventure, roaming from place to place in quest of contentment and finding it not.

In the larger cities, especially in the east, the love of home and home surroundings is but a ghost of such home-love as that exhibited by Washington, Lincoln, McKinley and Roosevelt.

So, it would seem, that in one way or another, our modern mode of living, instead of building up home ties, strengthening them and bringing families and kin closer together, is forcing humans apart and breaking up goodly fellowship of mankind.

Where is to be found, except possibly in the rural districts, that staunch friendship which existed among neighbors only a little while ago.

Where is to be seen that fine, sympathetic love of noble women, who, at the cry of a neighbor, would lay aside their own pressing duties to nurse the sick, or provide in winter food and raiment for the destitute?

In our little journey through life are we in our pride, luxury and selfishness forgetting the first commandment—making gods of gold and bowing down to them and serving them?

Turning our backs upon homes and home-mates, where are we going?

"EXPERIENCE" SCORES BIG HIT

George Fitzmaurice's Paramount production of "Experience" scored heavily on its first presentation at Griffin's last night. It proved to be an artistic delight for all who behold the photoplay.

The story is allegorical and deals with the adventures of a youth who goes to the city to make his fortune and who meets with temptation, ignores opportunity and giving way to pleasure, fails miserably. But love who has followed him beckons him home again where he finds happiness and the love he had ignored.

The picture is quite charming and a reminder of "Everywoman" in treatment. Richard Barthelmess is the featured player and others in the cast who did excellent work are John Miltern, Marjorie Daw, Edna Wheaton, E. J. Ratcliffe, Betty Carpenter, Kate Bruce, Nita Naldi and Lylian Tashman. The picture constitutes a veritable fashion show and the scenic investiture is of the richest description. It is well worth seeing.

"Chums" an amusing 2 reel comedy featuring Baby Peggy and Brownie the Wonder dog, a Travelogue, and a interesting chapter of the adventure play "With Stanley in Africa", were exhibited during the evening.

Sports in Britain

Golf.

The qualifying stage of the open golf championship at Sandwich, Kent, has enabled visiting players to show to great advantage. One round of 18 holes was played on the Prince's links and another round over the St. George's links, the leading 80 going forward for the competition proper at the end of the week.

J. Kirkwood, of Australia, fully justified the confidence of his many admirers, and this overseas representative of the Empire did splendidly, with rounds of 75 and 72—total, 147. Walter Hagen, of the United States, had a like return, and he really should have saved two strokes. Two fours at the last two holes would have given him a record score of 69, but he made a mess of his iron shots and took five and six.

A Scot came next in Jock Hutchison (the holder), who followed up a fine first round of 71 with 78—total, 149. He now represents America, as does Jim Barnes, the tall Cornishman, who had rounds of 88 and 72. One of the surprises was the forward position of A. J. Miles, of London, whose return of 150 gave him fourth place.

It gave general satisfaction to see Harry Vardon so well up, the six times open champion having a total of 152. With Abe Mitchell and H. R. Wethered claiming a like total, the old and new element is well represented. Wethered, it will be remembered, was the moral winner last year, but through accidentally stepping on his ball, he lost a stroke and only tied with Hutchison, losing the replay. C. J. H. Tolley, the amateur champion of 1920, had a total of 156, whilst W. I. Hunter, last year's amateur champion, and G. Duncan were well down among thise who qualified, with 160.

Lawn Tennis.

England has been under something resembling a cloud in the lawn tennis world since the great days of the late brothers Doberty and Mr. Lambert Chambers. Possibly Miss K. McKane may eventually climb high among lady players, her success in the Kent championship being a big performance. Having defeated Mrs. Mallory, the American champion, in the semi-final by two sets to one (6—1, 2—6, 6—3), she had to meet Miss Ryan, of California, in the final. In this she showed splendid judgment and increased confidence, taking two sets at 6—6. The result will certainly inspire her for the open championship at Wimbledon, in which Mlle. Lenglen is expected to defend her title.

Some progress has been made in the Davis Cup tournament, and by virtue of victory over Italy, Great Britain qualified for the second round. All-India also prevailed against Roumania, and so goes into the next stage. Home players are mainly concerned in the possibility of Australia regaining the cup for the Empire, as it is recognised that the prospects of the English team is small.

Boxing.

The idea that Kid Lewis would be affected by his defeat at the hands of Georges Carpentier and unable to show his best form against Frankie Burns of Australia this week was soon exploded. The match was staged by the National Sporting Club at Holland Park Hall, and it proved a capital wind-up to the season. Early in the opening round Burns tried his luck with the right, but the result must have disappointed him. Lewis was too elusive and got in two terrific uppercuts and a fine right punch to the jaw as counters. After that, Burns appeared to realize that he had a very tough proposition in front of him. Still he made a capital impression by his defensive tactics, clever swaying and ducking enabling him to last eleven rounds. It is no small performance to stand before Lewis for that time, and more so when the Londoner had superior speed and hitting power.

The end was nearly reached in the ninth round, when Burns was down for eight seconds as the result of a left swing to the paw. He was just able to last out the round and by clever tactics stayed through the tenth. Lewis forced matters in the eleventh round, and following heavy blows to the stomach and head, landed a right hook to the jaw which put Burns down for the full count. Burns created an excellent impression by his display of pluck and defensive methods, but he lacked the ring craft of Lewis, who also had the upper hand in regard to speed and hitting power.

Busy Athletes.

Nine nations will be represented at the coming amateur athletic championships, the festival promising to be the greatest international treat seen in England since the Olympic games in 1908. Many of the star performers were competing on Saturday. E. D. Mountain, the half mile champion, has now left Cambridge and is a civil servant in London. He made his first appearance as a Government athlete by taking part in a mile race for the Strathcona Cup at the Civil Service sports held at Stamford Bridge. He probably thought he had an easy thing on and took matters too confidently in the final sprint to the tape, allowing himself to be caught on the post by W. F. Chambers, a young runner who will do big things some day.

Another important London meeting was held at Herne Hill, where W. A. Hill, the sprint champion of 1919, scored a capital double He led off by winning the open 100 yards from the 1½ yards mark in 10 2-5 seconds against the wind. Later in the day he won the furlong from the three-yard mark and his improved form is opportune, as H. Edward, the present sprint champion, is suffering from a break down.

A Record Sprint.

Another noteworthy happening in Scotland on Saturday was seen at the Dundee Hibernians' sports, where W. A. Applegarth is stated to have run the 100 yards in 9 3-5 seconds. He was amateur champion in 1914 and won the world's professional championship from Jack Donaldson in 1915, and apparently is as fast as ever. The previous best 100 yards in England was Donaldson's 9⅘ seconds at Manchester in 1912, whilst he did 9 3-8 seconds at Johannesburgh in 1910.—A. B. George, in Montreal Gazette.

WOMEN MUST NOT PREACH IN CHURCH

Bishops Prohibit Deaconesses from Taking Part in Services

London, July 6.—The lower house of convocation of the Church of England at Canterbury to-day approved of the report of the committee appointed at the Lambeth conference in 1920, to consider the subject of the work of deaconesses in the church, as presented yesterday, but with two amendments which were carried by large majorities. These prohibit deaconesses from reading morning and evening prayers in the church and prohibit them from preaching at church services.

It was finally agreed, though, that with the approval of the bishop, deaconesses should be allowed to speak and pray in consecrated buildings to congregations of women and children, but not at the regular appointed services. The house requested the archbishop to have the measure embodied in a formal document.

In the committee's report it was recommended that deaconesses be permitted to read morning and evening prayers in the church, and, with the approval of the bishop, lead in church prayer and instruct and exhort the congregation.

very important evidence to give.

Constable's Evidence.

Provincial Constable Robert Davis was the first witness. He told of having taken charge of the remains of the deceased on the morning of June 30th. He said: "I moved the body from the barn where it was lying on a door, to the house. The body was in a corn bin. I then summoned the jury, and was present when the jury viewed the body."

Dr. Walter C. Morgan, of Roslin, told of having known deceased for 2½ years, and of hearing of the murder on the morning of the 30th of June.

"Lying on His Face."

"I went down to the barn and found Mr. Moult lying with his face down, and covered by canvas, boards and rags. He was lying on the side of his face and there was considerable blood around We laid him on a loose door, and found a wound on his head. It was a circular, indented wound, 1½ inches in diameter and about 3 inches above the left eye. There was a small perforation in the centre of the wound, from which blood oozed. There had been considerable blood lost, possibly ½ pint. There was blood on his hat also. When the coroner arrived and ordered a post mortem examination I arranged for it, and conducted it that afternoon along with Dr. Tower. I found that the wound was a perforating wound of the skull, being a hole right through the head, and this indicated that the wound was caused by a 22 calibre bullet, I would say. The person who shot the rifle would have to be higher than the deceased by say an angle of 45°. I examined his clothing and there were no indications of a scuffle."

Dr. Morgan then read the terms of the examination to the jurymen,, stating that there had been a hemorrhage of the brain, and a slight fracture of the inner table of the skull and a hole through both hemispheres of the cerebrum. Death occurred about 24 hours before post mortem examination. There were no other causes of death evident in the body.

Coroner Boyce—"Do you think he could have inflicted the wound himself?"

Witness—"It would be very inconvenient, and I do not think he did it himself."

Wound Not Self-Inflicted.

Dr. James L. Tower, who assisted Dr. Morgan on the post mortem examination, corroborated Dr. Morden's evidence.

"We took exceptional pains with the examination" he said "and my opinion is that the wound was not self-inflicted. I believe that the bullet had not travelled a great distance for if it had, the wound would not be so clean, and not clear through the head. We searched for the bullet but could not find it. I think deceased had been dead at least 24 hours before I arrived on the afternoon of the 30th of June.

Lilly Mae Moult, widow of the dead man was next witness. She testified that on 14th of July her husband would have been 42 years of age, and that she had lived there with him since her marriage to him in 1916.

"In disposition and temperament he was about the best man I ever knew," said witness, "and I know of nothing that had happened that would cause him to commit the deed himself. He had no business worries that I know of, and his finances were alright. I never noticed him gloomy lately. I knew all his business. He worked very hard, on the land that we worked.

Hired Barrie.

"We hired Alberta Phillips to assist us in our work. She has been there since April 17th. Previous to this Margaret Robinson had worked as a housemaid from Christmas until she had to go home to her mother. Mrs. Downey told us that Miss Phillips would work, as Mr. Moult had been trying to get someone to help in the house, as the children were all ill at that time. Mrs. Downey said she was a good, smart girl. We also later hired a boy, Maurice Barrie.

Mr. Butler, of the firm Porter, Butler and Payne, then stated that he was present in the interests of Maurice Barrie, and wished to be recognized by the court in that connection.

"Barrie had lived in that district some years ago," continued Mrs. Moult. "He came to the door one evening this spring, with a suit case and enquired for Wesley Moult. I sent him to the barn where Wes was. They both came into the house, and Wes introduced him, and kept him all night. He talked much. Margaret Robinson, was working there then also. He went out to the barn in the morning, and he hired with Wes for the summer. He had visited at Cleavely's here in Belleville, and Cleavely had sent him out to Wes for work. Cleavely worked at our place last winter also. Barrie was dressed in a soldiers' uniform, and had a belt with shells in it. He left the belt and gun at our house when he went to Belleville, and when he returned he had a suitcase with him. He was to receive $25 per month wages. The bargain was made at the barn, and Wes told me of the bargain. He commenced work about March 1st

Was Not Lazy.

"I think this was the bargain for 8 months. I sleep downstairs with the children, and Maurice occupied the south-east bedroom upstairs, but slept in the hallway at first for a while. Wes said he was not lazy but willing to learn, although he knew little of farming. He is 19 years of age. Wes treated him very well. He could drive a car before he came to our place, and Wes always let him have a horse if he wanted to go any where. There were times when Wes, suspecting that Maurice had not watered the horses, would try them himself, and he thought that they had not been watered, though Maurice said they had. The horses would drink a great deal. Maurice was also corrected by Wes for not milking the cows cleaner. We milk 14 cows, and Maurice assisted Wes and I at the milking. Maurice did not help much about the house, not being asked to do so. He was quite a boy for firearms. He had an army rifle, but Wes had no firearms that I know off. Maurice also had a revolver for the girl found one under his pillow when she made his bed. They had also borrowed a 22 calibre rifle early in the spring from Mr. Sargent, a neighbor, to kill woodchucks. This rifle was kept in the drive house, west of the house. They had the rifle out on the morning of the 29th people say. Sometimes the men took the guns to the fields with them when they went to work. I have seen Maurice take his rifle apart several times, and saw him shooting the army rifle off 4 or 5 times against the hill. saeaings w le.f,w7op noFbetM,ftTho. i This practice was discontinued, and occurred shortly after Maurice came to work at our place.

Words About the House.

Continuing, Mrs. Moult said: "Maurice was visited by George Goodfellow recently, a neighboring farmer's son. Maurice and Wes had a few words concerning a horse on the morning of the 29th of June. Maurice had the horse out on the night of the 28th and the horse wouldn't eat his oats the next morning. Wes asked him if the horse had got away from him or if he knew what was the matter with old Fred: Maurice didn't eat much breakfast as he had been hit in the face with a baseball while playing at Plainfield the evening before. They were going to plough. They both went out, and Maurice returned, went to either his bed room or the dining room, and then went out. This was the morning of the 29th of June. I saw Maurice standing in the drive shed door at 10.45 a.m. that morning, for I looked at the clock just after seeing him to see how long I had before dinner to work on a job of carding wool for the manufacture of blankets. I next saw Wes driving in from the road with the grey team and the 3 children with him in the democrat.

"I was carding the wool out on the grass north of the house. He unhitched and came into dinner. About 12 o'clock, Wes said, "What time did Maurice come up?" I told him of seeing him at 10.25, and Wes then said that Maurice had not emptied the whey. He then said they had better eat, and not wait for Maurice. He was usually on time. We next saw Maurice when I went to the barn to get feed for the chickens shortly after dinner. Wes told the girl that she had better go and hunt Maurice as probably he had jumped in the well. Then he said, I wonder if he would be upstairs sick?"

Barrie Was Missing.

"I went upstairs and he was not there. We went to the barn to hunt for Maurice, and that is the last I ever saw of him. That would scarcely be 1 o'clock Maurice is a cigarette smoker. After I got the grain out of the barrell inside the barn door, for the purpose of feeding the chickens, I saw Maurice standing in the horse stable door, with the lower half of the door closed. He said, "Wes has gone back to the fields." I thought possibly there had been some differences between Wes and Maurice, and that possibly that was the reason that Maurice had not come in to dinner. He then came to the house following me, and he was in the house after I had returned from having also given water to the chickens. He said he didn't want any dinner, and I told him he had better have the pudding anyway.

"About 2 p.m. that day Maurice asked me if I wanted anything at the store. He had never done this before. He then went, either ino the dining room or upstairs, and when he came down in a few minutes, he asked me the question again. He then took the car and drove towards Plainfield. I do not know whether he had a gun or not. He went away alone and returned alone in about one hour. He came in with a dish pan which he had purchased, and said it cost 75 cents. He wasn't so sociable as he had been. I saw him about the drive shed afterwards, with a loop of wire. He had been working at the car, washing machine and gasoline engine. This would be about 4 p.m.

"Not be in for Supper.

"Maurice came in the house about 5 p.m. and he had been away with the car again, while I had been picking strawberries. He said "Wes will not be home for supper." He came from the east in the car. I do not know where he was between the time that he brought in the dishpan and the time he came in to the house at 5 p.m. and said Wes would not be in for supper, but he would be back for milking. I asked him where he saw Wes, and he said that he had met Wes and he had given him the 22 rifle for Wes was going back to fix a fence and also to Mr. Hamilton's to see how the colts were doing. I was displeased, as his explanation seemed unfair. I went out to feed the chickens, and a life Insurance agent who had arrived, asked for Wes. I told the agent(Mr. Salisbury) to ask Maurice. Maurice put the cows in the stable that evening. I believe.

"Mr. Salisbury talked to Maurice for quite awhile, and finally came down to the house. Mr. Salisbury said that Maurice had told him that Wes would not be home until late. Maurice was present then, and I said out of annoyance, that Wes must be lost. The agent left and we had supper about 6 or after. Maurice did not talk about Wes during the meal, and went to the barn afterwards. I went and helped to milk with Maurice. Maurice was milking when I arrived. I milked 4 cows. I later remarked to Maurice that Wes must have broken his leg or sprained his ankle. He offered to run back to see if he could find Wes, but shaved before doing so. He went out the lane towards the pasture field, and back but was not gone long. He said he didn't see him, and I asked him to run over to Dan Coffey's and tell Dan to come over as I was now becoming anxious.

Gone to Shannonville.

"He was gone long enough to be over to Coffey's but I found out later he did not go there at all. He said Dan had gone to Shannonville for repairs for the mower and wouldn't be back until 10 p'clock. I said if Wes had not returned at 10 p.m. I would get my brother, Murney Wilson, and Charlie Sargent to search for him. He said, "that gives him three quarters of an hour to return." I immediately began to look at him serjously when he made that speech. He said I was foolish to be worrying."

A NEW ELECTRIC FURNACE

It will be remembered that during the war a very extensive use was made in British factories of the electric furnace for the production of special steels and other alloys. The development of this field has since been continued, and demonstrations were given recently of a remarkably successful electric furnace for the melting of brass and other alloys not containing iron. The furnace takes the shape of a barrel and is heated by means of an electric arc. When the metallic contents are melted the barrel is rotated in order to mix the alloy thoroughly. It is claimed for this furnace that it produces alloys much more cheaply than is possible on any previous system.

A NEW BRITISH GLASS WORKS

Vigorous efforts have been made during the last few years in Great Britain to establish various forms of glass production which were previously, for one reason or another, carried out abroad. The latest of these new developments is the completion of a large factory chiefly for the purpose of making glassware used in chemical and other laboratories. The highest scientific assistance has been engaged on this enterprise, one of the collaborators being one of the chief founders of the British Society of Glass Technology, which was established in Great Britain for the purpose of stimulating scientific research in the manufacture of glass. Remarkably successful results have already been reached by this Society.

VICTIM OF A STROKE

Mrs. Wesley Hawley a resident of Bronson, North Hastings was on Monday the victim of a paralytic stroke which proved fatal shortly after. A husband and grown up family survive. Mrs. Hawley was apparently in her usual health when she was stricken.

ALLOWED FREEDOM.

The three men arrested by Detective Sergeant J. Truaisch on Thursday morning were allowed their freedom today, and ordered to leave the city immediately. They did so, but will be just one day behind the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, which they were following.

AXLE OF CAR BROKE

A Kingston party which left that city on Wednesday for Belleville for the purpose of attending a conference met with a accident near Napanee. An axle of his car broke and the party narrowly escaped serious results. The Kingstonians were compelled to remain in Napanee over night and returned to Kingston Thursday morning.

SYSTEMATIC WORK

An idea of the rapidity, with which the administration of a huge circus works, was readily appreciated when it was learned to-day that the last of the four trains of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey show, had arrived in Toronto this morning at 5 A.M.

All the monster tents and property was very rapidly transported to the Grand Trunk Depot immediately after the night performance, and loaded, throngs of the citizens journeying down to the depot to see the men at their work. The circus was handled over the Grand Trunk Railway.

WAR GUILT IS DISCUSSED

Premier Poincare Says England's Hesitation Encouraged the Kaiser

Paris, July 6. That the Kaiser would have hesitated to make war eight years ago if England, in response to Poincare's letter to King George, had not hung back for the fateful two days, was the French Premier's assertion this afternoon on the second day of the debate on the war guilty.

The Communists say Poincare was largely responsible for hostilities, but they failed again today to advance convincing evidence.

The session was given over to a detailed analysis by Poincare of the events leading up to the war, beginning with Agadir, and there were frequent scenes of enthusiasm, deputies crowding on to the floor and cheering any particularly emotional memory. The Chamber of Deputies these days is a house of emotions.

Poincare made two new revelations: First, that the German ultimatum to Belgium was written in Berlin, July 26; second, that the Germans had offered not to invade France if France would allow them to ocupy Toul and Verdun, while the war was being carried on against Russia.

The Premier said he also believed in the late Emperor Charles' sincerity when he tried to arrange for a separate peace in the last year of the war, but "the unfortunate young man was no longer the master of his own people."

NEW CHEQUE TAX AUGUST 1

Ottawa, July 7.—Some confusion apparently has arisen with regard to the date when the new stamp tax on cheques will come into force. An official announcement yesterday intimates that the new rate of two-cent stamp tax for every fifty dollars of the amount of money for which the cheque is drawn up to, but not exceeding $5,000, will become effective on August 1 next. Cheques drawn for any amount exceeding $5,000 will be subject to the same stamp tax as those drawn for $5,000, namely, two dollars.

Belleville Industries Continue to Expand visitors will undoubtedly come to Belleville to witness the operation of the new furnace and acquire information as to its capacity and dependability. Delivery is promised about September 1, and the installation will take place during that month.

The electric furnace has not been a pronounced success in Canada up to the present time and it appears that it has not altogether yet passed the experimental stage. The furnaces of this type that have been tried out at Montreal and elsewhere have, in the main, been discontinued because their operation was too expensive or too complicated. The "Lectro-Melt", however, is now well past the experimental period of development and is undoubtedly a pronounced and practical success. So much so, indeed, that the Ford Company of Detroit, the Studebaker Corporation and a number of similar important users of iron and steel in the United States have adopted this latter furnace and testify to its efficiency in most glowing terms.

Important Industry.

Messrs. Turner and Daniels made a prolonged and careful investigation before making their new purchase and they have the utmost confidence that they are engaging in an enterprise in which success is already assured. In any event they have been promised contracts for the delivery of castings that will keep the furnace running to capacity for an indefinite period. Indeed, the prospects are that within a very short time other units will need to be added to keep up with the growing demand and it is confidently asserted that within a comparatively brief period of time there will be established at Belleville, one of the most extensive and important industries of its kind in the Dominion.

The market for this class of goods is practically unlimited. "Lectro-Melt" will turn out as its principal product, steel castings. The composition of this can be varied to suit requirements, but those who are at all acquainted with the comparative tensile strength of iron and steel castings as well as the comparative wearing qualities, do not need to be convinced of the great preponderance in favor of steel.

Belleville to be Congratulated.

The Electric Furnace Corporation will send to Belleville several of its best engineers to superintend the installation of the new plant so that it will enter upon its work under the best auspices and make a showing worthy of the new process and the important corporation acting as its promoter. It might also be mentioned in passing that the Electric Furnace Corporation has also investigated the standing of the men behind National Castings Limited, and would not agree to fill the order until assured of the standing and dependability of those who will be responsible for the introduction of the new process to Canada.

Belleville is to be congratulated on the acquirement of so important and promising an industry with so large a field in which to work and men of skill, energy and enterprise as its promoters.

NEW HOSPITAL AT MUSKOKA

Corner Stone Laid by Lady Gage of New Building

Gravenhurst, July 6.—The cornerstone of the main building of the new Muskoka Hospital for Consumptives was laid yesterday by Lady Gage. The new building, of which the west wing is already well toward completion, replaces the hospital which was burned in November, 1920.

The invitation to Lady Gage to lay the corner-stone was a tribute to her late husband, Sir William Gage, who was the real founder of the work carried on in Muskoka. The new building will house 189 patients.

One of the original workers with Sir William Gage was Mr. Ambrose Kent, of Toronto. Mr. Kent was present yesterday, and in a short address said he acted as a link between the past and the future. He came to Muskoka on snowshoes in company with Sir William Gage 26 years ago, and together they marked out the site for the cottage hospital.

WORKMEN SEIZE TOWN IN SAXONY

Berlin, July 6.—Following the outbreak of civil war at various points in Germany yesterday, as a consequence of the demonstrations against the Monarchists, workmen and other radical members of the three Socialist parties to-night are in possession of the town of Zwickau, Saxony, and have the police beseiged in the local barracks.

It is said the police at first threatened to fight their way through the demonstrants—there were 80,000 of them—but realizing their numerical inferiority, they submitted to being besieged.

Workmen's patrols have now taken charge of the policing of the town. The Saxon Government is withholding reinforcements for the present in the hope that the violent feeling will subside.

BANDITS ROB PAYMASTERS IN MONTREAL TODAY

Montreal, July 7.—Four men held up two paymasters of the Dominion Textile Company as they were returning to the plant this morning, with the week's pay roll, and escaped with $29,000.

Money was being carried in a taxicab from the Royal Bank in St. James street to St. Henry, and when nearing the plant, a brick was thrown through the windshield of the car. The driver pulled up, smothered with pieces of glass, and bandits surrounded the car and demanded the money at the point of revolvers.

GERMAN FINANCIAL COLLAPSE IS SAID TO BE IMMINENT

German Nation Is on the Verge Of Bankruptcy

The Collapse of German Mark May Mean That Germany Will be Unable to Meet Her Debts Due Next Week—Sir George Paish Says France is to Blame.

TENSION IN BERLIN, NO PAPERS ISSUED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 8.—The collapse of the German mark is accompanied by reports that Germany will be unable to meet her July reparations payment, due a week from to-day. Sir George Paish, eminent financier who belongs to that section of publicists here who condemned France's attitude on reparations, alleges in the Westminster Gazette that the Entente Allies, particularly France, deliberately choose the policy intended to prevent the recovery of Germany, and that the very success of their policy is proving their own undoing.

Berlin, July 7.—Germany is about to declare herself bankrupt, it was authoritatively announced to-day.

The complete collapse of the mark has brought the republic to the verge of financial ruin.

Trustworthy sources confirmed the report that Germany must refuse to pay the reparations installment due July 15. The Wirth government will ask for a moratorium, it was announced.

Unprecedented nervousness prevailed in Berlin to-day. The city was without newspapers. As the result of authentic information, baseless rumors spread rapidly.

One report was that General Von Hindenburg and Prince Eitel Friedrich had been murdered, but this was semi-officially denied.

Down in New York

New York, July 7.—Cables received from Paris and Berlin during the past twenty-four hours intimating that Germany is on the verge of complete financial collapse are declared largely responsible for a further severe drop in the value of German currency in the New York market today. Marks fell to the level of 100 for 18½ cents, which is almost 3 cents per hundred under the price ruling yesterday.

The Board of General Purposes is holding preliminary sessions on July 17th and the Grand Lodge will be opened on July 19th. A splendid programme of entertainment has been arranged by the Fort William brethren.

PRISONERS ATTACK GUARDS

Ottawa, July 8.—A desperate attempt to escape from the Carleton county jail was made yesterday morning when two prisoners after escaping from the close confinement of cells, locked Guard F. Whitehorn in a corridor, and then with bricks and hardwood attacked Turnkey C. P. Dawson, who was attempting to liberate his brother guard.

After a battle which lasted for upwards of fifteen minutes, the two men were overpowered and taken to the condemned cells, where they are now chained and padlocked to the steel bars of their cells.

CHILD PREACHER IN BELLEVILLE

Will Conduct Evangelistic Services at the Baptist Church

Mary Agnes Vitchestain, the child preacher, who will be at the Baptist church here on Tuesday next for four days, has been preaching the Gospel since she was nine years of age, she having been introduced to the public at that early age. She is regarded by thousands who have heard her as the most remarkable pulpit orator for her age in the world.

Before she was ten years old she was licensed to preach the Gospel, she through her ministry having won hundreds of souls to Christ prior to receiving a license. Shortly after she had passed the age of nine years she was baptized, she preaching her own Baptismal Sermon to the largest congregation which had ever assembled in the Mount Washington Baptist Church, Pittsburg. Her desire to preach became a passion with her, the astounding part of her young ambitions being a hungering for religious work when neither her father or mother had had any connection with the ministry whatsoever.

Long before the age of nine years it was her custom to call the family together in the evening and insist upon preaching to them. She with her young sister, Jessie, now aged eleven years, would insist on holding an evening meeting and without apparent preparation Mary Agnes would preach, keeping up her discourse for at least an hour at times. Thus she later became known to outsiders and was invited to preach in public auditoriums. She has never shown any evidence of fears no matter how large the crowd may be and she has spoken to thousands in a meeting. In Akron Ohio, two thousand were turned away unable to gain entrance. The child is not mechanical and has no studied gestures. She is perfectly natural and speaks with exceptional fluency, frequently holding her audience spell bound. She is able to use the most exacting scientific terms with ease and her messages are pointed for the purpose of winning souls.

COSTLY MIDNIGHT PRANK.

Toronto, July 8. At the Police Court yesterday, David Thompson, colored, complained that John Sliney, Harry Jennings and Tom Wilson had forced the door of his bedroom in Sliney's Hotel, Schomberg, for the purpose of taking him out and ducking him in the hotel horsetrough at midnight.

Jennings denied being at the scene of the assault.

Wilson admitted he went up to complainant's room to see some fun and because of his reticent manner of giving evidence was warned by the Major to tell the truth.

Sliney, son of the hotel proprietor, stated that he was not in Thompson's room, and said: "We only wanted him down to sing some songs."

Wilson and Sliney were told by the Major that both of them were self-convicted liars and that he would recommend their being prosecuted for perjury

"If this poor old black man had been strong enough to fight you, you poor cowards would have been afraid to attack him. I will fine you $5 each or three months," said His Honor.

THE HIKE IS OFF RILEY IS "RILED"

The Second March of "General Riley's Army is Abandoned

Toronto, July 7.—The second march of "General" Riley's army to Ottawa is off for the time being at least. Addressing the mass meeting in Queen's Park last night, the hikers' leader said that they could not get more than one hundred to make the trip, and at the same time he scored Mayor Maguire for failing to attend the meeting after he had been invited. "But," he added, "you realize that you men are not the Kiwanis club, so his worship is not here."

The "general" said that he had taken 150 cases of distress to the city hall, but he refused to hand these over for investigation to ladies' aid and social service. He would bring a deputation of needy cases to the city hall to-day and all the cases of distress on Saturday. He also announced that they intended to stand by the hiker who had been arrested and took exception to the magistrate "sneering at the boy who risked his life at the front."

Harry Price, another speaker, also attacked the mayor and the minister of labor. He also criticized the G.W.V.A., who he said were spending enough in sending a man to England unknown soldier to feed a thousand to lay a flag on the grave of the needy cases.

REFUSE TO SELL LIQUOR

Saskatoon, Sask., July 8.—The absolute refusal of druggists present at the meeting to continue the sale of liquor under present conditions and condemnation of the quality obtainable through the Saskatchewan Liquor Commission, was agreed by a standing vote yesterday at the last session of the Saskatchewan Pharmaceutical Association convention here.

One of the largest markets held here for some time was that of to-day and much farm and garden products were offered for sale, also fruit in considerable quantities. Buyers were also present in large numbers and purchases were numerous.

Fresh dairy butter remains stationary in price namely 38c and 40c a pound. A few basket lots were secured at a slightly lower figure.

Fresh laid eggs still command a good price despite the fact that the offerings were large. The ruling prices were 28c and 30c per dozen. Shippers are offering 25c and 26c by the crate lots.

Dressed chickens are rather high in price selling at $2.50 to $3.25 per pair according to size and quality.

Garden products found ready purchasers at fairly good prices. New potatoes sold at 60c a peck, green peas at 35c a quart, string beans 10 cents a box, new cabbage at 10c and 15c each and cauliflowers ranged from 25c to 40c each. Asparagus sold at 15c a bunch.

Cherries were plentiful selling at 10c a quart, red raspberries 25c and 30c a box and a few strawberries at 20c a box. Two lots of huckleberries were offered for sale and sold at 40c and 45c a quart. Red and black currants sold at 20c and 25c respectively a box.

BANDITS SEIZE THE PAY ROLL

Hold up Car and Get Away With $29,000

(Can. Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 8.—The police drag thrown out to catch the authors of yesterday's daylight hold-up in which the paymasters of the Dominion Textile Company were robbed of $29,000, had to-day picked up three suspects. It is belief of the police that the bandits came originally from the United States. It is thought that they crossed into Ontario, stole an automobile, came to Montreal, committed robbery and then made for the border at once.

Montreal, July 8.—Four men held up employes of the Dominion Textile Company as they were returning to the plant yesterday morning with the week's pay roll, and took $29,000.

The money was being carried by two paymasters in a taxicab from the Royal Bank's head office, St. James street, to the company's plant in St. Henri, at the extreme west end of the city.

When nearing the plant, a brick was thrown through the windshield of the car. Smothered with pieces of glass, the driver pulled up. The bandits surrounded the car on all sides and demanded the money at the point of revolvers.

According to details of the hold-up supplied to the police, it appears the bandits must have followed the paymaster's taxi from the bank in a car of their own. They decided to hold up the taxi when it was stopped in the street at a level crossing, over which a train was passing.

After the robbery one of the bandits lifted up the hood of the taxi and pulled out wires there, apparently with the intention of crippling the motor. He only succeeded in pulling out the horn wires.

With their booty the bandits speeded off towards the centre of the city. The car they rode had an Ontario number, which was supplied to the police.

The paymasters were armed with revolvers, but the hold-up was conducted so quickly that just as they were about to draw them they found themselves looking into the mouths of automatics from front and sides of the taxi.

Driver of Car Known.

This afternoon Chief of Detectives Lepage said that the car in which the bandits rode had been found and the chauffeur was known to the police. A city-wide hunt was instituted by the police to round up the driver.

Confusion in identifying the number on the car has arisen, as some witnesses of the hold-up think it bore an Ontario number and some a Quebec.

SPECIAL QUARTERS FOR CHILDREN OF CLUB MEMBERS

New York, July 8.—Members of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Club who attend the organization's fourth annual convention in Chattanooga July 10-16, will be able to park their babies when they attend sessions.

The federation announces that special quarters will be set aside for the infants, with trained nurses in attendance. Every diet and amusement that a child could need or desire will be provided in the nursery.

Dr. Bertha Maxwell Huntington of Williamsport, president of the Pennsylvania State Federated, was the first mother to announce she intended bringing her youngster.

GAMBLERS IN POLICE COURT

Five Men Assessed $10 and Costs Each To-day

The police court was graced this morning by the presence of five gentlemen who rather than go to kirk on the sabbath, evidently prefer to play cards. But that's not all. They were playing for five cents a corner (just to make it interesting), and had been doing so on Saturday afternoons and Sundays for months.

The police here received complaints of the rendezvous, the complainants stating that this sort of "indoor sport" had been going on for months.

As a result, Inspector W. Nugent, assisted by Sergeant D. T. Boyd, Provincial constable F. Hughes and Police Constable Johnston, organized a raid on the house on Sunday night, June 25th at 11 p.m.

The house is an old landmark, just outside the city limits, west of the Exhibition grounds, on the town line. The windows were darkened by a double thickness of blankets, and the house appeared to be an innocent and desolate domicile.

While the officers had the place in view, a member of the "family" came up to the door, rapped the "password, tiddle, tiddle, dum, dum" on the door and was admitted, but when the officers attempted to enter, the door felt like a stone wall. After an entrance had been effected via the kitchen door, it was discovered that a 2" x 4" scantling was propped against the door, to hold the crowd back.

The gentlemen were sitting back, talking about the topics of the day, and everything looked peaceful and homelike. One man, however, disclosed seven packs of playing cards when he arose from his seat on a small table.

A bed, a few chairs and tables were the only furnishing in the house.

As a result of the occurrence Hugh Galloway, Laddy Domosali, Marshall Spafford, James Connelly and John Burke were all fined $10 and costs by Magistrate Masson this morning.

For operating a motor car without lights, a citizen was assessed $5 and costs. This is the sixth case of this nature this week.

FREE STATE GOVT. AFTER DE VALERA

The Whereabouts of Rebel Leader is Still a Mystery

16 DEAD IN FIGHTING

National Troops Capture Skeog House and Take Prisoners

(Canadian Press Despatih)

Dublin, July 8.—It is officially announced that the casualties of the National army in the recent conflict here were sixteen dead and 122 wounded.

Belfast, July 8.—Skeog House, the home of loyalists, the seige of which has played a big part in military operations in County Donegal during the past week, has been captured by National troops with sixty prisoners. The position was strongly fortified by insurgents.

Dublin, July 8.—"Find de Valera" is the order to Free State troops deploying through the southern Irish hills against remaining rebel bands to-day.

Government troops stormed and captured Blessington where the rebel chief was reported hiding, but he was not taken.

A flare-up of civil war was reported from Lifford, where sixty insurgents attacked the Free State barracks. Volleys were poured into the national stronghold for half an hour, but the attackers were beaten off, twelve being wounded.

De Valera, whose whereabouts continue to mystify government forces, managed to fling a defy to the provisional government in the form of a manifesto to the American people. The former president of the republic declared civil war is on, that the Dail has been suppressed and that Collins heads a military dictatorship, backed by British artillery.

London, July 8.—The chief interest in the Irish situation for the moment centres in the operations in the blessington district, 15 miles south of Dublin in the County of Wicklow, owing to the supposition that Eamonn De Valera is with the irregular forces there. The announcement of the final success of Government forces is awaited with considerable confidence.

Childers Wounded.

Erskine Childers, one of De Valera's main supporters and recently reported as commanding the rebels in the area of south of Dublin, is said by a correspondent of the Daily Mirror to have been badly wounded.

Dublin, July 8.—The correspondent of the Daily Express declares that several hundred prisoners already have been taken and that several lorry loads of wounded were sent to Capital.

20,000 Volunteers.

There has been a remarkable response to the Free State Government call for volunteers to assist in putting down the Republican Revolt. In this city alone nearly 20,000 men were enrolled for military service up to last night.

Albert College Summer School

Friday's proceedings of the Summer School being conducted at Albert College.

A Continuous Organization

Students and teachers come and go but the Summer School seems to go on just the same. The personnel changes somewhat each year, particularly on the part of the students. Home and community responsibilities engage attention yet new recruits are being enlisted and trained for service. A few of the ministers leading in this endeavor are just now engrossed with moving to new fields of labor according to the itinerancy of the Methodist church. Yet their zeal for the cause is exemplified in devoting whole or part time to the Summer School in an executive or teaching capacity. If young people could realise in these days of seeking after happiness that a Summer School affords golden opportunities to improve every phase of life, there would be even more present to benefit from the really expert teaching and studies of a missionary.' Bible and methods of work character for Sunday Schools, Leagues and community service. The school at Albert this year has a great advantage in having on the staff one familiar with headquarters knowledge and connection with the Book Room and publishing branch of the church in the person of Rev. Archer Wallace, M.A., associate editor of Methodist and Presbyterian periodicals and supplies at Toronto. Whether in class room, pulpit or on campus he introduces humor into his remarks without lowering at all any prestige due the occasion. For the daily discussion in Round Table, conference of plans and suggestions for Epworth Leagues his helpful experience is invaluable, and first hand information will aid greatly in future to appreciate his versatile writings as an important official affecting Canadian young life.

Book Room Facility

There is on display at the college a splendid assortment of texts and pamphlets on Missions and society helps, especially in connection with juvenile organizations. It is well worth an effort by those interested to inspect if not to buy any such outfits. Where could one wish such a privilige to examine and select the best that is going in modern literature for efficient leadership.

"EXPERIENCE" WITH RECORD-BREAKING CAST AT GRIFFIN'S

A record-breaking cast of characters appears in George Fitzmaurice's latest Paramount picture, "Experience," which is the feature attraction at Griffin's tonight Thirty distinct characters ranging from "Youth", the leading role, played by Richard Barthelmess, and "Love", by Marjorie Daw, to "Prohibition" and "Intoxication", are shown in the screen version of George V. Hobart's popular play. In addition to the huge cast there were more than 500 "extras" used for atmosphere in the "Primrose Path" cabaret and the street and Rathskeller scenes. It is well worth seeing.

"Chums," a Baby Peggy comedy, George Walsh in the latest chapter of "With Stanley in Africa", and an interesting Travelogue are being exhibited in addition to the feature offering

DOROTHY DALTON AND MARIE PREVOST HERE MONDAY.

A picture story of surpassing dramatic interest which will appeal to all Belleville picture fans who saw "Moran of the Lady Letty," is Dorothy Dalton's latest starring vehicle, "The Crimson Challenge," which will be shown on the double feature bill at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday. In Lost Valley, which is dominated by Buck Courtney, a cattle rustler and all around scoundrel, Tharon Last, daughter of a rancher, is the beloved of all. Buck covets her and one day, in a quarrel, slays her father. Tharon swears vengeance and developing into a "two-gun" woman, she finally gets Buck and while she slays him, she is in no sense a murderess. In the development of this dramatic story, a love interest in which Tharon and Billy, a cowpuncher, are the central characters, is finely brought into play.

The picture is filled with thrills and they are of that gripping quality which holds the spectator in suspense from start to finish. Frank Campeau, one of the best known heavies of the screen, has the role of Buck and he vests it with great force and realism. Jack Mower has the role of Billy, and as leading man he does excellent work. The flapper's secret obsession is how to wear clothes, clothes, clothes, in such a manner as to bring out every charm she possesses. Rich girls, poor girls, all girls think of this constantly, and it must be pretty nearly true, for Solomon in all his glory was never arrayed like one of these twentieth century heart-smashers.

All of which brings forth the fact that Marie Prevost, the Universal star whose chief hobby is designing her own clothes for screen appearances, has a few nifty creations of the Long Island 1922 type in her new starring vehicle, "The Dangerous Little Demon," which is the second feature offering on the same program.

Since Marie quit the sea and hung up the raiment of the beach, in which she won her fame as a California peach, she has never worn such ravishing clothes as she wears in this five reel Universal comedy.

URGES WORLD LEAGUE TO BAN POISON GAS

Paris, July 6.—Discussion of the advisability of including the clause of the Washington treaty relating to the use of poisonous gas in the plan submitted by Lord Robert Cecil for disarmament, and adoption of the Cecil plan as a whole without modification, took up the entire session of the disarmament commission of the League of Nations this morning. It was decided to postpone discussion of the poisonous gas clause until such time as the smaller nations shall have been officially supplied with copies of the Washington treaties. Consideration of adoption of the Cecil plan as a whole was reserved for the afternoon session.

LOVE IN A COTTAGE

By Maurice Hewlett

Without going into tedious detail I may claim to be in a position to appraise the possibilities of the situation outlined in the title of this paper, a situation which has been a commonplace of sentimental and romantic poetry ever since there were loves and cottages, and incidentally a commonplace of my own adventures of the kind.

Bubbles as Water.

The earth hath bubbles as the water hath, and these are of them. Such things I dreamed of once, seeing them as in a glass, darkly. Now, however, I know; "but now face to face." To be short with the matter, I live in a cottage, which I never did before. What I know about love must be taken by the reader on trust; what I know about cottages is hot-pressed from the mind.

Well, then, I judge that when the young lover brings his blushing bride into the cottage which he has prepared for her, the first difficulty which will confront him will be that of getting away from her. To the true romantic his beloved is a work of art, a bibelot, and a certain distance is essential to the connoisseur's enjoyment.

It is astonishing, it is embarrassing, how close to each other people are in cottages, and what a public business life becomes. You cannot clean your teeth but the household knows all about it. And of course nothing is more fatal to romance than continued, perennial proximity.

Curiosity dies for want of nourishment in a house where there can be no secrets, and when the object of your worship is too busy to be worshipped, and expects any tribute of that kind to take the form of active co-operation—what is the worshipper to do but take off his coat?

Drudgery in the Cottage.

It is odd that the smaller the house is the more there should be to do in it; yet the fact is not to be disputed. Drudgery! Take "washing-up," that Nemesis of the hearty meal. The vision of the beloved in a becoming pinafore, performing household chores with rounded arms and cheeks flushed with happy exertion, is a charming one, full of romance. A young man on his honeymoon might smoke a pipe over that, in ecstasy. But let the job be performed several times a day within a few feet of him,

And by the vision splendid—be is no more attended. No, but
At length the man perceives it die away.
And fade into the light of common
day.

Far worse, and fatal to the course of true love of the high poetic kind would be Monday's affair; for your Monday is the real washing-day, when, as it were, the whole fabric of your castle in Spain goes out in a vapour of water and yellow soap. If romantic love on Mondays does not fly out of the window, it is certain that the lover escapes by the door—which, of course, he should have been careful to do at daylight or before. There would not be the happy married lives there are in every average village if the man were at home during the day. There is no room for a man in a cottage while work is to be done.

There is love in many a cottage, but not of the kind which poets report. The apotheosis of physical charm, which is what that comes to, is out of the cottager's way. An elementary acquaintance with village life is enough to assure you that good looks have very little to do with the matter, if anything.

Proximity, a little liking, mutual respect, mutual convenience—these things, which have nearly everything to do with it, are also things which the narrowness of cottage quarters can only affect favorably. If liking, for instance, has followed upon nearness, it may well continue in it, that is, in a cottage, where everything is within touching distance of everything else. But that is the death of romantic love, which is born of remoteness and cannot thrive at close quarters.

Where Poets are Wrong.

The romantic lover sees the beloved as a star. Perhaps he loves her best by report, as Geoffroi Rudel loved the Princess of Tripoli. All went well until he was so ill-advised as to pay her a visit. That killed him, because it killed the very saviour of his love. If he had lived with her in a cottage, probably he would have killed her; for loathing follows quick upon the traces of defeated love.

Your true romantic, in fact, is the high-sniffing devotee of a rickety idol. He perches the poor lady so high that she is bound to over-balance herself. Or she will slide down from her pedestal and begin to do something—and then where is his devotion?

The romantic values his love by the difficulty of getting at her. Put her in a tower of brass, he will adore her, and be extremely happy. In a cottage she will always be at hand, and love will atrophy in him for want of exercise.

The ingenious Mr. F. W. Bain, in one of his Sanskrit fables, has an Indian rajah who so excessively doted on his wife, or one of them, that he used to carry her about from room to room as his cares of State called him. It sounds touching, and it touches. But if he had put off his rajahship and lived in a cottage he would not have been able to carry her anywhere—except out of doors, I think, to leave her there.

Companionship is essential to real cottage life; division of labor, but community of interest. And companionship is a thing which grows into love of a perdurable kind, a love which when it is as old as a well-handled piece of furniture looks all the better for the usage it has had.

And one other essential there is, which I cannot omit: children. A cottage without children, like a cottage without a cat, makes a forlorn appearance. Children come first, no doubt, and grandchildren second. But upon my word, I don't know.—London Daily Chronicle.

NEW APPARATUS LIFTS WATER

"Hydrautomat" Will Raise Water to any Height Without Pumps

London, July 8.—A water-lifting apparatus which seems to flout the natural law that water cannot run uphill and by which the tremendous energy of the rising tides may be harnessed for use by man, is an invention of Thomas G. Allen, graduate of Washington University, St. Louis, and now a British subject. The "Hydrautomat," as the apparatus is called, is the result of two years of experiments. A working model has been viewed by scores of engineers, some of whom have been baffled by the simplicity of the cycle of operation. It has lifted water 20 feet above the river level.

The hydrautomat is designed to raise water in any quantity from a running stream to any desired height without the use of standard equipment such as pumps, rams or water-wheels. The apparatus harnesses two natural sources of energy, the weight of a column of water and atmospheric pressure. By means of a series of tanks, one above the other, and a sluice-gate, which alternately brings suction and pressure forces into play, 80 percent of the energy of the pressure water used is obtained. The height required is reached by carrying the series of tanks, alternating open and closed chambers, together with air conducting pipes, to the desired height.

It is believed there is unlimited scope of the hydrautomat on streams where hydraulic power developments are not feasible because of the small amount of fall. One of the first applications is expected to be on irrigation projects.

In a broad sense, according to the inventor, the purpose of the hydrautomat is to convert the contained energy of large quanities of water at a low head into that of a smaller quantity of water at a high head, or to compel a stream to hoist part of itself up over the land for commercial or agricultural purposes. The principal is fixed; the application is to be determined by local requirements.

World patent rights have been issued. It appears that in the world's inventive records the principal of the hydrautomat has been remotely approached, but never attained.

TARIFF BATTLE IN BRITAIN

Free Trade and Protectionist Forces Massing for the Fray

London, July 7.—Protectionist and free trade forces are massing for battle. Public interest is keen on the fabric gloves question because it may involve the fate of the government and coalition. Bonar Law is ready to lead the Conservatives if they definitely adopt a protectionist policy, but the Conservatives know that they must lose every Lancashire seat in consequence, because Lancashire lives by export trade, which protection would cripple

Lord Derby himself, though a great Conservative, puts the claims of Lancashire before those of party, and is on the free trade side. On the protectionist side Lord Long is reviving ambitious plans of material preference, and demands the early holding of an imperial economic conference.

The protectionist school believes that Britain has little to hope for in the future from European trade, and therefore should concentrate on the development of empire trade.

PROPOSED TARIFF ON CANADIAN FISH

Washington, July 7.—Demand that a retaliatory provision against Canada be put into the proposed tariff bill in connection with the proposal to place a duty of two cents a pound on salmon, halibut, mackerel and other fish, was made in the Senate yesterday by Senator Jones of Washington.

He offered an amendment that no fresh or frozen salmon, halibut or sword fish from the North Pacific or tributary waters be admitted to the United States through any foreign country except when in bond from a United States port.

FROST IN BRANDON HILLS.

Brandon, Man., July 7—A fairly heavy white frost was reported ten miles northeast of Brandon early this morning but according to reports from farmers, no crop damage was suffered. The lowest temperature registered in Brandon during the night was 35.

Further reports state that the frost was particularly heavy southeast of the city in the Brandon hills district. Potatoes and other garden stuff was damaged, and it is understood that corn and wheat on low lands will also be affected.

TRY TO CHANGE TRAFFIC RULE

Some London Boroughs Change Rule "Keep to the Right"

London, July 8.—The old established rule for pedestrian traffic in this country, "keep to the right," has just been overthrown in some of the London boroughs, and others are considering the question of following suit. 'Keep to the left," which is the general rule for vehicular traffic, is now also the rule for pedestrians in Barking, Brentford, Camberwell, Chiswick, Deptford, Hampton Wick, Holborn, Lewisham and Poplar. These boroughs were the leaders in the change from ancient custom for pedestrians which was "keep to the right." However, it is thought, the new rule will not become universal. The City of London has decided against it.

The avowed object of the change is safety. Vehicular traffic which for ages has followed the rule "keep to the left," and will continue to do so, is the cause of a substantial proportion of the street accidents. It is claimed that the pedestrians, by keeping to the right under the circumstances, and walking with their backs to the vehicular traffic, are liable to step off the sidewalks into the roadway in unwary moments and be run down.

The new idea is spreading throughout the United Kingdom, but it is not yet taking a very strong hold upon the people. Glasgow, Nottingham and Leicester have attempted to change the old order of pedestrian traffic, but not with very flattering results. Still the propaganda continues.

It has been urged that the same result would be obtained by reversing the rule of the road for vehicular traffic, and bringing it into conformity with the Continental practice, but the considerations in favor of vehicles continuing to keep to the left are regarded as outweighing the arguments advanced against a change. The machinery and steering gear of motor vehicles in this country are designed with a view of conforming to the present rule of the road. The staircases of public vehicles are constructed with a like object. Tramway tracks, points, run-outs, street refuges, etc., have been laid down, and car sheds have been erected to conform to the practice of keeping to the left.

It is further contended, in opposition to the suggestion that vehicles should keep to the right, that horses would need to be re-broken, and drivers re-trained, to meet the altered conditions.

Some ancient customs die hard in this country.

THOUSANDS OF DEAD FISH

Milton, July 7 (special).—As the result of the large filter beds at the Acton Tanneries breaking away and allowing an accumulation of dirty black poisonous liquid to flow into the stream nearby and pollute the water, thousands of dead fish can be seen on the shores of Lawson's well known pond at Stewarttown, north of Milton. It is reported that the damaged filter bed has been repaired. An outbreak of anthrax among the cattle is feared as the result of the poisoned water.

CAPITAL CITY

Four Thousand Buildings Go up This Year in Belgrade

Belgrade, Jugoslavia, July 8.—To make this capital a worthy setting to the magnificent territorial patrimony to which they have fallen heir, the Serbs are working swiftly. They are cutting new streets, paving them with asphalt instead of cobble stones; and erecting new dwellings and public buildings. A prize of $75,000 was awarded recently for a new city plan. fourteen hundred new buildings went up in 1921 and 4,000 are going up this year. A new hotel has just been completed opposite the station. It was begun before the war, and used as a barrack. But its walls have been replastered and the building was completed and opened two days before the wedding of King Alexander.

The city is still overpopulated. Residence has been refused to 60,000 persons. Prices in the city are very high and should the local money improve in value, Belgrade will rival Constantinople as a city of huge expense for living. House rents are prohibitive for the native, and for the foreigner, they range upwards of $100 monthly.

Farm land within 30 miles of Belgrade sells from $100 to $300 an acre, a big price when converted into the dinar currency of the country. The Hotel Moscow, within the city, recently sold for 14,000,000 dinars, or upwards of $200,000, a price that astonished strangers.

The best buildings within the city at the present time are the two palaces of the king, located centrally and adjoining. A Parliament building is partially constructed. Other offices for public uses are planned. Some portion of the new American loan will be used for projected public buildings.

PROFESSION

Dr. Shields Backs New York Divine's Judgment on Theologists

Toronto, July 8.—Seven leaders of Baptist thought in the United States were referred to as infidels by Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, in his sermon last Sunday evening. Dr. Straton is well known here, having held a series of services at Jarvis Street Baptist Church last August. He was also at one time a contributor to the Hearst press.

Here are the names of the seven men in the order in which Dr. Straton gave them:

The Rev. Dr. Henry Clay Vedder, Professor of Church History, Crozer Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.

The Rev. Dr. Spencer Byron Meeser, Professor of Systematic Theology Crozer Seminary.

The Rev. Dr. Frank G. Lewis, librarian of Crozer Seminary.

The Rev. Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University, Providence, R.I.

The Rev. Dr. William Frederick Bade, Professor of Semitic Languages, Pacific Baptist Theological Seminary, Berkeley, Cal.

The Rev. Dr. Gerard Birney Smith, Professor of Christian Theology, Chicago University.

Dr. Shaller Mathews, Dean of the Divinity School, Chicago University.

Dr. Straton also included in his list of Baptist infidels two eminent theologians, now dead. These were Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch, who taught for many years in Rochester Theological Seminary Rochester, N.Y., and Dr. William Newton Clarke who for many years was a professor in Colgate University, Hamilton, N.Y.

Dr. Straton read long quotations from the writings of each of these theologians to show that they, in his mind, are or were infidels.

Worse Than Bob Ingersoll

"I do not wish to be unjust," said Dr. Straton, "but in the face of what I have read to you this night I do declare that these men who are teaching these things have departed from the faith, and their form of infidelity is far more subtle and seductive and ruinous than the old, out-spoken, infidelity of the past.

"When we examine it thoroughly within, I wish to ask you, what is the difference between the teaching which these men are giving and the teaching of Voltaire and Bolingbroke and Tom Paine and Bob Ingersoll? The only one that I can see is a difference of degree and not of kind. These men are simply not believers in the old-time sense at all. They are rationalists and at best are groping in the darkness of uncertainty.

"And when I use the word "infidel" I believe I have a right to use it and to apply it to such teachers. Not all of these men have gone as far as some of them, but they are all on the same road, and when they come to their logical goal it lands them in the camp of the infidels."

Dr. Straton here gave the definition of an "infidel" from the Century and Webster's Dictionary.

Continuing, Dr. Straton said:

"Professor Vedder says that when we preach Heaven as the Bible pictures it we are merely 'pushing wind.' I would say to him that since he has manifestly rejected the authority of Jesus as recorded in the Scriptures he is doing more than 'pushing wind.' In all honesty he ought to resign his position and leave the Baptist School where he is now teaching. And if he doesn't do this, then I for one, feel that he ought to be pushed out."

Radicals Should Quit

Dr. Straton argued that the radicals in the Baptist denomination ought to quit, and establish their own schools.

Dr. T. T. Shields, pastor of Jarvis Street Baptist Church here, when interviewed, stated that he had not seen the report of Dr. Straton's sermon. He thought, however, that Dr. Straton might have been misreported as he himself had suffered in that way.

One Undoubted Enemy

Shaller Mathews is unquestionably an enemy of the Gospel of Christ," said Dr. Shields. "As for the rest I do not know them well enough to say, but I have no hesitation whatever in corroborating Dr. Straton's words as regards Shaller Mathews. He is a rationalist, and a far more dangerous enemy of the Church of Christ than either Bob Ingersoll or Tom Paine ever was."

"Would you describe him as an infidel?" Dr. Shields was asked.

"I would hardly go to that length You know the devils believe and tremble."

"I can make any allowance for differences in interpretation of the Bible so long as the interpreter believes it is the inspired word of God, but when a man, as Shaller Mathews has done, denies the whole principle of divine revelation, and regards the Bible as a word of evolution and not of inspiration, that man, I have no hesitation in saying it, is an enemy of the Gospel of Christ and of the Church of Christ. If the other men whom Dr. Straton has mentioned believe as Shaller Mathews believes, they are also enemies of the Gospel."

HELPED BURGLAR TO RUN AWAY

Girls Stops Bus for Strange Man Who Had Robbed Her Home

Hackensack, N. J., July 7.—As Elizabeth, the 13-year-old daughter of H. P. and Mrs. Butler, of Summit Avenue, Riveredge, stood at the corner of Continental Road, that borough, she saw a man running down the hill toward where she stood, evidently anxious to catch a bus going to Hackensack. The bus had started up, but the thoughtful little girl, unconscious of the fact that the strange man was a burglar, and had just ransacked her home, asked the driver to wait a moment, and he did.

The stranger carried a big bag in one hand and had a Victrola under his left arm. As Elizabeth got a glimpse of the Victrola she thought it resembled her's very much, and as soon as the bus had gone, she hurried to the home for her uncle, and told her aunt of her suspicions.

The Butlers are at the seashore, and Elizabeth has been stopping with friends. So Mrs. Bogert and her neice went to the Summit Avenue house to investigate. Sure enough, a burglar had been in the house, and Elizabeth's phonograph was gone, so was her diamond ring given her on her recent birthday by Mrs. Bogert, together with considerable of the Butler silverware and jewellry.

KENTUCKIAN FASTS FIFTY-FOUR DAYS

Slade, Ky., July 7.—William Rice, mountain religious fanatic who lives at Nada, Powell County, a few miles from here, last night completed his fifty-fourth day of voluntary fasting. He says he never expects to eat again. Rice, who is about fifty years old, is growing a little weaker every day, and although he is still strong enough to walk, it is believed by Sunday his legs will not support him.

Rice declares God, in a vision, told him that he must stop eating to show his neighbors that they must make sacrifices if they expect to enter Heaven. He says he was willing to make his sacrifice, but reports from that section fail to indicate that any neighbors have followed Rice's example. Rice says that he receives food from a "spiritual fountain" and is having a hard time, as Satan is before him constantly tempting him.

Through the Blood

The early stages of nervous debility are noted by restlessness and irritability in which the victims seem to be oppressed by their nerves. As the trouble advances, common symptoms are a tired feeling; weakness in the knees and ankles; headaches, backaches and sleeplessness. The matter requires immediate attention, for nothing but suitable treatment will prevent a complete breakdown.

The nervous system governs the whole body, controlling heart, lungs, digestion and brain, so that it is not surprising that nervous disturbances cause acute distress. For troubles of this kind Dr. Williams' Pink Pills succeed when other treatment fails, for these pills make new blood, enriched with the elements on which the nerves thrive, and in this way reach the root of the trouble. In proof of this is the statement of Mrs. Dockerill, Stratford, Ont., who says:—"My daughter, Matilda, was suffering from nervous debility, and the usual remedies did not seem to help her. I was advised by a friend to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and soon we found they were doing her a great deal of good. She complained of pains in the stomach, and a severe fluttering of the heart, with a general weakness Under the use of these pills she continued to gain, and I believe they have saved her from going into a decline."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

NERVES ARE ALL GONE

Geneva, July 7.—George Tchitcherin, Russian Soviet foreign minister, who headed the soviet delegation to the Genoa conference, has entered a private hospital suffering from a severe nervous breakdown, according to despatches to-day from Innsbruck, Austria, reporting his arrival there Wednesday. The despatches said he had received many letters and telegrams but was not permitted to do any work.

Touching the high spots is tough on tires. The impact, in pounds weight, on a tire when it lights from a leap is tremendous. When you hear the figures you wonder that any tire can stand such a strain. But the "Gutta Percha" Tire does. It rather enjoys roughing it, because "Speed" is what it is built for—speed and endurance. The speed lover can drive carefree if he uses "Gutta Percha" Tires.

YET ANOTHER GROUP

Hon. Nelson Parliament told the Fishermen at their picnic the other day that he was addressing them "not as a politician, but as one who was desirous that they should get a square deal." The inference is that Mr. Parliament sometimes speaks as a politician—or as one who is desirous of a deal that is not "square." Are we to take it that we have two representatives in Mr. Parliament—a Dr. Jeykell and a Mr. Hyde—one of whom is kindly and benevolent toward fishermen, and who would remit all their licenses and taxes, while the other would put a head-tax on every fish caught and impose greater restrictions upon the catch?

We do not for one moment believe such a thing. Mr. Parliament is well known in this district as a fair politician, and as Speaker of the Farmer's Government he has observed a discreet silence. But the Farmer's Government is coming to the end of its term of office, and the probabilities are that the U.F.O., as a political party, will cease to exist. Is it possible that Mr. Parliament's appeal to the class-consciousness of the fishermen has for its object the formation of a Fishermen's Party or a Fishermen's Government of which he would be Premier?

Such a development would be novel and very interesting. It would certainly be more representative than a Farmers' Government, for there are fishermen in all classes. Most of us could qualify for a position in the Cabinet of such an administration.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE MOIRA

This is the day of big projects. We are so bent upon harnessing Niagara, or making a hightway to the sea via the St. Lawrence River, that we are apt to neglect opportunities that are right under our noses. All these great visions are commendable and must not be lost sight of, but in the meanwhile we might set our hands to things that are immediately attainable. "Do the duty that lies next; that which thou knowest to be a duty."

Ontario has a duty to perform to itself which has been left undone because of its preoccupation with big things beyond its immediate reach, that undone duty is the development of the smaller rivers. The Moira River is only one instance of the waste that is permitted year after year by the people of Hastings County who are primarily responsible.

The responsibility for this waste of power does not lie upon all the people of the county, for there have been, and there still are a few "visionaries" who have shouted themselves hoarse trying to wake up the inhabitants. So far these inhabitants have slept peacefully while the river has been flowing unharnessed to the sea. Once in several years they have been awakened, not by the shouting of the "visionaries", but by the Moira River itself.

This stream at times becomes unruly. After a heavy winter with lots of snow and ice, then when there comes a sudden thaw, the water rushing down from the un-dammed water-sheds floods the villages upon its banks and inundates large sections of the city of Belleville. Then do the citizens of this city by this inland sea wake up!

The scene in Belleville at these times might be described as "Venetian", if it were not for the ice floating 'round, and, which is worse, for the fact that the cellars are not waterproof. It is estimated that about one hundred thousand dollars worth of goods are destroyed by these floods whenever they decide to visit our fair city.

Yes, it must be admitted that the inhabitants of Belleville do wake up on such occasions. They not only wake up, but they re-that the river instead of working its own sweet will shall in future do as it is told. Resolutions are passed by the city and county councils, and, on at least one occasion, a real live river-harnesser was fetched from Toronto to look the stream over and make a report.

Actually three such reports have been prepared regarding the possibilities of hydro development of the Moira River. The first was made as far back as the year 1880, by Henry F. Perley, father of Sir George Perley, as chief engineer in the Department of Public Works at Ottawa. This is "a report of an examination of the River Moira, made with the view of ascertaining whether its water sup ply can be increased for manufacturing purposes."

This report opens by stating that the Moira empties into the Bay of Quinte and has its source 35 miles to the northward of Belleville. At its mouth below Madoc Lake the Black Creek and the Scootanatta join the main river, the latter taking its rise in Loon Lake 50 miles to the north-eastward of Belleville. The country traversed by this river is much broken and rises to a considerable elevation, the highest elevation given in the report being 870 feet above the Bay of Quinte at Loon Lake. The drainage of the land and the flow of the streams and the river are very rapid. The areas of the three large lakes are given as follows: Loon Lake, 5,000 acres; Madoc Lake, 2,300 acres; Stoco Lake, 1,500 acres.

At the time this report was made there were 35 mills operating on the banks of the Moira, but owing to the lack of co-operation between various mill-owners and the lumbermen, there was practically no conservation or regulation of the water supply.

The report concludes by stating that "with proper management the Loon, Madoc and Stoco Lakes can be made to afford an ample supply of water during open months of the year, and, if regulations be made there would not be a complaint regarding scarcity of water." The final sentence of the report is significant and might be taken to heart by the present population residing on the banks of the Moira and Bellevillians in particular. Here is a word of wisdom from the past: "The remedy is in the hands of the mill proprietors, and by their joint action it can be applied."

PASSING COMMENT

A despatch from London says that men won't listen to sermons from women—They have to listen to lectures.

De Valera made himself scarce when the bullets began to fly. He has probably gone to the Adirondacks for his health.

Mr. Speaker Parliament assures us that his government is going to be the friend of the fisherman. It is rather late at this time—"if it had been earlier it had been kind."

The Kingston Standard laconically remarks—"Lenin is said to be chopping wood, like the Arch Criminal did. Birds of a feather." What kind of birds—wood-peckers?

The New Brunswick cow that lay down to chew its cud on the track could not have heard the story told of Stevenson, the inventor of the steam engine:

"What would happen if a cow got on the track?" asked a skeptical observer of the first trial train trip.

"So much the worse for the coo!" replied the man of steam.

PRINCE OF WALES AS POET

Mr. Ernest Brooks, O.B.E., official photographer to the King and Queen and the Prince of Wales, tells some amusing anecdotes about the Royal Family in the September number of the Strand Magazine.

The following are verses written by the Prince of Wales on the occasion of his crossing the line:—

King Neptune, I am proud to wear
  This honorable and handsome lollar;*
Although from all reports I hear
  There's still a good deal more to foller.

I'm glad to meet your charming wife,
  And all the members of your Court;
From all I've seen I'll bet my life
  That Amphitrite's quite a sport.

I hear you're handing out some dope
  To each expectant, frightened lad,
Made up of pills and shaving soap,
  Why, is not that just quite too bad?

I hear your Bears—say! what a noise!
  They're hungry to begin the baiting.
I know I'm for it, King; so, boys,
  Don't let me keep the party waiting!

*—This should read "order," but I can't make at rhyme.—E. P. (Footnote by the Prince.)

PRESS OPINIONS

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM

Montreal Gazette.

It is now proposed to democratise the Canadian civil service, and back of this proposal are to be found the same influences which have been at work in the various branches or organized labor. There has been for many months an element of unrest in the service and there have been convincing evidences of a movement designed to secure for the employees of the Government a degree of control over the service which would leave very little authority in the hands of the Government. The formation of a civil service trades union may be cited as proof of this tendency and perhaps no better proof could be required. The suggested application of the Whitley plan of joint councils comes of this movement, just as it came of a like movement in other fields of, shall we say, industry? The Government will do well to give the scheme a very wide berth and to turn its attention to what is far more necessary in the public interest, the restoration of its own proper control over an organization for whose work and conduct it must always be held responsible.

THE FUNCTION OF A NEWSPAPER

L'Evenement, in editorially discussing the Delorme case, insists that the public has a right to be informed of everything that happens, the evil of publicity lying not in reporting the facts but in seeking for and exploiting the sensational.

"That does not mean to say" the editorial continues, "that if what is sensational results from the reporting, the reports must be prohibited because of the sensational. A newspaper is not only a tribune. It has a right to be, on occasion, a pillory. So much the worse for those who have to be held there! Our code still upholds the penalty of whipping and barbarous hangings. The unveiling of the conduct of criminals by the newspapers has replaced the pillory in the public square. It is true that sometimes an innocent man may suffer. We did not commit the fault of Adam, but we all suffer from it."

WIT AND HUMOR

An Extremist.

"Mrs. Exe is a great stickler for form and ceremony, isn't she?"

"I should say so. Why, that woman would insist on dressing up to entertain an idea."

According to Experience

Father—Gracious! The baby swallowed a piece of worsted!

Mother—That's nothing to the yarns she'll have to swallow when she grows up.

The Other View

He was just coming from his girl's house. "You seem put out," remarked a friend who met him "I was," he said. "Her father came home earlier than usual."

His Part

"You say," asked the lawyer, "that you personally saw the quarrel between the defendant and his wife?"

"I did," answered the witness.

"What did the defendant seem to be doing?"

"He was doing the listening."

Too Dear

"Yes," said the specialist, as he stood at Joe Mulholland's bedside, "I can cure you."

"What will it cost?" asked Joe faintly.

"Ninety-five dollars."

"You'll have to shade your price a little," replied Joe. "I have a better bid from the understaker.

As He Took it

Comedian: "Poor old Harry got the bird properly last night. They hissed him right off the stage. Then I came on. The audience quietened down and listened to my first number with every attention. Then just as I was giving 'em my patter, blowed if they didn't start hissing old Harry again.

His Money Back

A negro down South started a saving bank and one of his friends deposited eighty dollars with him. After about four years he needed the money and went back to the banker.

"Mose," he said. "Ah wants mah eighty dollahs?"

"Youh eighty dollahs? What eighty dollahs?"

"Why, de eighty dollahs Ah done deposited wif you."

"Man dat eighty dollahs am all gone. De interest done et it all up."

Ma'am.

The Victorian term "Ma'am" is still in vogue in royal circles, and in future it is by this her acquaintances and less intimate friends will address Princess Mary. The majority of royal English ladies are so styled.

Making Forest Take Place of the Plains.

Tree planting on the prairies is the subject of a bulletin written for the Dominion Forestry Department by Mr. Norman F. Ross, chief of tree-planting division, Indian Head, Saskatchewan. Early efforts at planting met with little success because the settlers chose mainly such trees as they had been familiar with in Ontario, without considering the new environment. It was realized that better results would be obtained from native trees. Experiments were carried on under direction from the experimental farms at Brandon and Indian Head. Trees from Eastern Canada and Europe were tried. Many Russian and European trees proved suitable, especially Russian poplars, Russian willows, caragana and Scotch pine.

In the spring of 1901 the Dominion Government began a free distribution of seeds, seedlings and cuttings under certain regulations. The demand increased rapidly, and between 1901 and 1921 the distribution of seedlings and cuttings totalled 60,418,000. Reports show that 70 per cent. of the plantations are quite now at least 40,000 well cultivated shelter belts. Valuations given by farmers range from $500 to $5,000. Most farmers value the belt at $1,000. The bulletin, however, takes the conservative figure of $300. This would make a total of $12,000,000, which is at least $11,800,000 in excess of the cost of operating the tree-planting division.

"The chief value of a plantation on the prairies, however, is not the actual cash value. Each successful tree-belt is a practical demonstration as to the kinds and varieties of trees which can be depended upon in a particular locality. It encourages those who have been too skeptical to do any planting themselves, it relieves the general monotony of the landscape, and lends a greater impression of permanency to farm life. In numerous cases these groves provide recreation spots for the community, where picnics and other gatherings are held during the summer months. There is no doubt that tree planting has now become more or less of a necessity in many districts to assist in preventing soil-drifting, and undoubtedly those who have already had success with the windbreaks their gardens and buildings kind of tree planting."

It is found that ornamental trees and shrubs and fruit trees which will not grow at all on the open prairie will do well inside a shelter belt. The result has been a great increase in the number of gardens, where tender vegetables, small fruits and some tree fruits are grown. One of the highest horticultural authorities in Canada said that the West was rapidly becoming a land of gardens.

It is gratifying to observe that attention is now being paid to tree planting in Ontario. In the older parts of the province at least the original forest has disappeared, and it will be necessary to adopt Western methods with modifications. It is one of the easiest ways of increasing the national wealth, not only as measured by money, but in beauty and pleasure.—The Toronto Globe.

The Plant Louse.

The little green plant louse, known as the aphid, would have a progeny in one year that numbers well into ten sextillion, were it not for the destructive work of enemies and other natural causes.

HEIGHTS OF ATTAINMENT

Firestone effort to give the car-owner greatest value has realized its highest point this year in the service Firestone Cords and Fabrics are giving.

Tire buyers of the Dominion are finding that out of the confusion of varying discounts, prices and quality Firestone value is the one true guide to tire economy.

Organization, resources and over twenty years of experience have enabled Firestone to raise the mileage standard to a higher level than ever before.

Letters from Canadian users show not one or two Firestones giving exceptional mileage, but full sets maintaining a high average. And the increasing demand for Firestone Cords is evidence that the public is determined to secure the economies insured by the low prices at which these reliable tires sell.

A PRAYER

Dear God in Heaven of your pity
Help the poor children of the city;
The little youngsters of the slums
To whom Your blessing rarely comes;

The little tots who run and play
In crowded, dirty streets each day;
Who dream not song of bird and tree
Nor star and field and sighing sea;
Who are denied and do not know
Their birthright of the long ago,
The clean, sweet wind, the grimeless sun,
Wide spaces, health, and wholesome fun.
Oh, help them that at last they find
And know You, good and dear and kind:
That each wee heart may thrill and sing
With happiness and wondering.
And keep them ever in your ken,
Safe from all hurt and harm. Amen.

BUSINESS WOMEN IN CANADA

This is a wonderful age for women, for the bars are down and the gentler sex may engage in any commercial venture it chooses. Once, not so long ago, a girl of the educated class would suffer a loss of caste if in her work she stepped outside the two professions of teaching and nursing. Now she can pander to the public's sweet tooth with enticing chocolates like Mary Elizabeth; clothe women like Lady Duff-Gordon and the Countess Annesley; becomingly hat them, as did Lady Evelyn Ward in Toronto before the War; expertly furnish and decorate their homes; supply their gifts in an attractive setting; serve their tea; cater for their parties and set their dinner covers before them, and there is no social stigma attached, for women to-day are as free as the air.

Some women, discontented with their narow lives, waste time in dreaming of unfulfilled desires and nursing disappointed longings, while doing nothing to bring about their realization. They grow old wishing and wanting. Other women—and they are essentially the modern type—take stock of their resources, carefully lay their plans and then proceed to try and wrest from the arena of the workaday world at least some measure of their hopes and aspirations. While timid, inert souls are convinced it is hopeless to attempt anything without money, which in their idea plays the all-important part, ambitious, progressive women realise that personality is a large factor in any business. On that basis, with industry and careful attention to detail added, they have no fear of courting failure. The majority of women who invade business bring to it little capital, but in many instances have shown themselves able to build up income-bearing, capital-creating plants.

At the present time there are enterprises in all stages of development being carried on by women in Canada. One quietly starting and just beginning a money-making career will perhaps in a few years' time attract public notice. Another at its full tide of maturity runs as regularly as a train between Monday and Saturday, while yet another kind is continually rising to higher peaks in the mountain range of success. We have to-day in our country women living on good incomes derived from their own business undertakings.

FASHION FANCIES

HOSIERY FOR THE SUMMER WARDROBE

While skirts remain short, hosiery will be of supreme sartorial importance. No woman who wishes to appear well dressed can afford to ignore this fact. She must select her hosiery with as much care as her gloves or her chapeau, and if she knows just how to go about it, the rest is easy, for never before has there been as great a variety of styles and colors to choose from as there is this year. The fact is, that if you want to be right in the fashion, you must have a pair of hose to match every costume or a pleasing contrast. For instance; if you happen to have an orchid home spun, you should have a pair of silk or silk and wool "homespun" mixture stockings. There are about thirty different color mixtures in this style of stocking and they are the very newest offering for sports wear.

If your costume happens to be a compose of dent de leon and white, why, the prescription for a chic outfit is black patent leather pumps, dent de leon plain silk hosiery, white skirt and coat the same shade as your hosiery.

For an all-white flannel or ratine suit, there is a very fine quality of white cashmere with clocking up the sides, or there is white silk. A very nice heavy weight stocking comes in fibre silk and is ribbed, but as a rule the real silk or silk and wool is preferred to fibre which has less elasticity than the others. Ribbed and drop stitch hosiery are very smart and for evening wear there is the gauzy quality. Beige Hosiery is one of the pleasing contrasts one frequently meets.

The vogue of rolled down tops has not received much recognition in Canada so far as we can find out. That is the stores are not featuring any special stocking for this purpose unless it be a silk with a shirred garter top. Of course there are nice-looking ribbed cashmere and silk mixtures that can be worn this way, if the wearer wishes.

The Daily Recipe

FRUIT PUNCH

- 1 cup strong tea
- 2 cups sugar and 1 cup water, boiled together one minute.
- Juice 3 oranges
- ½ cup chopped fresh mint
- Juice 3 lemons
- 1 can grated pineapple
- 1 quart grape juice or loganberry juice
- 4 bottles ginger ale

Mix the tea, sugar, syrup, fruit juices and mint together and allow to stand one hour. Pour over ice in punch bowl, add loganberry or grape juice and ginger ale. Sliced oranges or any berries may be added.

Charged water will add life during serving.

This will serve 20 or 30 people one glass each.

White grape juice makes a pretty punch and the slices of orange show to better advantage.

Any fruit juice left from canned fruit may be used in punch. Tea is a great improvement to punch, and green tea gives the best flavor.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

He checked, on the verge of yielding to an insane impulse. Being a native of New York, it had been his instinctive thought to call up the hat-shop and demand the return of its delivery-boy. Fortunately the instinct of a true dramatist moved him to sketch hastily the ground-plot of the suggested tragedy.

In Act I (Time: the Present) he saw himself bearding the telephone in its lair—that is, in the darkest and least accessible recess of the ground-floor hallway. In firm, manful accents, befitting an intrepid soul, he details a number to the central operator—and meekly submits to an acidulated correction of his Amurrikin accent.

Act II (fifteen minutes have elapsed): He is clinging desperately to the receiver, sustained by hope alone while he attends sympathetically to the sufferings of an English lady trying to get in communication with the Army and Navy Stores.

Act III (ten minutes later): He has exhausted himself grinding away at an obsolete rotary bell-call. Abruptly his ears are enchanted by a far, thin, frigid moan. It says: "Are you theah?" Responding savagely "NO!" he dashes the receiver back into its hook and flings away to discover that he has lost both train and steamer. Tag line: For this is London in the Twentieth Century. Curtain: End of the Play. . . .

Disenchanted by consideration of this tentative synopsis, the playwright consulted his watch. Already the incident of the condemnable bandbox had eaten up much invaluable time. He would see himself doomed to unending perdition if he would submit to further hindrance on its behalf.

"Milly," said he with decision, "take that . . . thing down-stairs, and tell Mrs. Gigg to telephone the hat-shop to call for it."

"Yessir."

"And after that, call me a taxi. Tell it to wait. I'll be ready by ten or know—"

Promptly retiring, Milly took with her, in addition to the bandbox, a confused impression of a room whose atmosphere was thick with flying garments, in the wild swirl of which a lanky lunatic danced weirdly, muttering uncouth incantations. . . .

Forty minutes later (on the stroke of ten) Mr. Staff, beautifully groomed after his habit, his manner (superbly nonchalant) denying that he had ever known reason why he should take a single step in haste, followed his trunks down to the sidewalk and, graciously bidding his landlady adieu, presented Milly with a keepsake in the shape of a golden coin of the realm.

A taxicab, heavy-laden with his things, fretted before the door. Staff nodded to the driver.

"Euston," said he, "and a shilling extra if you drive like sin."

"Right you are, sir."

In the act of entering the cab, Staff started back with bitter imprecations.

Mrs. Gigg, who had not quite closed the front door, opened it wide to his remonstrant voice.

"I say, what's this bandbox doing in my cab? I thought I told Milly—"

"Sorry, sir; I forgot," Mrs. Gigg interposed—"bein' that flustered—"

"Well?"

"The woman what keeps the 'at-shop said as 'ow the 'at wasn't to come back, sir. She said a young lidy bought it yesteddy ahfternoon and awsked to 'ave it sent you this mornin' before nine o'clock.

"The deuce she did!" said Staff blankly.

"An' the young lidy said as 'ow she'd write you a note explyin'. So I tells Milly not to bother you no more abaht it, but put the 'at-box in the keb, sir—wishin' not to 'inder you."

"Thoughtful of you, I'm sure. But didn't the—ah—woman who keeps the hat-shop mention the name of the—a—person who purchased the hat?"

By the deepening of its corrugations, the forehead of Mrs. Gigg betrayed the intensity of her mental strain. Her eyes wore a far-away look and her lips moved, at first silently. Then—"I ain't sure, sir, as she did nime the lidy, but if she did, it was somethin' like Burnside, I fancy—or else Postlethwayt."

"Not Jones nor Brown? Perhaps Robinson? Think, Mrs. Griggs! Not Robinson?"

"I'm sure it may 'ave been eyether of them, sir, now you puts it to me pl'in."

"That makes everything perfectly clear. Thank you so much."

With this, Staff turned hastily away, nodded to his driver to cut along, and with groans and lamentations squeezed himself into what space the bandbox did not demand of the interior of the vehicle.

Sermon by Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.

"Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldest believe thou shouldest see the glory of God?"—John XI. 40.

That is a word of the Saviour spoken to a woman who was in great trouble. And truly its wonderful assurance must have quieted the woman's fearing spirit just as when the untrembling hand of a mother is laid upon a trembling child who has wakened in the night in terror. There is no breach in the Saviour's confidence. No chilling doubt obstructs His speech and turns His utterance into a stammer. We cannot find in His words a flicker of uncertainty. He does not express Himself in a tentative way, as one who is attempting an experiment with unknown issues. "Let us hope for the best!" "Trust me to do everything that can be done!" "The chances are favourable but we never know!" That is not the tone of the Master in the presence of clamant necessity. There are no dubious balancings which hold the suppliant's heart in strain and fear. His will moves in a straight line, seeing its end in unwavering confidence. He speaks as if the deed were done before He sets Himself to do it. He gives thanks for victory before the battle is fought. He sings His doxologies on His way to His wonders. He was giving praise for the resurrection of Lazarus while Lazarus was still in his grave. "Father, I thank Thee that Thou hast heard me!" Yes, faith sings her songs ere the miracle is wrought. The Master's words, spoken to Mary, are very cool and quiet and quieting, and they must have been to her spirit like a heavy dew upon the grass after a hot and droughty day.

In his early days W. E. Henley was smitten with a grave affliction. All the doctors turned him away in hopelessness. "Can't do anything for you!" Henley heard of a man named Lister, who was rumoured to be trying experiments by attempting wonderful things in Edinburgh. In exceeding weakness he went North to see him. I greatly love the description which he has given us of the great surgeon: "the large, placid brow, the soft lines of tranquil thought, the benign face, the faculties of patience and unyielding will." But above all I rejoice in a line of a sonnet in which he gathers up his thought and feeling on the day of his operation. Speaking of Lister he says: "his wise, rare smile is sweet with certainties." It is an exquisite phrase. One can feel how the confidence that looked out of the surgeon's smile chased the fears out of the patient and filled his soul as with the sweet light of a joyous dawn.

But I want that phrase of Henley's for One greater than Lister, and to whom it most rightfully belongs. I must claim it for Christ. "His wise, rare smile is sweet with certainties." No matter how appalling is my condition the smile of confidence never darkens into doubt. Christ never looks as though He thinks me "too far gone." He never shakes His head to suggest that He has nothing in His wallet for needs like mine. Rather does He make it appear that His resources specially meet my necessities, as though he had been long waiting for just such a need as mine! His confidence is the beginning of my healing. His smile is sweet with certainties.

I bring to Him my sins. Where else can I take them? Who else on all this broad planet invites me to bring my sins to their door? No one wants them. They have all enough of their own. And even if they have the smile of welcome it lacks the warmth of confidence. They have no lance with which they can reach my disease. They have no anaesthetic which can put my pain to sleep. But when I bring my sins to Jesus I find Him waiting for me. Here is a doctor who scours the highways and bye-ways for his patients. And when I meet Him, all leprous with my sin, a leprosy which no other doctor can touch, his smile is sweet with certainties. This Physician can save "unto the uttermost all that come unto Him by faith." He never loses a patient. His skill is as great as His confidence, and His wonderful gentleness goes far out beyond our dreams.

I bring to Him my failures. I mean the bits of work I began so buoyantly and ended so disastrously. There are enterprises which at the start rose on wings like an aeroplane, and now they are lying in fragments like that same aeroplane which has fallen to destruction. And who wants the broken fragments of things? Who wants failures? It was said of a great master of Balliol College that he had no use for any but successful men. He befriended the successful. The world frowns upon the failure. It has no smile for him, no comradeship, no cheer. I bring my broken enterprises to Jesus, and His smile is sweet with certainties. Wonderful is His power in "putting things together!" Wonderful is His deftness in fitting new chords of hope in my broken harp! "He healeth the broken in heart, He bindeth up their wounds." Yes, and all with a radiant certainty which turns my night time into day.

I talk to Him about my dead. Do they drop into some dark and unfathomable abyss, into a night in which I shall never find them again? Is there any morrow, any dawn of a wonderful day which will mean light, and sight; and reunion? "His wise, rare smile is sweet with certainties." "I am the Resurrection and the Life." "He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." "I go to prepare a place for you." In those wonderful certainties my horizon glows with hope.—The British Weekly.

SOME THINGS TO REMEMBER.

When beetles or other insects appear, all cracks and crevices should be sprinkled with powdered borax.

To renovate leather that has become dull and shabby-looking, rub over with the white of an egg well beaten.

Do not tack the seams of a garment in different directions—one upward and one downward—or the seams will become one-sided.

Gas cooking stoves should be scoured twice a week with hot water and soda, the burners being taken out and the holes cleaned with a pin.

SIGNING OF ROYAL REGISTER.

The signing of the register on the occasion of the recent marriage of Princess Mary and Viscount Lascelles, was done most carefully. There were no hasty and illegible scrawls or blots, as happened when the marriage register of King Edward and Queen Alexandra was signed by fifty-two persons. Of these signatures only nine were in the least legible. The Bishop of Winchester's signature consisted of a blot Lord Palmerston's of a few scratches that might have stood for anything. It is said that Queen Victoria was so much annoyed that she made it a rule in the future that all witnesses of a Royal marriage must sit down and sign his or her name carefully.

RIFLE MEET NEXT WEEK

Annual Meeting of National Rifle Association Lasts Two Weeks

London, July 8 (By Canadian Press).—The fifty-ninth annual meeting of the National Rifle Association opens at Bisley Camp on Monday next and continues for two weeks, or until Saturday, July 22, when the final stage of the King's Prize is shot og, the victor crowned, the Grand Aggregate decided and the prizes distributed.

The program for this year's meeting at Bisley shows a determined effort to attract more competition, particularly from those of the younger generation. The most notable innovation is the two days' match for tyros, for which prizes amounting to £560, exclusive of cups, will be awarded. The definition of a tyro is given as "any British competitor who has never won a prize exceeding £1 in value at any National Rifle Association meeting or any National Domin ion or State Rifle Association meeting." The Service Arm will be used in tyro events.

The prize lists for the meeting generally have been lengthened and equalized and entrance fees in many instances have been reduced. The principal events will also be more evenly distributed throughout the program than has been the case heretofore. The total prizes for the meeting will amount to over £7,000, of which the King's with its 400 prides accounts for £1,170.

The rifles and sights to be used this year in Service Rifle ("S.R.") competitions are to be the same as those permitted last year, but in future the long rifle (Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield) will not be allowed. There are no alterations in the conditions under which the King's Prize will be conducted, but in some of the other competitions the number of rounds at each range has been reduced and a sighting shot will be allowed. In International Service Rifle team matches all teams must fire with the same pattern of rifle.

Target shooting in England came into prominence with the formation of the Volunteer Force in 1859 and received a great impetus through the inauguration of the "National Rifle Association" in 1869. This institution, established for the "encouragement of rifle corps and the proomtion of rice shooting throughout Great Britain," opened a new and important era in the history and development of the rifle. The first meeting of the "N.R.A." was held at Wimbledon in 1860, when Queen Victoria, shooting from the 400 yard mark, fired the first shot, scoring a bull's eye.

It is thus that the Queen's Prize or King's Prize, as it is now known, had its beginning; and this prize is the highest distinction to which a rifle shot can attain. The competition is one of three stages, and is open to only past or present members of His Majesty's Forces. The first and second stages eliminate all but the best 100 competitors. The N.R.A. bronze medal is awarded the highest scorer in the first stage. The N.R.A. silver medal to the highest scorer of the three hundred who compete in the second stage, while the King's Prize of £250 and the N.R.A. Gold Medal and Gold Badge go to the winner of the third stage. Seventy-one shots in all are fired by competitors who go through all these stages. Distances range from 200 yards in the first stage to 900 and 1,000 yards in the final stage.

The chief event of the opening day is the first stage of the Queen Mary's Prize, a squaded competition open only to past and present members of His Majesty's forces. Unlike the King's Prize, conditions of this competition are designed to conform as nearly as possible to actual war conditions. Monday's first stage consists of ten shots at 200 yards, snapshooting at disappearing targets, which reappear at irregular intervals spread over a total period of ten minutes. This is followed by five rapid fire shots at 300 yards, total time being allowed is 25 seconds. The next stage is the "fire witu movement." This consists of ten shots, ranging down from 500 to 100 yards, the men advancing and firing two shots at each hundred yard range at disappearing target. The position at the 500 and 400 yards mark will be prone, at the 300 and 200 yards, kneeling, and at the the 100 yards, standing. The final stage, on Tuesday, is the 'deliberate" and consists of five shots at the 600 yard mark. In connection with the Queen Mary Prize is decided the winner of the Canada challenge Shield. This shield, purchased in 1913 out of a sum of money provided by the Dominion of Canada, is awarded to the team of five making the highest aggregate in the Queen Mary competition.

On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the first week are several events for public school boys, including the Gale and Polden, the Daily Graphic medals, the snapshooting match for a challenge trophy, the Ashburton Challenge Shield, open to teams of eight from the British public schools, ten shots at 200 to 500 yards, with the Spencer Cup awarded to the highest individual aggregate in the Ashburton.

On Thursday and Friday is the full range tyros' meeting. This includes squaded competitions at 200, 500, 600 and 800 yards, making a total of six squadded shots and an aggregate. The Graphic and Wimbledon Cup, for all comers, will be shot off on the closing day of the first week.

Canadians have set great store in the past in the winning of the Kalapore Imperial Challenge Cup, open to teams of eight from the Mother Country, the several Dominions, India and the Channel Islands. This consists of ten shots at 300, 500 and 600 yards range, service rifles only, and is shot off on Tuesday, July 18. The MacKinnon Cup, for teams of twelve, is also of much interest to Canadians, and teams from Canada have met with considerable success in these competitions, having won one or the other on no less than twelve occasions, and in 1900 carried off both these events.

The first stage of the King's Prize is decided on Wednesday, July 19, the second stage on Friday, 21st, and Guelph, Ontario, won the silver medal for the highest score at the second stage last year, with the final stage being won by Sergt. J. Cunningham, with a total of 226 for the second and third stages. Sergeant T. Augear of Calgary, Alta., was third with 222.

Dundee Gets Decision Over Sharkey At New York

New York, July 6.—Johnny Dundee earned the judges' decision over Jack Sharkey in a fifteen-round bout tonight. Dundee weighed 129 pounds and Sharkey 127. Sharkey loafed along with occasional rallies until the fourteenth.

Dundee did the leading after a cautious first round, but at times, found it difficult to reach Sharkey, who often walked away with his back turned. During several rounds Sharkey did little except cover up with both hands. Dundee peppered him continually.

After landing often in the second and third Dundee shot a left to the head in opening the fourth that sent Sharkey to his knees for a short count.

Sharkey came out of his spell for a brief rally in the fifth, and took another lead in the seventh. Then Dundee, drew blood from a cut over Sharkey's left eye.

Sharkey's unwillingness to mix it caused a chorus of boos from the crowd at the finish.

WOMEN FIGHT FOR STRIKERS

Attack and Attempt to Burn Homes of Men Who Wouldn't Walk Out

Chicago, July 7.—With B. M. Jewell, head of the striking railway shopcrafts, still maintaining the conciliatory attitude he assumed after the strike was under way, but declining to make negotiations for peace, an increasing number of outbreaks and disorders marked the closing hours of the first week since shopmen throughout the country walked off their jobs last Saturday. Federal injunctions restraining strikers from interfering with railroad operations, molesting workers and unlawfully picketing shops were issued at East St. Louis, Ills., and Shreveport, La.

Mobilization of state troops was ordered by Adjutant-General Black, of Illinois, following disturbances in the Wabash yards at Decatur. The governors of Alabama, Kansas, Missouri and Iowa were asked to send troops to scenes of disorders and where peace was threatened in their states.

Holds Mob at Bay.

Chicago, in the past 24 hours, experienced its first outbreaks of violence in connection with the strike. A mob of strikers and sympathizers, which included many women, attacked and attempted to burn the homes of two Illinois Central employes at Burnside, who refused to join the walkout. Police dispersed the mob after Mrs. Julia Gabel, 59, wife of one of the Illinois Central men, held the attackers at bay with a revolver when they attempted to storm her home.

Picketing of railroad shops continued in numerous parts of the country and several arrests were made in connection with picketing and disorders.

Despite numerous outbreaks by strikers there was a general impression in rail circles that the trend of the strike was toward peace, and hope was expressed that Mr. Jewell would be brought together with the United States Railroad Labor Board's two diplomats in mediation—Chairman Ben W. Hooper and W. L. McMenimen, one of the three labor members.

Legal Battle Over Little Girls in Toronto Court

Toronto, July 8.—The legal battle for the guardianship of Dorothy and Eileen Bird, infant daughters of the late Florence Bird, was remanded yesterday before Judge Coatsworth. The children are at present living with Mrs. Joseph Stacey, 47 Strathcona ave., who is opposing the application of Miss Annie Willmott for their custody.

Mrs. Summerville, wife of Ald. Summerville, recalled and examined by Ald. Joseph Singer, declared that the Stacey home was a fine place for the children and they were very happy there.

Mrs. Bird had told witness she would like the children to go to their paternal grandparents in England in the event of her death, but if they could not take them she would have to make other arrangements.

"Mrs. Bird told me she was happy that Mrs. Stacey had the children, because Mrs. Stacey had prayed in her presence in the hospital." Witness had heard Mrs. Bird say that Miss Willmott had no use for children, and she told of Miss Willmott flaring up to her mother-in-law over keeping a boy in her home.

Adjutant Goodhew of the Salvation Army testified that Mrs. Stacey was a member of the corps in whom all members had confidence. He considered the Stacey home a proper and comfortable place for the little ones.

"Would you say Commandant and Mrs. McRae would be as capable of looking after them as the Staceys?" asked Ross Sheppard, counsel for Miss Willmott.

"I have no knowledge of the commandant's home circumstances, but all our officers are of good repute," he replied.

Joseph Stacey expressed his willingness to bring up the children as his own. He had maintained them since February last and had received nothing for their support except $30 from Miss Willmott.

Miss Stacey swore that when she visited Mrs. Bird in the hospital she said, "I am glad you are taking my little girls."

Talk to Children.

Judge Coatsworth here invited the children into his room for a talk.

Mr. Sheppard objected as a matter of law to the children having any voice in the question of guardianship.

"They have nothing to say," remarked his honor, who also invited the counsel on both sides to the conference, an invitation that was accepted.

Mrs. Anderson took the stand after the judge and parties returned to court. "At Miss Willmott's request I went to the Stacey home for the children," she said. "At first she refused to open the door and then she refused to give them up." According to witness, Mrs. Stacey had expressed her unwillingness to keep them without money. "She said there was $1,000 insurance coming to them and she understood their people in England were well-to-do.

Witness described Miss Willmott as an educated Christian woman, who had been a school teacher in England, and quite capable of handling the children.

Brigadier Fraser of the Salvation Army believed that Miss Willmott and Mrs. McRae together would be able to give them sufficient attention. Mrs. McRae corroborated and said she had the necessary help at home.

This concluded the evidence and counsel's argument followed.

Judge Coatsworth reserved his decision.

WINSTON CHURCHILL IN THE ASCENDANT

London, July 6.—Right Hon. Winston Churchill, Secretary of State for the Colonies, is described in the London Press to-day as "a Minister Cabinet." In Lloyd George's absence he acted yesterday as the Premier's deputy, and, with Austen Chamberlain away through illness, he filled the dual role of leader of the House and Lord Privy Seal. Besides this, he handled Colonial Office matters and answered questions regarding the Irish situation. He is admitted to have done all these things successfully.

ist Preachers Have Migrated to English Churches

London, July 8.—Hundreds of Welsh Nonconformist churches are at present without pastors, and the Welsh pulpit is losing its best men. The preachers are migrating to English churches, where there are better salaries and more amendities, both being strong inducements.

Th Congregationalists, for example, have approximately 250 pastorless churches, and other denominations are similarly placed. A remarkable feature of the situation is that, while there are so many "vacant" churches, there is only a small number of ministerial students at the Welsh colleges, and for those who are there completing their training, fewer "calls" than ever are forthcoming.

Synchronizing with the departure of some of the most powerful of the pulpiteers for England is an exodus of ministers from the areas of South Wales to the agricultural counties. This is apparently due to the low wages prevailing in the coalfields, which make it impossible for churches to guarantee permanent and adequate salaries to ministers. It is also due, to some extent, to the general unrest there.

MISSING WELSH LEEK IS ON CANADIAN ARMS

Found That Our Coat of Arms Does Contain Welsh Emblem

Ottawa, July 7.—The missing Welsh leek has been found.

In the dying hours of the session, complaint was made in the house that the new Canadian coat of arms contained the rose of England, the thistle of Scotland and the shamrock of Ireland. But Wales had been forgotten. The coat of arms contained no leek. Investigation was immediatly promised by the government. The coat of arms would be inspected, humorously observed the prime minister, to see if it didn't contain a leek somewhere.

Inquiry to-day revealed the fact that Wales had not been forgotten. The designers incorporated a leek in the base, although the emblem of Wales is somewhat hidden among the decorative work. But when the coat of arms is engraved again an effort will be made to have the leek brought out more clearly.

CALLED BY DEATH

WM. HAMILTON

In the passing of Mr. William Hamilton on Friday at his late home 8 Octavia, a well known resident of this city and vicinity has entered into rest. Some time ago deceased was the victim of a stroke and has not been in good health since. Heart trouble was the ultimate cause of death. In the year 1834 Mr. Hamilton was born at Farmagh, Ireland, being a son of the late Mr. John Hamilton. For many years deceased was a resident of the Townships of Thurlow and Huntingdon and for the past 20 years had resided in Belleville. Mr. Hamilton was in every sense of the word a man of integrity and honesty, and during his long life time made a large number of friends. For many years he had been a faithful member of the Methodist Church, being for some time Recording Steward of Moira Church. Some time ago his wife predeceased him. Surviving are four daughters namely Mrs. A. J. Clare of Vancouver, Mrs. M. E. Sills of Thurlow, Mrs. S. Wellbanks of Rodnersville and Miss Martha E. at home. One brother Mr. M. Hamilton of Oakville and one sister Mrs. A. townsend of this city are living.

DIED

HAMILTON—In Belleville on Friday July 7th 1922, William Hamilton in his 88th year.

TRUCK DRIVER SHOWS TASTE

Purloins Wedding Dress and Hat—Gets 30 Days

Toronto, July 7.—Employed as truck driver to convey goods from Hamilton to Toronto, Stanley Nicholson, abstracted a silk dress and a lady's hat. He admitted his guilt in the Police Court yesterday.

"What is the value of the dress?" asked the court.

Crown Attorney Armour said the dress, a dainty confection in silk, and of pale green color, was to take part in a wedding, and was valued at $150. It was not the bride's garment.

"And the hat is of about the same value," added Mr. Armour.

Here an affectionate parent anticipating a matrimonial event in his own circle, almost collapsed, and had to be revived with smelling salts and appeals to "Buck up, old dear!"

Mr. Armour added that the prisoner, a Hamilton man with a bald head, had offered the dress to another lady, who had the good sense to decline it.

T. O'Connor pleaded hard for Nicholson, who got off with the very light term of 30 days.

study classes held daily throughout the week involving China and Japan. Watch the fans and the clerical "umpire."

Impromptu Concert.

A chance to show in action the various talents of teachers and delegates will be afforded Saturday evening under the leadership of Rev. F. J Horwood, Mus. Bac., A.T.C.M. Some dark horses may be brought to light as the case in other years.

Sunday Program

Naturally the last day is a period of concentrating and emphasizing on the main purpose of the school. From 9.45 to 10.30 a.m. a song and testimony service is held. "What Jesus Taught About Service," will be the final message of Rev. Archer Wallace. Then follows the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon Rev. G. W. Sparling, of China, will speak, and again at 7 o'clock on the College lawn, weather permitting. The sessions of the school are brought to a close by the usual impressive covenant signing.

Friday Morning's Address.

A very helpful Bible discussion of "What Jesus Taught About Worldly Anxieties" was the next of a series by Rev. Archer Wallace . Worry unfits and cripples any individual. The strength for two days put into one is fallacious. No good is accomplished by adding to the present also tomorrow's responsibilities. We should be content in the Fatherhood of God. Jesus taught in His saying about the birds and flowers that we are even more so subjects of Divine interest and care. Though not to be clothed in celestial splendor here, Providence is tremendously concerned about us just as an earthly parent looks after a child, or sick one, who dreads pain and medicine. Christ by His deeds manifested that the physical side of humanity was an object of necessary attention. When the disciples were wearied from an all night experience fishing, He greeted them in the morning with a fire prepared and the query, "Have ye to eat?" The longing of the soul does not eclipse the physical needs and we cannot ignore the craving for body food. Temperamental natures cause anxious moments. The grace of God was meant to overcome our impatient and hasty dispositions. Nerves can be soothed by the calm tranquility of the Eternal Spirit. The faith of Christians should express itself in a difference to that of the worldly disposed. God is to be found everywhere and in the common things of life. Materialism is the cause of the worst disease with which medical science has to contend, that embedded within the human mind and fanned by rush and the mad race after wealth. The mantle of freedom and blissful care would be ours more in cultivating true Christian science. It is inconsistency to have a continual recurring of anxiety. The cure is in seeking first the kingdom of God with the promises. Explorers do not allow obstacles to annoy them beyond endurance. Great objectives [illegible] ination and we can fully appreciate the richness at our disposal as found in the gospel of Christ.

In a later issue we shall have a synopsis of the addresses given on Friday night, also of the election of officers. Saturday and Sunday accounts will likewise be in the Monday issue of our paper. Speak ahead for extra copies. The Sunday services are free for the public to attend.

Red Hot July Days Hard On The Baby

July—the month of oppressive heat; red hot days and sweltering nights; is extremely hard on little ones. Diarrhoea, dysentery, colic and cholera infantum carry of thousands of precious little lives every summer. The mother must be constantly on her guard to prevent these troubles or if they come on suddenly to fight them. No other medicine is of such aid to mothers during the hot summer as is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach, and an occasional dose given to the well child will prevent summer complaint, or if the trouble does come on suddenly will banish it. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

IS GOD SPEAKING TO THE WORLD?

"See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh" . . . "Yet once more I shake not the earth (organized society) only but also heaven (the present ruling powers)"—Heb. 11:26. Are the ruling powers of earth being shaken? Ask our leading statesmen. Is the shaking to increase? Let the Scriptures answer. "The whole earth (the present entire social fabric) shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy"—Zeph. 3:8. PAPERS NOT YET ISSUED BY GOVT.

To Belleville Race Club—Cabinet is Still Undecided

Toronto, July 7.—At noon to-day the Provincial Government had not decided whether or not they would permit the Provincial Secretary's Department to issue supplementary letters patent to the legal representative of the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association, which under a charter issued in 1903, intends to increase its capital for erecting and operating a race track on the Toronto-Hamilton Highway, near Port Credit. But there is little doubt that the club will receive its papers within a few days.

Does Not Expect Trouble,

James Bay, K. C., representing the Belleville Club, does not expect any trouble. "The application was made in the usual way, as is done with all companies wishing to extend their capital, and the charter is quite valid. That is admitted," he said. "I understand that the papers were held up in order that Mr. Raney might look over them when he returned from his vacation. I do not expect that there will be any difficulty."

GIRL GIVES SENSATIONAL EVIDENCE AT MOULT INQUEST

Moult Inquest Throws New Light On Farmer's Home

Mrs. Moult Continues Her Story — She Collapses When Asked as to Relations Between Moult and Barrie—Alberta Philips Makes Startling Confession of Impropriety

INQUEST STILL IN PROGRESS

"Do you think the Public should hear all of the story?" was the question put to the Coroner by Mrs. Moult at the inquest into the death of George Wesley Moult, which was resumed in the Court House this morning.

The Coroner—The public is very much interested and I don't see why the story should not be made plain to the public. This is a public investigation for the sake of satisfying the family in question.

Mr. Carnew—"All children under 15 years of age should leave the room and, ladies, you are going to hear something."

In resuming the story where she left off at the adjournment of the enquiry on Friday last, Mrs. Moult stated that she asked Barrie on the evening of June 29 to go to Mr. Coffey's farm to see if Mr. Moult was there. Barrie said he would go upstairs and get his flashlight.

"He went upstairs and got the light, and then went out. The children would not go to sleep that night, and three of them were crying," continued Mrs. Moult.

"Alberta Phillips was sleeping on her arm over the table, she had done a hard day's work. Maurice was gone about 15 or 20 minutes. He walked and did not take the car. That's the last I saw of Maurice. I told Alberta that if she wasn't afraid to stay, I'd run up to my father's home and get father. I did so but couldn't make any one hear by rapping. I thought the men had gone and mother had gone to sleep again, so I returned home. I went back to the first gate past the barn and saw no signs of any one. I saw Mr. Coffey about 10 p.m. when I went to their house and rapped on the door. On inquiring I found that Maurice had not been there at all. Mrs. Coffey came back to our house with me. Mr. Coffey came and other neighbors, and searched and helped in every way."

Mr. Carnew—"Where did Maurice get the valise? And did he return to the house after you left for your father's place?"

Witness—"I cannot say so for sure, but there was a ladder to his window. I saw it there, standing against the window at the east side of the house. When I looked in Wes's trousers pockets for his money, it was gone. I believe there was about $40 there. I reported the loss of money to the

LITTLE SETTLERS ARRIVE AT THE MARCHMONT HOME

One Hundred English Boys to Make Their Homes in Canada—They Have Seraphic Voices—Give Concert on Tuesday

There was considerable excitement in Belleville on Saturday morning when one hundred children arrived from England to settle in Canada. The party of seventy-three boys and twenty-seven girls are now residing at Marchmont Home, so ably run by Mr. and Mrs. Merry, awaiting distribution to various centres.

The Party sailed from Liverpool on the "Montrose" on Friday, June 30th, under the guardianship of Miss Birt, of Liverpool and Mrs. Merry, of London, after an excellent voyage arrived in Quebec on Friday evening last, about 5 p.m. During the voyage the boys and girls were entertained in various ways, one day sports took up practically the whole day. (The prizes being offered by the passengers.) Games were freely indulged in and on the Sunday spent on board two services, morning and evening, were well attended and enjoyed.

The boys have been invited to have a swim in the Y.M.C.A. Bath through the kindness of Mr. Keeber.

The Rotary Club have promised to entertain the Children on Tuesday afternoon to Sports and Tea, at Victoria Park, beginning at 2.30 and towards the close of the afternoon the children will give a concert.

The little settlers have sweet voices which were heard to advantage at Christ Church where they attended the morning service yesterday. The rector, Rev. Dean Swayne, delivered an inspiring address of welcome to the young immigrants.

The following is the programme for the concert on Tuesday.

U.S. NEWSPAPERS HIT DE VALERA

A Repudiated Charlatan, Says the Anti-British Gaelic-American

New York, July 9.—Eamon de Valera's complete lack of influence, even upon the Sinn Fein faction of the Irishmen in the United States, is demonstrated by the cool reception which was given his recent "message" to the people of this country, in which he made a desperate effort to secure the sympathy of his former admirers here.

Several New York publications, which formerly expressed admiration for the Sinn Fein leader, now subject him to a severe gruelling for his recent activities.

The most notable example is the Gaelic-American, which has always been rabidly anti-British, and was one of the leading distributors of De Valera's propaganda in this country

Fortunes of Charlatan.

This paper, in an editorial discussing the fighting in Dublin, says of the Irish insurgents "There were only a few hundred of them, all, except a few fanatical men among the leaders, deluded, deceived, and obsessed with the idea that they were fighting for a principle, when they were only engaged in an effort to advance the political fortunes of a charlatan whom the Irish people had emphatically repudiated."

The World this morning says that De Valera's appeal to the people of the United States will win him little sympathy, for as "leader of rebels against the Irish Government he has applied to the wrong address."

No Support.

De Valera, the paper declares, attempted to override the decision of his own people with the aid of a body of irresponsible extremists, and has been beaten. "In his desperation," the World continues "nothing is left to him as the chief promoter of strife and violence in Ireland but to look to America for encouragement. He will not get it. In his statement he presents himself in the light of a man whose one purpose is to ruin Ireland and bring down upon the heads of the people he professes to serve, endless disaster."

A Changed America.

The Times says that De Valera "rises again to claim that he alone is right and everybody else in Ireland wrong.

"The attitude of the discredited Irish leader becomes more ludicrous when he appeals to Irish-Americans to stand by him still," the Times continues. "This is entirely to ignore the great revulsion of feeling which the Irish civil war has produced in this country. Mortification and shame have taken the place among Irish-Americans of the old enthusiasm and defiance. One has but to glance at the utterances of the organs of Irish opinion in this country to realize the enormous change."

LATE W. H. BIGGAR, K.C.

SUDDEN CALL TO AN EX-MAYOR

W. H. Biggar, K.C., Vice-President of G.T.R. is Victim of Stroke

Surprise and regret were experienced by many citizens of Belleville this morning when it was learned that Mr W. H Biggar K. C., one of the best known railway men of Canada, being Vice-President and General Counsel of the G. T R. System, had suddenly passed away at Montreal, where he had been residing for the past few years. Deceased was apparently in the best of health on Saturday and was on his way to the company's office when he was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage, and died within an hour in a hospital.

Mr. Biggar was the son of J. L. Biggar formerly M.P. for East Northumberland. He won first honors in scholastic and athletic fields at Uper Canada College. Called to the Bar in 1880, he entered into partnership with the late Mr. John Bell, K.C., of Belleville, General Solicitor for the Grand Trunk Railway System, under the firm name of Bell & Biggar.

Mr. Biggar was elected Mayor of Belleville in 1887-88 and was elected to the Ontario Legislature in 1890 in the Liberal interest as M.P.P. for West Hastings. Although offered the Speakership of the Ontario Legislature, he retired from active political life after two terms, to attend to his railway and legal duties. He was made a Q. C. in 1899. In 1903 the late Charles M. Hays, President of the Grand Trunk Railway, brought Mr. Biggar to Montreal as Assistant General Solicitor to the system on the inception of the Grand Trunk Pacific plan. He was made General Counsel of the system in 1910.

Mr. Biggar was regarded as having the most accurate knowledge of the whole proceedings connected with the building up of the Grand Trunk Pacific. He appeared before the Privy Council in 1911 in the important implementary case of the Grand Trunk Pacific versus the Dominion Government, arising out of the guarantees in connection with Grand Trunk Pacific bonds, and won a victory that aroused widespread comment. He was Chief Counsel for the Grand Trunk in connection with the arbitration proceedings held at Montreal last year for the valuation of Grand Trunk stock, a case that will be decided by the Privy Council in London to-morrow.

Deceased was in his 70th year and was born at the Carrying Place, in Prince Edward County. A widow who was Miss Marie Louise Ballow and a family of three sons and one daughter survive.

The funeral will take place in Belleville Tuesday afternoon, and so numerous are the Parliamentary, business, railway and legal friends of the deceased counsel, that a special train will be run from Montreal to Belleville on that day to accommodate them.

CRUCIAL STAGE OF RAIL STRIKE

Armed Guards on Duty in Various States—Attempts Made to Operate Shops and Lines

ULTIMATUM TO MEN

Trouble Brewing Among Strikers—New Acts of Violence Feared

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Washington, Jly 10.—The United States Government, through the appointment of deputy marshals, will make sure that law and order is preserved, property and life protected, transportation of mails continued and inter-state commerce not interrupted despite the strike of shopmen, Attorney General Daugherty announced today after conference with President Harding.

Chicago, July 10.—The crucial stage in the railway strike was reached today. National Guardsmen were on duty in Illinois and under arms in four other states. Marshalls were in charge of law enforcement at various points.

Michigan state police were prepared for duty, while at other railway centres the roads relied upon Federal injunctions and local authorities for protection in attempting to operate the shops and maintain transportation, into which increasing in roads were noted.

Shop and Round House whistles shrieked final notes of railroad ultimatums cancelling seniority and the pension rights of strikers who refused to return to work.

Day brought ominous forebodings of impending crisis at many points as trouble brewed among strikers. New acts of violence occurred at scattered points and others are feared.

SILENT TOAST TO LATE MR. BIGGAR

Rotarians Stand in Silence Out of Respect to old Bellevillian

"As a token of respect to an old Bellevillian who has passed away, let us stand as a silent toast," said Mr. Gordon Moffatt at the Rotary Club luncheon today in referring to the death of Mr. W. H. Biggar.

The Club was addressed by Dr. Platt, of Picton, who spoke of his impressions in Egypt. He said there was a veil between the East and the West which could not be removed.

Rev. F. S. Malott was welcomed as the new pastor of Bridge Street Methodist Church. A number of the English boys new garrison at the Marchmont Home were guests of the club.

QUEBEC GETS 5,000,000 FROM BOOZE THIS YEAR

Montreal, July 10.—According to the statement of Premier Taschereau, the estimated profits from Quebec's sale of liquor will reach five million dollars this year. This sum will guarantee the provincial treasury a surplus that will smash all previous records in the Province.

ACCIDENT ON TRENT ROAD

Automobile Overturns at Concrete Bridge—John Doyle of Trenton Badly Injured

Receiving a phone call at 1.55 a.m. Sunday morning to the effect that there had been a bad accident on the Trent Road, members of the local police force drove the Police Ambulance out to the scene of the accident.

On arriving at the second concrete bridge, about six or seven miles out towards Trenton, they came upon the unfortunates.

How It Happened.

A Ford car carrying three passengers, Charles Shoniker, John Doyle and George Harris, all of Trenton, was being driven towards Trenton Shoniker at the wheel, when at the bridge in question, they did a stunt good enough for a circus headliner, if they could repeat it at will. The car jumped the bridge, turned one complete somersault, and also a corkscrew while in the air, for though it turned over once, it was falling towards Belleville instead of Trenton.

Doyle was injured rather painfully, but the other two passengers were unscathed, and was removed to the Belleville Hospital where he is resting as well as could be expected to-day.

There is a ditch from 10 to 14 feet deep at this point and a small stream of water running along the ditch. The bridge is about 7 or 8 miles from the city.

Shoniker and Harris were both arrested and taken to the police station.

This morning they appeared before Magistrate Masson, Shoniker (the driver) being charged with criminal negligence, and Harris with being drunk in a public place. Harris was fined $100 and costs of $8, and Shoniker was remanded for 2 weeks.

Police Court Hearing.

Harris pleaded guilty to a charge of drinking liquor in a public place, namely upon the highway. He also detailed the hour the party obtained a bottle of liquor from an Italian, called Tony, in Trenton paying $5 for it. The occupants of the car consumed the liquor on the road to Belleville throwing the bottle away. A fine of $100 and costs was imposed on Harris or in default 3 months in jail at hard labor.

Charles Shoniker was charged with two serious offences, namely driving a car whilst under the influence of liquor and also by careless driving caused grevious bodily harm to one John Doyle an occupant of the car. At the suggestion of the Magistrate these charges were enlarged for hearing until the 28th inst. Bail was fixed at $1000, in himself and two sureties of $500 each, which it is expected will be secured.

SHOULD TEACHERS BOB THEIR HAIR?

Montreal, July 9.—Should bobbed-haired teachers be employed. That is the question which is now vexing the school authorities of Outremont. The shorn locks of a popular teacher in one of the public schools in that municipality, who a short time before school closed, clashed with the well-known prejudice of W. A. Walsh, principal of the Strathcona Academy, has caused heated discussion between parents and instructors. It is reported that the teacher was told when she appeared with abbreviated coiffure that her locks must be long by September if she was to continue to instruct the children of Outremont.

PROTESTANT SOCIETIES ATTEND DIVINE SERVICE ON SUNDAY

A Patriotic and Inspiring Discourse Delivered by Rev. G. Marshall, Rector of Emmanuel Church

In commemoration of the approaching anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne, an Orange service was held on Sunday afternoon at Emmanuel Reformed Church and was largely attended. There was a large turnout of members of L.O.L. Lodges No. 274 and No. 25191, Prentice Boys, Sons of England, Sons of Scotland and lady members of the Ladies' Orange Lodge.

The parade to and from the church was headed by Johnstone's kiltie band which rendered appropriate selections. Rev. Bro. G. Marshall, rector of the church, preached, and his discourse was in keeping with the occasion. Bro. M. Barlow assisted in the service. After suitable prayers had been said and hymns sung the sermon was given, the text being a portion of the 8th verse of the 46th chapter of Isaiah: "Remember this and shew yourselves men."

These words introduce us to a period about 700 years B.C., and were spoken by the grand old prophet Isaiah, forming a little part of a powerful sermon which in the main was directed against infidelity and idolatory. He warned his hearers of the consequences of forsaking the Almighty and of ignoring His known will. He also reminded them of the power and divinity of the Almighty. The divine said he desired to address a few plain words to them upon three things, namely: First, remember the principles that you stand for; second, remember the end to be obtained. The Orange Order had been slandered and attempts made to divide the ranks by the assertion that it was a political organization. Members know this is false. Party politics has nothing to do with and no place in the order. Politics were never approached in the lodge room. There were other slanderous statements made in regard to the Order but all could be refuted. The Orange Order is alive and still stands for the principles of William, Prince of Orange. It stands for Protestant principles that were strenuously fought for and so victoriously won. We are pledged to the broad principles of national freedom, procured on the field of battle. We are totally opposed to those who resort to anarchy and murder to attain their ends. Rev. Mr. Marshall referred to the recent agitation for vital changes in the school laws and Assessment Act. It was promoted with great energy by the Roman Catholic prelates. We have not heard the last of the school question. Our opponents are well organized and when the time comes they may spring another surprise. The divine referred to the examples the members of the order should follow, also the end to be obtained. The end to be obtained is the recognition by man of his respon-

GERMANY IS PLAYING GAME OF HER LIFE

Says Sir Edmund Walker, in Regard to German Crisis

Toronto, July 10.—"Germany is playing the game of her life in the effort to secure the scaling down of the reparations to such a point as shall permit her to prosper," declared Sir Edmund Walker, in answer to questions as to the German financial situation, which is reported to have created alarm in European capitals.

Sir Edmund has just returned from a holiday in France and Spain, during which he had an opportunity of observing conditions in both countries.

Many, he said, might be under the impression that the Germans were busily engaged in trying to find a way out of the financial difficulties, but as a matter of fact the bulk of the people were not dissatisfied with the present conditions. The peasantry and working people were back at their occupations, and the worrying is being done by the financiers and by the Governments that have not the courage to say to their people, "You must pay or you must default."

Some people were finding profit in the present situation, and were laying up stores outside Germany that might remain valuable whatever happened at home.

Might Be War.

"If there were a suspension, and a moratorium," said Sir Edmund, "there might be political troubles leading to civil war."

The situation in Europe resulted from the reluctance of the Governments to meet their debts by taxation.

"Not one country," he remarked, "is ready to do what Britain does, bring herself almost to a state of ruin so that she may pay the United States her debt without favor and without waiting."

France, in the main, lived within herself, not selling to the world, and she must have money to do the work of reconstruction in those districts that were devastated. She owed the United States enormous sums for powder that was blown away, from which she had no productive return, and she simply could not pay it.

"What is being done," said Sir Edmund, "is a campaign of education, largely for the benefit of the United States, to the effect that France cannot pay. If she does not, what can be done? The United States can't go over there and collect the debt with battleships."

Conferences Not Failures.

There had been several conferences which did not seem to achieve results and which were said to be failures.

They were not failures," said Sir Edmund. "They are processes of education. A lot of hot air is blown off at each of them that has not to be blown of again. We get a little nearer to realities each time."

If Spain had not speculated in the German market, said Sir William, she would be one of the wealthiest nations to-day. At [illegible] was, it is far from the dead country which many people imagine it to be. It was the only country where real money is to be had, and Madrid and Barcelona are both great modern cities. Not more than three or four cities in the United States would compare with Barcelona.

Protestant Societies Attend Divine Service on Sunday Last

sibility to God, to each other and to our Protestant faith . Show yourselves men. We are proud of the part we as a nation were able to achieve in the great war. We won because of what we put into it. In concluding his discourse Rev. Mr. Marshall referred to the rebuilding of the world and the material for that purpose, next to the home, is the Sunday School Sunday School teachers are doing more to regenerate the world than all the idle dreams and flowery speeches of impractical philosophers. The energetic and faithful Sunday school teachers do more to build up a new world than all the fine essays that were ever written.

The following resolutions were submitted and adopted at the close of the service:

Resolved, that we view with horror the brutal murder at London, almost at the foot of the throne, of Field Marshall Sir Henry Wilson, M.P., who during the recent great war rendered such signal services to his King and country, and we express our profound sympathy and sorrow with Lady Wilson and family, as well as the people of Ulster and the Empire, in the great loss which they have sustained through the death of this gallant and distinguished soldier, and citizen; and record our indignation and utter abhorrence of the cowardly assassins who are guilty of so dastardly and cruel a crime .

Resolved, that we, the Orangemen and kindred societies assembled for divine service on Sunday, the 9th day of July, 1922, at Emmanuel Church, Belleville, Ontario, desire to place on record our admiration in the splendid fight for the integrity of Ulster and the Empire by Sir James Craig and his loyal followers, and their determined resistance to Sinn Fein propaganda, in their struggle for freedom and British connection. We are mindful of their sacrifices and shedding of their blood for liberty, and we assure them that we are proud of their challenge of "No Surrender" to traitors and conspirators against our Empire. We are also pleased to note the effort being put forward by the government of the Irish Free State for the suppression of rebellion and hope that the outcome will be a reunited Ireland within the Empire.

After the service those on parade repaired to the Orange Hall where an open meeting was held for a brief period, presided over by Bro. E. Bell, W..M of L.O.L. No. 274.

Bro Mayor Hanna moved, seconded by Bro. L. Platt, a vote of thanks to the Rector of Emmanuel Church for his able discourse, and the church wardens for the use of the church to hold the service. The vote of thanks was unanimously adopted and was appropriately acknowledged by Rev. Mr. Marshall and Bro. J. W. Barlow, one of the wardens of the church. Both referred to the pleasure it was to have the members of the various societies attend divine service at Emmanuel Church.

Bro. Savage on behalf of the Sons of England, said they were pleased to be able to take part in the service and all were much benefitted by the sermon delivered by Rev Mr. Marshall.

Worthy Mistress Sister J. H. Hanna, on behalf of the lady members of the Orange Society, expressed their appreciation of the sermon.

On motion of Bro. F. M. Clarke, seconded by Bro. W. C. Reid, a vote of thanks was extended to members of the sister societies who participated in the church parade. The proceedings closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Railway News

Guelph. — Realizing that some effort should be made to preserve the old C. P. R. station building, the first house built in Guelph, which is located on a piece of ground at the foot of Woolwich Street, and which is fast going to ruin, the civic improvement committee of Guelph decided to make a move towards having improvements carried out to preserve the building.

Galt.—General Manager M. W. Kirkwood of the Lake Erie & Northern and Grand River Railways has announced that early in July work would be started on the new Union Depot on Main street. The plans have been finally approved and tenders have been called for. The building, which will be of rug brick construction, one storey in height, but later it is intended to add another storey, to accommodate the general offices now located in Scott's Block.

Moose Jaw.—The roof is now on the Dominion Express Company's new building, west of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company office building, and the work is being rushed with great speed. As soon as the Express Company building is in shape to be occupied, the old building will be removed and the work of installing the new tracks will be commenced.

In front of the new depot the concrete roadway is laid in squares of ten feet. The city electricians have completed the installation of the two electric light standards at the outer edges of the sidewalks on both sides of the roadway.

Galt.—After 40 years of continuous and faithful service as an employee of the C. P. R., Alex. McKean, city ticket agent here for the past 16 years, joined the list of the superannuated and his place was taken by John Campbell, for many years a permanent resident of Galt, at one time depot and freight agent, but for the past several years travelling passenger agent.

Mr. McKean commenced his railroad career in the freight audit department at Winnipeg, was agent at High Bluff, Manitoba, for a couple of years and for 17 years successfully conducted a mercantile business in Mount Forest, handling railway, steamship, telegraph and express services. It was from Mount Forest that he came to Galt in 1906.

Vancouver. — Vancouver's first transcontinental railway train entered the city thirty-five years ago, when prophecies were made which have now reached full realization. In the address of welcome to Henry Abbott, who was then superintendent of the Pacific Division of the C. P. R., Mayor M. A. Maclean drew a word-picture of Vancouver in the future which is now a fact.

Vancouver's first train was drawn by an old wood-burning type engine and included a baggage, colonist sleeper and pullman and drawing-room cars of the latest type at that date. The engine was draped in evergreens and bore placards bearing inscriptions "From Ocean to Ocean" and many mottoes declaring the achievements of the men who undertook the construction of the C. P. R.

P. Barnhardt was conductor and P. Righter, engineer.

The celebration of the arrival of the train was carried on far into the night, the city band serenading officials of the C. P. R. and a torchlight procession being staged through the city.

Woodstock, Ontario.—In the death of Charles Garden, C.E., which occurred at the residence of Col. F. H. J. Dibblee recently, there passed away the last male member in his generation, of a family associated with the history and progress of Woodstock for well-nigh, if not quite, a century. Mr. Garden was connected with the building of the C. P. R. through the Rockies. He was one of the advance guard of the exploration party. The route of this party was via the N. P. R. to Bismark, Dakota, up the Missouri to Benton and thence by trek to Calgary and up the Bow. Only one party came over the Rockies' summit. Mr. Garden was transit man and the party consisted of fifteen men. They came through the Vermillion, south of Kickinghorse and made their way to what is now called "Golden." They built "The Cache" which has ever since remained, with, of course, extensive restorations and is now known as Moodie's House.

In 1884-5, Mr. Garden worked on C. P. R. construction near Lake Superior on White River, Peninsula Harbor, and it was at this time that the first through C. P. R. train went to Vancouver. He was later engaged on construction on the Deloraine branch to the Coal Mines for the C. P. R. He had charge of location and construction on Souris Branch and was for some years in office work in Winnipeg. In 1897 he was on the location of the Crow's Nest branch, locating the loop and tunnel at Michael Creek.

MOULT INQUEST THROWS NEW LIGHT On Farmer's Home

neighbors present. Possibly it was some one in the room taking the money, that had alarmed the children who slept in this room."

Mr. Carnew—"Did Margaret Robinson leave your house to help her mother at home?"

Witness—"Yes, partly. She would not milk the cows or mind the children while I milked the cow, so she was not of the greatest service to me. Then I hired Alberta Phillips."

Mr. Carnew—"Was Maurice 'fresh' with Alberta, joking with her, slapping her on the arms, and generally familiar?"

Witness—"Yes. One day Maurice gave Alberta a kiss after dinner. So Alberta told me afterwards. I think probably Wes heard this conversation. She then went to Trenton as a bridesmaid at a wedding. Maurice drove her there with a horse and buggy to her father's place. She came back the next day. Bert Orr drove her back. She is engaged to Bert Orr, who lives near Foxboro, he having paid attentions to her for some time Maurice first met Orr at Alberta's father's home one Sunday after June 6th the day of the wedding."

"Orr came to our home one evening, and took Alberta for a drive. Maurice always said Bert Orr was foolish. I noticed that Maurice thought a great deal of Alberta. Alberta went home every second week end and Maurice didn't like this. One Saturday night, Maurice would not take Alberta home, so Wes said he would. Then Maurice said he'd go in 5 minutes with the horse and buggy; but she got in the car with Wes. Then Maurice also got into the car and they all went, and took Alberta home.

Mr. Carnew—"Why didn't you tell Maurice she was wearing an engagement ring?"

Witness—"I thought she might tell him herself. Maurice took her to the Community Club, and to the village also and held chats on the verandah almost every evening."

Mr. Carnew—"As a result of these flirtations, did any improper conduct occur between Maurice and Alberta?"

Witness—"Alberta told me that Maurice had threatened to break her door open, so she told me, if she would not open the door. Wes and I heard them talking for an hour that night. I told Wes about this, but he did not say anything as he expected me to attend to occurrences of the household.

"We moved Maurice downstairs, where he slept afterwards. Maurice said on that occasion that they should put a chain on him, and lead him about. Maurice opened her letter, and Alberta found her letter opened and lying in his bedroom."

Mrs. Moult went on to say that Barrie had told her husband that Alberta had sent him, (Barrie) a note relating to her condition. Barrie said he would soon be back in Montreal.

Mr. Carnew—"Had there been any coolness or disagreement between Maurice and Wes? I am told there was a very strange relationship between them. I'm told that Wes taught one of the children to call a nasty name."

At this point Mrs. Moult broke down completely and had to leave the stand.

Alberta Phillips

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Phillips, and housemaid at the Moult residence, was the next witness. She testified that she was 19 years of age a Methodist and having a common school education. I worked at the Ontario School for the Deaf here for 3 months, before I hired with Mrs. Moult on April 17th. Mrs. Moult paid me $20 per month. We were neighbors to Bert Orr on the 9th Concession of Holloway, when we lived there. He visited me there and later also, when we moved to the 6th concession. Orr is 23, and has 2 sisters and one brother. He proposed to me last Christmas time, after a courtship extending from August 1921. My parents were willing, and the marriage was to occurr this autumn, at my suggestion. We chose September 20th 1922 as the wedding day. He brought me an engagement ring shortly after Christmas. I did not like any other fellow, better than Orr. Orr did not want me to go to the Moult's homestead, but I went. Wes Moult brought me over to his place on Monday April 7th. Mr. and Mrs Moult and Barrie were total strangers to me. Maurice never put his hands on me, or suggested anything. I went to the Community Club meeting, 3 miles away, with Maurice in a buggy. He also took me to church at Roslin later. I asked Mrs. Moult to allow me to sleep upstairs where I could be near my clothes, after I had been there one month. Barrie also took me to a picnic at Plainfield, and also took me to my father's home. Orr knew that I was going out with Barrie, and he said he had no objections. Maurice always wanted to know why I went home on week ends, and wanted to come over after me every Sunday evening. I told him no, that Bert Orr would probably be there."

Bert would bring me back from my home, to Moult's in his car. Maurice took me over to my home most of the time, sometimes with the car and sometimes with a horse and buggy. Maurice refused to take me home one night, so Wes Moult volunteered to take me over home, after I said I would walk. When Mr. Moult offered Maurice then said that he would take me. Then Maurice got into the car with Mr. Moult and myself and we three drove over to my home. I rode with Moult in the front seat.

"Later, Maurice asked me why I would not go with him, and I said to him that he did not appear to want to take me home. Maurice wanted to marry me before the 24th of May, about 1 week before. This would be about 1 month after I arrived there. He proposed to me on the verandah, one evening. He asked me how I would like to go to Montreal to live, and the night following, he proposed. He did not know for sure that I was engaged to Bert Orr. I said no, I would not marry him. He would catch me, and slap me on the arms occasionally before this. He also carried on rather vulgarly with me also, and I would tell him to stop. He would do this in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Moult. One night he came to my door and threatened to break into my room. He said he wanted to speak to me. There was a latch with a catch on my door"

Witness admitted that there was impropriety between Barrie and herself. She said:-

"I tried to scream but he put his hand over my mouth."

Mr. Carnew—"Do you mean to tell this jury that you could not scream if you wished to, when a man was attempting to criminally assault you?

Witness—"I tried to scream."

"I had found one of my letters in his bed room while making his bed, that had been opened, and we were arguing about this, through the closed door. I opened the door and we argued in the hallway, and then he followed me into my room. As far as I know, Wesley Moult knew nothing of the occurrences between Maurice and myself. Maurice wrote me some letters, after I reported his misconduct to Mrs. Moult. We never spoke afterwards to one another."

The letters were produced in court and arranged in order by witness.

"I showed the letter to Mrs. Moult and she told me to tell Maurice to go to h—."

"I answered only one of the letters I do not believe that Wesley Moult knew of the behaviour of Maurice in his house with me, and he never mentioned the case.

"'Tis three weeks before the 29th day of June I was down to the Carter place with Wes. Moult and Maurice and the children. We were there for about two hours. I sat in the car, and watched the children. Maurice always seemed to be friendly with Wes. I heard the children call Maurice names. Wes told little Mary, the little girl, to tell maurice he was a dam old b—. This would be while Maurice would be playing with the children. This happened quite often. Maurice paid no attention to it, and Maurice would tell little Mary to call Wes that name. She would, and they would both laugh. There was one gun in the kitchen (an army rifle), and one in the pantry, and a revolver also The one that was kept in the pantry was also kept in the drive shed, I believe. The men shot woodchucks, and used to shoot against the hill together.

"On the morning of the 29th of June, I saw Wes and Maurice driving out on the democrat. Maurice returned about 10.30 a.m. that morning and was in the drive house. He was pounding in there. He would be in there nearly an hour. Mr. Moult came up for his dinner about 11.45, unhitched and came into the house. Wes asked where Pearson was, (we all called him Pearson about the place). We decided to have dinner without him, and then Wes said I had better go out and look for him, as possibly he had jumped in the well. I know no reason why Maurice should have came back from the Carter place at 10.30 a.m. that day. Maurice later came down to the house, when I was washing the dishs, about 1 p.m. He came from the direction of the barn. I set out his dinner, but he said he did not want any dinner, and went out. He came back in 10 or 15 minutes and ate some pudding. I do not know where he was during them 15 minutes, but Mrs. Moult said she had seen him standing in the horse stable door, when she went out to feed the chickens. He came in to the house later and asked Mrs. Moult if she wanted anything at the store. His appearance was as usual.

The inquest is in session this afternoon, having commenced at 2 p.m.

CO-OPERATIVE SELLING

Will Make Wider Markets for Our Farm Products.

Canadian Farm Produce Must Be Largely Exported — Co-operative Selling for Foreign Marketing— Progressive Countries Are Crowding Us Out.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Agricultural products form a very large percentage of our exports. It is evident that any increase in our exports will depend upon our ability to market co-operatively products that will please our patrons so much that they will demand more. We have to see that our agricultural products going to the markets of the world go on to those markets in the shape and form demanded by the market we are attempting to gain. We must adopt the policy of grading our farm products if we are going to hold our position. The best markets of the world demand more uniform produce, demand greater quantities, demand it prepared in a way that is attractive to the consuming public. We must be able to furnish large quantities of standard grade dependable products at reasonable prices, packed in such a way that they can be merchandised without waste.

Advantages of Co-operative Marketing.

Co-operative marketing associations stop the dumping of agricultural products. As it is now, the markets are flooded at harvest time with our own, and other producers' goods. The wastes are enormous, the local consuming public and the grower lose, no one benefits excepting the speculator. Co-operative marketing, which, by the way, is the end link in a chain of activities, provides for a steady flow of food products to the consumer at a reasonable price. It eliminates the wasteful feast or famine, glut or nothing, condition on our markets. The speculator does not break the price, the farmers do this themselves by dumping their product one against the other, making it possible for the speculator to watch the fight to a finish and then step in and take the spoils at his price. The consuming public pay the full price irrespective of what the farmer gets for the product. This practice of everybody selling at once during the harvest time, flooding the market for a few weeks and then leaving it empty has existed in Ontario since the beginning of our agriculture. We have enjoyed the markets of Great Britain for a great many years in the past, and now find that we are being crowded out in the sales of our exportable produce. We annually produce one hundred million dollars worth of dairy products. It might just as well be two or three hundred million, because we have the capacity to produce that quantity, in quality if we would only get down to it. We can grow exportable orchard fruits of the highest quality, we can produce the highest grade of export bacon and beef, we can produce the highest grade of export cereal grains, we can produce the highest grade of wool and tobacco. All these commodities are soil products, products that make up sixty per cent. of the total exports of Canada. But we cannot make real progress in agriculture until we develop the marketing and of our business.

Progressive Countries Are Crowding Us Out.

The Danish, the New Zealand and the United States farmers have invaded and are crowding the Canadian farm produce from the European markets. The farmers of these countries have specialized in production and organized marketing to a degree scarcely thought of by the farmers of our province. These countries in their struggle for markets are beating us in the race, and we can only hope to retain what we have, or regain what we have lost by adopting methods that will make our farm products attractive, uniform, of the highest quality and always available at a fair price. The only way to accomplish the desired end, is through the adoption of the co-operative marketing plans by all the people producing exportable farm produce.

A co-operative marketing organization is most likely to succeed if it is built around a single industry, like grain, fruit, dairy products, or wool. Each branch of the agricultural industry has its individual problems to solve and difficulties to overcome. Organizations that have attempted to handle the marketing of numerous lines of farm crops have generally been unsatisfactory in that the divided interest of the co-operative is destructive to success.

Co-operation and the Public.

The co-operative organization has a distinct responsibility to the public. It cannot live alone. Through the co-operative handling of crops the farmer should receive a fair return for his products based on the cost of production. As an outstanding factor in the permanency of the agricultural policy of this province the farmer must of necessity over a series of years receive for his crops a price in excess of the cost of production. — Dept. of Agriculture, Toronto.

Good Treatment of Beef Calf Pays.

The most profitable beef animal is the one that has the capacity to eat and manufacture into beef the greatest amount of feed, and not the one that can subsist on the least and poorest ration.

There are thousands of young beef cattle that can eat plenty of feed, but many of them are not able to manufacture much beef out of it, largely because their growth was stunted, their vitality weakened, and their beefy conformation lost through lack of proper and sufficient feed when they were calves.

A Friend of the Poor.

The Dowager Countess of Derby, who died in London on April 17, lived in Canada from 1888 to 1893, while her husband, then Lord Stanley of Preston, was Governor-General, and her kindly, sympathetic disposition won the regard of all those with whom she came into contact here. She afterward became one of the great ladies of English society, but among the tributes to her memory is this from Viscount Knutsford, chairman of London Hospital:

For many years, and stopped only by her health, she visited regularly the lying-in ward at the London Hospital. She at once realized that many of the poor mothers were quite unable to provide proper clothing for the coming baby. So she made out a complete list of ideal little clothes, herself saw patterns, had them all put into a neat flannel bag, got a quotation at wholesale price, and any mother who was confined in the hospital or attended by our nurses in the pital or attended by our nurses in the district was, if necessary, provided with what we called a "Derby Bundle," and which are now widely known as such all over the country. Each bundle contains the little things needed for the first year of a baby's life. For the last twenty year Lady Derby has sent 200 "Derby Bundles" to poor East End mothers. Her name is revered, and her death mourned, in East as well as in West London.

Viscount Knutsford adds that he never met any woman with so quick a sympathy or one with so prompt and businesslike a habit of overcoming difficulty.

Handshaking Ruins Nerve.

After his handshaking tour of Canada, the Prince of Wales could scarcely move his arm for days. A health expert tells the Scientific American that the American custom of handshaking contributed toward the deaths of Roosevelt and Caruso and is responsible, in part, for Woodrow Wilson's ill health. "It breaks down the nerve system and invites disease," he says.

Explanatory.

The little girl was enjoying a slide upon the pavement when, to her consternation, her heels flew up and she fell with great force upon the ground. A lady who was passing saw the accident, and ran to the child's assistance. She picked her up, and asked kindly, "You poor little mite, how did you fall?" The child looked up into her kind friend's face, and replied, "Flat, ma'am!"

HE LOVES ADVENTURES.

Robert W. Service Has Wandered Far Afield.

About twenty-five years ago a young Scotsman, who had taken part in the rush to the Klondike, discovered gold in that far off region in a peculiar manner. He did not dig up any nuggets of the yellow mineral, nor stake out any claims; or if he did stake out claims nothing profitable resulted. But he did by chance happen upon a vein which has brought him in an income that ranks him among the financially successful adventurers to the Klondike.

Having suffered the hardships and shared the perils of the crowd who thronged to the Klondike in '98, Robert William Service came at last to the stage where it was necessary to rely on something more tangible than gold mining for three meals a day. Having served an apprenticeship in a bank in Glasgow, he became a bank clerk in Yukon, and then his fruitless experiences after his quest for gold brought him fame and wealth.

A few verses describing episodes in a gold seeker's life were modestly despatched to a publisher in Toronto. They were verses, for Mr. Service says that he wishes it to be understood that he writes verse, not poetry. Almost by return mail a request for more of these verses came from the publisher. When enough were collected for a little volume published first as "Songs of a Sour Dough" and later called "The Spell of the Yukon," the first edition was printed of a book which stands as one of the most popular books of verse of the last twenty-five years. It has been reprinted scores of times, and issued in a dozen different forms, and the total sale runs into hundreds of thousands of copies.

This book was followed before long by a second volume, "Ballads of a Cheechako" and "Rhymes of a Rolling Stone," and by a novel in which the author gave a picture of his experiences in the great Klondike rush called "The Trail of Ninety-Eight."

Leaving the Klondike for civilization Mr. Service followed the precepts of the rolling stone and wandered about. As an example of his disposition, at one time he suddenly decided, when living in New York, to go to Washington, and set forth on foot, as this method of travel seemed to him much more interesting than by rail.

Later he wantered across the ocean, knocked about the Balkans a little, and at last settled down in France, where he married a French girl. During the great war he served a long and arduous term as a driver of the Red Cross ambulance, and incidentally wrote his "Rhymes of a Red Cross Man," a book which probably stands among the six most widely read in the English language about the great war. Mr. Service spends part of his time in Paris and part in Monte Carlo. He has developed a system for participating in the pleasures of that gambler's paradise which only a canny Scotsman could evolve and carry out. It would be unfair to disclose the system, but it may be said that whoever loses Mr. Service does not.

Recently Mr. Service and his family returned to this country, traveled around awhile and finally wandered as far as Tahiti. The author felt inclined to continue his wanderings to New Guinea, Borneo and wherever he could find new and wild country to visit. But as his family do not wholly share his rolling stone propensities he decided to return to Canada. He has in the hands of his publishers a novel dealing with his experiences at Monte Carlo. It is called "The Poisoned Paradise."

High Tides.

Navigation on the Western coast of Canada, says Frank Coffee in "Forty Years on the Pacific," is not so hazardous as in numerous places in the same latitude along the Atlantic coast. Owing to small rise of the tide on the Pacific coast and freedom from ice, passengers and cargo can be handled at all ports night and day throughout the year. As a contrast, take the Bay of Fundy, on the Atlantic side of the continent, which is enwrapped in fog throughout the greater part of the year, and where the tides rise and fall in such extraordinary fashion. At St. John, N.B., the tide has a variation of twenty-seven feet, and the reader can easily figure out the difficulties of loading ship in these eccentric waters. The Bay of Fundy separates Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where at Moncton, at the head of the bay, the inflow of the spring tide is called "the bore," and rushes in at a height of five feet and travels eight miles an hour. Near this point is situated Cape Blomedin, which derives its name from "blow me down," as the wind sweeps around there at a terrific rate. Incidentally, I have picked up amethysts at this cape. At the head of this tempestuous bay is Minas Basin, where, at the point of Noel Bay, the tide rises fifty feet. In passing, I might mention that there are three other world-famous places where the tide rises to this height: At Broome, on the west coast of Australia, at Honan, 1,100 miles up the Yangzekiang river, in China, and at Chepstow, on the Wye, England.

Yakima Indians' Legend.

On a high point of Mount Adams in the State of Washington are one hundred and thirty-six apparently human footprints, made in mud that has long since turned to stone. The tradition of the Yakima Indians is that the spot is the place where "the great canoe" landed after the Flood, and that the footprints were made by the people who stepped from the "canoe" to ground softened by the long inundation.

Good Pasturage Cheap Stock Food.

One of the cheapest live stock foods is good pasturage. Good yields of this cannot be secured unless the land is kept in good condition.

A generous top dressing with good barnyard manure applied in the fall, winter, or early spring is recommended. This top dressing should be distributed evenly and not too thickly. If bunchy, it may be thinned out by harrowing which sometimes helps to stimulate the growth.

Thin spots in the pasture should receive a new seeding of grass. The use of a mixture of six pounds of timothy, two pounds of red clover and one pound of alsike clover to the acre will give good results. Where there is a partial stand of grass, possibly not more than one-half of this quantity is needed. Only the thin spots will require treatment.

Alternate freezing and thawing and the early spring rains will work the seed into the soil and result in quick growth. Let the grass get a good start before the stock is turned in. Nothing so depletes the annual yield of pasturage as to overstock it at the beginning of the season.

OLD CEMETERIES.

How Canadians Neglect Their Old Landmarks.

North York owes a debt of appreciation to the members of the Friends' Society for their recent work in clearing up the cemetery beside their church near Newmarket. Some of the pioneers and early settlers of North York were laid to rest there and it is but right and fitting that their memory should be kept green, and due respect shown them by keeping their resting place in fit condition.

Searching among the tombstones one may find the following "Esther Rogers, died 7th of the 8th Mo., 1822"; Hanna Phillips, died 28th of the 8th, 1821," and "In Memory of Joel Bigelow, who died Jan. 27, 1808. And in the southwest corner, in contrast with the other plain one-slab monuments, there stands a large-sized stone bearing the following:

"This tablet was erected July 18, 1908, by the Descendants of Ebenezer Doan, the Founder of the Doan Family in York County, who emigrated from Bucks ,Co., Penn., to this farm in June, 1808."

In great and shameful contrast with this beautifully kept little cemetery is the Old Cemetery on Eagle street, in the same town, by some said to be the oldest cemetery in and around Newmarket. History tells that somewhere within its confines there rest the remains of Dr. Bisby—117 years old at time of demise—who lived on the farm adjoining it on the west, at one time one of the lots of the "Clergy Reserve," and who donated the property for the cemetery to the present owners. It is impossible to locate the grave owing to the dilapidated condition of the place and the second growth of vegetation which makes its impossible to get to many of the tombstones. These are broken and lying in pieces on the ground; plot fences are out of shape and largely demolished and weeds and long grass are everywhere. Through the centre of the plot second growth has attained the proportions of a young forest, and in some places the growing tree has pushed over the tombstone.

In the midst of this jungle is a stone bearing the following:

"In memory of Esther, widow of Christopher Robinson and mother of Sir John Beverly Robinson, Baronet, C.B., late Chief Justice of Upper Canada, who died at Newmarket July 22, 1827, aged 69 years."

In the southeast corner a stone bears the following:

"In memory of John McDonald, Esq., Chief Factor of the Northwest Company, died Feb. 17, 1828, aged 58 years."

A Unique Window.

One of the most unique memorial windows in the world may be seen in St. Paul's Anglican Church, Toronto. The window, in commemoration of the members of the parish who served in the Great War, is not only of note because of its beauty, but because it is the only one of its kind in existence, in that its panels contain fragments of glass collected from seventy buildings in the war zones on the French, Belgian and Italian fronts, by Brig.-Gen. C. H. Mitchell, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., and presented by him to St. Paul's Church. These sources were mainly churches. Only such glass was chosen as was destroyed by the action of the enemy. At the top of the window are depicted three angels, representing sorrow, victory and reward. In the centre are shown the Cathedral of San Marco, Venice; Cathedral of Amiens, the Town Hall of Arras and the Cloth Hall of Ypres. At the bottom is the Biblical scene of Moses on the mountain with arms uplifted in prayer, while Joshua fights in the valley below. Intertwined are the poppies of Belgium, the lilies of France and the marguerites of Italy.

The sources of the fragments of the glass entering into the memorial window include the cathedral of Amiens, one of the most noted church edifices in France; the Cathedral of Rheims, a famous church; the Cathedral of Albert, France; the Cathedral of Arras, the city hall (Hotel de Ville), Arras, one of the architectural beauties of France; the Cathedral of Cambrai, the church at Kemmel, Belgium, historic in each year of the war; St. Mark's Cathedral, Venice, the Cloth Hall in Ypres, St. Martin's Cathedral, Ypres; and the church at Zillebeke, well known to the Canadians in connection with the second battle of Sanctuary Wood.

Quick Movement.

A friend recommended to the notice of a city merchant a young man who was looking for a situation. A few days later they met again, and the man asked if the selection had proved a wise one. "Not at all!" replied the merchant. "Dear me!" said the other. "I thought he would have suited you; for full of go!" "Yes," responded the merchant, "he was too full of go; why, he's clean gone, and a hundred pounds of my money, too." "You don't says so! Why, I thought he was exactly the man you were looking for." "So he is!" said the merchant emphatically.

C. G. SMITH, B.D., OF MONTREAL, WILL ASSIST WITH ALL THE SERVICES.

Wherever this child wonder has appeared the largest churches and largest theatres have failed to meet the requirements and hundreds are turned away.

Mary Agnes, as she is familiarly called, was first introduced to the public at the age of 9 years by J. R. Hainer, Superintendent of the Union Rescue Mission, Pittsburg. From that time to the present she has continued her work in the ministry and it may be truthfully stated thousands have been led to Christ through the ministry of this child. It was shortly after her ninth birthday when she was baptized and preached her own baptismal sermon to the largest congregation that ever assembled in the Mount Washington Baptist Church, Pittsburgh. Her first public appearance was at the Presbyterian Orphanage, Pittsburgh, where she spoke to three or four hundred orphan children and others who had gathered to hear her message. Following her appearance at the Presbyterian Orphanage she was made a welcome messenger at the Union Rescue Mission, Pittsburgh, Pa. There it was her custom to preach about once a month. There she saw the most dejected specimens of humanity that the human mind can conceive. There she met the shipwrecks and derelicts that seemed to have been washed ashore. Men without hope, without God, hardened in sin and calloused with a conviction that the world had nothing in it for them; they were friendless and no one cared for them. None but this child seemed to be able to reach the hearts to melt these hardened sinners. How she did pour out her little life to them; she pointed them to the cross and to the tender love of a compassionate Christ. In her pleadings she would frequently burst out in ears and in her appeal would say, "Some dear little girl like me is praying tonight for her papa. Are you her papa? Some little child may be at mother's knees praying, 'Dear Lord, send home my daddy. He's somewhere, I don't know where, but you know. Please, dear Lord, send him home to mama and me.' Are you that daddy? Do you hear the Saviour speaking to you?"

Under her impassionate pleas strong men would rush to the front falling upon their knees and pleading for mercy. Large numbers crowded the altar and many were brought back to God and sent home to be reunited with their families.

She became a licensed preacher at the age of ten years. Her calls have come from practically every one of the leading denominations. She has filled the pulpits of the largest churches. She knows no denominational lines. She takes naturally to mission work since her first appointments were in this line, but she has responded to calls from orphanages, the Y.M.C.A., W.C.T.U., the Salvation Army, Sunday School Associations and Young People's societies whenever these calls are directed toward the salvation of souls and the labor of her Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. She makes no charge for her services, but when offerings are given to her these are devoted to supporting an American who is her Foreign Missionary in the Sudan, young men preparing for the ministry and others who are devoting their lives to preaching the unsearchable riches and unadulterated Gospel. Mary Agnes believes implicitly in prayer. She pins her faith in her Saviour to carry her through. Never has she had any fear of crowds while but few have enjoyed the privilege of speaking at larger gatherings.

She is a natural-born pulpit orator, not mechanical but perfectly natural, knowing absolutely nothing about homiletics, elocution or the art of public speaking. Her voice is strong and her gifts are rare. At the Practical Bible Training School Conference held last year she was honored with the evening service while on the program were the leading Bible scholars, Bible teachers, and interpreters of the Word in this country, among whom were Dr. Gray, of the Moody Bible School; Dr. Massey, of Termont Temple, Boston, and other Divines of national and international reputation.

She is 14 years old and keeps up her school work without the slightest apparent interruption. There is nothing mechanical about her. Her ability to prepare sermons is remarkable. She absorbs what she reads with astounding ease and her genius to use what she reads and gets from other ministers or orators is almost beyond belief. Her schedule of calls for the summer vacation season are sufficient to keep her busy during the entire summer, extending from July, when she opens in Niagara Falls, to September, which carries her through the New England states and back to Cincinnati, thence out into Indiana, where she conducted a week's meetings last year, returning through Kentucky to Pittsburgh in time to begin her fall school term in the High School.

GERMANY AS A DEBTOR

The serious decline in the German mark places Germany in a most critical position, and at the same time financially embarasses every other European nation. The crisis is said to have been precipitated by the assassination of Foreign Minister Rathenau and the consequent loss of confidence in the stability of the State. France, too, has undoubtedly assumed a vindictive attitude toward Germany, and there is ample excuse for this in the memory of those years of terror and suffering through which her people passed in the Great War.

At the same time, if France desires her late enemy to make financial reparations she must not insist upon keeping Germany in a position where she is unable to pay. If a man has a debtor, and wants that debtor to pay his debts, it is not good policy nor good business to embarrass him so that he cannot get the money together. While none of the Allied peoples desire to see Germany gain the threatening ascendency that she attained before the war, yet the German nation must keep out of bankruptcy if she is to make reparation for the damage done in her military madness.

AIR ARMAMENTS

The Washington Conference, which was hailed at the time as the greatest blessing since the Day of Pentecost, seems to have had little influence upon the war preparation of the United States Government. We have already referred to the naval program which is three times larger than that of the pre-war period. We are now informed that the Americans are making rapid strides—or flights—in air armaments. A news despatch from London states:

"Visions of a race in air armaments, eventually leading to war, were raised this afternoon in the House of Commons on a second reading of the Washington Naval Treaties Bill. There was regret that the Washington Conference had not been able to limit air armaments. Charles Amory, Parliamentary Secretary of the Navy, said it was the hope of the British Government to secure practical limitation of armaments on land and in the air."

It is further stated that "Serious pressure is being brought to bear on the Government to strengthen the air force. The committee of Imperial defence is closely studying the whole problem of air defence of the British Isles. But there is a strong element in Great Britain, which believes the Government ought to take the initiative in calling a conference similar to that which resulted in the limitation of naval armaments, to try to prevent the threatened race in air armaments."

PROMOTE EMPIRE TRADE

British business men are turning their attention away from the problem of trying to trade with Russia under the impossible Soviet regime, and are beginning to consider the possibility of cultivating greater trade within the British Empire. Lord Long in a letter to the London Times last week, called for an Imperial economic conference to consider the promotion of inter-Imperial trade, rather than the resuscitation of down-and-out European customer countries. It seems that the overseas Dominions will be soon sounded on the advisability of holding another Imperial Conference, probably next year. Canadians in London are asking what such a conference could do. In the reports of the Dominion's Royal Commission and the economic committee of the Imperial Conference of 1918, there is already available all necessary information. They contend that another conference could do little, and would be held at a time when trade was still convalescing from its slump. Besides, inter-Imperial trade can be promoted, in the last analysis only by the action of individual business men, Governments can grant preferences, but even preferences will not not attract trade to difficult competitive markets.

Canadian commercial men cannot have too many conferences with British men of commerce. It is through such conferences as these that Canadians and American business men have come so close together and understand one another. There is no reason whatever why English business men should not be encouraged to address our Rotary and Canadian Clubs as frequently as the Americans do. The fault has not lain with the Canadians in the past, but largely with the Englishmen, who are not so adaptable to Canadian ways and requirements. English business houses and manufacturers are apt to be too conservative in their methods and in their products.

The forthcoming British Empire exhibition in London will be perhaps the best object lesson of the possibilities of trade within a self-supporting Empire. Australia seems to think so, as indicated by her grant of one-quarter of a million sterling for her exhibit. Canada's contribution has not yet been announced. Belleville must be represented at this big exhibition.

PASSING COMMENT

There are some local problems which every citizen of Belleville should become acquainted with before the next civic election.

We are informed that a dead horse has been deposited in the River near the Paper Mill. Would the depositor please apply at the Police Station for the receipt.

The Civic Committee has recommended that the service of the Social Service Worker be dispensed with. This does not mean that Belleville is to go out of the social service business.

HERE AND THERE

AUTHORS ALL POETS.

In the infancy of society every author is necessarily a poet, because language itself is poetry; and to be a poet is to apprehend the true and the beautiful, in a word, the good which exists in the relation subsisting, first between existence and perception, and secondly between perception and expression.

In its broadest sense Poetry is not necessarily metrical language at all. It is too deep to be confined within forms. Plato did not write in verse, bue he "was essentially a poet—the truth and splendor of his imagery, and the melody of his language, are the most intense that it is possible to conceive." Bacon's essays are not in verse, but he was a poet: "his language has a sweet and majestil rhythm, which satisfies the sense, not less than the almost superhuman wisdom of his philosophy satisfies the intellect; it is a strain which distends and then bursts the circumference of the reader's mind, and pours itself forth together with it into the universal element with which it has perpetual sympathy."

THE DEATH OF MOSES.

Of the many legends that have come down to us through Jewish sources, perhaps there is not one more beautiful than the following:

"And when he (Moses) had gone up the mountain, he met three men who were digging a grave. 'For whom do you dig this grave?' 'For a man whom God will call to be with Him in Paradise.' Moses asked leave to help in digging the grave of so holy a man. When completed he asked, 'Have you taken the size of the man who is to occupy it?' 'No, but he was of thy size; lie down in it.' The three men were the angels, Michael, Gabriel, and Sasgel. Michael had begun the grave, Gabriel had spread the white napkin for the head and Sasgel the one for the feet. Then the angel Michael stood on one side of Moses, Gabriel on the other, and Sasgel at the feet. The majesty of God appeared at the head and the Lord said 'Close thine eyes,' and he obeyed. Then the Lord said, 'Press thy hand upon thy side,' and he obeyed. Then the Lord addressed the spirit of Moses and said, 'Holy soul, my daughter, for 120 years hast thou inhabited this undefiled body of dust, but now thine hour is come. Go forth and mount to Paradise.'

"But the soul answered, trembling and with pain, 'In this pure and undefiled body have I spent so many years that I love it, and have not the courage to desert it.' 'My daughter, come forth; I will place thee in the highest heaven beneath the cherubim and seraphim, who bear up my eternal throne.' Yet the soul doubted and quaked. Then God bent over the face of Moses and kissed him, and the soul leaped up in joy and went with the kiss of God to Paradise.

"Then a cloud draped the heavens, and the winds wailed, 'Who lives now on earth to fight against error and sin?' And a voice answered, 'Such a prophet never arose before.' And the earth lamented, 'I have lost the holy one.' And Israel lamented, 'We have lost the Shepherd.'

"But the angels sang, 'He is come in peace to the arms of God.'"

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY.

(Drowned in the Gulf of Spezzia, in a storm, July 8th, 1822.) [illegible]

Ethereal songster, hovering in the blue,
  Unchanged, of poesy, from age to age,
Who, beating luminous, wings against his cage,
  Yet all the stars along his pathway drew;
A soaring eagle, strong as when he flew
  Straight at the sun's red eye, or dropped in rage,
A flame compressed, upon life's tragic stage,
  The world with pulsing melody to strew.

Sweetest of singers! Minstrel of the past!
  Whose phantasy forbore to pierce the years,
To show, recumbent, in his chamber vast,
  In Oxford, he who, living, spurned her peers;
Nor saw, in rich, imperial marble cast,
  He whom we honor with our love and tears.

PRESS OPINIONS

A CRISIS IN GERMANY

Montreal Herald

The monster parade in Berlin of half a million German workers at the beginning of the week was intended to be a show by force of turn out as to where the country's political strength lies. The workers desire a Government whose back is firmly turned on the monarchist regime. The demonstration is proof that the reactionaries who killed Rathenau and Erzberger and wounded Harden are clearly recognised as monarchists and will not be tolerated. In it can be seen evidence of a sound and democratic Germany which the Allies would do well to encourage to the extent of their ability.

A GOOD MOVE.

Hamilton Herald.

The decision of the Canadian Railway Executive to authorise reductions in fares for week-end trips and the restoration of specially low rates for organised excursions is announced as a concession to the public. But it is probably dictated by business sense. The rigid refusal of the railways to encourage pleasure travel by means of special rates has caused loss of revenue to the railways as well as inconvenience to the public.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE.

Toronto Telegram.

Toronto Globe's correspondent at Ottawa reports leading Liberals as dissatisfied with what has been accomplished this session. Globe correspondent seems unduly pessimistic.

Several times newspaper headlines have carried the slogan, "Tory Amendment Defeated by Huge Majority." Whatever the people may think of what has been accomplished at Ottawa, a good many interested politicians in the Liberal and Progressive parties must be well pleased, despite the Globe's confession.

WIT AND HUMOR

Herbert and his sweetheart had just encountered a bull-dog that looked as if its bite might be quite as bad as its bark. "Why, Herbert," she exclaimed, as he started a strategic retreat, "you always declared you would face death for me." "I would," he said over his shoulder, "but that dog isn't dead."

An ex-Service man who had been tramping the country arrived at Aberdeen, and, being "down and out," knocked at a door and asked for help. The good wife said she had nothing for him. "Ah, well," she said, full of sympathy and almost weeping, "bring the bed along and I'll have a look at it."

"I was thinkin' about him when you were speakin', miss," said Arthur; "But I've forgotten his height —'cept he was very big and strong." "Were there other points you were thinking about?" asked the teacher. "Yes; I was thinkin' what a champion goal-keeper 'e'd 'a' made!"

"I've got nothing to do with that machine," said the sleepy-looking young man behind the counter. "Well, somebody ought to have." "What's the matter with it anyway?" "It won't work. I dropped a penny into it just now, and the indicator didn't fly round. I shook the machine, and jumped up and down on the platform, and still it didn't move. It's a swindle." "It took the penny all right, didn't it?" "Certainly." "Well, that's what it's for. There's nothing the matter with the machine, sir."

JOFFRE IN CANADA.

Hero of the Marne Made Great Popular Appeal.

A man who can survive his own blunders, his own press agent and the unpopularity of his own job and still be a popular hero is — well, a man.

The war being an unpopular theme, no mention shall be made here of the achievement of the French commander in the first great battle of the western front. Fortunately for the world, the then Gen. Joffre did not make his blunders at the Marne or while guarding the battle line from the Somme to Switzerland.

Deposed, he made his first visit to America and simply made Viviani, Balfour, King Albert and all other visitors except the Prince of Wales look like dull clods. The strange combination of impassivity and energy, and above all the hearty simplicity of the old man won all.

Marshal Foch was brought over to outshine him—and failed. The little generalissimo may have been a greater strategist, as Joffre himself was the first to admit, but he had not the something or other that made for applause and acclaim. Foch had all the publicity resources of the American Legion and the Knights of Columbus, while Joffre had Joffre. Some said that it was the war fever that made the grizzled, stout old Papa so popular on this side of the water. If Foch had come in 1918, just after Chateau Thierry! they said.

After Foch comes Joffre again, by the back door, unheralded, unofficially, badly press-agented, under unpopular patronage, himself making blunders in public—and yet he triumphs again.

Since the arrival at Seattle of Marshal Joffre on his way home to France from his trip around the world varying reports have come of the warmth of his reception. In the Pacific Northwest he was exploited by the Hill interest, lending himself to this unpopular patronage quite innocently but disastrously. But when he got to San Francisco and was again nobody's man but his own there was a different story.

Victoria, B.C., staid and English, made rather a point of taking his visit placidly, according to one account, and even Vancouver did not wax enthusiastic. It is said that in dedicating the "peace portal" at Blaine, Washington, on the Canada-United States boundary in commemoration of the century of peace, he made a jarring speech. After pacific speeches by Samuel Hill, the builder of the portal, and a woman, the marshal startled those who understood the French language by making a gruff, curt speech saying that peace portals were "all right, but where would France be now if she hadn't built forts instead of peace arches before 1914."

That was a bounder, indeed, and enough to gain most men as drawing cards in the country where they don't raise their boys to be soldiers. Joffre was toted around from Seattle by the globe-trotter, Sam Hill, son-in-law of James J. Hill, railway magnate, and this feature made newspapermen very angry with Hill and lukewarm towards Joffre.

Then Joffre went to Frisco by himself and, although ill, made a tremendous impression. This he heightened on the swing east, even making speeches. His very silence was more effective than the great eloquence of his colleague (and rival) Viviani on the earlier tour. This time he has had the floor and his words have been vigorous, pointed and courteous. People come prepared to be lukewarm toward a representative of French military power and policy. They stay to cheer the man whose square massive face, barrel body, instinct with reserve energies of spirit, will never be forgotten.

The man who saved Paris and conquered North America (including Montreal, although he is a Protestant) was born in 1852, first saw service in 1870 and was retired in 1917 as too old. Yet last year he was young enough to undertake a tour which covered half of Asia, including Indo-China, China and Japan. Having conveyed the thanks of France to her Oriental colonies and allies, he retires to the little home in his native Pyreneean mountains to which his eyes turned even the day after the battle of the Marne.

Where Tomatoes Come From.

The growing of tomatoes forms the largest industry in the Canary Islands, and the manner in which the fruit is consigned to foreign markets is a tribute to the efficiency of the shippers. Owing to the long journey overseas the tomatoes have to be picked when they are turning from green to yellow, and they ripen on the voyage. Long years of experience have taught the growers exactly when to gather their crops for consumption abroad, and although the fruit has not the same delicate flavor possessed by that grown and ripened in England, the tomatoes that are now arriving in England, estimated at over 1,000,000 pounds weekly, are said to be of excellent quality. They are produced from seeds obtained in the old country, and great care is exercised in packing the crop for markets overseas. Each tomato is wrapped in paper, and the layers of fruit are separated by granulated peat. The growers in the Canary Islands fill a gap in English markets from November until May, when the rich glasshouse product from the Lea Valley, Worthing, and other areas — the "prince of salads"—appears upon the scene.

Mine Shafts.

In the cementation process of sinking mine shafts through water-bearing grounds, holes are first drilled in a circle around the proposed location of the shaft. Cement and water are injected into the holes with a force pump. The cement spreads through the loose ground, and on setting forms a water-tight wall, inside of which the shaft can be sunk without difficulty.

"Human Glowworms"

(New York Times)

"Human glowworms' are found now and then, according to biologists engaged in the search for "cold light" from animal sources. These animal sources may be the chief commercial light of the future, as Charles P. Steinmetz sees it.

Occasionally, the face of a human being shines faintly in the dark, somewhat like the dial of a radium watch. Such examples in the opinion of Dr. E. Newton Harvey of Princeton, who recently developed a method of producing "continuous cold light" from animal sources, probably are due to bacteria.

"A few cases of luminous individuals have been noted," he wrote in his book, "The Nature of Animal Light." "In such the skin was the source of light, especially in persons who sweated freely. It is possible that here we are again dealing with luminous bacteria upon the accumulation of substances passed out in the sweat, which serves as a nutrient medium."

Light From Bacteria.

In the opinion of some students of the subect, the light given off by certain insects and vegetation in the darkness is not caused by any lighting system of their own, but by a bacterial infection. Even the glowworm, according to a German study just issued by Professor P. Buchner, does not furnish his own illuminant, but merely provides in his body a suitable home for billions of light-producing bacteria. The complex illuminating equipment found in many fish and crustaceans is held by Buchner to be merely elaborate schemes for furnishing nutriment for the bacteria to live upon, and oxygen, by which the light is produced. This view, in its extreme form, is combated by Dr. Harvey, who believes it has been proved that several organisms produce their own light without the help of invading bacterial swarms. According to the Buchner theory, the bacterial infection handed down from the parent glowworm to its offspring for millions of generations has brought about an elaborate adjustment of relations. Mutual relations of this kind between two sets of organisms between animals and vegetables, are frequent and form a huge department of biology under the heading of symbiosis.

Why Cat's Eyes Shine.

The study has yielded a long catalog of animals and vegetables which produce their own "cold light." The study also has caused some unlearning To the layman the most familiar objects which shine in the dark by their own light are the eyes of cats and other animals. This is not the case at all, according to Dr. Harvey. The cat has no internal source of light, but his eye is a wonderful reflector, and will gleam when it is almost dark. When it is totally dark the eye of the cat is dead. A few living things, less familiar than cats, however, have a lighting apparatus of their own.

Many Things Glow in The Dark.

Some of the things which will glow in the dark, whether by their own light or by light borrowed from bacteria, are, according to Dr. Harvey's catalog, certain lichens, algae, fungi yeast, moulds, smuts, mushrooms, puffballs, mosses, liverworts, ferns flowering plants, sponges, jellyfish, sea anemones, many tribes of worms, frogs, toads, salamanders, snakes, lizards, turtles, many deep sea animals, and various kinds of eggs. Some members of all those families are self-luminous.

Deep-sea animals are believed to have their lamps, just as automobiles have, to show them where they are going. Blue, green, pink and even red lights have been reported. There seems to be no systematic distribution of light among insects, reptiles, animals and vegetables, according to Dr. Harvey. As to the biological cause of their luminescence, he says that the guess of the layman is about as good as that of the scientist.

FAKING ANTIQUES.

Old Wood Secured to Make Imitation Furniture.

What becomes of the old wooden battleships — 'wooden walls" — and other similarly constructed craft that pass occasionally into the hands of the shipbreakers?

It is a question often asked by the curious, but one which seldom receives a satisfactory or adequate reply. Naturally the ancient, weather-beaten timbers are disposed of in varying quantities for a variety of quaint purposes, and makers of "antique" furniture are eager bidders for much of the residue.

Antique furniture made with this fine old seasoned oak is invariably safe from detection, even by the most experienced connoisseurs. Whenever they are doubtful of a particular piece of furniture they test their doubts by cutting a small V into the wood. Old wood and new are quickly detected by coloring, the older naturally being of a darker texture than its fellow.

Fakers of antique furniture eschew the use of glue in their work, but have made for their purposes exact copies of the type of nails in use among old-time makers.

Not only are the timbers of old vessels pressed into this queer service, but, when opportunity offers, other old pieces of timber are purchased from house-breakers.

Recently some stout, beautifully carved panes from Winchester Cathedral in England passed into a very exclusive little factory in a back turning in Shoreditch. There, by various quaint processes, best known to the proprietor of the works and to his three sons, they will in course of time become faithful copies of real antique furniture, and as such will be sold at fancy prices.

The old fellow who guides the destinies of this particular factory for faking antique furniture is a consummate craftsman of his kind. He reproduces his pieces, faithful in every minute detail, from the real stuff.

He polishes very old oak by means of pumic powder. He obtains the effect of use and antiquity in such necessary cases as old oak chests by leaving them in the silt of a canal nearby, where the sluggish tide carries a mass of rubble past them, thus rubbing them into the semblance of something worn by time and constant usage. The mud is not washed off afterwards, but is rubbed off with a chamois leather.

Poultry Notes.

Cleanliness is one of the greatest means of combating lice, mites and fleas and other insidious insects which prey on poultry.

Not more than two geese should be allowed for each gander, and what is better yet is to have them in pairs during the breeding season.

Grit is essential to the health of the fowls and to economy in feeding, as it takes the place of teeth in preparing the feed for further digestion.

Woman's Sphere

SUMMER AFTERNOON

By Margaret E. Sangster

Leaf shadows fall across the grass,
Like happy little wraiths of play—
There is no past, no yesterday,
And no tomorrow; hours pass
Like dim forms in a looking-glass.
Near sounds seems strangely far
    away;
A smoke-like haze hangs, thin and gray,
Where mountains make a purple mass

The sun is flaming in the sky.
A drowsy ball of molten fire—
The wind sings, like a fairy lyre,
But softly as a lullaby.
Life drifts—and does not question
    why—
With deep content, and no desire!

WOMAN'S RIGHTS IN FINLAND

Woman in Finland enjoys almost equal rights with the man. In school she has, in the common instruction with the male youth, opportunity to contend with them and to acquire the same knowledge. After completing the school education almost all vocations are open to her, and she is found in all branches of industry, but especially in business houses, public offices, and similar insitutions. She can not occupy the office of minister, however, and some of the higher posts. Practically, woman is the equal of man. She has the right of suffrage and she herself is eligible to all elective offices. The Finnish Diet actually counts twenty female deputies among its members.

LATEST RUMORS OF THE ROYAL MARRIAGE

Two young English girls of rank are much in the world's mind these days, and everywhere there is a quiet and well bred curiosity as to which of them is to be the bride of the Prince of Wales, which the fiancee of the Duke of York. These two girls one of whom, Lady Mary Cambridge, is of Royal blood, being the daughter of the Marquis and Marchioness of Cambridge, and niece of Queen Mary, and Lady Rachel Cavendish, daughter of the Duke of Devonshire, must themselves be conscious of many secret tremors—or perhaps hopes,—for they cannot, in days like these, be ignorant of the rumours that fly about as to their possible matrimonial destiny. Fortunately for such girls, they are brought up to the idea that their marriages are made for them and that under no circumstances are they permitted to choose whom they will wed unless that choice is in accord with the parental wishes. And it must be admitted that few young women are able to resist the idea of a marriage of great rank and wealth even though their hearts be not satisfied. The idea of marriage with a Prince,—and such a Prince—who will, later on, be King of the world's greatest Empire, must therefore have more than usual attraction for those eligible for the high estate. The British people seem averse from marrying their adored Prince to any Continental Princess, especially as the two most eligible are Roman Catholics. And the choice at home is limited.

It seems to lie between the two young ladies mentioned. And now that the Prince is back in England everyone looks for a decision on this important matter. It may be that Rumour is not so well informed as we think, and we may be much astonished to learn that the Prince has made his own choice from an unsuspected quarter; but this is not likely. Lady Rachel Cavendish is very well known in Canada and Canadians are therefore quite as keen to know her matrimonial destiny as are the people in the Old Land. Lady Mary Cambridge recently became the idol of the troops at Aldershot through her riding, which was of so fearless and expert a character as to arouse their greatest admiration and enthusiasm. This was on the occasion of her recent visit to Aldershot with the King, the Queen and the Duke of York. She took ditches, trenches and all manner of obstacle with such coolness and skill that she is said to have become the idol of the troops. Lady Mary is one of the season's debutantes, is a blonde beauty, and captivates by her manner which is delightfully unaffected and engaging. She is a good dancer, and in sports is keen about tennis which she plays extremely well. Add to all this that she is young and full of life and very popular. Unfortunately Lady Mary Cambridge is full cousin to both Princess and the enlightened world to-day does not look with any favour upon consanguinious marriages.—Saturday Night.

Food to Please the Eye

BY BERTHA SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.

The serving of food—how important! Often a dish excellent as to taste and quality of material, loses by not being properly served.

The psychology of cooking, serving and eating is a big consideration. "Hunger is the best sauce," but not every one is hungary, and food must be made attractive to those whose appetites are fickle.

Sometimes it is just a matter of garnish, sometimes it is the shape, or individual serving, and often it is the beauty of the dish in which it is served.

Some reader will say, "That may be true, but not all of us can afford pretty dishes." True, not expensive ones, but often the less expensive one is the prettier.

Cheap novelty stores have very attractive individual glass dishes and fruit glasses with the stem like a champagne glass, which make an ordinary dessert look elaborate.

The writer remembers with pleasure the surprise on a hot June night of seeing at a friend's house cold meat served on locust leaves, and garnished with the blossoms. The friend had in her back yard a locust tree and had made good use of it.

Grape Leaves

Fruit served on grape leaves, and a salad garnished with nasturtium leaves and blossoms will delight the esthetic sense of some persons.

Many find it better for their health to eat very little if any meat. This has created a demand for vegetable dinners. In every such dinner there should be one vegetable as peas, beans and lentils, or eggs, milk or cheese, which will supply the protein which builds up the body and repairs the waste.

The vegetables must be part root vegetables, and part green or above ground vegetables. The process of cooking should differ, do not have them all boiled, or fried, or baked, but a mixture.

Avoid Bad Mixtures

Do not put tomatoes and beets, or tomatoes and carrots together; but beets with spinach, or tomatoes with cauliflower or cabbage, make good combinations.

It is a good place to start with some one vegetable as a center and build around it. Spinach, after being boiled, chopped and seasoned, may be molded in a pan or bowl and kept hot until served. As a center piece one can arrange around it a most attractive dinner.

New cabbage boiled whole, then cut in quarters without completely separating the pieces, is a food center piece. Pour over it melted butter in which are chopped parsley and hard-cooked egg. Serve around it carrots or peas and strips of boiled bacon.

Many combinations may be worked out using what one has in her garden, and even if meat is not entirely eliminated, the amount can be greatly reduced.

FASHION FANCIES

VARIETY IN BATHING STYLES

Bathing fashions for summer, 1922 offer almost as much variety as those for wear on land. In fact, most of the fashion features of the season find their way into bathing dresses and beach wraps sooner or later. Capes of eponge, jersey, terry cloth, or other absorbent material, come in many new designs, while the new waterproof capes of rubberized silk are extremely smart.

Several new materials have been added to those in use for bathing dresses, chief among them being gingham and silk velvet. Gingham dresses, with simple, turned-down collars and cuffs, were first introduced at Palm beach and found instant favor. Velvet, which is a more formal fabric, for dresses which do not take swimming too seriously, looks very smart on its emergence from the water. Wool jersey, which has been tried and not found wanting, continues to hold a firm place, while taffeta and satin, particularly in black, will always have staunch friends among fair bathers.

DEAF MAY HEAR BY WIRELESS

A Universal Language for Radio Communication is Also Thought of London, July 10.—Wireless, with all the manifold benefits already to its credit may enable the deaf to hear thinks a writer in the current number of the MEDICAL EXPRESS. If recent experiments with wireless telephony come up to expectation, he declares, then there is little need for the deaf to give up hope, for by means of "thermionic" valves the very deaf have been enabled to hear.

The author records the case of a man of 50 who had been deaf for many years, so deaf that he could only hear the shouted voice. Nevertheless he experimented with wireless telephony. It occurred to him that by increasing the number of thermionic valves in his receiver he might thereby raise the sound to a degree of intensity to be heard easily. This he did, working up gradually until he had five thermionic valves in his apparatus, with the result that he can now hear his friends in Paris more plainly than he can a person sitting in the room beside him. Also his hearing for the ordinary voice has become more acute.

The Marconi Company's experts are using a valve similar to the thermoinic on their "bonaphone," an instrument for imparting sounds to the brain by means of the bony parts of cranium. It has enabled a large number of persons to hear who hitherto were deaf.

Thought has been given in England to a universal language for international radio communication, but no definite conclusions yet have been reached.

Questioned on this subject Godfrey Isaacs, head of the Marconi Wireless system, said he did not think Esperanto would do. "But, at the same time," he added, "we are keeping in view in connection with the scheme now under consideration for the establishment of wireless broadcasting stations, the possibility of teaching languages by wireless telephony. I think this will be a highly important part of the educational action of our broadcasting programs. One foresees the engagement of eminent professors of languages for the purpose of wireless tuition."

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

III.

TWINS.

On the boat-train, en route for Liverpool, Mr. Staff found plenty of time to consider the affair of the foundling bandbox in every aspect with which a lively imagination could invest it; but to small profit. In fact, he was able to think of little else, with the damned thing smirking impishly at him from its perch on the opposite seat. He was vexed to exasperation by the consciousness that he couldn't guess why or by whom it had been cavalierly thrust into his keeping. Consequently he cudgelled his wits unmercifully in exhaustive and exhausting attempts to clothe it with a plausible raison d'etre.

He believed firmly that the Maison Lucille had acted in good faith; the name of Staff was too distinctive to admit, of much latitude for error. Nor was it difficult to conceive that this or that young woman of his acquaintance might have sent him the hat to take home for her—thus ridding herself of a cumbersome package and neatly saddling him with all the bother of getting the thing through the customs. But . . ! Who was there in London just then that knew him well enough so to presume upon his good nature? None that he could call to mind. Besides, how in the name of all things inexplicable had anybody found out his intention of sailing on the Autocratic, that particular day?—something of which he himself had yet to be twenty-four hours aware!

His conclusions may be summed up under two heads: (a) there wasn't any answer; (b) it was all an unmitigated nuisance. And so thinking, divided between despair and disgust, Mr. Staff gave the problem up against his arrival on board the steamship. There remained to him a single gleam of hope: a note of explanation had been promised; he thought it just possible that it might have been sent to the steamship rather than to his lodgings in London.

Therefore, the moment he set foot aboard the ship, he consigned his hand-luggage to a steward, instructing the fellow where to take it, and hurried off to the dining-saloon where, upon a table round which passengers buzzed like flies round a sugar-lump, letters and telegrams for the departing were displayed. But he could find nothing for Benjamin Staff.

Disappointed and indignant to the point of suppressed profanity, he elbowed out of the thronged saloon just in time to espy a steward (quite a nother steward: not him with whom Staff had left his things) struggling up the main companionway under the handicap of several articles of luggage which Staff didn't recognise, and one which he assured himself he did: a bandbox as like the cause of all his perturbation as one piano-case resembles another.

Now if quite out of humour with the bandbox and all that appertained thereunto, the temper of the young man was such that he was by no means prepared to see it confiscated without his knowledge of consent. In two long strides he overhauled the steward, plucked him back with a peremptory hand, and bashed him with a stern demand

"I say! where the devil do you think you're going, my man?"

His man showed a face of dashed amazement.

"Beg pardon, sir! Do you mean me?"

"Most certainly I mean you. That's my bandbox. What are you doing with it?"

Looking guiltily from his face to the article in question, the steward flushed and stammered—culpability incarnate, thought Staff.

"Your bandbox, sir?"

"Do you think I'd go charging all over this ship for a sillly bandbox that wasn't mine?"

"But, sir—"

"I tell you, it's mine. It's tagged with my name. Where's the steward I left it with?"

"But, sir," pleaded the accused, "this belongs to this lady 'ere. I'm just takin' it to 'er stiteroom, sir."

Staff's gaze followed the man's nod, and for the first time he became aware that a young woman stood a step or two above them, half turned round to attend , her air and expression seeming to indicate a combination of amusement and impatience.

Precipitately the young man removed his hat. Through the confusion clouding his thoughts, he both foreglimpsed humiliation and was dimly aware of a personality of force and charm: of a well-poised figure cloaked in a light pongee travelling-wrap; of a face that seemed to consist chiefly in dark eyes glowing lambent in the shadow of a wide-brimmed, floppy hat. He was sensitive to a hint of breeding and reserve in the woman's attitude; as though (he thought) the contretemps diverted and engaged her more than he did who was responsible for it.

He addressed her in a diffident and uncertain voice: "I beg pardon. . . ."

"The box is mine," she affirmed with a cool and even gravity. "The steward is right."

Is society best at its worst or worst at its best?

Many a novel and motion picture has been based on the frivolity of the upper strata of the social world. Its excesses in pleasure and deficiencies in serious work have been criticized in countless frothy fiction products and ponderous tomes.

DESIRE GAMES ON SATURDAYS

Some Should be Arranged For This Day, Not all on Wednesday

A subscriber of The Intelligencer who is much concerned in reference to the preparation of the second schedule of the Central Ontario Baseball League and who is a workman, writes us as follows:

As the time draws near for the making up of the schedule for the second half of the Central Ontario League, as a working man I want to voice a protest for having (as I hear they shall) all our home games played here on Wednesday. I have been a supporter of the G.T.R. team since they started, and in order to see a game I shall have to lay off. I notice all the other towns split their schedule fifty-fifty, and the only two Saturday games we had in the first half were Cobourg and Leaside, and, as you are aware, it rained. I have heard it said that Wednesday was a better day than Saturday for a larger crowd. I don't believe it, for when our team won the Ontario championship nearly all that summer (1919) were Saturday games, and look at the attendance. Now, I think it is up to Mr. M. Duff or Mr. Newton Thompson or, whoever goes to draw up the schedule, to give us a fair deal.

NEWSPAPERS ATTACK NATIONAL SPORT

Bill Introduced Into Mexican Congress for Abolition of Bullfights

Mexico City, July 10.—The future of bullfighting in Mexico is not as certain as its most ardent devotees would wish as the result of a series of newspaper and other attacks against it as the national sport.

Protests that the spectacles are "barbarous and uncivilized" have been frequently expressed by contributors to local newspapers and the Council of Culture and Arts recently engaged in hated debate over their continuation. At the last session of congress a bill was introduced in the lower house and never came up for discussion. Assurance is given, however, that the bill will be revived at the next session of congress opening in September with absolute certainty that it will be called up for debate.

Several clubs and societies in Mexico City have gone on record as opposed to the sport and all protestants are finding a ready champion in the newspaper EL UNIVERSAL whose editor, Felix F. Palavicini is unalterably against it. On the contrary, Rafael Alducin, editor of Excelsior, is one of the most enthusiastic followers of the games.

A duplicate copy of the protest was mailed to Belleville club this afternoon, and they have 48 hours to file a defence.

ENCOURAGE RAISING OF "BABY BEEF"

Winter Fair Association Commitees Draw Up Prize Lists

A special baby beef contest exhibit was arranged by the Committee on Beef Cattle in connection with the Royal Agricultural Winter Fair Association of Canada ,which held a meeting in the Carls-Rite Hotel yesterday morning for the purpose of reviving certain classifications and prizes for cattle. The rules of the new contest require that all animals exhibited must be cared for my boys and girls from ten to eighteen years of age.

The objects of this contest are to encourage boys on the farms to take an interest in breeding good cattle, and to develop their business faculties.

GERMAN SERVANTS GO TO HOLLAND

20,000 Servant Girls Leave For Land of Higher Wages

Berlin, July 10. Holland's frontier made notorious during the war as a favorite exit from Germany for fugitive prisoners of war, is again coming into the limelight through the surreptitious crossing of young German girls anxious to get Dutch employment. It is estimated that Germany is already poorer by 20,000 female servants as a result of this practice.

With high wages and attractive working conditions, Holland has become something of a "promised land" for German frauleins qualified as housemaids and cooks. Twenty to twenty-five guilders a month are paid beginners, while the more efficient receive from 40, to 50. Such pay means from 2,000 to 5,000 marks monthly at the present rate of exchange, about ten times more than help of this kind receives in Germany.

Amsterdam firms and dwellings have acquired about 5,000 of the emigrants and there are about 3,000 at The Hague. Most of them have been drawn from the Rhineland and Westphalia, where labor exchanges have been established at various places in cooperation with Dutch exchanges. Women's organizations in the western German provinces are actively opposing the exodus because of the shortage of help in households and on farms.

How Indians Played Lacrosse

Some of the most interesting passages of Canadian history are the descriptions of early Indian lacrosse matches related by Catlin and other early explorers and writers. According to them in the ancient matches as many as five hundred Indians a side took part. The affair was attended with great ceremony, a special course of training was followed and a special sporting suit was worn consisting of a breech cloth to which was attached a long flowing tail, something like a horse's tail. Some wore moccasins, while others went barefoot. The game was played for stakes, usually piles of blankets, which were laid out and placed under the guard of the squaws during the match. It will be seen that the first origins of lacrosse were like its descendants, not strictly amateur.

The oldest medicine men of the tribes were the umpires, and they sat about in solemn conclave for days before the match, praying for aid in giving just decisions. Their judgment was final. They kept tally by little sticks which were laid in piles as the score rolled up. Sometimes the match lasted for two or three days according as the total score was set for ten, twenty or even two hundred points. The referee was more like a master of ceremonies whose duty it was to propound the rules before the match was begun and keep the game generally in order. He was usually a player himself, who took part in the match, chosen for his superior speed and ability. The influence of the Indian game upon the early white man's lacrosse is seen in the rules of the N.L.A., which provide for the command of the game by the umpires, the referee only to be consulted for a casting vote when the umpires disagree.

The Indians had ideas of training which would hardly commend themselves to modern players. Of course the game they played, lasting such a time, was a test of endurance especially. The players on each side were so numerous that it can be imagined that many of them were frequently swinging the lead while the rest were in the thick of the melee. Only in this way could it have been possible to finish the match. There was no attempt at team play, nor were substitutes allowed. A player whose bones were broken got off the field as best he could without the game stopping. If he got better of his disability he could return, but the same personnel or a fraction thereof that commenced the game must finish it. And for this trying ordeal the training was peculiar.

For three or four days before the contest fasting was practiced. This seems ridiculous to us, but it must be remembered that the Indian's normal condition of healthy living was semi-fasting and that the only thing which put him out of condition except accident was gorging or too much food or drink. Fasting was the Indian trainer chief's remedy for this danger. Then the night before the momentous match was to begin, all assembled decked out in their paint and feathers and commenced a wild dance about huge fires which were made. The practice varied with different tribes. Some danced straight through for two or three hours until morning so that they got exhausted into a cold stream. Others danced for a half hour every two hours until morning so that they got no sleep.

This was their training. Small wonder that little things like rules were not bothered with when players were in this state of exhilaration. Play was commenced by throwing the ball high into the air midway between the goals. A mad throng rushed in to catch it on its descent and they were off. The ball was never faced after that but was put into play in the same way after each point scored.

A remarkable thing about the game is that though so rough and unrestrained, the best of feeling existed between the contestants. Is the Indian superior in self-control or did his surpassing condition make him more stoical and immune from pain?

A human touch to these matches which imputes to the Indian a touch of the chivalry of the era of knighthood gallantry is disclosed in the custom of the maidens running out on the field of play before the match and presenting beadwork pledges to the fleetest and bravest players, who put them in their belts and did their best to bring honor to the tokens in their play.

The crosse used by the Indians was a much different affair to the civilized stick now employed. It was a one-hand implement seldom more than three feet long, a nearly straight stick containing at its end a circular or oval hoop from three to twelve inches in diameter, strung with loose netting in which the ball was carried. The size of the netting varied as did the rules with the different tribes. Some used two sticks, one in each hand, carrying the ball between them. Nearly all used a single stick or tree for a goal, the rules of some requiring this to be struck with the ball, while with others it was sufficient to cross an interminable line running through the stick, a point being scored on the same principle as a touch-down in Rugby. The distance between goals ran all the way from 500 yards to one-half mile or more.

A great event in lacrosse circles was a visit in 1876 of a team of Indians to England along with a team of whites under the care of Dr. Beers, who is called the father of lacrosse. Matches were played before the Prince of Wales and the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The English and Irish accounts of the matches are very voluminous and if they are somewhat naive and lack expert appreciation of the game, yet are frank in expression of first impressions of an entirely new game.

Sub-Arctic People.

The sub-Arctic people from the frozen tungas wear a snugly fitting bonnet with earlaps, designed to exclude the cold as well as to conserve the heat. Although the utilitarian side is the essential feature, and each of the twenty or more little pieces used in the construction of the bonnet are necessary to make the shape, the people who wear this headgear have adapted ornamentation to its limitations. Fur is the basic material, but there are effective inserts of different colored strips of leather, some of which are woven with leather of a contrasting shade. In introducing bright colors they depend almost entirely on quill work, although occasionally bits of trade cloth are used.

In Angora, the capital of Nationalist Turkey, storks may be seen everywhere. One pair nest on the top of the column reared by the Romans in honor of Augustus; others on the roof of the Parliament building; several pairs make their home on the Hotel Huriet. Boys are brought up to leave them alone. Indeed, Anatolia is a birds' paradise, for the Turks never shoot them or destroy their nests.

Light From Shell-Fish.

After experimenting for eight years an American scientist has succeeded in producing cold artificial light by chemical means.

The discoverer is Dr. Newton Harvey, of Princeton University, and the substance upon which he worked is "luciferin," which is obtained from a tiny Japanese shell-fish about the size of a flea.

"Luciferin" is very like the material from which glow-worms produce illumination, but before Dr. Harvey's discovery scientists had never succeeded in obtaining light from it after it had been separated from the fish.

Dr. Harvey found that "luciferin" regained its vitality for a short time if placed in contact with oxygen, and after many experiments he discovered a secret substance which causes "luciferin" to give off light for as long as is required.

This light-giving substance is dissolved in water, and in a dark room gives a blue flame strong enough to enable a person to read at four feet.

The Impressive Comma.

During an examination in a school the inspector began to question the pupils on punctuation, when the mayor, a pompous individual, interrupted with the remark, "It is foolish to bother about commas and suchlike." The inspector flushed angrily, and turning to one of the boys he bade him write on the blackboard, "The Mayor of Cherington says the inspector is a fool. Now," he continued, "put a comma after Cherington, and another after inspector." The boy did so, and the mayor was silent after that.

The Memorial Cross.

The memorial cross heretofore available only to wives and mothers of soldiers whose deaths resulted from active service prior to November 11, 1920, will now be issued in respect of any man who dies as the result of active service, regardless of the date of death.

The authorities have no means of securing accurate information concerning post-war deaths, so it is necessary for those concerned to make application to the Department for the issue of the medal.

LONDON LEADS THE WORLD IN DIRT.

London, June 26.—London leads the world in fog, smoke and soot.

During a single month according to the Department of Health, 47 tons of dirt were dumped from the air upon unsuspecting heads of the populace. Of this mass approximately 27¼ tons were soluble and 19¾ tons were insoluble, and consisted of tar, carbon and grit.

London is no place for white collars, straw hats, Palm Beach suits or light-colored gowns. These soon assume a black hue which even the laundries find it difficult to remove. Hatmakers are overcoming the dirt by making this summer's straw hats a deep black.

Albert College Summer School

FRIDAY EVENING TWILIGHT SESSIONS.

According to the printed program, Rev. Geo. Brown addressed the Summer School at 7 p.m., and his instructive abilities were a gain much appreciated. His theme of Salvation was quite personal to those present and valuable for future endeavour. These are days of problems to be faced and the adjustment of disputes. The spirit of Christ is a remedy for evils, and the extension of His kingdom rapidly realizes the solution of many difficulties. When the individual relation is settled right with God and perfect holiness attained there much was accomplished toward removing the source of conflicting situations. Salvation is defined in deliverance from impending catastrophies.

On every hand we have commercial intercession of debt deliverances. Infractions of divine laws must be either pardoned or punished. God bestows not forgiveness just but expects a change of heart, a nature renewed by the Holy Spirit. Thus the guilty obtain connection again with the Infinite and their need is met. There is a sad lack of the sense of sin in the world to-day. The Lord tries to convince and convict the erring in their pitiable state. The shed blood of the lamb of Calvary is the only antidote for the remorse of the straying one. Repentance is being sorry enough to quit sinful practice. There must be a cutting loose from all known tendencies to defy God. After decision, confession, the surrender of the heart, consenting to submission and acceptance of the oblation offered, then comes full assurance of the Father's acceptance and the effect is noticeable. Belief "on" not simply "in" Christ is necessary. How shall we be kept? By continual trust and self abnegation the Divine power will not allow us to be plucked out of His grasp. That strength will be available of ourselves, and we shall be safe as long as we do not withdraw our hand from the Father's. The question of our continuance in the straight and narrow way is largely a matter of our own will.

THE UNPURCHASABLE THINGS OF LIFE.

A large number including visitors from the city were on hand for Friday night's public address by Rev. Archer Wallace. Money has an unfortunate value in respect to deferential things in life. Sunshine, Health and Education are beyond purchasing with wealth. After all money buys cheap affairs. Possession of instruments does not make musicians nor does investment in a library insure knowledge. Euclid told the king of Egypt that "there was no royal road to learning." The doors to art are open to all, no one can monopolise in this regard. Some may marry for money but are soon disappointed. Happiness cannot be secured with the currency of this world. The great bulk of the suicides in America, according to statistics are not among the burdened poor, rather the idle rich. As long as a tree is growing healthily the insects and germs of disease are baffled. Necessities satisfy but luxuries become a curse when there is not sufficient common sense to use them aright.

The long roll of martyrs found peace, and Bunyan and others had wonderful freedom of soul though in gaol. Incurables were eased to think that afflictions came one day at a time. Reputation may be purchased but not character. Ministers see folk at their best, lawyers at their worst, but doctors like the All-Wise-One see humanity as they really are. Ordinarily we are better than we are given credit for; and while some do not put enough soul into their work, others continually "talk shop." Acquiring wealth is perilous. The worst thing about money often is that it costs too much. The mind becomes blinded to other things. We should enjoy clean legitimate luxuries. Some forms of religion in the East despise the natural body.

The Lord's prayer related itself to common incidents of our existence. Tis easy to think that God is interested in us at certain times. Ezekiel speaks of the ploughman being inspired in his task. Our faculties are for the sake of others too, and our talents should be devoted to God and humanity. They are a means to a n end. The Roman governor Tiberius had all the then world could bestow but could not be saved from the grave. His was a gloomy experience.

The rich fool gloried in "my farms", "my barns", but was not satisfied. Proprietorship is temporary, Jesus taught stewardship and condemns the competitive system. Unjust ways of getting wealth came in for great censure. They who live on others' industry are content to "let the weak go to the wall." It is said that in the United States 2% of the people own 98% of the wealth. The present state of economics cannot last long. Within this century great changes are due in industrial circles. Unemployment is hindering the work of the church. A man can hardy be converted with an empty stomach. The poor must be lifted up. The only failure is in not measuring up for the appreciative "Well Done" for faithfulness as trustees of our privileges. We take nothing tangible into the other world, another circulation belongs to the celestial domain. St. Paul told those in his day that offers to buy the richness within the gospel "perish with thee."

SATURDAY MORNING CLASSES.

The regular Mission study and Teacher Training classes were held, and wound up in reviews and examinations. In the Round Table conference Miss E. Berkley read a paper on Junior Leagues as conducted by her in Bridge St. church of this city. This showed excellent chievement, nd provoked keen discussion to the helpful interest of the work.

AFTERNOON SPORTS.

The culmination of several days of practice resulted in a game of baseball at 2 o'clock between representatives of the classes studying China and Japan during the week. Under the skilful coaching of Rev. Wallace the community aggregation of the Japanese colors won out to the tune of 27 to 14, without finishing the latter part of the seventh innings as a mark of grace in victory. The young ladies in the majority were particularly artful, and remarkable displays of catching and stealing bases were exhibited. Every player made a run, and one young man proved to be a "Babe Ruth". The rooters were severe upon the respective lady pitchers in "fanning out" favorites and "walking" the batteries. Rev. Richards as umpire gave fair satisfaction and could not be blamed for impartiality because his wife was an aggressive actor in the losing team. At the end of the strenuous combat both teams were snap-shotted for the purpose of securing slides for departmental use. The winners were rewarded with a luscious water-melon. First aid helpers and massage experts soon permitted expeditious rendezvous to down town hikes, where the delegates became acquainted with the goods of the many loyal advertisers.

EVENING IMPROMPTU CONCERT.

As customary this was this year an unqualified success. On short notice the following program was carried out with Rev. W. P. Woodger, presiding as an encouraging chairman.

Quintet song, by young men.

Reading—Miss Adam, Bowmanville.

Solo—Miss Queenie Kerr, Belleville.

Reading — Miss Helen Spiernam, Udney, Ont., "Friday Afternoon at School."

Feminine Sextette.

Monologue—by Mrs. Varley, Belleville.

Speech and Recitation—by Rev. Archer Wallace—"Early Days in Ontario," and "and Kipling's "Recessional."

Solos—by Frank Alcorn, Millbrook.

Reading — Miss Margaret Keene, Madoc.

Piano Selections—Miss Doble, Udney.

Then as a climax there was staged a Mock Trial in which certain members of the school were charged with "holding a seance" with some sort of a spirit. Prosecuting and defendant's attorneys succeeded in eliciting most of the happenings, and the reverend gentlemen displayed exceptional ability in summing up the intricate evidence concerning apparitions and strange sounds about the College one night during the week at the retiring hour. The austere but sympathetic Judge acquitted the prisoner with the injunction to heed the Sheriff's command to tell everything but the truth, so help me some".

Saturday night saw the refreshment booth in the Commercial room sold out.

MODEL SHIP ON OCEAN TRIP

Four-foot Full Rigged Ship Dares the Briny Deep

Boston, July 7.—A four-foot model of a full-rigged ship with all sails set is heading across the Atlantic in the general direction of Ireland, according to Captain Thomas B. Jago, of the Leyland liner Caledonian, which docked here yesterday from Manchester and Liverpool. Captain Jago reported that he sighted the strange craft Tuesday morning 85 miles off Sable Island.

When sighted the model was making about five knots an hour, with a spanking westerly wind on her quarter, Captain Jago said. He examined it through his glasses, but could not discover any identifying marks. The Caledonian's officers believed that the little vessel was being used in some sort of ocean experiment.

JAMES P. HUMPHREYS, well-known automobile man of Hebron, Md., who declares he believes Tanlac is the best thing to overcome stomach trouble and run-down condition. States it completely restored his health.

"I belyieve in giving everything its due and I want to say right now I just can't praise Tanlac too highly for what it has done in my case," declared James P. Humphreys, proprietor of the Hebron Motor Co., Hebron, Md.

"For three years or more I suffered from indigestion. After eating I would bloat terribly with gas and my heat would palpitate until it interfered with my breathing. I was habitually constipated and my nerves were all upset. My sleep was unsound, I got up mornings all tired out, and I was only a shadow of my former self.

"Well, Tanlac has given me a keen appetite, stomach trouble has disappeared, my nerves have steadied down, and I have gained several pounds. Tanlac, to my mind, is the best thing ever sold for stomach trouble and run-down condition."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

PROMPT ACTION SAVES LIVES OF BATHERS

Lifeguard and Youth Rescue Lads Carried Out by Undertow — Danger Spots

Toronto, July 8.—The prompt action of Lifeguard Easton, of the Scarboro Beach station, and Harry Foster, aged 14 years, of 20 Orchard Park boulevard, was largely responsible for saving Frank Sadler, aged 14 years, of 114 Rainsford road, and Kenneth Bridges, aged 14, of 138 Kenilworth avenue, from drowning at Kew Beach yesterday afternoon.

Young Sadler got into trouble about fifteen yards from the Kew Beach pier and Kenneth Bridges went to his assistance. The undertow and heavy sea bothered both boys and they were soon in difficulty. Young Foster, who is a big husky and athletic fellow, ran out to the end of the pier and taking in the situation, jumped in and managed to hold Bridges up while Easton looked after Sadler.

Speaking of his experience, Harry Foster said, "I saw Kenneth Bridges jumping in to help Sadler and soon after I noticed that Bridges seemed to be in difficulty. While help was being extended to Sadler I jumped in and grabbed Bridges and held him up until the life guard came up and took us ashore."

SEEK TO PREVENT HIGH DEATH RATE

New York Association Publishes Important Health Talks for Mothers

New York, July 10.—The high death rate among women of the United States during childbirth and the ignorance of the proper methods of nursing and care of the mother have led the Maternity Center Association of New York to publish twelve talks for mothers stressing the vital importance of complete maternity care. More than a million of the pamphlets will be distributed nationally.

The association asserts that more women between the ages of 15 and 45 die from causes incident to maternity than from any other cause except tuberculosis. Dr. Haven Emerson, of the association's advisory board, estimates that only one woman out of seventeen in the United States receives the benefit of modern medical and nursing service at childbirth. The result, it is said, is that more than 20,000 women lose their lives during childbirth each year, more than 100,000 babies are born dead and more than 100,000 die under the age of one month.

The association hopes to convince expectant mothers that prenatal care is needed, and lead them to present their cases to local nursing and public health organizations and receive personal advice and direction.

MR. KING WILL TALK ON MANY MATTERS

Prime Minister Will Leave For Washington on Tuesday

Ottawa, Ont., July 9.—The mid-summer calm has settled over the Capital and ministers are pretty well scattered. They will be even more so next week. Thursday's cabinet council was the last for ten days.

The Prime Minister, who is at his summer place at Kingsmere, will return to Ottawa on Tuesday and leave the same day for Washington where, through the British ambassador, a conference has been arranged for Thursday with the Secretary of State.

It is understood to-day that before leaving, Mr. King will issue a memorandum touching the purposes of his visit. Meanwhile, from what can be learned here, no outstanding question is to be taken up but rather a variety of matters.

THE DEEP WATERWAY.

The United States Government has been pressing for a claim in regard to the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes Waterways scheme and this subject may be broached at Washington, but it is not on any program initiated here. The position of the Government was set forth formally in an order-in-council recently. It was stated in this that the Government does not consider the present an opportune time for going into the project and it is understood that there is no variation as yet from this stand. The matter, however, is certain to come up incidentally at Washington but as no appropriation has been asked of or made by Parliament, there is little prospect of anything being done this year at all events.

MORRISON'S CREED PUT INTO FINNISH

U.F.O. Broadcasts Doctrine in Pamphlets Issued for Finlanders

Toronto, July 8.—In its membership the U. F. O. embraces many nationalities. For a long time all pamphlets issued have been printed in French as well as English for the benefit of the French-Canadians. Now another interpreter has been added to the Farmers' staff, and in still another lan- "Ontarion JicoAther 'sar itale guage Morrisonian doctrines are being broadcasted.

"Ontarion Yhdistyneet Maanviljelijat" is a short way to say "United Farmers of Ontario" in Finnish, and streams across the top of a leaflet just published for the benefit of the Finnish brethren in Northern Ontario. There are many Finlanders who are members of the U. F. O., and the pamphlet, which was mailed yesterday, describes the aims and efforts of the movement.

It is a bilingual document, English and Finnish being printed in parallel columns. It furnishes proof of the comparative brevity of the English language. The Finnish runs nearly a quarter of a column longer than the English.

OIL AND WATER WILL NOT MIX

Says Mr. Crerar When Asked as to the Proposed Liberal-U.F.O. Merger

Toronto, July 8.—Hon. T. A. Crerar, Leader of the Progressives in the House of Commons was in Toronto yesterday. He spent a portion of the afternoon in conference at Queen's Park and left last night for Winnipeg to attend a meeting of the United Grain Growers, of which he is President.

The big Westerner is still the silent Westerner. He would talk crops and Western farm prospects and weather hopes and settlers' problems—but not politics.

"There is considerable speculation in the newspapers and among politicians as to a political rapprochement between Liberalism and Progressivism in the shaping and carrying out of national policies asked, how far this speculation was justified?" Mr. Crerar smiled and said, "What is Liberalism in the practical politics of our country? If it is Liberalism—with a small 'l'—if it is marching forward, broadening out, seeking the greatest good to the greatest number—if it is progress, national and individual, then nothing should divide us.

"If, on the other hand, Liberalism in politics is something different from liberalism in daily life, then barriers divide us that are insurmountable. Not even the Edisons and the Marconis have yet discovered a way to mix—or amalgamate—oil and water."

As to imediate, definite issues before Parliament and the country Hon. Mr. Crerar could not be persuaded to talk. The Parliamentary defeat of the railway lobby on the Crow's Nest Pass agreement and general railway freight rates he regards as "in the main satisfactory and along lines of progress." Of the legislation in regard to the Wheat Board he is even more cautious. "It depends largely," he said, "on how the legislation is administered."

For National Weal.

One thing Mr. Crerar did emphasise—that the Progressive party is not a class movement. He reiterated his aspiration to make it national, in the largest and widest sense—"not the propagandist of interests that are narrow and sectional, but the promoter of those principles and policies which are for the prosperity and well-being of the Canadian people as a whole."

THE JURY DECLARE THAT MOULT WAS SLAIN BY BARRIE

Jury Declares That Barrie Shot G. Wesley Moult

Question is Raised as to Whether Moult was Shot in Barn or Out—Neighbors Tell Story of Search for Body and Strange Actions of Barrie

BARRIE WAS SEEN WITH .22 RIFLE

The Moult inquest continued on Monday afternoon at 2 p.m. at the court house, with Miss Alberta Phillips, housemaid at the Moult home, still on the stand.

Continuing her evidence before a crowded court room, the witness said in part:—

"The last words that I heard Mr. Moult say was, "I'll go out and send Maurice in to his dinner." As far as I know Maurice was in the drive shed when Wes went out to look for him. Wes went towards the barn. Maurice appeared again in about 15 or 20 minutes."

"I do not kow what the men were going to work at that afternoon. The army rifle was in the house then. I ext saw Maurice about 2 p.m. when he came into the house,d and aske Mrs. Moult if she wanted anything at the store in Plainfield. He was dressed the same. He tood the car, and was gone about one hour, when he returned with a dish pan, which he said cost 75 cts. This pan had been on order at the store. He then went into the drive house. Then between 4.30 and 5 p.m. I saw him again. I do not know where Maurice was from * until this time. I was not out of the yard during the whole afternoon. I was busy at my work. At 4.30 p.m. he was backing the car out of the shed, and drove down the lane, and had no firearms with him that I know of. When he returned he put the car in the shed."

"I saw him next at supper. Mr. Salisbury drove in and talked with Mrs. Moult along with Maurice. Maurice said that Wes. had instructed him to go to the Hamilton's at 4.30 ct 5 p.m. ad that is where he said he had-bee,when he took the car out for the second trip. Maurice ate a good supper that night, and then Mrs. Moult and Maurice milked the cows."

"Witness then told of Maurice having gone back to the fields to search to Coffery's home after Dan Coffery. for Wes. and of the alleged trip over

"Mrs. Moult then asked Maurice to go and get Murney Wilson and Charlie Sargent. She asked him twice, then he went upstairs, put on his shirt and sweater and went out of the house. When he was gone some time, Mrs. Moult said she wished she had gone herself only she was afraid to leave Maurice and I in the house together. Finally Mrs. Moult did go out of the house and up to her father's place. I never saw Maurice afterwards that night or not. I do not know how the ladder got up again at the window. Maurice had a suitcase and club bag in his room. He left no note or message for me, and I have never heard from or seen him sense. I know of nobody who had a grievance against Mr. Moult. I still keep company with Bert Orr. None had ever been familiar with me before Maurice started, but Billie Goodfellow was fresh with me afterwards. I have no suggestions to make or no

OTTAWA TO BE HEAD OF RAILWAY SYSTEM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, July 11.—With the reconstruction of the Board of Directors of the Grand Trunk Railway impending, it is strongly rumored that President Hanna and Vice-President Mitchell, of the Canadian National, and President Kelley and Vice-President Scott of the Grand Trunk will retire. There is reason to believe, by way of neutralizing the rivalry between Montreal and Toronto, that Ottawa will be the executive headquarters of the railway system.

NEW ENGINEER IS SELECTED

City Council Appoints C. D. Campbell, C. E., of Hamilton to the Position

At the City Council meeting held last night the business was transacted with despatch. The legislation enacted was not of an extensive nature, the chief of which was the appointing of a new city engineer. There were some 30 applications received for the position and the choice fell upon Mr. Charles D. Campbell, C. E., who for a few years was city engineer of Galt. A number of recommendations emanating from the various civic committees were adopted and some other business of a routine nature was transacted.

Present Mayor Hanna, Aldermen French, Donohue, Robinson, McCreary, Greenleaf and Patterson.

Minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

Reports of committees, communications, etc., were laid on the table and council went into committee of the whole. Ald. Greenleaf in the chair.

Accounts recommended to be paid were passed also the following recommendations.

That two sanitary drinking cup holders and 5000 sanitary cups be purchased for the city hall and police station at an expense of $25.50 same to be purchased from G. H. Wood & Co.

That the City Clerk be authorized to procure a book and keep a record of committments to the House of Providence, Industrial School and other institutions of similar nature where the city is financially involved.

That the Clerk write the superintendent of the G.T.R. and request him to have the crossing repaired on St. Charles street over the G.T.R. tracks.

A BOOZE BOOM IN QUEBEC U.S. TOURISTS SLAKE THIRST

Is Regarded as an Oasis in the Dry Deserts of the United States and Ontario

Montreal, Quebec July 10.—Patrons of the Quebec Liquor Commission stores, whose ranks have been liberally reinforced by visiting tourists from the great Volstead desert of the United States and "Dry" Ontario have guaranteed a provincial treasury surplus which will smash all previous records.

According to Premier Taschereau, the former record surplus of approximately one and one-quarter millions, will be dwarfed by this year's figure. The former mark did not include profits from the Government sale of liquor, and as these have been estimated at approximately $5,000,000 the size of the provincial credit balance may be easily guaged.

Of this $5,000,000 some $3,000,000 has already been appropriated for extraordinary provincial development; $1,000,000 has been alloted for education, another $1,000,000 to good roads and a third $1,000,000 to reduce the provincial debt.

The surplus this year is estimated in official circles as exceeding $2,000,000. It will be definitely announced within the next ten days.

DRIVE REBELS INTO THE SEA

Free State Plans to Drive Insurgents Into Corner of Irish Coast

WRECK RAILWAY LINE

Republicans are Active at Various Points—Curate Intervenes in Attack

(Can. Press Despatch.)

London, July 11.—Reports of the wrecking of railway lines indicate that the insurgents present plan of campaign aims at preventing the movement of free state troops.

There are no definite reports touching on the free state plans, but, the opinion is expressed that the Government will endeavor to drive the rebels into the southwest corner of the island in the hope of dealing with them in single operation, instead of being compelled to scatter its forces over a large part of country.

Belfast, July 11.—A band of Republicans entered manor Hamilton, County Leitrim, yesterday and prepared to attack the free state barracks when a local curate appealed to them to desist, threatening to place himself in front and receive first shots. His appeal was effective.

ARRESTS ITALIAN AT TRENTON

Believe He Sold Liquor to Men Who Figured in Accident

Charles Shoniker and George Harris, two of the three Trenton men who figured in the accident on the Trent road early Sunday morning, were taken to Trenton last night by members of the Provincial and City Police force here, where they showed the officers where they purchased the liquor, which was responsible for the accident.

The officers found the house vacant, neighbors informing them that the Italian family which had occupied the house, had moved to Oshawa some two weeks ago. The house was searched, but no liquor found. Later, an Italian was arrested and taken into custody at Trenton, on the supposition that he was the foreigner who sold the liquor to the men. Shoniker recognized him as being the man, but Harris would not swear to his identity.

John Doyle, the third member of the party, who was badly injured, is worse to-day, according to reports, and is spitting blood. Officers who saw the car after the accident state that the only reason any of the three men escaped death, was because they were thrown into the water in the ditch, and not on the hard ground.

Sheriff Mear of Bathurst, N. B., arrived in this city Monday, and will take back with him, a prisoner, who has been held here, awaiting his arrival.

The prisoner is Lawrence Ganier, aged 15 of Bathurst, who was arrested her by Grand Trunk Detective Harris some days ago for breach of the Railway Act.

Ganier will be charged with entering a store in that town, and stealing a quantity of goods.

MONTREAL POLICE MAKE CLEAN SWEEP

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 11.—The Montreal police to-day swept through hotels, lodging houses and suspected buildings, and arrested twenty-four men who could not give a satisfactory account of themselves. THE LATE WILLIAM HODGINS BIGGAR, K.C.

NOTED BELLEVILLE CITIZEN MAKES LAST JOURNEY HOME

The Body of the Late W. H. Biggar, K.C., is Brought by Railway to the City Accompanied by Many Friends — An Impressive Funeral Service at St. Thomas' Church.

With solemn and impressive ceremony the body of the late William Hodgins Biggar, K.C., a great lawyer and a renowned son of Belleville, was laid to rest here this afternoon in the presence of representative men of the city and from Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other centres.

The prominent position which the late Mr. Biggar held in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway Company as a Vice-President and senior counsel, was responsible for so many railway men in Canada who journey to Belleville to pay their last tribute of respect to one who in life was highly esteemed and in death revered. Not only were railway magnates present, but many employees of the G. T. R. in the city and vicinity were in attendance. Universal regret was expressed at the passing of one who in life by his courteous and affable manner made a host of friends.

At 2 p.m. a special train from Montreal arrived at the G. T. R. station, bearing the body and also a large number of the officials of the G. T. R. and others who were desirous of attending the funeral. Many citizens in autos and on foot accompanied the body to St. Thomas Church where the impressive burial services of the Anglican Church were conducted by the Rector, Archdeacon Beamish. During the service the sacred edifice was filled.

At the conclusion of the church service the cortege was reformed and proceeded to the Belleville cemetery, where the body was deposited in its final resting place. The committal service was conducted by Ven. Archdeacon Beamish.

The pallbearers were all members of the Legal Department of the Grand Trunk, as follows:- W. C. Chisholm, K.C. E. Donald, J. P. Pratt C. A. Harwood, K.C., T. Waterson, T. W. R. McRae.

Among those who travelled to Belleville from Montreal on the funeral special were:—President, Howard K. Kelley; Vice-President J. E. Dalrymple; Vice President, Frank Scott,

A BORN PAINTER.

Toronto, July 11.—A house painter giving evidence in a wage dispute case in the County court yesterday, told the Major that he had been a painter "since the day he was born."

Wm. McIvor claimed $37 wages for painting done, from Jas. Duggan. McIvor said he used 75 pounds of lead to a gallon and a half of oil and turps. The suggestion was that the paint must have been put on with a trowel instead of a brush.

The complainant must go to another court to collect his account.

CITY PAID FOR WORK NOT DONE

Dundas Street Sewer is Faulty and Work Incomplete

REPORT TO COUNCIL

City Paid $2,300 More Than Was Due to Contractor —Corruption Charged

At the City Council last night Ald. Patterson presented a report relative to his inspection of the Dundas street sewer, the construction of which has caused considerable comment in and out of the Council. The report is comprehensive and is as follows:

The Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Belleville:

Dear Sirs,—

Re West Dundas Street sewer.

At the request of the Council I have made a survey, and looked into the conditions and contract covering the above sewer, constructed by Mr. Francesco Bumbaca, and beg to report as follows:

Apparently the above contractor was not the low tenderer on this job. I do not know whether he put in a tender at all or not, but apparently he was given the opportunity of taking this job at the exact price that was submitted by another contractor. The contract is not dated nor is it signed by anyone having authority from the city to do so. It is also not sealed and no specification is attached. Neither has the customary bond or security been put up for faithful performance of contract. This is just another instance of how the city is suffering from lack of some one in authority to supervise all the various departments.

A large portion of this sewer has been laid in the ditch, and has only a very light covering of earth. In my opinion this should never have been allowed, and is not a proper state of affairs. As the sewer stands today, no heavy traffic can cross it, and it is liable to be broken in a number of different ways, and in winter time it is almost sure to be affected by frost and flood conditions.

The figures and payments as set out on "Cmpletin Certificate" attached hereto, are approximately correct, with the exceptions noted below, and in my opinion the following amounts should be charged up and collected from the contractor:

City paid for three drop-manholes at $100 each; only two installed; deduction	$ 100.00
City paid for 3 culvert crossings at $50 each; I can only find 2; deduction	50.00
48 lineal feet 14" cast iron pipe I can find no trace of; deduction	193.00
The last three items on 'Completion Certificate", totalling $22.50. I could find no trace of, but possibly the City Engineer can explain.
Re work on gas main, the contractor has been paid $385.00 for this work, but I can find no trace of any such work having been done, and the Manager of the Gas Department informs me that none has been done; deduction	385.00

DELAY PAYMENT OF GERMAN DEBT

Britain and France to Confer on German Financial Situation

POINCARE TO LONDON

British Cabinet Studies International Situation and Conditions in Germany

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 11.—The moratorium on Germany's cash payments for the remainder of this year was thought in circles close to the Reparations Commission today to be quite probable, as a result of the conference between Dr. Fischer, Chairman of the German War Debts Commission, and all the members of the commission.

The French Government is opposed to an immediate meeting of the Allied powers to discuss reparations, and it will only consent to such a meeting as a final step. This was made plain after a conference between President Poincare and President Dubois of the Reparations Comsion today.

London, July 11.—Premier Poincare of France will probably be invited to London immediately for a conference with Lloyd George on reparations, according to official circles here.

London, July 11.—Britain and France are in close communication concerning Germany's financial position and the reparations question, and Premier Poincare is said to plan going to London for a conference with the British Premier. The whole international financial situation came before the British Cabinet at a meeting today, especially in its relation to the collapse of the German mark. Among the data available to ministers were special despatches from the British Ambassador in Berlin outlining conditions in German.

WORLD'S OLDEST MAN DIES

Greasy Creek, Ky., July 11.—"Uncle Johnny" Shell, Kentucky's oldest citizen, said to have been 134 years old, died here on Sunday of infirmities of age.

Shell, a mountaineer, was claimed by his relatives to have been the oldest man in the world.

Among the many mourners at the funeral to-day were his two sons, William, aged 50, and Albert, 7. Albert is the offspring of a second marriage.

GRASSHOPPERS IN QUEBEC

Montreal, Que., July 11.—Millions of grasshoppers are devouring Quebec crops, particularly in the Three Rivers and other central Quebec districts. A poison campaign is being waged by the Provincial Government with the view of exterminating the insect.

The depredations to date are said to have been enormous. The poison paste, claimed by the Government entomogist to be most effective costs but forty cents per acre to spread. It consists chiefly of molasses and bran, with the specified poison.

"BOBBED" HAIR IS PROPER SAY TORONTO TRUSTEES

Short Hair and Short Skirts are Regarded as Being "Clean and Cool"

Toronto, July 11.—Toronto school teachers may bob their hair if they choose to wear it that way. Toronto trustees are not so hard up for something to worry about that they want to get excited about how a school ma'am wears her locks.

"It's a matter of personal liberty," opined Trustee John Wanless. "Let a girl wear her hair in the way that best becomes her. Let her dress well too. I like to see a teacher neat in her attire, and as to her hands and hair and shoes. She is an example to the children. Let every girl teacher be a lady."

Trustee McClelland with Solomonic wisdom, refrained from expressing any opinion on bobbed hair. But he did say this: "I believe that our teachers are too sane and sensible to go to extremes. We have very few that might be called flappers." He did not think the board would excite itself over the issue.

"It's a clean and cool way to wear the hair," said Charles G. Fraser, president of the Toronto Teachers' Council. "It may look rather new to us, but so did the short skirts at one time, and nobody worries over them now. The bobbed hair cut seems to be sanitary and comfortable in summer. So long as a girl is modest and decent in her dress there's no need to interfere with her. There are some men who would give 5 cents to a preacher to save souls, $5 to a doctor to save bodies, and $50 to a lawyer to have their own way. It's the same way with some official bodies that strain at the gnat and swallow a camel. They do some foolish things in the United States and this row about the way the girls cut their hair seems to be one of them."

Albert College Summer School

Sunday Sessions.

The delegates of the Summer School had the floor on Sunday morning in the Song and Testimony service. Many were the expressions of the benefits and inspiration derived from the week's associations. The final was reached in the daily periods of Bible study when Rev. Archer Wallace concluded his series with "What Jesus Taught About Service." The 25th chapter of Matthew was read responsively. Service was explained as a Christian idea. It obtained previously to the time of Jesus as an influence of Christian teaching. The world has caught the effect of it consciously or unconsciously. A person once having had sight and then losing it would naturally not convey the same impression of such affliction as one who never knew what it was to see. The early disciples may have at first followed Christ from a selfish ambition. We should serve Jesus for our own sake. If we cease to use our faculties, the power to so use will be lost. Citing the cases of Robinson Crusoe and Alex. Selkirk it was proven that the senses suffer when deprived of functioning. In the evangelizing of the Gentiles Paul achieved a great spiritual gain. The instant that one ceases to grow, rot begins. There can be no standing still in Christian growth either. Ponies utilized in coal mines constantly accustomed to darkness, soon are unable to overcome blindness. Also for others' sake should we enter the service of Christ. Of the forty great deeds performed by Jesus, says Dr. Wilbur Chapman, twenty were through friends taking them, and fourteen where Jesus was taken to the friends, and only six found their way to the Saviour. Proportionately shall many lives and graves be Christless. Some on account of sensitiveness and church troubles vow to never darken the doors of edifices for worship. This is disastrous. We need persistent endeavor to reach the highest pinnacle of attainment. Scripture does not refer to many death-bed repentances. Our religion may become selfish. God is not an earthly monarch desiring to be lauded as Isaiah points out. Fine churches and music we may think of as decorated chariots to heaven.

Next, for the sake of our Creator should we be found in the service of the Master. Vital connection is not essential. The branches need the they need the branches and roots. Columbus needed his navigators just as much as they needed him in the voyage of discovery. The master desires to co-operate, else service is empty and nothing. The parable gives little credit to the one talent not used. If faithful in a few, larger will be entrusted to us, and our reward will be in greater confidence shown. The best way to became a missionary is to get ready by every opportunity, perhaps in a Sunday school class. No greater compliment can be paid an individual than the tribute of being considered the backbone of a Christian community. Talk about the cream of society! In the sight of God how shall we stand? Death is our inevitable destiny, and like our Master we should bury self into mortality. New values need to be placed on our careers and different emphasis on our service.

Following is this stirring message the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered, the Rev. Wm. Higgs of Madoc, a former president, assisting.

Sunday Afternoon Service of Double Appeals.

In a pleasing and racy manner the Deaconess work of the church was described by Miss Margaret Saunders of the National Training School in Toronto. Why am I a deaconess?—because of church responsibility. She defined what it is to be a deaconess. Why a uniform, because of its official distinction and the protection secured. Obstacles as to dress were thus overcome. Compared with conditions in England where she had labored, work in Canada was much easier, but we have a peculiar situation in large cities with our boarding houses lacking many restrictions. What is the remuneration of deaconesses? Power in service and opportunities to "Go, tell," as only women can sometimes do, carrying out the Lord's command at His resurrection appearance, first to Mary at the tomb.

The other part of the service from 3 to 4 p.m. was taken by Rev. Geo. W. Sparling, B.A., BD., missionary on furlough from China.

He would speak only from the standpoint of carrying on work there for the sake of the needy millions. Four requisites of a missionary were good health, education, common sense and consecration. The four calls of China were physical suffering, illiteracy, poverty and moral and spiritual needs. The Chinese do not understand the nature of diseases, nor scientific treatment. They believed demons caused sickness. Unfortunates were not cared for as in Christian civilizations. That alone justified mission work, and who knows but that we should undertake missions there for our own sakes and to combat the materialistic effect of eastern development. In China 95 per cent. of the people did not have advantages of education, and then only a few boys were favored with instruction compatible with the Civil Service. Japan was making rapid strides because 98 per cent. of her boys and girls attended schools. A great work can be accomplished in the Orient, establishing new methods in agriculture, industries and education. Two hundred and fifty million out of China's 400 million are near to the bread line. Up-to-date mode of living naturally increased the H. C. L. there too. The agent of the International Bankers' Association bore testimony to the value of the christian church because of its influence in the proper expenditure of funds. Think what it means to pilgrims to their temples being satisfied with deceptive service of heathen priests. We get assurance easily.

Closing Session.

The evening gathering at 7:15 o'clock was favored with a solo rendered very acceptably by Miss Queenie Kerr, Bridge Street delegate. Rev. Sparling preached the sermon from the text found in Luke 12:32. Prefacing his remarks he referred to his pleasure in spending a week at the Summer School, conducting mission study classes on China. Since being here nine years ago a decided change was noted in the tenor of the preaching and in advanced thought. Despite the fact that older folk always thought the younger generation less religious, today, in the speaker's estimation, there is more reality and less pretense and cant on the part of young people. He would gladly welcome new recruits at Chung King during the coming seven years.

God is more concerned about our welfare than we are. He is more anxious to give us the Kingdom than we are to take it. His is a living loving personality. We are slow to believe God. He desires to clarify and deepen the purpose of life, and to reveal the meaning of history in both an individual and national capacity. The heritage of the past teaches us to know God. Savages naturally worship objects of a Supreme being. The Chinese look upon the Omnipotent as a policeman of their souls. The factors which have unfolded truth to us are the Bible, philosophy, scientific research and daily experience. Darwin discovered evolution but it was in the world before. God's method with His creation has been a process of development. The parenthood of God appealed to the Chinese through their family life. Temptations ought to fortify His creatures. We have the choice to do right and resist evil. Yet we are slow to imbibe what we may know to be for our edification. Jesus came to reveal the Father's nature. Love is the keynote, the essence of Christianity. Mohammedism is submission as Islam signifies, Buddhism stresses purification. Confucianism aims to respect for others and help to be good. The Gospel of Christ furnishes the power to transform lives. Christianity supplements other religions. All have a mountain peak goal, but our religion advances and leads the way up the steep side to glory. Our attitude to the Kingdom should be one of trust and confidence in God, in the individual, and in building up His kingdom in the earth. By knowing our fellow men we shall become more and more characterized by mutual relations with others. We are not the only race whom God loves and teaches. Let us not sit in condemnation so much; rather may it be said that we contribute to the peace of the world by journeying side by side to a true conception of the brotherhood of man.

Results.

As far as can be possibly tabulated by statistics cards were distributed among the delegates bearing upon personal allegiance to Jesus Christ, full consecration, devotion to daily prayer and Bible meditation, service in the Kingdom and choice of life work. This phase, we understand, proves that the Summer School was well worth while, that it is not simply a week for pleasure and personal profit. There was a response of 7 enlisted for missionary work, 3 to become deaconesses, 1 to enter the ministry of the church definitely and 4 resolved to take Christ as captain of their lives. The 75 delegates will carry on the work of the school to their respective home centres. The unique spectacle was then enacted of all forming in a circle about the College chapel, joining hands and singing 'God Be With You Till We Meet Again." Then silent prayer, first for the person to the right, then to the left, and lastly for one's self. Rev. Geo. Brown pronounced the benediction over the memorable gathering.

NOTES.

Many friends motored in yesterday from the country.

There was an exodus all day Monday by rail road and automobile.

Expressions were hearty as to the facilities at the College and for the splendid service of Mrs. Speer and her staff. The site for the new college was visited by quite a few.

The great development evidenced in the rising young ministers of the Conference must be a great stimulus to the aspiring manhood present this year.

The local dailies are worthy of special mention for kindness in printing reports of the school.

Railway News

Nakusp, B.C.—As an indication of the increased industrial activity of the lumber mills of Nakusp, the Nakusp Lumber Company find their yarding room so limited that they have cleared about four acres of land near the first mile post along the C. P. R., where a spur will be built and the lumber hauled up in cars and allowed to dry before being shipped to outside points.

Invermere, B.C. — Amongst the many splendid summer publications of the C. P. R. are two of especial interest to this part. The first one deals with "Bungalow Camps," and makes very generous mention of the beautiful Lake Windermere Camp adjoining this place. The other one is a publication given over exclusively to describing the local "Camp." This is a seventeen-page folder, most beautifully illustrated with reproductions of photographs of local scenes. The letter press is by Mr. Frederic Niven.

The gist of the matter is descriptive of the various trails and automobile roads throughout the Windermere district.

Chatham, Ontario. — Wholesale summoning of boys and men who frequently use the C. P. R. tracks as a place for walks, was indicated in County Police court recently, with the swearing out of a number of informations by a C. P. R. detective who conducted an investigation.

It is alleged that the defendants trespassed on the C. P. R. tracks, a short distance from the City in Harwich township.

Informations have also been laid against seven boys under the age of sixteen years.

Montreal.—Edward J. Richel is appointed city passenger agent for the Canadian Pacific at Chicago, succeeding Alfred R. Dean, who has resigned to enter other business.

Mr. Richel joined the service on June 16, 1920, as clerk in the passenger department, Canadian Pacific Steamships, Chicago. Promotions following were: October 1, 1920, chief clerk; January 21, 1921, passenger agent; June 1, 1921, travelling passenger agent; June 1, 1922, city passenger agent.

William I. Balkwill is appointed travelling passenger agent, succeeding Edward J. Richel. Mr. Balkwill joined the Canadian Pacific as clerk in the steamships passenger department Chicago on March 13, 1922.

St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, N.B. — The Canadian Manufacturers' Convention for 1922 is now a thing of the past, and to the almost 300 delegates and others who have been here for a week, attending the sessions, it will be a pleasant memory. So much of a success has been this year's convention that it can be said, without violating any confidences, that the most influential members of the association are anxious to hold future conventions under similar conditions.

The Casino of the Algonquin Hotel provided an excellent meeting place, and the records show more discussion than at any four conventions in the past, while there has been more fraternizing by the delegates, who got to know one another to a greater degree than ever before. During the Convention days delegates played golf on the beautiful links overlooking the sea and indulged in swimming in Katy's Cove.

Calgary, Alta. — After covering six hundred miles in the southern portion of Alberta, at the end of June, J. M. Cameron, general superintendent of the Alberta Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, declares that crop conditions there, generally speaking, are very satisfactory.

Mr. Cameron stated that farmers had been taught an object lesson by grasshoppers. Where these insects had been active had been on stubble-in crops. From the amount of summer fallowing that was now going on, farmers had realized that stubbling-in was a poor gamble and left a breeding place for the hoppers. The hoppers, he said, were now practically under control in the south. Cutworms had done little or no damage on account of the frequent showers.

"I have been much pleased with my visit," said Mr. Cameron. "There is now quite an optimistic feeling among farmers and business men in the south country."

Elkhorn, Man.—Forty years ago Mr. Jas. Rodgers commenced working for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as a section man, and in about five years, through his ability to give the best he could and also because of his sterling integrity, was promoted to foremanship, holding this position until 20 years ago, when he desired a change of employment, and was transferred to the pumping station staff. For a while he worked at Fleming and Virden in his new capacity and eventually assumed charge of the Elkhorn pumping station, on the retirement of Mr. R. Travis, another old time railroad man who is still with us, as hale and hearty as ever.

A record such as Mr. Rodgers holds is decidedly unique. He is the second senior pumpman in the division, and his regularity and strict attention to his calling have won for him the deep respect of the Company, which places high value on the services of men of such capability. He has stood the rigors of an exacting position in a manner that must reflect great credit.

DROWNED WHILE CANOEING

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Three Rivers, Que., July 11.—Word was received here to-day that Albe Leblanc, Yvonne Leblanc and Eupeemie Labert, of St. Gregorie, and Alice Leblanc, of St. Leonard, were drowned on Lake St. Paul near Becancour yesterday while canoeing. Four boys and three girls were in the boat which began to leak and the girls jumped overboard capsizing a small craft. Three of the boys were saved.

CHINESE LEADER ALL-POWERFUL

Overthrew Sun Yat Sen, is Now "Man of the Hour"

Canton, July 11.—General Chen Chiung-Ming, who has become a dominating figure in South China by the overthrow of Dr. Sun Yat Sen, is a man of iron will and forceful, determined character. This, at least, is the impression gained by the Associated Press correspondent, who visited him at his headquarters in Weichow, Kwangtung Province, and it seems to be borne out by the rapidity with which he has advanced to his all-powerful position as the "man of the hour" in the troubled area extending in all directions from the seat of his government.

In appearance General Chiung-Ming represents the highest type of Chinese intellectual. His head is large, well shaped, and replete with characteristics which would interest a phrenologist. The forehead is broad and high; the nose somewhat longer and less broad than is usual among the Chinese; the eyes lack the pronounced Oriental slant; the mouth is large and the chin square and determined. Just at present General Chiung-Ming is wearing a mustache closely cropped over the upper lip but long and drooping at the points. His head is closely shaved with the exception of a tuft-like patch of hair on the top, recalling the pig-tail that was abolished throughout China a decade ago.

In height he is above the average of his countrymen. His movements are supple and suggestive of considerable physical strength. He invariably dresses in the silk robes which are the accepted court attire of the country, despite the fact that they have been discarded in favor of European styles by many of the more enlightened classes of the Empire.

For his headquarters, office and residence, General Chiung-Ming has taken a beautiful little cottage that stands alone on a tiny tree-covered island in the midst of one of the picturesque lakes for which Kwangtung is famous. From this isolated position he is able to avoid many audiences that could not be side-stepped without giving offense were he in a more accessible place. He has arranged to keep a secretary in a small boat moored off the little island. The boat is equipped with a telephone, and before a visitor is permitted to land, the General must signify his willingness to receive him. If the caller is welcome, he transfers to a small scow, which is sculled to the island by an aged boatman.

If the visitor is a representative of the press, he has had his trouble for nothing, for General Chiung-Ming refuses to say a word for publication or otherwise. He simply states that he is out of politics for the present, that he is very busy with the movements of his troops, and that he will return to Canton and serve his country as a loyal patriot when the proper time comes.

It is understood, however, that he regards the movements of Dr. Sun Yat Sen in Kiangsi as "bluff", or merely of a strategical nature to prepare his army for an attack in the northwest part of the province. There also is strong belief among those in close touch with the situation in the interior that an understanding exists between General Chiung-Ming and Marshal Wu Pei Fu, the northern border leader, which practically assures the position of both unless unforeseen strength develops among Sun's forces.

FREEDOM OF PRESS EXISTS IN MEXICO

President Obregon Receives Reporters More Freely Than Predecessors

Mexico City, July 11.—Freedom of the press in Mexico is as near a reality now as has been recorded during the past half century, according to competent observers. Contrasted with the censorship days of Huerta and Carranza, editors and correspondents are enjoying almost unprecedented liberty, and President Obregon on several occasions has emphasized that newspapers and other publications are free to go as far as they like.

The newspapers Omega and Las Noticias, the former a weekly and the latter a daily, lead the opposition to the administration and the vindictiveness which they display in almost every issue would not have been tolerated for more than one day during the Carranza regime, for instance. The more substantial newspapers of the capital spare no ink now in telling the reading public wherein they think the Obregon regime is at fault and even rank misquotations of conversations with the chief executive are allowed to pass with only a mild protest.

Foreign correspondents are told that there is no cable or mail censorship and if ther is, it is so adroitly done that it has not yet been detected.

President Obregon in one respect offers sharp contrast to his predecessor, President Carranza. The present executive is much more approachable and has none of the aloofness of the former First Chief. He receives newspapermen regularly every fortnight and local reporters, many of whom have been with him on campaign, feel no hesitation in calling Chapultepec Castle by telephone to converse with the president. The newspaper interviews are extremely informal affairs, the president sitting at a little table in the centre of a circle of reporters and correspondents. Refreshments are served and quite frequently the president relaxes and tells lively stories.

WINTER FARM SCHOOL IS COUNTY PROPOSAL

Transportation For Children to High Schools Advocated

Toronto, July 7.—Before concluding their conference on secondary education problems the representatives of the various country councils of the province, who have been meeting in the Normal School here to-day, unanimously passed a resolution, to be forwarded to the Minister of Education, expressing the opinion that the time had arrived when steps should be taken to bring secondary educational facilities within reach of all the youth of Ontario, and when conditions warranted it, special Government assistance should be given for transportation of pupils and for the erection of buildings. The resolution was moved by G. G. NcNab, Renfrew county, and seconded by J. Baxter, Prince Edward county.

It was stated during the discussion that the Adolescent Act, which compelled children to go to school until they were 16 years of age, had not met with much favor in the country. In urging aid in transporting pupils to school, the conference emphasized the fact that parents of children of the age of 13 or 14, who were ready for high school could neither afford nor would desire them at that age to board in a town in order to attend high school.

Choose Your Preserving Utensils Carefully

MANY women enjoy great success with their preserving year after year for the simple reason that they use the best enameled ware that money can buy. They use either Diamond Ware or Pearl Ware. The porcelain-like surface of either of these wares keeps as clean as a glass jar. Acidy fruit juices cannot affect their non-metallic surface. Ensure success in your preserving by using

SMP Diamond or Pearl WARE

"A Face of Porcelain and a Heart of Steel"

The hardest cooking or preserving leaves it as easy to clean as china. It cannot absorb grease or odors. And it will mean much lower cooking fuel bills, because it cooks food far faster than all-metal utensils.

Do you know that the Diamond Ware or Pearl Ware pot or pan that cost $1.50 last year can now be bought for 90 cents? Ask your regular hardware merchant.

Diamond Ware is sky blue and white outside, all white inside, with three coats of enamel fused on shapes of steel. Pearl Ware is pearly grey inside and out and has two coats of special SMP enamel fused on steel shapes. Either will suit you admirably.

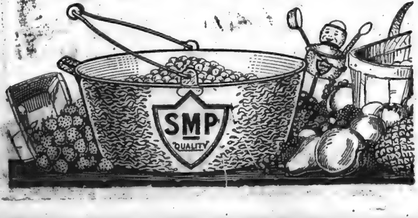
Reduced Prices on Preserving Sets

HARDWARE merchants who sell SMP Wares have put a special price this year on Diamond Ware and Pearl Ware preserving sets — comprising preserving kettles, sauce pans, cullenders, measures, fruit jar fillers, flat skimmers, ladles, spoons, pitchers and so on.

Clip this advertisement from the paper. Take it to your regular hardware man's store and he will give you a very moderate price on a preserving set—much cheaper than buying the utensils at the regular price piece by piece. It's a great saving. And make sure the SMP trademark is on every utensil.



JURY DECLARES THAT BARRIE SHOT J. WESLEY MOULT

opinion to offer as to why Wesley Moult lost his life. The relationship between Maurice and Wes. always was the same, while I was there."

"Mr. Mult's conducts towards me was always that of a perfect gentleman. I did not hear any rifle shoots that day, and had no idea that anything had happened to Mr. Moult until when Mrs. Moult went to the neighbors. I thought possibly then that Maurice possibly hurt Mr. Moult or there might have been an accident. Mrs. Moult said this when she came back from Coffey's, and also opined that possibly Maurice had shot Mr. Moult accidentally. The revolver was found underneath the mattress on Maurice's bed on June 28th, I objected to the revolver being under the pillow, as I did not like moving it when making the bed. I told Maurice so also.

Walter Salisbury

The Insurance agent who drove to the Moult home the day of the 22th of June was the next witness, and said:-

"I am a life Insurance agent for a few months. I knew Wes. Moult for 10 or 12 years. I arrived there shortly after 5 p.m. Mrs. Moult was in the garden, and I asked her where Wes. was. I noticed someone in the stable door, and on inquiring found out from Mrs. Moult that he was Maurice Barry the hired man. I asked him questions and talked Insurance to him. He said that Wes. would not be up for supper as he had gone to Goodfellow's. He said he would not be back early as he usually made a visit when he went to Goodfellows. I then went to the house and explained the plan of my insurance contract to Mrs. Moult. This occupied about 10 minutes. Then I went out and got into the car, and drove away.

Barry was leaning against the door jam, and was not working. He followed me to the house later, and sat in a chair in the corner of the room. He answered all questions reasonably and promptly.

> "We the jurors subpoened to enquire into the death of George Wesley Moult, find that he came to his death on the afternoon of June 29th, 1922, non his premises, at lot 3, Concession 7; in the Township of Tyendinaga, County of Hastings; and we find that his death was caused by a bullet wound of the head, the buleet traversing the brain; and coming from a gun or revolver in the hands of Maurice Barrie."

The above verdict was returned by the Coroner's jury in the inquest into the death of George Wesley Moult, at the conclusion of the inquest on Monday afternoon about 5.50 p.m.

The jury were out about ten minutes, and were unanimous in their decision in one of the strangest and most sensational inquests ever held in Belleville.

Coroner Addresses Jury

Dr. W. W. Boyce, Coroner, in addressing the jury, warned the jurymen not to be prejudiced against accused on account of their intimacies with deceased, or his family, nor as a result of anything they might have heard from friends or the neighbors.

"I viewed the body, and would also say that deceased had been dead at least 24 hours and probably more (the symptons of time varying with the method of death, and the physical condition of the deceased prior to 3 p.m. on the afternoon of June 30th."

"It is difficult to say positively where this death occurred, but I believe that the evidence has made it quite clear, that deceased came to his death on his own premises."

"I would also preclude any such idea that may exist, as to the fatal wound having been self inflicted, as I believe there has been no evidence to show any foundation to this idea."

"Barrie's movements were very erratic on this day, he apparently having no particular object in looking after the affairs of the place, as any ordinary hired man should have had."

Continuing, Coroner Boyce pointed out that:

During the forenoon of the 29th day of June, Barrie had not worked at anything, except the taking of the whey from the drive shed to the barn. A rather unusual thing for him as a hired man. He was also seen carrying a gun that day, in the morning. Then when Mrs. Moult went out for the grain for the chickens, after dinner Barrie volunteered the fact that Moult had gone to the fields. He came to the house later yet took no dinner returning later only to eat some pudding.

"I believe," said the Coroner, "that the doctors who held the autopsy, were correct when they said that death had occurred 24 hours before 3 p.m. of June 30th, when the post mortem examination was made."

"I can't see how you cannot find, that the bullet, that traversed the brain of deceased, came from a revolver or a rifle in the hands of Maurice Barrie."

The jury then retired and after an absence of 10 minutes returned their verdict."

The next witness was Frank Cameron who was at the time of the occurrence, employed with Mr. Wesley Parkins, who lives 3½ miles west of the Moult farm. "I knew Barrie slightly since about April 1st." said witness. "I was with him in Belleville on June 3rd." "I saw him about 1 or 1.30 p.m. on June 29th. He asked me if I would go down to Belleville that night in a car. I asked him if Wes would let him have the car, and he did not answer. He had the car, and appeared just the same as he always did. He drove down to the field where I was working. He told me that Wes and he had been ploughing during that morning, but that he had come to the house about 10.30 a.m. Wes had come home at noon he said, but he (Barrie) had not gone in to dinner. When Wes came out, and told him to go in to dinner after he had had his dinner, he did so, and Wes went back to the fields, so he stated."

"He wanted me to go for a ride with him in the car. I did go, and we went over to Phillips, and had a talk to the 2nd oldest girl. Maurice asked her if Alberta had been home, or if they had received any word from her.

She said, "No," and he said, "Yes you did now." She said "no" again and during the argument, he called her a liar.

Later, however, he asked her to go for a ride. She would not go and then he said he'd have to get back and go to work.

"I'd like to see you work," was the girls reply to this statement. When we arrived back to Parks it was 2.30 p.m.

I never saw him afterwards till he was arrested, and in the car on the morning of the 30th of June.

Daniel Coffey

Next witness stated that he was a farmer living at lot 4, concession 7 Tyendinaga and next neighbor to the Moults. "I was told that Mr. Moult was missing since noon, about 10 p.m. on June 29th; by Mrs. Moult, at the door of my house. Barrie had not been at my place that day that I know of. I was at home all morning, but away from 1 p.m. until 5 p.m. and home the rest of the day. I got my car out, after I phoned Mrs. Moult's father and mother, and I drove down to Moult's. We drove to Hamilton's and found out from them that Wes. had not been there. We then called at Goodfellow's, and then we got everybody along the concession to commence the search. When we got back to Moult's, the Moult car was across the lane into the wire fence. This would be about 12 o'clock midnight or later. Barrie was also missing since Mrs. Moult had sent him up to Wilsons, and we were steering clear of Barrie as he might be armed, as I did not like the appearance of things especially the Moult car in this position. Someone suggested a search about the premises with lanterns, and we did so. I did not follow into the barn as I thought it would be wise to keep away from the light. I soon heard someone shout, "Here he is boys" inside of 10 minutes. He was lying in the bin, rolled up in canvas. I know of no one having a grievance against Moult.

Chas. Hamilton

Chas. Hamilton farmer, lot 3 concession 8th of Tyendinaga testified that he had seen Barrie, but not on the 29th day of June. Wesley Moult was not there all day either. I was working close to the house. I heard Mr. Coffey tell dad that it had been said that Moult had been at our place that day. This was about midnight that day, that I heard this.

Murney Wilson

Murney Wilson, brother of Mrs. Lilly Mae Moult sworn saith:-

"I know Barrie to see him, but do not know how Wes. and Barrie got along. Wes. was rather close in some ways, but I do not know that he had any enemies. Wes told me Maurice Barrie was a willing worker, but did not know much about farming. One day when I was down to Wes's place, Wes did not seem to be pleased with things, from his actions, but not by his words. Maurice was there too. They were grinding a set of mower knives that day.

Witness stated that he had found splatters of blood on the barn door sill, and floor, near the door. The body was found shortly after 1 a.m. the morning of June 30th.

My revolver is missing yet. It is a 22 and the spring that turned the cylinder was broken. I do not know how long it has been missing.

Edward Wilson

Edward Wilson father of Mrs. Moult, next witness, testified that Wesley and herself were quite intimate, and that he had approved of the marriage of Moult to his daughter."

"I never saw anything wrong at the Moult home. I heard of this event about 11.30 p.m. that night. Our phone rang incessantly that night, and my wife answered, it telling her Wes. was missing. Maurice was not at our place on June 29th, but had been there on former occasions to get books to read. I always watch for fences being down on the Moult farm as well as my own farm, and that fence was not down on the 29th day of June. On the night of the 29th of June, the cattle were in the fields and the fence down. I believe the offence was committed at the south barn door, inside the door, and I believe the door was closed at the time. I do not know any one who had a grudge against Wes. Maurice Barrie was very fond of firearms, and nearly always had a gun with him. I notified the police officers before the body was found.

Note—It was stated by Barrie that Wes. had gone back to fix this fence mentioned in Mr. Wilson's evidence. In the box, however, Mr. Wilson swore that he inspected it on June 29th, as he does every day on his various trips down the lane for the cows, and the fence was perfectly all right. On the 30th of June (the next day), however, strangely enough, the fence was down, and the cows were in the uncut hay field, pasturing.

Henry Elford

Henry Elford who resides on North Front Street, testified that he had heard of the affair on the following morning, and I went out," he said. I went after the cows, that evening, and they were in the hay field. The fence was down, and appeared as if it had been laid down by some person. Only one panel of the fence was down. It is a zig-zag rail fence, and was down quite flat.

Henry Larkin

Henry Larkin farmer, living at lot 1 concession 7 Tyendinaga Township, testified that he had known deceased for many years, and was on the best of terms with him. I never heard anything against Maurice Barrie.

Witness told of having been asked to come to the Moult farm that night about midnight, and of seeing the car across the lane. We thought that Barrie had done something when we saw this car. Murney Wilson got a rifle, and we began our search, and finally found the deceased rolled up in the canvas. We then went for Dr. Morgan. I met Barrie on June 29th about 10 a.m. on my way to work and he was carrying a gun. I think it was a 22 rifle. He was walking on the road, and towards the Moult place. The body was found about 1.15 on the morning of the 30th.

Charles Sargent

Charles Sargent farmer, 6th concession Tyendinaga, sworn saith:

"I have known Wesley Moult for some time, and he was a first class neighbor. I never heard any evil suggestions directed against the deceased."

Witness who was present when the deceased was found, told of the gruesome discovery similar to the preceeding witness.

"It was Mr. Barber and myself who found him first. He was laid on a binder canvas, which folded over him. He was lying on his face, with one hand under his body. I helped to move the body, and it seemed to be quite stiff. There was no evidence of struggle whatever, as the barn floor was covered with old straw, which was undisturbed. There was no blood right there, but a good deal on the barn door. I don't think one person could carry the body from where the blood stains are on the barn door, to the place where it was found. Barrie borrowed a 22 rifle from me this Spring and I saw it last, hanging on a beam in the barn, near where the body was found. It was a 22 Winchester, with a 7 shot magazine, but the magazine was not working when I loaned it to him."

Fred Barber

Fred Barber farmer of 7th concession Tyendinaga told of knowing Barrie, and seeing him down at the Long Swamp bridge, where he, (Barber) was fishing. He was driving the car while standing on the right fender, and looking at the engine, the hood being up. This was about 4.30 p.m. I got in with him and he wanted me to go to Belleville that night. I rode up with him. He said he would soon have to get home and milk the cows as it was 4.40 according to his wrist watch. I never saw the accused with firearms. He wanted me to drive the car while he would ride on the fender and watch the engine, which he said, was not working well. I cannot drive a car, and told him so. He was driving the car by leaning over from where he stood on the right fender to the wheel. It is a left drive car. He had the hood up, and was looking into the engine as he drove along. I rode to my home with him, and he drove so fast that the cushion of the rear seat jumped up and fell down in the back of the car.

IRELAND'S BLOOD-LETTING

The Irish situation seems to be a good deal better for the blood-letting that took place in Dublin last week. The Free State is in a much stronger position by the rout of the rebels, and the fact that the citizens of Dublin generally showed no sympathy with the Republicans goes to prove that de Valera and his crew are not wanted.

There will no doubt be considerable trouble for some time to come in other parts of Ireland, and it is to meet this possibility that the Free State Government has called the nation to arms in the interests of law and order. Ireland has surely had her fill of strife and chaos, and the signs indicate that her people realize that their best friends are not the rebels of their own household. Ireland can only be happy and prosperous by making herself

"A land of settled government,
Where freedom broadens slowly down;
From peace lent to precedent."

THE PASSING OF A GREAT LAWYER

The death of W. H. Biggar, K.C., removes one more connecting link with a generation that produced many outstanding men. Belleville has sent out a great many men who have risen to the topmost places in the social, business, and professional life of Canada, and even in the United States.

The late Mr. Biggar's progress was rapid and brilliant from the outset. He carried off first-class honors at Upper Canada College and excelled in athletics. Entering upon a legal career in his home town, he soon attained distinction. He held the position of Mayor of Belleville when the city was in its early prime. Immediately following his mayorship he was elected member of the Ontario Legislature, and was offered the speakership of that body.

He was not, however, destined to politics, which he never took to seriously. His sphere of service was that of Law, and in one department of that profession he attained to a supreme place. In 1903 he was appointed Assistant General Solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway, and in 1910 was made General Counsel of the system. In his capacity as legal advisor the late Mr. Biggar piloted the company through many difficult waters.

General regret will be felt at the passing of so valuable a citizen, and the people of his native city will extend to the widow and family sincere sympathy in their sudden bereavement.

THE MODERN HIGHWAYMAN

Hold-ups are so common and so successful in these days that one wonders whether there is a school somewhere for the training of highwaymen. In the old days of Claud Duval, "the Dashing Highwayman", these footpads frequented only the lonely parts of the country and generally carried out their work in a leisurely fashion and sometimes with grace and gallantry.

In these advanced times the highwayman does not shun the haunts of his fellow men, rather does he seek the crowded places and mingle gregariously with the populace. He aspires to be one of the multitude, indistinguishable from ordinary mortals. One moment he will be moving innocently among the throng on the sidewalk, and the next he will have darted out into the roadway and, with a sudden command of "hands up!" he will have relieved a motor car of its freight of cash, and in another twinkling he will be off in a waiting car, or will have got himself lost among the spectators.

The police are to be sympathized with in their helpless position in regard to the prevention of such clever robberies and the tracing of the outlaws. At the same time there must be in large cities schools of crime, where outlawry is taught as a fine art. It should not be very difficult to keep an eye on suspicious quarters and upon suspicious individuals. The repeated success of these daylight depredations is bound to have an encouraging effect upon the criminally disposed, and some special effort should be made to deal drastically with the evil.

PASSING COMMENT

Kingston claims that it is the best centre for the cheese market of Eastern Ontario—There is only one centre, and that is Belleville.

The one hundred little Englishmen who arrived in Belleville on Saturday have entered upon a new world—they are heirs to a vast estate. Good luck to you, boys!

Premier King is to take a trip to Washington for a discussion on reciprocity and the St. Lawrence waterway scheme. If these two projects are tied-up together, we should be happy with neither.

Viscount Chaplin is reported to be interesting himself in the cattle embargo question. We hasten to explain that this Chaplin is not the nimble "Charlie" of that surname. He is not a Viscount yet—not yet.

HERE AND THERE

ELUSIVE DEFINITIONS

At a Washington dinner party my attention was forcibly directed to the difficulty of defining words in common use at short notice without the aid of a dictionary. One of the party, which consisted of journalists, offered to make a small bet with each of the other persons present that he could not within three minutes and without reference to a dictionary write down a definition of the word "time." Most of us took the bet and we all lost it. Try the experiment without reflection.—Lord Riddell.

SOME ANTIDOTES.

These and the like, are of the essence of La Rochefoucauld's philosophy. On the other hand, he is apt to take too willing disciples by surprise with such thunderbolts as these:

Self-love is the greatest flatterer in the world.

It is not in the power of any of the most crafty dissimulation to conceal love long where it really is, nor to counterfeit it where it is not.

It is much less for a man's honour to distrust his friends than to be deceived by them.

Men are never to be comforted for the treachery of their friends, or the over-reaching of their enemies; and yet they are often very highly satisfied to be both cheated and betrayed by themselves.

Self-love is often cheated by its own self; for when it considers its own interests, it so wholly overlooks the interest of others as thereby to lose all the advantage, that might be made by the exchange of kindnesses between man and man.

'ROCHEFOUCAULD'S PHILOSOPHY.

People who hate La Rochefoucauld's outlook on life—and much of it is hateful—are apt to denounce his most characteristic maximes as untrue. But can the merit of a maxime be brought to the test of truth at all? It is rather an arrow shot into the hurly-burly of all doubt and all dispute. Its context has to be supplied by the reader, who must draw it from his own experience. Here are some of La Rochefoucauld's "moral reflections":—

Self-love is more ingenious than the most ingenious man in the world.

Nobody is so weak but he is strong enough to bear the misfortunes he does not feel.

It is with true love as with ghosts and apparitions, a thing that everybody talks of, and scarce anybody hath seen.

The most disinterested love is, after all, but a kind of bargain, in which the dear love of our own selves always proposes to be the gainer some way or another.

We are easily comforted for the disgraces of our friends when they give us an occasion of expressing our tenderness for them.

HYMN OF PAN

By Percy Bysshe Shelley.

We from the forests and highlands
We come, we come;
From the river-girt islands,
Where loud waves are dumb,
Listening to my sweet pipings.
The wind in the reeds and the rushes,
The bees on the bells of thyme,
The birds on the myrtle bushes,
The cicale above in the lime,
And the lizards below in the grass,
Were as silent as ever old Tmolus was,
Listening to my sweet pipings.

Liquid Peneus was flowing
And all dark Tempe lay
In Pelion's shadow, outgrowing
The light of the dying day,
Speeded by my sweet pipings.
The Sileni and Sylvans and Fauns
And the Nymphs of the woods and waves,
To the edge of the moist river-lawns,
And the brink of the dewy caves,
And all that did then attend and follow,
Were silent with love, as you now, Apollo,
With envy of my sweet pipings.

I sang of the dancing stars,
I sang of the dædal earth,
And of heaven, and the giant wars,
And love, and death and birth.
And then I changed my pipings—
Singing how down the vale of Mænalus
I pursued a maiden, and clasped a reed:
Gods and men, we were all deluded thus;
It breaks in our bosom, and then we bleed.
All wept—as I think both ye now would,
If envy or age had not frozen your blood—
At the sorrow of my sweet pipings.

"HE WHO FIGHTS AND RUNS AWAY"

Toronto Telegram.

Not very heroic is Premier Drury's picnic championship of provincial rights. He confessed to the Farmers of Lanark that he introduced a bill to protect Ontario's northwestern waters from Federal interference, but withdrew it for fear that it would be defeated. The U.F.O. leader could not have put it into plainer words, that he thought a whole lot less of Provincial Rights than he did of Hon. E. C. Drury.

NOT SPORTSMANLIKE.

Calgary Albertan.

The English investor who complains bitterly, persistently and without reason because Canada or some Province or city deals strictly but justly with some grasping corporation in which he is interested is not acting in the traditional English manner, as we have been taught in the past. It isn't sportsmanlike.

UNIVERSITY STANDARDS

Brantford Expositor.

There have recently been too many going on to the universities who have not been sufficiently equipped. They would be better students if they were compelled to take the work now taken during the first year at the university at the high schools. The talk of raising the standard so as to shut out all but the best students would be rank injustice. The average student has as much right to higher education as the brilliant student.

JAZZ IN VIENNA

By Fred. S. Dent

In saying that the jazz has really hit Vienna, I mean what I say when I use the word "really." Vienna has heard of the jazz band and has made several good attempts at imitating it. Vienna can work marvels in the way of music. During the last carnival season a number of orchestras produced the wierd effects of the jazz band with very beautiful results, but it remained nevertheless a Viennese production.

At the beginning of May the Southern Syncopated Orchestra blew into this burg on the Danube and took up its place of business in the Prater pleasure park. The Prater (which is a German word used to name the meadows along the Danube to the northeast of the city), is a paper bound edition of Scarboro Beach or Hanlan's Point, complete with ferris wheel, kino, scenic railway, roller coaster, and spielers. The pleasure park is an enclosed part of this place where one plays for the mere privilege of getting in. Inside one finds a theatre, several cafe houses, a concert bar and a bandstand as well as a branch of the state auctioneer's department. On this stand the concerts take place.

They React to Music.

The Viennese are renowned in the world as a gay, light-hearted, light headed race, who react very actively to music and foreign innovations. They believe quite firmly and with right, that no one in the world can produce such good music as they can, but even the most highbrow of their musical students feels a certain spiritual elevation when he hears a piece of American ragtime. Then to have it played by real negroes, a race that one scarcely sees in Central Europe, added interest.

It is scarcely necessary to describe the program as it is so well-known to Canadian readers. It consisted of old southern songs sung in quartet and double quintet with a few sentimental ballads thrown in, and the rest was made up of orchestral numbers. A great impression was made by the parody of Peer Gynt and Tannhauser. The antics of the drummer caused great amusement.

What was the general effect upon the public? Just what one might expect in Vienna. I have already seen the Viennese in their visits to the Heurigen concerts and knew what to expect. I do not think, however, that the orchestra was prepared for the effects of their performance. Whether it was pure chance or if it is to be put down as the result of the music I cannot say, but I saw the first scuffle in a public concert. The Viennese are extremely good-natured people. So unaccustomed are they to scrapping that they do not think of using their fists, but go at once into a clinch. That happened at the concert. As I said before, I leave the question open as to whether it was caused by the music.

Young Man Dances.

The next event was most certainly caused by the strange harmonies and rhythms. In the midst of a ragtime number by the orchestra, a young man suddenly climbed over the side of the platform and commenced to dance. He danced his way across the platform and the orchestra at once entered into the spirit of the interruption and played with more enthusiasm than ever. In the course of two minutes he brought himself to the other side and jumped down, but, alas for the coldness of this world towards its rising artists, and unsympathetic usher and a Viennese policeman were waiting for him there and he was led away to the small police station behind the cafe house, to join the two who had previously scuffled concerning the chair.

The next one who felt inspired to rise up was a gentleman attired in an evening dress who was sitting on the terrace of the cafe house. He felt the spirit of the Terpsichore stirring within him and interpreted the ragtime of the orchestra with a Salome. His example proved contagious and I saw a friend of mine, a Hungarian colonel, rise from his pew and mount the chair. His dance called for much brandishing of his walking stick, and finally for the waving of his straw hat on the end of the stick. This double impromptu number interested the crowd immensely and they immediately gathered around and shut off my view. I saw the hat describe a wide parabola though the air and heard the splintering of a chair, so I assumed that my friend had returned with a bump to mother earth. As I heard everybody laugh loud and long, I concluded that mother earth had not been damaged by his sudden return.

This orchestra is to remain for another six weeks in Vienna and is becoming more popular each day. During the course of the evening I saw a number of persons who are prominent in the artistic life of Vienna and it is quite possible that some of them will seize upon the motives of these negro songs and that soon the world shall receive a musical reproduction of the germinating culture of the negro race. Among others who were there was a gentleman who is a great authority on the cultural side of economics and he pumped me with questions as to the history of the negro race in America. I shall leave him in peace for a couple of months and then shall go around to him to see what new theories he has to propound on the question of race culture.—Toronto Star.

DOROTHY DALTON IN DRAMATIC AND THRILLING STORY AT GRIFFIN'S

Dorothy Dalton achieves a remarkably successful return to the West in "The Crimson Challenge," her latest photoplay which was screened at Griffin's last night to an appreciative audience.

A Western picture in every sense of the word, it is packed with thrills opportunities, since it calls for her to portray the courageous, fearless type of woman who leads the settlers of an oppressed valley against a man who preys upon the people, rustles their cattle perpetrates all kinds of outrages. And at the conclusion she beats him in a two-gun battle, rids the valley of its oppressors and incidentally avenges the murder of her father at the villian's hands.

Jack Mower, who established quite a following with his work in Cecil B. DeMille's "Saturday Night," is leading man. Frank Campeau one of the screen's most popular delineators of "bad men" roles, is one of the three "heavies," the other two being Clarence Burton and George Fields. Marie Prevost contributes a charming characterization as "The Dangerous Little Demon," the second feature offering on the same program. To be sure she is disturbing at times, but that is what one must expect from a beautiful girl in dangerous situations.

Robert Ellis portrays a blase but 24-karat suitor, Jack Perrin, Ed. Martindel, and Lydia Knott give a commendable support.

Women Are Good Shots.

A number of good shots have been developed among the women employes of the post office department since they have been practicing with pistols at various ranges in the large cities. The practice is to familiarise the registry clerks with arms, so that in an emergency they can protect themselves and the valuable property in their care. Not satisfied with the government schedule of target work, some of them are spending their own time on other shooting ranges, with a view to entering amateur competitions.

THE PRAYER OF BUSY HANDS.

By B. Y. Williams.

Dear God, thou know'st how many tasks await my hands today;
If all are done at set of sun, no time is left to pray.
Thou know'st how many duties press, how urgent is each need;
I may not dare a moment spare to fashion me a creed.

Thou know'st the hungry must be fed, the naked clothed must be;
My scant store wanes; no gift remains of sacrifice for Thee;
So if, when life is done, I come with no gift in my hand,
No prayer nor creed—just this I'll plead: Thou, God, dost understand.

A HOME OF HER OWN.

By Gertrude Russell Lewis.

The district school teacher, sweet and intelligent, had married the farmer's son. Her hours were lengthened from six to sixteen and her modest stipend stopped. But she was congratulated: "For now you have a home of your own," they said. She smiled happily. "Then my Delft room will come true," she responded. They were well to do. The land came by inheritance; the farming equipment was of the best. But in the house she found that the old way prevailed, and while her wishes were not denied, they were simply unfulfilled; they were unimportant. And first the tastes were dropped, and then the desires and, too often, the needs repressed.

The work grew heavier; no labor saving device was wanting for the men, but their time meant money hers meant only love. And the agricultural journals that phrased the bucolic mind and advertised quite eighty columns of most elaborate and expensive machinery for the ten hour men without the house, gave her but a scanty woman's page, not of expenditures for her comfort, but of makeshifts for her economies. Even the new cream separator meant not an advantage to her, but the withdrawal of the butter money to her husband's purse. . .

And the parlor carpet was yet to buy. Five years had toiled away and the blue and white parlor, painted and papered by her own hands, with painful care, draped, but as yet rag rugged, waited.

Rugs elsewhere, yes, but not in one's parlor on a prosperous farm, if only for the neighbors' pride . he was reduced to argument: "The Dorcas Band meet here next time."

Then the man came in. "I am going to town; give me your money and I will get the carpet." They were not even to choose it together. She returned with the original pieces here and there a silver dollar, hardly a paper bill in the roll, and handed them to him. "Remember the color, Henry," wistfully, and if you cannot get blue, do not get a red one, even if we wait until fall. My Delft plate hangs there you know."

He came in late but jubilant. "I got a bargain Smythe could not sell. The color isn't good, he says, but it will wear forever. I saved five dollars on it toward the binder."

The carpet which she had to sew was red and green. The Dorcas Band met with them in their turn. Her successor, the young school teacher, was present with a shy new look of interest in domestic themes. "It must be sweet to have a home of your own," she said.

MOLDED SALAD.

BY BERTHA SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.

This dish may be used as a main dish for luncheon or supper. It is pretty, tastes good, and offers an excellent way to use cold meat, fish or vegetables.

2 teaspoons mustard.
2 teaspoons salt.
2 tablespoons sugar.
1 tablespoon flour.
1 egg.
1 cup thin cream (sweet or sour).
½ cup vinegar.
2 cups tuna fish.
2 pimentos (canned red peppers).
1 tablespoon gelatine
½ cup cold water.

In top of double boiler or in a sauce pan mix the mustard, salt, sugar and flour until free from lumps. Add the egg, unbeaten, and mix thoroughly with the dry materials.

Add milk and vinegar and cook over hot water until thick as a soft custard. Add the gelatine, which has soaked one-half hour, in the cold water.

Pour over the fish and pimentos turn into a mold which has been dipped in cold water. Chill. When firm remove from mold and serve on lettuce leaves which have been sprinkled with salt, oil and vinegar .

No dressing is really necessary to serve with this, but if one has sour cream it makes an excellent accompaniment. Beat cream until stiff add vinegar, salt and cayenne to taste.

One chopped cucumber, or two tablespoons grated fresh horse-radish is an improvement.

Almost any kind of boiled or baked fish, any combination of meat and vegetables may be used for the molded salad. Good combinations are:

Chicken and celery; chicken and ham; ham and finely shirred cabbage; lamb and peas; lamb with peas and carrots; fish an cucumber; potatoes, peas or beans; carrots, celery and cabbage.

HOW TWO WOMEN ESCAPED OPERATIONS

Doctor Advised Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Happy Results in Both Cases

St. Joseph, Missouri.—"Both of my sides swelled and hurt me so that I could not move or do any of my work. There was heavy pressure and pains through my lower organs and the doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for these troubles. He said I had this one chance, and if the Vegetable Compound did not help me nothing but an operation would. After taking several bottles, I felt it was helping me and now I am able to do my own work. If my testimonial will help others I shall be glad for them to read it and hope your Vegetable Compound will do them as much good as it did me." Mrs. Wm. Lockman, 513 N. 4th St., St. Joseph, Mo.

White Plains, N.Y.—"I had such a pain that I could hardly walk and the doctor said that I needed an operation. I was sick for a year before I started taking your medicine and I could not work. I saw your advertisement in a little book and that is how I came to take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines. I have been taking the Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and the capsules and prescription recommended. I am doing all my work and have gained twenty pounds. I am taking the medicines still, but I feel fine. You have my permission to use this letter for the good of others." Mrs. Mary Mark, 37 Hamilton Ave., White Plains, N.Y.

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the commoner ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors, or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

WRETCHED CONDITION OF BABIES IN RUSSIA

Petrograd, July 11.—The sunshine of summer makes evident Russia's lack of baby carriages. There are no trim nurses wheeling babies along the park paths ,and only rarely is a perambulator seen at all.

Thousands of babies out for an airing, are carried in their mothers' arms. Occasionally one sees semi Oriental women, from the steppes and Turkestan with their infants strapped across their backs, like American Indian papooses.

Russian babies of the peasant type die by thousands in the hot summer and their tiny bodies know few or none of the cooling comforts of screened and shady porches. The use of ice for keeping milk, is practically unknown.

But thousands of the hardy little infants go wherever their mothers go; seem to sleep contentedly on their mothers' breasts in crowded box cars or under dripping eaves on rainy days when the parents lie like huddled bundles of rags in the shelter of buildings.

BOTH WANT TO RULE ROADS

Toronto, July 9.—Perhaps I am too considered, too grasping," was General Victor Williams' comment yesterday when asked concerning a rumored difference of opinion between himself and Hon. F. C. Biggs relative to the policing of provincial highways.

The Commissioner of Police is of the opinion that the policing of provincial roads should be under the control of his department. Hon. Mr Biggs clings to the contention that the Highways Department, that is responsible for the surface of the road, its creation and upkeep, should continue to have, as now, full control of the police work, so that speeding etc., may be regulated by the same department.

"My contention," said Gen. Williams, "is that the provincial police can do three things. They can look after the roads, the O.T.A., and their general criminal work, all at once."

FASHION FANCIES

A WEALTH OF COLOR IN THIS SEASON'S CLOTHES

All one needs to rise above the mediocre in clothes this season is a little bit of native genius and a little bit of time to think about the matter. The rest is easy, for Fashion is utilizing everything from plain unbleached cotton to the sheerest and most expensive imported textiles, and there's not a color that isn't fashionable, although, of course, there are some that claim to be more fashionable than others. It was predicted that white would be worn by very discriminating women this summer, and this forecast was fully substantiated at the Woodbine races in May when Toronto's elite turned out to see the contest for the King's Plate and on succeeding days. Some of the most elegantly dressed women present wore white costumes. So white it is, but not exclusively. All the bright yellows, greens, blues, mauves and reds of which we talked and wrote in early spring have materialized and seen en masse against the green o' the turf, resembled nothing so much as a garden of gorgeous flowers.

But by the time you read this your summer wardrobe will have been almost if not quite completed, and perhaps packed in the steamer trunk or the nice shiny black suit case, with a tray for your blouses and pockets in the lid for your handkies, gloves and other small articles, while a hat box awaits an assortment of hats such as no wardrobe ever before contained, for this summer's hats have a way of their own, and without a hat box, we fear ruin awaits them in transit. Still a few suggestions may be acceptable.

The porch dress has been relegated a very important role—that of looking cool bright and fresh, and it may be made of gingham, chintz, cotton trimmed with chintz or gingham, of organdie ,dotted Swiss—in fact anything that your taste suggests, but it must be made up smartly and trimmed prettily, to distinguish it from the more homely, though very necessary house dress. If the objective is a summer cottage or camp, a festive looking chintz apron will not come amiss, and will be found not only attractive but useful. For garments such as these, Fashion is very prodigal of color and splashes it around everywhere this season.—Good Housekeeping for July.

DELORME REMAINS A PRIEST FOREVER

Montreal, July 10.—Montreal La Semaine Relegieuse, the official organ of the Catholic church in Montreal, has an article in its latest issue on the Delorme case . After reciting the events that led up to the trial and having remarked "a priest accused of murder, and of the murder of his half-brother, that is something not often seen. The interest taken throughout the country has been extraordinary." The article goes on to say:

"It is a very sad affair. Through respect for our courts and justice we have not said much while the proceedings were in course, and since they are only suspended, we do not believe we should speak further today, treating the question on its merits.

"But it appears to us, of use, in considering the circumstances of the melancholy drama, to register in our pages some protest on the subject of the events which have surrounded it."

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

He choked back a counterclaim, which would have been unmannerly, and in his embarrassment did something that he instantly realised was even worse, approaching downright insolence in that it demanded confirmation of her word: he bent forward and glanced at the tag on the bandbox.

It was labelled quite legibly with the name of Miss Eleanor Searle.

He coloured, painfully contrite. "I'm sorry," he stammered. "I—ah—happen to have with me the precise duplicate of this box. I didn't at first realise that it might have a—ah—twin."

The young woman inclined her head distantly.

"I understand," she said, turning away. "Come, steward, if you please."

"I'm very sorry—very," Staff said hastily in intense mortification.

Miss Searle did not reply; she had already resumed her upward progress. Her steward followed, openly grinning.

Since it is not considered good form to kick a steward for knowing an ass when he meets one, Staff could no more than turn away, disguise the unholy emotions that fermented in his heart, and seek his stateroom.

"It had to be me!" he groaned.

Stateroom 432-433 proved to be very much occupied when he found it—chiefly to be sure, by the bandbox, which took up most of the floor space. Round it were grouped in various attitudes of dejection sundry other pieces of travelling-gear and Mr. Iff. The latter was sitting on the edge of the lower berth sitting on tthe edge of the lower berth, his hands in his pockets, his brow puckered with perplexity, his gaze fixed in fascination to the bandbox. On Staff's entrance he looked up.

"Hello!" he said crisply.

"Afternoon," returned Staff with all the morose dignity appropriate to severely wounded self-esteem.

Iff indicated the bandbox with a delicate gesture.

"No wonder," he observed mildly, "you wanted the ship to yourself."

Staff grunted irritably and, picking his way through and over the mound of luggage, deposited himself on the transom opposite the berths.

"A present for the missis, I take it?" pursued Iff.

"You might take it, and welcome, for all of me. . . . . Only it isn't mine, And I am not married."

"Pardon!" murmured Mr. Iff. "But if is isn't yours," he suggested logically, "what the deuce-and-all is it doing here?

"I'm suposed to be taking it home for a friend."

"Ah! I see. . . . A very, very dear friend, of course. . . . ?"

"You'd think so, wouldn't you?" Staff regarded the bandbox with open malevolence. "If I had my way," he said vindictively, "I'd lift it a kick over the side and be rid of it."

"How you do take on, to be sure," Iff commented placidly. "If I may be permitted to voice my inmost thought: you seem uncommon' peeved."

"I am."

"Could I soothe your vexed soul in any way?"

"You might tell me now to get quit of the blasted thing."

"I'll try, if you'll tell me how you got hold of it."

"Look here!" Staff suddenly aroused to a perception of the fact that he was by way of being artfully pumped. "Does this mater interest you very much indeed?"

"No more, apparently, than it annoys you. . . . And it is quite possible that, in the course of time, we might like to shut the door. . . . But, as far as that is, I don't mind admitting I'm a noisy little beast. If you feel it your duty to snub me, my dear fellow, by all means go to it. I don't mind—and I dessay I deserve it."

This proved irresistible; Staff's humor saved his temper. To the twinkle in Iff's faded blue eyes he returned a reluctant smile that ended in open laughter.

"It's just this way," he explained somewhat to his own surprise, under the influence of an unforeseen gush of liking for this good-humoured wisp of a man—"I feel I'm being shamelessly imposed upon. Just as I was leaving my rooms this morning this hat-box was sent to me, anonymously. I assume that some cheeky girl I know has sent it to me to tote home for her. It's a certificated nuisance—but that isn't all. There happens to be a young woman named Searle on board, who has an exact duplicate of this infernal contraption. A few moments ago I saw it, assumed it must be mine, quite naturally claimed it, and was properly called down in the politest, most crushing way imaginable. Hence this headache."

"So!" said Mr. Iff. "So that is why he doesn't love his dear little bandbox! A Miss Earle, I think you said?"

"No—Searle. At least, that was the name on her luggage."

"Oh—Searle, eh?"

"You don't happen to know her, by any ,chance?" Staff demanded, not without a trace of animation.

"Who? Me? Nothing like that," Iff disclaimed hastily.

"I just thought you might," said Staff, disappointed.

For some moments the conversation languished. Then Staff rose and pressed the call-button.

"What's up?" asked Iff.

"Going to get rid of this," said Staff with an air of grim determination.

"Just what I was going to suggest. But don't do anything hasty—anything you'll be sorry for."

"Leave that to me, please."

BALL GAME HERE ON WEDNESDAY

George Patterson and His Bowmanville Nine are the Attraction

The Grand Trunks opened the first schedule in the Central Ontario Amateur Baseball League this season with Bowmanville on Victoria Day at Bowmanville, and they will close their first schedule with the same team here in Belleville to-morrow afternoon. George Patterson and his stalwarts are due here Wednesday afternoon at 3 p.m. It is quite probable that Chambers, formerly with the Lindsay Greybirds, will be their slab artist, and quite likely Ray Mallen will do the hurling for the locals.

Bowmanville are new comers into the league, and this will be their first appearance on the local diamond. They play a good game of ball, and fans will not be disappointed by putting in an appearance at the ball park to-morrow afternoon.

CRANK CASE SHOULD BE CLEAN

Road-Dust and Sand in Motor Will Reduce Efficiency

Manufacturers have long recognized the necessity of frequent crank case cleaning. The importance of renewing the oil in the crank case every 800 or 1,000 miles is emphasized in most of the instruction books issued by motor car manufacturers.

Through the work of motor manufacturing companies and the work of dealers, who have equipped themselves to take care of the job, a number of motorists have been induced to have their crank cases cleaned regularly but there are still far too many motorists who neglect to do so.

Road-dust and work their way into the crank case to mingle with the oil and small metal particles to grind away moving parts and reduce the efficiency of the motor. Then, too, the oil in the crank case will, in time wear out or become diluted by fuel mixtures and thus lose a great deal of its lubricating value. This dilution is, in some cases, very rapid, due to faulty carburator adjustments or mechanical defects.

The use of inferior motor lubricants and poor motor fuels, may aggravate the difficulty, but no lubricating oil can maintain a piston-to-cylinder seal over a piston clearance which has been made excessive through wear. Neither can any lubricating oil withstand the cutting of a "too well" or too rich fuel mixture. The remedy lies in changing the oil frequently, after thoroughly cleaning the crank case.

It is not enough to merely drain the oil out of the crank case and refill with fresh oil. Dust, grit and metallic particles may lodge in the crevices and the congealed oil adheres to the side of the crank-case. The foreign matter thus retained wil seriously interfere with the lubricating qualities of the fresh oil. Before refilling the crank-case, it should, therefore, be thoroughly cleaned.

One of the best ways to clean the crank case is to flush it out with a light grade of oil. There are many objections to the use of coal oil or gasoline for flushing. After cleaning with any one of these fuel oils, it is impossible to drain it entirely, a small portion of the coal oil or gasoline is almost certain to remain at the bottom of the crank case. This will dilute the fresh supply of oil and destroy its lubricating value.

Many dealers have prepared themselves to deliver expert crank case service. Cleaning the crank case is at best, a dirty job and motorists will be usually better satisfied to go to a reliable dealer to have the work done. Motorists should, however, make sure that who ever does the job does it thoroughly and uses the proper flushing agent.

A drive which is being put on simultaneously in many cities and towns throughout the Dominion by retailers handling lubricating oils, and garages who are specially equipped to handle crank case cleaning jobs, and which is to be backed by a rather extensive educational campaign, is significant. Through this drive it is hoped that more motorists can be induced to adopt the practice of frequent crank case cleaning. Beyond doubt, all motorists who do adopt the plan will benefit by securing more satisfaction and very agreeable reductions in operating expenses.

PETERBORO MAY LOSE PROTEST

One Member of Protest Committee Speaks That Way Anyway

Mr. Sandy Lockington of Port Hope a member of the Protest Committee of the Central Ontario Baseball league, comments on the Peterborough—Belleville protested game of last Wednesday.

"The play is a Chinese puzzle to the best authorities in this section. We have been going through rule books and knotty problems on baseball ever since, trying to find a rule which has a bearing on the play, but evidently this is one that was not thought of when the rules were drawn up. We are, however, of the opinion that the run will not count. In a game between two teams of the National League, a play something similar occurred; with runners on second and third bases, the batter hit the ball for two bases but he neglected to touch first base. Both runners crossed the plate and had there been none or one out, both runs would have counted. But with two hands out as was the case in the Peterboro-Belleville game, neither run would have scored as the batter had never arrived (technically) at first base.

In another game, however, with two out and the bases filled, the batsman hit to deep centre field; the three runners crossed the plate and the batter reached third base. He failed, however, to touch second and the umpire declared him out. This made the third out but his umps allowed three runs. No attention was paid to the fact that the runner who tripled failed to touch second base. It was in no way a force play, simply boneheaded baserunning.

MARCHMONT BOYS ENJOY THEMSELVES

One Lad Got Into Difficulties in the Swimming Tank Monday

About seventy boys from the Marchmont Home here, who recently arrived in Canada from the Old Land, were taken down to the Y.M.C.A. here on Monday afternoon for a swim in the tank.

The boys were in charge of Mr. Merry, who is in charge of Marchmont Home, and Mr. Robinson, who accompanied the boys over from England.

About half of the party were in the tank, and the remainder standing about the edge, when suddenly one young lad got into difficulties at the deep end of the tank, and began to go down.

Mr. Chas. Keeber, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., happened along at that moment, and without waiting to remove his clothes, jumped in, and pulled the young lad out.

The boys later had a good time on the gym floor, and thoroughly enjoyed the afternoon's sport.

Postponed games of July 1st, with the exception of the Oshawa-Port Hope game, which was played on Wednesday, have been ordered as follows: Lindsay at Bowmanville, Monday, July 10th, at 5 o'clock; Cobourg at Peterboro. Wednesday, July 12; The Lindsay-Cobourg postponed game of Saturday, June 17, will be played at Cobourg on Saturday, July 15. The second section will start the third week in July.

BOY BREAKS ARM AT PLAYGROUNDS

Lad Falls Backwards off "Ocean Wave," on Saturday Last

While playing with many other children in the East Belleville Playgrounds, on Saturday last, Herbert Burley, a young lad, broke his right arm.

The lad, who attends Queen Victoria school was along with other boys enjoying a ride on the "Ocean Wave" a device somewhat like a Merry-go-round, but whose seats move upwards and downwards while it goes round. Some boys were shoving it around and young Burley attempted to mount one of the seats. As he grabbed for it, it was on its way upward and he missing his hold, fell backwards on his right arm, breaking it in one place.

Two or three children have been injured on this "Ocean Wave" contrivance so the lad stated to the Intelligencer. Evidently it is safe enough if everyone is careful, and the boys have no small amount of fun out of it.

RANEY IS WRONG, MATTER OF MANNERS

Former Law Partner of Attorney-General Would Put Racing Issues up to Ottawa Govt.

Toronto, July 11.—"One thing I don't agree with Mr. Raney in," said Alexander Mills, K. C., yesterday when speaking about race-track activities, "and that is his remark that it would be 'bad manners' to memorialize the Dominion Government for legislation with regard to race-track gambling. I would tell them, and tell them straight, that the sooner King undid the evil that Laurier did in exempting race-tracks the better, even if I am a Grit. It is a positive disgrace to the country for the Dominion Government to keep up that now."

Mr. Mills laid the blame at the door of Sir Allen Aylesworth, who, he said came to the rescue of the moneyed horsemen at the time when it had been arranged to sweep out the gambling evil.

Mr. Mills was of the opinion that nothing could be done by the Attorney-General unless there was a declaration that betting on race-tracks was immoral.

DROWNS IN HARBOR, MARRIED A MONTH

Wife Said to Have Feared Accident at the Picnic

Toronto, July 11.—When the canoe he had rented overturned near the entrance to the harbor at Port Dalhousie early last evening, George Wallace, an employee of the Gunn Packing Company, was attending the joint picnic of the Sunday schools of the Annette Street Baptist and Calvary about a month ago to Miss Laura Carter, of 300 Pacific Avenue, he was not accompanied by her, and it was said by friends of the couple that fear of an accident on the water had prompted her to stay at home.

According to young women who saw the acident, Wallace, who was alone in the canoe, tried to change his seat, and in a moment the craft capsized. No time was lost in an effort to rescue him, tugs and other craft hurring to the scene. Hours of search, however failed to locate the body.

Business Is Business

By FREDERICK HART

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I can't figure what's happening in R. & X.," said Philip Gibney, senior partner of Gibney & Hadman, brokers. "We can't seem to get a majority of stock; some one's holding out on us. Have you had our tracers on the job?"

"I should say I have!" Roger Hadman's voice was weary. "For the past three months Jevons and Harrod have been on the road. They've combed the country, nearly; but they can't account for the three thousand shares we need. That block—"

"But surely there's a record of its original sale!" snapped Gibney.

"Of course! We traced it to a little town in Pennsylvania—a funny old chap with chin-whiskers—farmer—held the whole block. Jevons got wind of it and flew down to get it at any price, but he was too late. Somebody beat him to it by less than three hours. The old duffer didn't know who it was—simply said a man came along and offered him twice what the stock was worth, and he sold for spot cash. Jevons even went so far as to put detectives on the job, but they couldn't get any trace except that the fellow was slim and good-looking, wore a light suit, and bought a ticket for Philadelphia at the local station. The train went right up in air then, and there's absolutely no further trace."

"Well—" Gibney's voice was thoughtful, "we've got to get that stock somehow. I wonder if whoever bought it is holding out for a big price? He must know what we're planning, and what control of R. & X. will mean to us. I suppose he thinks he can get whatever price he asks."

"The worst of it is that he's pretty nearly right, at that," rejoined Hadman. "When our deal comes off it's absolutely necessary to have the control, and we can't have it without those three thousand shares, and this fellow knows it—and that's all there is to it. We pay."

"We do, I suppose—and—yet—"

"And yet—what?"

"It strikes me as being rather queer that this chap, whoever he is, hasn't tried to make a dicker. We are going to pull our stunt at the end of the week, and he must know that we want the stock as soon as we can get it. He has inside information, that's sure. Well, the result would naturally be that he would come around here and point his block of stock at our heads and say 'Stand and deliver!' But he hasn't made a move—and today's Wednesday. I don't understand it."

Gibney was a sadly worried man when he went home that night, and his pretty wife, who was waiting for him with her usual smile, received a scanty greeting. During the evening meal she tried to make conversation, but failed dismally. Once she asked what was worrying him.

"Nothing you'd understand," replied Gibney shortly. Alice opened her mouth as though to reply, but thought better of it and confined her attentions to the salad. The evening passed silently for both.

Next morning, the day before Gibney & Hadman's big coup was slated to come off, Gibney was informed by the girl at the door that a young man wanted to see him. On inquiring his business, he was informed that the visitor would make no statement, merely saying that he wanted to see the head of the firm at once. Gibney told the girl to show him in, and called Hadman from his office.

"Dollars to collar-buttons it's the chap with the R. & X. stock, Jim," he said. "I want you here—we'll meet him together. Maybe the two of us can get reasonable figures out of him. But oh, how he has us."

The man who entered the office seemed hardly more than a boy. He was dressed in a light-colored suit, and wore a derby hat which he did not remove. A white bandage covered most of his right cheek and curved well under the chin.

"Good morning, gentlemen," he said in a voice that betrayed a cold in the head. "I'm sorry to come around looking such a wreck, but the fact is I've met with an accident—automobile—and I'm a little smashed as to the face." A one-sided grin accompanied this information. "The doctor tells me to keep my hat on, too. And now, if you've quite done staring at the bandage and things, we might as well get down to business. I have here—" he tapped his breast-pocket—"a block of three thousand shares of R. & X. stock, which represents the balance of power—the amount needed for control of the road. You want it—I have it. What do you say?"

"You young scoundrel!" roared Hadman. "This is blackmail!"

"Hardly, Mr. Hadman. This is business. You were too slow to get what you wanted—I succeeded by my superior initiative and energy. You must expect to pay for your lack of acumen. I have my price."

"How—how did you find out about this?" sputtered Hadman.

"Ask me no questions, I'll tell you no lies," replied the visitor pleasantly. "We seem to be wasting time. Let us proceed."

Hadman seemed about to burst into a storm of wrath, but Gibney interrupted him.

"This youngster's perfectly right, Jim. We slipped up, and he has us where he wants us. If he feels like putting on the screws, why, I suppose we'll have to stand for it. May I ask your price on this stock?"

The young man was suddenly afflicted with a violent fit of coughing. When he recovered he asked that Jevons, the buyer he had beaten out, be sent for. Neither Hadman nor Gibney could see the necessity for this, but they acceded to his request. Jevons entered.

"Good morning, Mr. Jevons," said the young man. "I'm glad to see you are looking so well. The last time I saw you you were feeling strained a bit, I think."

"I never saw you before!" said Jevons angrily, displeased at the badinage.

"That's quite true, Mr. Jevons; but I saw you. It was at the Biltmore, in the tea-room. You were talking to a lady—a very beautiful lady, Mr. Jevons."

"What on earth—" began Hadman, but a glance from his partner silenced him. Jevons had suddenly dropped his air of bluster, and was as pale as the white wall behind him. He made a move to go, but with a lightning-like movement the young man intercepted him. His air of pleasantry was gone.

"I was at the next table, behind the palm. I heard you when you planned to acquire the stock yourself with your employers' money, and bleed them for it. I heard you make your plans—and you were incautious enough to give the address of the man who held the stock. I should have exposed you then, but I thought it was better to beat you to it. I—" but Jevons waited to hear no more. He fled through the door and the partners heard the outer door of the office slam.

"The most thorough scoundrel I have ever had the pleasure of knowing," said the young man calmly. "And now that we have disposed of that matter, let us take up the other. Mr. Hadman, I would like to ask you to step out for a moment, if you please. I want a word with Mr. Gibney alone."

Hadman left, though with no good grace. When Gibney was alone with the stranger he said: "I don't know how I can thank you for exposing that villain; but I will try. And now, your price—"

"By George!" broke in the stranger. "Look at that! He was pointing out the window. Involuntarily Gibney turned to look, and when he returned his gaze to the room the young man stood before him—transformed. Gone was the swathing bandage; gone the derby hat, and with its going a cascade of golden hair fell rippling to the young man's waist, and Gibney looked into the face of—

"Alice!" he cried. "What—how—why—"

"Oh, Phil, darling, I wanted to tell you at first, but you were so cross and grouchy that I thought I'd give you a little wee lesson. And oh, Phil, it was such fun! Here's your old stock—I bought it with my own money, and it's—guess what? My birthday present to you! And oh, Phil, darling, kiss me, won't you?"

Hadman, impatient at the delay, opened the door and started to enter. He got as far as the threshold, then paused with a look of utter amazement on his face. The look gradually faded to a grin of understanding, and he tiptoed out, closing the door softly behind him.

ANT LION TRAPS HIS PREY

Remarkable Ingenuity Displayed by Small Creature in Securing Food Especially Favored.

One of the most crafty of insects is the ant lion larva. This tiny creature dotes on ants of all sizes and species, and as it is not swift of movement it must trap its victims. It does this by making a cone-shaped pit in the sand. These pits are about an inch deep and two inches across. When it is complete the ant lion buries itself in the very center, with only its head and strong-curved mandibles in sight. It then patiently awaits the curious ants. Ants are Paul Prys, and have a tremendous curiosity. The little depression attracts their attention, and they come to its edge and peer down into it.

The larva at once starts into a fury of action. It begins a digging operation and at the same time hurls grains of sand in all directions. The sand thus tossed begins to roll down the depression and carries with it other grains of sand until a miniature landslide results. The curious ant is caught in the slide and goes tumbling down to the center where the hard, sharp mandibles of the lion seize it, and the poor victim is shaken back and forth until it is dazed, whereupon the lion proceeds to dine with relish, tossing the empty husk of body outside the hole, once the meal is over.

"Shin-Plasters."

The term "shin-plaster" as applied to Civil-war currency is originally said to have been applied to the depreciated Continental currency. During the war people resorted to postage stamps and private notes; the latter, representing 10, 25 and 50 cents, were of little value beyond the particular locality where they were issued, except as "plasters for broken shins," hence their name "shin-plasters."

Delaware's Nicknames.

During the American Revolution, the commander of a brigade in Delaware was a veteran cock-fighter, who always bet on "the blue hen's chickens." Thence the name came to be applied to the members of his brigade, and finally to the state itself. Delaware has also been nicknamed "the Diamond state," as being small and precious.

Red Spiders.

The red spider does a considerable amount of damage to garden crops at this time of the year, during the dry, hot weather. These mites feed principally on the underside of the leaves, causing the foliage to lose their color, having a whitish, bleached appearance, and the plants become stunted. The damage is done to the plants by the mites sucking the juices. This troublesome pest is easily controlled by the free use of cold water applied under pressure, directing the spray to the underside of the leaves. If the water is not effective, the sulphur-soap solution is made up in the following manner: Flowers of sulphur, one ounce; laundry soap, two ounces; water, one gallon. Dissolve the soap in the water and then add the sulphur and apply to the mites.

COLORED MONARCHS ARRIVE IN PARIS

Dusky Royalists See the Sights and are "Sights" Themselves

Paris, uly 10.—Two dozen colored kings have come to Paris, and Parisians, with their ever-fresh love of the exotic, have thrilled at the spectacle.

Dressed in faultlessly-fitting black clothes, top hats, and with uniformly ebony features, these dusky rulers of French possessions in Senegal, Dahomey, Ivory and the New Guinea coasts and Maurertania, when they lined up on the platform this morning at Gare De Lyon, made one think of that old ditty, "Ten little nigger boys all in a row."

It is not quite clear whether the Government has brought them to see the sights of Paris, but their reception was quite official, with representatives of the Ministers of Colonies, deputies and officers to meet them.

One huge African potentate, blissfully unconscious of the picturesque anomaly of the combination, carried, instead of a walking stick, a scimeter. It helped to explain why some children took refuge behind their mothers' skirts.

Another jungle chieftain escorted his three wives, whom Parisians voted quite charming. Nearly all speak French fluently, having received excelent educations. One proudly announced he is a subscriber to a Paris paper, which he has read in the jungle for ten years.

CZAR'S TOMB EMPTY MYTH MAY BE FACT

Legend Alexander I. Was Buried as Monk Proved True

Reval, July 10.—One of the strange tales told by Russians for almost a century, has represented Alexander I. as having left the throne to become a monk. Officially he died in 1825, at the age of 48, and was buried in the Oupenski Cathedral, with full ceremony.

Rumors came from the vicinity of Taganrog, however, that one Father Theodore Kousnitch (or Formich), known for his piety, closely resembled Alexander, and was treated with utmost respect by the Imperial authorities until his death, in 1870, Prince Volkensky, a Russian historian, wrote a book, telling of the last days of this monk, and saying he was really Alexander.

Nobody was ever able to verify this tale. Now, however, the Soviet authorities have proved that Alexander was not buried in the Oupenski Cathedral. In the search for jewels the tombs of the czars have been opened and in that of Alexander no body was found.

In his late years, Alexander disagreed with many of the traditions of his house and became a mystic. Before he disappeared he spent most of his time in prayer.

The Bolsheviki are incidentally reported to have opened the grave of Paul I. and taken from it the huge diamond cross of the Order of Knights of Malta, which was laid on his breast when he was buried. Paul was grandmaster of the Order.

SETTLED ACCOUNT

The Toronto man who was arrested here neglecting to settle a board bill, was allowed his freedom this morning when he paid the bill of $37 or $38, and also the court costs.

In the list of students-at-law who have successfully passed their final examinations and are now entitled to be called to the Bar of the Province of Alberta appears the name of Edward Gordon Wallbridge, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur R. Wallbridge, of this city.

BIGAMY CASE IS ENLARGED

Judgment and Sentence to be Delivered on Thursday

At police court on Monday afternoon before Magistrate Masson the case of Thomas J. Kirby of Toronto who when charged with bigamy admitted the offence, was continued. Mrs. Kirby the first and lawful wife with her daughter was present in the court room, as was also Evelyn Smith of Campbellford with whom Kirby went through the second marriage in this city.

Mr. C. A. Payne who was present in the interest of the accused read several testimonials from parties in Toronto who referred in the highest terms of Mr. Kirby's good character. Mr. Payne also referred to the fact that the accused was overseas and was not only severely wounded but buried in debris when a strong bomb was exploded. The accused was discharged on the 30th of January, 1917 as physically he was no longer fit for service.

Miss Smith in her testimony testified that her name was Evelyn Smith and she knew Thomas J. Kirby. They were married in Belleville on April 10th. The first intimation witness had that Kirby was a married man was when Mr. Owen of Campbellford said she was corresponding with a man who was not true to her. To witness he denied he was a married man. When they became engaged he gave her an engagement ring. Her father received a letter signed by Mrs. Kirby and she returned it to Kirby asking for an explanation. A letter produced addressed to Mrs. Walker, a sister of witness was written by Kirby. Shortly before witness married Kirby a letter was received from him in which he denied he was a married, and was never married befor. Evelyn is my only one and no other woman had a right to claim him as a husband. On April 10th they came to Belleville and were married. Witness's mother asked Kirby before they left for Belleville if there was anything to prevent them from being married and Kirby said there was nothing to prevent the marriage.

Witness denied that she was informed of Kirby's previous marriage before Kirby stayed at her home for some days after the wedding. Mrs Kirby and her daughter came to witnesses home on April 21st. Kirby left with his wife and daughter.

After some agrument by Mr. Donnan on behalf of the Crown and by Mr. Payne for the accused and Mr. F. E. O'Flynn representing Miss Smith, the Magistrate adjourned the case for judgment until Thursday of this week.

United States Government Will Go the Limit to Assist Railways

Chicago, July 10.—That the Government plans to go the limit to assist the United States railways in moving mails, food and fuel, was the word received to-day by Chicago rail executives. United States Marshals at all points have been instructed to employ all the deputies necessary to enforce the injunctions issued by Federal Judges and to see that there is no intereference with the movements of trains or with new men taking the places of strikers. Law and order is to be preserved at all costs, life protected, the transportation of the mails continued and interstate commerce freed from interruption, is the announcement made at Washington by Attorney-General Daugherty.

Ald Patterson in speaking of the report said it was impossible to inspect all the laterals of the sewer without entailing considerable expense. Other deficiencies might be found in this sewer and other sewers constructed in the city. No bona fide cheque had evidently been put up for the performance of the work as specified, and there was no record of a bond having been put up. A considerable sum, as the report shows, should revert to the city. Ald. Patterson said that what was wanted was one head at all of our departments. Go to any official except the City Clerk and the information desired on certain matters was not always available. Put the blame where you like.

Ald. Greenleaf thought perhaps the new Engineer would be able to straighten out some matters. It was apparent that some plans we have as to sewer construction were to a certain extent useless.

Ald. McCreary suggested that a commission, say of four citizens independent of the Council, might be appointed as an investigation committee to look into this whole matter of sewer and other construction work done for the city. Aldermen give their time gratis and some citizens might do the same.

Ald. Robinson did not favor the idea as it would no doubt prove expensive, and citizens might be backward in making such an investigation. Our new Engineer could no doubt make out an intelligent report.

A vote of thanks moved by Ald. Robinson and seconded by Ald. French, was tendered to Ald. Patterson for his time and trouble in presenting the report to the Council.

NEW ENGINEER IS SELECTED

Revision receive $100 each for their services this year.

That the services of the social worker be dispensed with and the office closed.

SALE OF PROPERTY.

That the lot on Front street known as the fire department lot be sold for the sum of $2500 and that a committee composed of Aldermen Robinson, Donohue and Patterson accept offers and investigate conditions of sale.

Ald. McCreary moved that this matter be deferred back for further reconsideration.

Ald Robinson considered the offer of $2,500 was a very good figure and he understood the purchaser would put up a $10,000 building which would bring a good revenue to the city. The recommendation was adopted with a proviso that a building costing at least $10,000 be placed on the lot.

That the water works manager be authorised to purchase from the Intelligencer Printing Co., 3,000 by-laws at $65 and 1000 daily report forms at $10.

That Aldermen Robinson, Donohue and French be a special committee to interview Mr. Orr in reference to storing and driving the ambulance.

NEW ENGINEER.

Recommended that Charles D. Campbell, C. E., of Hamilton, be appointed city engineer and a by-law be prepared confirming the appointment.

A letter read from Mr. Campbell was read which showed he had had considerable experience in civil engineer work, also as a land surveyor. For 5 years he was city engineer for Galt.

The recommendation was amended by adding that Mr. Campbell serve the city as engineer in every department.

A communication was read from the council of Winnipeg extending an invitation to the Mayor and Aldermen of Belleville to attend the annual reunion of the Canadian Municipalities Association to be held in that city in August. Ordered to be filed.

ELECTRIC POWER COST.

A communication was read from the clerk of Peterboro, asking Belleville Council to appoint a delegation to form part of a delegation that will go to Ottawa in reference to protesting against the usurping of certain water powers on the Trent Valley, the allegation being that it would mean increased cost of electric energy in Central Ontario.

On motion Mayor Hanna was appointed as a delegate.

WANT A SEWER.

A petition for a sanitary sewer on Bettes street was referred to the proper officials to ascertain if it was sufficiently signed.

SOCIAL WORKER REPORT.

A report from Miss Smith of her work for the month of June as the social worker of the city was presented and ordered to be filed. She reported that during the month there had been a few emergency cases and that many families had been visited.

The committee rose and reported, the report was received and adopted.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Patterson asked what had been done in reference to the petitions for a side walk on a portion of Foster Avenue.

Ald Donohue—The petition does not meet with the requirement of the law and it does not state on which side of the street the walk is to be constructed on.

Ald. McCreary asked if residents on certain streets where sewers had not been laid according to levels, etc., had any redress.

Mayor Hanna—Get the solicitor's opinion in the matter.

Ald Greenleaf—Was there any application for the erecting of a gasoline station on Dundas street.

Mayor Hanna—It was an up to date building but he would state that no permits for buildings had been taken out of late, as the engineer had been lax in his duties.

Ald. Greenleaf—Has Mr. Mill resigned as city engineer.

Mayor Hanna—No, but he has vacated his office and taken all his paraphernalia with him.

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

Ald. French introduced a by-law to repeal by-law No. 2056, re the appointment of J. G. Mill as city engineer and superintendent of public works.

Ald. Greenleaf was chairman of the committee of the whole on By-laws. The by-law was passed through its various stages and number 2143.

The presenting of the report of Ald. Patterson re Dundas street sewer which appears in another column and the discussion upon the same completed the business of the session.

RUSSIAN WORKMEN ARE DISAPPOINTED

Return From Fighting to Find Collared Speculators in Moscow

Moscow, July 11.—Workingmen who were induced to fight for four years in the Red Army against the representatives of the bourgeois class and who now return to Moscow to find white collared spurlators dining in luxurious restaurants while they themselves have difficulty in securing black bread, frequently feel like throwing bricks through the windows of these restaurants, one Communist recently said to the Associated Press Correspondent. Only the party discipline and the promise that this temporary stragetic surrender to the capitalists will not last forever have held these disappointed workmen in check, the speaker explained.

If we would permit it the Communist party, instead of numbering 500,000 persons would soon increase to several millions as many men want to get into the government," the informant of the correspondent declared. "But the party is being weeded out and only those who can maintain themselves as spartan communists regardless of what is going on about them will be permitted to stay."

Railway News

Nakusp, B.C.—As an indication of the increased industrial activity of the lumber mills of Nakusp, the Nakusp Lumber Company find their yarding room so limited that they have cleared about four acres of land near the first mile post along the C. P. R., where a spur will be built and the lumber hauled up in cars and allowed to dry before being shipped to outside points.

Invermere, B.C. — Amongst the many splendid summer publications of the C. P. R. are two of especial interest to this part. The first one deals with "Bungalow Camps," and makes very generous mention of the beautiful Lake Windermere Camp adjoining this place. The other one is a publication given over exclusively to describing the local "Camp." This is a seventeen-page folder, most beautifully illustrated with reproductions of photographs of local scenes. The letter press is by Mr. Frederic Niven.

The gist of the matter is descriptive of the various trails and automobile roads throughout the Windermere district.

Chatham, Ontario. — Wholesale summoning of boys and men who frequently use the C. P. R. tracks as a place for walks, was indicated in County Police court recently, with the swearing out of a number of informations by a C. P. R. detective who conducted an investigation.

It is alleged that the defendants trespassed on the C. P. R. tracks, a short distance from the City in Harwich township.

Informations have also been laid against seven boys under the age of sixteen years.

Montreal.—Edward J. Richel is appointed city passenger agent for the Canadian Pacific at Chicago, succeeding Alfred R. Dean, who has resigned to enter other business.

Mr. Richel joined the service on June 16, 1920, as clerk in the passenger department, Canadian Pacific Steamships, Chicago. Promotions following were: October 1, 1920, chief clerk; January 21, 1921, passenger agent; June 1, 1921, traveling passenger agent; June 1, 1922, city passenger agent.

William I. Balkwill is appointed travelling passenger agent, succeeding Edward J. Richel. Mr. Balkwill joined the Canadian Pacific as clerk in the steamships passenger department Chicago on March 13, 1922.

St. Andrews-by-the-Sea, N.B. — The Canadian Manufacturers' Convention for 1922 is now a thing of the past, and to the almost 200 delegates and others who have been here for a week, attending the sessions, it will be a pleasant memory. So much of a success has been this year's convention that it can be said, without violating any confidences, that the most influential members of the association are anxious to hold future conventions under similar conditions.

The Casino of the Algonquin Hotel provided an excellent meeting place, and the records show more discussion than at any four conventions in the past, while there has been more fraternizing by the delegates, who got to know one another to a greater degree than ever before. During the Convention days delegates played golf on the beautiful links overlooking the sea and indulged in swimming in Katy's Cove.

Calgary, Alta. — After covering six hundred miles in the southern portion of Alberta, at the end of June, J. M. Cameron, general superintendent of the Alberta Division of the Canadian Pacific Railway, declares that crop conditions there, generally speaking, are very satisfactory.

Mr. Cameron stated that farmers had been taught an object lesson by grasshoppers. Where these insects had been active had been on stubble-in crops. From the amount of summer fallowing that was now going on, farmers had realized that stubbling-in was a poor gamble and left a breeding place for the hoppers. The hoppers, he said, were now practically under control in the south. Cutworms had done little or no damage on account of the frequent showers.

"I have been much pleased with my visit," said Mr. Cameron. "There is now quite an optimistic feeling among farmers and business men in the south country."

Elkhorn, Man.—Forty years ago Mr. Jas. Rodgers commenced working for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as a section man, and in about five years, through his ability to give the best he could and also because of his sterling integrity, was promoted to foremanship, holding this position until 20 years ago, when he desired a change of employment, and was transferred to the pumping station staff. For a while he worked at Fleming and Virden in his new capacity, and eventually assumed charge of the Elkhorn pumping station, on the retirement of Mr. R. Travis, another old time railroad man who is still with us, as hale and hearty as ever.

A record such as Mr. Rodgers holds is decidedly unique. He is the second senior pumpman in the division, and his regularity and strict attention to his calling have won for him the deep respect of the Company, which places high value on the services of men of such capability. He has stood the rigors of an exacting position in a manner that must reflect great credit.

CRIME ON DECLINE IN ONTARIO

"Parole" is a Success—Employers are Co-operating With Parole Board

Toronto, July 11.—The economic conditions have made the work of parole unusually difficult for the last twelve months, says the report of the Ontario Board of Parole for the year ending October 31, 1921. Employment is essential to parole. The conditions have prevented the parole of a few whose parole was authorised, but it is a gratifying fact that employes have been so willing to co-operate in the re-establishment of offenders that in nearly every case where it was decided to give an offender his opportunity, work was forthcoming. That this was appreciated by the paroled men is proved by the fact that out of 229 whose parole was authorised, of the 221 whose parole became actually effective, less than 20 broke parole. This shows a success of 92 per cent which in this most difficult year is a much more favorable result than was expected.

706 Cases Investigated.

Seven hundred and six cases were in all investigated and considered. In 206 of these cases it was decided to take no action. The number recommended to the governor-general for clemency under the Ticket-of-Leave Act was 101. The parole-of-229 was authorised. The remainder were deferred for further consideration. The increase in the number paroled is due to the increase in the number of indeterminate sentences given by the judges and magistrates of the province which, says the report, in accordance with the best modern practice in dealing with criminals.

"The question has been raised in some quarters," proceeds the report, "as to the justice of paroling men who have offended against the law to take employment when so many men, who have never been before the courts, are out of work. It is urged that if there is any work available for a paroled man, that work could be done by others who had the greater right to it.

ALLEGED SLAYER OF MOULT IS NOT RETURNED SOLDIER

Ottawa Says Barrie Is Not Returned Soldier

Director of War Records Cannot Find Trace of His Name—The Number and Battery Given by Barrie are Those of a French-Canadian Soldier

BARRIE WORE KHAKI HAD ARMY RIFLE

Is Maurice Barrie, the 17 or 19 year old youth charged with the murder of George Wesley Moult, a returned soldier?

This is another question which has cropped up in connection with the tragedy at the Moult homestead on Thursday, June 29th.

The Intelligencer is in possession of a small photograph of Barrie, showing the head only, on the back of which is written plainly in ink the following:-

"Maurice Barrie, 5th C.F.A.(Battery No. 2007729, 2nd Division."

In order to ascertain whether Barrie's claim was correct or not, a letter was written to the Director of Military Records, at Ottawa, and this morning a reply was received, which reads as follows:-

"Maurice Barrie cannot be identified as an ex-member of the Canadian Expeditionary Forces. The number given by him, No. 2007729 was allotted to Sapper A. Jos. Tetreault of the Canadian Engineer's Training Depot."

When asked by the Intelligencer if the incorrect spelling of the name would prevent the finding of the man's records as a soldier, an ex-officer in the C.E.F., who is well versed in the procedure, stated that it would not. "If the name were spelled incorrectly, the number should reveal the man's record," he stated.

The letter concludes as follows:-

"It is suggested that this man's regimental number beverified, and, if possible, state place and date of enlistment, when a further search of the records will be made."

Barrie is at present wearing military riding breeches and puttees and also had a military cap in his hand when he appeared for the preliminary hearing here at the Police Court recently. He also possesses an army rifle.

DAIL MAY MISS DE VALERA

Question Asked Whether Republican Leader Will be on Hand

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Belfast, July 12.—Eamon de Valera is in Dublin now, and to-day he visited the Republican offices on Suffolk street. It is understood that the Free State authorities have no intention of interfering with his movements.

Dublin, July 12.—If the postponed meeting of the new Dail is held on Saturday some interesting scenes are anticipated. There is a possibility however, that it may be further postponed in view of the disturbed conditions in the Provinces and the difficulties many deputies will have in reaching Dublin owing to the extensive damage to railways and roads by the irregulars. Should the Dail assemble, members who are suspected, or who are known to be associated with the revolt, may elect to challenge the drastic action of the Government by attending.

"What will de Valera do?" has become the question of the hour. For days past the anti-treaty political leader has disappeared completely. The problem for the ex-President must be an embrassing one, but to such a mercurial appearance at the Dail is likely to appeal strongly.

DELORME GOES TO ASYLUM

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Quebec, July 12.—Adelard Delorme pronounced insane by a Montreal jury, will be interned in Beauport asylum near Quebec it was announced by order in council passed by Provincial Cabinet at meeting today. He will remain in the asylum until such time as the Lieut.-Governor is advised that he is fit to be tried.

ONE AND A QUARTER MILLION ON STRIKE IN UNITED STATES

Enormous Loss Entailed Through Voluntary Idleness in Various Trades

New York, July 11.—Approximately 1,250,000 persons are now idle in the United States because of strikes in various industries, the National Industrial Conference Board declared in a review of industrial conditions, issued here last night.

This figure represents the number directly affected by voluntary cessations of work and entails a loss of approximately 10,000,000 hours of work during each day the situation continues, the review said. "To visualise the magnitude of this waste, it may be noted that it would require the labor of 100 men working over thirty years of 300 work days each in order to offset the time loss for each week of such idleness," it was added.

"With each day that this strike condition exists more and more persons," said the review, "engaged in secondary allied industries which are dependent on the major industries are thrown into involuntary unemployment, thereby imposing an additional burden on the community."

The board's statement said that internationally, the unsettled condition is reflected in downward fluctuation in foreign exchange rates.

ROTARY DAY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Marchmont Children Spend Enjoyable Afternoon at the Park

The boys and girls who recently arrived from England for the Marchmont home here, were given a jolly, good time on Victoria Park on Tuesday afternoon, when the Rotary Club held a little field day for the children who are strangers to this new country.

Arriving at the Park about 3 p.m. the boys wearing straw hats, and neatly dressed, marched to the nearest shade trees, led by Mr. Robinson, who conducted the party over from the old country. They rested a while, and then they held a sing song led by Mr. Robinson, and Rotarian S. Burrows.

The party of girls soon arrived also, and then the Rotarians ran off a series of races for boys and girls, in the various age classes, and different distances. The young folks entered into the sport with a will, and they were all keenly contested.

Following the races the children gave a concert consisting of songs and drills, and a large crowd of people congregated to enjoy the program. A piano was taken down to the park for the occasion.

Before going home, the boys and girls were given lemonade, candy, and other refreshments which the Rotarians handed out free of charge.

A most enjoyable afternoon was spent, and the children were warm in their praise for the reception accorded them in Canada.

The piano used for the program, was kindly loaned by the C. W. Lindsay music Co. and Mr. Albert Johnstone, teacher of dancing, very kindly assisted with the program.

"GLORIOUS 12TH" IN FULL SWING

Throughout Ontario To-day—Toronto Has Largest Parade in History of Order

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 12.—The "Glorious Twelfth" was celebrated in cities, towns and villages in Ontario today, and reports from all parts indicate monster gatherings.

In Toronto, the day opened cloudy, but later cleared and thousands of citizens lined the route of the parade which formed at Queen's Park and marched to the Exhibition Grounds, where sports and picnics were held and speeches delivered by prominent Orangemen, including Hon. W. D. McPherson, Mayor Maguire and William Coote, M.P., of Ulster.

The procession, which was one of the largest in the history of the order in Toronto, was reviewed at the City Hall by the Mayor and Mr. Coote.

"A ONE-HORSE TOWN."

Kingston, July 11.—A Kingston city employee, with a ready wit and a broom, was engaged in manicuring University avenue when accosted by an American tourist who inquired the way to the University and criticized the city for its lack of legible street names and finger-posts, classifying it as a "one-horse town." The reply of the street cleaner was to the effect that if the tourist had his job he would not think the city a "one-horse town."

QUITE COOL SIX MILES UP; GOING UP?

Toronto, July 12.—In addition to being the hottest region on the earth's surface, the Equator is also the coldest. Following out this paradox, the Poles are the coldest and hottest places. However, anyone contemplating a trip to the tropics will not need to take a fur coat along, as the cold points at the Equator are to be found only at a distance of about eleven miles skyward. On the other hand, explorers in the Arctic and Antarctic regions would be able to dispense with some of their heavy trappings at a distance of about six miles up. A statement to this effect was made by Mr. J. Patterson of the meteorological office yesterday.

GERMANS ASK TO BE EXCUSED

Send Formal Note Asking for Postponement of Payments

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 12.—The German representatives to-day submitted to the reparations commission a formal note requesting a moratorium on reparations payments for the remainder of the present year.

The note stated that the thirty-two million gold marks due on Saturday were available if the Commission insisted upon its payment, but recommended that it also be waived.

Paris, July 12.—Dr. Fischer, Chairman of German War Debts Commission, notified the Reparations Commission this morning that Germany's request for a moratorium had been finally drafted and was being sent to the Commission.

FINANCE MINISTER IS ABSENT MINDED

Hon. W. S. Fielding Refuses to be Interviewed—is Not All There

Toronto, July 12.—"If it's a personal chat you want, I shall be delighted. "But if it's an interview, I'm simply not here at all. The oyster is loquacious by comparison," said Hon. W. S. Fielding, Canadian Minister of Finance, to a would-be interviewer, yesterday.

"We did, naturally, want to know the object of your visit," said the reporter.

"Well you'll be devilishly smart if you can find out,' the Minister smilingly answered.

"And how long will you be here, so that we can estimate chances?" was asked.

"Oh but a short time—perhaps only to-day."

"It seems a general surprise that you are not at Washington?" Was ventured, inasmuch as the Premier and Hon. Mr. Graham are there today for conferences

"Indeed," was the only comment.

"How long will Premier King be there?", he was asked.

"That's quite indefinite," was the reply. "There is no time fixed for his return."

"Not Here"

"Then there is the little matter of the Manitoba elections; and the report that Hon. Mr. Graham is to head the Railway Board—"

"Oh, I'm certainly not here," laughed Mr. Fielding.

And with a boyish wave of the hand he vanished skyward, like Elijah, but via the elevator.

MANY HEAR GIRL PREACHER

Mary Vitchestain, American Girl Preacher Delivers First Sermon Here

Mary Agnes Vichestain, the 14-year-old girl preacher of Pittsburgh, Pa., gave the first of her series of four sermons to be given in this city, when she addressed a large congregation last evening in Victoria Avenue Baptist Church.

Miss Vitchestain has been before the public since she was nine years of age, and is now able to address a congregation with great composure. She has a powerful voice for a young girl, and a very good command of language, as well as a good memory.

The Scripture reading was chosen from Genesis 1st chapter, verses 1 to 27 inclusive, but no definite sermon was delivered on any specific text. Choice texts were often repeated, with the natural application at the end that Jesus was the Saviour and only by recognizing and believing that fact could we hope to enjoy salvation. In her vehement enthusiasm and sincerity, the speaker did not reason out theology, but magnified and glorified the name of Christ as a contrast to the furious picture of hell, stating that her wish was that sinners present would get such a vision of hell fire and its awfulness that they would not sleep that night.

"I am not preaching for the benefit of those already saved, but I am out in the deep, rescuing souls for Christ," said Miss Vitchestain. She said that men and women would receive the blessed salvation if they would but take command of their strong wills and come forward and receive it.

A few words and phrases seldom heard from the pulpit by ordinary ministers, but often used forcibly by evangelists and orators like Billy Sunday, were used by the speaker during the discourse. For instance the word "devilution" was used in the same line as "revolution" and "evolution".

Undesirable "so-called religions" were referred to as "bunk", and at specially important junctures, the words, "get this, folks," were used.

Miss Vitchestain continues with her second sermon this evening.

Rev. F. E. Malott, the newly appointed minister at Bridge Street Methodist Church, conducted the fore part of the service, in the absence of Rev. C. G. Smith, B.D., of Montreal, who was unable to be present.

Rev. Dr. Wilson led in a series of prayers offered by laymen, including Mrs. Vitchestain, mother of the girl preacher.

A duet was given by Mrs. B. Doolittle and Mrs. E. Farrow, and a quartette number was also rendered by Messrs. Cook and Falkner, Mrs. Doolittle and Miss Forham.

REAL ORANGEMEN BORN ON THE 12TH

St. Thomas, Ont., July 12.—Prominent among the celebrants in the glorious twelfth festivities that take place here to-day was Chief William Armstrong of the police department and Rev. H. E. Thornlo, of Alma St. Presbyterian church. Both had the honor of being born on July twelfth in Ireland. Thornlo declares that the first sounds that came to his ears were the melodious strains of "The Boyne Water" played by an energetic fife and drum band. Chief Armstrong has announced his intention of taking a real holiday. At least 5,000 Orangemen from Middlesex, Oxford, Norfolk, Perth and Elgin are expected here.

CAN'T AGREE WITH SOVIETS

Conference With Soviet Representatives Breaks Down

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 12.—The conference with the Russian Soviet representatives here broke down at one o'clock this afternoon without apparent hope of a further meeting.

Maxim Lituinoff of the Russian delegation said on leaving the conference chamber that further meetings were unlikely as the non-Russians insisted upon the Russians making promises with regard to property compensation and giving guarantees which were impossible until the Russians know what credits and loans they would be granted.

LIONS HAVE DINNER AT MASSASSAGA

Ball Game Features the Enjoyable Evening Spent

The regular weekly luncheon of the Lions' Club was displaced yesterday by an excursion to Massassaga, where a dinner was held in the even:

Leaving the wharf at 6 p.m., many of the cubs enjoyed a cruise to Massassaga in Captain McQueen's commodious gasoline launch, the Captain being in command. Others motored down to the point.

The first event upon arrival was a baseball game between the Roarers and the Growlers, which resulted in a victory for the Roarers by the tune of 9 to 2. Dr. O'Callaghan umpired very satisfactorily, and the game will not be protested. After the strenuous game, the cubs went in for a swim, before having dinner at the Massassaga hotel. The dinner was excellent and the menu quite elaborate, according to the cubs, and was very much appreciated by the Lions and their guests in a most practical way.

President Dick Ponton then took charge of the program and immediately invited Cubs Granville Sinclair and Russell Wotten to give brief extemporary autobiographies, telling of the most startling exploits in their careers. This they did with just credit to themselves and much amusement to their audience.

It was decided to hold the next weekly luncheon at the Belleville Community Camp at Moira Lake on Wednesday, July 19th, when with the Rotarians and their lady friends they will picnic there together.

BIG PARADE AT TRENTON

Over Thirty Lodges Take Part in Celebration of "The 12th"

7,000 PEOPLE ATTEND

Belleville Veteran Orangeman Celebrates for 57th Time

(Special to The Intelligencer by a Staff Reporter)

Trenton, July 12.—More than thirty lodges are taking part in the monster celebration of the "Glorious Twelfth" at Trenton this afternoon, and nearly seven thousand people are in the town from outside points. Lodges are present from Prince Edward County, Lennox and Addington, Northumberland, Hastings county and Hastings village.

The parade formed up on the market square at 1 p.m. and the procession wended its way through the principal streets of the town, and finally to Hanna's Park, where a programme was carried out, and sports indulged in.

The public meeting was in charge of District Deputy Worshipful Master W. J. Pringle.

One of the oldest men in the parade to-day, is a Belleville man, Mr. Archibald Collins, of 14 Dunbar St. This is the 57th. consecutive procession that this old gentleman has attended.

The throngs of people were well handled by the special boat and train service, and the town is very gaily decorated.

NEW UPPER HOUSE TO BE HAND-PICKED

Peers Selected for Service to Country to Elect Remainder

London, July 12.—The full cabinet met today to decide on certain aspects of the House of Lords' reform problem which may have an important bearing on the result of the next general election, which cannot be delayed many months longer. The cabinet has been divided on this question for some time past, but your correspondent learns from an authoritative quarter that a compromise has been reached between the opposing factions whereby greater powers will be granted to the Lords, but the veto imposed after Lloyd George's famous campaign of 1910 will remain.

The principal alteration in the composition of the upper chamber is the abolition of hereditary right to sit in the Lords, for the new bill provides that at least a portion of the upper house shall be selected although it is not definitely settled what shall be the machinery of choice. Selected peers will then proceed to elect the remainder from among their number who are distinguished in various walks of life or have performed eminent service to the state. As a result of this the number of the new house will fall appreciably below its present membership.

It is a foregone conclusion that the new measure will not be acceptable to the peers who desire restoration of their old veto powers but the country is overwhelmingly opposed to a reversion to the old position.

VALLEY OF PREHISTORIC BONES WHERE MONSTERS ROAMED

Remains and Footprints of Primeval Animals Found in Northern British Columbia

Edmonton, Alta., July 11.—In a valley in the far northern section of British Columbia, close to the Yukon border, which, it is believed was never before visited by a white man, Frank Perry, mining engineer, of Vancouver, has discovered the remains of mastodons that once roamed Northern Canada. The location of the valley is not marked on the maps, but it is north and west of the headwaters of the Findlay River. Indians will not travel through the valley, believing it to be haunted by the giant animals whose bones they have seen.

In addition to the bones there are footprints in the sandstone and shale of some other prehistoric monster. These are clearly defined remarks, showing that the maker of the tracks was a three-toed animal.

The bones, which are of a great size, are not fossilized but are in a state of excellent preservation. Hip bones and sections of the spine were found by Mr. Perry, who believes that by excavation specimens of much historic value could be unearthed.

Mr. Perry, a recent visitor here, spent 14 years in the far northern territory in the quest of minerals, two pack dogs being his companions. Neither canoes nor pack horses can be used to gain access to the district, and, so far, the only possible manner of travelling has been to live on the game, using dogs to pack the camp equipment on their backs. It requires a year to make the journey, which an aeroplane could make in a few days. Mr. Perry may return, however, by aeroplane, as he is now negotiating with the owners of an all-metal plane to take him back.

An Iced-Hot Dish

By [illegible] HOWARD CAWTHORNE

Hung-Ho, by the hardest of labor and most economical living, amassed a hoard of several thousand, cash, and took passage on a devil-boat for Vancouver, whence he was mysteriously transported to San Francisco, and presently became my cook.

During an idle visit to the kitchen the slant-eyed worthy mentioned the baffling quest which had caused so many heartburnings and eye-stretchings in China. At first I laughed heartily at the ludicrous tale, but my laughter ended in a gasp of astonishment as I suddenly realized that Hung-Ho had put a fortune within my grasp!

For numberless centuries, so he told me in his flowery language, the culinary artists of far Cathay had striven manfully, though in vain, toward the acme of epicurean attainment, the iced-hot dish.

Since the unenlightened ages a tradition had existed in the East that the Celestial who shall concoct such a toothsome delicacy, having an ice-cold middle part while hot, odorous, and steaming without, shall be assured an exalted place in heaven, as well as honors, palaces, and retinues of kowtowing servants during the remainder of his stay on earth.

From the lord high purveyor of gustatory delights to her serene highness the dowager empress, down to the humblest cookee in a chop suey joint, it had been the sublime goal of all dreams and efforts among cooks.

When a Chinese cook is found dangling at the end of his cue from a bamboo beam in his workroom, it is commonly remarked that Zi-An, big joss of the cook cult and jealous guardian of the secret of the iced-hot dish, had claimed another victim.

Hung-Ho, crafty descendant of 40 generations of chop suey house cooks, had essayed at various times to elaborate a pie or pastry that should at least approach perfection as nearly as had the productions of his honorable ancestors.

I had recently become interested in an African development company owning vast tracts of land where grew valuable woods, notably the tree from which the well-known material called vegetable ivory is obtained. From the inner bark of this tree I had prepared a unique substance which I had named vegetable asbestos, a product that resembled real asbestos as closely as vegetable ivory does the bony mass of an elephant's tusk. That is to say, exactly. And, in addition, vegetable asbestos is edible!

I was casting about for a use to which the new food product could be put, and Hung-Ho had given me the clue to it. Thus, I hastily concluded, I was fairly on the road to millionairedom.

Securing from the refrigerator a piece of ice the size of a walnut (as the cook books say), I quickly rolled it in dough made with a vegetable asbestos and water, and passed it on to my prince of pots and pans, who placed it in the center of a preposterous assemblage of unlike condiments, forming some famous Chinese dish.

Hung-Ho, who was now hopping about and jabbering in a clownish and unnatural display of emotion, popped the cake into the oven. I feared the usually stolid Asiatic would go into an apoplectic fit, so excited did he wax.

And really the occasion justified excitement. Should success crown my endeavors, I could snap my fingers at commonplace western millionaires and join the esoteric circle of oriental wealth and luxury.

Manifestly no trace of ice could remain unmelted within that steaming loaf, and my expectations went up with the fragrant, appetizing odor of vegetable asbestos that filled our nostrils.

With trembling hands Hung-Ho seized the cake and deftly broke it in halves. Nestling within—mirabile dictu—like a mandarin's diamond in its velvet case, lay the bit of glittering ice still the size of a walnut! Success was ours! Or, rather, mine, for I did not regard the Celestial as other than a means to an end.

During the following day I made arrangements to take a long vacation, engaged staterooms on the steamer Manchuria, soon sailed for the Orient, and obtained from my laboratory ample supplies of vegetable asbestos to take with us.

Arrived at Peking, we found it advisable not to attempt to exhibit our discovery there and win the long-promised reward from the emperor himself, for western notions had bitterly infected the imperial court to such an extent that we were laughed at and scoffed unmercifully when we presented our plea for an audience before the Son of Heaven. Undaunted by this early setback, we departed southward for the province of Shan-Tung.

A gloriously bright and serene midsummer's morning found us at the gate of the thrice-blessed city of Ch-iu-fu-Hsien, blessed in being the natal spot of the sage Confucius, the favored abode of Zi-An, chief joss of the cult of cooks, and the abiding-place of the elected judges of the iced-hot dish, who had never yet had occasion to sit in judgment.

The ancient and normally somnolent city was all agog with excitement.

Arrived before the magnificent palace of the judges, we were bidden to rest and partake of nourishment before we exhibited our far-famed and epoch-making discovery.

Promptly at the hour set for the trial, Hung-Ho and I entered the great courtyard, where the necessary preparations had been made. In the middle of a small space stood an altar to Zi-An, beside it a stand holding a charcoal brazier and the requisite cooking utensils.

All about in silent groups, dazzlingly dressed in many-hued silks and arranged in picturesque order, were the officials, dignitaries and notables of the city and province, the priests of the temple of Zi-An, and the judges.

Strange as it may seem, the ceremony about to take place, although minutely described and rigidly ordered in the sacred books of the cult, had never before been attempted for the simple reason that no Chinaman had ever got to the stage where he dared offer a suitable iced-hot dish—the penalty for failure being death at the hands of the assemblage. Despite this lack of experimental knowledge of the method of procedure, the well-studied rites moved forward smoothly and without an error.

When Hung-Ho, with lightning speed, mixed the ingredients for a suitable cake, I molded and squeezed a handful of snow from the far-away Hung-Shan mountains to the size of an egg, surrounded it with an insulating layer of vegetable asbestos, and at the proper moment handed it to my assistant, who in full view of the expectant assembly dropped it into the cake-dough and set the sacred copper basin containing the mixture over the brazier's glowing coals.

Now ensued moments of anxious—nay, agonizing—suspense.

Suddenly Hung-Ho seized the copper dish, threw up the cover, and snatched out the golden cake the like of which I had seen him split in two a thousand times, always to disclose a crystal of ice within.

He essayed to break it open, when a quick and horrible flash of fear impelled me to strike the cake from his trembling hands so that the precious thing fell to the tiles of the court at the feet of the spell-bound assemblage. Astonishment hissed from the throats of the onlookers. At once, with oriental intuitiveness, they divined the cause of my sacrilegious act. The law, as all knew, but for the first time fully realized, made him who opened the cake the master of the cult!

Crafty Hung-Ho had all but won the prize!

No sooner had I staved off one vicious attack than another was delivered. While the foiled traitor and I stood glaring at each other, neither knowing what next to do, a hoary graybeard among the judges—the most aged and therefore esteemed the wisest among them all—slowly rose, and with exasperating moderation pronounced the dictum that the overreaching rascal, Hung-Ho, had forfeited his claim by his unworthy exhibition of greed and faithlessness.

Furthermore, according to the traditions, only a Chinese could contest for the prize—never a hated foreigner.

I, too, was eliminated.

Hence it only remained for the judge himself to claim the reward, in the name of the whole college of judges. Suiting the action to the word, he slowly stooped, picked up the still steaming cake and broke it open.

Out popped the nugget of compressed snow, which, falling to the pavement, partially dissolved to its original watery state before the entranced spectators recovered from the spell of wonder that held them enthralled.

Then up went a shrill, ear-piercing, death-heralding shriek from the saffron-faced assembly as with one voice they vented their pent-up indignation at the almost successful attempt of a hated foreign devil to despoil them of their cherished heritage.

In a moment Hung-Ho and I were in a maelstrom of rushing, clawing Chinese. Counter-currents bore us apart. I crashed down upon the pavement and lost consciousness.

When I awoke I found myself in the care of a good missionary, who had rescued me in the nick of time. As soon as my strength was sufficiently regained he hurried me beyond the borders of the province of Shan-Tung, for which kind act I was devoutly thankful.

Hung-Ho probably lost his worthless life in the maelstrom. I never heard of him again.

As for the secret of the iced-hot dish, you can soon purchase it at ten cents a box.

The slow, small, but entirely safe profits of trade appeal more strongly to me—since my narrow escape in the thrice-blessed city of Confucius.

Cured.

Once upon a time there was in charge of a certain Episcopal parish down on Long Island a youngish minister who made a decided hit with a middle-aged spinster of large means. Her family, with whom the preacher was less popular, used to torment her good-naturedly about the "angel man," as they called the divine. One day the spinster brought the minister home for Sunday dinner without previously declaring her intention to do so. Her brothers and sister, who had not gone to service, were in the big living room when she breezed in, having left the preacher in the hall to remove his overcoat. "Well, how was the angel man today?" they chorused. "Did he preach one of his soul-inspiring sermons and was he as handsome as ever?" Sister made no move to halt the flow of kidding, but, turning toward the door, said: "Here he is; judge for yourselves as to his looks; as for his sermon, perhaps you'd all have been better off for hearing it." That ended the kidding for all time.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Unsealed Proposals

By MARTHA M. WILLIAMS

(© 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"M-m-m- Let me see! You have a fine brow, a straight enough nose, your mouth is rather decent—when shut—" Risley began, scanning his stepcousin Anne-Maria critically from beneath lifted fingers. She laughed softly before answering plaintively: "But, you see, Ansell, it so rarely is shut I'm sure to spoil the picture."

"You needn't—can't be much hardship to keep silent an hour or so," Risley retorted. Anne-Maria made a face at him.

"Suppose you try it," she said. "Pose me, tell me exactly for how long; then, in the language of today, go to it. A mighty fair proposition. Are you game?"

"Certainly," Ansell flung back. "In fact, you couldn't please me better. A talky model spoils inspiration," as he spoke flourishing an old sheathed sword and a tattered battleflag. "You know all about these," he went on. "Try to put yourself in the spirit of those who used them—fill your soul with the joy of victory—I'll do the rest."

Risley, you see, had temperament. Anne-Maria translated it conceit. He had come to Hillover, the Eton place, a tanned shadow of himself, a month back, from a journey around the world.

It was thus he had elected to come home, after service abroad. At first he had been too weary for anything but sleep, food and rest. Together they had brought him back to himself—indeed, to a self raised to about the nth power in its sense of its deservings. The deservings included Anne-Maria—she was lively, healthy, reasonably good-tempered. Besides she would be rich when she came to twenty-one. Only a year ahead. Her stepmother, his aunt, had exhorted him to make sure of her before that time. She had planned the marriage ever since she came into the family, seven years back. Even so early Ansell had shown temperament—which is a sight draft upon the bank of Fate for substantial endowment.

He was working upon a picture for a prize competition—not that he cared for the money; what was a mere thousand dollars?—but the acclaim of winning would be worth while, withal sweet incense to his swollen vanity.

He had already washed in his background—luckily Hillover commanded a noble prospect, full of enchanting distances, with a tree, lightning-scathed, a winding, narrow stream, a tall gray bluff, in the foreground. Clear grass at the bluff foot would serve admirably for the standing figure, leaning lightly upon the sword, and gently fingering the tattered flag.

He had hoped for another model—Mademoiselle Yvonne, the exotic, brought back by Susan Glower of the Red Cross service to help civilize this crass America, had failed him at the last minute. What she lacked of equaling him in temperament she more than made up in thrift. When artless Susan had let her know that Ansell had to choose betwixt Anne-Maria and working for a living, she had instantly decided to waste no more time nor smiles on him.

Hence his captious humor. Of course he had not been seriously thinking of the French girl—but she had a way so taking she had gone rather to his head. When he had posed her substitute to his mind, Anne-Maria said suddenly: "There must be a forfeit—what's to gain or lose by speaking out of time?"

"Oh, anything," Ansell said, almost fretfully. "Whatever you like. If only you'll be quiet now—" busying himself with his palette as he spoke. "Of course if I need to mention small changes on account of changing light—that is not to count."

She nodded comprehension, the ghost of an impish smile playing about her lips. "Look serious, inspired—if you can," he cried, noting it. Again she nodded, but banished the smile to her eyes. In its place there shone from her countenance a sweet, sunny peace—she had been the least bit harried these last ten days.

She loved her stepmother fairly well—moreover the habit of obedience was strong in her. And mamma had all but said outright she could not die happy without seeing Anne-Maria safely settled in life—also that unless she married Ansell the shock of disappointment and grief would surely bring on a heart spasm fatal to Ansell's aunt.

A year earlier that would have clinched matters—Anne-Maria would have gone, a lamb to the matrimonial slaughter. But Jim Eldridge had suddenly dawned on the horizon. That complicated matters. Jim was masculine to the point of saturation, chivalrous, humble before womanhood, and of a fine merry humor more than engaging. He would have courted Anne-Maria right off the reel if mamma had not intervened, telling him her stepdaughter was betrothed to the wandering soldier-artist—had loved him for years and would never love anybody else.

Therefore the good lady had besought Jim to be kind to Anne-Maria and kinder to himself, by keeping all thought of loving her out of his mind. See the complication? It was quite beyond poor Jim to think an elderly Christian lady could lie—even for the accomplishment of her own darling purpose.

He had accepted the role of brotherly friend with what grace he might—to the sorrowful bewilderment of Anne-Maria—who recognized in him "the male of her species," but dared not admit it even to herself.

She started ever so slightly when half an hour later Jim came up the hill, calling a gay greeting to them. Ansell waved him away imperiously, then, finding him stock-still and staring, burst out with a stamp of the foot: "Go back! Don't you see we are not to be interrupted?"

"Jim, you've saved my life!" Anne-Maria cried joyously, holding out her left hand to him. The right was numb from clutching the sword.

"What's up?" Jim demanded, possessing himself of the other hand. "Is it a game or an endurance contest, or what?"

"I think it is the game of my salvation," Anne-Maria said under her breath.

Ansell pushed in between them, saying masterfully: "You have lost, young person. I claim as my forfeit—this, taking her right hand forcibly from Jim's clasp.

"You spoke first!" she cried, snatching away her hand.

"I had to," Ansell retorted.

Jim looked dazed. "There is—speaking and speaking," he began. "I have to do some of it—here and now. Madame Eton has asked me to stand brother to Miss Anne-Maria. As such, I call you to account. To my sure knowledge you are making love to the French woman, and all the while engaged—here."

"Who says it?" Anne-Maria demanded, her eyes shooting sparks.

"The madame herself," Jim answered steadily.

"She is mistaken," Anne-Maria returned, her voice steely. "I am not engaged to Ansell Risley—what is more, I never shall be."

"H-m! Will unsealed proposals be considered?" Jim asked with twinkling eyes. She smiled at him, dropped her head upon his shoulder and murmured softly, holding up her lips: "You had better seal right here."

Jim needed no second prompting. Ansell rushed away scowling madly. Jim called after him tauntingly:

"Better play safe hereafter. Both ends against the middle is too risky, even for a genius."

HARD TO ACCOUNT FOR FIND

Scientists Puzzled Over Location of Jawbone of Animal Discovered Beneath Big Boulder.

Workmen engaged in removing a 10-ton field boulder which is to mark the American Legion lot in Mt. Wollaston cemetery came across a strange find. When the boulder was lifted, after hard work, from its bed at the edge of a piece of swampland at the bottom of a small hill in South Quincy, the workmen found part of the jawbone of some animal. A large double tooth, wonderfully preserved, the enamel of which shone with considerable luster, was imbedded in part of the jaw.

The size of the tooth indicated that the animal must have been of considerable size, but how it got under the rock was what puzzled the workmen.

The big boulder was so firmly imbedded in a rocky strata it did not seem possible any animal could have burrowed under, because the rock on which the boulder rested was as firm as the boulder itself.

The only explanation the contractor could give was that this big boulder might have topled over from the hill above many years ago and crushed to death some animal that was standing or lying down there. No other traces of the animal were found. The tooth was given to James E. Burke, secretary to Mayor Whiton, who selected the boulder in the first place as a marker for the legion burial lot. The nature of the ground and the size of the stone made it a difficult job to get the boulder out where the truck could receive it. It was necessary to construct a temporary bridge over a brook and drag the big stone over heavy timbers to keep it from sinking in the mud.—Boston Herald.

Ancient Rome Clean City.

The modern Rome is built on the site of the ancient field of Mars, a spot no less venerable than the Olympic stadium, where the Romans practiced the gymnastic exercises which, as among the Greeks, contributed not a little to their military fame.

The city, after it was rebuilt (for the Gauls burned the greater part of it), was gradually improved; yet it always contained many houses of wood and many of bricks; the streets were irregular, for the most part narrow, and the houses very high. The law, that none of those in the principal streets should exceed 70 feet in height, was introduced in the time of Augustus, who established regulations for security against fires. The oldest work that has been maintained from the time of the kings to the present day are the astonishing Cloaca, which preserved the cleanliness of the city. The aqueducts remain from the time of the consuls.

SEEKING NEW WEALTH.

Old Prospector Tells of Adventures In North Land.

During the Klondyke rush of 1898 a steam launch built at Racine, Wis., was designed to burn oil as fuel in the hope of taking it to the Mackenzie river for prospecting purposes. It belonged to the Holt party. This party consisted of twelve men, Captain Holt, an Austrian, three Frenchmen from Paris, three Germans, one American, two Canadians and two Englishmen. All had miners' certificates.

This party formed at Athabasca Landing and they made it a rule that every one of the party should be an expert at something—an assayer, an engineer, a blacksmith, a musician, or something. The party were originally outfitted with horses, but later decided to sell their horses and take to the boats. We started down the river with two years' provisions and one of the finest outfits ever got together, including a portable sawmill, blacksmith's forge and tools, assayer's outfit, medicine chest, books to read, and so on. All was loaded on three scows, one steamboat and the oil-burning launch.

At Fort McMurray, we stayed several days to dry out our outfit. Here we had trouble. Mr. Boke, one of our party, declared that we were wasting too much time, and wanted to pull out from the party. Boke asked me to leave the party and go with him. He said that he had picked up with an old prospector and that the three of us could handle the scow and make better time. I talked with Col. Henry and he said, "You stay with us, John. If you go with them you will never be heard of again; that man Boke has picked up with knows too much for Boke. He is an educated man. I have no doubt that he is a college professor and that he is only pretending to be a miner." So I stayed with the party. Boke got his share, including one scow, and pulled out with the professor, and as far as I know of neither was heard of again. I made inquiries at every post in the country, so I suppose that they went down during a storm on Great Slave Lake.

Later at Fort Smith there was another row as to who owned the steamboat, and we woke up one morning to find the steamboat and two more of our men gone. So I suppose it, too, went down in the lake. Nobody seems to have heard of the steamboat after it left Fort Resolution.

This left us with two scows and the launch. At Fort Resolution our party divided again. My od friend, Henry, and the three Frenchmen remained there for the winter. This left us with one scow and the launch. So I pulled out with the only remaining three of the party, crossed Great Slave Lake, went down the Mackenzie as far as Fort Simpson. Here was another row. Two wanted to go up the Liard river; I wanted to go down the Mackenzie, and the other didn't mind much which way so long as we kept on going somewhere. So we kept together and went up the Liard river as far as we could go and wintered there, calculating to cross the mountains in the spring! When spring came we decided to go down the Mackenzie and cross the mountains at Fort McPherson, but on reaching Fort Simpson my three friends decided to turn back and get out of the country. I was then alone, but did not want to go out yet, so joined the Hudson Bay Company and stayed in the country two years later.

Our steam launch, the first oil burner on the Mackenzie, had changed hands several times and was finally abandoned at Fort Norman. Here I took the engines out and abandoned the launch at a spot which later turned out to be the oil fields of the north. The engines were later used to run the electric light plant at Fort Simpson.

There is a cropping of coal in the bank near Fort Norman. I tried to see if the coal would burn. It did burn slowly. I then threw the ashes into the river and thought that the fire was out, but on my return next year, I found it all ablaze, and volumes of smoke piping out from behind the bank. I climbed up the bank and saw a large hole which was caved in and from which the smoke was coming. Captain Mills of the steamer Wrigly said, "You have done a fine thing now; you have set fire to the country." I was alarmed, but my old friend, Mr. Johnson, laughed as much as to say that it did not matter much.

The country is rich in mineral. Some things I know such as galena, are in unlimited quantities. There are traces of gold, mica, iron, copper and pitch-blende. When I left the country I took samples including some black crystal, of which at that time I did not know the nature. I went to Butte City to have a look at the copper mines there, and got in touch with the miners. They told me that the black crystals were pitch-blende.—J. Trewhella in the Toronto Mail and Empire.

Forest Fires.

Nearly 70,000,000 feet of timber was burned by forest fires in British Columbia in 1921, according to figures by Hon. T. D. Pattullo, Minister of Lands. The number of forest fires fought during the summer of 1921 was 1,330, an increase of 6 per cent. over 1920. The fires burned over a total area of 145,800 acres, killing a total of 68,076,110 feet, board measure, of which 39,500,000 feet is salvable. The net stumpage loss is valued at $73,000. About three-quarters of all fires were extinguished before they had grown to ten acres. Thus, of the 1,330 fires fought, 554, or 41.6 per cent., were extinguished before they reached a quarter of an acre, 436 or 32.8 per cent. before they reached ten acres.

Further figures show that 1,160, or 80 per cent. of the fires were extinguished before they had done damage to the extent of $100; 134, or ten per cent., before they did $1,000 worth of damage, and only two per cent. exceeded $1,000 damage. The total cost of fire fighting was $98,500, as compared with $257,126 in 1920, Mr. Pattullo announces. The average cost per fire is thus $74 as compared with $205 in 1920, and $139 in 1919.

Campers are still chiefly responsible for fire outbreaks in the forests of the province, Mr. Pattullo's statement adds. Careless campers have caused 308 or 23.2 per cent. of the total fires. The remainder were caused by railroad trains, lightning and industrial operations in the order named. Slash destroyed during the year amounted to 74,800 acres, compared with 53,500 acres in 1920. During the year over 1,200 miles of trail were cleared and constructed.

LINEMEN UNEARTH COFFINED REMAINS

Discovery Near Kent Bridge But no Clue to the Burial by Road

Chatham, Ont., July 11.—Telephone linemen working on the Longwood Road about a mile west of Kent Bridge while digging a hole to insert a dead log as an anchor for a heavy pole discovered the skull of a human being. Further excavations were made and it was found that a body had been buried along the road in a rough coffin made of walnut timber. It was discovered four feet from the top of the ground.

High Constable Peters of this city was notified, and in company with Captain Squarebriggs, went to the scene and superintended the excavation of the body. It was that of a full-grown person and had evidently been in the ground for some time, judging from the decayed condition of the timbers of the coffin. The body was reduced to a skeleton but all of the bones of the body were present in good condition.

No one in the neighborhood knew anything of the burial, and after considerable inquiry, Constable Peters decided that it was not a case for official action. Some of the bones and a sample of the wood of the coffin was brought back to the city and the remainder of the body was reburied near the spot at which it was found.

ARDENTLY CHAMPION FAD OF BOBBED HAIR

Calgary Council of Women Advise: Girls to Ignore Critics

Calgary, July 10.—After being ridiculed, laughed at, talked about and generally made fun of, Canadian "flappers" will be glad to know that at least they have some sympathizers who are not against the bobbing of hair.

It is declared to be a strictly personal matter by the Local Concil of Women.

Girls so inclined have been advised to go ahead and bob it regardless of what the newspapers or the men have to say about it, and if they lose their jobs because of the length of their hair the Local Council will stand behind them in their protests.

Men, it was most emphatically declared, have no right to dictate to women how they shall wear their hair. "I wonder what would happen if we started in telling the men how they should do their hair?" was asked by several speakers at a recent meeting.

The decision followed a rumor that Calgary employers were discharging girls because of their abbreviated tresses.

"ORANGEMEN ON WAR PATH"

Says a French-Canadian Paper in Commenting on "Glorious 12th"

Montreal, July 11.—As if in anticipation of the celebrations throughout Ontario to-morrow the 12th of July, La Presse published the following editorial:

"All changes here below, all except the fanaticism of Orange lodges. In winter as in summer, rain or shine, through prosperity or misery, at all times, wherever he is to be found, the Orangist, faithful to his tools' bauble (fancy) has but one idea, one worry, to protect liberty and equality from the ambuscades which the Roman Church is incessantly putting in their path to destroy them. There is to be found in all votaries of Orangism that invincible conviction, marked by a constant and furious propaganda, that two great forces are at war in this world. Catholic, agents of the devil, and menacing by their tyranny all of humanity, more particularly that portion of humanity which is Anglo-Saxon. On the other side are the Orange archangels, who have been summoned to protect this self-same humanity from the cataclysms by which it is threatened from 'papistry.'

"In Canada, Orangemen have one particular nightmare, the separate schools. This ghost, which allows no respite to our leaguers, provokes intermittent spasms, more frequent than ordinarily during the month of July, on the eve of the traditional commemoration of the Battle of the Boyne, which, to them, is the dominant event of history, that from which dates the liberations of the Anglo-Saxon world.

"This year a profusion of circulars have been scattered in western Ontario urging lodge members to a crusade against the granting of special privileges for the especial benefit of a section of the Canadian community, a situation which outrages the democratic principle of equal rights for all.

"Thus are we warned, the Orangemen have disinterred the tomahawk and have taken the war path.

GREAT DISASTER IS RECALLED

When North Country Was Swept by Fire and Towns Were Wiped Out

Yesterday was the anniversary of the worst disaster that ever came to the great hinterland of Ontario. It was on the morning of July 11, 1911, that the northern evergreen forests, overheated by many days of scorching heat, burst into flames which, driven by a wind of unusually high velocity, swept like the crack of doom over miles of territory, sweeping before it forest, town, village, prospector's camp, mines, and settlers' homes by the hundred.

The morning of that day was such as to give one an uncanny feeling. The heat at sunrise made even ordinary breathing difficult and the air was stagnant with an awful calm. Everyone gave up any thought of work save at working to keep alive.

Disaster Broke at Noon.

Suddenly, toward noon, it came. At first like a cloud upon the western horizon, and even while people were debating as to whether it was a rain cloud or smoke the disaster was upon them.

At between 25 and 35 miles an hour it came, jumping over rivers, lakes and valleys, blackening the sun with the awful pall of smoke, through which the lurid illumination of the flames showed forth, and threw itself upon the towns with death in its clash.

It will be remembered that the mines at Hollinger, the Dome, West Dome. South Porcupine, a town of about 2,000 population, was completely demolished in 11 minutes. People were burned to death in the streets, drowned in the lake and suffocated in mine shafts. In all, the known deaths were over 100, and many are still in the list of missing.

Schumacher, South Porcupine, Pottsville, Golden City (part of), Cochrane, and many other towns were completely destroyed.

To-day the centres so badly marred by these events are the busy trading places of a large new portion of our Province, which looks forward to the day when it will surpass in agricultural and commercial activities that portion which we now call Old Ontario.

BELGIANS ADMIT BRITISH LOYALTY

Course to be Pursued With Russia Agreed Upon at The Hague

The Hague, July 11.—Whatever truth there was in the wildest rumors which have been circulating in the last 48 hours around conference circles, especially relating to a separate agreement between the Russians and Great Britain, everyone is now ready to deny the same. The result of these rumors is that all the delegations are closer together. Another result is that a unanimous silence is agreed on by all delegations, and a more reserved attitude toward the Press in general.

Generally speaking there is more optimism noticeable in Franco-Belgian circles and a feeling of relief as though some great crisis had just been passed. I am convinced, moreover, that Great Britain has had occasion to show her loyalty to the other delegations, who appear greatly satisfied.

Baron Cattier, head of the Belgian delegation, made the following statement to your correspondent:

"As far as I am concerned, I am convinced that all the rumors regarding separate agreements have not the slightest foundation, and that all the powers here represented keep very loyally together and keep the other delegations informed of all that happens, and that so far the unity of front is perfect.

"We had a meeting of the first commission this afternoon, and we all agreed on the course to be pursued in the negotiations with the Russians."

SKELETON FOUND OF RIVER DRIVER

Remains in Algoma Are Thought to Have Lain There for Ten Years

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 11.—The skeleton of a middle-aged small-sized man, thought to be a river driver working on the drive at Root river some ten years ago, was found by Donald Carrwell a farmer lad, between the Root River bridge and the A. C. R. track, 10 yards from the road. No papers were found in the weather-worn clothes to disclose any means of identification.

The boy came across a pair of river-driving shoes protruding from a pile of leaves and moss, and, removing the debris, found the skeleton in a crevice between a rock and a hardwood tree. The clothes were weather-worn, while a felt hat completely faded, was placed on the rock near by. In the pockets of the man's clothes were a pipe, a razor and two combs.

Evidently the man had lain down in this crevice and died, for no bones were broken and there were no signs of a scuffle of any sort. The body will be buried in the Tarentorus Cemetery.

EX-SEVICE WOMEN BECOME MEMBERS OF BRITISH LEGION

London, July 12.—The British Legion has at last decided to admit ex-service women to membership on the same terms as men. Hitherto they have been debarred from becoming full members.

Non-combatant men who served in the Red Cross with the colors for seven days, and native-born and naturalized British subjects who served for seven days with Britain's allies, are admitted provided they are not conscientious objectors. The hope is expressed that women who are eligible will take advantage of the removal of all barriers against them, and join up with the legion in their thousands.

VALERA DID NOT APPEAR AT FUNERAL OF BRUGHA

Dublin, July 11.—The suggestion that Eamon de Valera might make a dramatic appearance at the funeral of Cathal Brugha did not materialize. The Republican chieftain, however, is believed to be in Dublin.

While the body of Brugha lay in the mortuary chapel at Mater Hospital six young women, wearing uniforms and carrying rifles, acted as a guard of honor.

Anna's Merciless Critic

By CORONE REMINGTON

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

It was not surprising that Anna Terhune should try writing for the movies. Everybody but the entirely illiterate and the abjectly lazy has tried it, is trying it or is going to try it tomorrow. Most folks experiment in film fiction because they fancy themselves a bit clever.

Anna, however, was prompted to that endeavor only because she was sure she was a little less stupid and a good deal less badly educated than Hazel Hazelhurst; and Hazel, so all Hillsburg was one morning informed by the Herald, had written and sold to the Imperial Films company a scenario called "Flaming Swords and Bleeding Hearts." Afterward Anna had seen the film herself, with the subtitle, "Story by Hazel Hazelhurst," as big as life.

It was an amazing thing to Anna, because Hazel, a spinner girl in the silk mill where Anna was a stenographer, had left school of her own volition at thirteen and was the kind of girl who talks slang exclusively, chews gum on the streets and goes to 10-cent dances.

If it were really true that inarticulate people like that could get hundreds and hundreds of dollars for just tacking together a few ideas and sending them to a film company, then Anna felt she was doing herself an absolute injustice by not trying her hand at this fairy game of chance. She would do it.

Wherefore, within the next six weeks, Anna by dint of much mental toil evolved three stories. Each was neatly typed and dispatched to the Colossal Photoplays company, at New York. And each, about a week after its departure, came back as unerringly as a homing pigeon. With each was enclosed the same printed form, stating that the Colossal company "regrets that the material submitted is not exactly suited to its present needs."

It was just at this time that the National Fabrics company decided to close down its Hillsburg plant for two weeks for "readjustment purposes." Anna, receiving assurance from the manager that she would not be affected by the readjustment proceedings, found herself with a fortnight's vacation on her hands.

She determined that the way to discover something about this scenario game, meantime, was to go to the place where it is played. So she made the first trip of her life to the metropolis, procured as comfortable a furnished room as New York's fantastic prices made possible to her limited purse, and set out next day to "learn the game."

Anna expected to get speech with a couple of scenario editors, at least, and to obtain from them some words of advice and suggestion; also, probably, to secure permission to visit a studio or two and witness screen drama in the making. She went to the Colossal's establishment first.

From a red-headed typist at the portal of the scenario department Anna received disillusionment. The scenario editor wasn't to be seen. Nobody was to be seen, except by appointment. A million people a day wanted to see somebody about scenarios. Anyhow, Mr. Highland was out. The associate editor was out, too.

Anna was on the point of beating a discomfited retreat when Ted Maltby, under inspiration to have an early lunch, emerged from an inner room. Ted, one of the Colossal's keenest scenario readers, nevertheless was a departmental joke for his softness of heart toward the genus "writing nut." He stopped, looking inquiringly at the red-headed girl and toward Anna.

"'S lady wantsta see somebody 'bout script writin'," volunteered Red Head, vastly bored.

"Perhaps I can be of service," offered Tom. The proffer was made in sacrificial kindness, but as Anna Terhune's face lighted in acknowledgment Ted whistled, mentally, in delighted surprise. "A regular girl!" he inwardly congratulated himself—"after, oh, Lord, these many hundreds!" Then, to Anna, "I am one of the readers—Maltby."

Anna told him her name. "Of Hillsburg?" Ted asked. "I have read several of your scripts lately."

"Oh, I'm so glad!" exclaimed the girl. "Then you will be the very person to advise me. That's what I have come for, you know."

Maltby experienced the sudden sense of depression that comes to him who is unexpectedly called on to break the news to the family of the victim. "I shall be delighted," he managed to [illegible] however. "I was just going over to Forty-fourth street for much coffee and little food. Would you care to come? It's a wonderful place to talk."

New York is not Hillsburg, even on one's first day. Anna, quite to her own astonishment, accepted the invitation with no more ceremony than had accompanied its extension. Ten minutes later they were sitting, in the camaraderie of old acquaintanceship, at a little undraped table in the presence of a negligible luncheon and miraculous Brazilian brew.

"Now," said Ted, "I'm going to play the heavy—just mere plain brute. You've come to New York to get set right in this stunt of screen writing. You've had your scripts sent back and you've made up your mind to find the reason why and how to correct your faults. That's it, isn't it?"

lieve that I am animated by the sincerest, if quite sudden, friendship. There is only one thing for you to do about this work."

"I think I know what you are going to say," Anna interjected. "You're going to tell me I must start all over—begin at a beginning, somewhere—and learn the craft, just as any other must be learned."

"Wrong. Quite wrong. The only thing for you to do is to drop it. Quit it. Forget it. You'd never make a screen writer in a thousand years. There! I've said it—and mighty hard it was to say. I've read all the stories you've sent in. There's nothing the matter with them—except that they are hopeless. You're not a writer—I think you're a doer. You're not an imaginer of make-believe romances. If you'll pardon me, I think you're a million times more surely intended to live a real one. I don't believe you ever had any actual conviction that you could write—I can tell that from your stuff. I wish you would tell me just how you came to undertake it."

So kindly, so admiring, so ardently friendly and concerned were the big brown eyes of her merciless critic that Anna could feel no resentment. The only surprise she experienced was in not being surprised at all. And she told him, plump, about the Hazel Hazelhurst episode.

"My better judgment tells me you are wholly right, Mr. Maltby," she went on. "And yet how do you explain the success of that illiterate girl? If it were not for that one thing I could laugh at the whole idea—and devote the rest of my vacation to 'seeing New York' and having a good, wholesome time."

At the mention of the name Hazelhurst, Maltby had started imperceptibly. Now he looked at his companion for half a dozen long seconds before he answered. "I hate to spoil your Hillsburg celebrity's small glory," he said at length, "but in the person before you see the original and only Hazelhurst, author of 'Flaming Swords.' I alone am guilty of that atrocity—and my only excuse is that I needed the money. And you, Miss Terhune, aside from the lunatic who bought and produced it, alone know the shameful truth."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed Anna, "do you mean that that girl at home merely lied—claimed the picture when she saw the name in a movie magazine or somewhere?"

"Your imagination improves, Miss Terhune," grinned Ted.

"Do you know how I feel?" demanded Anna suddenly. "Well, I feel as though some one had lifted a ton weight off my shoulders. I'm going straight home and tear up those foolish manuscripts and give three cheers and go to a perfectly good show!"

"Why not make it the shops this afternoon and the show tonight?" supplemented Ted eagerly. "I—I'd mighty well like to take you."

As they parted at the Broadway corner it wasn't disappointment that went along with Anna — disappointment doesn't sing in your heart. And Ted Maltby, looking after her, said to himself: "Two weeks. Well, many a pippin of a story has been built in less than that."

Shepherd's Excuse.

Although shepherds have always been held to be poetical and reasonably righteous persons, they never have much opportunity to go to church and so when a shepherd in Sussex, Eng., dies, a lock of wool is put into the coffin, so that when their record is looked up on the judgment day they may present this supreme excuse, writes a correspondent. Sussex is rich in quaint superstitions. If there are any "wild feathers"—feathers from game birds—in a pillow one cannot "die easy" on it, but lingers on in pain. It is unlucky to sell bees, but if a price be paid it must be in gold or hay. When the head of the house dies the bees are "told" and a piece of crape hung on the hive.—Montreal Family Herald.

Seventy Pounds of Meteor a Minute.

Our planet is getting heavier and heavier! How does that happen? Because of the meteors that are constantly falling on it. You may not have seen any of them fall, but the earth is a large place. In a year eleven thousand four hundred and thirty-five tons of meteors fall! This gives an average of seventy pounds per minute.

Much of this tonnage comes in the form of fine meteoric dust that settles all over the earth. However, a large meteor—too big to burn on entering our atmosphere—falls occasionally. Several years ago one of them fell in Iowa and exploded on hitting the earth. Over five thousand pieces were picked up and some weighed over four hundred pounds.—Popular Science Monthly.

Limited Time.

Don't ever get the idea that Catalina island is a slow place. Had you been close to the rock where Big Ben hangs out, on a certain recent Sunday evening you would have overheard the following:

"Mary, if I were to speak to you of marriage in spite of the fact that I only met you on the way over from San Pedro, what would you say to it?"

"Well, I might say never put off till the return trip what you might have said on the way over," answered Mary.—Los Angeles Times.

ONLY MET MOTHER FORMALLY

Empress of Austria Was "Received" by Her Children in the Most Approved Manner.

Unless she gave 24 hours' notice the beautiful Empress Elizabeth of Austria, consort of the late Emperor Francis Joseph, was forbidden by the iron etiquette of the court to see her own babies.

They were strangers to her practically from the day of their birth, and in his book, "Royal Romances and Tragedies," Charles Kingston tells how once an elderly physician ventured to suggest to the emperor that if Elizabeth saw something of her children she might awaken out of the melancholy trance into which she had fallen.

For a time Francis Joseph angrily declined to vary the rigid rule which required her to give notice of her intention to the chamberlain.

Even when the visit took place, it was not a case of happy little children welcoming their mother with cries of delight. First the royal governesses had the children dressed in stiff, ceremonial clothes, and then drilled in the way they were to receive their mother. On the appearance of the emperor, therefore, the tiny tots, who under the Austrian system of education had no chance to be human, simply bowed as though they were elderly courtiers, the only sign of childhood being their terrified stares at the august lady.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Stretching Span of Life.

The publication of a monumental work by Viscount Bryce at the ripe age of eighty-three should persuade many of us who want to feel what it is like to be an octogenarian that old age can be attained without the aid of thyroid glands borrowed from the monkey, says a writer in the London Chronicle.

One of the secrets of old age would seem to be a lifetime of intellectual activity, and a lion's share of public service. It is quite astonishing the number of public men living at the present day who have passed their eightieth birthday. Lord Chapling is in his eighty-first year; Viscount Morley is eighty-three; Mr. Frederic Harrison is close on ninety; Sir Henry Poland is still a vigorous letter writer, ninety-one, while the earl of Halsbury is ninety-seven, and possibly there are others.

The "Hampton of Macedonia."

Three miles from Saloniki, on an 85-mile-acre farm, is the "Hampton of Macedonia," the Thessalonica Agricultural and Industrial institute. The Survey says that it is "one of the outposts of American education in a country which, recently freed from the Turk, needs just that combination of idealism and practical training for agriculture and small trades for which Hampton college is famous here. A quarter of the students are orphans and refugees; they represent ten nationalities and will be the future missionaries of the 'American idea of cooperative constructive work.' While much of the work, by its very nature, is self-supporting, the last few years of unrest and exceptional costs have thrown the school into debt; and a new dormitory is urgently needed to accommodate more boys."

ARE KNOWN BY THEIR HATS

Variety of Headgear Distinguishes the Various Tribes in the Capital of Persia.

Every city, town or district of any importance in Persia is sure to have representatives at the capital, Teheran, and there are picturesque representatives of numerous tribes as well. The readiest means of distinguishing the latter is by their headgear, says a writer in the National Geographic Magazine.

The Kurds, of which there are 600,000 in the country, wear hats which look for all the world like huge, inverted black coffee-pots bound round with gay silk handkerchiefs. The Bakhtiaris, from the mountains in the direction of the British oil fields, in southwestern Persia, whose chiefs maintain a numerous retinue in Teheran, wear white felt preserving kettles. In fact, a dissertation on masculine Persian headdress (women are not allowed to wear hats) would give a ready key not only to recognition of the different races of Persia, but even of the different classes of society, since hats are rarely removed except when the owner sleeps, and vary in appearance and dimensions from the huge, pillowlike turban of the mollah, or lady's woolly muff of the Persian Cossack, to the round, brimless felt or lambskin cap worn by the middle and upper-class urban residents.

In Ante-Bellum Days.

The Waterloo Democrat prints the following copy of a sale bill of 1850—71 years ago—the like of which was never seen in this neck of the woods, says an exchange:

"Having sold my farm and intending to move to Missouri, I will sell at public sale 1 mile west and four miles south of Harrisburg, Kentucky, Saturday, September 28, 1850, the following described property, to-wit: One buck nigger 23 years old, weight 210 pounds; 4 nigger wenches from 18 to 24 years old; 3 nigger boys 6 years old, 18 nigger hoes, one pine sled, 6 yokes of oxen well broke, 10 ox yokes with hickory bows, two ox carts with 6-inch tires, 1 saddle, three double shovel plows, 10 and 12-inch, 26 1-gallon whisky jugs, 100 gallons of apple cider, 1 barrel of good sorghum, 2 barrels of soap, 2 barrels of kraut, 1 extra good nigger whip, 2 tons of tobacco, 2 years old. Terms: cash. I need money.

POPULAR SUICIDE

The United States Government has a short and effective way of dealing with strikes and tarikers when they threaten the well-being of the people and the commerce of the nation. To suspend the entire railway system of a continent is a very serious interference with the life of millions of citizens, and those responsible for such an undertaking are enemies both to the State and the individual members of it which they are supposed to represent.

A complete suspension of the railways of America for a day would mean the loss of millions of dollars to the country, and if extended indefinitely would bring disaster and starvation to thousands of people in the large cities, especially those who have no reserve and who live from hand to mouth.

It is difficult to conceive the type of mind that could plan such a plot against the nation in the name of Democracy. All strikes hit the poor first of all, because the poor are without defence against sudden changes in the regular order of things. Those who have a bank account, and have a little put by for a "rainy day", are not immediately affected by strikes, and in all probability their livelihood is secure by reason of their fixed positions in business concerns. It is the man who is employed from day to day that suffers first, last and all the time by strikes that are instituted in his name.

The coal strike in the United States has lingered now over several months, and there does not appear to be any sign of a settlement. Owing to the fact that it was started at a time when a cessation of work in the coal mines would not affect the country generally, little attention was paid to the walkout. But the year is getting on and the colder weather will be upon the people in a few months. Coal is the only ammunition with which the inhabitants of these northern lands can fight the winter.

President Harding has this fact in view in taking action to bring the coal strike to an end. He proposes an immediate resumption of operations on the old wage scale, pending an investigation by a commission which shall determine a temporary basic wage scale to be effective March 1st, 1923.

While this proposal is made in a conciliatory way, it is understood that it is the final attempt of the Government at compromise before direct action is taken to operate the mines. The Canadian people will join with their neighbors across the line in wishing more power to the President's elbow. We must have coal if all the unions and combines in creation have to go to kingdom come.

BAD BUSINESS

A serious indictment was made against certain civic officials, and against certain Aldermen or ex-Aldermen, at the meeting of the City Council on Monday evening, when a report was presented by Alderman Patterson of an inspection of the Dundas street sewer. Mr. Patterson states that there was not only bad workmanship, and in some instances no workmanship at all, but that the very granting of the contract was irregular—to put it mildly. He says:

"Apparently the contractor was not the lowest tenderer on this job. I do not know whether he put in a tender at all, but apparently he was given the opportunity of taking this job at the exact price that was submitted by another contractor. The contract is not dated nor is it signed by anyone having authority from the city to do so. It is also not sealed and no specification is attached. Neither has the customary bond or security been put up for faithful performance of contract. This is just another instance of how the city is suffering from lack of some one in authority to supervise all the various departments."

No city can carry on its business in this loose and dishonest manner and expect to prosper, and the sooner the citizens exercise the franchise in a free and drastic fashion the better for the name and prosperity of Belleville. No business concern in the city would be able to carry on under such management—or lack of management—and yet here is the biggest business of all being conducted in a slip-shod manner that would bring anything but a public organization into bankruptcy. It is time the conscience and the brains of Belleville began to function.

MY LOVE DWELT IN A NORTHERN LAND.

(By Andrew Lang.)

My love dwelt in a northern land,
  A dim tower in a forest green
Was his, and far away the sand
  And gray wash of the waves were seen,
  The woven forest boughs between.

And thro' the Northern summer night
  The sun set slowly slowly died away,
And herds of strange deer, silver white,
  Came gleaming through the forest gray
  And fled like ghosts before the day.

And oft that month we watched the moon
  Wax great and white o'er wood and lawn,
And wane with waning of the June,
  Till, like a brand for battle drawn,
  She fell, and flamed in a wild dawn.

I know not if the forest green
  Still girdles round that castle gray,
I know not if the boughs between
  The white deer vanish ere the day:
The grass above my love is green,
  His heart is colder than the clay.

PRESS OPINIONS

POLITICAL UNCERTAINTY

New York Times

It is obviously a time of glorious political uncertainty. The prophets of highest repute are everywhere ducking. They have seen too many "sure things" go wrong. The organization oracles are dumb. Nobody can tell how the American electorate is minded or where it is headed. Daniel Webster said when told of the nomination of General Taylor: "After this, no American is safe from being named for the Presidency." A fortiori for a senatorship.

GOVERNMENT'S FUTURE NOT BRIGHT

La Patrie considers that the King Government has passed through its first Parliamentary session unscathed—its experience has succeeded, at all events, to this extent—it has not conducted the Government to a condition of chaos. "But its success is not one which will excite the public to much enthusiasm. Nothing decisive has been accomplished. Throughout the session it was notorious that neither the Progressives nor the Conservatives were anxious to defeat the Government, so that the Cabinet was able extract from the situation just sufficient strength to impose a certain measure of its will upon Parliament. It is hardly likely to happen again that both the opposition parties will be passively disposed, and obtain from provoking an appeal to the people. In the present strength of parties, the presence of three parliamentary groups may have the effect of completely paralizing the working of the Government machine for any length of time."

WIT AND HUMOR

Financial Outlook

"Why do you object to children in the houses which you have to let?" "As a matter of kindness. People who are raising families can't be expected to pay the rent I require."

The Lesser Evil

Schoolmistress: "Tommy, what did you disobey me for?" Tommy: "Cos I thought you'd whip me." Schoolmistress: "What did you want me to whip you for?" Tommy: "'Cos pa said he would if you would not, and he hurts."

Too Impulsive

"My wife was feeling ill this morning, and asked me to send for the doctor, but I reminded her that the sales were starting, and she felt better at once." "But wouldn't it have been cheaper to send for the doctor?" "Ah! I never thought of that."

Cheerful Intimation

"My dear," said Mr. Haxley, when he went home one evening. "I've something important to tell you—a receiver has been appointed to take charge of my affairs." "How nice!" cooed Mrs. Haxley. "I should like to know when he will hold his first reception?"

Brief Consultation

Doctor: "Good morning, what can I do for you?" Young Visitor: "I—I called, sir, to ask for the hand of your daughter." "Humph! Appetite good?" "Not very." "How is your pulse?" "Very rapid, when—when I am with her—very feeble when away." "Troubled with palpitation?" "Awfully when I think of her." "Take my daughter; you'll soon be cured. One guinea, please."

A Sudden Resolve

"I've decided on a name for baby," said the young mother. "I shall call her Euphrosyne." Her husband did not care for the suggestion; but being a tactful fellow, he was far too wise to say so. "Splendid," he said cheerfully. "The first girl I ever loved was called Euphrosyne, and the name has very pleasant memories for me." There was a brief silence. Then: "We will call her Elizabeth, after my mother," said the young wife, firmly.

Mistaken Identity

Montgomery Wells was choosing a uniform for his new chauffeur. "Chocolate and cream, scarlet and gray, emerald green? We have every shade and variety of cloth," suggested the alert assistant. Montgomery was drawn this way and that in making a final selection. Eventually he decided on a uniform of orange and royal blue. "I prefer this," said Montgomery pompously; "but it's rather expensive." "If you prefer it, have it," decisively answered the expert salesman. "After all, it's your governor who pays!"

"BLACK CABINETS."

Letters Coming to Canada From Germany Are Opened.

Any official connected with the post office will be the first to assure you that the sanctity of private correspondence is never violated; yet the actual truth is that there is no post office in the world which has not its so-called "cabinet noir," or Black Cabinet, where letters from suspected persons are opened and read.

Just lately we have been hearing much about the number of letters coming from or through Germany which have been tampered with. It is supposed that the Germans are after commercial secrets, rather than political information; but whatever the cause, the fact that the recipients can recognise that their letters have been opened shows great clumsiness on the part of the German post office.

The French are particularly expert at this business, and have a complete outfit for opening envelopes, abstracting their contents, and even for removing and reproducing seals.

Really careful pasting up of an envelope will render simple steaming out of the question. In such a case one side of the envelope may be cut open with a very thin, sharp steel blade, and afterwards skilfully gummed together.

Again, the stamp may be removed, a slit cut beneath it, then an instrument not unlike a corkscrew is inserted and twisted round so that the sheet inside can be drawn out in a narrow spiral roll.

For removing a seal another thin blade of steel is employed, which is heated and passed under the wax. The whole seal is afterwards replaced bodily.

It is said that the only letters which cannot be opened by the skilful officials of the Black Cabinet are those which are enclosed in two separate envelopes, the inner smaller than the outer. The smaller one is smeared all over with paste before being put inside the larger.

Another scheme for the person conspiring to outwit the German P. O. is to post his letters in the envelopes of some well-known commercial firm, and to send the letter under this cover to some friendly third party.

"Squire" Hunt of Elgin.

Of all the county magistrates in Ontario with records of long service, few have had more picturesque careers than "Squire" Frank Hunt, of Elgin. The squire is a familiar figure at the St. Thomas Court House, and naturally well known in that city, while lately he has extended his acquaintance largely to London, the result of improvement of the motor roads from the latter city to Lake Erie through the County of Elgin. It is the good-humor and other striking characteristics of the squire, however, which make him known to the public, rather than the severity of his court dealings.

Squire Hunt, who lives at 52 William street, St. Thomas, was born in Montreal, of Irish parentage, in 1841. At the age of 81 he is brisk and active, and has a reputation for being quite as well read in law as the best criminal lawyers in the district. It is 60 years since he showed an inclination toward the study of law. He was engaged in the blacksmithing trade at St. Thomas at the time, his education being largely self-acquired. Following his period of blacksmithing, Magistrate Hunt was in turn a school teacher, oil speculator, contractor, merchant, newspaper reporter, editor, railroad foreman, alderman, and finally a preacher. He was a candidate for mayor of St. Thomas in 1885, being defeated on the central market question. He had previously served as councillor and deputy reeve of Southwold Township. The squire is well known throughout the county largely for his connection with politics. His voice has been heard on Liberal platforms in a score of Federal and Provincial campaigns.

The Friendly Arctic.

It is the absence of glaciers which makes the difference between the North and South Poles and gives the Arctic the "friendly" disposition towards man which Mr. Stefansson has divulged in his new book "The Friendly Arctic." "If you travel seven or eight hundred miles over land from the glacier-infested south coast northward you come to the prairies bordering the Alaskan north coast," says Mr. Stefansson. "On the great triangular coastal plain of 50,000 square miles there are no mountains, consequently no glaciers. The explanation is that Northern Alaska is low, flat land with a precipitation so light that the snow which falls in winter is all thawed away in the spring." Hence the prairies which remind the explorer of English meadows. The Arctic grass lands, he says, have caribou in herds of tens of thousands and sometimes hundreds of thousands to a single herd, with lesser numbers of musk-oxen here and there. There are the polar foxes, both white and blue, that feed in summer on the unbelievable swarms of lemmings that also form the food of thousands of owls and hawks and gulls. There are the goose and brant and swan and crane and loon and various species of ducks. When you add to this picture the bumblebees, bluebottle flies, and abundant insect life of which the clouds of mosquitoes form the most impressive and least tolerable part, you get a picture of a country that in summer certainly is not without life.

The ability of grasses to withstand continued pasturing is due to the fact that the leaves are being pushed up or grow from the lower or attached end. Nibble off or cut off the upper portion of the grass leaves and the leaves will lengthen again and again so long as there is warmth, food and moisture. With the clover plant it is different. If this type of plant is cut or eaten off new buds must form, unfold and grow into stem bud and leaf. Clovers if pastured will not yield in feed more than a fraction of what such would produce if the plants were permitted to develop fully. The fact that the bitten blades of grasses will push up high enough after a few days to produce a second and a third bite makes it possible to pasture grasses with no injury to them. With reasonable care and management the grazing of grass areas may go on indefinitely.—L. Stevenson.

How Some Things Happened

SOME QUAINT LEGENDS AND SUPERSTITIONS

By Janet Read

A flat nose may seem to some a strange token of Divine approval, but the negro accounts for his in this way:—

God made the negro of clay, and held him in His arms, looking at him with delight. He said, "You are very good!" and, so saying, He smoothed the still moist clay from the forehead downwards with His hand. With flattening results!

Uncle Remus Explains.

The difference in the colors of the races is explained by "Uncle Remus" in Joel Chandler Harris' book, when called upon to say why the palms of his hands and the soles of his feet are white:—

"Way back yander. In dem times we wuz all un us black; we wuz all niggers togedder. .... Den de news come dat dere wuz a pond er water some'rs in de naberhood, which if dey'd git inter dey'd be wash off nice en white. En den, one un um he fine de place, and make a splunge inter de pond, en come out white. En den, bless grashus; w'en de folks seed it dey make a break fer de pond, en dem what got in fust, dey come out white; en dem what got in next, dey come out merlatters; en dere wuz such a crowd un um dat dey mighty nigh use de water up, which when de udders come erlong de most dey could do wuz ter paddle about wid der foots en dabble in it wid der han's. Dem wuz de niggers, en down ter dis day dere ain't no white 'bout a nigger 'ceppin' de palms er der hands en de soles er der foot."

The negro's kinky hair is due to the same cause. The water in the magic pond straightened the hair of the lucky people who got in first.

The Creation.

The story of the creation of man is thus related by the Red Indian:—

The Great Spirit one day took some clay and fashioned it into the likeness of a man. He then built a fire, and left the image to bake while he went hunting. But the chase was a long and weary one, and when the Great Spirit returned he found the image burned as black as a coal. He viewed it with disgust, and, kicking it away towards the South, he said, "Go and dwell there! You are no good!"

Then he took some more clay and fashioned another man. But in his anxiety not to burn a second, he removed the image from the fire while it was still a pale and sickly color. "You are no better," he said, kicking it towards the cold North. "Go and dwell there!"

And then he made a third image, and baked it so carefully that it came from the oven a beautiful rich red. The Great Spirit gazed on his work with joy, and said, "You are very good. Stay here with me!"

The Anger of the "Crawfishes."

From the negro plantations comes a quaint story of the Deluge, caused, not by the wrath of God with the wickedness of men, but by the anger of the "crawfishes" at being snubbed by the bigger beasts. According to "Uncle Remus" again, the "animals en de beasteses" agreed to have a meeting to lay their petitions before the lion, the king of beasts, who took the chair. All the animals became much excited, and in the heat of some dispute the elephant trampled on one of the crawfishes. The comrades of the latter were very indignant, and tried to complain to the chairman, but everyone was so busy attending to his own affairs that no one took any notice of the small petitioners. Presently the elephant squashed another crawfish, which made the other representatives of the clan madder than ever, and very frightened. All attempts to call attention to their grievances being unnoticed, the crawfishes began to bore down into the ground, and bored deeper and deeper until they unloosed the fountains of the earth, which thereupon welled up and drowned all the others. 'And all because,' as the negro philosopher says, "they let on among themselves that they were bigger than the crawfishes!"

Sacred Legends.

There are some pretty good legends connected with Christ's sojourn in the world. For instance, the two black marks behind the head of the haddock are those left by the finger and thumb of St. Peter when, in obedience to the command of our Lord, he took up the fish and opened its mouth to find the piece of tribute-money. It says much for the firmness of the Apostle's grip that the descendants of the haddock all bear "St. Peter's Pinch."

At the time of the entry into Jerusalem Christ sent two of His disciples—

Saying unto them, Go into the village over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass tied, and a colt with her: loose them and bring them unto Me .....

And the disciples went ...... and brought the ass, and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and they set Him thereon.

The dark mark on the back of every ass shows where Christ sat for His journey to Jerusalem.—John O'London's Weekly.

Bottled Sunlight.

An electric lamp which will burn for three years without current has been invented.

This new product, which is described by manufacturers as "bottled sunlight," is the work of an Italian engineer, J. Tomadelli. The secret of its mysterious property is guarded very carefully. Those responsible for its manufacture even state that armed detectives are on duty night and day around the experimenting factory.

The lamp is described by its inventor as a "self-sustaining, incandescent electric light, that will burn a long time without connection with any source of electric supply other than itself. The light itself," he adds, "is radiated from a minute metallic candle of secret composition."

The lamp is said to produce its light without the generation of heat, the temperature of the bulb never rising above 10 degrees Fahrenheit, instead of 100 degrees, as in the case of an ordinary metal filament lamp.

It can be made in any size or power, from the household lamp to powerful arc lights suitable for cinema projection and street lighting. The cost of the lamp for household use is estimated at about $3, and it is expected to be on the market soon.

Forced Its Way In.

"And yet he seems to have accumulated money. Fortune appears to have knocked at his door."

"I don't believe she merely knocked; she must have broken in."

Woman's Sphere

MY MOTHER

By Florence Howard Wolcott.

We read about the mothers of the days of long ago,
With their gentle, wrinkled faces and their hair as white as snow;
They were "middle-aged" at forty,
and at fifty donned lace caps,
And at sixty clung to shoulder shawls and loved their little naps.
But I love the modern mother who can share in all the joys,
And who understands the problems of her growing girls and boys;
She may boast that she is sixty, but her heart is twenty-three—
My glorious, bright-eyed mother who is keeping young with me.

OUR DAUGHTERS' FUTURE

What is to be done with that proportion of our million excess of women which needs and desires employment? I see that one correspondent suggests that women who have money enough to live on should not work. But, as a working woman whose life has been sweetened and made light and easy by work, I protest against refusing any woman the right to work as long as she can do capable work and desires to do it.

There are all sorts of things girls may be and are; but there is not enough to go round; and meanwhile the boys and young men are going to the Colonies. In Ireland, from which I write, where there is no excess of women, one whole class of girls is going to be left, because unfortunately, despite the generous dreams of Mr. Griffith the young men of one whole class are going.

They comprise the young men who served in the war. The emptiness of Dublin of the Irish gentry, the sons of the Irish gentry who used to bring the wind and the sea into Dublin streets, is lamentable. And Ireland is full of big families, of whose sons the war took a heavy toll, where daughters were trained for nothing but the accomplishments:— a knowledge of horses, of gardening, of country things generally, would fit many of them for Colonial life—but—they have to see the men going.

There is something which will have to be reckoned with, I have observed in the finest of the young women, working for themselves, a proud standing aside from the natural joys and hopes. They are learning to do without men and marriage. Since they will not enter the contest they are coming to a disinclination for courtship and marriage, and they are of the best of their kind.

We are told that there is only rough work for women in the Colonies, that the finer women are not wanted. Well, our educated and trained women are doing work which might well be more distasteful to the natural woman than work on her own farm or in her own house. Dentistry, nursing, doctoring even, are not always pleasant occupations, though the alleviation of pain may, and certainly must, have its appeal above all else for the chosen women, so that natural repugnances are forgotten.—Katherine Tynan, in the Times, London.

MIDSUMMER MILLINERY

Midsummer millinery is of great interest this season, exhibiting as it does so many novel and attractive features in the way of trimming ideas and general coloring.

As the season advances it is to be observed that the brown tones in millinery are becoming increasingly popular, and are newer than the mauve-blues and the reds which were so much in evidence earlier in the season, although these continue to be well liked. As regards the green shades, quite the newest tints are apple-green and reseda. Jade-green, which has been so much exploited as a smart color for headgear, no longer holds the first place in respect.

Amongst the yellows, very charming is that novel tint known as mimosa, a lovely and becoming pale yellow shade which is much admired at the present time. The vogue for black and white combinations is also exemplified in many attractive chapeaux this Summer.

Most alluring are the new straws which are featured in such variety. Hats of timbo straw, or of yedda or tagal, are very popular, the brims of such hats being in many smart models bound with satin or taffeta, or sometimes with the straw itself in a matching color. Such brims are frequently of the novel type, which is very wide at the sides, whilst the front and the back are quite narrow. Milan straw, by the way, which is so much liked for Summer millinery, is reported to be very scarce this year, and is, in price.

Very interesting are the combinations of straw and felt that are featured this Summer. In many attractive models of his order, the hat itself is of very light-weight straw and is trimmed with felt. Such trimmings may consist of felt bands around the crown, or perhaps, of a bow or a quill, flowers or leaves, made of felt. Hats of this order are particularly well adapted for wear with the town suit. —Millicent Sutcliffe in The Sunday World.

DOROTHY DALTON, HAROLD LLOYD AND MARIE PREVOST AT GRIFFIN'S TO-NIGHT

Dorothy Dalton, popular Paramount star, is appearing on the Triple star bill at Griffin's tonight, in her latest starring vehicle, "The Crimson Challenge." This is a powerful Western photoplay filled with appeal and thrills.

Charming Marie Prevost in "The Dangerous Little Demon" is the second feature offering on the same program, this little star, graduating from bathing girl comedies to "flapper" roles in full-length features, has attracted a considerable following among fans, and her latest offering, the best vehicle she has appeared in since she was made a star will prove a delight to her many admirers.

"Among Those Present," a three reel Harold Lloyd comedy is being exhibited on the same program.

GLORIA SWANSON AND MILTON SILLS HERE TOMORROW

A story of romantic quality, with that continental flavor which has been imparted to most of her stories by Mme. Elinor Glyn, is included in "The Great Moment," in which Gloria Swanson and Milton Sills appear at Griffin's tomorrow to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday.

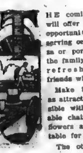
The story opens at an orgy in St. Petersburg when a British aristocrat is captivated by and marries a woman from the plains of Tartary-a Gypsy. The latter leaves him a daughter, Nadine, and in this role Miss Swanson has one of the greatest of her screen career.

The tempestuous nature of her mother is transmitted to the child; the longing for the nomadic life is an inborn passion and she takes the Knight Bayard of history, "without fear and without reproach," as her ideal. A love story follows—a vivid, colorful, perfervid romance, the story shifting across oceans and continents to America and the wilds of Nevada. Later the scene of the story is taken up in Washington and the strict life of the capital. The story is one of great dramatic force and the situations are as thrilling as they are numerous.

A 2 reel Century comedy, George Walsh in the latest chapter of "With Stanley in Africa" and a beautiful Travelogue have been arranged for exhibition on the same program.

MAKE PORCH A DINING ROOM

BY BERTHA SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.



THE coming weeks will offer plenty of opportunities for serving on the piazza or porch, either the family meals or refreshments to friends who call.

Make the porch as attractive as possible with comfortable chairs, rugs, flowers and a good table for serving.

The other necessary things are tall glasses for iced tea or cocoa, punch glasses for punch light but serviceable trays and any other of the many additional things which make porch serving attractive.

It is quite possible to serve a variety of cold drinks at home instead of allowing the family to purchase them at soda fountains. Sugar and water boiled five minutes to make a syrup may be kept bottled and always ready for sweetening beverages.

There are many bottled fruit juices as grape juice, loganberry and pineapple; but lemon and orange juices are always better when fresh from the fruit.

Charged waters add greatly to punches and fruit juices. A siphon of soda is a great addition to punch and will give it the necessary sparkle and effervescence.

A small amount of ice cream, fruit juices or chocolate and sugar charged from a siphon will make an ice cream soda equal to that which one buys.

An easy and an excellent drink is made by mixing equal parts of ginger ale and grape juice. Serve from a pitcher.

Small cakes and cookies may be kept on hand and sandwiches made at a moment's notice. Thus prepared one may offer porch hospitality at any time.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

From his tone the assumption was not unwarrantable that Staff had never yet done anything that he had subsequently found cause to regret. Pensively punishing an inoffensive wrist, Iff subsided.

A steward showed himself in the doorway.

"You rang, sir?"

"Are you our steward?" asked Staff.

"Yes, sir."

"Your name?"

"Orde, sir."

"Well, Orde, can you stow this thing someplace out of our way?"

Orde eyes the bandbox doubtfully. "I dessay I can find a place for it," he said at length.

"Do, please."

"Very good, sir. Then-Q." Possessing himself of the bandbox, Orde retired.

"And now," suggested Iff with much vivacity, "s'pose we unpack and get settled."

And they proceeded to distribute their belongings, sharing the meagre conveniences of their quarters with the impartiality of courteous and experienced travellers. . . .

It was rather late in the afternoon before Staff found an opportunity to get on deck for the first time. The hour was golden with the glory of a westering sun. The air was bland, the sea quiet. The Autocratic had settled into her stride, bearing swiftly down St. George's Channel for Queenstown, where she was scheduled to touch at midnight. Her decks presented scenes of animation familiar to the eyes of a weathered voyager.

There was the customary confusion of petticoats and sporadic displays of steamer-rugs along the ranks of deck-chairs. Deck-stewards darted hither and yon, wearing the harassed expressions appropriate to persons of their calling—doubtless to a man praying for that bright day when some public benefactor should invent a steamship having at least two leeward sides. A clatter of tongues assailed the ear, the high, sweet accents of American women predominating. The masculine element of the passenger-list with singular unanimity—like birds of prey wheeling in ever diminishing circles above their quarry—drifted imperceptibly but steadily aft, toward the smoking-room. The two indispensable adjuncts to a successful voyage had already put in their appearance: item, the Pest, an overdressed, overgrown, shrill-voiced female-child, blundering into everybody's way and shrieking impertinences; item, a short, stout, sedulously hilarious gentleman who oozed public-spirited geniality at every pore and insisted on buttonholing inoffensive strangers and demanding that they enter an embryonic deckquoit tournament—in short, discovering every known symptom of being the Life and Soul of the Ship.

Staff dodged both by grace of discretion and good fortune, and having found his deck-chair, dropped into it with a sigh of content, composing himself for rest and thought. His world seemed very bright with promise, just then; he felt that, if he had acted on impetuous impulse, he had not acted unwisely only a few more hours—then the pause at Queenstown—then the brief, seven-day stretch across the Atlantic to home and Alison Landis!

It seemed almost too good to be true. He all but purred with his content in the prospect.

Of course, he had a little work to do, but he didn't mind that; it would help immensely to beguile the tedium of the voyage; and all he required in order to do it well was the moral courage to shut himself up for a few hours each day and to avoid as far as possible social entanglements. . . .

At just about this stage in his meditations he was somewhat rudely brought back to earth—or, more properly, to deck.

A voice shrieked excitedly: "Why, Mr. Staff!"

To be precise, it miscalled him "Stahf": a shrill, penetrating, overcultivated, American voice making an attempt only semi-successful to cope with the broad vowels of modern English enunciation.

Staff looked up, recognized its owner, and said beneath his breath: "O Lord!"—his soul crawling with recognition. But nothing of this was discernible in the alacrity with which he jumped up and bent over a bony but bediamond hand.

"Mrs. Ilkington!" he said.

"R'ally," said the lady, "the world is very small, isn't it?"

She was a lean, angular, inordinately vivacious body whose years, which were many more than forty, were making a brave struggle to masquerade as thirty. She was notorious for her execrable taste in gowns and jewelry, but her social position was impregnable, and her avowed mission in life was to bring together Society (meaning the caste of money) with the Arts (meaning those humble souls content to sell their dreams for the wherewithal to sustain life.)

Her passion for bromidioms always stupefied Staff—left him dazed and witless. In the present instance he could think of nothing by way of response happier than that hoary banality: "This is indeed a surprise."

How to Make the Most Delicious Cherry Jam You Ever Tasted

New Certo process astonishes housewives

Never fails—requires only one minute's boiling—retains all the color and flavor and makes more jam from same amount of fruit.

Cherries are now plentiful at a low price, sugar is cheap and housewives are putting up cherry jam and jelly as never before. The reason why is that the brand new and revolutionary Certo Process for making jams and jellies has eliminated every reason why any housewife should hesitate to make these delicious conserves. Anyone can now easily make a perfect cherry jelly, at a very low cost, with all the flavor and color of the fruit retained.

The new Certo Process for making cherry jam is very simple: Use sour cherries only, for finest flavor. Stem, pit and thoroughly crush about 2½ lbs. fruit. Measure 4 level cups (2 lbs). crushed cherries into large kettle and add ¼ cup water. Tie 2 heaping tablespoonfuls pits in cotton cloth and crush with hammer. Place in kettle with cherries, stir till boiling, cover kettle, simmer 15 minutes, then remove pits. Add 8 leveled cups (3½ lbs.) sugar and mix well. Stir mixture hard and constantly and bring to a vigorous boil over hottest fire. Boil hard one full minute, stirring continually. Remove from fire and add 1 bottle (scant cup) Certo, stirring it in well. From time jam is taken off fire let stand 5 minutes only, by the clock, before pouring. In the meantime skim and stir occasionally to cool slightly. Then pour quickly. This makes about 11 half-pound glasses of jam. For making cherry jelly, see Certo Book of Recipes.

The former guesswork or worry of making jam or jelly is now past. The Certo Process is endorsed by government authorities and cooking experts; it insures perfect results with every batch. Jam and jelly made this way keep perfectly. It is also very economical, never requiring more than one minute's boiling, and thereby makes two-thirds more jam or jelly than the old method. It also makes all kinds of jam or jelly, some you have never tasted before, like raspberry jelly and rhubarb jam, or unusual combinations like strawberry and pineapple, etc. Many housewives are exhibiting with no little pride the new flavors and better quality of jams and jellies made with Certo. Certo always pleases.

Certo is absolutely pure — contains no gelatine or preservative. It is Mother Nature's "jell-maker." Housewives, experienced and inexperienced, have received it with open arms because it is so certain, so economical, so simple and so useful. They are recommending it to all their friends. Ask some of your neighbors about it. Try it right away with fresh fruit like cherries, currants or raspberries. Then you will do all your preserving the new and modern way, the easy, economical, and better Certo process.

Send us your grocer's name and we will mail you a book of fifty-three recipes. If he does not have Certo, we will mail a bottle to you on receipt of forty cents. Douglas Packing Co., Ltd., Cobourg; W. G. Patrick & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

WINNIPEG DISTRICT HAS HEAVIEST RAIN OF YEAR

Winnipeg, July 10.—This district received its heaviest precipitation of rain so far this year over the week-end and crops derived considerable benefit. During Saturday night almost an inch fell, while to-day another inch and a half was reported in a downfall. The rain is believed to have been fairly general in the province.

BABY BORN IN AUTO NEAR CHATHAM

Chatham, July 10.—A baby girl was born in a couple on the Dresden road a few miles from this city yesterday. The mother was being driven to Chatham but something went wrong with the car and it stalled at the side of the road—the stork arriving soon afterwards. Mother and child are doing well.

CHINESE FACTIONS FIGHTING IN MEXICO

Mexico City, July 11.—Chinese settlers in the State of Sonora have been engaging in a sanguinary warfare for several months and so serious is the situation that a petition has been sent the federal government to order the immediate expulsion of the leaders of the two principal Asiatic factions.

The Chinese National League in Sonora has been at odds for several years with the members of Chinese Free Masonry in that state and numerous mysterious murders and other crimes are charged to the activities of these two organizations. State officials believe that a wholesale deportation of agitators will clear the atmosphere.

FORCES OF SUN YAT SEN IN FLIGHT TO THE SEA

Pekin, July 11.—U. S. naval advices received here state that the forces of Sun Yat Sen, deposed president of South China, were defeated in a battle fought July 9, at Whampoa, near Canton, and that Sun escaped down the river towards the sea with three cruisers still remaining loyal to him.

Advices received yesterday under a Canton date recorded Sun Yat Sen's flight after a bombardment by forts in Chen Chiung-Ming's control and the blowing up of Sun's ammunition dump at Whampoa by Chen's shells.

COMMONS GIVES APPROVAL TO WASHINGTON TREATIES

London, July 10.—The Washington Treaties Bill, ratifying the pacts signed at the Washington Armament Conference, today passed the Committee of the House of Commons without amendment.

ARABS ARE AROUSED OVER PALESTINE

London, July 11.—A manifesto, accusing the British Government of violating its pledges of selfdetermination to the Arabs after they fought for the Allies, has been issued by the Arab delegation which has been in London since last August and which was reported yesterday to have been ordered to return to Palestine because of its expressed opposition in behalf of the Arab inhabitants of Palestine, to the British mandate.

The Arabs protest against a Zionist policy in a country where only seven per cent. of the population is Jewish and only two per cent. speak Hebrew. They also are against the Ruthenberg concession, which they say, "gives Ruthenberg and the Zionist organization a strangle-hold on the economic life of Palestine."

GERMANS FOUND COLONIES IN SOUTH RUSSIA

Warsaw, July 12.—Thousands of German ex-service men are founding colonies in South Russia, according to reports published here from Odessa. In the neighborhood of the latter city large tracts of "nationalized" land have already been taken up by these colonists at the invitation of the Bolshevik government. Within the next two years the Soviets plan to establish 100,000 of these German colonists in South Russia.

PONTIFF FIRES COOK

Milan, July 11.—Pope Pius XI. has excommunicated from the company of his domestic servants the cook who had been with him during his tenure of office in Bologna, Milan and at the Vatican.

Pius XI., whose simple domestic habits are discussed by the Roman Press, is in the habit of paying for each meal as he takes it, just as he would do in a restaurant, thus facilitating the keeping of his household accounts.

Recently on a bill presented to him by the faithful cook was an item for a chicken priced at 20 lire; of this the Pope had eaten only one-half, and he therefore gave instructions that the remaining half should be served up as chicken croquettes. The croquettes appeared at the same price of 20 lire.

At this the Papal sense of decency was greatly shocked and the cook was sent for and dismissed.

DO NOT FIX REMAINING GAMES

So Says Sandy Lockington Whose Motto is "Play the Game"

Speaking of the present standing in the C.O.A.B league, Mr. Sandy Lockington hands out in his paper, The Guide, some real timely talk as follows:

It's a case now of "you know me, Cobourg." Cobourg plays in Peterboro today and Lindsay goes to Cobourg on Saturday. As Cobourg is out of the running, the games are of no value to them so far as the championship is concerned, while a loss for either Peterboro or Lindsay puts them out of the running and gives the championship of the first section to Oshawa. Here is an opportunity of a lifetime for Cobourg to demonstrate to the sporting world just what true sportsmanship is and we feel sure they will do it. Play the game today and next Saturday with the same determination as was shown in the Oshawa-Cobourg game of Saturday last. If Peterboro or Lindsay can come through with a win, all well and good, we will take off our hats to them, but we do not want to see any fixed battles. Let the old familiar phrase, "play the game," be exemplified to the letter in the next two important matches.

SANDY ALWAYS HAS THE LAST WORD

Mr. Lockington and the Port Hope team should not be down-hearted because Oshawa put over 9 runs in one innings. The major league record (since 1900) for the greatest number of runs in one inning is 14, scored by New York against Washington in 1920. The Port Hopers did not have to take the brunt of a world's record.—Lindsay Post.

We haven't either victory or record, answers Sandy. Had Oshawa scored 15 runs in one inning we could have taken Washington's place in the records of the sporting world, but that miserable old nine runs that they tallied simply leaves us down and out. A case of when you're half way up the hill you're neither up nor down.

POLICE UNCOVER BOLSHEVIK PROPAGANDA

Warsaw, July 12.—The Warsaw police have uncovered here an organization for the spreading of Bolshevik propaganda among school boys. Twenty-four boys under 20 years of age have been arrested, and the papers seized reveal branches of the organization all over Poland.

WORSHIP GOD FIRST SUNDAY NOT FOR GOLF

Bishop Farthing Pleads With Golf and Motor "Cranks" Not to Neglect the Church

Montreal, July 11.—An appeal to churchmen to regularly attend divine service on Sunday, even if it does entail abandonment of motor trips or golf games is made by the Bishop of Montreal.

In part the message is as follows: "We want you to join with us in getting every available member to worship God on the Lord's Day. The church will never be strong in her work until her members are regular and devout in their worship together. It means self denial; but are we not all called to self denial? It means "cutting out" the motor trips; it means "knocking off" golf and tennis during the hours of service on Sunday.

"I am not pleading for a Puritan Sabbath. I am not asking that we should be the slave of every unreasonable crank, so that we must not do anything to which anyone objects. I am asking that each one should put the worship of God first, and that we should each do those things which will strengthen our influence for Christ. I do not say that any of these things I have named are wrong on Sunday; that must be left with the conscience of each one to judge for himself."

Natalie's Misplaced Sympathy

By LILLIAN H. CROWLEY

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Natalie Jones was a bitterly disappointed girl. She had been so truly in love with Paul Lester, and now everything was over between them forever! She never would love any one else, never could love him again. Perhaps it was just as well to find out that he was a dictatorial brute. Brute? Yes, he was a brute to intimate that she was a selfish butterfly who didn't care for her fellow beings. He could go on with his old philanthropy for all of her. She didn't interfere when he spent lots of his time in the slums—but why should he think she ought to spend her time there?

Of course, he didn't say just exactly that, but it was what he meant. She was taking part in the bridge tournament and couldn't go and see the woman he asked her to visit when he had gone out of town.

Of course, everybody was sorry for poor people!

Anyway, she would show him that it wasn't anything wonderful to be called a philanthropist. She'd show him that she could do just as good work in that way as anybody. Not that she wanted to placate him; she didn't; but just to show him. Then, when she had done a lot of good work he could come to her on bended knees begging her forgiveness, and she wouldn't grant it. She never could love Paul again!

Natalie had no distinct plan for going out into the world as a humanitarian, but she would find a way. She lay on the couch, moody and unhappy. She knew her heart was broken and there was no use in anything. Still, one thing remained—she would show Paul. Her pride demanded that.

"Natalie, dear," said her mother, coming into the room dressed for the street, "I have just had a disappointment. Mrs. Smith cannot help me at the Women's club this afternoon, and I am forced to call upon you."

Natalie's first impulse was to refuse to go, then—"Why, yes, mother, I'll help you. What is it?"

"We are having Mr. Fleming, the director of music in the public schools, give demonstrations, with the children of the work taught in the schools. I need you to take charge of the groups of children and start them to the platform in their turn."

Natalie went with her mother and before she realized it she was intensely interested. Then she spied a little boy, about seven years of age, with the most beautiful face she had ever seen. He was wonderful. He was like a young St. John. He kept perfect time and sang with unusual intelligence. Tears came to her eyes when she noticed his clothes. He had on the vest and trousers of a suit several sizes too large for him; his shirt sleeves were rolled up to the elbow, his trousers reached to the floor, and he wore no coat.

"Poor little fellow," she thought, "how he must suffer to go dressed so grotesquely when all the other little boys in his class are dressed in good taste. His people must be very poor and these clothes are handed down from an elder brother. I'll buy him a suit myself! I'll take charge of him and see that he gets the right things to wear while he is so little."

Her heart filled with joy at the thought of helping the dear little fellow. She ran to the teacher who had charge of the class and asked his name and address.

She had to leave before the class had finished, to keep an appointment. But she thought constantly of the boy.

The next morning she started off to find the place where the boy lived. She was surprised when she again read the address, for it was in a very good part of town. "There may be some old run-down houses there," she thought.

She could hardly believe her eyes when she saw the home. It was almost a mansion. She compared the number over the door with the number of the address on the card given her by the teacher. They were the same.

There was only one thing to do—go up and inquire. The door was opened by a maid in embroidered cap and apron.

"Can you tell me where I may find the parents of little Bernard Limoges?"

"This is Mr. Peter Limoges' residence, madam."

"But the poor little boy? Does he live in the neighborhood?"

"Master Bernard Limoges lives here. He is in school now. Would you like to see his mother? She is in."

"You don't understand. I am not looking for any one here. I am only inquiring for a poor boy. See, this is his name and address." Natalie showed the card to the puzzled maid. A beautiful young woman came into the hall and said to Natalie:

"Won't you come in, please, and tell me about it?"

Natalie, all apologies, accompanied the young woman into a richly furnished drawing room.

"I'm afraid I've made a mistake. Let me tell you how it happened." She told about the lovely boy in the clumsy clothes. "I am so sorry for him and want to help him."

The young woman's face, which had worn a look of astonishment at first, gradually changed to a look of relief, and then to one of quiet amusement.

"You haven't, at all. I hope we may be friends and that you will like me as well as I like you. To think of your concern for Bernard. It's beautiful."

Natalie arose to go.

"Wait a little, here comes my husband and the architect who is doing our new country home. They have been down there for a few days. I want you to meet them. My husband," she heard the voice of her hostess.

Natalie offered her hand. Then "Miss Jones, allow me to present Mr Lester." It was Paul! She bowed coldly, although she was in a fever of fright. Where was the plan she had had for scorning Paul after proving her ability to do noble deeds? She had brought about this humiliating fiasco! She would escape at once.

"I must tell you how Miss Jones and I became acquainted." Mrs. Limoges addressed the two men. Then followed the whole story. Natalie was trapped. Her shaking limbs would hardly hold her. Paul gave her a long and searching look. Her blazing cheeks told the story of her utter confusion.

Again she started to leave.

"I shall drive Miss Jones home." Paul said to Mrs. Limoges, and taking Natalie's unresisting arm hastened to the waiting motor. Inside he said, "Sweetheart, you are the dearest and sweetest thing on earth and I am a beast and a villain!"

"Don't you dare to call my future husband names," Natalie replied.

The motor was not started for several moments.

False and True

By MARTHA McC. WILLIAMS

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"Why did they call me Linnet? Of all names! The rest of the world is saddest when I sing!" Linnet Ware said plaintively to her newest victim, Selden Moore.

He laughed, softly answering, "Praise be for that. In this day of musical prodigality, you're an oasis."

"In a desert of melody? Thanks for the kind words," Linnet flung back, settling herself comfortably in a nest of rainbow cushions. Yet even they could not make her look washed out, so vivid was the yellow of her hair, the violet of her eyes, the healthy scarlet of her very perfect mouth. Her skin had the texture of a camellia petal—she was further shapely, and extra well finished. There was a look of race to accent all this.

What wonder that she had gone rather to the heads of her countrymen—at least that moiety of them lucky enough to know her? This in spite of the fact that she danced without enthusiasm, was a dub at tennis, and refused even to look on at golf. Polo she loved—but sex and convention forbade playing it. So she took to going cross-country in any weather, never flunking the stiffest jumps, nor minding hazardous spills.

The spills were few—she had apparently as much influence over hunters as over men. Anything bittable became pliant to her will after a few miles—to the disgust of Amazonian horsewomen who got results with malice aforethought. She was so confoundedly, so confoundedly feminine, with her side saddle, her soft collar, her picturesquely untidy tam that had always a bright knot tucked amid its folds. It was disgusting to have her almost always in the first flight, and not winning prizes solely through refusing to compete for them. She mounted herself well but not extravagantly. "Any good horse will go—if you get the best in him," she explained more than once. Which moved her much tired mother to add: "If only you'd be as sensible about men as horses, it would take a load off my mind and heart."

Being interpreted, this meant, concretely, a shrinking estate, and the Wendell King millions. All through Linnet's bringing up Mrs. Ware had had the millions in the back of her mind. Retrieving them was poetic justice, since they had been unjustly diverted from Linnet's father through his elderly uncle's marriage with the beautiful Widow King.

He had settled them upon her in the first flush of infatuation—when the pair went down with their ship upon a long wedding tour, the wrong was put beyond righting. Wendell, a quiet, kindly, dull-witted lad of fifteen, had inherited them from his mother in trust for possible children. So it had been out of his power to do more than make handsome gifts to the Wares.

Linnet, an elfin, no-colored child, had appealed only to his pity until at fifteen she bloomed with that beauty of the devil which works so many evil miracles. Seeing her round and flush and glow, his plan of life changed. When she was twenty she must marry him, and begin a fairy tale existence. Until then let her play to her heart's content—he knew he could trust her—besides, there was her mother.

Mrs. Ware was far from heartless—indeed, love for her child was the spur to her worldliness. She said nothing to Linnet of the future beyond advising a wise choice if any. She knew Linnet would rebel against a cut-and-dried family arrangement—much better let her continue to think of Wendell as a liberal pseudo-kinsman who regarded her as a child to be teased and spoiled. When she had had her fling playing with the youngsters Linnet might sensibly drift into love with her doting fairy godfather.

Linnet showed a zest in playing with the youngsters equal to her zest cross-country, yet until the era of Selden Moore her mother had never been the least uneasy. For her girl had played the game with the fine reserve of a gentlewoman, making her safety in numbers and surrounding herself with an aura of untouchableness beautiful to see.

But Moore was different. Toward him she glowed as a gem, a star—often when he had left her she sat silent, smiling happily or rousing to hug her mother tight and whisper: "Is there anything like real love?" Moore was only rich enough to be a competent idler. Living was, he said, business enough for a gentleman—wherefore why swamp himself with the risks and the turmoil of active work, when he was so much more valuable as an example of moderation?

Linnet scarcely sensed the question, but her mother pondered it deeply. To her it meant either that Moore had no thought of marriage, or that his wife needs must bring with her an income equal to his own. Linnet could not do that—already living expenses were trenching upon their modest principal—she must either marry money or become a drudge, else a pensioner upon Wendell King.

Impossible to think of either alternative—so impossible Mrs. Ware lost sleep and flesh in considering them. Watching Linnet narrowly, she noted a subtle change in her. She laughed more and smiled less—was by turns overeager and overlistless—also, she had no more joy in playing the game of hearts. A bad sign, thought the anxious mother, especially now that she was well past nineteen.

She had not found Prince Charming, plus even a scant million—it was unlikely that she would find him before Wendell King required a decision. She could not blame him—he had been almost unreasonably patient and trustful. He would not try to force Linnet's inclination, but it would hurt him sorely to find he had waited in vain.

She sat thinking things over upon a stormy afternoon when Moore was the only caller at tea time. Despite a lovely flush of greeting Linnet had gone to the window and stood looking wistfully out into the rainy murk. Suddenly she said: "I wish everybody could be home now, warm and comfy, with dry feet and good dinners ahead. That's what ought to be—"

"Agreed—we'll make it so—when we come into your fortune," Moore said teasingly. "We may not have to wait very long—I heard yesterday the insurance folk are worrying a lot over Uncle Wendell's million-dollar policy."

"I don't know what you can mean." Linnet cried, coming toward him white and shaking. "He mustn't die—he is so good—I'd rather die myself——"

"What! When you're his only heir?" Moore bantered.

Mrs. Ware looked at him fixedly. "You are—misinformed," she said drily. "Wendell King could not leave Linnet his fortune—it is strictly entailed, failing direct heirs, it goes to distant cousins."

Moore's face was a study. "I—I am—sorry—I thought I knew," he said, stumblingly. "Now I must be going. Au revoir."

Linnet did not hear him. She was at the phone calling breathlessly a number her mother smiled to hear. She shut her ears against her daughter's voice, but her heart sang at the timbre of it—something new and wonderful rang there. Presently Linnet came to her, becoming like a rose, to say: "Mother, he is perfectly, splendidly well. We are to dine with him and go to the opera. I'm so happy, hug me tight."

"You are going to be happier, darling," the mother murmured softly—in her heart a mute thanksgiving that her daughter's heart had gone through the false to the true.

MYSTERIOUS BODY OF WATER

All Sorts of Queer Beliefs Cluster Around What is Known as Wonder Lake, in Alaska.

"I think the next thing I wanted to speak of was Wonder lake," says H. H. Lumpkin, writing of "A Hike in Alaska" in Boys' Life. "It is not such a tremendous sheet of water. Not nearly so large as many other Alaskan lakes, being some three miles long by a half mile wide. It lies in a sort of depression, its surface about three or four hundred feet above the level of Moose creek. Its bed was evidently scooped out by glacial action somewhere back in those dim ages they tell us about. You can see, even now, the evidences of the glacial moraines. Some plow, those glaciers!

"Now, here are the things they tell of that lake. One, that it has fish so large that a specimen that a man hooked pulled him out of the boat into the lake. If that isn't a good fish story, then you try to go me one better. Other stories that I think are well authenticated are these: That in winter, under the ice is heard a rumbling, groaning sound. So much so that, although the winter trail lies straight across it, the Indians refuse to travel it, and go all the way round. That in summer there rise periodically great bubbles of gas of some kind, that bubble, and bubble, and finally die away. I talked with those who have seen this phenomenon. Then two things I found for myself. First, the lake is very deep. It is sparkling and clear, and shelves rapidly, a few feet from shore, to an unknown depth. Second, it does teem with fish, because I saw them, although I do not know the variety, for having no proper tackle, we did not catch any. The ones I saw would average two to three pounds. No monsters. But who can say what may inhabit those sparkling depths? Ugh!"

Few Pence Once Day's Wage.

The use of beaver in making hats came into being about 1200, for Chaucer mentions it. Flanders turned out the first. Hatters' guilds began to appear in England, and apprentices were taught the art of making felt hats and decorating these. Nine cents a day was then a hatter's wage.

In the Sixteenth century the first hat stores began to do business, and hats, heretofore as widely decorated as poetic fancy, began to be standardized. In other words—style began to rule. By 1600 styles were very changeable. Shakespeare's plays speak of varied types of hat then worn.

Our Books and Ourselves.

We should ask questions of our book and of ourselves; what is its purpose; by what means it proceeds to effect that purpose; whether we fully understand the one, and go along with the other? Do the arguments satisfy us; do the descriptions convey lively and distinct images to us; do we understand all the allusions to persons or things? In short, does our mind act over again from the writer's guidance what his acted before; do we reason as he reasoned, conceive as he conceived; think and feel as he thought and felt; or, if not, can we discern where and how far we do not, and can we tell why we do not?—Dr. Thomas Arnold.

Education In Iceland.

It is said that the population of Iceland is wholly literate—no small accomplishment in a country so sparsely settled. The outstanding fact of the educational system is that parents are responsible for teaching their children the elementary subjects. All children from ten to fourteen years old must take examinations every spring to show that they have completed the work of one grade, regardless of who has taught them. If they do not pass, the educational committee may have them taught at the expense of the parents or guardians.

Longevity of Birds.

The Chief of the Biological Bureau in the United States is able to give the ages to which some birds have lived. The following are his figures: Thrush, 15 to 25 years; swallow, 9; canary, 20; cardinal, 21; raven, 69; magpie, 21; large owls, 68; golden eagle, 46; white pelican, 41; cormorant, 23; large blue heron, 60; swan, 102; mallard, 29; other ducks, 11 to 23; oyster-catcher, 30; herring gull, 44; and wandering albatross, 46 years.

PLAN TO RENEW LIFE BY GLAND OPERATION

Austrian Biologist Has new Method for Rejuvenation

Berlin, July 11.—A film made under the direction of Dr. Eugen Steinach, the noted biologist of Vienna, and illutrating in detail his method of rejuvenation is now being completed here.

The method embraces a simple operation on certain vital glands, and the essential difference between it and other youth-renewing operations is that Dr. Steinach makes no transplantation of animal glands or substances.

In the film, which is being made in a specially constructed studio, 1,500 guinea pigs, cats, rats, dogs, monkeys and horses are shown in process of rejuvenation by the process.

The film is expected to be finished soon, but Dr. Steinach has been forced to return to Vienna, for appointments with a number of Americans whose identity is concealed. He told the film people the American clients were more important than the film.

DARING RESCUE OF AN INFANT

Parents Re-enter Flaming House and Save Their Baby

Petrolea, July 11.—A daring rescue of their child was made by Mr. and Mrs. J. Mattox about 12 o'clock last night. A fire started from some unknown cause in the rear of their store, over which they live. It made such rapid advance on the main building that their descent downstairs was cut off by a mass of flames, and they were compelled to make an exit from the front window by ladders to the ground.

In the excitement, and through some misunderstanding of each other, the baby was left in the burning building. Realizing their terrible mistake, Mr. and Mrs. Mattox made simultaneous ascents up ladders back into the flame-swept building. The mother returned first, bearing the child in her arms, followed by the father.

Mrs. Mattox was badly burned about the arms and hands. The building, stock of groceries and all household furniture were totally destroyed. The property was partially covered by insurance.

It is also alleged that Collison threatened to shoot the parents of the girl if they took the matter to law.

Miss M. Edwards, of New Liskeard, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. W. Jordan, Chatham stre .

Mr. and Mrs. George H. McArthur arrived at the King Edward, Toronto, from Belleville.

Miss Maidie Fost, who is a teacher in Edmonton, is spending the vacation with her parents on Coleman street.

HEARTLESS TRICK ON BOOTLEGGER

Liquor Vendor is Heartlessly Imposed Upon by Thirsty Caller

Toronto, July 12.—Occupations outside the law have peculiar disadvantages not generally known, as a Toronto bootlegger will testify. He answered a discreet knock on his door, and, after considerable negotiation, agreed to sell the thirsty applicant two quarts of so-called whiskey for sixteen dollars. Just as the liquor was being handed over, there was a sound of heavy footsteps. Then came a pounding on the door, and a deep voice ordered them to "open in the name of the law." Without pausing to think that the Toronto police were not in the habit of being so noisy when about to make a business call, the bootlegger drew the bolt to let them in; meanwhile, the customer and the liquid disappeared through the door and over the backyard fence, without leaving any money as circumstantial evidence. But there were no signs of officers on the verandah or anywhere on the street, and the vendor of forbidden firewater finally came to the conclusion that he had been the victim of a pair of unscrupulous persons. He is still wondering whether the revenge he would likely get on notifying the authorities would counterbalance the heavy fine and compulsory winding-up of his business that would certainly follow.

PONTIFF TO SEND MONKS TO RUSSIA

Promises Soviet That Mission Will not Indulge in Propaganda

Rome, July 10.—The Holy See has finally concluded an agreement with the Soviets whereby expeditions sent by the Pope can enter Russia. The Soviets promise the expeditions immunity from imprisonment and confiscation of foodstuffs. The Holy See guarantees the expeditions will abstain from any kind of propaganda whatever.

The first expedition, which is composed of three sections, each drawn from the Salesian, Jesuit and Franciscian religious orders, is permitted by Lenine to distribute relief supplies in the province of Moscow, Kiev and Saratov.

The Holy See will send the first contingent July 20, but the finances are so low that the full program of relief cannot be carried out until more funds arrive from America, which is now the only source left.

The excitement caused by the recent papal gendarme rebellion is subsiding, but no decision about the reform of the corps has been taken. The Pope was quite ignorant of the disastrous financial condition of the fifty men forming this branch of the Vatican garrison, but it is doubtful whether he will consent to a raise in their pay, which is equal to $30 a month. This would entail raising the pay of the Swiss Palantine Guards, and the treasury is so drained by the Austrian-Russian relief this is quite impossible.

WORLD'S OLDEST MAN WAS TIRED OF LIVING

John Shell Remembered the Mourning After George Washington's Death

Louisville, Ky., July 12.—John Shell waited for a century, and then a third of a century more, to become famous. He remained in obscurity until he had gone fifty years beyond the Biblical three score and ten. At the advanced age of 125 John may have felt that he never would become prominent. But he patiently bided his time and four years ago the spotlight of the nation was played upon him because it was then discovered that he was the oldest man in the world. Now he is dead and laid in his grave in the Kentucky hills at the ripe old age of 134.

An illustration of why John remained unnoticed while nations were born and passed away can be obtained from the fact that he was dead nearly a week before the news of his passing reached the telegraph wires. On Grassy Creek, in Lester county where "Uncle John" as he was known to the people around him lived, life moves on today as it did in the eighteenth century. The dwellers in these remote nooks of the Cumberlands are as sequestered from telephone, telegraph, railway motor or mail as was Daniel Boone whom John Shell claimed to have seen as a boy.

Discovered Four Years Ago.

Four years ago a party of Lexington people, who had attempted a jaunt through the mountains, heard of the old man who claimed to have lived more than a century and a quarter. They visited him, skeptical regarding his reported age. They examined all the evidence that it was possible to obtain, and returned satisfied that he was correct when he said he was born in 1788.

When they repeated their story to the outside world they started a controversy that has raged ever since. But the weight of the evidence was all in Uncle John's favor and in 1919 the Kentucky state fair brought the old man to Louisville to attend the fair and meet his fellow Kentuckians. It was the first time that he ever made a trip by railroad, yet this man demanded a trip in an aeroplane and enjoyed it thoroughly.

His Claim Accepted.

Proof as to Shell's age rested on two things, the testimony of physicians and the simple, circumstantial evidence which Shell himself offered. While in Louisville he patiently submitted to examinations by leading physicians, some of whom came from as far away as Chicago to see him. They agreed that he was well over the century mark, while most of them accepted his statement that he was born in 1788.

The extreme simplicity of his life among the remote mountains was considered by the doctors to be the chief factor in giving him such long life.

He was born in Tennessee, the son of Samuel Shell, a gun maker. He showed a tax receipt dated 1809 showing he had paid taxes to the sheriff that year. He was 21 the year he acquired title to property, he said and the old neighbors told of their parents having known John before they were born. In his early manhood he was famous as a maker of flint lock rifles. He remembered clearly the national mourning after the death of Washington, and said he was "too old" to go to the Mexican war.

Was Tired of Living.

Devotion to truth is a passion with the Kentucky mountaineers and this fact weighed heavily when his claims were considered. His first wife died when he was more than 100. He married again when he was 125. At his grave were a son 90 years old and a son of seven.

Just before he passed on he told Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Creech, with whom he lived, that he was tired of having lived to long and was ready to go. Thus passed one whose life had kept pace year by year with the nation and who had lived in the administration of every president.

CHEESE SELLING BY CO-OPERATION

Western Ontario Factories Discuss Plans Mooted at Woodstock

Woodstock, Ont., July 12.—At a meeting held in Woodstock Council Chamber, last evening, attended by representatives of fifteen of the cheese factories of Western Ontario, a resolution was passed endorsing the principle of co-operative marketing of cheese, as outlined by the representatives of the United Dairymen's Co-operative Limited, and pledging the representatives to go back to their factories with the object of putting the matter before the patrons in such a way as to bring about in Western Ontario a consummation of the scheme outlined. H. D. Cowan, of Peterboro secretary of the company made a statement as to the plan which was proposed. Mr. Cowan outlined the beginnings and growth of the company as a war measure for the protection of the farmers, and said that through it the patrons were able to get a large share of the price of their cheese. He said that he had not come to ask the factories to bind themselves to the scheme, but only to discuss it, and have them give the company something on which to work, so that they would know if it would be worth while to set up a central selling place in Western Ontario.

W. W. Moore, salesman for the company in Montreal, gave a detailed report of the methods used in selling the cheese, and said that by these methods it was possible to secure a higher price for the cheese and to have keener competition in buying, which would be for the benefit of the factories. He said that the cost of this selling organization to the factories was five cents per box of cheese, or roughly, one-sixteenth of a cent per pound. The big advantage was that the cheese was graded by Government inspectors and sold according to grades, so that there could be no cut by the buyers on account of poor quality cheese.

Eliminate Middleman.

There was a lengthy discussion of the subject. Most of those present were of the opinion that the cheese board method was obsolete, and charged that the buyers made agreements amongst themselves not to bid against each other. All of those who spoke, with the exception of John Youngs, of Brookdale favored the adoption of some scheme for improving marketing conditions of cheese. Mr. Youngs said that the middleman should be eliminated altogether, as from his factory alone the commission to the middleman would amount to two hundred dollars a year Mr. Hughes, in reply, stated that the Brookdale factory, by trying to sell its own product was getting a lower price than the others, and was helping to give a good living to seven men in the Ingersol district, who went around buying cheese.

Finally, the following resolution was formulated and put to the meeting "Resolved, that this meeting of representatives of the cheese factories of Western Ontario endorse the scheme of Government grading and collective marketing of cheese, as outlined by the representatives of the United Dairymen's Co-operative, Limited, and that we go back to our respective factories and ascertain the opinion of our patrons, and that we further favor the appointment of a committee of this meeting to go more into details looking to a consummation in Western Ontario of the plan outlined."

Twenty voted in favor of the resolution, ten others refraining from voting.

RUMANIANS HONOR THEIR PRINCESS

Jockey Club Presented Her With Beautiful Span Of Horses

Bucharest, Rumania, July 12.—Members of the local Jockey Club recently assembled six splendid horses and asked Princess Marie, now Queen of Serbia, to select one as a wedding present. With the Princess came her mother, Queen Marie of Rumania, and Ilena, the younger daughter.

After seeing the horses, Princess Marie was unable to choose between two. "Well, let us present you the span," gallantly offered the members, and the offer was accepted.

Then, it was remembered that the day was the birthday of Princess Ilena, and she was offered a horse, which she selected and accepted. Finally, it seemed ungraceful not to offer a horse to the Queen, who is a splendid horsewoman, and this offer she accepted. Had the King been present, doubtless he would have been offered the two remaining horses.

MORE STUDENTS SINCE THE WAR

German Universities Strive to Stop Rising Tide of Foreigners

Berlin, July 12.—Accommodations at most of Germany's universities and technical high schools have been so severely cramped since the war by increasing enrollments that steps are being suggested for stemming the rising percentage of foreigners. Students from abroad are estimated to constitute 25 per cent of the registration.

A leader in the movement to restrict the foreign influx states that in his lecture room he has note from 50 to 100 non-Germans, made up principally of Bulgarians, Rumanians, Russians, Hungarians, Jugoslavs and South Africans. He declares the preparation of these "outsiders" frequently is insufficient and that their conduct often "leaves much to be desired." While emphasising the need of some curtailment in the enrollment and favoring action against foreigners to this end, he observes that caution should be exercised to avoid political or diplomatic embarrassment through too stringent procedure.

Enrollment in German universities as a whole has shown an increase of 30 per cent since the war and that of the technical high schools has been more than doubled. Just before the war there were 60,000 university students in Germany. At the armistice the aggregate jumped to 90,000. There has since been a slight falling off, the summer of 1921 registering 87,147 and the present semester 82,668.

Technical high schools of the country were handling 12,000 before the war. In the autumn of 1920 their students numbered 22,970 and last winter 25,556.

While the knowledge that the war in a greater greed for learning in the younger generation, rather than causing demoralization and frivolous living, has proved gratifying to the Germans, there is a disturbing fascination. Compared with the figures for 1914, the present statistics for universities show decreases in the enrollment or Evangelical and Catholic theology and for philosophy and philology. Medicine, the most popular in 1914, also has proved less attractive, although dentistry students have more than doubled and there has been a slight increase in chemistry. The would-be-physicians now number 15,110 whereas in 1914 there were 16,048.

Political economy heads the list in the numbers of university students enrolled and in percentage of gain over 1914. This branch has 17,714 at work, as compared with 3,836 in the last prewar year. The study of law comes next with a registration of 16,-834, as compared with 9,840. Mathematics and physical science have attracted 9,257, an increase of 1,125.

In the technical schools the greatest number have flocked to mechanical engineering, which 8,306 now are studying as compared with 3,118 in 19 14. Electrical science has 5,129 enrolled, against 1,307 before the war. There are 3,735 in mathematics and physical science in these schools and 3,311 in constructing engineering, as compared with 1,544 and 2,767, respectively. Mining and smelting have registered a gain from 576 to 1,234. Architecture, alone, in the technical schools, has shown a decline, the enrollment dropping from 2,193 to 1,-811.

Of 23 universities mentioned in current statistics only four have shown a smaller enrollment than in 1914. This complete list includes Frankfurt, founded in 1914 and now having 4,-346 students, and the universities of Cologne and Hamburg, both founded in 1919, which have enrollments of 4,107 and 3,660, respectively. The largest registration is in the University of Berlin, with 12,74, as compared with 8,538 in 1914. Munich has increased from 6,626 to 8,984 and Leipsig from 5,360 to 5,660. Of the four having more than 4,000 students before the war, only Bonn suffered a decrease, from 4,524 to 4,010. Wuersburg had the greatest percentage of increase, its enrollment rising from 1,605 to 3,307.

FOUND LIFELESS OVER WASHTUB

Mrs. M. Davis Dies of Heart Failure in Basement of Her Home

Toronto, July 12.—Overcome with the heat while washing in the basement of her home at 57 Linsmore crescent, Mrs. Margaret Davis, aged twenty-four years, was found dead yesterday afternoon. She was discovered leaning over one of the stationary tubs, with her head just resting on some wet clothes.

Neighbors saw smoke issuing from one of the basement windows. Mrs. Davis had been boiling clothes on a gas heater near the stationary tubs, and the water having boiled away the clothes began to burn, almost causing a fire. The smoke from the scorching clothes filled the cellar.

Both Dr. H. B. VanWyck and Coroner M. M. Crawford said death was due to heart failure.

No inquest will be held.

TIRED AND RUN DOWN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Where Other Medicines Failed

Vancouver, B. C.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was tired and run down. I had headaches and no appetite and was troubled for two years with sleeplessness. I tried many medicines but nothing did me any real good. While I was living in Washington I was recommended by a friend to take the Vegetable Compound. I am stronger and feel fine since then and am able to do my housework. I am willing for you to use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. J. C. Greaves, 771 Hornby St., Vancouver, British Columbia.

Many women keep about their work when it is a great effort because the work must be done. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought relief to thousands of tired housewives by removing the troubles which cause annoying symptoms.

If you are suffering from nervousness, headache and backache, pains in right or left side, tired and run-down feelings, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Just bear in mind this medicine has been used by women for nearly fifty years. That is a long record of service, and stands upon the foundation of merit.

TO SAVE WORLD FROM BABEL ILLS

Fifteenth Annual Congress of Esperanto Association North America

Toronto, July 12.—The fifteenth annual congress of the Esperanto Association of North America opened here today. The Esperanto association is a society of men and women, numbering thousands all over the world, whose object is to introduce an auxiliary language into the world which can be learned by all races. In this way it is hoped that international business will be facilitated and racial bitterness in a large measure abolished.

Its Fundamentals.

The Esperanto language is founded on the root words of European languages. The grammar of the language, according to A. P. H. Rollason, the Toronto secretary, is "logical and scientific." It contains but sixteen rules in all, with no exceptions to any of them. The "exception to prove the rule" feature is conspicuous by its absence. The language was founded by Dr. Zimenoff in Warsaw about 30 years ago.

KEEP MAILS MOVING BY FORCE IF NEED BE

Washington, July 12.—President Harding has determined to use force whenever necessary during the rail strike to prevent any interference with the mails or interruption of inter-state commerce.

From Attorney-General Daugherty and other administration leaders, it was learned that the president had decided on stern measures on the part part of the federal government from the outset of the walkout, because of the approaching paralysis of the nation's industrial life as the result of the coal and rail strikes.

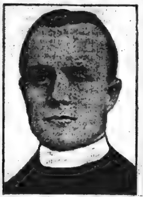
Dr. Manning Was Elected New Bishop of New York In Spite of Hearst Papers

THE election of Rev. Dr. Manning as Bishop of New York in the Protestant Episcopal Church, corresponding to the Anglican Church in Canada, gave rise to one of the most extraordinary situations in the history of the American Church. Dr. Manning is an Englishman by birth, and for that reason the Hearst papers started a bitter propaganda against him. Not only did the infamous rags of newspapers, which were properly banned in the Dominion for some time, attack him on account of his birthplace, but circulars were issued and distributed at the Synod meeting for the purpose of injuring his chances. The leaders of the Protestant Episcopal Church are not the sort of individuals to be controlled by a creature like Hearst, and his attacks were the best boost that Manning had. He was elected bishop of the banner diocese of his adopted country.

The election of Manning is interesting on account of his views on several subjects that have been widely debated in recent years.

An interesting question is whether Bishop Manning will continue, in his exalted and official position, to advocate Christian unity with the vigor he has been showing as a private rector.

Dr. Manning has been one of the foremost exponents of unity. And by unity he does not include merely Protestant churches and faiths, but Roman Catholicism too.



BISHOP MANNING.

Dr. Manning has not been urging organic church union, but a broad Christian unity.

In lectures given last spring to an American college, Dr. Manning enumerated the evils resulting from present dissensions.

"It is Christ's will that is thwarted," he declares, "it is Christ's power that is circumscribed, it is Christ's promises that are discredited by the present condition of His Church. Our divisions are not only waste and war and weakness, they are sin."

The question before us, according to the new bishop, is not how did the divisions begin, but how may they be brought to an end. In most quarrels there are faults on both sides, and so it has been with the quarrels among Christians. The question now is not as to the origin of schism, but as to the longer continuance of it.

Each Christian communion is called upon, believes Manning to acknowledge its share in the sin of making schism or of helping to perpetuate it. There is no church on earth, Roman Catholic or Protestant, which is not a sharer in this sin. There is not a church which has done all that it should have done to prevent it or to bring it to an end.

If complete agreement in matters of faith were a pre-requisite for unity we might indeed despair, says the bishop, but unity imposes no such condition. We need to recognize more clearly that it is not so much agreement which produces unity as it is unity and fellowship which produce agreement.

Unity, he declares, will not come by way of submission or absorption of others into any one of the existing communions. It will come by concord, not by conquest; by mutual and equal fellowship, not by "unconditional surrender."

The question to him is not what is each communion willing to surrender, but what has each communion to contribute that is true and vital and from God. The United Church will be more than a return to the faith of the first days. The spiritual struggles of these later times have had their meaning also. The United Church will contain all the revelation given in Christ, all the great Catholic heritage of the Church of the first centuries, but it will contain also all the spiritual fruit, all the rich product, of the Christian faith and experience of the generations since, including that which has been developed through the stress and trial and discipline of our divisions.

An Atom and Energy.

Sir Ernest Rutherford's researches with the structure of the atom are known all over the world, and intense interest has been aroused by his recent statement that he does not think we can look in the future for a source of power in the disintegration of the atom by the forces at present at our command. This statement is of the highest importance in view of the expectations that have been aroused by the advances made in the study of the atom. Sir Ernest considers, however, that there are other directions in which chemists may look in their researches into this problem. "I am quite sure," he says, "that the forces which hold together the nucleus of the atom are so strong that only by the firing of Alpha particles at it have we been able to effect a liberation of its constituents. You might produce a furnace with a million degrees of heat, but you will not affect the disintegration."

ARE ELIMINATED "BUCKING BRONCHOS"

Toronto, July 12.—Spectators of the Wild West Show at the Ringling circus on Saturday night found the bucking broncho act cut out. Explanation was found in the presence of Inspector Ballingall, of the Humane Society, and a Toronto police officer, who, when they discovered the conditions under which the bronchos performed, threatened to seize the animals and close up the show and place several of the performers under arrest.

After one of the acts, Inspector Ballingall found three of the animals wounded, bleeding and scarred in half a dozen different places, due to the use of perforated spurs and chain bits.

London, Hamilton and Kitchener, for which the circus is booked, were notified by telephone. Probably never again will a bucking broncho act be shown in Ontario.

GLORIOUS 12th CELEBRATED BY MONSTER FETE AT TRENTON

Fifty Lodges Celebrate "12th" At Trenton

Prominent Speakers Address the Vast Assemblage on the Important Issues of the Day—Hanna's Park Invaded by Thousands of Visitors—Colorful Spectacle.

LADIES MARCH FOR TWO MILES

The residents of the neighboring town of Trenton had for some time been anticipating the Orange celebration which was to take place there this year. It was also expected that there would be a great influx of visitors, but the most sanguine did not anticipate the crowd which did congregate within the town. The citizens were taxed to provide the necessaries, but they were equal to the occasion and the universal verdict was that a good time was experienced by all who visited the citizens was by no means stinted. It was estimated that at least there were 7,000 visitors in the town and many placed it at a higher figure. At an early hour in the morning all roads leading to the town were thronged with vehicles of various descriptions laden with human freights. Special trains from the east covering Napanee, Deseronto, Shannonville and Belleville, and from the west as far as Port Hope, also from Picton, conveyed hundreds if not thousands to the scene of the celebration. It was in every particular a grand success, and despite the crowd and the congestion of streets at times which was unavoidable, not a serious accident occurred to mar the pleasant proceedings. It was also a most orderly crowd. Chief of Police Bain and his able assistants were kept busy directing traffic but did so in a most capable manner. Not only were the Loyal Orange Lodges of the southern part of Hastings County, the County of Prince Edward and a portion of the united Counties of Northumberland and Durham well represented,, but there were several lady lodges of the Orange and True Blues Society represented. In regard to the latter it may be stated that although the line of march was upwards of two miles, and the heat oppressive, the ladies never faltered but marched the whole distance. It was an inspiring sight as the parade passed through the principal thoroughfare, the marchers being bedecked with their regalia and banners bright were flung to the breeze. Inspiring music was furnished by the bands, the Johnstone's Kiltie Band of Belleville being one of the leading musical organizations. In the parade fife and drum bands were numerous. It is estimated that upwards of 3,000 were in the parade, whic, was the largest seen in this part of Ontario for some time.

The marshal in charge of the parade had no easy task in arranging the parade which was formed up on the market square at 1 p.m., headed by Nicholas Harte as marshal, who was seated upon a white charger, decorated with ribbons for the occasion. Following the marshal was an auto in which were seated Mr. W. H. Ireland of Trenton, M.P.P. for West Hastings; Mayor Roenigk of Trenton, Mayor Hanna of Belleville, Rev. Mr.

COUNCIL STRIKES TAX RATE ON MONDAY NEXT.

It is expected that at the next regular meeting of the City Council which will be held on Monday evening, the 24th inst., the estimates for the year will be presented and adopted and an adjournment of the Council will be made for a few weeks. Ald. Ostrom, chairman of the Executive Committee, is at present busily engaged upon the estimates. Just what the rate will be is as yet problematical, but it will be in the vicinity of what it was last year. The indications at present are not bright for a lower rate of taxation.

SEVERE ELECTRIC STORM HERE

Some Damage Done to Property in the Country

A storm of unusual severity, with blinding lightning, heavy thunder and a downpour of rain swept over this section of the country late on Wednesday afternoon. It was accompanied for some time by a terrific wind. Shortly before five o'clock a heavy bank of clouds behind which at intervals vivid flashes of lightning were to be seen, gave warning that a bad storm was approaching from trees. In some sections adjacent ahead of it sheets of rain, tore over the city about 6 o'clock and sent persons who were upon the street to places of cover. Fortunately, no particular damage was done about the city, a few limbs being taken from off trees. In some sections adjacent to the city the storm appeared to be more severe and this was particularly so in Prince Edward County.

A silo on Mr. Clarence Vermilyea's farm in Thurlow Township was struck by lightning and virtually destroyed. The structure was not ignited and no damage resulted to the barn adjoining.

Some telephone poles, the property of the Sprague Telephone Company, in Ameliasburg Township, Prince Edward County, were struck by lightning and rendered useless. The damage sustained was repaired today.

IS THIS BELLEVILLE CHEESE ?

Health Committee at Dover Blames Epidemic on Canadian Cheese—97 Persons Suffer From Mysterious Sickness

London, July 13.—Reporting to the Dover health commission on a mysterious food poisoning epidemic, the medical health officer of Dover said that ninety-seven persons were attacked by abdominal pain, diarrhoea and vomiting, followed by prostration. Investigation showed that ninety per cent. of the sufferers had partaken of Canadian cheese, purchased in the district. Although there were symptoms of collapse in some of the cases, no deaths occurred.

Samples of the cheese and the patient's blood have been sent to the county laboratory, and a representative of the ministry of health and the pathological department are investigating the outbreak.

Says Cheese Not Responsible

Ottawa, July 13.—"We are quite positive that Canadian cheese is not responsible for the food poisoning epidemic in England." It was stated at the department of agriculture today. "We are further convinced," it was added, "that investigation will prove that Canadian cheese is not responsible."

The further statement is made at the department that Canadian cheese contains no injurious ingredients.

GERMANS HOLD ALLIES' GOLD

Do Not Want to Hand Over The Money This Year

ASK FOR DELAY

Also Want Readjustment of Amounts Due as Compensation

Paris, July 13.—Germany yesterday made the following three requests of the Reparations Commission:

1—That she be freed from the obligation of making reparational payments in cash for the balance of this year and throughout 1923 and 1924;

2—That she be permitted to retain the 33,000,000 gold marks she is supposed to turn over to the Commission July 15 in order to meet coming bills for foodstuffs ordered abroad;

3—That the Commission consider favorably a readjustment of amounts due the Allied Governments in compensation for the property of allied nationals sequestered by the German Government during the war.

The German note vouches a hope that the granting of this proposed moratorium "will favor the resumption of loan negotiations" abandoned last month by the International Bankers' Committee of which J. P. Morgan was a member.

GOVT. REFUSES RACE TRACK

Provincial Cabinet Declines to Allow Track at Port Credit

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 13.—The Ontario Government has refused to grant letters patent to the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association.

Two new developments in the controversy over the proposed establishment of a race track near Port Credit, which followed each other in close succession yesterday afternoon, put the Ontario Government on record as being definitely opposed to the construction of new race tracks within the borders of the province and resulted in a change of front on the part of the racing association concerned which was tantamount to a declaration that the track would be constructed despite the Government's opposition.

Will Issue Bonds.

When interviewed last night, James E. Day, K.C., solicitor for the association, stated that funds for the construction of the new track would be secured through an issue of bonds. While disposed to regard the refusal as being a serious infringement of the rights of constitutionally incorporated companies, Mr. Day stated that it was not likely that the association would take its case to the courts. As no Government permission was required for a bond issue, the association could achieve its purpose without becoming involved in litigation, he said.

When approached last night, members of the Cabinet refused to state whether or not the Government would follow up its declaration against new tracks further action.

"We do not announce in advance what we are going to do," stated Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General, who is known to be the moving spirit behind the attempt to blok the construction of the new track. The Attorney-General refused to state whether further action would be considered.

COLLINS HEADS NATIONAL ARMY

Dublin, July 13.—Michael Collins has been appointed commander in chief of the Irish National Army. It was officially announced to-day. Collins, Richard Mulcahy, Minister of Defence, and General Owen O'Duffy, will form the war council in supreme charge of the military operations throughout the country. Mulcahy is named as chief of staff of army.

SPIRITS NOW IN OIL BUSINESS

Ghost of Pioneer Minister Told Son Where he Could Strike Oil with Result that Company Was Formed

(Canadian Press)

Lethbridge, Alta., July 13.—Guided by a ghost, the Dreamland Oil Company, better known as "Jamieson's Ghost Company", is now drilling for oil in the Southern Alberta fields and it all happened like this, according to T. J. Jamieson, president and organizer of the company.

The ghost of his father, Hugh Jamieson, a pioneer minister of the West who died some 15 years ago, appeared to him in a dream and informed him of a spot in Southern Alberta where a drill would pierce a vast pool of oil. The wraith of his father used names of towns his son had never heard of and gave him such topographical information that he could not be mistaken. A third member was included in the "dream party" who marked the spot with a small earth mound. This all happened in 1917 and previously to this Mr. Jamieson had never been further south in Alberta than Medicine Hat.

Mr. Jamieson visited southern Alberta later, verified names and towns and identified the spot so vividly marked in his memory.

Later the spirit again visited him and chided him for his delay, with the warning that he must speed up if he wished to reap the reward.

As a result a company was formed, several thousand dollars have been placed in the venture and active operations are now under way. The property is situated between Lethbridge and the Pakowki lakes, eastward and at these lakes the Imperial and other interests have acquired leases.

PREMIER KING AT WASHINGTON

Main Object of Visit to Discuss Old Treaty for Ensuring Peace

Washington, July 13.—A formal treaty modernizing and perpetuating the Rush-Bagot agreement, which has insured peace between Canada and the United States for more than a century without frontier armaments, is the primary purpose of the visit of Premier W. Mackenzie King and Minister of Defence Geo. P. Graham to Washington.

During the conference at the State Department, Premier King talked informally regarding other pending questions and the desirability of coming to a final agreement concerning the protection of the fisheries of British Columbian and eastern waters was emphasized.

Mention was made of the projected St. Lawrence River deep waterway improvement, but Premier King said he did not come here to discuss that matter, feeling, as he recently announced at Ottawa, the project is so broad in its scope and the financial outlay involved so tremendous that the present is not an opportune time to take it up actively Guarding Against Possibilities.

The Canadian Premier said that the Rush-Bagot agreement has been so wholesome in its effect that the Canadian Government thought the time opportune to seek to have it perpetuated in treaty form, which would give it a greater significance to nations which still depend on armed forces to guard their frontiers.

Under the terms of the Rush-Bagot agreement, armament on the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence River was restricted to four vessels of 100 tons burden, each carrying not more than one 18-pound gun. The idea of the Canadian Premier as submitted to Secretary Hughes is to modernize the Rush-Bagot agreement and embody the ideals of its framers into a new and formal treaty between Canada and the United States respecting the limitation of armaments on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River.

CASE OF SIR MONTAGU GOES TO GRAND JURY

Ottawa, July 13.—It has been decided to submit the case of Sir Montagu Allan, former president of the Merchants Bank, to a grand jury. This announcement was made at the department of justice yesterday. Sir Montagu Allan was tried before Judge Cusson in Montreal and the charge against him was dismissed. The present proceeding is the same as that taken in the case of D. C. Macarow, former general manager of the bank, who was also acquitteld on the preliminary hearing. The grand jury found a true bill against the ex-general manager, and the case is now pending.

ORANGE ORDER IS NON-PARTY

Dane Delivers Strong Speech at Hamilton—Wobbling Protestants

Hamilton, July 13.—The Orange Order is not a political machine, nor is it connected in any way with political activity, was maintained this afternoon by Fred Dane, of Toronto, vice-president of the Orange Triennial Council of the World, who delivered the address at Hamilton's Orange celebration yesterday.

"Weak, wabbling Protestants are of no use to the community," Mr. Dane averred. "Half apologizing for their religion, they are of as little use as half-hearted politicians. But anyone imagining this institution is in the hands of any political party makes a mistake. We have demonstrated time and again ing so again to-day in Manitoba, I refer that such is not the case and we are doing not so much to the schools dispute there as to the general situation.

"We are becoming better known and correspondingly better appreciated. This order is a stabilizing and defensive force, it is neither disruptive nor new. We have not reached perfection but you can name no religious body which has. Our organization is the most lied about one I know of and the most misunderstood, and by many it is misrepresented. But lying and villification cannot last and the truth will eventually be known. We know no symbols save the altar and the throne."

100,000 MEN MARCH IN BELFAST CITY

Rebel Areas Caged in With Barbed Wire—City a Blaze of Orange and Purple

Belfast, July 13.—Every possible precaution was taken in Belfast yesterday against rebel blackguardism. Picked detachments of troops and constabulary were stationed at danger points. Armored cars and Lancia cars armed with machine guns kept watch and ward along the route through the cit, and certain areas about Carrick Hill, North Queen street, and Old Lodge road were carefully barbed-wired off, caging in the residents in a manner that greatly assisted the public weal.

At nine-thirty the procession left Carlisle Circus, fully one hundred thousand taking part. Every street was a blaze of orange and purple and Union Jacks. Right down to Milfield orange arches are exhibited and in many streets recently purified Union Jacks flew for the first time in forty years.

BANK OF ENGLAND LOWERS DISCOUNT RATE

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 13.—The Bank of England to-day lowered its discount rate to three per cent. reduction of one half per cent. from the figure established on June 15.

ASSAULT CASE IN COURT

Children and Flowers Cause Lingham Street Women To Battle

In the U. S. A. on July 4th of each year, the people rejoice, make a big noise, and say it with fire crackers.

At Belleville, Ontario, Canada, however, at least two families do not celebrate in such a peaceful and mirthful manner. This fact was disclosed in police court this morning, when two lady residents of Lingham street, appeared to legally fight out a difference which had come between them.

On July 3rd the children of the defendant came on the premises of plaintiff, and picked some of her flowers. She sent them home, but in the evening they returned and brought several neighbor children along with them until the numbers had swollen to ten. When they were ordered off the lawn, they all vanished "except one little girl, who the defendant shoved over the boundary line.

Next morning on the Fourth, the mother of the little girl came over to defendant's house and a rather interesting time was the result, police court proceedings following.

Much interesting evidence is being given, and the case was not finished this morning, but is being continued this afternoon at 2.30. Mr. C. A. Payne is appearing for defendant.

HORSES ELECTROCUTED WHILE FARMER LOOKS ON

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Cornwall, July 13. — Robert Simpson, a teamster, while on his way to work yesterday with his team, had the experience of seeing his horses drop dead in their tracks. One of the animals stepped on a live wire and dropped, pulling its mate down with it, when it was also killed.

HAGUE PARLEY COMES TO END

Russian Soviets Refuse to Restore Private Property

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Hague, July 13.—The non-Russian sub commission on private property unanimously adopted to-day a resolution declaring that in the light of the views expressed yesterday by the Russians concerning the restitution of foreigners property in Russia, it would serve no useful purpose to continue the meetings with the Russian commission.

The Hague, July 13.—The Hague Russian conference came practically to an end yesterday when, cornered after three weeks' dodging, the Soviet delegates refused to accept the principle of restitution of private property nationalized and agreed to discuss compensation only if large credits were given. That was yesterday morning. In the afternoon the Russians, in reply to definite questions relating to debts, refused to accept a mixed commission to decide when payments should begin.

JUDGMENT RESERVED ON GRAND TRUNK APPEAL

London, July 13.—The Privy Council has reserved judgment in the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders' appeal.

PEACE SLOWS UP IN RAIL STRIKE

Labor Board Optimistic—Negotiations for a Settlement

ONE REMAINING HOPE

Leader of Shopmen Sends Message to President Harding

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Chicago, July 13.—Although moves for peace in the railway strike have apparently slowed up to-day, the general trend still seemed to be toward negotiations for a settlement.

An optimistic note was sounded by Charles Hooper of the Labor Board when he announced that he had formulated new plans for ending the strike. One remaining hope in the peace movement, Mr. Hooper said, lay in the fact that the railroad chiefs who rejected the proposed conference were not authorised to speak for the railway executives generally.

Chicago, July 13.—B. M. Jewell, leader of the striking shopmen, today sent a telegram to President Harding replying to the president's proclamation on the strike situation and opening a new phase of the grievances of striking railway shopmen.

CANNOT AGREE ON WAGE CUT

Negotiation Between Shopmen and Railway Companies Break Down

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 13.—The negotiations which have been going on between the representatives of the Allied Shop Trades and the Canadian Railway Association, acting for all the railroads of the Dominion in regard to the cut in wages to be brought into effect on July 16th, broke down this morning.

THREE GET AWAY FROM JAIL FARM

Slipped Away From Guard and are Pursued Into the Bush

Toronto, July 13.—Three prisoners escaped from the jail farm yesterday afternoon. They are Roy Potter, John Russell and John Carr, all Toronto men, although jail officials think Carr is an American by birth.

The three prisoners were sent with a gang of men under one guard to work in the hayfield on the women's farm at noon.

The three slipped away from the guard for about fifteen minutes. The guard had to round up the remaining prisoners before the could give the alarm, so the fleeing men had half an hour's start on their pursuers. They were tracked to a bush on Bathurst street and the guards think they went east downtown from there. All the men were wearing the regular blue overalls of the jail farm when last seen. Six guards are still tracking them.

BODY OF CHILD FOUND IN RIDEAU CANAL

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, July 13.—The body of a prematurely born male child was found in the Rideau River last night. The body was wrapped in an Ottawa newspaper dated June 30.

MOST UNIQUE CLUB IN THE WORLD

International Club Organized in Geneva as a Result of The League of Nations

(Canadian Press)

Ottawa, July 13.—What is probably the most unique club in the world has been organized at Geneva, Switzerland, according to advices received here. It is known as the International Club. It came into being as a result of the manifold activities at Geneva of the League of Nations, and its doors are already open to the world.

The membership is made up of people from many nations, Great Britain and Canada, China and Japan, Finland and Spain, Italy and Sweden, Greece and Holland, Czecho-Slovakia and Jugo-Slavia, India and France—these are but illustrative of the nations drawn upon.

The building occupied by the International Club is near the lake front at its most attractive point and is owned by the city. The city of Geneva, regarding the International Club as a semi-municipal undertaking extends it nominal rent, and in other ways helps its establishment.

"THE GREAT MOMENT" GLORIA SWANSON'S NEW PLAY ROMANTIC AND THRILLING

"This is the most perfect English room! exclaimed Elinor Glyn, noted British novelist, as the finishing touches were put upon a setting which had been prepared for scenes in "The Great Moment," Gloria Swanson's first starring vehicle which is the feature attraction at Griffin's tonight to Saturday.

The setting represents the boudoir of an English girl played by Miss Swanson, in an old ancestral home. The author, wrote the story especially for Miss Swanson.

In this story Miss Swanson is seen as the half gypsy daughter of an English lord, whose father rears her in strict seclusion, fearing that her mother's nomadic instincts will assert themselves over the subdued English culture. Later, however, on a trip to America, the girl falls in love with a young mining engineer, is bitten by a rattle-snake and taken by him to his mountain cabin.

There, intoxicated from the whiskey which he had given her as an antidote, she feels the gypsy spell and brings about a situation which results in many dramatic and highly emotional episodes.

Milton Sills plays the leading supporting role, other notables in the cast include, Alec. B. Francis, Helen Dunbar and Julia Faye. A selected Travelogue, a two reel Century comedy and George Walsh in a new chapter of the Historical adventure play "With Stanley in Africa" are now being exhibited on the same program.

Windsor, July 12.—Mrs. Cora Gladys Wilson, aged 18, is lying seriously ill here as the result of taking poison, according to her own story as a cure, for corns. She did not know it was poisonous to the stomach, she says.

Her marriage took place a year ago, but she has been separated from her husband for nine months According to the police, the husband and wife had a stormy interview on Saturday last.

EUROPE IS USING MORE IRON ORE

Stockholm, July 12.—Europe has increased its consumption of Swedish iron ore, a fact taken here to indicate that European industries are on the mend.

The biggest iron ore mining firm in Sweden, the Graengesberg Oxeloesund company, has exported through Narvik in 1922 250,000 more tons of iron ore than during the same period of 1921. In May alone of this year Narvik cleared 600,000 tons of iron ore, breaking all previous records.

The principal buyers of Swedish iron ore are England, Belgium, Germany and the countries of Central Europe.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LOSES $200,000 IN FOREST FIRES

Vancouver, July 12.—More than sixty million feet of green timber, alone valued at approximately $200,000, has been destroyed by forest fires during the last month. During the last few weeks between 30,000 and 40,000 acres have been swept by fire. At Grassy Bay, 150 miles north of Vancouver, fire has destroyed five million feet of standing fir and cedar.

It is the worst season from the viewpoint of fire loss that the coast district has experienced for many years.

None of the dangerous fires are cut yet, but most of them are reported under control.

CONEY ISLAND THREATENED WITH HOT DOG STRIKE

New York, July 13 (By Canadian Press).—Coney Island has just passed through a critical stage in its existence. It was threatened with a hot dog strike. Coney Island without hot dogs would have been a barren wilderness to the average patron. The meat workers who make frankfurters recently threatened to strike and Coney Islanders were filled with apprehension. However, an agreement was signed by the Bologna Butchers' Union No. 174 whereby peaceful continuance of their work is guaranteed indefinitely and the bark of the hot dog barker will continue to be heard at the famous amusement resort.

RUMANIA WANTS TO SHIP JEWS TO U.S

Bucharest, Rumania, July 13.—Rumania has been given some first hand information as to the immigration laws of the United States.

A high government official called recently on a member of the American legation here and said:

"We have 5,000 poor Jews out at Kishineff and other nearby points, all refugees from Russia. We have decided to send them to the United States. How shall we go about it to get rid of them as quickly as possible?"

NOT MARRYING IN MONTREAL

Girls Prefer Golf in Silk Skirts—Low Wages and High Cost of Living Blamed

Montreal, July 13.—Montreal's young people are not in a marrying mood these days, or, if they are, something is happening to prevent them carrying out their intentions. The vital statistics of the city just issued show a decrease of 1,158 in the number of marriages performed in Montreal during the past year. Two main reasons given authorities for this decrease are lack of employment, or employment on reduced wages for the men and the extravagant ideas held by girls as to what they should have when they marry.

Dr. Boucher, medical officer of health of the city, declared the same conditions exist all over the world, "everywhere," he said, "there has been a seriouws decline in the number of marriages and births. In Europe the economic situation is blamed for this state of affairs."

"While some people are foolish, the majority are level-headed and will not get married when they are out of work," said J. H. T. Falk, secretary of the Montreal agencies, when asked for an opinion. "The decline in the number of those willing to venture on the sea of matrimony is entirely due to economic conditions, lack of employment, cuts in wages and the high cost of furnishings, which until h,kSathi.icrf.....w bitmowowwwk owB.. recently had not been reduced in cost proportionately with other items in the living budget playing their part in keeping young couples from marriage."

His view was confirmed by a number of young people, for the old fallacy that tow young people can live as cheaply as one is no longer believed by the sophisticated young man and woman to-day. "Girls now want to start where their mother and father left off," said a young woman interviewed. "They play golf in silk skirts and demand other luxuries. Not that I don't like those things myself," she hastened to add, "but it does make it hard for a man on a small salary."

"It is the comparatively well-to-do who are not getting married. The poor are coming to us in spite of hard times. It is not the economic situation, but the fact that young people are shirking responsibility, which account for the decline," was the view expressed by a clerk in the office of the Notre Dame church, where all marriages performed in that edifice are registered.

WELL-KNOWN FLEET STREET TAVERN IS CLOSED

London, July 13.—An old Fleet Street tavern, the Crown, in Crown Court, is to be closed by the authorities on the ground that there is an abundance of public houses in that district of London without the continuance of the Crown's license. Compensation will be allowed.

The Crown is a noted house for printers, and for over 200 years its license has been renewed year by year without a complait against it It is half-way down a narrow court leading from Fleet Street to Whitefriars street, and would not be seen by the passer-by if it were not for the sign in the street. It is one of the old taverns where the bullies of Whitefriars, known as "Alsatians," spent their time in the days of the Stuarts, and came forth when called upon to resist the arrest of one of their comrades or to fight their neighbors living in the Temple.

Sir Walter Scott, in his "Fortunes of Nigel", depicts the bullies rushing from their secret hiding places in the taverns to rescue their leader.

Another well-known tavern to be closed is the Ben Johnson, in Houndsditch, a house that must have been frequented by the dramatist of that name and his friends the Burbages and Shakespeare. The actors of Ben Johnson's day lived in Shoreditch.

STARVING RUSSIANS RETURN TO FAMINE BELT

Saratoff, Russia, July 12.—Thin but sunburned little groups of ragged children and adults who fled from the hunger-death of the Volga last autumn to provinces that promised bread, are now trekking back to the homes they deserted.

Daily they arrive at Saratoff, Samara, Kazan and other railway junction points in the famine belt. Some of them are in worse shape than when they departed. They found other provinces inhospitable and food scarce everywhere.

Many of the returning wanderers are being fed at American Relief Administration food kitchens. Others are struggling on as best they can until the September harvest.

U.S. TARIFF BILL COMES UP SOON

Some Protests Against Bill Which Meets Senate About August 15th

Washington, July 13 (By Canadian Press).—Adjournment of the House until August 15 is generally taken to mean that the tariff bill will be passed by the Senate about that time. It will be necessary for the House to be insession to send the bill to conference committee of the two houses for the purpose of adjusting the differences between the House bill and the Senate bill and hence the conclusion is that the Republican leaders of the Senate and House are expecting the tariff will be ready to go to conference about August 15, or the date when the House is to resume its sittings.

In spite of the threats of closure and of drastic steps in the Senate to cut off the tariff discussion, there is little prospect this will be done. So many amendments have to be considered that much time is sure to be consumed on the bill in any event: Besides, the Democratic senators are not bent on drawing out the fight until fall. They are expected to let the bill go to a vote in about six weeks. They are anxious to set before the country their opposition to three of the remaining schedules, wool, cotton and sundries, not in the expectation of changing the finance committee's recommendations but to rouse public opinion for future political effect.

The defeat of Senator McCumber for renomination in North Dakota—McCumber being chairman of the finance committee in charge of the tariff bill—is worrying the Old Guard Republicans greatly. They see in this and in other developments of the primaries signs that the Republican party is turning away from its conservative leaders and taking up with more progressive leaders. It is probable that others of the Old Guard will go down to defeat before the summer and fall are over. Senators Townsend of Michigan, Frelinghuysen of New Jersey and Lodge of Massachusetts are among those who are engaged in hard fights.

Senator McCumber's defeat is widely regarded as a blow at the tariff bill and a sign that it is not strong with the country. It is true that neither the tariff bill nor the soldiers' bonus bill, which Senator McCumber is also in charge of, were much at the front as issues in the North Dakota primaries. It is obvious, however, that if the tariff measure had been highly popular, Senator McCumber would have won many votes on the strength of it. He failed to do so.

The protest against the tariff bill in this country is increasing and it cannot be correctly charged that the opposition is at all confined to the importing interests. Undoubtedly, there is a widespread apprehension among consumers that the bill will increase the cost of living materially. It may be added that the most astute of the Republican political leaders are also apprehensive over this and fear the political effects of it. They even see possibilities that the house will go Democratic.

Incidentally, the fact the women have the ballot and the woman who goes marketing and shopping is going to vote this fall, is a phase of the matter which is the subject of much speculation. It is not out of bounds to say that if the tariff bill has any such effect in increasing living costs as some of the opponents of the bill expect, and these effects are felt for some weeks before the November elections, the woman with the ballot may upset sadly the expectations of the Republican campaign managers. It is worth while recalling that when previous general tariff bills have gone into effect in the United States the women did not have the ballot throughout the whole country.

The question of trade with Canada continues to occupy much attention in the Senate tariff debate and while Republican senators quite generally are voting for the high rates of the tariff bill, a number of them are dubious about it and fear they may prove a boomerang.

LIQUOR SITUATION "WELL IN HAND"

New York, July 12 (Canadian Press).—"When prohibition Major Haynes recently said his men had the liquor situation on the Detroit River well in hand, he said something," the Wall Street Journal declares. "The price of Canadian whiskey, instead of increasing with the addition of the 'rum navy', went down about $5 a case.

"An explanation of this anomaly comes from river front habitues. They declare that before the 'rum navy' was placed on the river, custom agents set a price of $15 a case to wink at smuggled cargoes. But with the addition of the 'navy', another corps of itching palms was added to the gauntlet which rummers must run and competition has reduced the price of a 'wink' to $10 a case.

"The saving is thus passed on to the consumer and the enforcement officers a further credited with having the liquor situation 'well in hand'."

QUAKERS OPERATE TRACTORS IN FAMINE AREA

New York, July 13.—Tractors operated in the Russian famine area by the Quakers will plow for communes or district groups, for the fall crops, the American Friends Service Committee has announced.

The Friends, importuned by the communes to help them with their sowing, purpose to plow only for community groups and not for individuals, and to spend not less than a fortnight at each stopping place where only one large plot would be plowed. This will give efficiency arising from centralized performance.

The plowing, it is planned, would be done mostly in districts remote from railroads where the animal death rate is high and food scarce.

TEN DOLLARS TO PAY AT EACH FRONTIER

Belgrade, Jugo-Slavia, July 13.—Collecting ten dollars gold from American travellers every time a passport is vised continues to be one of the popular occupations of officials of the states of Central Europe.

Any American who wishes to visit one of these countries must pass the frontiers of several of the others, and at each frontier the charge of ten dollars a head, and ten dollars every time he passes. One American business man within the past three months has paid $120.

"But don't blame us, blame your State Department," said a representative of the Jugoslavia Foreign Office. "It is a matter of reciprocity with us. We charge the same fee as does the United States."

THE FOOT OF FATE

By DORA MOLLAN

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

For the third time since she entered the station Edith Redway's overshoe slipped at the heel. For the third time she stopped to give it an impatient tug. At the instant a little hard bulk of paper bound about by twisted elastic, skidding from under the spurning foot of a passerby, brought up against Edith's offending rubber.

She picked it up. Evidently the paper was wrapped about some small object. Whoever had kicked it her way had passed on. Edith dropped the little parcel into her bag and proceeded to her train.

Sinking into the first vacant seat the girl rested her head against the high plush back and wearily closed her eyes. Two weeks with a grip cold as bed fellow had forced Edith to take a vacation.

The listlessness of convalescence possessed her mind and body. Vagrant thoughts came and went, unpursued to any conclusive end. Cousin Marie, whom Edith was going to visit, would ascribe her sickness to the fact that she didn't wear woolens—she would harp on that. Then the illness itself—doctor's bills and meals in her room—a forfeited summer vacation—no money for week-end outings—an employer who expected as untiring service from his office force as from his typing machines!

The approaching summer would loom dreary enough, Edith decided, were it not that a small park, that quaint old square dedicated to the memory of the man who tradition tells us never uttered a lie, lay within easy walking distance of her rooming house. There were green growing things there, and benches where one might sit and watch the passing.

Associated with that park in Edith's mind was a man—a slender young man with dark, dreamy eyes who often walked there alone. He was not like the park's patron saint. He could tell a lie—had told her one. One sunny Sunday morning he had sat on the bench next to her favorite one. Across the walk a toddling, swarthy speck of humanity, fired by the same spirit that sent a famous compatriot sailing over uncharted seas centuries before, set out from the port of his mother's knee on a voyage of discovery, gleefully tottering to the inevitable fall.

Edith and the dark young man had simultaneously rushed to the rescue—half an instant too late. When the excited parent arrived they were making joint efforts to wipe away the evidences of a bleeding nose. The mother's voluble thanks served as an introduction of a sort, and when they seated themselves again it was upon the same bench. They talked of many things—impersonal mostly. But the man had said he walked in the square every pleasant Sunday morning—he would look forward to seeing her the following week. That was the lie. Two pleasant Sunday mornings had passed and he had not been there.

The conductor, coming for her ticket, interrupted Edith's train of thought. As she took the pasteboard from her bag she noticed the forgotten little package. Slipping the elastic binding, she found it to contain a blue plush jewel box, and in the box reposed a ring—a cameo of extraordinarily delicate pink set simply in gold. It bore the profile of a woman, beautifully chiseled. With an inward exclamation of admiration Edith proceeded to closer examination of the ring.

Some characters, engraved on the inner surface, she deciphered as "C. to E; 3—2—11-5." Surely that mystic inscription must mean much to some one. Somewhere, that some one was bewailing the loss of the cameo even while she was revelling in its beauty.

On the sheerest impulse Miss Redway dropped the jewel box to the floor and thrust it under the seat with her foot but not before she had glimpsed the name of a well-known firm of jewelers stamped in gold inside the lid.

She tried the ring on every finger and found that it best fitted the third finger of her left hand. Why shouldn't she keep it? The foot of fate had literally kicked it to her. And, anyway, she remembered reading somewhere that beautiful things should belong to those to whom they brought the most enjoyment. It was easy for a rather discouraged, half sick young woman in Edith's place to anaesthetize her conscience.

But anaesthesia is a temporary condition. Edith completely restored under Cousin Marie's motherly care and on her way home two days earlier than she had anticipated, spurred by the restlessness of the unaccustomedly idle, was sorely conscious of that jewelry firm's name and address.

It met her eyes in the columns of the magazine she tried to read; the wheels of the train pounded out the rhythm of it. The jewelers would be sure to have some record of the person to whom the ring had been sold and who had had it engraved. Surely, not to attempt to trace its ownership through that obvious channel was to steal it; no less. This was Saturday afternoon and too late in the day to do anything about it. But on Monday morning she would give up the ring. Meantime, Edith rejoiced that [illegible] as if he and trees were one, sat the young man who had lied to her—who had promised and had not come. Steeling herself to ignore him bitterly, Edith was sauntering regally by when he caught sight of her and sprang up, his face alight. It was too genuine; his delight too sincere. The girl yielded to his entreaties to be seated and let him explain.

He had been called away six weeks before, he said, by the almost fatal illness of his mother, and had returned a fortnight ago. He had haunted the square ever since, hoping that she would come. What had happened? Where had she been?

So Edith told him about her own illness and her having to go away, and between them they pieced it out that with any luck at all they would have met in the Grand Central, for they must have been there at the same moment on the day of her departure.

It was in the midst of this interesting comparison of data that Edith subconsciously resenting the pressure of too snug kid, drew the glove from her left hand. Her companion halted in the middle of a sentence. "Where did you get the ring?" he asked abruptly.

"It was given to me—by a friend," Edith told the fib desperately. For some vague woman's reason she was impelled to impress this nice young man that she had the sort of friends who would choose such a ring to give her.

But her companion if impressed, was impressed curiously. He glanced sidelong at Edith, at the ring and then straight across the square to the great Washington arch. Also he whistled, low and long and speculatively.

"Do you suppose," he inquired, still gazing across the park, "that the old boy over there on the arch ever told one like that? Honest Injun, where did you find it?"

Instantly Edith's tiny structure of deception collapsed. "I found it in the Grand Central station," she admitted penitently. "Is—is it yours?"

"Oh, no, no," was the hasty rejoinder. "I bought it, though, for a friend. You'll find it marked, 'C. to E.; 3—2—11-5.' The C stands for my name, Chester—Chester Barlow."

"And the E stands, I suppose, for the name of your fiancee?" Edith was carrying it off bravely.

"I hope so, very earnestly. It stands, you see, for Edith—oh, I peeked twice at letters you had been reading, for I had to know. And the numbers stand for the month, the day and the hour when we first met. It's yours. It has always been yours. Will you wear it—dear?"

And Edith is wearing it yet.

WOULD GUARD BURIED CITIES

Archeologist Believes Important Discoveries Are Certain to Be Made in the Holy Land.

A great opportunity offers in Palestine. Prof. Flinders Petrie, the eminent archeologist, has appealed, in a little book on eastern exploration, to the British people to take immediate steps for the preservation of all historic sites and buildings which have fallen to Britain through General Allenby's conquest of Palestine. He says that the buried cities and ruined monuments of the holy land ("Palestine is full" of them) must at all costs be guarded with reverence. Professor Petrie is especially anxious concerning the holy city, and urges that building on the old sites sacred to three religions should be forbidden. Modern scientific sanitation is against piling more buildings on these ruins. There is a clean and sanitary alternative; extend a suburb down the valley of Rephaim to the southwest, where the railway is, or to a better site two miles northwest in the valley running down from Ramah. The present city has "bad water and bad access;" it ought to be kept for its historical value, and modern life ought to be removed to suitable healthy ground. Professor Petrie believes that with careful research, discoveries will be made of importance. The documents of early Palestine were clay tablets which can only be destroyed by crushing. Clay documents of David's or Solomon's reign or of the judges may be found."

Flowers.

To dream of picking flowers signifies future fortune. Of holding, seeing or smelling them in season means pleasure, but if out of season, obstacles and lack of success. If the flowers are white the obstacles will be less; if yellow, they will be painful, and if red, they foretell the dreamer's serious illness. If you dream of being bedecked with flowers it means a short happiness is coming to you. If you dream of buying them you will hear some good news.—Chicago American.

Enterprising Californians.

An enterprising citizen of Los Angeles not long ago started a little scheme whereby persons in other states and cities could, without leaving home, give their friends the impression that they were visiting the city of angels and movie millionaires. And this was the scheme: For 25 cents he would send any one ten postcard views of his home town. These the recipient was to address, sign and cover with messages, and return to him with the amount necessary for mailing them. The plan worked beautifully. As a result, persons in other tourist centers, including San Francisco, New Orleans, Miami and Palm Beach, have imitated it.—New York Evening Post.

Speech Making.

After the parade had reached the park speech making was in order for some time and whilst this was in progress a programme of sports was carried out.

Bro. A. L. Burke, Deputy County Master, was chairman and introduced the various speakers

The programme opened by the singing of "The Maple Leaf" by some twenty children of the True Blue Orphanage at Picton, followed by an appropriate prayer by Rev. Capt. W. G. Clarke.

Mayor L. Roenigk of Trenton was the first speaker and spoke briefly, extending a hearty welcome to all present, and the freedom of the town.

Bro. N. Harte, Reeve of Murray Township, and Past Master of Trenton Lodge, referred to the pleasure it was to the citizens of Trenton to have had the celebration in that town. He was pleased with the turnout, and hoped all would enjoy themselves.

Mr. W. H Ireland, M.P.P., was brief in his remarks but voiced the remarks of the former speakers in reference to the pleasure it was for the citizens of the town to see such a large and representative gathering.

Mr. E. Maybee, M.P for East Northumberland, in his address referred to some countries being in turmoil, whilst Canada was free from such. He advocated co-operation of all Canadians in honoring the laws and to assist in building up a great country. If the rising generation are going to be good citizens there must be proper government and training of them whilst they are young. The love of country and unity must be taught in the schools and in the home. The bulwark of the British Empire was the love of home.

Major the Rev. Belford in his remarks referred to the presence of the ladies in the Orange Order and the great benefits that would result to the order by their presence. There was a great problem in Canada today and it was getting bigger. That problem was the varied nationalities that are populating the country, being upwards of one hundred different tongues. There should be but one language taught in our schools, and that the English language. He also spoke of the necessity of all Canadians being united for the building up and the betterment of the country.

Rev. R. A. Deive of Smithfield spoke briefly congratulating all who had taken part in the great celebration. All should be proud to march in an Orange parade, a society that is for freedom and the upholding of the word of God.

Capt. Rev. W G. Clarke of Trenton in his opening remarks expressed the pleasure it was to welcome all members of the Orange societies to the town of Trenton. It was a grand celebration. An Orangeman is a person who can be met openly upon all occasions. We are proud of you, and the organization is an honor not only to Canada, but the Empire. Canada has been attaining national consciousness the past few years. The boys who went to South Africa put Canada on the map, and we are proud of our boys who took part in the great war. The great problem is how to bring about a great Canadian citizenship. We possess a great country and we desire to assimilate all classes. The Orange order stands for civil and religious liberties, also for popular government, a government of the people, for the people and by the people. The reverend speaker also spoke at some length on British connection, racial unity, and Canadian idealism.

Rev. Mr Barber of Picton spoke in reference to the True Blues Orphanage at Picton and the new orphanage which is being erected at Richmond Hill, Toronto, at a cost of upwards of $200,000 Of this amount $75,000 was needed to complete it. Since the orphanage had been established 750 children had passed through it, and a number went overseas to fight for the Empire. He made an earnest appeal for assistance for this worthy object.

Mayor Hanna of Belleville in a few well chosen remarks extended a hearty welcome to all Orange societies to participate in a demonstration in Belleville in 1924.

Bro. W. C. Reid of Belleville, Grand Treasurer of Ontario East, one of the oldest members of Benjamin Lodge 274, made a brief and appropriate address, as did also Bro. Harry B. Phillips, Warden of the united counties of Northumberland and Durham, and Mr. V. Stacia of Trenton. The proceedings were interspersed with suitable selections from the Wooler Band and were closed by cheers for the King.

NOTES.

Bro. Charlie Johns, a member of Mohawk Lodge, No. 99, was awarded the prize of a gold Orange pin for being the oldest Orangeman in the parade. He is 81 years of age and since his nineteenth birthday has been a continuous member. He walked the entire route of the march.

It was one of the most representative celebrations ever held in this locality, members of the order being present who had travelled 75 and 80 miles to be present.

The various refreshment booths about Hanna Park were most liberally patronized.

The proper name of Mohawk Lodge, No. 90, is Ka-Nyen-Ha-Kah.

GIVES DAUGHTER TO THE GIPSIES

Too Many Mouths to Feed —Trades Daughter For Horse

Montreal, July 12.—An astounding story of a father's neglect of his ten-year-old daughter comes from the village of Saint Cyrille. Yesterday in the presence of an official of the Catholic society for the protection of women and children he admitted that he had given his child to a band of gypsies, but he denied that he had taken anything in return. The child he said, was to be returned to him in a month, but the original story and the one which the authorities are investigating is that he gave the child away for a horse.

The father, whose name is Eugene Caron, was married twice and has six children, five by his first wife. He lives in a tumble-down shack that is situated on the hill overlooking the town of Saint Cyrille in Lislet county.

News of what had taken place reached Montreal yesterday and Rene Lemire, the secretary of the S. P. W. and C. went down to investigate. In the presence of Father Mercier, the cure, he visited the Caron home where the father admitted that he had given away Lucienne, but had not taken anything in return for her. The child is now in the care of Father Mercier who heard of what had taken place and rescued her from the gypsies.

Too Many Mouths to Feed.

The only excuse Caron gives for his action is that he found there were too many mouths to feed and that he considered one less would be a distinct gain.

The gypsies are one of the many roving bands who seem to have come from nowhere and who have been frequently seen in many parts of Ontario and Quebec this summer. They were passing the Caron place, so the story goes, and got into conversation with him.

"How would you like a good horse?" one of them is reported to have asked. "That would be fine," Caron answered.

It took only half an hour to make the trade and the little girl was handed over and the gypsies started off.

"Take good care of her," Caron said on their departure. "We will bring her back to see you frequently," they answered.

The child was wholly unaware of the trade that had been made and thinking that she was merely going for a ride with the visitors gaily started off for adventures of such a sort that were unknown in her young life.

A short while after one of the relatives visited the Caron home and was told what had taken place.

"Are you crazy?" she asked. "It is my own business," he answered.

Straight away the relative went to the Cure. Luckily the gypsies were not far off, so he was able to catch up with them. They gave the child up unwillingly and only when they were threatened with arrest if they didn't.

A report of the affair has been made to the attorney-general.

FAREWELL GIFT TO PASTOR

"A ONE-HORSE TOWN"

An American tourist the other day classified Kingston as a "one-horse town", because of the lack of legible street names and finger posts. Belleville is also in the "one-horse" class in this respect. It is difficult for strangers to find their way about this city. We do not suggest that a Street-Name Commissioner be appointed, but we do insist that it should not be possible for strangers to get lost in the city.

Finger-posts might be erected directing the new-comer and populace generally to the swimming pool in Victoria Park, or to the beautifully laid-out Zwick's Island—if there is any of it left above water.

"ON THE WAR PATH"

A Montreal French newspaper makes fun of the celebration of the "Glorious Twelfth", and speaks of Orangemen as being again "on the war path". It should be remembered that the Orange Order was instituted for the purpose of maintaining the Protestant religion against all assaults of its enemies, and it regards its chief foe as the Roman Catholic Church. This is merely a statement of fact. If the Order has been unusually active of late, it is because there has been unusual activity in the camp of the "enemy".

An intensive propaganda has been carried on by the Catholic Church in Canada for some months for the purpose of securing separate high schools, which would mean a further division of taxation and an aggravation of the sectarism distinctions that breed hatred and bitterness among men and women.

Catholics should be the last to complain about propaganda, for they are the greatest and the most successful propangandists in the world. Orangemen may not fight always with a rapier, and they may at times resort to the club, but what they do is done in the open, and there is no misunderstanding their argument or motive.

CITY AND COUNTRY

"Why are our streets lined with unemployed while millions of acres of the world's most fertile lands are lying idle on the broad plains of our Western prairies?" asks a labor journal. The Calgary Farm and Ranch Review replies to this question in a jocular, but very effective fashion as follows:

"Why, indeed! It does seem ridiculous. But, bless your innocent, little heart, the explanation is perfectly obvious. The gentlemen who line our streets, ostensibly in search of employment, are seldom looking for any twelve-hour-a-day job. It is so much simpler to let some other fellow do that unpleasant task, while the canny city worker profits by the prosperity thus created, and organizes a strike to cut his own day to six or seven hours, so as to have lots of leisure for the movies."

The paper goes on to say that Canada has a greater problem on its hands than that of getting the city worker on to the farm, and that is the problem of keeping the rural born youth anchored to the land. The comforts and conveniences of city life form a great attraction to young people who have had to "rough it" or who have lived in more or less isolation from the mass of human kind. It is easy for older folk who are past being attracted by the gauds and vanities of the world to make light of the desires of young people. The facts of the situation must be faced, or the problem will never be solved.

If the young people demand city comforts and conveniences, the only way to keep them on the land is to make country life more comfortable and convenient. It should not be necessary for young folk, or old folk for that matter, to work twelve hours a day. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" is an old maxim that farmers should take to heart in these days. It was good to see the farmers thronging into Belleville to the circus last week, and a few more similar excursions would tend to break the monotony and relieve the strain of toil.

Let the farmer come to the city oftener and bring his boys and girls with him, and let him takes some of the conveniences of city life back with him to the homestead.

PASSING COMMENT

Germany is dodging her creditors. It is an old dodge.

"Lions" were reported to be at large at Massassauga on Tuesday evening. They had a "roaring time."

The Toronto weather man says it is isn't hot, but merely humid—we feel much easier now.

No one is worrying about the coal strike in these days, but what a dreadful thing if the ice-man struck!

One of the first tasks of the new City Engineer when he comes on duty should be the planning of a swimming pool in Victoria Park.

Premier King has gone to Washington to discuss, with Secretary of State Hughes "important matters vitally concerning the two countries." This is to be a second Washington Conference.

A French doctor says that sun spots have a personal effect upon men. We are not sure about the spots, but we are positive regarding the effect of the spotless portions of "Old Sol" in these days.

HERE AND THERE

POOR POLAND.

Poland is suffering from hypertrophy of militarism and bureaucratism. For the 25,000,000 inhabitants there are 420,000 officials. In Warsaw every thirteenth inhabitant is a State functionary. Its industries are stagnant, and production not a ninth of pre-war productivity. Petroleum production in 1914 equalled 64,000,000 cisterns; in 1920 it is less than 64,000.—Jack Mills, M.P., in "The Labour Monthly."

REFORM TOO COSTLY.

Visiting a small city I was impressed with the excellent sidewalks. Expressing the same to my host, he told me that they were the work of a reform Mayor. Smilingly I asked him if he was re-elected and his reply was, 'not on your sweet life!' And then he proceeded to pour forth the vials of his wrath. "Do you know,' he said, 'that the one thing we, a free and independent people, won't stand is reform? A reformer is a political suicide. We will tolerate incompetency, crookedness, hypocrisy, meanness, intemperance, gambling and licentiousness in office and often re-elect them to office, but if an official is rash enough to tell us, the sovereign people, that we must live up to the laws, then—good night!" Was my good friend giving fact or fiction? No one will claim that it was all fiction. I am inclined to think that the very last thing we will excuse in an administration is an administration that attacks some remissions on our part. Let his fire away at something that doesn't cost money.—Norwich Bulletin.

HOW ELOQUENT ARE EYES

By Percy Bysshe Shelley.

How eloquent are eyes!
Not the rapt poet's frenzied lay,
When the soul's wildest feelings stray,
Can speak so well as they.

How eloquent are eyes!
Not music's most impassioned note
On which Love's warmest fervours float,
Like them, bids rapture rise.

Love, look thus again!
That your look may light a waste of years,
Darting the beam that conquers cares
Trough the cold shower of tears.

FINE OPENINGS TO POEMS.

No great poem opens better than Keat's "Hyperion." Thus:—

Deep in the shady sadness of a vale,
Far sunken from the healthy breath of morn,
Far from the fiery noon, and eve's one star,
Sat gray-hair'd Saturn, quiet as a stone.

Who can hear the prelude of Milton's organ music without being instantly aware that he stands on the threshold of a palace of poesy?

Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us and regain the blissful seat,
Sing heavenly Muse!

Coleridge's "Kubla Khan" is but a fragment of a fragment compared with such a torso as "Hyperion," but it strikes a note of enchantment which perhaps no other poem can match. It is word-music only, but what wonderful music notwithstanding:—

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure-dome decree;
Where Alph, the sacred river, ran,
Through caverns measureless to man,
Down to a sunless sea.

Certainly one of the great openings is that of Browning's "Pippa Passes":—

Day!
Faster and more fast,
O'er night's brim, day boils at last . . .

PRESS OPINIONS

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF

Stratford Beacon

There were those who regarded Great Britain as incapable of repeating, in the case of Ireland, the success which has nearly always been hers in handling unruly sections of the Empire. Some admitted this to be the fault of Irish temperament—others placed the blame on British inability to understand the Irish. But all who held this opinion, which ever explanation they assigned for it, appear to have been wrong. It is no longer the British, but the majority of the Irish themselves, who are fighting the cause of the Empire—or, as they put it, "of the British Association of Nations" —against the handful of Republican rebels.

GERMANY'S MORATORIUM

Mail and Empire

The formal demand by Germany for a moratorium on reparation payments is but the culmination of a situation long in sight. The economic crisis in Europe is fast heading to an open and catastrophic break. It is being promoted in Germany by means of a policy that to all appearances is deliberately calculated to that end. From the day when the Versailles Treaty powers finally fixed the reparation indemnity to be paid by Germany, German fiscal policy has been directed toward bringing about the collapse of the exchange value of the mark and thus evading the requirement of the Allies as to indemnity payments.

EXTREMISTS' INSANITY

Hamilton Spectator

If it be true that the extremists among the United States railroad workers are planning a "reign of terror," "something along the lines of the Herrin massacre, perhaps on a larger scale," it is proof that industrial madness is more widespread than had been feared. The utter futility of such a policy, apart from its heinousness, should be obvious to the dullest mind, after recent happenings. It is absolutely impossible for any organization, and least of all for any small faction of an organisation, to browbeat its way towards the accomplishment of its own special ends in this manner. It is only by virtue of the public backing of a cause that it can succeed. Deliberately to antagonise the public and outrage all feelings of decency in this way is to abandon every chance of winning out.

WIT AND HUMOR

"Pa, I know why some fishes are flat."

"Why my son?"

"Cause in shallow water fish have to be flat, or they'd get their backs sunburnt."

Furnished an Alibi—"Yessah! Brudder Tump sho' flogged me, and flogged me plenty! He knocked me down and drug me around and beat and mauled me me twell muh tongue hung out."

"What yo'all gwine to do 'bout it, sah?"

"Do? What kin I do? De gen'leman done disavow de whole incident!"

Kitty, aged four, had been naughty and her father had had to administer vigorous correction before going to business.

That an impression had been made was apparent when, on his return from business in the evening, Kitty called upstairs with frigid politeness: "Mother, your husband's home."

An Englishman, an Irishman, and a Scotsman went forth together to burgle a farm house. The Sassenach appropriated a horse, the Gael a cow, while the representative from Erin commandeered a cart.

As they were making their way into town a policeman approached and asked the Englishman where he got the horse.

"Ah!" was the reply. "I've had it since it was a foal!"

"And where did you get that cow?" he asked Scottie, who responded —

"Ah, I've had her since she was a calf!"

Turning to Pat, the constable next asked, "Where did you get that cart?"

"Ah, begorra," quickly retorted Pat, "I've had it since it was a wheelbarrow!"

The Delectable Duchy.

CONCERNING CORNWALL AND THE CORNISH.

In an article on "Cornish Characteristics" in Mr. John Kinsman's pleasant little volume "The Cornish Handbook" (Burrow, 3s. 6d.) Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch protests against Cornwall being labelled with "the detestable word 'Riviera.'" He says: "We do not ripen the grape, neither do we harvest the olive." But the word is used comparatively. Cornwall as a "Riviera" compared to Northumberland—and I believe oranges have been successfully grown in the open air in Falmouth.

The Climate.

The climate of Cornwall is "warmer in winter, cooler in summer, than that of the rest of England," and the people are curiously un-English. I, myself, have frequently heard the expression "up along in England" in Hayle, in Helston, and in St. Keverne Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch says:

The Cornish are a secretive race, and have an instinct for searching by skill and faith in dark places, whether with nets dropped down through the floor of the sea, or with cages and buckets lowered into the bowels of the earth.

The People.

Superficially, the Cornish are dour. They do not open their hearts to strangers. They are almost as musical as the Welsh, to whom, of course, they are closely related, and they are almost as devoted to Methodism. It is almost impossible for a foreigner to imitate the Cornish accent. I quote Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch:

They (the Cornish) speak English of a sort and, on the whole, very purely, though with a few odd shifting of pronouns; but somehow it sounds unlike English, for the pitch of the voices is different and they modulate it in a high sing-song, so that their "good days", or the direction they give you, sound like incantations, while the very names of the places to which they direct you have a music of a legendary land—Dozmare, Luxulyan, Restormel, Lostwithiel, Endellion, St. Enodoc, Lanherne, Perranzabuloe, Zelah, Zennor, Mevagissey, Ardevora, St. Veryan, St. Just in Roseland, Chyandour, Dolor Ogo, Polurrian, Halazphron, Lamorna, Tol-pedn-penwith.

Sir Arthur adds this interesting fact:

Cornwall acquired the English language and lost its own (with the fairies) about two hundred years ago, in the age of Pope and Warton and Arbuthnot.

Never Conquered.

Cornwall, like Ireland, was never conquered, either by the Normans or the Saxons:—

About 1,000 years before the Christian era the Celts reached Cornwall—possibly the Goidels at first, and certainly the Brythonic Celts were the civilized people of their day, and, when successive incursions of Romans and Saxons subsequently conquered the major part of England, Cornwall, Wales and Brittany remained in the hands of the Britons. In this connection it is interesting to note that neither Romans nor Saxons appear to have conquered the Cornish, and while the former were in a state of heathenism the Cornish had reached a much higher altitude, so much so that Cornwall was Christian while the rest of England was dominated by the cruelties which characterized the Saxon hordes.

In Mousehole, near Penzance, the people have a striking physical resemblance to the Spaniards. Is it possible, I wonder, that the crews of wrecked ships belonging to the Armada settled in Cornwall, as they certainly did in Donegal?

The Duchy has individuality and a curious charm, and it always pleases me to remember that my forbears, after leaving Normandy, settled, for some queer reason, in the far, far west of England. The Cornish are eager, almost bitter Cornwall patriots. To quote a verse of a song by Mr. Bernard Moore:

The music fits together
As the songs roll up and down,
An' 'tis makin' a Cornish Chorus
From Cawsand to Sennen Town;
It rises from port an' harbour,
By Tre an' Pol an' Pen,
An' the Cornish skies are ringin'
With the Chorus of Cornishmen.

The New Improved Gillette Safety Razor will make your vacation trip a holiday in the true sense of the word.

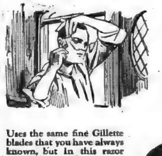
It is the out-of-the-way places, without home conveniences, that bring home to men most forcibly the advantages of the Gillette. Where other razors leave off, the New Improved Gillette begins—

The Summer Hotel—without hot water; sometimes without a mirror.

The mechanically sharpened blade—the finest edge in all the world—knows no difficulties—In town or country, for holidays and workdays, with hot or cold water, it removes the beard at the lightest touch.

The Camp in the Woods—no place for strop or hone—

Strops and hones have always been unsatisfactory. The vacations merely accentuate their kinship with the past. Long since have these appurtenances to shaving been relegated to the discard by the Gillette Safety Razor.



On the train, 'mid jolt and jar—

Gillette's own kingdom. Whizzing through the country at a breakneck speed, you can stand before a mirror and shave yourself skin close in perfect safety.

EVERYWHERE the answer is the same. For the perfect shave under all conditions.

TWO TABLES

By Florence Howard Wolcott

I like to see a festive board with linen snowy white
And glass and silver gleaming in the mellow candle light;
The waitress in her starchy cap, the viands rich and rare;
The jolly guests around the board with whom I love to share
But best of all-I love to see a table set for two,
A plate of golden muffins and the percolator's brew—
No waitress near to bother us, no eye but mine to see
The loved one who sits opposite and breaks the fast with me.

THE NEW RELATION

I shall never understand these modern youngsters.

Little Lady Phyllis, for instance—

She is the dearest child in the world. Eighteen now, I suppose, and I have known her from cradle-days. Long ago she adopted me as an uncle, and we have done all sorts of exciting things together. And even to-day, when her portraits appear so regularly in the illustrated weeklies, I like to believe she has not lost all affection and respect for her father's old friend. But—

She came to my house a fortnight ago with the most beatiful young man in the world.

'This is Bobbie,' she explained, and then added: 'Bobbie, make love to your new uncle.'

There was no mistaking her meaning. In the queer modern way these youngsters had decided to marry, and this was their method of breaking the news. I murmured my congratulations—at which they stared—and suggested a dinner in their honor.

Which night? They consulted. They were engaged most evenings, it seemed; but the following Tuesday might be managed. There was only a dance at Wally's Club that evening, and if I didn't mind their rushing off early——

'But of course not,' said I.

'Then we'll come,' announced Phyllis, 'and if Bobbie is late, I'll never speak to him again.'

But he wasn't late, and the dinner was good fun. I could not make out what Bobbie's profession might be—he was a silent young man—nor, indeed, was it made clear to me when their engagement was going to be publicly announced. I gathered that the older formalities are often dispensed with these days. They left early, and I amused myself by making veiled inquiries. Bobbie, I admitted, was a very charming young man, but who might he be?

Nobody seemed to know very much He was just Bobbie, it seemed, and they were always together. That was all.

I was a little surprised, too, to find that nobody seemed to care very much.

But that, I supposed was also the modern way. . . .

I heard of them from various people who move in le monde. Such a jolly couple. So well suited to each other. It was a pleasure to watch them, and so forth.

'Yes, but . . . who?'

They couldn't tell me. Did it matter very much?

Matter? It mattered considerably to me. Phyllis's mother had been dead for years but her father——

Her father, I found, didn't think that he had ever seen the young man. Oh yes, he had—at the Duchess of Chiswimk's. A good-looking boy. Bobbie Somebody-or-other. Well, what about him?

I gasped. I continued to gasp.

But I needn't have gasped.

They are not engaged to be married. They never were engaged. There seems no reason to suppose that they ever will be engaged to be married.

They are what I now understand are called Dancing Partners.

Which is apparently a new sort of Relation.—Daily Chronicle.

VISCOUNTESS RHONDDA AND THE LORDS

Viscountess Rhondda is not sitting down quietly under the rebuff from the House of Lords. She had a long article in the "Sunday Times" calling the attention rather scathingly to the fact that the Sex Disqualification Bill (Removal) was supposed to mean what it said—i.e. their sex from holding any position; yet here is this brilliant woman refused admittance to the House of Lords where she should sit as a peeress in her own right, purely on the ground of her sex.

Mrs. Millicent Garrett Fawcett, so famous in connection with women's affairs, has a trenchannt letter in "The Times" on the same subject. It is, as she says, a scandal that the unanimous approval of the Committee on Privileges in March should be over-turned by another Committee two months later, and it is all the more a scandal that the change of front was brought about by a member of the Government that originated and passed the Act. This particular member of the Government, however, is a powerful foe who apparently was able to sway the others with disastrous results to the question of women in the House of Lords. Not for a long time has anything aroused so much bitter feeling among women interested in affairs, as this has done. It is a pity that the authorities should give the impression of juggling, and wriggling out of their promises.—Saturday Night.

2 cups white sauce
½ cup grated cheese

Wash and cook the spinach in just enough water to keep it from burning. Add to it one-eighth teaspoon baking soda, two teaspoons salt. Cook from 20 to 30 minutes, drain, chop, and season with butter, salt and pepper. Pack into a pan or bowl, and keep hot over water until ready to serve.

Scrape the carrots. Wash and cook in a very little water until tender, adding one teaspoon salt. When carrots are tender there should not be more than a tablespoon of water in the kettle. Add two tablespoons sugar and two tablespoons butter and cook in this syrup until slightly browned.

Cook the eggs in hot water, which does not boil, 40 minutes, shell and keep hot.

Make the white sauce, using three tablespoons butter, four tablespoons flour, one-half teaspoon salt, one-eighth teaspoon pepper and two cups milk. Cook until smooth and thick, add cheese and cook until cheese has melted.

On a large platter, in the center turn out the spinach. Pour around the sauce; at regular spaces place the eggs, and in between the eggs place two carrots which have been left whole. Serve some spinach, one egg, two carrots and sauce to each person. French fried potatoes are a good accompaniment. This recipe will serve five.

TRIMMINGS FOR SUMMER MILLINERY

Paris is stressing the poke shape considerably this Summer. It is, however, of a somewhat different order from the familiar type of which we are accustomed, as the front of the brim is rolled backward slightly this season, and thus reveals a facing which may either match the straw or be in a contrasting color. The former effect appears to be the more popular one. One charming French model, a mushroom poke, is of milan straw, simply trimmed with a great bow of mimosa ribbon hanging down over the shoulder.

Ribbon trimming, it is to be noted, still retains its popularity. Wide cire, black ribbon, tied in a great bow and loops at one side, makes a very smart trimming on a chic French model of black straw. Hats made entirely of ribbon are also very much in vogue.

Cretonne flowers strike a note of originality in certain interesting new models, and very charming is a hat of light brown straw, with a very wide brim and a rather high crown, which is wreathed with flowers made of cretonne.

Tiny, multi-colored wings are used in some cases to wreathe hats of straw or of taffeta. A pair of paroquets posed on one side also makes a smart adornment on such hats. These modes of trimming, however, are much to be deplored, involving as they do the slaughter of so many of our lovely, little, feathered friends.

The blot feathers, which were introduced earlier in the season, are use principally to trim the smaller hats. In one smart model of black Batavia straw, the side trimming consists of a large pin-wheel ornament, fashioned of black blot.

Glittering jet sequins, in still another example, are used to make an exotic bird which constitutes the modish, one-sided, trimming on a chic, little hat of black taffeta, the tiny brim of which is faced with red straw.—Sunday World.

(Toilet Tips)

A safe, certain method for ridding the skin of ugly, hairy growths is as follows:: Mix a paste with some powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface about 2 minutes, then rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This is entirely harmless and seldom requires repeating, but to avoid disappointment it is advisable to see that you get genuine delatone. Mix fresh as wanted.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

"Flatterer!" said Mrs. Ilkington archly. "I'm not surprised," she pursued. "I might have known you'd be aboard this vessel."

"You must be a prophetess of sorts, then," he said, smiling. "I didn't know I was going to sail, myself, till late yesterday afternoon.

"Deceiver," commented the lady calmly. "Why can't you men ever be candid?"

Surprise merged into some annoyance. "What do you mean?" he asked bluntly.

"Oh, but two can play at that game," she assured him spiritedly. "If you won't be open with me, why should I tell all I know?"

"I'm sure I don't know what you're driving at, Mrs. Ilkington."

"Would it prove your understanding"—she threatened him gaily with a gem-encrusted forefinger—"if I were to tell you I met a certain person in Paris last week, who talked to me about you?"

"It would not," said he stiffly. "Who—?"

"Oh, well, if you won't be frank!" Mrs. Ilkington's manner implied that he was a bold, bad butterfly, but that she had his entomological number, none the less. "Tell me," she changed the subject abruptly, "how goes the great play?"

"Three acts are written," he said in weariness of spirit, "the fourth—" .

"But I thought you weren't to return to America until it was quite finished?"

"Who told you that, please?"

"Never mind, sir! How about the fourth act?"

"I mean to write it en voyage," said he, perplexed. From whom could this woman possibly have learned so much that was intimate to himself?

"You have it all mapped out, then?" she persisted.

"Oh, yes; it only needs to be put on paper."

"R'ally, then, it's true—isn't it— that the writing is the least part of play construction?"

"Who told you that?" he asked again, this time amused

"Oh, a very prominent man," she declared; and named him.

Staff laughed. "A too implicit belief in that theory, Mrs. Ilkington, said he, "is responsible for the large number of perfectly good plays that somehow never get written—to say nothing of the equally large number of perfectly good playwrights who somehow never get anywhere."

"Clever!" screamed the lady. "But aren't you wasteful of your epigrams?"

He could cheerfully have slain her then and there; for which reason the civil gravity he preserved was all the more commendable.

"And now," he persisted, "won't you tell me with whom you were discussing me in Paris?"

She shook her head at him reprovingly. "You don't know?"

"No."

"You can't guess?"

"Not to save me."

"R'ally?"

"Honestly and truly," he swore, puzzled by the undertone of light malice he thought to detect in her manner.

"Then," said she with decision, "I'm not going to get myself into trouble by babbling. But, if you promise to be nice to me all the way home—?" She paused.

"I promise," he said gravely.

"Then—if you happen to be at the head of the companion-ladder when the tender comes off from Queenstown tonight—I promise you a huge surprise."

"You won't say more than that?" he pleaded.

She appeared to debate. "Yes," she announced mischievously; "I'll give you a leading hint. The person I mean is the purchaser of the Cadogan collar."

His eyes were blank. "And what, please, is the Cadogan collar?"

"You don't mean to tell me you've never heard of it?" She paused with dramatic effect. "Incredible! Surely, everybody knows about the Cadogan collar, the most magnificent necklace of pearls in the world!"

"Everybody, it seems, but myself, Mrs. Ilkington."

"R'ally!" she cried, and tapped his arm playfully. "You are as stupid as most brilliant men!"

A bugle sang through the evening air. The lady started consciously.

"Heavens!" she cried. "Time to dress for dinner: I must fly! . . . Have you made your table reservation yet?"

"Yes," he said hastily.

"Then do see the second-steward at once and get transferred to our table; we have just one vacant chair. Oh, but you must; you've promised to be nice to me, you know. And I do so want you to meet one of my protegees—such a sweet girl—a Miss Searle. I'm sure you'll be crazy about her—at least, you would be if there were no Alison Landis in your cosmos. Now, do atend to that right away. Remember you've promised."

Staff bowed as she fluttered away. In his heart he was thoroughly convinced that this were a sorry scheme of things indeed did it not include a special hell for Mrs. Ilkingtons.

What had she meant by her veiled references to this mysterious person in Paris, who was to board the steamer at Queenstown? How had she come by so much personal knowledge of himself and his work? And what did she know about his love for Alison Landis?

He swore thoughtfully, and went to dress, stoping on the way to make arrangements with the second-steward to have his seat changed, in accordance with his exacted promise.

IV
QUEENSTOWN.

Immediately he had allowed himself to be persuaded, Staff felt he should not have agreed to change his seat to the table occupied by Mrs. Ilkington's party, especially if he meant sincerely to try to do any real work aboard the Autocratic; and it wasn't long after he had taken his place for the first dinner that he was convinced that he had blundered beyond remedy or excuse.

The table was round and seated seven, though when the party had assembled there remained two vacant places. Staff was assigned the chair on Mrs. Ilkington's right and was sensitive to a not over subtle implication that his was the seat of honour. He would cheerfully have exchanged it for a place on the lady's left, which would have afforded a chance to talk to Miss Searle, to whom he earnestly desired to make an explanation and such amends as she would permit. But a male person named Bangs, endowed with impressive self-assurance, altogether too much good-looks (measured by the standards of the dermatological institute advertisements) and no excess baggage in the way of intellect, sat on Mrs. Ilkington's left, with Miss Searle beyond him. The latter had suffered Staff to be presented to her with (he fancied) considerable repressed amusement. Not that he blamed her, but. . . .

His position was rendered unhappy to the verge of being impossible, however, by the lady on his right, a Mrs. Thataker: darkly temperamental and buxom, a divorce and (she lost no time in telling him) likewise a playwright. True, none of her plays had ever been produced; but that was indisputably due to a managerial conspiracy; what she really needed was a friend at court—some clever man having "the ear of the manager." (Staff gathered that a truly clever man could warm up a play and pour it into the ear of the managers like laudanum and sweet-oil.) With such Thataker wouldn't mind collaborating; she had manuscripts in her steamer-trunk which were calculated to prove a number of things . . .

And while he was easing away and preparing to run before the wind to escape any such hideous complication, he was abruptly brought up all-standing by the information that the colour of the lady's soul was pink. She knew this to be a fact beyond dispute, because she never could do her best work save when garbed exclusively in pink. She enumerated several articles of wearing apparel not customarily discussed between comparative strangers but which —always provided they were pink—she held indispensible to the task of dramatic composition.

In his great agony, happening to glance in Miss Searle's direction, he saw a man, he was given to understand, Mrs. her with head bent and eye-lids lowered, lips compressed, colour a trifle heightened, shoulders suspiciously a-quiver.

What makes jelly jell?

CERTO Trade mark registered

How to Make Currant Jelly

4½ cups (2 lbs.) Juice from Cooked Fruit.
7½ leveled cups (3¼ lbs.) Sugar.
1 bottle (scant cup) Certo.

Crush thoroughly about 2½ quarts, or 3½ lbs. ripe fruit. Add ½ cup water, stir until boiling, cover pan, and simmer 10 minutes. Place in Jelly bag and squeeze out juice. Measure juice into large saucepan. Measure sugar into separate pan. Bring juice just to boil and begin to add sugar slowly, with constant stirring, taking about 5 minutes to add all the sugar, and keeping juice nearly at the boil. Then bring to the boil and at once add Certo, stirring constantly. Continue to stir and bring again to a hard boil for ½ minute, stirring continually. Take from fire, let stand 1 minute, skim and pour quickly.

PECTIN makes jelly "jell." Pectin is an element that Nature puts generously into some fruits—thus making them good jelly and jam makers—and sparingly, if at all, into the fruits most desired for jelly and jam.

Certo supplies all the pectin needed for the amount of fruit you use. You do not boil away flavor and destroy the color to reach the jellying point. Instead of the old wasteful process you retain the delicate color and flavor and enjoy jelly and jam of wonderful natural richness of the fruit. You have 50% more jam or jelly from the same amount of fruit—that's real economy!

Why not enjoy perfect jams and jellies from all your favorite fruits with a fraction of the work?

Certo enables you to have the correct amount of Nature's own pectin (the jellying element) to make perfect jams and jellies from any fruit you like to use, and at any time.

For Certo is "pectin," nothing else, Mother Nature's jell maker, extracted from fruit and concentrated by our exclusive and patented process in handy liquid form ready for use. No gelatine or preservative—an absolutely pure fruit product.

With Certo you can make perfect jellies and jams the natural way, with this big difference: with Certo you boil them but one minute—not 20 or 30 minutes, and the uncertainty of results eliminated.

TRUNKS DEFEAT BOWMANVILLE

Win Wind-up Game in First Schedule by Score of 6 to 1.

PERFECT FIELDING

Trunks New Fighting Machine all Set for the Second Schedule

In one of the snappiest exhibitions of baseball seen here in the first schedule, Grand Trunks defeated the Bowmanville squad on Wednesday afternoon by the score of 6 to 1.

Certainly the railroaders have never before this season fielded their positions so perfectly as in yesterday's game, and their work at the bat was nice to watch to say the least. They had only 3 errors and got 9 safe hits of Lloyd Chambers, the Bowmanville beaver, one of which was a 2 bagger.

The visitors were working nicely also, and except for two bad innings, gave the railroaders a real tough argument.

In the 4th inning the Trunks got 3 clean hits, and tallied 2 runs. Then in the 6th inning they busted out 2 more hits, and were materially assisted by the Bowmanville fielders, who made 3 errors. Piper and Cordon each pulled an unadulterated and inexcusable bone, the former missing a perfect bounce roller, and the latter dropping a perfect throw.

It was an unusual game in some respects also. For instance; Ray Mallen who twirled the whole game for the Trunks, struck out only 2 men as did Chambers for the visitors and yet Bowmanville got only 2 hits. That will explain clearly then the way the fielders worked, every man behind the pitcher, making would-be hits into outs, and thus reducing their errors. Trunks got 9 hits. Neither pitcher passed a man in the 9 innings, but two Bowmanville batsmen were hit by pitched balls. The visitors are credited with 4 errors.

Up until the 4th inning, only ten batters on each team came up, the game moving along like a house afire, with the result that instead of the game terminating at 5.30 p.m. as is often the case, it was over about 4.30 p.m.

The fielding of the locals is well worthy of mention, as their exhibition yesterday was after big league style. Hit the ball and go out. They gobbled everything, and maybe they didn't get a few. Liners, drives, grass cutters, high flies, fouls, they went after everything. Jack Williams made a dive heavenwards, and speared a liner, Casey ran out of the lot and managed to get one finger under a long fly in right field, and Wickie Ross, after running a city block, got a dive that nearly whirled him off his pins. Vern Weir was being bombarded with the worst form of rollers all day, and did not miss once.

Only two plays were fumbled by them, and that was a pop fly which Mallen dropped, and a roller which went through Meagher. The third error went to Harry Mills, when he stepped off the bag after catching the ball at first.

The visitors are improving too since their first game on Victoria Day, and had it not been for 2 or 3 bad errors, their chances would have been much better. Their outfielders work very nice, and they are hitters too.

Soldier Jones Drops From Limelight With a Thud

London, July 12.—(Montreal Gazette Cable).—Soldier Jones, the Canadian "hurricane boxer," has fallen cut of the limelight with a thud as a result of his defeat by George Cook, the Australian.

"Jones ought to be taken away by his friends and put close to some real hard work," says the London Standard to-day. "They say he used to fell trees. I don't believe he could hit a tree once in six times."

Hard things, these, to say of a boxer who began to be much fancied as an opponent of Carpentier. Jones explains that his poor showing was due to an injury to his right hand while training.

FAMOUS GOLFERS TO TOUR CANADA

New York, July 12.—J. H. Taylor and Alexander (Sandy) Herd, famous British golf professionals, arrived to-day aboard the liner Olympic for an exhibition tour of the United States and Canada. They were scheduled to play their first match this afternoon at White Plains, N.Y.

Herd and Taylor will strengthen the forces of British golf professionals already in this country. Abe Mitchell and George Duncan arrived recently and are playing this week in the open championship at Skokie. The quartette will meet only once during their tours, when they play a four ball match over the Merion Cricket Club links, Philadelphia, on September 15.

Taylor has won the British open title five times, capturing his first championship at Sandwich in 1894 repeating in 1895, 1900,1909 and 1913. Herd's only victory was in 1902. Taylor was runner up to Harry Vardon, when the latter captured the American open title in 1900.

PUT HAY IN SILO, IS ITALIAN METHOD

Carbonic Acid Given Off Prevents Any Rise in Temperature

Since 1914 a new method has been devised in Italy for conserving forage, writes Dr. Franco Samarani in Hoard's Dairyman. This method aims to produce, by means of a silo provided with a cover, a type of forage having almost the complete character of hay. At present it is quickly spreading in Italy, and meets with the full favor of the farmers. Many agricultural institutions are following the example of the Government, and are encouraging the new method.

No Heating.

It consists in the conservation of the forage, not only without contact with air, but in the presence of the carbonic acid produced by the respiration of the cells of the vegetable tissues. Through the influence of the carbonic acid the forage does not suffer any raise of temperature. In fact, in the case of ensiling green forages no production of heat is evidenced at all.

The silo is constructed with a tower like the American type, but it is completed by a large cover that ascends and descends mechanically.

In the evening when the forage has been put in, the cover descends immediately to hold the carbonic acid, which prevents the hay heating. The cover is lifted when new forage is put in. The farmer completes the silo, and when it is brought to the end he puts a weight of 600 pounds per square yard upon the cover for a large silo.

BRITISH WORKMEN SHOW SOME SPEED

Houses Going up at Rate of One a Day

Ottawa, July 12.—The Government has received a communication from the Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, Secretary of State for the Colonies, intimating that a mission will visit Canada next month in connection with the organization of the proposed British Empire Exhibition. In view of the imperial nature of the work which the mission is setting out to accompish, the Dominion Government has agreed to grant free transportation over the lines under its control to the seven members of the mission. This privilege has already been granted by Australia and South Africa. The object of the mission in coming to Canada is to induce the Canadian Government to take part in the proposed British Empire Exhibition.

DESTROY THE FLIES IN BREEDING PLACES

Unquestionably the time to destroy flies is before they begin to fly about and lay their eggs, which means either during the pupal or larva stage. Of these the latter is the easiest, because at that time they are still at home in their breeding places.

The first step toward this end, says Hoard's Dairyman, would be to get rid of their breeding places the manure piles and filth accumulations. Part of this can be done. More manure could be hauled directly to the field, garbage cans kept covered, and other breeding places got rid of.

Treat Unhauled Manure

However, there is always some manure that cannot be hauled to the field daily, and this is probably the largest single breeding place for flies. Since we cannot get rid of the breeding place entirely, the next best thing is to treat it with something that will kill the maggots. For this purpose powdered borax will give the best results. Use about one pound for every sixteen cubic feet of manure, sifting it evenly over the surface of the pile and a little heavier at the outer edges. Sprinkle water on afterward, or else dissolve the borax in water and sprinkle the solution over the manure.

SUN SPOTS AFFECT THE HUMAN RACE

Says a French Doctor—An Odd Theory Propounded

Paris, July 12.—Sun spots, which since their discovery have been the exclusive property of the scientific world, were yesterday introduced to the medical world through the Academy of Medicine.

The mysterious blots on the sun's surface, which were declared by scientists to influence the weather and be responsible for dry and wet periods, are now stated to have a much more personal effect on man. According to Drs. Vallot, Sardou and Faure, sun spots are capable of acting on chronic maladies of heart, liver, intestines and blood vessels, and also aggravating accidents occurring during their evolution.

The theory, the doctors declare, is based on a series of observations of an extremely curious character.

MEN GO ON STRIKE, OBJECT TO RATIONS

Kingston, Ont., July 12.—This morning twenty-five laborers went on strike entering a complaint against treatment given them. It is stated that the trouble arose over the food supplied them. The men were brought to this district from Sherbrooke, Quebec, and promised, so they state, 25 cents an hour, $4.50 to be deducted each week for board. They were charged $5.25 for board and they were fed on boiled beans three times a day.

DEMPSEY SAW MONTREAL BOUT

He Left To-day for the Martime Provinces

Montreal, July 13.—Had the fight fans at the Green-Lewis bout here last night known that the world's heavyweight champion was standing at the back of the arena in the shadow watching the bouts, it is more than probable that the pugilists in the ring would have been of secondary interest. Dempsey remained here to witness the fight and left for the Maritime Provinces this afternoon.

GIRLS PREVENT TWO DROWNINGS

Little Girls Pull Brother From Lake at Oakville

Oakville July 12.—Swept by a huge wave from the dock on which he was playing little Karl Hopkins, aged 7 years, had an narrow escape from drowning. The lad was with his two sisters, slightly older than himself. They leaned over the edge of the edge of the dock and waited for him to be washed back by another wave. They succeeded in seizing hold of his body and dragging him out of the water.

The lad was unconscious and it was feared he was dead. Chief Constable Karr applied artificial respiration and after some minutes' work brought the boy around. The lad is the son of John Hopkins, a well-known resident of the town.

Early in the afternoon Miss Blanche Corliss, a local telephone operator was saved from drowning only by the prompt action of her companion, Miss Rita Lawrence. The two girls were in bathing. When some distance from the pier, Miss Corliss was overcome by cramps and sank. When she was sinking for the third time she was seized by her companion and brought to safety.

BETRAYAL OF ULSTER RESENTED BY L.O.L.

Toronto Orangemen Pass Strong Resolution Yesterday

Toronto, July 12.—"That we view with dismay and disapproval the betrayal by the British government of the loyal inhabitants of Ireland under the Free State treaty and reluctantly record the fact that such acts are inimical to the best interests of the empire and tend to weaken the confidence of self governing dominions in the central authority and in its capacity to maintain the power and prestige of British subjects. That we extend our sympathy to the loyalists of Ireland of every creed and station and pledge ourselves to render them all the assistance within our power in the splendid fight to maintain their position within the empire."

This resolution, moved by Thomas Crawford and seconded by Captain Joe Thompson, received hearty support from the Orangemen gathered in Exhibition Park this afternoon.

SEWER SPOILS WINE, OWNER SUES CITY

Hull Man Claims $2,000 for Damage to Stock by Water

Ottawa, July 12.—A break in a defective sewer pipe which, it is alleged, led to the destruction of $500 worth of choice whiskey and wines has brought the corporation of Hull into a $2,000 damage action. Louis Chanonard claims that water leaked into his cellar from September, 1921 to February of this year, completely ruining, plaintiff says, the beverage quality of the wines.

DREAM CAME TRUE BUT IN WRONG HOUSE

Woman Dreams Her House on Fire and Wakes and Finds Brother's House Burnt

Port Hope, July 13.—Do coming events cast their shadows before?

An instance of remarkable telepathic coincidence is reported from Ogdensburg, N. Y., where Mrs. William Casey, Kingston, who has been visiting at the home of her brother-in-law, Henry J. Parker, dreamed on Tuesday night that her home had been destroyed by fire. The next morning she was recounting the experience at the breakfast table when the telephone rang.

On answering the call, Mr. Parker learned from Dr. L. E. Crowley, Kingston, that his home had been badly gutted by the flames from the fire at Finkle's livery in the early hours of Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Casey is now convinced of the premonition of fire which she recieved during the night.

BIGAMIST IS SENTENCED

Thomas J. Kirby is Sentenced to Two Years and Six Months at Kingston

Thomas J. Kirby, of Toronto, who appeared for sentence on a charge of bigamy to which he had pleaded guilty at his trial recently, was sentenced to two years and six months in Portsmouth Penitentiary, near Kingston.

Kirby, it will be remembered, went through a form of marriage with Miss E. Smith of Campbellford last spring while having a wife and seven children residing in Toronto. They were married in Belleville.

Before sentence was passed, Mr. C. A. Payne, counsel for defendant, asked for the leniency of the court for three reasons. First, not because Kirby was a returned soldier, but as a result of wounds received on services overseas, secondly, owing to his straight-fowardness in admitting his wrong, and thirdly, on behalf of his first wife who is taking the initiative in trying to have the sentence imposed, as light as possible.

Magistrate Masson—"This is an unfortunate case. This man has a respectable wife and family, and had a good salary with which tosupport them. At present however, there is poor competency for provision for his family. He has ruined the prospects of life for the girl he married. Sending this man to prison is not going to help them, but he must be punished for the offence.

For the sake of his wife and family I would like to suspend sentence, but this crime is on the increase, and is being treated by many as a slight offence while I believe it is a very serious offence.

"Repeatedly, the man repudiated the fact that he was married, after having been approached by the clergyman of the girl's church, and the Catholic priest of his own church, and then he slanders the girl, slanders his wife, and after she agrees to take him back and he goes back to the Toronto home, he writes another letter to the Campbellford girl, again asking her to go with him and trying to further drag her down.

"Many correspondents have vouched for this man's good conduct, and counsel for him has pleaded for leniency, as well as his yet faithful wife. Though at first I considered seven years the just punishment, taking all matters into consideration I have brought it down to 5 years and then cut that in two."

Sentence was then passed.

"If the Governor General in council sees fit to further reduce the sentence, he may do so, but It is his duty not mine. I have gone the limit", said his Worship in closing.

It is quite probable that application for executive clemency will be made.

ORANGE PARADE AT MARMORA

Speaker Urges Better Understanding — Orangemen Not Bigots

The Orange celebration at Marmora village was a decided success, many lodges taking part in the parade. Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., was the principal speaker and in his address made a strong appeal to members of all religious denominations to drop bickerings and discord over religious differences and endeavour to bring about a better understanding. He said the Orange Order was greatly maligned. It was organized for defence, not to attack any man's religion. He said the Constitution of the Orange Order, when it started, September 21st, 1795 and ever since, has forbidden its members upbraiding, injuring or persecuting anyone on account of his religious opinions, whether Jew, Buddhist, Mohammedan, Confucian or Catholic. The Constitution requires every Orangeman to aid, assist and protect from violence and oppression the loyal subjects of every religion. It may be true that all Orangemen have not always carried out these principles, but the Order should not be blamed for that, any more than a religious organization should be blamed for all the faults of all its members. He did not blame the Catholic Church or all Catholics for what some Catholics had done at some period in history. In the great war one-fifth of the Orange population of Canada fought for the protection of the rights and liberties of Catholic Belgium against Protestant Germany.

The greatest need of the day is a "better understanding." A better understanding not only between the East and the West, between Capital and Labor, between the Manufacturer and the Farmer, between the Producer and Consumer, between the English speaking and French speaking Canadians, but more especially between the adherents of all Christian denominations.

If there was a "better understanding" between the members of all Christian denominations, the Christian spirit would not only develop strength throughout Christendom, but Christianity would spread with leaps and bounds in the foreign missionary fields. It is no wonder that the church attendance is small at home and heathen in foreign lands slow in taking up the Christian religion, when there is so much discord and even violence between the adherents of the various Christian denominations. Now that the people in heathen lands are taking more to education and newspapers they are learning of the prejudice and bitterness among Christian people owing to the lack of a "better understanding." Shall we forever quarrel over religion when by so doing we retard the progress of Christianity? To put it on a business basis, it would be better business to send money to christianize the heathen if we had a "better understanding" among ans. We may neve racgring" among Christians." We may never agree as to methods and forms and principles, but we can learn to appreciate each other's viewpoint, and thereby bring about a "better understanding."

MELROSE

The social held at the home of Mr. English was a great success. A good program was furnished in which Mr. Mackintosh, Belleville, Miss McCullough, Deseronto and Dr. Mackie rendered good selections.

GIRL PREACHER HEARD AGAIN

Eight Persons Came Forward in Response to Appeal for Decisions

Miss Agnes Vitchestain, the girl preacher, gave the second of her four sermons at the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church last evening, before a large audience.

The sermon was based upon the third chapter of St. John's gospel: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

The love of God was concretely shown by such appropriate illustrations as the story of Nicodemus, who came to Jesus by night. The universal expressions of God's love were dwelt upon, the speaker showing that love of one another, and love of Nature, were demonstrations of God's love. Each soul on earth should have access to the love also, opening and becoming more susceptible to its power according to maturity, like unto a beautiful flower.

The thought that threaded its way throughout the sermon was a happy thought for a young girl, and the sermon hit home to a far greater degree than the heavier, memorized oration of Tuesday evening.

At the conclusion of the service eight persons came forward and expressed their desire of being numbered among the redeemed.

Rev. C. G. Smith, B.D., of Montreal, presided over the whole of the service and aided greatly in that capacity, being well and popularly known in this city.

A musical number was rendered by the mixed quartette of the Baptist church choir: Messrs. Faulkner and Cook, Mrs. Doolittle and Miss Forham.

BRITISH MISSION COMING NEXT MONTH

Will Seek to Enlist Canada's Co-operation in Empire Exhibition

London, July 13.—Commodious, well-built dwelling houses are going up at Feltham, a suburb of London, at the rate of one a day. Such speed in building has never been witnessed before. It is all the more striking because it occurs at a time when complaints are heard on every side that the British workman is not what he used to be, and that nothing will induce him to get through any job at the ordinary speed of an American workman.

The explanation is found in the fact that the man who is getting the work done learned how to hustle and how to handle men on the other side of the Atlantic. He is J. H Taylor, head of an engineering firm here. By birth he is a Canadian. Early in his career he was a railway contractor. He helped to build the Great Northern Railway, the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways. Now he is in England applying what he learned in Canada.

AIMS TO CREATE WORLD WHEAT POOL

Leader of Australian Farmers Confers With Saskatchewan Premier

Regina, Sask., July 12.—To learn the views on grain marketing of the Saskatchewan Government and to place before him his plan for international co-operation in wheat marketing methods, Hon. A. K. Trethowan, president of the Federated Farmers' Organisations of Australia, held a conference with Premier Dunning. Hon. Mr. Trethowan holds the view that a committee composed of marketing experts of the grain producing countries of the world, Canada, Australia should be appointed to study the needs of the markets of the world and work together in advising the producing countries as to the conditions obtaining at different times, the seasons for selling and the times when grain should be withheld to prevent a surplus on the markets.

His scheme would amount to a world wheat pool, which he believes is the method to stabilize prices and protect all classes from great fluctuations in price consumer as well as producer. One country operating a pool or compulsory board independently is not sufficient, he believes.

GERMANS BUILD NEW U.S. "ZEP"

Intestines of 500,000 Cattle Required for Making of Gas Container

Washington, July 12.—The huge gas containers of the ZR-3 Zeppelin, building in Germany for the United States navy, will be made of gold beaters' skins. The material is secured from the intestines of cattle, and it is estimated that more than 500,000 beeves will make their contribution toward the big rigid airship. Gold beaters' skins are the most impervious membrane known to man.

The ZR-3 will be so constructed that it will be possible to use either helium or hydrogen gas for inflation. When it is delivered in this country it will be inflated with helium, thereby obviating the possibility of meeting the fate which overtook the R-38 on its final trial flight, and the Italian semi-rigid Roma, both of which were inflated with hydrogen, which is highly inflammable.

Unless the ZR-3 meets with an accident prior to its arrival at the big navy Zeppelin shed at Lakehurst, N.J., the possibility of a disastrous fire due to hydrogen gas will be eliminated. An experienced German crew will fly the ZR-3 from Friedrichshaven where it is being built, to Lakehurst, and will remain in the United States for a period of months to instruct navy lighter-than-air experts in the handling of the mammoth craft, which will be the largest in the world.

TALKED WITH SPIRITS OF DEAD PARENTS

Lawyer's Wife, Now in Asylum, Knew it Bored Relatives

Montreal, July 13.—Spirits of her dead father and mother and other dear friends were visible to Mrs. Ernestine Menard, wife of Yvon Lamontagne, Montreal lawyer, who committed her to an asylum, urgin this as reason for her kidnapping as she left her sister's home on Amherst street on July 5.

According to Mrs. Chalomer, the sister in question, Mrs. Lamontagne could commune with the spirits by day or night. She had a firm belief in spiritualism and found great comfort in conversation with the loved ones gone before. Although her beliefs were not shared by any other member of the family they did not find them so strange as to lead them to think her insane, as her husband now contends, and they quote many beliefs, and she recognized that fact, eminent spiritualists as sharing her beliefs and practices. According to Mrs. Chalomer, her sister needed no medium to put her in touch with the spirits who, she said, would smile on her, and she would smile back.

Because her relatives did not share her beliefs, and she recognized that fact, she always apologized for mentioning them. She would say, "I know that bores you," and would change the subject.

This was the assertion made by Mrs. Lamontagne's cousin, Mrs. Guadry, of St. Hubert's street, who expressed the view that the unhappy woman was under the hypnetic influence.

Mrs. Gaudry said Mrs. Lamontagne told her that a man was determined to get control of her property and because she would not sign a paper transferring it to him had thrown her to the ground. While lying on the ground she told him "You may kill me, but I'll never sign."

Viennese Landmark.

Legend, as well as quaint fact, adheres to many of the landmarks of Vienna. To the south of the city is a beautiful cross, the Spinnerin am Kreuz. The site was a rendezvous for tourists because of the panorama of the city it afforded. Though the present cross is more than five centuries old, it replaced a simpler crucifix, which is said to have been placed there by a woman whose husband went away on one of the crusades. While he was abroad she went to this point every day to spin and to pray. When he returned she erected the cross, as a symbol of gratitude, with the money she earned by spinning.

DEFLATION HITS BRITISH FARMERS

High Price of Labor and Heavy Taxes Forces Increase in Stock-raising

According to a recent review of British agriculture during the year 1921, issued by the United States Bureau of Foreign Domestic Commerce, the past year was the most disappointing to British farmers of any for a generation. The one bright spot was the large wheat crop the like of which, both in quality and quantity, has rarely been known in Great Britain.

Irish agriculture came through the year in better shape than the British. The agriculture returns from Scotland are also, on the whole, more favorable than the southern part of the island.

Year of Deflation.

In England, just as in the United States and Canada, the year just closed was one of deflation in prices of farm products—perhaps the most disasterous ever known, says The Breeders' Gazette. Never previously in the history of the grain trade in England has wheat fallen to the amount of 20 shillings a quarter in a single fortnight. Wheat, which was selling at 95 shillings a quarter the previous year, is now only 45 shillings.

British farm labor is thoroughly unionized since the war, and is prepared to make a stand against a return to the pre-war wage. It is now double the pre-war scale, but farmers maintain that the present scale is higher than the farm industry will bear, and efforts are being made to bring about further reductions.

Turning to Stock.

Consequent on this higher scale of wages for farm hands, combined with the heavier wages taxation imposed since the war, there is a gradual tendency to leave tillage and go back to grass on many farms, increasing stock grazing. Statistics show that the production of meat, especially pork, was increased during the past year. Indeed, "the farmers are turning to pigs and potatoes as an alternative to straight-out grain growing."

Forest Fires Menace City and Settlement in British Columbia

WIND FANS FLAMES

Inhabitants Preparing to Retreat From Their Homes

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Nanaimo, B.C., July 14.—Forest fires again menaced this city and the settlement surrounding it last night. Strong winds, which fortunately dropped at sundown, fanned the smouldering fires which had been lately brought under control and drew a ring of fire about the town.

The greatest uneasiness prevails, and four hundred men are working in shifts to protect life and property.

The town of Cumberland, seventy miles away, is in practically similar position while its three thousand inhabitants are preparing to retreat on Nanaimo if the fires drive them from their homes.

HAND LACERATED BY RIP SAW

A. Bowyer Was Victim of Painful Accident on Thursday

Mr. A. Bowyer, an employee of the Elliott Woodworking Machinery Co. was the victim of a very painful accident last evening, just a few minutes before his work for the day would have been over, almost 5 p.m. The unfortunate young man was running a board through the rip saw, when his hand in some manner came in contact with the saw. His left hand was badly lacerated, and the tip of one finger, to the first joint, was cut off. A number of stitches were required to close the wounds. Bowyer was employed in the shipping department.

He was removed to the hospital where Dr. J. L. Tower is attending him.

QUESTION OF WATER POWER

Deputation to Ottawa in the Matter is Off for the Present

At the City council meeting on Monday night a communication was read from the Clerk of Peterboro, asking Belleville Council to appoint a delegation to form part of a delegation that will go to Ottawa in reference to protesting against the usurping of certain water powers on the Trent Valley, the allegation being that it would mean increased cost of electric energy in Central Ontario.

On motion Mayor Hanna was appointed as a delegate.

In reference to this matter the following communication was yesterday received by City Clerk Holmes:

Lindsay, Ont., July 12, 1922.

The City Clerk,
Belleville, Ont.
Re. Central Ontario Power.

Dear Sir,—

After arrangements had been made with the Honourable Mr. Kennedy for a deputation to meet him on Wednesday, the 12th instant, with regard to the question of rental, Sir Adam Beck went to Ottawa on the night of the 10th and took the matter up with the Honourable Mr. Kennedy yesterday. They succeeded in agreeing upon a number of the points in dispute and are still negotiating as to others; so it was thought advisable to allow the matter to stand for the present until we knew exactly what points would remain in dispute, and consequently I wired you yesterday afternoon that the deputation, for the present, was off.

If the matter is not amicably adjusted between Sir Adam and the Honourable Mr. Kennedy we will arrange a later date for the deputation with a view to cleaning up any points that may remain in dispute. The charge that the Department of Railways and Canals is seeking to make will mean at least $2.00 per horse power in excess of what is being paid now in Central Ontario, and it also provides for an excess charge over a certain amount which may increase it up to $5.00 or $6.00 a horse power; so you can realize how very important this matter is to the Central Ontario District. I will keep you advised as negotiations progress.

Youre truly,
T. H. Stinson

THREW FLAG UNDER PIANO

Irish Labor Agitator at Montreal Meeting Approves of the Act

Montreal, July 14.—Shortly before Jim Larkin, the Irish Labor agitator, opened the meeting at the Auditorium Hall here last night in favor of the Irish Republic, a woman seized the Union Jack from the platform and threw is under the piano. Asked what he thought of this incident Larkin said he had not objected to this treatment of the flag of Great Britain, "because wherever the Union Jack flies, there is no liberty."

The speaker made a violent attack on Premier Lloyd George and made contemptuous references to Arthur Griffith and Michael Collins as having been won over by the British Government.

The meeting was held under the auspices of the Irish Republican League of Canada.

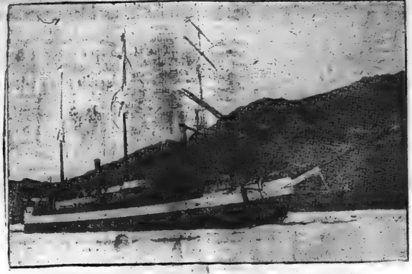
KISSED IN HASTE, REPENTED

Marriage Forced by a Kiss Not Sufficient Ground for an Annulment, Says Court

New York, July 14.—Supreme Court Justice Arthur S. Tompkins, in a decision handed down and made public in Westchester County yesterday, denied the application of Mrs. Ellen Redstone Dow of Wood Terrace Bryn Mawr Park, Yonkers, to annul her marriage to Horace O. Dow, which she said was forced by a kiss. The court ruled that sufficient reason for the annulment had not been shown.

When the action against Dow, who lives in Maspeth, L. I. was tried a few days ago, Mrs. Dow testified that she was "coerced" by Dow into entering the ceremony. She had kissed him in a hammock, and, she alleged, she married him because he threatened to tell about the kissing episode Mrs. Dow, who is 22 years old, also set up the allegation of fraud.

When asked by Judge Tompkins if she married through fear simply because of the harmless occurrence at the party, Mrs. Dow declared that her parents were very strict, and that she was afraid of them learning of it. Mrs. Dow informed the Court that she married Dow in Borough Hall in Brooklyn on Sept. 12 last, but never had lived with him. The marriage, she added had been kept a secret, and not even her parents knew of it."



THE STEAMER NOW BEING FITTED OUT AT QUEBEC FOR ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

About the end of this month the stout ship "Arctic" will glide down the St. Lawrence to establish valid claim for Canada to areas north of Labrador, called the Northern Archipelago. The expedition will occupy a year, with John D. Craig, engineer of the International Boundary Commission, at its head, and with the veteran Captain Bernier, now 70 years of age, as one of the members of the party.

HANGMAN ELLIS IS ARRESTED

Wife Charges Assault, Only Recently Discovered Husband's Occupation

Montreal, July 14.—A warrant was sworn out yesterday by Edith Grimsdale, wife of Arthur Ellis, Dominion hangman, who charges that Ellis committed an aggravated assault upon her by strangling and striking her upon the face, throat and body. Ellis is also charged in the warrant with threatening to shoot her.

Mrs. Ellis gave her place of residence as 436 Colonial avenue and Hangman Ellis' right name was given as Alexander Armstrong English.

Mrs. Ellis stated that she had resided in Montreal ever since her marriage to Ellis, some five years ago, by the Rev. Mr. Dobson, at St. Giles' Church, of which congregation she is a member.

Asked if she knew what her husband's occupation was, she replied that she did, but her husband did not know that she knew, as it was only recently that she had found out what he was doing. He had a fruit farm in British Columbia and spent practically all of his time there, passing through Montreal to and from the various executions at which he had acted as master of ceremonies. Mrs. Ellis said that previous to discovering his real occupation, she was told by him that his business, presumably meaning his fruit farming, rendered it necessary for him to come east occasionally.

A rather extraordinary feature of the case is the fact that Ellis has been maintaining a home unknown to anyone in the city, almost within the shadow of the Court House, as is revealed in the warrant.

Ellis appeared before Judge Enright this afternoon and was remanded for enquete on July 20th.

The Judge demanded one thousand dollars cash bail, which the hangman promptly furnished.

When he heard the date set for the resumption of the case, Ellis said: "Cannot you extend the time a little beyond that, as I have three executions to perform in the course of the next fourteen days?"

The Judge replied that eight days was the statutory time limit, and that he must accordingly appear on the 20th.

FALLS FOUR STOREYS AFTER HER DOLLY

New York, July 14.—Angelina Croce, who is two years old, set her doll on the window-sill of her home, on the fourth floor of No. 2312 First Avenue, and proceeded to give it a lecture on conduct. The doll, it seems, had been naughty.

There was another window open in the flat, and a breeze was blowing, so the doll started backward. Angelina rushed forward to save it, lost her balance, and plunged head-first through the open window.

Patrolman Philip Ryan, of the 126th Street Station, found the little girl lying on the pavement. The doll lay no far away and one of the baby's arms was thrown across it, as if she had just enough strength to crawl to it.

Angelina was removed to a hospital seriously injured.

ANARCHIST AIMS AT WRONG MAN

Would-be Assassin Fires at Police Chief in Mistake For French President

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Paris, July 14. Three shots were fired today at Prefect of Police Naudin by Gustave Bouvet, an anarchist well known to the police, in the belief that it was President Millerand at whom he was aiming. None of the shots took effect.

The shots were fired while the presidential procession from the military review at Long Champs was passing along Champs Elysees. The assailant was standing behind a woman and the flare of the revolver scorched her dress. The crowd turned on him and he was being beaten when seized by the police.

Paris, July 14.—The soldiers of France from the land, sea and air forces, passed in review today before President Millerand and a crowd of hundreds of thousands of persons at Long Champs race course in the annual fourteenth of July military pageant, the chief feature of Bastille Day. Marshals Foch, Joffre and Petain saw the Marshal's Baton presented to Generals Fayolle and Franchet-desprey by the President.

WORLD FAMED IS LOCAL FIRM

Electrically Driven Machine is Manufactured by the Elliott Company

The Waikato Times, published at Hamilton, New Zealand in its issue of June 1st, has the following reference to an electrical driven machine made in Belleville:

With the rapid development that is taking place in hydro-electricity in the Waikato, any invention which can be utilised in connection with this motive power must command the attention of the rural settler and the town-dweller. Thus in a round of inspection at the Waikato Winter Show attention is drawn to the stand adjacent to the Dairy Division Department, on which is installed the "Elliott Woodworker." This electrically-driven mechanical contrivance has the triple qualification of being unique, efficient and economical. The "Elliott Woodworker" is, in short, the greatest time and labour-saver ever introduced to the woodbuilding trade. Boat-makers, picture framers, pattern-makers, departmental stores, piano makers, waggon and motor body builders, coopers, undertakers and billiard table makers, who have used the "Elliott Woodworker" find that it is a "boon and a blessing" to the requirements of these particular and important branches of trade. The adequacy of the "Elliot Woodworker" is proven in all respects, by the only test worth considering—i.e., hard, practical experience, in Canada, to which country the Elliot Woodworker belongs, the technical schools have adopted the machine with great success and with important results to the carpentering trade.

The "Elliot Woodworker" rips, crosscuts, cuts any bevel or compound bevel or mitre. It trenches, buzzes, bores, rebates, runs sash stuff and mouldings at an average cost of one shilling for electric current per week. Fifty progressive business houses in the Dominion have purchased the "Elliot Woodworker," including the New Zealand Government Railways, and four presidents of Builders' Associations in New Zealand, and other prominent people. Reports from these quarters give the machine a highly satisfactory name for efficient and economical service. "Just Perfect," remarked one builder who was present at the Show yesterday, when discussing the merits of the machine he has installed. "Giving complete satisfaction," and "Doing excellent work," were the summing up by two other users. Show visitors are strongly advised to visit the stand and view the "Elliot Woodworker" in action. To all workers in wood it is a proposition that will be beneficial to enquire into. After the Show all enquiries can be made to 10, Market Entrance, Auckland, by appointment.

RAILWAY MEN OPPOSE WAGE CUTS CALL FOR CONCILIATION BOARD

Protest Issued by Men Against Attitude of Railway Companies — They Declare That it is Illegal to Enforce Wage Reduction on Sunday Next.

MICHIGAN MEN NOT AFFECTED

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Montreal, July 14.—Railway shopmen on Canadian lines have applied for a conciliation board in connection with the wage cuts which the Railway Association of Canada have announced will become operative on Sunday.

The cuts which range from 5 to 9 cents an hour affect forty thousand men in the car and locomotive departments.

Strong protest was also issued this morning by division No. Four wage schedule committee, which conducted negotiations against the attitude taken by the Railway companies. The announcement that the cuts will become operative next Sunday is deplored, such action if carried through being styled as illegal and a contravention of clause 57 of the industrial disputes investigation act.

..Ottawa, July 14.—The reduction in wages in the shop trades, which had been put into effect on United States railways, will not go into force on the Canadian section of Michigan Central pending an inquiry which is being conducted into the dispute between the company and its Canadian employees under the industrial disputes investigation act.

BLOOD ON HANDS LIES ON LIPS

London Paper Speaks Out About Soviets at The Hague

London, July 14.—In an editorial headed "The Breakdown at The Hague," The London Daily Telegraph explains how Prime Minister Lloyd George called The Hague as well as the Genoa Conference to refute statements of the Labor party that unemployment in England was due to the failure to recognize the Soviets and co-operate in restoring Russian industry.

"The Hague has accomplished nothing, it may be said," remarks The Telegraph. "Facing considerable opposition, Mr. Lloyd George put the Soviets to the test. The Soviets are a clique of men, with their hands red with blood of their victims, and their mouths are full of lies, standing between the mass of humanity with and helpless workers of Russia—and shrieking. 'You shall not help except on our terms.'

"These terms are in negation of every principle for which civilization stands. The Hague has exposed the Soviet Government in all its nakedness in refusing the aid of the civilised world except on unacceptable terms. The nations must go on with business, disregarding the success of this disease spot."

The Hague, July 14.—The British delegation at the conference with the Russians announced its belief that the conference is now completely disrupted owing to the failure to reach agreement on the plan put forward by the Soviet Government for the distribution of three hundred and thirty-three million pounds sterling asked for by the Russians for reconstruction.

NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING

Five-Year-Old Boy Fell From Revetment Wall Into River

Bernard McGuire, aged 5 years, son of Mr. James McGuire residing at 20 King street, yesterday afternoon narrowly escaped a watery grave. The child was playing along the river bank opposite the Springer Lock Works, when he fell off the revetment wall a distance of about 10 feet, striking upon his head. Bernard not only sustained a severe gash upon the head but was temporarily rendered unconscious. He was being carried out into the channel of the river when an alarm was sounded by another brother and Russel Babcock rushed to the scene, dove off into the river and rescued the lad. Had it not been for the timely assistance rendered by Babcock there is no doubt a drowning fatality would have been recorded.

Pickpockets Are Confidential in New York—New Dropped-Coin Trick

New York, July 14.—The modern pickpocket in New York is a speculator. He invests a little change in the hope of getting large returns. And here, according to that fountain-head of information, the police, is the way he does it.

Having selected a possible victim, the pickpocket drops a coin in front of him. Then he calls the stranger's attention to it, solicitously inquiring if he did not drop the coin. More often than not the stranger reckons it possible that he might have, and stoops over to pick up the money. Whereupon the pickpocket lifts the wallet from the stranger's hip-pocket.

STRANGE CASE OVER PENNY

Glasgow Man Sues the City For Alleged False Arrest

London, July 14.—One of the most peculiar cases that has come before the English courts recently is an action for damages for alleged false arrest brought against the corporation of Glasgow by a newspaper machine hand, John Percy, of Glasgow. The origin of the case was a dispute over a penny. Legal obstacles were placed in Percy's way on the question of his being allowed to sue the city, and it was not until the matter had been fought out before ten judges, including five in the House of Lords, that the plaintiff was given opportunity to have his case entered for trial in the courts.

The disput arose over a penny which Percy tendered in payment for a tram ride. The conductor said it was defaced, but Percy, maintaining that it was a good coin, refused to give another. An inspector of tramways and a policeman were called, and the outcome of the trouble was that they all went to the police station. Percy says he was in custody when they left the tram for the police station, but the Corporation of Glasgow contends that he was not under arrest, but went voluntarily.

Percy brought action against the City of Glasgow, claiming that he had suffered indignity by being marched through crowded streets in charge of a policeman, after he had given his name and address.

The Lord Ordinary, before whom the case first figured in the courts, held that there was an issue for trial by jury, but four Judges in the First Division of the Court of Session thought otherwise and dismissed the action.

Against this decision Percy appealed to the House of Lords, where Lords Haldane, Finlay, Cave, Dunedin and Wrenbury heard the appeal and allowed it.

Four eminent Scotch barristers were briefed to argue the point before the House of Lords as to whether John Percy had a right to have his action tried or not.

A penny started the trouble, but it will cost many a pound before the courts have finally adjudicated upon it.

MANY WAYS OF PUMPING SEWAGE

In the disposal of sewage it is necessary to use pumps of large capacity; and British Engineers have developed a variety of forms of efficient pumps for this purpose. At a large sewage pumping station near London, England, almost every successful type of pump will be found at work. The earliest ones installed were double-ram force pumps driven by horizontal steam engines; and it is a characteristic tribute to the soundness of British engineering that although these pumps have been steadily at work for over thirty years they are still remarkably efficient. They are capable of dealing with four million gallons in 24 hours, and they were followed by a vertical pump able to cope with fifteen million gallons. Next came two centrifugal pumps of ten million gallons capacity driven by two gas engines. The latest additions are electrically driven pumps to raise between three and five million gallons per day. Both the gas and the electricity are obtained from outside sources; and the pumps they drive are used mainly at times of light load in order to obviate the necessity of keeping a large staff at the pumping station.

PARCEL BOYS MUST BE ALERT

Various Tricks Used to Waylay the London Messenger Boys

London, July 14.—Messenger boys who carry parcels of furs and silks in the streets of London for delivery to wholesale houses in the Oxford street area have need not only to be quick witted but continuously on their guard against being tricked by thieves and robbers. So many thefts of valuable parcels have occurred recently, the losses to individual traders being as high as £100 in some cases, that there is a great deal of concern over the matter. It is believed that two young men are responsible for all the thefts.

They have three devices for waylaying the unwary message boy. One of these is a particularly mean trick, as described by the despatch manager of a big firm off Oxford street, a sufferer of losses through these daylight robberies. One of this firm's messenger boys, 18 years of age, was carrying three parcels to a firm of carriers in Carlisle street when he passed two men in a doorway in Newman street.

One of the men in the doorway was half doubled up, and appeared to be ill, while the other was supporting him. "As I came level with the men," the boy said, "one man called out, 'Sonny, will you go and fetch a taxi for my friend? He has been taken ill.' Then, seeing me hesitate, he said, 'Run quickly,' and turning to his companion he asked him if he was feeling any better. The other man just shook his head. I turned with my parcels to go into Oxford street for a taxi when the man said, 'Don't bother about your parcels, I will look after them for you.' I then left my parcels, thinking that the man was seriously ill, and got a taxi, but when I got back there were no parcels or no men."

The trick is varied to suit the circumstances. A second method which has been used with equal success is for one man, without a hat, to stand in the doorway of a building occupied by several wholesale firms, and for the confederate to go into the doorway of another building a few doors away on the same side of the street. When a boy arrives with a likely-looking package the first man quickly reads the address and says, "Oh, are you for John Jones (or whatever the name is); all deliveries today three doors up the street." The messenger, nine times out of ten, goes higher up, and as he starts to enter the doorway a man appears, also without a hat, coming down the stairs. He is a superior looking person—one messenger said he took this man to be the manager of the establishment—and on seeing the parcel says: "Oh, I may as well sign for that," and at the same time taking it from the boy. Then when the messenger has gone the man vanishes with the parcel.

The third method is for one man to stand in the doorway, again hatless, and hail any passing messenger with a parcel and ask him to fetch him a pot of tea. He says that he cannot leave the premises himself, and usually gives the boy half-a-crown, promising him a shilling for himself. As the lad cannot carry his parcels and a tea-tray, he very naturally leaves the parcels with the man. When he returns, he finds himself left with the tea-tray and the loose change, and no parcels.

These three variants of the same trick have been recently successfully worked in the West End on an average three times a week, and it is a poor week in which the crooks do not get goods to the value of £150. One haul alone of fur coats was worth £100. In a case where the messenger gets a signature in his book the theft may not be found out until weeks afterwards, not until the invoice is sent.

One thing that makes it difficult for the authorities to trace the thieves is that the boys usually are too confused to remember what the men are like. However, their descriptions tally to this extent: that one man is dark and the other is partly bald.

BIG DIRIGIBLE BEING BUILT

Ill-Fated Z R-2 is Being Improved Upon by Experts

Philadelphia, July 14.—A monster dirigible, the ZR-1, is being built in the aircraft factory of the Philadelphia Navy Yard. It is to be fully as big as that ill-fated leviathan of the air, the ZR-2, which collapsed and fell flaming into the Hull River in England last summer bringing a terrible death to more than a score of its crew. As fast as the parts are completed here they are sent to the hangar at Lakehurst, N.J., which will be the home port of the giant airship. It is expected that by next April the ZR-1 will be ready for its first flight.

This dirigible will be the first of the Zeppelin type to have been built in this country. Commander Westerfelt and his associates in the naval aircraft factory are being guided in the construction of the ZR-1 by the tragedies of similar craft.

A principal difference between the Philadelphia-built dirigible and that which collapsed over Hull is the strengthening of every second duralumninum ring instead of every third ring as in the ZR-2. This strengthening is acomplished by tying each section of the 25-sided rings (polygons), which make up the framework, with the strongest possible strands of copper wire. Seventy miles of such copper wire will be used, and the result, it is said, will give the framework a resistance greater even than if constructed of steel. Duraluminum is an alloy of aluminum and copper and is used because of its qualities of lightness and strength.

The envelope will be 700 feet long and 85 feet in maximum diameter. It will be cigar-shaped. The cloth will be of staple back-spun cotton one inch in thickness. A specially devised varnish will make it sun and water-proof. Nineteen balloonets which will furnish the lifting power are being built in Akron, O. These will have a total gas capacity of 2,700,000 cubic feet. It is not considered likely that helium (non-inflammable gas) can be used because of the immense quantity that would be necessary.

Originally the intention was to to equip the ZR-1 with seven Liberty engines capable of developing a total of 2,100 horsepower, but navy experts are experimenting with a new type of motor, the specifications of which are not being made public, but which likely will be the type used.

When the ZR-1 is completed, experts say it will have power to cruise one-third of the distance around the world without having to descend. It will have a lifting power of 85 tons. The average speed, it is estimated, will be 50 miles an hour, its maximum 75.

Quarters for the officers and the men will be along the keelway extending almost the entire length of the ship. They will have a width of eight feet and a height of seven.

ELIMINATES TERROR OF WHOOPING COUGH

Paris, July 13.—Much of the terror of whooping cough is eliminated in a new treatment practised by Prof. Carriere, of Lille University. His method has just become known. Prof Carriere stretches a wide canvas over his patient's bed like a tent. This is saturated with a solution of eucalyptus and every day the sick child is given an intramuscular injection of gomenal oil. With this treatment it is claimed that the coughing fits diminish the very first day. Prof. Carriere says the most of 500 cases treated by him were cured in less than ten days and all within three weeks.

Former City Engineer Mill Star Witness for Defence on Stand

Murney deliberations continued again to-day at the Court House before the Arbitrators.

J. G. Mill, engineer for the City when the work was constructed on the Murney hill, was the first witness this morning. Witness testified that the cut made in the hill when the hill was lowered, was 10 inches, and that there was a cut of 2 feet 3 inches, at a distance of 120 feet from the west line of Isabel street.

There was one driveway only to the property, and two footpath entrances. There were three steps up before the hill was lowered, but now there are 7 steps. When asked his opinion as effect on value of the property by the lowering of the hill, witness stated that the improvement on the road greatly enhanced the appearance of the property.

The lowering of the sidewalk has made a slighter grade to contend with in the event of the construction of an entrance to the property. An entrance could be made by digging right into the bank also.

At a point 80 feet from Isabel street, an entrance could be made into the property, 55 feet back in the property, using a 20% grade.

The present grade is probably 2% easier than the former grade before the lowering of the hill.

Witness estimated the cost of 3 setts of steps as a complete entrance to the property at a cost of $60 (each); and as for an estimate for the building of a driveway from Bridge street, witness said it would take him half an hour to figure an estimate.

To Mr. Carnew witness stated that he believed that access to the property was as easy as it was prior to the lowering of the hill. Now it is not necessary to drive over the elevation of the old walk. "I would bridge the gutter, and put a pipe through it and level it off so that it would not be in the way of the vehicular traffic on the roadway.

Witness could not state in dollars as to the benefit or loss to the property, but he thought that the lowering of the hill did not enjure the property a particle.

To Colonel Lazier—It is quite feasible to contract a back entrance to the property from Isabel street."

To Mr. Masson—"Prior to the paving of this hill, it was rough, springy and muddy at times."

To excavate the bank for the erection of a drive way, at the rear it would cost $270 according to estimate of witness. It is calculated on an 8% grade and 16 feet wide.

Walter Patterson, contractor and engineer stated that the figures of Engineer Mill were exactly the same as figures and elevations compiled by himself in 1915 when he surveyed West Belleville for the city.

"I would say the lowering of the hill is an improvement to the property, and the property would be worth 100% more if I were buying it. "You can get the same grade there as before the hill was lowered", said witness, "although I have not figured on the costs of steps or driveways."

INDIANS TO SUBMIT CASE TO HAGUE

Also Protest Because Women on the Reserve Were "Excluded"

Hamilton, July 13.—The Six Nations Indians of the Brantford Reserve want their dispute with the Dominion of Canada taken to the International Court of Justice at The Hague, if arbitration fails to bring about an agreement "between the Six Nations and their neighbors, the Dominion of Canada." One point the Indians refuse to submit to arbitration or to the international court: they insist that their political independence for all purposes of home rule within the reserve shall be recognized. They also enter a protest because the government issued its proposals to the press before it reached the chiefs and because the proposal was addressed "to the men of the Six Nations, to the exclusion of the women."

SCOTLAND YARD TO CO-OPERATE

With New York Police—International System for Crime Detection

London, July 13.—Police Commissioner Enright of New York conferred yesterday with Scotland Yard officials and placed before them a scheme for closer co-operation between American and European police forces in preventing and detecting crime. He already has laid his proposals before police chiefs in several European countries.

Interviewed yesterday, Mr. Enright said that everywhere the project was received with the greatest enthusiasm.

"What we want immediately," he added, "is the attendance of the heads of the police systems of the world at our police conference in New York in September.

"To deal with the international criminal organization, we must have international police co-operation. From every continental town I have visited I already have received assurance that if its chief himself can not attend, one of the highest officers of the department shall be there."

NINE-YEAR-OLD HOLD-UP "MAN"

Youthful Bandit With Revolver Practised on Grocer's Clerk

Montreal, July 12.—With all the aplomb of a senior at the game, and carrying out the job fully prepared to find the quarry alone, a nine year old boy stole a revolver and held up a grocer's clerk, making the latter hand over $8 last night, in a down town district.

The youthful emulator of Jesse James got safely away from the scene of the hold-up and remained away long enough to spend seventy cents before he was caught in a moving picture house on the Main.

He was at the Juvenile Court today, with Detective Finel in charge of him. When the lad thought of the hold-up he found that the mother and father of the clerk were in the store. He bided his time, and when the clerk was alone went right up to him, held the revolver at his head and called out "hands up." He was obeyed to the letter, even to the extent of the clerk slipping out of the grocery store.

CANADA SILENT ON ENVOY

London, July 13.—The question of Canadian Government representation at Washington was brought up in the House of Commons yesterday by Colonel Arthur Murray, Member for Kincardine and West Aberdeen, who asked what was being done in the matter.

Winston Churchill ,Secretary for the Colonies, replying, said no progress had been made in the matter recently, and the Canadian Government had taken no further steps with reference to the proposal that Canada should have its own representative at Washington.

CANADIAN CHEESE AT DOVER

The mysterious food poisoning epidemic reported from Dover, England, which was attributed to the eating of Canadian cheese, is of special interest to the people of Belleville and district, this being the centre of the cheese-making industry in Eastern Ontario. The report stated that ninety-seven persons were attacked with abdominal pains, diarrhoea and vomiting, followed by prostration. Investigation showed that ninety per cent. of the sufferers had partaken of Canadian cheese.

A despatch from the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa declares that Canadian cheese could not have produced such an epidemic, as it contains no injurious ingredients.

It does not take injurious ingredients to produce the "poisoning" effect described in the despatch from Dover. Such effects have been produced upon people before by eating Cheshire cheese, which is said to be the finest cheese in the world—with the exception of that made around Belleville! The eating of cheese with strong lemonade will set up a sort of fermenting or effervescing process in the stomach which will cause violent vomiting and diarrhoea.

The Intelligencer offers this explanation to the medical health officer of Dover in absolute confidence that it is the correct one. If anyone doubts this theory let them make the experiment. We have tried it, and the effect was exactly the same as that produced upon the Dover people. The fact that none of the Doverites died, goes to prove that they were not poisoned, but that their stomachs were subject to some violent reaction.

THE PRESS AND THE DELORME CASE

The press of Canada has been strangely silent in regard to the verdict delivered by the Montreal jury in the Delorme case. The Intelligencer did try to speak out plainly and set forth certain reasons why a jury should not allow itself to be dictated to by doctors and professional psychologists. We ventured to affirm that the action or inaction of the jury was nothing less than a suspension of justice at the instigation of quacks, and under the influence of religious prejudice and fear.

So far as we have seen no other paper has even referred to the verdict editorially, with the sole exception of The Toronto Star, which makes an interesting comparison between the Delorme case and that of Ronald True in England. The Star is to be commended upon the frank manner in which it points out the contrast, as follows:

"In both cases the men were accused of capital crimes, and in both cases the medical experts declared the men insane. In the Delorme case the effect of this evidence was to cause the jury to find the accused insane, and therefore unfit to be placed upon trial for his life. In England a different course was taken in the True case. The trial proceeded, the evidence was all put in, the accused was convicted and sentenced to death. Then the crown intervened, and because of the medical testimony, the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment in an asylum for the insane.

"The English courts took the view that while True was medically insane yet he was legally sane, and it was necessary, in the interests of justice, that his crime be thoroughly cleared up and placed on the records. It was regarded as being more the business of the department of justice than an ordinary jury, to weigh the importance of the evidence of medical experts on the question of a culprit's sanity and the degree of his accountability.

"Both True and Delorme are now consigned to asylums for the insane, but the English procedure in the case of the former appears to have this advantage that the crime with which he was charged has been fully tried and cleared up, whereas the Delorme case has not gone to trial. A young man was murdered, yet the manner of his death has not been legally established, and the evidence piled up and ready for use has not been used. The whole case is left in an indefinite state, and one imagines that Judge Monet foresaw this and was inclined towards the more thorough course adopted in the English case.

"It is not to be doubted that a man may be medically insane and yet legally sane. There are many fine shades between sanity and insanity, and these may be perceivable to the doctor, but not legally deserving of consideration. Of late alienists have been going pretty far. They tell us that about one person out of three is a moron. They tell us that nearly all crime is due to mental deficiency. It is highly desirable, no doubt, that scientists should carry on. But it is to the learned judge on the bench, not to the finicky expert in the witness box, that business of justice is entrusted. Any aid that medical experts can give the courts ought to be prized, but surely these witnesses should not be able to confound a jury and prevent a case going to trial. Not a jury, but a judge, or a special bench of judges, should hear evidence on the point as to whether a case should go to trial or not on the issue of the sanity of the accused."

We quote the editorial in full, because we believe that the principles of justice, morality and religion are endangered by such a verdict as that passed on a man who stood charged with a coolly thought-out murder.

HERE AND THERE

SLIGHT CORRECTION.

Several weeks ago there was an account in this paper of an auto collision. This is the correct version of it:

While driving to church, several weeks ago, Sarah P—— and father was runned into by a neighbor and overthrown. Marion C——, age 14, came up behind and wished to past. At the sound of the Klaxon the former turned out giving more than half of the road. The latter was driving rather fast and she turned to quickly into the road again hence catching the hind wheel of her car into the front wheel of the formers sending them into the ditch. As the motor of Sarah's car was shut off no one was hurt and little damage was done. One will reach their destination just as soon if they would observe the rules of car driving.—Prattsburgh Advertiser.

THE DEAN SPEAKS OUT.

There never was a time when there was a more urgent necessity to direct the minds of the public to all things that are 'true and noble and just and pure and lovely and of good report.'

We are threatened with an outbreak of licentiousness like that which followed the Civil War in the seventeenth century, and the Napoleonic War a hundred years ago. A pure and elevated tone in popular literature would do much to diminish the evil and bring it to an early end. I think it was Ruskin who said that every Englishman had reason to thank God for the purity of Scott.

Will not our leading imaginative writers recognize their duties and privileges—the priestly aspect of their calling, remembering the noble words of Milton: 'He who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem, that is, a composition and pattern of the best and honorable things'?

Our novelists will not promote their own survival by catering for the corrupt taste of the moment. For this fashion will pass away. Sir Walter Scott describes how an old lady who borrowed from him Mrs. Aphra Behn's novels, sent them back two days after, saying, 'To think what a change has taken place in one lifetime! As an old woman I can not read what was read aloud to me in the drawing-room as a girl.' Our girls will very likely say the same when they are old.

—Dean Inge.

Where single opening stanzas of shorter poems are concerned there is none lovelier than the first burst of Shelley's "Skylark":—

Hail to thee, blithe spirit!
  Bird thou never wert,
That from heaven or near it,
  Pourest thy full heart
In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.

RADIO.

By Archibald Rutledge.

O not a word and not a thought
In the wide world shall come to naught:
No little love with sails of white
Shall vanish homeless in the night.

This wind that moves with fluting song
My plumed and purple piens among,
Shall wave dim palms in tropic nights,
Shall storm the white Himalayas' heights.

And every dream I mourn as dead
Or lost, is lyrically fled
Out of my heart into another's,—
While I have taken home my brother's.

At length break on Hatteras
The wave that Breton sailors pass
Blue-rolling westward, or shall run
To thunder on the dreadful Horn.

The tingling air is thrilled with spirit;
The universe I can inherit;
Mysteriously great and near,
Creation's throbbing heart I hear.

Of those elusions, farewell's flights,
That dim my days and haunt my nights,—
In all the lonely strength of wings,
Some heart shall make recoverings.

PRESS OPINIONS

A GREAT ENGLISHMAN

London Daily Telegraph.

——John Wesley was one of the six greatest Englishmen of the eighteenth century—and in his influence by far the greatest of them all. It is well that his house and grave in the City road should become a place of pilgrimage and that the far-spreading Connection he founded should be planning a great Wesley Foundation and Trust worthy of his fame and, what he would value more, worthy also of his faith.

A SUCCESSFUL FAMILY

Toronto Daily Star.

——A unique distinction is that of the Harmsworth brothers, no less than four of whom have been created baronets. In the cases of Sir Alfre and Sir Harold, the baronetcy was a stepping stone to the peerage (Northcliffe and Rothermere). These brothers are Unionists, Sir Leicester, is a Liberal, while the new baronet, Sir Hildebrand, was for some time proprietor of the Globe, a reactionary paper. The fifth brother, Cecil, parliamentary under-secretary of foreign affairs, who is coalition Liberal, is still untitled.

LET 'EM BOB

Toronto Telegram.

"Why young women should be disqualified from acting as nurses or school teachers because their hair is "bobbed" is a mystery that is not explained in news despatches telling of disciplinary measures adopted in various hospitals and schools. Many women are improved in appearance by "bobbing" their hair and, after all, beauty is not a permanent disability. The case of Sampson may be urged in favor of the anti-bob argument but surely that case was exceptional.

With the ending of Government control over the railways a very considerable reduction in fares is anticipated. The new policy of the companies is to be wooing and not disconcerting of traffic, whether it be that of fish, minerals or passengers. There will be less occasion for the "grouse" of an old Scotch woman who heard a gentleman ask a station master in Fife, why the train was so late. The answer was: "It has to wait to let the fish train through."

"Fegs," she exclaimed "Ye get nae consideration on this line unless ye happen tae be a haddie!"

One day a well-to-do farmer in need of legal advice sought a struggling attorney with reference to a suit he desired to bring against a neighbor. The lawyer looked up the statutes and advised his client what course to pursue. As the latter rose to leave the office, he asked: "What's your fee?"

"Oh, sa! three dollars," carelessly responded the attorney.

Whereupon the client offered a five-dollar bill. The lawyer seemed embarrassed. He carefully searched his pockets and the drawers of his desk without finding the necessary change. Finally he met the exigency by pocketing the bill and observing, as he reached for a digest:

"It would seem, sir, that I shall have to give you two dollars' worth more of advice."

Canadian Guides Are Virile Men

Discoursing in The Nineteenth Century about Canadian guides, it is the man of French extraction, the descendant of Parkman's coureurs de bois, whom John Murray Gibbon, the British sportsman, most admires. The type is noted for courage, strength and endurance. Joe, with a pack of 300 pounds, "walked faster than I could walk with nothing but a fishing rod." There was Joseph Paul, guide for the North-West Company, who picked up a sugar barrel filled with bullets by a playful storekeeper, "and let it fall on the counter, "smashing the woodwork to pieces and "breaking the barrel so that the bullets "spilled into the cellar." In the bush Joe had an appetite that matched his strength. A gargantuan eater was he: Fifteen eggs a day, five to each meal; bacon, fish, pork and beans, steaks and flapjacks. "Then he complained that he could not eat because of indigestion."

If the French-Canadian guide is so brave and hardy, and wears so well, it is because he comes of heroic stock. To the end of the French Dominion in Canada no English names stand out in the opening up of the wilderness. It was the colonists of New France who sailed up the St. Lawrence, explored the Mattawa, pushed into Lake Nipissing, portaged down into the Great Lakes, and were soon trading on the Mississippi and the Missouri, while the English colonists still hugged the seaboard. The Frenchmen hunted, trapped and were one with the Indians, whose women they lived with. After the passing of New France there is a procession of English and Scotch explorers in the chronicles of the time: Samuel Hearne, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Simon Fraser, David Thompson, Sir George Simpson, Milton and Cheadle. The Rev. A. G. Morice in his "Dictionaire Historique des Canadiens de l'Quest" asks who did the hard work of the expeditions led by these travelers and promoters. The answer is, the voyageurs, who had penetrated and mapped the wilderness and were brothers of the Indian. Simon Fraser owed much of his success to the half-breed Jean Baptiste Boucher, known as Waccan by the Crees. On three expeditions Charles Lepace was the guide and interpreter for David Thompson. The Hudson Bay Company found Alexis Bonami Lesperance indispensable as driver of its bateaux in the fur trade, a man as strong as a bear and of a vitality no hardships could wear down. Toussaint Charbonneau, a guide of the North-West Company, was on all explorers' lists in the early part of the nineteenth century. For river service one French-Canadian, John Jacob Astor declared, was worth three Americans. In Parkman's "Oregon Trail" the French-Canadian hunters are deservedly honored. Mr. Gibbon says that the French woodsman of the present day is admirably depicted in the Francois Paradis of Louis Hemon's "Maria Chapdelaine."

There are also sterling guides among the men of British descent. "If any one" says Mr. Gibbon, "were to ask a "New Brunswicker who is "The best-known native of the province, he would probably name the guide Henry Braithewaite, who, in spite of over 80 years, still calls and tracks the moose with energy of youth." Other famous guides in New Brunswick not of French blood are Adam Moore, Arthur Pringle, Harry Allen and Claude Knapp, names well-known to American sportsmen. A character whom Mr. Gibbon met on the Upper Tobique was Van. He had built a cabin near a lake round which there was a large clearing:

"Must have took some work to clear this bush," I remarked. "Not a bit," he said. All it cost me was a little salt. It was the deer that did it—a shot of salt at the root of each bush, cleared up the whole yard."

The Canadian guides respect themselves, and must be treated as equals by the rich sportsman, "even though they may out of courtesy serve you first at the campfire and sit at a separate mess." Their scorn for a valet, or any other satellite, is unprintable. A silent lot of men, one must be careful not to intrude upon their reserve. In Quebec most of the licensed guides are French-Canadians, half-breeds or Indians. Ontario attracts 25,000 non-resident anglers every year. "For the Indian the Anglo-Saxon guide in Ontario has frequently a good-humored but not well-justified contempt." The Indian cooks poorly, is none too clean, but he's the better hunter. "The Indian", said a white guide, "never seems to get lost. I guess the Lord gave him the sense of location." The Canadian guides have figured a good deal in "redblooded" contemporary novels, but they don't recognise themselves. Said one of them:

"What can I do with fiction? Sooner than read one of them books, I'd wash windows or kill time in some other damned way. Now newspapers is something different. You can get ideas from a newspaper."

Mr. Gibbon has found the Rocky Mountain guides who have much to do with pack horses, the most original and robust in profanity, but it is to be said for them that their "capacity for swearing is more than equalled by their capacity for hard work."

The sportsman's paradise is in the northern areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, for there the moose are abundant, black bear are numerous, fish swarm in lakes and streams and caribou roam in herds. The local guides are rough diamonds, but fine fellows. "These Canadian guides," the writer says in conclusion, "represent the most virile element in North America, and deserve more recognition than it is usually their fortune to obtain."

Woman's Sphere

THE APARTMENT HOUSE

By Joyce Kilmer

Severe against the pleasant arc of sky
  The great stone box is cruelly displayed.
The street becomes more dreary from its shade,
  And vagrant breezes touch its walls and die,
Here sullen convicts in their chains might lie,
Or slaves toil dumbly at some dreary trade
  How worse than folly is their labour made
Who cleft the rocks that this might rise on high!

Yet as I look, I see a woman's face
  Gleam from a window far above the street
This is a house of homes, a sacred place,
  By human passion made divinely sweet
How all the building thrills with sudden grace
  Beneath the magic of Love's golden feet.

HAVE WE NO SENSE OF HUMOUR?

Not once but many times in our women's history has it been declared that we lack the sense of humour. And, though one is far from subscribing to any such sweeping assertion, it has to be acknowledged that there is in it that provoking grain of truth which allows it to pass muster before the majority. A lack of humour! Yes! Perhaps! How else account for the two proposals that were made at the recent meeting of the International Council of Women at the Hague? You think that when women—or men, for that matter,—from all parts of the earth gather together for interchange of ideas, their programmes would be purged very carefully of all non-essentials, all follies, all absurdities. Not at all! At the Hague one of the women delegates,—a foreigner, for which, dare we cry, Pharisaically, "Thank Heaven!"—brought two proposals before her Minister of Affairs, proposals that could be dealt with adequately only in comic opera. The first proposal was the appointment of women police to control women's dress; the second was like unto the first for absurdity—namely, to have a legal limit for women's skirts, that limit being two inches—horrors!—from the ground! The long suffering Minister of Affairs, upon whom this demand was sprung, thought he had his petitioner in a cleft stick, when he asked her how she proposed to control these things. But was Madame Proper Prim caught? Gilbert and Sullivan must have smiled among the shades when her prompt answer, with all its risible possibilities, was given. It was to the effect that police women armed with yard sticks should be put on duty to go about the streets measuring up the length of skirts suspected of varying frivolously from the prescribed limit! What visions of a merrier life, of mad pursuits and escape, this answer must have stirred up in the mind's eye of the Minister of Affairs! How the twinkling, flying heels and glove fitting silk stockings of pretty young creatures vanishing around corners as the bulky and breathless policewoman, armed with her yard stick, and hampered by her decorously long skirts, gave chase, must have filmed themselves to his mental vision and tempted him to let the wild woman have her way! How such scenes would add to the gaiety of life in cities! Almost one regrets that these proposals were not acted upon. Their possibilities for al fresco and free entertainment everywhere are too tantalizing. By all means let us have policewomen armed with yardsticks. Between them and the laity among women and girls—who by the way show no sign of obeying even Fashion's command to lengthen skirts—there will be a perpetual merry war of which we shall all be the delighted spectators.—Saturday Night.

ANCIENT NEEDLEWORK

The earliest example of needlework known to exist, according to a recently published book on old embroidery, comes from the tomb of a Pharaoh fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, and there are specimens of Greek work dating from twelve centuries later. The well-known Bayeux tapestries, commemorating the Norman conquest, may have been wrought by English hands, though their origin is uncertain, but there is a remarkable example of Anglo-Saxon needlework, done just a thousand years ago, in some church vestments in Durham Cathedral. English embroidery of the thirteenth century was much in favour and in demand throughout Europe. A great quantity of needlework was done in times of Queen Elizabeth and James I Considering that the population was only one-eighth of the number of the present time, the quantity known to be produced shows that this beautiful and elaborate work must have been diligently practised in most houses.

The Daily Recipe

BY BERTHA SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for NEA Service and Columbia University.

VEGETABLE STEW

Twelve carrots (new and small)
5 turnips (new, white and small).
12 onions (small)
5 potatoes
1 cup peas (fresh or canned)
1 cup tomatoes
6 cups water
½ cup bacon fat
2 teaspoons salt
1-8 teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Walsh and prepare the vegetables, leaving carrots and onions whole, and cutting turnips and potatoes in halves.

In a kettle place the bacon fat and in it fry the carrots, turnips and onions half an hour, being careful they do not burn. Add the peas, the tomatoes, salt, pepper and water.

Cover and cook one hour or longer, if necessary, to make vegetables tender. Then add potatoes and cook 20 minutes.

Add parsley, more salt and pepper it taste. Serve with or without dumplings. If dumplings are served make them very small, about as much dough to each as can be taken up on a teaspoon.

One can hardly tell this stew from one having meat in it.

Dumplings—Mix together one cup flour, one-fourth teaspoon salt and two teaspoons baking powder. Moisten to a soft dough, using cold water. Drop from a spoon into the boiling stew, cover closely, and do not uncover for 10 minutes.

This recipe will serve five.

FASHION FANCIES

PAJAMAS POPULAR

For some reason or other there has been an unusually big demand for two-piece pajamas this season. It can be attributed to the persistent vogue of the practical tailored garment, often finding its origin in masculine fashions. Or it may be due to the "flapper," whose likes and dislikes in the field of clothes have been of unquestioned importance in determining some aspects of the season's modes.

Another consideration that may be in some part responsible is the approach of the vacation season. For many, this means an out-door life where pajamas suggest themselves as the most practical sleep garment. For others, those who will be travelling a good part of the time, pajamas are liked for their convenience both in wearing and in laundering.

Pajamas, too, serve lounging as well as sleeping purposes, and this is another angle of demand.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

Incongruously, the impression obtruded that they were unusually handsome shoulders.

For that matter, she was an unusually handsome young woman: tall, fair, with a face featured with faint, exquisite irregularity, brown eyes and brow in striking contrast to the rich golden colour of her hair; well-poised and balanced—sure but not too conscious of herself . . .

Staff heard himself saying "Beg pardon?" to a third repetition of one of Mrs. Thataker's gratuitous revelations.

At this he took fright, drew back into his reserve for the remainder of the meal, and as soon as he decently could, made his excuses and fled to join Iff in the smoking-room . . . .

He found the little man indulging his two passions; he was drinking whiskey-and sodas and playing bridge, both in the masterly fashion. Staff watched the game a while and then, the opportunity offering, cut in. He played till ten o'clock, at which hour, wearied, he yielded his seat to another, leaving Mr. Iff the victor of six rubbers and twelve whiskey-and-sodas. As Staff went out on deck the little man cut for the seventh ordered the thirteenth. Neither indulgence seemed to have had any perceptible effect upon him.

Staff strolled forward, drinking in air that seemed the sweeter by contrast with the reeking room he had just quitted. The wind had freshened since nightfall; it blew strong and cool, but not keen. And there was more motion in the seas that sang overside, wrapped in Cimmerian blackness. The sky had become overcast; there were no stars: only the longshore lights of Ireland twinkled, small, bright, incredibly distant over the waters. The decks were softly aglow with electric lights, lending a deeper shade of velvety denseness to the night beyond the rails.

He hadn't moved far forward when his quick sight picked out the shimmer of a woman's hair, like spun gold, about amidships in the rank of deck-chairs. He made sure it was Miss Searle; and it was. She sat alone, with none near her, her head resting against the back of the chair, her face turned a trifle forward; so that she was unaware of his approach until he stopped before her.

"Miss Searle—" he began diffidently

She looked up quickly and smiled it what he thought a friendly way.

"Good evening," said she; and moved her body slightly in the deck-chair, turning a little to the left as if expecting him to take the vacant chair on that hand.

He did so without further encouragement, and abruptly found himself wholly lacking words wherewith to phrase what he had in mind to say. In such emergency he resorted to an old, tried and true trick of his and began to talk on the first subject, unrelated to his dilemma, that popped into his head.

"Are you a good sailor?" he enquired gravely.

The girl nodded. "Very."

"Not afraid of seasickness?"

"No. Why?"

"Because," said Staff soberly, "I've been praying for a hurricane."

She nodded again without speaking, her eyes alone questioning.

"Mrs. Thataker," he pursued evenly, "confided to me at dinner that she is a very poor sailor indeed."

Miss Searle laughed quietly. "You desire a punishment to fit the crime."

"There are some crimes for which no adequate punishment has ever been contrived," he returned, beginning to see his way, and at the same time beginning to think himself uncommonly clever.

"Oh!" said Miss Searle with a little laugh. "Now if you're leading up to a second apology about question of the bandbox, you needn't, because I've forgiven you already."

He glanced at her reproachfully. "You just naturally had to beat me to that, didn't you?" he complained. "All the same, it was inexcusable of me."

"Oh, no; I quite understand."

"You see," he persisted obstinately, "I really did think it was my bandbox. I actually have got one with me, precisely like yours."

"I quite believed you the first time."

Something in her tone moved him to question her face sharply; but he found her shadowed eyes inscrutable.

"I half believe you know something," he ventured, perplexed.

"Perhaps," she nodded, with an enigmatic smile.

"What do you know?"

"Why," she said, "it was simple enough. I happened to be in Lucille's yesterday afternoon when a hat was ordered delivered to you."

Music and Drama

Gloria Swanson has a role of great Dramatic Power in "The Great Moment"

A highly dramatic picture is "The Great Moment" the first Paramount starring vehicle for Gloria Swanson which opened at Griffin's last night.

The scenes are laid in England and the Mountains of the West. Miss Swanson has the role of a half Gypsy Girl who is loved by a breezy westerner, played by Milton Sills.

The story opens at an orgy in St. Petersburg when a British Aristocrat is captivated by and marries a woman from the plains of Tartary—a Gypsy, the latter leaves him a daughter, Nadine, and in this role Miss Swanson has one of the greatest of her screen career.

A beautiful Travelogue Shipwrecked Among Animals, an amusing comedy, and George Walsh in the interesting chapter play "With Stanley in Africa were exhibited during the evening.

ARABS ORGANIZE FOR INDEPENDENCE

"World Arab Executive Committee" Formed to Further their Interests

Jerusalem, July 13.—The movement for Arab national independence is becoming further unified. Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, the Hedjaz and the Yemen have come together to organise a "World Arab Executive Committee."

The committee will endeavor to consolidate all Arab lands, and it will serve as a physical power against all foreign nations who try to partition Arab lands. It will concern itself with all Arab affairs, both military and political. Its headquarters have not yet been determined, but they will be at some point far removed from European influences.

As one Arab leader remarked, "The present situation both in Palestine and Syria has taught us the great lesson that only in unity will we Arabs obtain our national independence."

PETES WON THEIR PROTEST

Umpire Billy Evans Has Given Decision on an Identical Play

The protest committee of the Central Ontario Amateur Baseball League, met on Thursday at Port Hope for the purpose of deciding the protest entered by the Peterboro club, as a result of the last game there, between the Petes and the Grand Trunks.

Peterboro won the protest, after a lengthy parley by the members of the protest committee, although the local club did not go to the expense of sending delegates to the meeting as the game meant nothing for the Trunks anyway.

Umpire Billy Evans, of the American League, possibly one of the greatest, if not the greatest baseball authority in America, has given a decision on an identical play, and that decision was really accepted in this case. This play is governed by rule 84 Section 1.

The Play

This peculiar play, which it is almost safe in saying, was never seen before by any player or fan on the ball park at Peterboro, that evening, occurred at a very crucial moment of the hard fought battle. Petes were at the bat, with two down. Johnston was on second base, and Swanston was at the bat. Williams passed Swanston, and the fourth ball was wild and it got away from Mills, Johnston galloping for third. Mills threw to third but the throw was low and went past Williams at third. Johnston scored. In the meantime, Swanson was walking to first base leisurely, and was more than half way there when Mills made the bad throw to third. Seeing a golden opportunity of making second, he struck for second without touching first base. The ball was played to first, and both umpires called Swanston out and refused Peterboro the right to tally the run made by Johnston.

Had this run counted Petes would have won the argument 4-3; but as a result of not being allowed to tally the run, the game was a tie.

The sub-committee awarded the game to Peterboro by a four to three score on the following grounds: First—Belleville entered no defence as required by the Central League constitution. Second—On four balls batter is entitled to first base without liability to be put out. Third—Run did not score on play at first base, but on poor throw to third base.

The Bowmanville at Port Hope game on Saturday cancelled owing to the grounds being in use for a race meet, the date to be arranged later. Umpires for the Leaside at Peterboro double-header on Saturday afternoon were arranged as follows: First game, Boundy at plate, Butler on bases, and reversed for second fixture. Peterboro must win both games to stay in running.

In the Lindsay-Cobourg game for Saturday, which the former must win to have a chance for a play-off, Rosevear will work at the plate and Kay on the bases. Providing Lindsay wins, they will play the protested game with Peterboro of June 14th at Lindsay on Wednesday of next week, the league to handle same and the gate to be divided three ways.

REGATTA HERE NEXT WEEK

On Monday and Tuesday next a regatta will take place here, the course being in Big Bay, off Massassaga Park. Monday a handicap sailing race will take place for the possession of the G. W. V. A. cup, and other sailing races will take place. It is expected that some 30 crafts will participate in the various events which will include dinghy races.

In addition to the G. W. V. A. cup prizes and trophies will be competed for. On Tuesday sailing yachts will compete for the Robb cup and other trophies. An excellent programme has been prepared and there is every indication that the regatta will be one of the most successful held under the reorganized Bay of Quinte Yacht Club.

Zoraya Beats Haswell Through Time Allowance

Prinyer's Cove, July 13.—In the sail yesterday afternoon of Tuesday's all-class race, which was declared null and void yesterday owing to a buoy breaking loose, the Haswell, R.C.Y.C. sailed by Commodore Aemilius Jarvis, was first over the line, but owing to her allowance she was placed second and first place given to Zoraya, R.C.Y.C., sailed by C. D. McCreery, who arrived five minutes later. The weather was light with slight wind and the race proved neck to neck between the two first boats. The Patricia, R.C.Y.C., won the P. class race.

A white squall broke just as the last boats were approaching the finish and the crews had a terrible time in manipulating their crafts. One man was washed overboard, but he was rescued. The bay was dotted with sailing craft, when the storm broke. Every motor boat in the vicinity immediately made to the assistance of the sailing craft, and many hairbreadth escapes took place. Many of the sailing craft were unable to obtain a tow and had to run for shelter as best they might, many under bar poles. The Vivia, of the R.C.Y.C., Toronto, had an exciting and dangerous trip, being struck by lightning, and one of the crew badly burned on the leg whilst in the act of setting the storm jib in their efforts to make the shelter of the Cove

Apart from the George Cup race, the following events were run off yesterday.

Class M.—Zoraya, 1.55.33; Haswell, 1.55.48; Iroquois, 1.56.25. Alice, 2.13.03.

Class P.—Italia, 5.10.30; Caramia, 5.12.00; Patricia, 5.13.00; Scrapper, 5.22.19; Swamba, 5.41.57; Julia, 5.55.00. Vivia did not finish.

Cruisers.—Sylvia, 5.31.48; Bernice, 5.32.10. Ontario, Canopus and Wenono did not finish.

20-rooters.—Whirl, 5.37.00, Heather 5.46.46. Tantarum, 5.49.00; Kathleen, 5.50.19; Cheeta, 6.01.53; Thistle and Viking did not finish.

FROM PRISON CELL TO DYING WIFE

Toronto, July 14.—With his wife dying in the General Hospital from cancer, Arthur Parmeter implicated in the Paton hold-up on Bathurst street last week, has been incarcerated in the jail. But at last came the much awaited news that he might see his beloved. Yesterday afternoon the meeting was arranged and at 2.45 Parmeter in the custody of Detectives Elliott and Archibald left the city hall for the hospital. Arriving at the main entrance, Parmeter displayed no emotion as he mounted the steps.

The three entered the room, but in a few minutes Archibald came outside. Mrs. Parmeter, with features wasted by the dread disease, lay pillowed on the bed. So weak that she was unable to rise to greet her husband, she gazed at him with her large lustrous brown eyes. Parmeter greeted his wife with a smile and sat down beside her. Detective Elliot, who had removed the bonds, sat in the far corner of the room, while the nurse also withdrew to allow the united couple to speak unannoyed. Throughout the conversation Mrs. Parmeter watched her husband with unchanging gaze.

She understands that he is kept in custody and pathetically asked him: "Why are they holding you Arthur?"

"It is a matter of form," said he, "they have to hold the until they get the real fellows, but I will be out in a little while." This cheered the sick woman up and she anxiously inquired how he had been.

"I am fine," replied her husband. "But how are you feeling? Do you feel any pain?"

Bravely the dying woman responded: "Not very much, I am fine and will be well soon."

YACHTING EVENTS AT PRINYER'S COVE

The yacht "Temeraire" of Belleville in her race on Tuesday led her chief opponent, the "Sylvia" by 15 minutes when the race was called off. The second bouy could not be located which reculted in this decision. P. H. Wills was the skipper and this would have undoubtedly been the "Temeraire's" race had the bouy not broken from its anchorage.

Wednesday's race corrected time shows that the "Sylvia" crossed the finishing line 12 seconds ahead of the "Temeraire." The race was one of the greatest events in the history of yachting on Lake Ontario. The course was a triagular one well out into the Lake. The "Temeraire's" time allowance to the "Sylvia" is two or three minutes.

The "Temeraire" will enter the final race on Saturday again and Belleville yachtsmen will be keenly interested in final effort to beat the crack yacht "Sylvia" owned by Commodore Casey of Kingston.

It was during this last race that the yachts of the L. Y. R. A. were caught in the recent severe storm. Barring a few accidents, they all made the cove.

To-day reports shows forty boats of all description participating in the various events at the regatta.

Next Monday and Tuesday will witness events in yachting at Belleville worthy of the undertaking and in keeping with the history of this famous yachting district.

LANDING PLACE IS PREPARED

Landing Place is Prepared For Amundsen on Spitzenburg Island

Christiana, July 13.—Lieutenant Thellefsen, chief of the Norwegian Military Flying School, who went to the island of Spitsbergen to find a landing place for Captain Roald Amundsen, upon his return from the North Pole, reached King's Bay, Spitzergen, on Monday.

Lieutenant Crawford Jensen, chief of the Military Aerodrome, Kjeller, near here stated that before Thellefsen left they had several meetings with Norwegian explorers familiar with Spitzergen.

"The explorer told us" Jensen said, "that the only plain terrain on Spitsbergen was near King's Bay. Thellefsen will inspect the terrain and if possible will mark it with the following words, 'Landing place for Roald Amundsen.' Each letter will be five metres (about 11 feet) high and made of white linen.

"Coming from the North Pole and flying at considerable height, Amundsen soon will be able to see Spitsbergen, as the mountains there are very high. Upon reaching the island he will follow the coastline, flying at a height of from five to eight hundred metres, and unless the weather is very foggy, he cannot fail to find the landing place, as it will be situated directly at the coast."

Thellefsen will not wait for Amundsen to arrive, but will return to Christiana July 20.

To Rescue Explorer

As flying experts here consider it doubtful whether an airplane can be landed on Spitsbergen without damage, Nils Andresen, Norwegian tobacco manufacture, yesterday ordered his private seaplane to go to Spitsbergen and bring Amundsen back to Norway as quickly a possible in case the explorer's plane is damaged in landing.

The seaplane left here piloted by Hellesen, a Norwegian naval aviator, who will follow the Norwegian coastline to Hammerfest, the most northern in the world. From there he will fly direct to Spitzbergen and expects to make the trip in six hours It takes 100 hours to make the trip by steamship.

The Norwegian Naval Department has wired the fishing fleet in Spitsbergen waters to watch for Amundsen and be ready to help him if necessary.

Tryggve Gran has completed preparations for his own North Pole flight and has left Spitsbergen on his way to Norway. He will not compete with Amundsen this year, but if Amundsen should fail, Gran will make the attempt next Summer.

POLICE SEIZE "CANADIAN RYE"

Truck Load of "High-grade Provisions for Clubs and Hotels" Captured

New York, July 13.—A commercial truck which bore a sign, "High-grade provisions for clubs and hotels" was seized with a load of 540 bottles of Canadian rye and Scotch whisky in Fifty-Fourth street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, last night. The chauffeur and a helper, who were arrested, refused to tell where they obtained the liquor, who owned it or where they were to deliver it.

Detective Valentine Bach of the prohibition squad of the Police Department noticed the truck standing in front of 154 West Fifty-Fourth street. The truck had heavy iron gratings behind the chauffeur's seat and in the rear, such as the padlocked gratings that mail wagons carrying registered matter have.

Bach stuck his face against the grating and smelled whisky. Bach ordered the chauffeur to drive the truck to the West Forty-Seventh Street Station, where the grating was unlocked. There were twenty cases of whisky and eighteen packages.

SMOKING BAD FOR LITTLE BOYS

Tends to Weaken Resistance to Evil Claim Local Physicians

Montreal, July 14.—The smoking habit tends to weaken the resistance to evil in human beings, through the injury to health, stated several local physicians this morning in answer to the question of the effect of cigarettes on young boys. When a man is young, his moral strength is weaker than when he grows older, and the use of cigarettes, especially any over indulgence, breaks down the body resistance he has through weakening the body.

"Continued smoking of cigarettes by young boys," said one doctor, "retards and clouds the brain, and this state of the brain lends itself to crime.

When a boy smokes, he is generally doing so against the commands of his parents, and this in itself is a crime. From this point on the weed works itself into the constitution, and the boy goes from bad to worse.

"There is one pretty sure cure, and that is to keep the mind and the body busy, and not to give the boy time to think of smoking. Manual labor, for a boy who has fallen into the habit, has very often proved effective, and when coupled with common sense advice does much to offset the craving for tobacco."

TO HAVE AIR STATION ON RIVER THAMES

London, July 14.—The Air Ministry is about to carry out experiments for establishing an air station on the Thames and test flights soon will begin. The new station probably will be near the House of Parliament and when in use will save the journey by motor car to Croydon aerodrome, thus shortening by an hour the journey by plane from London to Paris.

The Ministry also has approved a scheme for an air service between Southampton and the French port of Cherbourg and Le Havre. The main object of this plan is to shorten the cross-Atlantic journey by picking up passengers from Cherbourg conveying them rapidly by air to Southampton, and thence onwards to London by train.

CONCLUDE CASE OF WOMEN PUGILISTS

Defendant Must Pay Court Costs and Both Must Live Peacefully

The two Lingham street women neighbors who disturbed the peace of the neighborhood when they staged a pugilistic attraction in the street, on the morning of July 4th last, were allowed to go by Magistrate S. Masson here on Thursday afternoon.

The woman whose child annoyed the neighboring woman, was found guilty of assault, but no conviction was registered as the plaintiff did not wish to press the case. The defendant was requested to pay court costs, and that is the way the matter stands.

Women are coming to the front more and more each day, it seems, and their prowess as exponents of the pugilistic art, according to this case, is being carefully developed.

While the two women were "having it out" on the sidewalk, the husband of the plaintiff stepped up to try and part them. He emerged from the fray with a discolored optic, and his wife called an improvised baton into play applying it across the back of the enemy. Some blood was shed.

"I don't know why it is," volunteered Crown Attorney Carnew, "that people cannot get along. "There are fifty-four children on the corner where I live, and I get along with them fine."

"I can go you one better," broke in the Magistrate. "There are fifty-five on my street, and we also get along well."

Mr. C. A. Payne, counsel for the defendant, had no comment to make.

LIFE OF CHRIST IS PORTRAYED

An Impressive and Forceful Address by Young Evangelist

The Baptist Church last evening was filled to overflowing and many who desired to gain admittance were unable to do so. That was an evidence of the interest centred in the special service conducted in that sacred edifice and the desire to hear the wonderful and gifted girl preacher, Mary Agnes Vitchestain who certainly captivates her audience by her manner in presenting gospel truths. Her enunciation is perfect and her pleas are impassionate. Her voice is strong and all present had no difficulty in understanding every word she uttered. Previous to the address of the evening hymns were sung and short prayers were offered up. Rev. C. G. Smith, B.D., of Montreal, a former popular pastor of the Baptist church here, assisted in the service, as did also the Rev. F. E. Malott, pastor of Bridge Street Methodist Church. The final service this evening will be held at Bridge Street Church. After devotional exercises Miss Mary Agnes delivered her discourse, her subject being, "The Life of Christ." The young speaker portrayed in a vivid manner the life of the Saviour from His birth in a manger to his death upon the cross at Calvary.

About 2000 years ago a dear baby was born in Bethlehem in a manger and his name was Jesus our Saviour who came to save sinners. The Shepherds were tending their sheep when suddenly the angel of the Lord appeared and spoke to them saying, Fear not for I bring you great joy, the joy of the birth of the king of peace. His birth was prophesied in the book of the prophets. The wise men of the east knew this was the one child they were looking for and they showered gifts upon him. They realized that they had found the child Jesus. When Herod heard of the birth he was prepared to kill the child at all costs, but the child and his mother was taken away over the plains. It was a midnight trip across the desert to the land of Egypt. When Jesus at the age of 12 years was missed for three days he was found in the temple amongst the wise men asking and answering questions. He grew in stature, knowledge and in the love of God. Had he spent His time in foolish things He never would have accomplished what he did for mankind.

Jesus says, If I be lifted up from earth I will draw all men unto me. Do we get this vision of the Saviour of mankind?

In referring to wealth Miss Vitchestain said with much emphasis, you can have your wealth but give me Jesus. Some there are who tell her parents that it is a terrible thing to allow her to preach as it will ruin her health, but such was not the case. God would take care of her and He will take care of all who work for Him. Jesus lived and died to set mankind free. He suffered untold agony in the garden of Gethemame and was unjustly dealt with for our sake. In the judgment hall Peter denied his Master. How many times have we denied Christ? Pilot could not find any fault with Jesus and when He was brought before Herod He was mocked and hailed as the King of the Jews. He was taken back to Pilot who sought to find excuses to release the Saviour. Pilot asked whom to release, Jesus or Barabas, and the cry was Barabas. What shall I do with Jesus? Pilot asked and the cry was, crucify Him, and at Calvary He was crucified, and upon His brow was pressed a crown of thorns. At the foot of the cross is gathered some members of His family, and upon the cross He cries out, it is finished. Intense darkness overshadows the land and earthquakes occur. Joseph of Aramathea and Nichodemos got permission of Pilot to have the body of Jesus and deposit it in a sepulchre, the body of the only begotten son of God. The oriental day is breaking and Mary Magdelene approaches the sepulchre, An angel appears and rolls away the stone. According to the scriptures the Son of Man rose triumphant from the grave. In concluding her address the young speaker made a touching appeal for all to accept the offer of salvation, and not reject Christ.

said and are more than advice. The shots that fell about the fugitive head of De Valera in his retreat are notice to his henchmen generally to be quiet."

WHAT IS A LETTER

Many Times It's a Guide to Health as is This One

Women—Read It

Marmion, Ontario.—"Before using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was a total wreck. I had terrible pains in my sides and was not regular. Finally I got so weak I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest half-way up. I saw your medicine advertised in the newspapers and gave it a trial. I took four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and was restored to health. I am married, am the mother of two children and do all my housework, milk eight cows and do a hired man's work and enjoy the best of health. I also found the Vegetable Compound a great help for my weak back before my babies were born. I recommend it to all my friends."—Mrs. Henry Janke, Marmion, Ontario.

Letters which you read in the newspapers recommending Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound are genuine expressions from women who have been helped by this splendid medicine. They are anxious for other women, who may be suffering as they did, to know of the great merit of this medicine. Each one, with her reputation, stands behind it, to point out to sick women the way to health.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

HOME RULE BILL FOR BURMA

London, July 14.—Home Rule for Burma has been taken up by the House of Commons. The subject was expounded by Earl Winterton, who said that the proposed Burmese constitution provided a Council of State and a Legislative Assembly, and went even further than was contemplated in India.

In India no woman has a vote, the speaker said, but in Burma under the proposed constitution there would be no sex disqualification, the reason being that Burmese women were far more advanced than their Indian sisters. All the heads of Burmese households would be virtually enfranchised. The total electorate, urban and urural would be 3,000,000, of whom 200,000 would be women. The principle that there should be no taxation without representation—the principle for which the American colonies fought, and won their independence—would be conceded to Burma without a struggle.

AID MOTHERS IN CARE OF BABIES

Director of Health issues a Pamphlet for Guidance in Hot Spell

Montreal, July. 14.—Some important recommendations for the guidance of mothers in the care of babies during the hot spell are contained in a pamphlet issued this morning by Dr. S. Boucher, Director of Health. The doctor said that ignorance is at the bottom of much of the mortality among infants and if the following points are taken to heart, the baby will have a better chance to fight the ravages of the humidity:

The doctor recommends that mothers should place a box with a cover at the door for the milkman to put the milk bottle in; never allow the milk bottle to be placed on the step otherwise; the box should be in the shade.

A better way still is to receive the bottle from the milkman's hand and to place the bottle at once on the ice.

The bottle should be left on the ice and removed only for taking out the baby's meal.

Never pour in the fresh bottle any of the milk left over from another.

Give the baby at each meal fresh milk and never mix the remainder of the previous feeding.

Never use for the baby any milk recieved since over 24 hours.

Clean baby's bottle before every meal with boiling water.

Clean the nipple immediately after each meal and keep it from dust in a jar containing boiled water, to which has been added ½ a teaspoonful of boracic acid or ⅙ of a teaspoonful of baking soda.

The milkman's bottle should never be returned to him without having been cleaned in boiling water.

DELORME NOW IN ASYLUM

Quebec, July 14.—Adelard Delorme is in the Beauport asylum, having arrived here yesterday from Montreal in charge of Chief Lorrain, of the provincial detective bureau. He will remain in the institution until such time as he is judged sane enough to understand a trial on the charge of murdering his half brother Raoul, or failing that for the rest of his life.

The closing of the doors of Beauport asylum behind Delorme is considered by the authorities to end the sensational case as far as the priest is concerned. In a day or so a trustee will be appointed for his estate. It is now thought unlikely that any attempt will be made to collect the $25,000, for which sum Raoul was insured by the priest just before the murder.

TO START DRIVE ON INSURGENTS

Formation of Army Council and Reorganization of Staff Presage Important Action

CENSORSHIP STRICT

Rebels Guilty of Vandalism Seizing and Destroying Valuable Property

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 15.—Fully aware of the hardships created by the Republicans, who infest the towns and cities of Southern Ireland, seizing food supplies without regard for the needs of the people, and stopping communication between districts, the Provisional Government is planning energetic efforts to restore order and bring the operations against the insurgents to an end before harvest time. It is generally expected here that the National Forces will soon make an important move.

Dublin, July 15.—An example of the severity of the censorship in force in the Irish capital is furnished by a current issue of the Voice of Labor, the official newspaper of the Transport Workers, which appears with thirteen blank columns out of a total of thirty two.

INVITE BRITONS TO SETTLE LAND

Favorable Offer by Antipodean Government to British Emigrants

London, July 15.—An announcement issued at Australia House here says that the Government of Western Australia is offering a thousand men of Great Britain a chance to live healthy, independent and prosperous lives in an uncrowded country. This invitation is extended to men lacking capital, and they will be taken to the Commonwealth at reduced fares. Each emigrant under the settlement scheme after a preliminary period of work with a farmer on a wage basis will be given, free of charge, outside of a small survey fee, land up to 160 acres. The emigrant will receive expert advice and will be advanced money to prepare and develop his farm.

Group Scheme.

A feature of the offer is the group scheme providing for twenty or more settlers, preferably married men, who will be grouped on twenty or more blocks of land. These groups, while they are preparing this territory for cultivation, will be provided with housing accommodation and will receive a cash advance of ten shillings a day to cover living expenses. They will be under the direction of an expert. It is estimated that the cost of preparing each farm will range from £700 to £800, this amount also including the erection of the house, sustenance, clearing, fencing, etc.

Charge as Advance.

This will be charged as an advance to the settler, and his payments may be spread over a period of thirty years, during the first five years of which only interest will be required. He may pay the remainder in fifty half-yearly instalments.

The Government of Western Australia is prepared to take 25,000 settlers yearly. All that is asked of the emigrant is that he be a willing settler on the land and develop it.

FALLS SEVEN STOREYS TO INSTANT DEATH

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Ottawa, July 15.—Seized with a fainting spell, Miss Marion Fraser, clerk in the Auditor Generals Department, fell through an open window on the seventh floor of the transportation building here this morning to instant death.

On arriving at the office this morning she opened the window to get a little fresh air. Whether she leaned out too far is not known as there was no one else in the room at the time. Constable McCormick appeared just in time to see her disappearing. She fell on a two-storey roof at the back of the building, crushing her chest. She was going on leave this afternoon.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS TO MEET IN LONDON

This committee asked for $800,000 to carry out the project.

FIGHT CLAIM OF TRACK MEN

Watchfully Waits for Next Move of Belleville Racing Association

Toronto, July 15.—Unofficially, the Provincial Government is pursuing a policy of "watchful waiting" with respect to the Belleville Driving Association's Port Credit race-track venture and its declaration that it will go ahead and operate anyway, despite the Government's refusal to permit increased capitalization.

Thinks Statement Is Bluff.

The Government's attitude is that it is now "the association's move," and that a declaration as to possible action in regard to cancellation of charter, or possible legal attack upon the powers granted in the charter, would be decidedly premature and unwise. Frankly, the Government believes the association is "bluffing" when its representatives talk about getting around the refusal of supplementary letters patent by selling bonds. The association has that right, it is admitted, but as a financial venture that line of procedure is not deemed feasible.

Despite previous statements of Cabinet Ministers on the point, the Government is understood also to be prepared to dispute the right of the race-track to conduct a betting business under the powers conferred in its old charter.

Between the hours of 7.30 o'clock and 10 last night, three children made good their escape or were taken from the Children's Shelter on Dundas street east, and are still at large. The children's names are Ephraim Sweet, Lulu Sweet, of Napanee, and Elsie Martin of Frankford, aged twelve, eight and nine years respectively.

The children were put to bed as usual at 7.30 o'clock by one of the ladies in charge, at the institution, but when the usual inspection was made at 10 p.m. it was discovered that the three had dressed and made good their getaway.

It is thought that they made their way down the fire escape. Every effort is being made by the proper authorities to ascertain their whereabouts.

ACTS OF KINDNESS ARE APPRECIATED

Children of the Marchmont Home Have Many Kind Friends

Mrs. Merry wishes to thank the kind friends who have sent gifts for the large party of children who arrived at the Marchmont Home from England on Saturday last.

The Rotary Club entertained four boys to lunch on July 10th and all the children in Victoria Park on Tuesday, July 11th. Prizes were distributed for races. Ice-cream and cake were served. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell sent bananas; Mr. Tarlington, Doughnuts and Candy; Mr. Clapp, Cakes and Cookies; icecream; Emmanuel Junior C. G. I. T., per Mrs. Naylor, ice-cream; Mrs. Bell and friends, Cakes.

The staff at the Home have been very busy this week getting the boys and girls off to their new homes, some going by train, others being called for by the farmers. There remain at the Home about forty of the younger boys and four girls, 9, 10, 11 and 12, for whom good Christian homes are desired. They need schooling, clothes and pocket money while they are of school age.

KITCHENER PAPER'S DYING WORDS

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Kitchener, Ont., July 15.—The Daily Telegraph, which has been absorbed by the news record; issued its final (edition) at noon to-day. The publishers say in a valedictory that they followed the policy they believed to be right and in the best interests of the community rather than that which they new to be popular.

GIRL GRADUATES ON HIKING TOUR.

TRADES INCREASE IN PALESTINE

Great Industrial Development Under British and American Jewish Interests

Jerusalem, July 15.—The industrial development of Palestine under the Jews is moving forward in leaps and bounds, and this in spite of the many trade quarrels that have sprung up of late between employer and employee.

During the past year no less than 4,000 licenses were issued for new trades and industries in Palestine. The extent of this development can be judged from the fact that prior to 1921 only 2,500 licenses were registered by the government. This means that nearly two-thirds of the enterprises in Palestine were started within the last year.

The capital invested in each of these new ventures ranges from $20,000 to $50,000, but with such notable exceptions as the Silicate Company, of Jaffa, with a capital of $500,000, and the Standard Oil Company, now exploiting the Dead Sea Basin.

A tract of 500 acres of land has been bought by British-Jewish interests and will be devoted to home and factory building, while American interests are starting a building and loan association and a savings bank. A casino, two bathing establishments and electric lights are among the attractions of an "American" seaside resort which has sprung up on the sands stretching to the North of Jaffa.

In reality this is a Jewish township and its local name is Tel Aviv, but to a visitor it appears a go-ahead American town with a spirit that overcomes all obstacles. It has more than 12,000 inhabitants and an immense brick factory working night and day.

All products of the farms and garden were offered for sale in abundance and prices were reasonable.

Fresh dairy butter in price remains stationary namely 38c and 40c per pound with a slight decrease for basket lots.

Strictly fresh eggs command a fairly good price, namely 28c and 30c a dozen. Shippers pay from 25c to 26c for case lots.

Dressed chickens were quite plentiful and sold from $1.50 to $2.50 per pair according to size and quality.

Garden products such as new potatoes, string beans, cabbage, etc., were in abundance and sales were large. Potatoes sold at 50c to 55c a peck; beans 10 cts a quart and cabbage 10c and 15c each. Green peas were sold at 30c per quart.

MURNEY INQUIRY IS ADJOURNED

Evidence of Defense Has Been Heard but Estate Will Produce One More Witness

When Engineer J. G. Mill was recalled at the afternoon session of the Murney deliberations, yesterday, to submit his estimate of the cost of a driveway into the Murney property from Bridge street before the hill was lowered and after, he submitted the following estimates:

Before the hill was lowered, the cost as estimated by Mr. Mill, was $357, and the cost of a driveway at the present time, since the hill has been lowered, would be $469.50, making an increase in cost of construction of the driveway now of $112.50, as a result of the lowering of the hill.

Prior to the lowering of the hill, the cost was distributed as follows: Excavation, $80; concrete driveway, $200; drainage, $30, and driveway surface, $47.

At present, the prices would be, in the opinion of the witness, as follows: Excavation, $112.50; concrete driveway, $290; drainage, $30, and driveway surface, $37.

W. Patterson, contractor and engineer, recalled, stated that at the corner of Commercial and Bridge streets the street level is one foot and ten inches lower than it was prior to the lowering of the hill, and at the corner of Isabel and Bridge streets, the street level is ten inches higher than it was prior to the lowering of the hill.

Witness stated that a driveway was quite feasible from Isabel street now, and it would be quite easy by erecting a bank garage on the same level as the basement floor, as is being done extensively in the larger cities.

G. N. Simmons, engaged in the real estate business in this city, has passed this property almost daily since 1914, when he came to the city.

To Mr. Masson, witness stated that the paving of this hill added to the value of the property, possibly to an extent of 25 per cent. in saleable value.

T. E. Blackburn, jeweller, of this city, who resides about 1,000 feet further west on the street than the Murney property, and who passes the property each day, testified that the pavement was an improvement to the property to the extent of the cost of the improvement (the amount charged against the property).

Samuel Treverton, who was Chairman of Public Works in the City Council in 1921, testified that there was a reasonably fair entrance to the property in question at the present time.

By reason of the fact that Mr. W. Carnew, counsel for the Murney estate, wished to produce one more expert witness, the hearing was adjourned until Wednesday next, July 19th, at 10.30 a.m.

BARRIE IS REMANDED UNTIL JULY 21ST

Man Charged with Murder Formally Remanded by Magistrate To-day

That the public is intensely interested in the trial of Maurice Barrie, who stands charged with the murder of George Wesley Moult; was manifested this morning, when the police court room was crowded at an early hour awaiting his arrival: This, despite the fact that it was announced in the press on Friday, that the priliminary hearing was laid over until Friday, July 21st, at 10 a. m.

The court room at the County building was also comfortably filled at 10 a.m., the people thinking that the trial would proceed there. It was 12 o'clock before Magistrate H. H. Bedgord, of Deseronto, arrived in this city, for the purpose of presiding at the preliminary hearing.

Barrie appeared before the magistrate and was formally remanded until July 21st.

SPEEDERS HAVE TAKEN WARNING

A Small Minority Yet "Burn Up" the Provincial Highway, However

Speeding on the Provincial Highway has moderated very considerably, as a result of the timely warning which was brought to the attention of the public, through the Press recently, according to information volunteered to the Intelligencer on Friday.

Ninety-five per cent. of the motorists are driving moderately, but their safety is still in peril by a handful of thoughtless drivers.

The informant who was not a police officer, but a gentleman who is determined to put a stop to the speeding, divides the speeders roughly into two classes. First, the owner of a large, high power machine, who imagines he owns the whole of the highway, and who gets away with it because the smaller cars have to make way for the big car which "hogs" the thoroughfare. Then there are the fresh, young youths, who armed with a cigarette, and often a flask on the hip, attend all the dances along with the sporty, young maidens. It appears according to our informant, who has been on the highway time and again and has seen them go; that these "sports" simply eat up the road when they get out there with their motor cars. While it may be difficult to see them coming, it has been said that it is easier to hear them coming, for they are invariably singing, also in high gear.

A number of motorists, especially the lady drivers are actually afraid to venture out on the Provincial High way here, and only Thursday night, a serious accident occurred on the Trent road. Although we are not in a position to categorize the participants in either of the above named classes, yet it is a warning to others.

The Provincial officers are watching for speeders on the highway and are going to make a cleanup on this thoughtless minority.

CLERGYMEN, BEWARE!

Hamilton, July 15.—On Sunday a local clergyman was visited by a man who told a hard luck story about coming here with his wife and three children from St. Catharines and losing his money and tickets on the way. The minister thought it was a worthy case and contributed $8. Since then he learned the man had worked the same game in St. Catharines. He urges other clergymen here to be on the watch for the deceiver.

"Why Don't They Join Me" He Asks of Manitoba Farmers

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Winnipeg, July 15.—"If the farmers of Manitoba want responsible Government why don't they join with me," asked Premier Norris at the final rally here last night, at which he declared that there was no possibility of the United Farmers and Liberals getting together, because the Winnipeg Progressive Party was opposed to the Income Tax and Legislation that had been passed for the benefit of the farmers.

LION HUNTING IN CANADA

Machine-Guns in Action Against Sea-Lions Which Devour Fish in B.C. Rivers

Vancouver, B. C., July 15.—When the government patrol steamer, Givenchy left here for the north she carried machine guns for service against the sea lions, marauders of salmon and smaller varieties of fish. The campaign is to be waged on rookeries on the islands off Smith's and River's Inlets and commences about the time the baby sea lions are able to scramble for the water.

There has been a considerable increase in the population of the northern rookeries lately and when the machine-guns get into action a massacre may be expected.

On the Fraser River a Japanese was recently employed by fishermen to kill sea lions with a shotgun, and he accounted for nearly a hundred.

Dominion Day Sermon

Delivered by REV. A. L. GEEN, P.D.,
In Christ Church, Campbellford
2nd July — 1922.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov. XIV-34.

As year after year brings us round in the rapid flight of time, to the native day of our Canadian Dominion we are conscious I think of a growing sense of the importance and grandeur of the event which we celebrate. And this is most natural, for just as a man who has come into the inheritance of some vast estate which he has never explored and of which he cannot form any idea in his mind, requires a considerable time, ere he can realize, the size, the value the importance of his acquisition—and can only do so after an investigation of its extent, its richness and its capabilities so when in 1867 the Confederation Act received the Royal assent and the first Dominion Day was celebrated, people did not realise the grandeur of the achievement, or the mighty import of the new era of Canadian history which had just then opened. But the past fifty-five years have been developing our ideas on the subject. We have been gradually cultivating national feelings and aspirations. We have been extending our mental horizon beyond the Province which was once our country—so to speak—in wider and wider circles until it now embraces fondly and proudly the whole of British North America. Many things have been contributing to swell our ideas and enlarge our views of what the Dominion of Canada signifies.

Its extent has been impressed on us by those who have told us that its area is as great as Europe, that Great Britain and Ireland could be carved out of it no less than twenty-five times, and that it is no less than ninety-four times as large as old Ireland, or in other words, that it embraces the inconceivable area of no less than 3,800,000 square miles. Then the fact of the Federal Parliament meeting from year to year to discuss the great interests of and to legislate for the combined provinces from the Atlantic to the Pacific has made us as familiar with Nova Scotia and British Columbia as with Ontario and Quebec. Again the facilities for travelling over the Dominion on Canadian railroads which binds the East and West together with iron bands, and which in the near future may be found of vital importace not to the Dominion only but also to the great nation of which we form a part, for by it China, Japan and Australia can be reached from England in less time than by old routes and India as soon and that through her own dominions.

The active part which the loyal sons of this Canada of ours took in the World War.

Moreover the attention and admiration which the enormous mineral resources of the Dominion, the inexhaustible harvest of its waters, the vast treasures of it's forest, the illimitable stretches of it's fertile areas, have attracted from the states men and thinking men in tht old old country, have opened our eyes to the magnificence of the inheritance which God has given us.

All these things havt contributed to the growth of a national feeling, sentiment and ambition which is showing itself in the very decisive manner in which Canada is gradually asserting her position as one of the most important communities in the civilized world, and let me quote the glowing words of Lord Dufferin in 1878 "Never has any people been endowed with a nobler birthright or blessed with propects of a fairer future than this Dominion. Whatever gift God has given to man is to be found within the borders of your ample territories. It is true tht zone within which your lines are cast is characterised by ruder features than those displayed in lower latitutes and within more sunward stretching lands, but, the north has ever been the home of liberty, industry and valour. It is also true you are not so rich as many other communities, but the happiness of a people does not so much depend on the accumulation of wealth as in its equable distribution. In many of the wealthiest kingdoms of Europe, thousands can scarcely obtain their daily bread; and though it is by no means a nation of millionairs, there is not amongst us an agricultural homestead between the Atlantic and the Pacific where content and a rude plenty do not reign and in thousand localities the earth is bursting with the mineral wealth which only requires improved transportation to develope. Again you possess the best form of Government with which any historical nation has ever been blessed." A little further down in the same speech he has these admirable remarks. "The confines of the two oceans do not suffice to hedge you in, you share an Empire whose flag floats whose jurisdiction asserts itself in every quarter of the Globe, whose ships whited every sea whose language is destined to spread further than any European tongue, whose institutions every nation aspiring to freedom is endeavouring to imitate, whose vast and widespread colonies are viewing with each other in their affectionate love for the Mother Country; and in their loyalty to their Sovereign." The Earl concluded the speech from which I have been quoting and which was one of the last which he delivered as Governor of Canada by giving some parting wisdom with which the eminent speaker was so greatly gifted, he said, "love your country, believe in her, honour her, work for her, live for her, die for her guard and cherish the characteristics of your constitution with a sleepless vigilance; exemplify what happiness, what freedom, what strength, what peace can be secured by patiently, wisely, soberly expanding and developing those great principles of constitutions and Parliamentary Government which centuries ago were born in England which our ancestors shed their blood to defend, which our forefathers transplanted to this country and which our fathers have left us as the most precious inheritance they could bestow."

All this and other counsel which he gave of the same kind is very admirable and true and very necessary for a people that would be great and free to act upon.

And probably he goes as far as one could expect a modern statesman to go in counselling a people what conduct they must pursue in order to become prosperous and happy.

But the Minister of the Word of God, who brings heavenly wisdom to bear on this question as upon all others, must insist upon a higher law of national life than mere fidelity to certain political principles; a law which is stated in terms the most simple, distinct, and unhesitating by a great and wise King in the words of our text, "Righteousness exalteth a nation but sin is a reproach to any people."

My brother, God hath said, "I will be exalted among the nations, I will be exalted in the earth." In the words of the Psalmist "God remaineth a King forever, "and therefore to be faithful to the principles of any human government to be loyal to the institutions of our Country is not enough, we must be obedient to the laws and ordinances of the Divine Government, if we desire as a nation to be exalted and blest in the earth.

When the Lord gave Israel a King for the first time, Samuel the prophet was instructed to assemble the nation's representatives together and to declare to them the terms upon which God would be with them, and would advance their nation and give them peace and plenty, safety and happiness. In Samuel's charge we see not only loyalty to their human King enjoined but likewise to their heavenly King. "Behold" said Samuel, "the King whom ye have choosen and whom ye have desired, and behold the Lord hath set a King over you", if ye will fear the Lord and serve Him and obey His Voice and not rebel against His commandments, then shall not ye and also your King that reigneth over you continue following the Lord your God, but if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed both ye and your King.

Compare the history of Israel with this Divine declaration. They did not remain obedient to the laws and commandments of their Heavenly King. Their sins and failures stain every page of their Chronicles and we see each failure, each vice, each crime, meeting with its own appropriate punishment and scourge. God mercifully sent them special warnings. He dispatched to them prophet after prophet to rebuke and warn, but they murdered His prophets, then He sent His Son, and that Son they crucified. And their sentence went forth. The Roman Eagle gathered around the carcass. Torn from their homes, their Temple polluted, their land a desolation, their name a by-word their sun gone down while it was yet day.

Brother are not the Jews a living, a dreadful commentary on my text, an unshaken witness an eternal memorial that righteousness exalteth a nation and sin is a reproach to any people. Or take the history of a nation not so manifestly so directly governed by the Almighty as Israel was and the lesson is the very same. Take the instructive warning of the Roman Empire. So long as the life of the Romans was pure and simple and self-respecting, so long as their dictators and their consuls came from the ranks of honest labour or noble poverty, so long they prospered till they had become the greatest power on earth.

But when the old iron discipline gave way to an effeminate luxury, a gilded corruption, when her trade was a flagrant imposture and her religion a dishonest sham, when, in a word all regard for man's honour or woman's chastity had been lost, then justly before the strong sword of Northern Barbarians she crumbled away into unpitied ruin and unmitigated contempt. And the last of her great historians looking at the mass of seething corruption that festered around him noted with philosophic contempt the beginning of a certain new religion which he ventured to call a hateful superstition. He had heard that they worshipped a malefactor that was crucified.

What would have been his amazement could he have forseen that that religion was the little stone that destined to dash in pieces the colossal image of his greatness, and the successors of his Diefied Emperors should kiss the feet of that malefactor and cast their crowns before that cross of wood and Why?, because there is nothing fruitful but sacrifice, because it is self-denial not luxury, humility not pride, love not violence, justice not ambition which overcome the world, because the might of right even in weakness in time bears all before it. Because that new superstition was Christianity and that crucified one was Christ the Lord. Brother, wherever we look we find the conclusion of the text that sin has occasioned the fall of nations, it may have been cruely and holowness in Athens, lust and sloth in Rome, covetousness in Spain, popery in Ireland, but in each and every instance sin has been their reproach and ruin. "Thou shalt do no murder" "Thou shalt not steal" "Thou shalt not commit adultery" such were the mandates carved by God's own finger on the tables of stone, with which Moses descended the burning mount—and all history does but re-echo that voice of thunder wherein "God spake these words and said" on page after page, in generation after generation, does she write her mighty comment "that righteousness exalteth a nation and sin is a reproach to any people."

And this must be so not only because God blesses righteousness from above, but as a necessary and inevitable law. It exalts, because it inspires the purest and most self-denying patriotism, because it demands truth and honesty, because it ends in devotion to piety, to virtue to God, and upon these great principles the world may securely repose.

Look at the matter in an individual—Is there anything I ask you, which can in meanness and cowardice match the heart which nurses guilt? How it trembles at the dread of detection how it makes the heart unstable, like water, but on the other hand, a good conscience is a shield and buckler. It makes a man brave and bold as lion. Can a nation be great or noble whose sons bear about with them the coward heart of self-condemnation? Nay but the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them. . . . But the sons of God the righteous children of the righteous King, strong in honesty, in purity and truth who shall make them afraid? What shall prevent them mounting the high places of the earth and planting their banner upon their sunlit summits?

And if this be so if we have seen that frivolity and corruption are the death warrant of nations and truth and justice, religion and piety the sole supports of national eminence what stars shine on our Country's destiny? Shall we realize all the greatness, the prosperity, the honour and renown which the eloquent tongue of the Earl of Dufferin has forcast for the Dominion to which must if not corrected be a clog upon

Are we so far removed from those impurities and immoralities which have sent nations headlong to ruin? And are we so firmly rooted and grounded in righteousness that we may be without any apprehensions as to our future? I think we must acknowledge that there are principles and practices at work among us that are sources of weakness to us individually and nationally and that must if not corrected to a clog upon our onward progress and elevation, in business, in politics in every department we see more or less corruption poisoning the springs of wholesome trade, noble ambition and pure patriotism, selfishness and greed and a lack of honour among evils, seem to be growing evils while the laws of God, the sanctity of the Lord's Day, the instructions of Christianity are lightly regarded. Let us as individuals face the evils we acknowledge and strive to correct them so far as they find a lodgment in our breasts. Even in the midst of the reeking infamy of Sodom ten righteous men would have saved it. Let us then be up and doing. Fight against greed, fight against falsity, fight against faithlessness, fight against uncleanness in your hearts.

Oh, do justice, love mercy and walk humbly with your God.

Bind yourselves to true, pureminded, ernest, christian lives, because by them you will do most for the country you love. You will be contributing to her exaltation. Because by them you will be advancing your own exaltation, not only in earth, but in that kingdom above wherein dwelleth righteousness.

God save the Dominion
God save the King.

At the close of the sermon the congregation rose and sang Hymn 353 "God Save Our Gracious King", "Our Loved Dominion Bless."

A Bad Case

Eczema All Over His Body—His Legs—His Arms Covered

John Clark of Brockville, N. B., crowds a story of great suffering into a few words.

"I was tormented beyond words. I could not sleep. You could not put a pin on my whole body. I tried several doctors. They said it was scrofula. Three dollar bottles of D. D. D. is all I used. I have not had a sore for five months."

Each week we are selecting a letter from some Canadian sufferer to show what can be done to itching, burning skin disease by the clear, purifying liquid wash, D. D. D.

Stop that itch today. You are not asked to use D. D. D. for weeks before you receive results. If you don't get relief from the very first bottle we hand your money back. $1.00 a bottle. Try D. D. D. Soap, too.

HINTS ON POULTRY

Charcoal, grit and oyster shell are fully as important in the poultry ration as animal food or grain and meal. Even flocks having range will consume large quantities of these materials to advantage, and when the birds are closely confined a supply is absolutely necessary. The usual method is to keep supplies of these materials in hoppers before the birds all the time, so that they may eat of them at will. Mixing the grit, charcoal and oyster shell with the grain or mash is not advisable, as the birds receive either too little or too much.

Best results will be had by purchasing the commercial products specially prepared for poultry. Each of the three materials may be had in three sizes: "Chick" for baby chicks, "medium" or "pigeon" for growing chicks or pigeons, and "large" for hens.

Grit should be a stone that will not become round through rubbing; it should be hard and sharp and wear off like shale, never becoming round and ball-like. Grit made from limestone is not good, as it will grind into little round balls which do not do the work of grinding the feed. Limestone grit supplies some lime, it is true, but it is better to secure the lime through crushed oyster shell.

Sharp grit is necessary, but such things as finely broken glass are likely to do more harm than good.

Charcoal is very important in the poultry ration; it will be found a great help in correcting bowel disorders. Most fowl are very fond of the charcoal and will eat quantities of it; as a usual thing they will consume from two to three times as much charcoal as grit. Heavy feeding of rich feeds to induce egg production is likely to produce some slight bowel disorders, but unless the feeding is radically wrong a supply of charcoal before the fowl all the time will correct these disorders.

Crushed oyster shell is consumed in smaller quantities than either of the other essentials, but is none the less important.

Chicken Under Glass.

We can fruits and vegetables to preserve them for future use. Why not chicken? Chicken under glass couldn't consume much corn. I had four big cockerels that had almost reached the five-pound stage, and were just eating their heads off. I determined to make an experiment, to which end I had the four cockerels killed and dressed.

When they were properly prepared I put them into two large pots to boil, seasoning them well with salt and pepper after boiling them about an hour. When about two-thirds done I removed them from the fire and set them aside to become sufficiently cool to handle. The sections of a fowl are too large to admit of being placed in the ordinary glass jar which is most used. But why can bones, anyway?

When the stewed chicken had cooled I carefully separated the meat from the bones, cutting the breast, thighs and drumsticks in halves running lengthwise The wings I canned with the bones in... These large pieces I put back into the pot to finish cooking while I separated the remainder of the smaller pieces from the necks, backs, and other places.

Part of this smaller meat I shredded into one pan, the rest I put through the chopper and minced. The latter also contained all pieces of the skin, which I had removed from necks and breast to give my jars a good appearance. The giblets I put into the minced meat, although these could have been put with the larger pieces if desired.

By this time my pots of large pieces were boiling and ready for the jars. By placing them in gently they remained itact, though well done. An upright position saves room in the jars and greatly adds to the appearance of finished cans. When these were filled with liquid they were ready to seal.

Adding a little more water I proceeded in the same manner with the shredded and then the minced meat always provided sufficient liquid to fill the jars completely, as is the rule in all canning. Lastly I returned the bones to the pot for a final cooking for soup. To this may be added rice or vegetables at the time of canning. I canned mine clear.

From the four roosters I secured four quart jars of large pieces, ready for either frying in butter or reheating for pot pie or fricassee, four cans of shredded, two minced and three of rich soup stock. All of these are equally good served cold, as the hot liquid jellies in the jar when cold, making delicious chicken in jelly. By immersing a can in hot water when ready to serve, the entire contents come out intact and may be served temptingly on lettuce leaves or garnished with parsley

SEND FINGER PRINTS BY THE WIRELESS

London, July 13.—A remarkable system is now being perfected in Copenhagen whereby finger prints and photographs of crooks will be wirelessed from one part of the world to another.

When the system is universally adopted a man arrested in Europe, and who is supposed to be wanted, or have a record in America, can be identified as to his finger prints within a few hours instead of waiting for a fortnight.

Police Commissioner Enright, of New York, who is here working for closer co-operation between Scotland Yard and the United States police, is also working for international co-operation in traffic problems. He has already obtained permission of the Paris authorities to experiment there with a crossing signal system similar to that of New York, and he expects to do the same here.

Enright wants to arrange for international standardization of traffic-control, whereby a driver for one country will find the same kind of traffic signals in any other country he visits.

CLAIMS WAS ROBBED BY PARTNER IN GAME

Court Dismissed Case and Orders New Prosecution Against Both Players

Toronto, July 14.—George Russell White, colored, pleaded not guilty in the police court yesterday to a charge of the theft of $800 in money, the property of John Green.

Green commenced by holding the stakes in a game of 3-card monte. Later he got into the game and lost money, and then started crap shooting. As a result he ultimately lost $850, then he informed the police. A pair of dice produced in court were described as squeezed dice, exceedingly productive of sevens.

The squeezed dice were in possession of the complainant.

Frank Hunter said he witnessed the game which took place in an empty lot on Centre avenue. He acknowledged he was patrolling the lot with a view of warning the players if the police arrived.

Mr. Jones dismissed the charge against the accused and ordered a prosecution to be commenced against both accused and complainant for playing three card monte.

FRUIT CROP PROMISES WELL

General Scarcity of Farm Help Reported Throughout the Province

Fall wheat has headed out well, and on the whole is a very promising crop. Oxford, however, complains of some rust and Hessian fly. Cutting will start this week in some counties.

Spring grains are coming along fine and promise a good average yield. There are a few complaints of a tendency to lodge, owing to the straw being a little soft due to the comparatively damp and cloudy weather of the last few weeks.

Corn has been disappointing of late, having made poor growth owing to the dull and rather cool weather.

All the root crops are looking well at this stage of growth.

Haying has been slower than usual on account of the catchy weather. However, red clover is doing well on the whole.

Most of the first crop of sweet clover has been harvested. considerable portion of it was damaged by wet weather, and some farmers in Peterboro burned some of the poorer stuff. Halton speaks highly of sweet clover both as a pasture crop and as a soil restorer.

The cherry yield has been exceptionally good, and the general quality excellent, there being very few wormy specimens. Plums and peaches promise heavy yields. Fruit growers are beginning to handle the generous yields of gooseberries and currants. Raspberries are turning out better than was expected earlier in the season.

Leeds observes an increase in the number of young stock.

The Ontario county representative quotes cattle as selling at from 3 to 5½ cents per pound, the average being about 4 cents.

Dufferin says that there are not so many finished cattle on hand as might be expected, although live stock generally are being marketed fairly freely.

Milk production continues to be fairly heavy. Cheese was a little off during the week, the Peterboro Board paying only 15 13-16 cents a pound.

Dufferin says that a fair number of lambs are going out, and rather earlier than usual.

Hogs are in more or less steady demand, prices being around $13.75 to $14 a cwt.

Peterboro says that bees are doing particularly well in that county, and that clover honey will be slightly over the average in yield.

There has been a general complaint of the scarcity of help, although farmers are willing to pay good wages to fair workers. Many farmers have had to struggle alone or with family help only, in harvesting their various hay crops.

ANGLICAN CHURCH SLOW BUT SURE

Rural Dean Defends Course of Deanery in Regard to Opposition to Roman Catholic Demands

Toronto, July 14.—"All rubbish," was the first comment that Canon W. L. Baynes-Reed, the Anglican rural dean, made when he was told of the statements made by T. R. Ferguson, K.C., deputy county master of the L.O.L. regarding the "lukewarmness" of the Anglican Church protest again st the recent Separate school campaign by the Roman Catholic Church.

"I have not seen the statement by Mr. Ferguson, but have only heard what has been reported," said Canon Baynes-Reed. "Doubtless, Mr. Ferguson combines in his own person, more wisdom than the Bishop, the Chancellor and executive committee of the Synod and the Rural Deanery of Toronto."

"Suffice it to say that the Anglican Church acts in a deliberate way and its action therefore carries a greater weight.

"A resolution was duly passed by the Rural Deanery of Toronto after discussion at a special meeting, and the only hesitancy that existed was about the best and most effective way of accomplishing the desired end."

WHAT U.S. THINKS ABOUT DE VALERA

Editorial in "Tribune" Commends Irish for Refusing His Leadership

New York, July 14 (By Canadian Press).—An indication of where Eamon de Valera stands today in the estimation of the citizens of the United States is given by a very plain-spoken editorial printed by The Tribune which paper is generally conceded to reflect the viewpoint of the better class of the community. The Tribune says, in part:

"One look at the countenance of De Valera suffices to explain the man: His narrow face, his over-prominent nose, his eyes close together, a thrusting jaw betokening wilfulness, his humorless expression—his is the typical face of a fanatic. When they are right, such men as he are valuable. But, alas! they are seldom right. They espouse wrong and then, in ecstasy of self-martyrdom, are immovable. The ancestors of De Valera were not Irish, with hot heads but warm hearts, but cold and cruel theologians. His blood is Spanish, like his name. He is of the breed of Torquemada, whose doing of evil became to him a religious duty.

"It is vastly creditable to the Irish that they refused De Valera's leadership and disregarded his artful appeals to their patriotism. Ireland appears as entirely competent to look after her own affairs, with the resolution to suppress, even to the shedcalming to other De Valeras. An peace.

TRADE SYNDICATE FORMED IN RUSSIA

German Capital and Soviet Government Unite to Control Waterways

Petrograd, July 15.—German private capital and the Soviet government have launched a corporation which bids fair virtually to monopolise the inland water transportation of Russia.

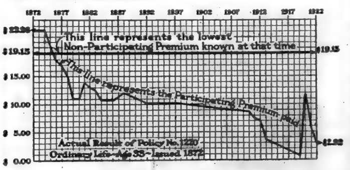
Simultaneously with the signing of the Russo-German treaty at Rapallo, last April, an agreement was signed by M. Karakhan, assistant Commissar for foreign affairs, and M. Leshava, assistant Commissar for foreign trade, acting on behalf of the Soviet government, with the German firm of Robert Wenkhaus, of Hamburg, granting the Germans a concession for the transportation of home and foreign goods through the Baltic Sea, the Caspian Sea, and the Mariensky Canal system, which connects the basin of the Volga with the Neva.

According to this agreement a syndicate will be formed with a capital of 200,000,000 gold marks to be taken up in equal shares by the Soviet government and German capitalists. The firm of Robert Wenkhaus undertakes to provide the tonnage needed and to arrange a loan for the Soviet government through German banks to the amount of 500,000,000 marks. Part of this money will be used for the organization of the proposed Asiatic Bank for trade with Persia. The tonnage left over, after carrying out the Soviet government's program of transportation, may be used by the syndicate for trading purposes.

Participating or Non-Participating Which?

THE following diagram shows diminishing premiums of a policy under Mutual annual dividends, and represents the actual experience of policy No. 1270, now in force in the Mutual Life of Canada, the irregular line showing how annual dividends have reduced the premium year by year, until in 1922 the assured paid only $2.92.

The straight line represents the lowest non-participating rate in 1872 of which we have any knowledge.



Had the man taken a non-participating policy, he would have paid to date.............. $976.65

Having taken a participating policy with annual dividends, he has to date paid.............. 523.34

Saved by taking a participating policy.............. $453.31

This policy is not an exception—it is typical—and a company that can show such results over a period of fifty years can safely be trusted with the business of to-day and to-morrow. BATHING AND HEALTH

Dr. C. W. Saleeby, the world-famous propagandist on hygiene, has been urging upon the people of England the importance of bathing for maintaining health. He declares that sunlight is food, tonic and antiseptic in one, and that bathing should be in the open air where possible. No indoor bathing establishments, he says, however elaborate, have the same value for the human body as its natural environment out of doors. He goes on to say: "Unless for special reasons to the contrary, all who bathe should swim. A very small child, or an invalid with a weak heart, for instance, and others on medical advice, may be content to paddle, and even to lie in the sun and air on the beach. The small child should be undressed as far as possible, even though it is only going to paddle, and thus its whole body gets the best kinds of bathing.

"But the child is very soon big enough to learn to swim, and of course youth is the time to learn. The exercise of swimming, added to the triple bathing in water, air and light, makes an unrivalled combination for the maintenance of health, for convalescence, and, above all, for the normal and ample development of the bodies of young children. In order to get the value of the light, the skin should be as little-covered as need be.

"A new and exhaustive monograph on rickets confirms the view which I have maintained in these columns—that it is a 'disease of darkness.' Even whilst our cities remain shamefully blackened by smoke-clouds during the winter, and even whilst it remains therefore inevitable that the incidence of rickets rises in the winters accordingly, much can be done by using the summer, when we have it."

What more forceful argument could we put forward for the city of Belleville proceeding at once with the plans for the open air baths in Victoria Park, which are provided for by the Corby bequest? The children of this city have no convenient and safe place where they can bathe in the open air in the summer time. They are warned by the City Fathers against bathing in the contaminated waters of the river, yet these fathers will not move a hand to provide them with a pool of clean water in which they can disport themselves and imbibe health and vigor on these glorious summer days. These youngsters are dependent upon their elders—which is a pity, for if a few of the boys of Belleville got into the City Council there would be a swimming pool in Victoria Park before the present season was over.

A WIRELESS CHAIN

The British Empire is to be encircled by a wireless chain. The Imperial Government has decided to erect in England a station for direct communication with India, South Africa and Australia. Canadian Government experts are expected to arrive in England shortly for the purpose of discussing Canada's participation in the scheme.

Such a scheme, while it is instituted primarily for commercial purposes, appeals strongly to the imagination, and should send a patriotic thrill through the heart of every Britisher scattered over the Empire. With the perfecting of the wireless telephone the entire planet will eventually become a great whispering gallery, and the actual voices of long absent and far distant friends will be brought to our very ears. Then shall be brought to pass the scriptural prediction—"There shall be no more sea."

THE PERSONAL TOUCH IN TRADE

That Canadian farmers have not gone after the British market systematically, is the contention of Farm and Home. It goes on to say that Canadians have strugled along under the impression that the natural market for our farm products is the huge population of the United States. It recommends the studying of the British market in every detail and the appointment of Canadian representatives in every city and town.

This is good advice, and it might be extended to every branch of industry in the Dominion. It is useless to establish factories unless you have a demand for the thing manufactured, and the demand has often to be created. Business comes to those who go after it, as an Irishman might put it. Advertisement is good and essential, but unless it is followed up by personal canvass, it is not always effective. The success of American manufacturers is largely due to the army of trade representatives that are spread over this continent and over the surface of the globe.

PASSING COMMENT

Mr. Crerar stated the other day that water and oil would not mix. It seems that spirits are getting mixed up in the oil business in the West.

The Globe is so eager to make Premier King heroic that it announced him as the establisher of "Peace for All Time with the United States." Was there a war on before Mr. King went to Washington?

Belleville citizens are not concerned in the disappointment of the Belleville Athletic Association's failure to secure permission to build a race track at Port Credit. They would be grateful for a stadium in their own city, however.

PRESS OPINIONS

MUCH NEEDED

Hamilton Herald

We have heard much about the war to end war. Now for a change let us talk about a strike to end strikes.

EASY MONEY

Edmonton Bulletin

British Columbia expects to make a profit of three million dollars this year out of state whiskey-selling. The population of the Province is somewhat over a half million. That is to say, the people of British Columbia are drinking enough Government booze to return a profit of [illegible] per head for every man, woman and child in the Province, to say nothing of the supply that is being provided by the omnipresent bootlegger. That disposes conclusively of the agrument that Government "control" restricts consumption. If prohibition does not altogether prohibit, obviously Government selling does not even make a pretence to do anything of that kind.

WIT AND HUMOR

Painful Exraction.

Woods: "I'm glad to hear what you say about my uncle's loyalty during the war. It's true, then, that he alwas gave until it hurt?

Brooks: "You bet it's true. Every time he dug down into his pocket after a nickel it hurt."

Not So Far Off.

Pat was a stranger to American dishes and had just been introduced to his first order of corn and the cob. After having eagerly devoured the succulent corn, he passed to his hostess the despoiled cob with the natural request:

CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY

(John Carswell, in the Spectator, London.)

The controversy that has arisen over the True case has been marked by a misunderstanding of the attitude of medical opinion to the question of criminal responsibility, and also by a complete failure to grasp the nature and scope of the assistance which medical evidence gives to the court in deciding criminal charges in which the defence of insanity is submitted. Let us say then, first, that the determination of criminal responsibility is a purely legal affair, to be decided by considerations, some medical, some social, and some inherent in the generally accepted system of the administration of justice. It [illegible] a far cry to 1843, when the McNaughton case gave occasion for the framing of certain Rules of Law by the Bench of Judges at the request of the House of Lords, whose outraged feelings at the acquittal of McNaughton, on the ground of insanity, from the charge of shooting Mr. Drummond, the Prime Minister's private secretary, were thus appeased. Although it has been the habit of lawyers to say that the Rules have afforded a satisfactory legal test of criminal responsibility, yet it must be said that they have been freely criticized by medical men engaged in lunacy practice. The British Medical Association and the Medico-Psychological Association set up committees of experts to consider the position, but both committees reported in terms that provided no practicable suggestions for a change in the law. It must be admitted that in undertaking this self-imposed task both Associations went beyond their province, but it cannot be maintained that their failure proves the soundness of the 1843 Rules. The fact remains that the Rules lack two essential features, viz., ease of application and general acceptance of the resulting decision. A Rule is intended in practice to reduce the number of contested cases, but here every case is contested and the result is a toss-up—some insane persons finding their way to Broadmoor and some to the condemned cell. This is the basis on which public security rests and the moral sanction for the 'iron firmness of the criminal law.'

The harrowing thought is that before 1843 the courts considered the relevant facts in each case on their merits, whereas now the facts must be considered in the light of a formula based upon a strictly metaphysical view of mind, which obscures if it does not exclude altogether the pathological view of insanity—Did the accused 'know the nature and quality of the act? All this is profoundly unsatisfactory to medical men whose daily duty is the care of the insane and the study of mental diseases.

The action of the Home Secretary in the proceedings under the Chiminal Lunatics Act, 1884, whereby True was respited and removed to Broadmoor has called forth angry comments. But it was left to the Times to declare that the Criminal Lunatics Act, 1884, was 'a yielding to pathologists, and no contribution to the welfare and economy of our social system. An utterance like that makes it less difficult to understand the widespread failure to grasp the nature and scope of medical evidence in cases of insane persons accused of crime.

Scientists have placed our knowledge of mental diseases upon a sure basis of ascertained fact and sound generalization. Have these achievements imperilled the security of society? Are the Lunacy Acts which have been enacted because we have become more familiar with the true nature of insanity to be scrapped, in so far as they run counter to the application of a legal formula which nobody supports as it stands? The pathological view of mental disorders excludes the false assumption of two kinds of insanity—medical and legal. To the medical mind there is no such 'thing' as insanity, it is not an entity, it quality that attaches to insane persons, is an abstract term used to denote the To the legal mind insanity is a 'thing' embodied in law. Since 1843 many Acts relating to lunatics and mental defectives have been placed upon the Statute-book. These provide the body and substance of the thing called legal insanity. When, therefore, a medical witness is asked whether an accused person is certifiably insane he replies 'Yes' or 'No' according to whether he regards the person as insane or not in the legal sense—i. e., according to statute. It is when we come to apply the vague tests of the 1843 Rules that are held to embody the criminal law that difficulties arise and will continue to arise until a better test is provided. It is for lawyers, not doctors, to provide the remedy, but perhaps the suggestion may be allowed that pathology may be found to be a more trustworthy guide than metaphysics.

HERE AND THERE

"Modern Jerusalem," writes Mr. C. R. Ashbee, "is a mixture of squalor and pretentiousness." He might also have added that Jerusalem is saturated with sectarianism and every form of religious quackery. For centuries Muslims and Jews and Latin and Greek Christians have squabbled over the sacred sites, even to the extent of blood-letting. And now Arabs and Jews are quarrelling again for the hegemony of Palestine, with Christendom occupying the position of a football referee. This being the normal state of affairs in the Holy City, one looks with interest to see how Mr. Ashbee, who was imported into Jerusalem at the heels of the advancing army in 1918 with the reputation of being an idealist, has fared during the three years of his stewardship.

MOSQUITOS ABOUND THIS YEAR.

From all the suburbs and from all the dwellers in suburbs, except the real estate dealers, come reports of mosquitos in swarms and clouds. The plague usually is ascribed to the frequent rains that have marked the Spring and Summer, and that, of course, in a way, is the reason for it, the rains having made innumerable breeding places for these savage and venomous insects. Really, though, they owe their existence more to the carelessness of their victims than to the peculiarity of the season.

The trenching of the marsh lands too often has been neglected, and too often people are not vigilant in preventing the formation of continuing pools of motionless water near their houses. It is from these pools—frequently they are in a sagging cavestrough—that the house mosquitos chiefly come, and there is no excuse, whatever the weather, for the maintenance of these hatcheries. The mosquito is a preventable evil, always and anywhere, and it can be prevented, anywhere and always, by the exercise of intelligence and the spending of a little money.

Wherever mosquitos are found, therefore, they convict municipal officials and private citizens alike either of ignorance or of negligence.

WHERE LOVE IS.

(Abigail W. Cresson, in the New York Sun.)

I've sat by a fire, all alone,
And been as cold as a watered stone.

I've walked with love in wind and snowing,
And never knew the wind was blowing.

I've spread my table, the linen white,
The china thin, and the silver bright;

And the food that I ate was dry as dust—
I've starved with love on a broken crust.

Nor called it starving—my heart would sing,
A melted brook in the first of spring!

Be the ashes cold, the table bare,
I am warmed and fed if love be there!

And cold and hungry where love is not
Though the food be good and the fire hot!

Ask Your Dealer For Crank Case Service

You probably realize the importance of having your crank case cleaned every 750 to 1000 miles. But it is dirty work. You dislike to do it yourself. Why not have it done for you?

There is an Imperial Crank Case Service dealer near you who maintains a modern crank case cleaning department and he will gladly have an expert do the job properly.

And what is most important--he will use Imperial Flushing Oil for cleaning your crank case. No danger then of diluting the fresh oil which is added later as might be the case if coal oil (kerosene) were used for flushing purposes.

Make it a special point to drive 'round to the Imperial Crank Case dealer's sometime during the next week. Let him tell you more about this service that saves your car and saves you money.

"Dead" Oil Removed

Even the best oil you can buy wears out in time and loses much of its lubricating efficiency. It then fails to maintain the proper piston seal. Power goes to waste. Wearing surfaces no longer receive proper protection. It is of the utmost importance that you have the old oil drained out of your crank case frequently.

IMPERIAL OIL LIMITED

All Parts Thoroughly Cleaned

Merely draining the crank case is not sufficient. Metal particles, road dust, dirt, grit and carbon have a tendency to adhere to the metal parts of your engine when the oil is drawn off. Imperial Crank Case Service dealers use Imperial Flushing Oil, a scientific cleansing agent, which removes all foreign matter and thoroughly flushes out your engine and crank case.

Refilled with Fresh Oil—

No one grade of oil could properly lubricate all different makes and models of automobiles and trucks. Different types require a special grade of oil, suited to their construction and operating conditions. The Imperial Crank Case Service dealer who refills your crank case, will use the grade of Imperial Polarine recommended for your car on the Imperial Chart—an infallible guide to proper lubrication.

ROMANCE

Robert Louis Stevenson

I will make you brooches and toys for your delight
Of bird-song at morning and star-shine at night.
I will make a palace fit for you and me,
Of green days in forests and blue days at sea.

I will make my kitchen, and you shall keep your room
Where white flows the river and bright blows the broom,
And you shall wash your linen and keep your body white
In rainfall at morning and dewfall at night.

And this shall be for music when no one else is near,
The fine song for singing, the rare song to hear!
That only I remember, that only you admire,
Of the broad road that stretches and the roadside fire.

FACTS ABOUT QUEEN ELIZABETH

Among barred subjects at the Elizabethan court were references to the queen's age or marriage. Any one so intrepid or foolish as to venture on these taboo grounds was not likely to do so a second time, if he valued his place at court. Elizabeth's temper has been a matter of general knowledge. If her beer was not to her liking she flew into violent tantrums. Her courtiers wisely kept her in good humor by losing money to her at cards and by making her expensive presents. Mrs. Montague presented the queen with her first pair of silk stockings, made by herself, and told Elizabeth that she would make her more. "Do so," quoth the queen, "for indeed I like silk stockings so well because they are pleasant, fine, and delicate. Henceforth I will wear no more cloth stockings." Her vanity was unappeasable. As she grew old she ordered all mirrors banished from the palace. Twenty years later, when she was dying, she sent for a mirror and saw herself a "lean haggard, wrinkled old woman." Her flatterers were then duly rewarded by a bitter berating for having assured her that her youthful charms had endured.—Saturday Night.

WOMEN'S ADVERBS.

(Mary [illegible], in the Daily Chronicle, London.)

Suppose a conversation among many persons could be reported in writing, word for word, and afterwards read over to a stranger to the company who had not been present. Would it be possible for him to guess accurately from what each one had said whether the speaker were a man or a woman?

Thus, women are seldom or never direct. Some qualification, temporizing, exaggeration, some coating of the pill with sugar, appears inevitable from them.

Let us contrast the masculine and the feminine mode of declining an invitation. The one says: "Sorry, I can't. I've a fellow coming that night." The other says: "Isn't it unlucky, I'm awfully sorry, but it's the very day I've invited Mrs. D. to tea? I'm afraid I really can't this time." The interrogation, the "awfully" and "really" are meant to soften the refusal by the suggestion of a pleasing potentiality of acceptance in a vague future. "I'm afraid" is a phrase close to the heart of femininity, as are the usually redundant monosyllables "quite" and "too."

Compare these descriptions of a child. The man's—"a fine little chap," or "a nice kiddie;" the woman's—"the dearest wee thing—he's quite too sweet." The more demonstrative sex adores adverbs and superlatives. Chocolates are not merely "delicious", they are "too delicious for words." Flowers are not merely "lovely", they are "perfectly lovely" or "perfectly heavenly." A frock is "the prettiest thing, my dear, in the world," or "the most hideous object in creation." "Did you ever hear of such an idiotic trick?" "I was bored to tears" are sentences from pretty mouths, which one may safely declare do not mean half they might.

Into their letters creep the beloved expressions. They invariably "feel" when men "think", as "I felt I must write to you," "I am sure you will feel about it as I do."

A man says "thank you," a woman "thank you so much." Hence the criticism of a misogynist—"She can't leave well alone."

Women have always hated to give the straight answer to the straight question. In spite of recent judicial slurs on their probity, they are not more untruthful than men are, but even a schoolgirl will refuse to yield her thoughts to a "stand-and-deliver" demand. Many a time in history has a woman said "no" when she meant "yes", and been astonished at being taken at her word.

Ask your wife if she would like to go to an entertainment, she rarely replies with a decided wish, but considers many things first. First, whether you truly want to take her. Secondly, whether you can afford it, or whether you had better take some other female relative instead of herself.

This is a typical conversation with any girl: "Did you come home in Mr. B.'s car?" "He offered to bring me." "Did you come in it?" "Why are you making such a fuss about it?"

The normal woman is naturally annoyed when compelled to utter the subtleties and hidden meanings she reads into the commonplaces of life in exact words. She knows instinctively that nothing can be more untrue on occasions than stark, unvarnished, unmodified truth.

And who would be tasteless enough to tutor her into an avoidance of her expressive "so much" and "really quite," and insist on her talking like a man. Their difference in speech is only one of those mysterious, delightful differences between the sexes which endear them to one another.

FASHION FANCIES

SOME NEW BLOUSES

The dressy type of blouse always has its adherents and its uses, regardless of the fact that during warm weather sports blouses are always in heavy demand. This season blouses of lace are leaders in the more elaborate models, white, black and colored laces all being popular for the purpose, and some really handsome blouses are made of metal lace. A sheer net foundation prevents such a blouse from seeming heavy for warm weather wear, and frequetly a metal and silk brocade girdle or belt will serve as a finishing and trimming touch for such a blouse.

There is one charming little blouse of gold lace, a narrow zig-zag insertion of gold braid joining the round yoke to the lower part, which, in reality, is merely a circular bertha of the lace arranged so that it falls in a ripple effect over the arms, back and front, simulating short sleeves and half draping the arms to the elbow. The lace is draped over a gold colored net foundation and a metal and silk ribbon girdle finishes it at the waist line. It is a slip-over, with an opening a few inches along at the neck in the back to make this possible.

This blouse might be worn with a skirt of satin or other soft silk for an afternoon tea or for dinner. Matched with a skirt of the gold lace, a very charming little frock would be the result.

Blouses for fall have shown no radical style changes as yet, the tendency being to favor those that are about hip length and rather straight as to line, or else waist-length models. Very long blouses of the costume type seem to have had their day, for the present at least.

Music and Drama

WALLACE REID AND HERBERT RAWLINSON HERE MONDAY.

The fight scenes in "The World's Champion," Wallace Reid's new picture, which is to be shown on the double feature bill at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday, were filmed in the monster stadium erected by the Hollywood Post of the American Legion, where amateur bouts are staged every week before large audiences of motion picture and boxing fans. About a thousand persons were employed as extras.

The sequence in question is the one wherein Reid, as "Gunboat Williams" is shown to defeat his opponent, winning the world's middleweight championship, after which he returns home to England, shocks his conservative parents with his prestige among the nobility, thrashes his rival who had beaten him in a former fistic combat, and wins the girl. Lois Wilson plays the leading feminine role.

It would be hard to pick out a leading woman better known to the general public than Marjorie Daw, whose sweet personality, a reflection of her inner sincerity, will be one of the things marked by the audience during the screening of Herbert Rawlinson's Universal starring vehicle, "Cheated Hearts," which is the second feature offering on the double feature bill at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday.

"The Janitors," a highly amusing two-reel Fox Sunshine comedy, is announced for exhibition in addition to the above feature offerings.

GLORIA SWANSON AND MILTON SILLS AT GRIFFIN'S

Who could write a better love story than Elinor Glyn, the famous author of "Three Weeks" and other noted works of fiction. The answers to this question would be limited. And who could better enact a perfect love story than Gloria Swanson. That is why "The Great Moment," Miss Swanson's first Paramount starring vehicle, founded upon an original story by Elinor Glyn, which is the feature attraction at Griffin's tonight, has been accepted as one of the most popular pictures of the month. But there are yet other celebrities in the cast besides Miss Swanson. Milton Sills is the leading man. Alec B. Francis, Arthur Hull, Helen Dunbar and Julia Faye have important roles.

"Shipwrecked Among Animals", a two-reel Century comedy, an interesting Travelogue, and George Walsh and Louise Lorraine in Universal's chapter play, "With Stanley in Africa," are announced for exhibition on the same program.

KING GIVES COUP DE GRACE TO HIS HISTORIC SILK TOPPER

London, July 14.—King George's snub to the top hat by wearing a bowler—derby—at the Goodwood races is the death-knell of the high hat in England, mourns the sartorial expert of an evening newspaper.

"The change in fashion from the topper now revives the great battle between the bowler and the soft velours hat," says the paper.

"Smart gentlemen now go to the races wearing bowlers, but bank clerks still wear shiny silk hats."

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

"You were! Then you know who sent it to me?"

"Of course." Her expression grew curious. "Don't you?"

"No," he said excitedly. "Tell me."

But she hesitated. "I'm not sure I ought . . . ."

"Why not?"

"It's none of my affair—"

"But surely you must see . . . Listen: I'll tell you about it." He narrated succinctly the intrusion of the mysterious bandbox into his ken, that morning. "Now, a note was promised; it must have miscarried. Surely, there can be no harm in your telling me. Besides, I've a right to know."

"Possibly . . . but I'm not sure I've a right to tell. Why should I be a spoil-sport?"

"You mean," he said thoughtfully—"you think it's some sort of a practical joke?"

"What do you think?"

"Hmm-mm," said Staff. And then, "I don't like to be made fun of," he asserted, a trace sulkily.

"You are certainly a dangerously original man," said Miss Searle—"almost abnormal."

"The most unkindest slam of all, he murmured.

He made himself look deeply hurt. The girl laughed softly. He thought it rather remarkable that they should enjoy so sympathetic a sense of humour on such short acquaintance. . . .

"But you forgive me?"

"Oh, yes," he said generously; "only, of course, I couldn't help feeling it a bit—coming from you."

"From me?" Miss Searle sat up in her deck-chair and turned to him. "Mr. Staff! you're not flirting with me?"

"Heaven forfend!" he cried, so sincerely that both laughed.

"Because," said she, sinking back, "I must warn you that Mrs. Ilkington has been talking . . ."

"Oh," he groaned from his heart—"damn that woman!"

There was an instant of silence; then he stole a contrite look at her immobile

"I—Miss Searle," he stammered—"I profile and started to get up.

"Don't go," she said quietly; "that is, beg your pardon . . ."

unless you want to. My silence was simply sympathetic."

He sat back. "Thank you," he said with gratitude; and for some seconds considered the case of Mrs. Ilkington, not charitably but with murder in his bosom. "Do you mean," he resumed presently, "she has—ah—connected my name with—"

"Yes," nodded the girl.

"'Something lingering in boiling oil,'" he mused aloud, presently. . . . "What staggers me is how she found out; I was under the impression that only the persons most concerned knew about it."

"Then it's true? You are engaged to marry Miss Landis? Or is that an impertinent question?" Without pause I couldn't help asking. Please forget I spoke—"

"Oh, I don't mind," he said wearily; "now that Mrs. Ilkington has begun to distribute handbills. Only . . . I don't know that there's a regular, hard-and-fast engagement, just an understanding."

"Thank you," said Miss Searle. "I promise not to speak of it again." She hesitated an instant, then added: "To you or anybody else."

"You see," he went on after a little, "I've been working on a play for Miss Landis, under agreement with Jules Max, her manager. They want to use it to open Max's newest Boardway theatre late this autumn. That's why I came across—to find a place in London to bury myself in and work undisturbed. It means a good deal to me—to all of us—this play. . . . But what I'm getting at is this: Alison—Miss Landis—didn't leave the States this summer; Mrs. Ilkington (she told me at dinner) left New York before I did. So how in Heaven's name—?"

"I had known nothing of Mrs. Ilkington at all," said Miss Searle cautiously, "until we met in Paris last month."

He was conscious of the hint of uneasiness in her manner, but inclined to assign it to the wrong cause.

"I trust I haven't bored you, Miss Searle—talking about myself."

"Oh, no; indeed no. You see—" she laughed—"I quite understand; I keep a temperament of my own—if you should happen to wonder why Mrs. Ilkington interests herself in me. I'm supposed to have a voice and to be training for grand opera."

"Not really?"

And again she laughed. "I'm afraid there isn't any cure for me at this late date," she protested; "I've gone so far I must go farther. But I know what you mean. People who sing are difficult. However . . ." She stirred restlessly in her chair, then sat up.

"What is that light over there?" she asked. "Do you know?"

Staff's gaze sought the indicated direction. "Roches Point, I imagine; we're about due at Queenstown . . ."

"As late as that?" The girl moved as if to rise. Staff jumped up and offered her a hand. In a moment she was standing beside him. "I must go below," said she. "Good night."

"You won't tell me who it was in Lucille's, yesterday?" he harked back pleadingly.

She shook her head gaily as she turned forward to the main companionway entrance: "No; you must find out for

"But perhaps it isn't a practical joke?"

yourself."

"Then—perhaps—I shall tell you all—sometime."

He paused by the raised door-sill as she stepped within the superstructure. "Why not stop up and see the tender come off?" he suggested. "It might be interesting."

She flashed him a look of gay malice. "If we're to believe Mrs. Ilkington, you're apt to find it more interesting than I. Good night."

"Oh—good night!" he muttered, disturbed; and turned away to the rail.

His troubled vision ranged far to the slowly shifting shore lights. The big steamship had come very close inshore—as witness the retarded speed with which she crept toward her anchorage—but still the lights, for all their singular brightness, seemed distant, incalculable far away; the gulf of blackness that set them apart exaggerated all distances tenfold. The cluster of sparks flanked by green and red that marked the hovering tender appeared to float at an infinite remove, invisibly buoyed upon the bosom of a fathomless void of night.

Out of this wind-swept waste of impenetrable darkness was to come the answer to these many questions that perplexed him—perhaps. Something at least would come to influence him; or else Mrs. Ilkington's promise had been mere blague. . . . Then what?

Afterwards he assured himself that his stupidity had been unparalleled inconceivable. And indeed there seems to be some colour of excuse for this drastic stricture, self-inflicted though it were.

Below him, on the main deck, a squad of deckhands superintended by a petty officer was rigging out the companion-ladder.

Very suddenly—it seemed, because of the immense quiet that for all its teeming life enveloped the ship upon the cessation of the engine's song—the vessel hesitated and then no longer moved. From forward came the clank of chains as the anchor cables were paid out. Supple to wind and tide, the Autocratic swung in a wide arc, until the lights of the tender disappeared from Staff's field of vision.

SPORT GOSSIP FROM MANY FIELDS

LACROSSE IS DISPLACING BALL

Not in This Section of the Country But in British Columbia

Victoria, B. C., July 15.—Lacrosse has displaced baseball as the popular sport in the public schools of this city. The baseball league which found much favor in recent years has passed away and the gutted stick game now reigns supreme.

The switching from one sport to another, which has resulted in a general revival of the national summer game in this city, can be attributed to three factors; firstly: The Gyro Club agreed to equip all schools, with entrance classes, with sticks, balls and nets and to provide coaches. Secondly: The willingness of the pupils to toss aside their ball and glove and take up lacrosse. Thirdly: The enthusiasm of the teachers and many former lacrosse stars who turned out and gave the lads every kind of advice.

Fifteen years ago when lacrosse was thriving here the Capital boasted of a splendid school league and most of the players, who in 1919 won the Mann Cup, were taught the rudiments of the game in it. During the war, however, baseball gradually forced lacrosse from its lofty perch and eventually became the established sport for the youngsters. During the last five years not a lacrosse stick could be seen on any of the school grounds.

Lacrosse enthusiasts last year realised that there was a dearth of material for the defense of the Mann Cup due to the fact that only the veterans were available and no new blood was coming up for transfusion into the ranks. It was pointed out that unless something was done immediately there was danger of the Mann Cup, emblematic of the world's amateur lacrosse championship, passing into other hands. The Gyro Club then came forward with its sporting offer and laid out close on $1,000 to revive the game in the schools. As a result there are twelve school teams to-day engaged in a merry race for the possession of the handsome Gyro Cup and a set of medals.

Way back in the '90s Victoria was a name to be reckoned with in Western lacrosse circles. Then followed a long period of inactivity Vancouver and New Westminister doing most of the battling for the trophies. In 1919 came Victoria's greatest effort. One of the finest amateur teams that has ever played in the history of the game was gathered together and lifted the Mann Cup, a beautiful 14k gold trophy, which to-day has a valuation of close on $3,000.

Winnipeg staged a lacrosse tournament that year and invited Victoria to go east and defend the trophy against all-comers. As is well-known the Capitals had no difficulty in overwhelming every twelve that opposed them.

In 1920 trouble broke out in lacrosse circles and Victoria backed out of the league with the announcement that its team would be ready to defend the cup at any time. New Westminister challenged and sent a team to the Capital but it failed to lift the Cup after a very gruelling struggle. There was some talk of Orangeville coming out in the Spring of 1921 but the visit did not materialise.

This year Victoria and Vancouver patched up their differences, organised a new league and are now playing a series for the Mann Cup. Victoria has many of its veterans in the field but the need of new blood is quite apparent. It is believed that the champions will be strong enough to defend the cup this year. If they are the lacrosse executive is not afraid of future years as the school and senior leagues are developing many star players who are expected to prove valuable material for Mann Cup company in the years to come.

The lacrosse revival which started in the proper place, the public school, has spread all over the city, until now the gutted stick game is drawing far bigger crowds than baseball. Those who are interested in the revival are making sure that all rough tactics are tabooed and are providing only the fastest and cleanest games that the athletes are capable of. In the public schools the teachers are exerting their authority over the players and seeing that they use the sticks for the pure and sole purpose for which they were made.

MEET TO MAKE LAWS UNIFORM

Conference of Commissioners on the Uniformity of Canadian Legislation

Vancouver, B.C., July 14.—(By Canadian Press)—The programme has been completed for the fifth annual conference of commissioners on the uniformity of legislation in Canada, whose sessions will occupy four days prior to the convention of the Canadian Bar Association here on August 16.

During the first two days the commissioners will meet in Victoria and the final two days in Vancouver.

The commissioners comprise three representatives from each province except Quebec, whose representation is limited to one. The distinction in the case of Quebec is due to the difficulty of harmonizing the French-Canadian law, or Code Napoleon with those of the English-speaking provinces.

The president of the conference is Sir James Aikins, K.C., Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba and president of the Canadian Bar Association.

The conference met for the first time in Montreal on September 2, 1918, the next year in Winnipeg and the ensuing two years in Ottawa.

The organization, although little is heard of it, is important and deliberates and formulates uniform law for adoption by the various provinces.

Since its inauguration it has drafted a Warehousemen's Lien Act which has been ratified by the English-speaking provinces, and has also succeeded in persuading the legislatures of those provinces to place on the statute books a uniform law regarding legitimation by subsequent marriage, and has made uniform bulk sale, the sale of goods and partnership acts.

The conference fire insurance act is expected to be adopted by the British Columbia legislature at the next session.

At the August meeting reports will be received from the Ontario committee on a uniform life insurance act, from the Saskatchewan committee on the devolution of estates, from the British Columbia committee on the reciprocal enforcement of judgments and also conditional sales from the Alberta committee on wills and mechanic liens; from the Nova Scotia committee on sucession duties; from the Manitoba committee on companies; from the New Brunswick committee on workmen's compensation; and from the Prince Edward Island committee on fraudulent conveyances.

These matters are, in nearly all instances, dealt with by the different provinces in their own laws, and the object of the conference is to make these laws uniform, and so avoid confusion and contribute to convenience.

The British Columbia members last year submitted a report on the protection of property rights of married women, and this report is to be again considered at the August meeting.

The intention in drafting a uniform life insurance act is primarily to make uniform the conditions attached to life insurance policies.

WERE HELD UP ACROSS THE LINE

Toronto Man and His Wife Held up on Highway in Broad Daylight

Toronto, July 14.—The recent hold-up of Toronto citizens by a number of soldiers near Buffalo is evidently not an isolated case of interference with Canadians visiting the United States. Mr. J. C. Force, 435 Montrose ave., told a somewhat similar story to-day. On this occasion the would-be robbers made their attempt on one of the busiest highways in New York State in broad daylight.

Mr. Force, who was formerly in the electrical repair business in Windsor, has only been in Toronto a week. Last month, along with Mrs. Force, he went on a motor trip through the New England States and it was on this trip that the hold-up incident occurred.

"We were driving at about 10 miles an hour on the state highway just outside East Syracuse, N. Y.," said Mr. Force, "when a Ford car containing two men drew up beside us and then cut in in front of us so that we could go no further. One of the men, a young well dressed fellow, jumped from his automobile and shouted:

"Stop that car!"

"I stoped," continued Mr. Force, "and was asked if I had a tourist permit. I showed it to him."

Mr. Force then said that the man asked him what right he had to be in the United States, where he had crossed the border, and other similar questions. The near-robber then attempted to search the back of Mr. Force's auto—a roadster model.

Mr. Force promptly told him he would do any searching necessary, and asked him to show his official badge.

Had No Badge.

"Oh, I'll show you who I am, all right," said the fellow, but no badge was forthcoming.

Mr. Force then showed him that there was nothing hidden in the back of the car and as there was considerable traffic on the road the man apologized and drove off with his partner. He said that he was looking for car number 14609. Mr. Force's car number is 14606, but he knows the owner of 14609, who is a Windsor, Ont., man, who was not in the United States on June 19th, when the incident took place.

Mr. and Mrs. Force were too busy with the fellow to get the number of his car, and so could not trace him. The second man in the other motor looked like a garage man or taxi driver, according to Mr. Force, and just sat and looked on while his companion did all the talking.

"We reported the affair to State troopers who wanted to investigate the matter," stated Mr. Force, "but my wife was so upset that I decided not to pursue the thing further.

EUROPEAN FINANCES AFFECTS CANADA

Hudson's Bay Company Depends Upon Trade Initiated in England

Winnipeg, July 14.—Sir Robert Kindersley, governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, addressing the general court of the company's shareholders at London on Friday, June 30, said that no civilized country in the world could escape the effect of the unhealthy conditions existing in a large portion of Europe. Sir Robert is a representative of the British government on the committee re the German international loan.

There were undoubted signs of improvement, Sir Robert stated, but failure of the Allies and Germany to reach a binding final settlement regarding reparations and interstate debts is proving a serious obstacle to the resumption of normal international trade. He expressed the fear that when at last the Allies decided to deal courageously wih the situation, it might be to late, although he sincerely hoped not, adding it was evident that no time should be lost.

Good crop conditions this year will help Canada, he went on, but Canada could not escape the blight which the prevailing conditions in Europe cast over the entire world.

"The idea is largely prevalent in Canada," said Sir Robert, "that dividends arise entirely from the company's trade in Canad. This is not true, as a large proportion of the trading profits of the company for the past ten years have been derived from trade initiated and carried on in England."

FAREWELL TO SIDNEY PASTOR

Friends of Rev. T. Wallace Give Him Purse and Address

A large number of friends of the Sidney Circuit gathered at the Stone Church on Tuesday evening to say good-bye to their pastor and family before leaving for their new home at Newtonville. During the evening the merry crowd was called to order and Rev. Butler, of Foxboro, acted as chairman. Solos and recitations were given and Mr. Nobes of Wallbridge was called upon to read the following address:—

To Rev. T. Wallace and Family:
Dear Friends,—

Four years ago you came into our midst as strangers. Then we were looking forward into the future with its uncertainties, but tonight we look back over the past.

You have finished the term of your Methodist itinerancy on Sidney Circuit and we, your friends, have met tonight to bid you farewell and to wish you God-speed in your new field of labour.

It is with feelings of regret, on our part, that we are compelled to sever our relations as pastor and people.

In reviewing the work of the past four years we feel that much greater results could have been accomplished on our circuit if the membership of our churches had been united as one man and we had given you at all times our individual support, our hearty co-operation, backed up by earnest prayer.

As pastor you have been fearless in proclaiming the truth, regardless of public or private opinion, and your sympathy has been shown in all good works.

Entering into sports and amusements of the young people you have done much to remove the too common impression that religion means a long face and sanctimonious manner, and instead have given them to understand that religion means principle, a love for the true and good, playing the game four-square, acting the man.

We never miss the water till the well runs dry and we feel that we shall miss you when you are gone.

Words of appreciation that would cheer us on our way and make the burdens of life lighter are too often unspoken when they would do the most good and are left for an occasion of this kind; or worse, till the eye is dim and the ear heavy in death.

We both commend and recommend you to the people of your new pastorate, at Newtonville, and assure you of our best wishes for your future success and happiness.

We now ask you to accept this purse as a tangible token of our regard for you and yours and may the God of our fathers prosper you and make you a winner of many souls.

Signed on behalf of Sidney Circuit.

Speeches were made by different friends of the pastor and then lunch was served by the ladies.

WORRIED WOMEN NEED RICH BLOOD

If The Blood is Not Kept Pure Health Will Break Down

It is useless to tell a hard working woman to take life easily and not to worry. To do so is to ask the almost impossible. But, at the same time, it is the duty of every woman to save her strength to meet an unusual demands. It is a duty she owes herself and family, for her future health may depend upon it.

To guard against a complete breakdown in health the blood must be kept rich, red and pure. No other medicine does this so well as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. This medicine strengthens the nerves, restores the appetite and keeps every organ healthily toned up. Women cannot always rest when they should, but they can keep their strength by the occasional use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Among those who have found benefit from this medicine is Mrs. Cora Conrad, Broad Cove, N. S., who says: "My system was very much run down, and my blood poor and watery. I suffered a great deal from headaches and dizziness; my appetite was poor, and I tired easily. I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and have every reason to be glad that I did so. Soon I felt better, and under the continued use of the pills the headaches and dizziness were gone, and my blood seemed in a better condition than before. For this reason I recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SECOND COMING OF CHRIST

This Subject Eloquently Dealt With by Gifted Young Evangelist

The closing meeting of the four evenings engagement of Mary Agnes Vitchestain, the girl wonder evangelist in this city, was held last night at Bridge Street Methodist Church and the auditorium of that sacred edifice was filled by an audience that was held spell bound by the message delivered. Many present were from the country, some having driven miles to hear Miss Mary Agnes give her gospel message. It was without doubt one of her best efforts. That her manner of presenting the truth is most captivating there is not the slightest doubt. She has a manner of her own that whilst at times is unique it is nevertheless convincing and her delivery accompanied by appropriate gestures is powerful. Rev. C. G. Smith, B. D., of Montreal, Rev. F. E. Malott, pastor of Bridge Street Church, and Rev. Geo. Brown, assistant pastor, took part in the impressive service. Special selections were during the service rendered by a quartette composed of members of the Baptist Church.

The theme of Miss Mary Agnes was "The second coming of Christ". In opening the subject the talented young evangelist stated that although she was a Baptist she was delighted to be in a Methodist church. The churches to-day needed an awakening as they had apparently gotten into the vortex of the tide which was not altogether for good. Even though men like birds with winged machines mount the air and in submarines go beneath the billowed waves, this is no progress towards heaven. Away with our culture and refinement. Christ says ye must be born again. Various methods have apparently been adopted with an object of bettering the world but they have failed. Man has been trying to reform the world but reformation will not altogether suffice. No one will reform this world but the Lord Jesus Christ. God either makes things perfect or He destroys them. The church should go forward in the work of the Master and stick to it. It is the work of the church to tell to all that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, and without the shedding of which there could have been no remission. The world at present is apparently hell bent and hell bound. The speaker in referring to women said she was, however, pleased to state that whilst she had been in Canada she had never seen a flapper, whilst in the United States you could meet them anywhere. The devil is blighting the world to-day and he is not going about as a roaring lion.

Miss Vitchestain spoke strongly against the methods used to lure young people away and denounced the installing as is done by some churches of a gymnasium in the basement of the church. She desired the gospel preached in the church, not a gymnasium. Many churches are having everything but the gospel. This world is dying for a vision of Jesus. Oh for some one with a vision of Jesus. Some one caught the vision of Jesus in Capernium and preached the word to them. Some came there out of curiosity but the great majority came to get a renewed vision of Christ. The palsied man caught the vision and he was cured. The question is "How will Jesus come"? There is one thing absolutely certain, that He will come and we shall see Him come in all His glory. His coming will effect all, the Jew and the Gentile; the rich and poor alike. "What will He do when He comes"? He will call back those of His followers who are in the grave and those who are living. They will be caught up in the cloud to be with Him forever. After that the judgment and the judge of nations will sit upon the great white throne. There will be a separation, the sheep on the right and the goats on the left. Upon which side will we be? In concluding Miss Mary Agnes made an impassionate appeal for all to be prepared for that great event which will surely transpire.

WHAT CAUSES SO MUCH SICKNESS

Constipation Responsible for 90% of Disease

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Corrects It

It is generally recognized among the medical profession that Constipation or Insufficient Action of The Bowels, produces more disease than any other one cause. Constipation is responsible for at least 90% of the disease in the world today—because Constipation is responsible for the Indigestion and Dyspepsia—the Nervousness, Insomnia and Rheumatism—the Eczema and other skin troubles—the Headaches and Backaches.

Why is this?

As you know, it is the duty of the bowels to carry off the waste matter in the system. If the bowel muscles are weak or the liver inactive, then this waste matter remains in the body and poisons the blood. As a result, every organ in the body is poisoned by this waste.

"Fruit-a-tives" has been wonderfully successful in relieving Stomach Troubles, Nervous Troubles, Liver Troubles, Kidney Troubles, Skin Troubles and Blood Troubles, because "Fruit-a-tives" positively and emphatically relieves Constipation.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always relieve Constipation, even though the trouble has been chronic for ten, fifteen and twenty years. Thousands of grateful users proclaim "Fruit-a-tives" the greatest remedy for Constipation that the world has ever known.

MILLIONS NOW LIVING WILL NEVER DIE.

"And the Scriptures foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith (not ignorance) preached before the gospel unto Abraham sayin, In thee shall all nations be blessed (not tormented)"—Gal. 3:8.

When is the blessing of the nations due to begin? During "the times of restitution of all things"—Acts 3:19. What does "the times of restitution" mean? —the bringing of mankind (living and dead) back to the condition lost in Eden (Rev. 21:4). And when is that blessed time due to begin? —shortly—hence "millions now living will never die." Would you like to be one of them? Then take time to read The Harp Bible Study Course, only 60c. STRIKERS KILL SHERIFF AND TWELVE OTHERS AT MINES

Blood is Shed In Coal Fields Thirteen Killed

Sheriff and Twelve Others Killed and 25 Wounded at Coal Mine in West Virginia This Morning—State Police Rush to the Scene of Fighting

HARDING HOPES TO END STRIKE

Wheeling, W. Va., July 17.—Sheriff H. S. Wuvall of Brooke County, West Virginia, and several of his deputies were killed this morning in a fight at the Richmond coal mines, near Wellsburg, according to information received here. State police and all the Ohio county deputies are on their way to the scene, and Governor Morgan has ordered Sheriff Harry Glouse, of Ohio county to take charge of the situation.

Wheeling, W. Va. (Later)—Sheriff Duvall and twelve other persons were killed and no less than 25 wounded in the fight at the Standard mine of Rickland Coal Company, two miles from Wellsburg, West Virginia this morning, according to a telephone message from a correspondent of The Wheeling News at Wellsburg.

Washington, July 16.—President Harding will make a final effort to-morrow to settle the coal mine strike before resorting to the power of the Government to force resumption of full coal production.

When he receives the reply of the operators to his proposal the President will endeavor to shape a compromise between the positions of the miners and the operators, which he will ask both sides to accept.

That the President believes there is still room for a pacific settlement of the dispute became known tonight while the operators were in session discussing the reply they plan to make to Mr. Harding to-morrow.

It was learned Mr. Harding does not regard the miners' rejection yesterday of his arbitration plan as final and he has been given ample reason for this by Secretary of Labor Davis, who is in close touch with J. L. Lewis, President of the United Mine Workers.

Lending color to this interpretation of the attitude of the miners is the fact that the Policy Committee of the union has remained in Washington and is to meet again to-morrow morning. It is said Lewis has held the committee here at the instance of Administration officials who believe the reply of the operators will leave room for further negotiation for a basis of settlement.

Steubenville, Ohio., July 17.—Automobiles carrying newspapermen and ambulances proceeding from Wellsburg and Follansbee, W. Va., to Richmond mines were turned backed by bullets at 9.45 this morning according to word received here. Firing is still going on along the road to mines.

SORRY THAT HALDANE CANNOT HEAR APPEALS

London, July 17.—At a dinner given here by Hon. P. C. Larkin, the Canadian high commissioner, to the lawyers engaged in cases before the privy council, the guests adopted a memorial to Lord Haldane expressing regret that ill health will prevent him from attending the remaining Canadian appeals on the privy council list. The memorial states that the bench and bar of Canada recognize in Lord Haldane a worthy legatee of the great men who before his time have sat on the woolsack, and recognize that he has a special claim on their admiration and affection.

WALKS OUT OF BUILDING IN TIME TO MISS DEATH

Aurora, July 17.—M. Williams, a building mechanic, is today congratulating himself on a narrow escape from almost certain death yesterday. A few minutes after he had left the Continental Match Company's factory, now under construction here, a portion of the roof collapsed. Williams was the last man to leave the building, and the falling of the roof injured no one.

FRANCE LEADS IN REDUCTIONS

Leads the World in Proportionate Reduction of Military Expenditures

Paris, July 17.—France, "in spite of the heavy burdens which the care of ensuring her safety and of fulfilling her international obligations has imposed," is leading the world in proportionate reduction of military expenditures, according to an official memorandum respecting the military budgets of eleven leading countries, compiled by the French government and submitted to the Associated Press.

Italy, with an increase of 390 per cent., in her war budget over the year 1913-14, stands far ahead on the list, the memorandum points out, while France, with an increase of but 52 per cent. is at the bottom. Other countries, the compilation shows, range in the following order:

Japan, 290 per cent.; Spain, 275 per cent.; Norway, 195 per cent.; Great Britain, 181 per cent.; United States, 174 per cent.; Sweden, 155 per cent.; Holland, 138 per cent.; Denmark 125 per cent.; and Switzerland, 73 per cent.

Elaborating upon the French reduction, the memorandum adds that in 1913 the military branch absorbed fully one-third of the general budget, or 1,657,574,736 francs from a total of 5,066,000,000. In 1922, with the military ependitures increased by various international obligations such as the maintenance of troops on the Rhine and elsewhere, the defence arm required but one-fifth of the general appropriations, or 5,066,000,000 francs from a total of approximately 25,000,000,000 for the entire government.

The military expenditures of the five great powers, based on a gold franc standard, are set forth in the memorandum as follows:

United States, 6,100,000,00; Great Britain, 4,300,000,000; Japan, 1,900,000,000; France, 1,623,000,000; Italy, 97,000,000.

NEW TORPEDO PLANE IS TESTED

London, July 17.—Designed to carry a torpedo weighing 1,500 pounds, to fly two miles a minute, and to reach an altitude of 3,000 feet in six minutes, a new torpedo plane built for the Air Ministry has just undergone a searching test and satisfactory trial.

STRANGE ANIMILE IN MONTREAL

Was it the Product of That Variety of Stimulant in Which Quebec Has a Monopoly?

Montreal, July 17.—Speculation is rife concerning an extraordinary stone image which was placed in front of Mayor Martin's quarters at the city hall a few days ago, and heated controversies are continually occurring as to what species of animal it depicts. Some declare it represents merely a peculiarly formed dog but others vow it closely resembles a descendant of some pre-historic race—probably the dodo. Certain of the aldermen are of the opinion that it is a lion and that it was placed there for his worship's protection. Alderman Trepanier admits he is stumped—the creature, he states, defies zoological analogy. Its only resemblage to a lion he declares, are its whiskers, and there the resemblance ends. The rest of its anatomy is a cross between a mammal and a cheese hound, he said. A formal questionnaire is now being prepared to the probable status of the statue's ancestors, and this will be submitted to the city council by the perplexed alderman.

Two separate applications were received by the Minister Saturday noon. One came from the United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way employes and shop laborers; and the other from division number four railway employes department of the American Federation of Labor, which includes the motive power and car department mechanics, helpers and apprentices on the Canadian railways.

DEMANDS PREMIER DEAL WITH EMBARGO

Lord Lincolnshire Wants Minister Dismissed and Honor Redeemed

London, July 17.—Premier Lloyd George is being brought directly into the cattle embargo discussion.

Marquis Lincolnshire, who is one of the most aggressive anti-coalition leaders in the House of Lords, writing to The Times demands that the minister of agriculture be dismissed and that Lloyd George himself shall redeem Britain's honor by announcing his intention to introduce legislation for the removal of the embargo. He insists that this should be done during the autumn session and that the government should stand or fall by the decision of parliament.

It is safe to assume that the British premier will refuse to accept Lincolnshire's dictation and that he will devise his own way out of the difficulty.

Advocates for the removal of the embargo refuse to consider any compromise for the admission of Canadian stores under quarantine.

The Times says that "large lairages would have to be made at ports of arrival, or quarantine farms established. Additional expense would put stop to traffic as effectively as legal prohibition."

The ministry will review the whole subject in the interval before the Commons debate on July 24.

WHY NOT BEGIN AT ONCE WITH DRESSING QUARTERS?

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Sir,—

The Summer is passing and no visible sign of Public Baths at Victoria Park except that the newspapers keep steadily urging action.

The first and indispensable part of any system of Public Baths at Victoria Park, so thoughtfully provided for by the lae Senator Corby, are dressing rooms.

Why not start by building, say, fifteen dressing rooms for ladies on the west side of the Park and twenty-five for gentlemen on the east side of the Park? Then those who wish to enjoy the bathing at Victoria Park can do so, while those of the next generation or two, who are not so desirous, can discuss the various systems, as the bathing goes merrily on. Dozens of boys, who can find a place to dress, are enjoying the bathing daily. Why not let others who so desire, enjoy it also, when the money has been so generously provided?

MANY YACHTS ARRIVE HERE

Will Participate in a Two-Days' Regatta Off Big Bay

The steamer Wacouta made a trip to Massassaga on Sunday morning, carrying a party of officials of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club, and their guests. The party remained at Massassaga until about 1 p.m., when they proceeded on down the bay near Deseronto, from where they escorted the racing yachts into the city upon their arrival from Prynyer's Cove.

The yachts were blown in by a perfect southeast wind, and none of them had any difficulties in the Telegraph Narrows.

Nineteen of the yachts sailed into the city on Sunday afternoon, anchored up, and remained there until this morning. The remainder of them than Massassaga.

PERSONAL BRIBES TO ACQUIRE TITLES

London, July 17.—Hilaire Belloc and Gilbert K. Chesterton have for years been voices in the wilderness crying against sale of knighthoods, baronetcies and peerages to benefit party funds. In addressing a large meeting at Caxton, Hilaire Belloc said corruption had advanced enormously since fourteen years ago, when he raised the question of secret party funds in the Commons. He alleges that politicians now pocket personal bribes in consideration of honors granted besides getting money for party funds. A royal commission such as is proposed by the government would be useless says Belloc. The only remedy worth anything is complete publicity of party funds.

STILL WANTS TO BE PRESIDENT

Sun Yat Sen Refuses to Admit Defeat or That His Case is Hopeless

Canton (via, Steamer to Hong Kong) July 16.—Neutral leaders are continuing their efforts to effect a composition of the differences between Dr. Sun Yat Sen, president of the overthrown Canton Government of China, and General Chen Chung-Ming, who ousted him from control of Canton.

Dr. Sun maintains his original position that he be reinstated in his presidency, and that Chen apologise for his actions before he will consent to negotiate with him.

Chen remains at Waichow, 80 miles from here, leaving his subordinate, Yip Kue, who had actual charge of the camp whereby Sun was ousted from Canton in charge of that city. His position remains as at first—that he could not apologise for Sun's ousting because Yip Kue was responsible directly therefor, and that China ought to be united rather than have two governments with Sun at the head of one.

Considerable fighting has occurred at Shiukwan, 120 miles north of Canton, between forces of Chen Chung-Ming and Dr. Sun. Reports of the outcome are conflicting.

Sun still asserts that his northern troops, returning from their expedition in Kiangsi province, soon will reach Canton and align themselves in his behalf, but Yip Kue contends that these forces will have to fight every mile of the distance.

Two Japanese destroyers have arrived here.

STOP RUM RUNNING UNDER NEW TREATY

Anti-Saloon League Will Scrutinize Changes in Canadian-American Agreement

Washington, July 17.—Canada's proposal to the United States that the century old arms limitation pact which restricts naval armaments on the Great Lakes be re-vamped, is going to be closely scrutinized by the Anti-Saloon League to make sure that its proposed modernized terms will not prevent the maintenance of a rum navy on the lakes, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the league, announced to-day.

Unwilling to declare that he was suspicious of the proposal, Wheeler nevertheless said that the league would investigate the matter to see that the present American rum defense is not hampered in its operations against international bootleggers.

GLOBE TROTTER VISITS CITY

Talented Belgian Encircling The World on Foot

He is making a tour of the world and has already travelled over 16,000 miles by various modes of navigation. Mr. De Jone who is 28 years of age left his home on September 1st, 1920 and is scheduled to be there on the return trip by September 1st, this year. Mr. De Jone is an intelligent Belgium who saw considerable service during the late great war. He was wounded no less than seven times. His father, mother and a sister were cruelly shot to death by the Germans when they ascertained that the trio had sheltered some Tommies.

LAKE SHIPPING MAY BE TIED UP IN WEEK

Only Four Days' Supply of Fuel on Hand East of Duluth

Cleveland, Ohio, July 17.—Complete tie-up of lake shipping and Ohio industries within a week appears certain as a result of the railway and miners' strikes.

According to shipping officials only a four days supply of lake fuel remains east of Duluth, Minn. The shortage is attributed to the effect of the shopmen's strike on railroad operation between lake ports and the coal fields of Kentucky and West Virginia.

The steel mills at Youngstown felt the pinch of the shortage to-day and unless their coal stocks are replenished, a shut down will result, throwing thousands of men out of work.

BRITISH DELEGATION ON DEBT TO U.S.

Lloyd George Says Delegation will Arrive in U.S. in September

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

London, July 17.—The British delegation will arrive in the United States early in September in connection with the negotiation for funding British debt to the United States, it was announced by Prime Minister Lloyd George, in the House of Commons this afternoon.

DE VALERA IS ON REBEL STAFF

Provisional Government Constitutes General War Council With Collins as Head

SUPPRESS REBELLION

Revolutionaries Seize Shipping at Cork—Are Looting Businesses

Dublin, July 17.—The publicity department of the Irish irregular army to-day announced that Eamon de Valera is at field general headquarters, serving on the staff of the director of operations.

It is believed headquarters had been transferred from Mallow to Limerick.

The Provisional Government reaffirms its determination to suppress the revolt. In a manifesto addressed to Commander-in-Chief Collins and the men of the National army, it says:

"You have been entrusted with the supreme command of the National army, and, with General Mulcahy and General O'Duffy, have been constituted a general war council to direct the military operations now in progress. The Government's action is dictated by a determination that the splendid devotion of the army shall be inspired and directed to yield its full fruits for the salvation of the nation.

Rebels Mere Brigands

"The army which recently freed the country from foreign tyranny, must now again resist the attempt of an armed minority to force its dictatorship upon the people. The Irish army is fighting for the same principle as when it fought the British, namely, the right of the Irish people to be masters in their own country.

"The irregulars' method of warfare is destructive of the economic life to. Sheer bringandage is a fair term to apply to it.

"The fight is for a revival of the nation, for free expression and an effective execution of the people's will—in other words, for the establishment of all the signs by which the nation is to be held worthy of consideration among the States of the world."

"The manifesto is signed by all members of the Government.

General headquarters has issued a bulletin confirming the capture of Dundalk with 300 irregulars and a quantity of arms and equipment the Free Staters suffering no losses.

The irregulars are reported to have seized a quantity of shipping in Cork harbor, looting the vessels of large quantities of stores.

In view of the grave prospects for economic conditions in Ireland the Irish Labor party and Trades Union Congress have been engaged over the week-end in an effort to reach peace by negotiation.

"LITTLE DOG TRAY" LOSES MASTER

Tramp Dog Who Came From Overseas Roves Quebec Wharves Looking For His Soldier-Friend

Quebec, July 17.—"My name is Bill, and I am only a tramp dog. Bohemian in habits, but honest in actions. I lost a good and kind soldier master who brought me from overseas after the signing of the Armistice, and though many have sought to adopt me and have showed me every kindness in food and shelter, even going to the trouble of giving me a much needed bath. I much prefer to be the tramp dog Bill, roving the Quebec wharves and streets in search of my soldier master, whom I loved with an affection I cannot give to another."

The foregoing, no doubt, if he were capable of speech, would be found to voice the sentiments of a wire haired fox terrier to be seen roaming the Louise docks daily, watching the arrival and departure, of every ocean steamer, and known to every shipping man stevedore of the port, as well as railway and steamship officials.

Bill, as he is called, was brought to Quebec in 1919 by a returned soldier on the demobilization, and return of the Canadian troops to Canada.

Refuses Adoption

Bill was lost by his soldier master, and has been in search of him ever since. He is a splendid specimen of a pedigree dog, docile and friendly with everyone and known all over the waterfront as "Bill The Tramp Dog." Many kind hearted citizens have coaxed Bill to their homes, treated him well and when dirty from his roving habits, have bathed him. The animal has always manifested its gratitude by the wag of its tail, and the expression which would come into his eyes. But he cannot be induced to submit to adoption, remaining never more than a week with the same person, and then would wander down to the river front docks to arrival and departure of the ocean steamers, sniffing new arrivals as if he was in search of the master he lost in 1919.

Lively but Lonesome

He is as lively as the first day he came to Quebec from overseas, but it is plain to be seen that he is lonesome for the soldier, he lost in 1919, and if that soldier master only knew how his dog mascot pined to meet him and renew their associations, there is not the least doubt but that no matter where he may now be stationed he would come to Quebec to claim his dog Bill, and thus bring to a happy conclusion one of the touching cases of dog affection connected with the great war.

PLAINTIFF IN CASE IS AN UNBORN CHILD

Toronto, July 15.—In an unusual action entered at Osgoode Hall, the unborn child of Percy J. Smith and Mrs. Minnie Smith is a plaintiff, with its parents, in an action against E. T. Fox for unstated damages for injuries received in an automobile collision on May 27, 1922.

WANTS TO OPEN DANCE HALL ON SUNDAY

Montreal, July 15.—Justice Martineau yesterday refused to grant an injunction against the operation of a by-law forbidding the opening of dance halls on Sundays, and told the petitioner that if the city had overstepped its powers he had recourse to courts for financial loss.

DEATH CAUSED BY A SPLINTER

Dr. Knapp, Reactionary, Proved to be Charming Old Gentleman

STOCKHOLM, July 15.—A splinter of wood in one eye caused the death of Dr. Wolfgang Kapp, the American born junker who tried to overthrow the German republican government about two years ago, and who died recently in Germany. Dr. Kapp, who was residing in Sweden at the time of his injury, neglected it, and when at last he consulted a specialist, examination of the affected optic showed that a malignant cancer had developed.

The injured eye was removed but the cancer persisted, and when Dr. Kapp returned to Germany he was instantly arrested only to be taken to the hospital where he died.

When Dr. Kapp's intended coup d'etat failed, he secured a false passport, fled to Sweden by airplane, and won the government's permission to remain in the country on the ground that he was a political refugee. He was soon joined by his wife and daughter, and the Kapp family settled on a beautiful coutry estate at Hallekis. Here they spent nearly two years, undisturbed by the post-war crisis in world politics.

The Kapps lived simply and unostentatiously in Hallekis. Mrs. Kapp did her own house work while Dr. Kapp attended to the outdoor duties of the household. Like his former imperial master, Dr. Kapp in his exile took up wood-sawing and splitting and it was while he was engaged in splitting wood for the kitchen range that he met with the injury that led to his death.

During his residence at Hallekis Dr Kapp proved to be anything but the fire-eating Prussian junker he has been pictured. At one crucial point during the great war he challenged Chancellor Bethmann-Hollweg to a duel, and after peace was restored he planned to crush the unstable German Socialist regime with typical Prussian ruthlessness. He actually captured Berlin, drove the Ebert government to Dresden, and ruled over the German capital for five days. Kapp was accused of being reactionary, working for the ultimate restoration of the monarchy, but he always strongly denied this.

The Swedes of the Hallekis community who had supposed Dr. Kapp to be a roaring Prussian of the most obnoxious military type, found him a courteous and charming old gentleman. He was kindly, democratic and very social, frequently visiting the neighboring farms and chatting with the farmers and their workmen among whom he became very popular. His tendency to mingle on terms of equality with all classes probably resulted from his early American training. Dr. Kapp having spent his early youth in New York City where he was born in 1852. The people who best knew Dr. Kapp in Sweden describe him as a model neighbor and a genial gentleman.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

Back to Nature.

I have been enduring much distress of mind recently, and I am impelled to confide in you. That's what one's friends are for. What earthly good would they be if you could not unburden yourself to them and thus find relief? Of course, they'll go and tell everybody but you've got it off your chest anyhow, and that's something. If I hate a person, which is very wicked, I know, it is the greatest comfort in the world to walk up to him and bawl him out, and ask him what he is going to do about it. I never licked a man yet but ever afterwards I had a sneaking affection for him. Queer, isn't it? I whaled a feller last Sunday, and this morning I lent him my horse and democrat to bring home a cabinet organ he had bought at a sale in Bullock's Corners for $4.80, and I gave him a good cigar and ast him about his missus and the kids an' all that. We will be friends til death doth us part, and afterwards possibly, if he keeps out of his neighbors' hen houses henceforward.

And if you love someone what a joy it is to tell her so! Why hide it, why conceal it? It's harder on us fellers than it is on the girls.

"She never told her love,
But let concealment like a worm in the bud
Prey on her damask cheek."

What utter folly! How wasteful of the richest and sweetest thing in the universe!

And now I'll tell you about my troubles. A gent come out here the other day, and he strolled about the Wigwam and the sugar bush.

"Oh!" he said, "what a happiness it is to be near to nature and to nature's God!"

Now this is very trite. It hath been said before, many's a time. It hath a facility for going in at one ear and out at the other, but if you keep it in your mind for a moment you will realize that it is a formidable—a tremendous thing.

The barbarian is near to nature. Ergo, he is near to nature's God. Nearer than we are. We pray and sing, "Nearer, My God to Thee," and yet with every unholy invention, with every stride in our so-called civilization, we get farther away from Him. Can this be so? Is it not about time that men halted for a moment and asked themselves if they were farther away from God than their forbears were?

If we got back to nature the Uplifters would be in a bad way. Gumbo was placed under local option—the whole township—in order to prevent Billy the Bum from getting any booze. In a population of several thousands Billy was the only bum in the business. Religion didn't fizz on him and there was no use talking to him. Putting him in jail did no good. Except indeed that it got him a wash. It cost the people of Gumbo about two hundred dollars a year to wash Billy six or seven times. Local option would never have carried only for Billy The Bum. He was the stock in trade of a host of harangue-outangs called in from the four corners of the earth. Vote for local option and save Billy the Bum! Rescue the perishing. Well, we got local option but we didnt' save Billy. He could always get the accursed stuff somehow or somewhere. He got to drinking out of a bottle, a highly dangerous practice. You don't know how much you're taking. That's what happened Billy the Bum. He got hold of a bottle of wood alcohol and I was one of the pall bearers. Rich or poor, good or bad, they don't think that it's done up to the handle unless I'm a member of the pall bearers' committee. But who killed Billy the Bum? I'm asking you. Who killed Billy the Bum?

If we hadn't been so gol-darned religious and civilized we would have eliminated Billy. We wouldn't have let him run loose, in short, we should never have let him out. I'm not saying that we would have been bad to him, not at all. We would have given him a job and paid him for it, and half his wages would go to his missus. We would have fed him clean food and furnished him with a proper bed and the Bullock's Corners Fog horn, the Christian Guardian, and all the tobacco he wanted, but—no likker! And Billy would have been alive and kicking—he would be sure to be kicking—today."

Close to nature, the tribe, the herd the band, the pack, as the case may be, knows what to do with undesirables, and those who do not know how to behave.

I know what the Blackfeet and the Dogribs did to them, I know what the wild horses and the wolves did to them. You had to smell right. If a horse or a wolf didnt' smell right his wild brethren proceeded to—well, I won't tell you what they did to him exactly, but he had to get out or smell right—that's all there was to it.

And here's another dreadful thought: If we were close to nature we could have plural wives. I have dwelt among folk who were close to nature and they all did it, and didn't seem to think anything of it either. Old Bull Head, Chief of the Sarcees, when I was there, had seven wives, and he wasn't a bit ashamed of it, the old villain. He was the despair of the missionaries. He didn't get rid of his extra wives because he hasn't. It was a faint rumor, but I heard he was going to fire six of them, and I beat it over the Selkirks to the Piegan Camp. I wouldn't have stayed around there while that was going on for all the—well, not for a good deal.

Our civilization is leading us farther and farther away from nature. Are we leaving Nature's God behind?

The Khan.

ALL MUST WORK IN BULGARIA

Amusing Situations when "Professional Men" are Forced to Serve

Sofia, Bulgaria, July 15.—When Premier Stamboulisky conceived the idea that it would be a good thing to compel every able-bodied man and woman in Bulgaria to work 10 days a year for the state, he probably expected the trouble which has ensued, for he is described as a far-sighted statesman with an active imagination. In any event he has entered the lists to defend the weak spots in his innovation, and his principal opponents are the young women of the land.

In the first place, the young moslem women of Bulgaria have refused point blank to do a thing. The cite the position given them in their homes by their religion, and refer the authorities to various groups of fathers and brothers armed with knives, pistols and rifles, who are violently opposed to their female relatives donating their labor to the state. The Premier has proposed they be deprived of their vote, and has threatened arrest. The women still resist passively. Now Stamboulisky says they will work for the government, or he will know the reason why.

September will be interesting, for then the 1922 class of women will be called to labor without pay in public buildings, gardens, etcetera. And the women other than those of the moslem faith say they will work when the moslem women do, in the meantime offering encouragement and support to their belligerent sisters.

There also have been called to the public gardens, as it were, professional men from the cities, men unused to hard labor whose soft hands daily attach white collars to silk shirts. In the beginning they went through the motions of work, but did virtually nothing. Why labor when one could soldier? Then the gang bosses gave piece work; each man could quit when his stint was done. As a result two hours often sufficed for what previously had not been completed in ten. But little by little the bosses increased the allotments, and now the inevitable reaction has set in. The bourgeoisie are daily complaining of sore backs, blistered hands, bad eyesight, sun-stroke, hunger, thirst, and other handicaps.

"These rotten bourgoiesie don't love their country, are lazy, and incapable," declared Stamboulisky, exasperated at not being able to force work out of the men mobilized.

The law has given rise to many amusing situations. It is pointed out that Stamboulisky himself has not done any work. As a cabinet minister he is exempt. Likewise all peasant field laborers, farmers and city workmen are exempt, and as the population of Bulgaria is largely agricultural the law applies mostly to professional men, such as lawyers, dentists, doctors and shopkeepers.

The newspaper men turned out as a body and did their work cheerfully; found that it did them good physically, and then went home to write amusing articles based on their experiences.

WILL THIS BE BATTLE LINE IN IRELAND?

The report from London that military operations on a big scale are impending in Ireland, seems justified in the announcement that Michael Collins, Richard Mulcahy and Owen O'Duffy have been appointed as supreme council of war. The republican forces are said to have taken up their line from Limerick to Waterford, where they are said to be entrenching themselves in preparation for an expected assault.

(1) It is not only among the Allies that the German ex-Emperor seems to have lost somewhat of his popularity. This dome-shaped pavilion behind the high board fence covers a famous and fine fountain which was erected in Constantinople as a permanent memorial of the ex-Kaiser's visit there in 1897. It is boarded up now, probably because the Turks hate to be reminded of the way in which Wilhelm led them astray during the Great War.

(3) Canada's newest ocean liner, the Canadian Pacific Steamer "Empress of Canada," received a warm welcome on her first appearance at Vancouver the other day, where she marked a new era in the development of Canada's trans-Pacific trade. She is of 21,517 tons gross register and 627 feet long. She is propelled by two sets of turbines and has attained a maximum speed of 22 knots. She sails from Vancouver via Honolulu to Yokohama, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Manila and Hong Kong.

(4) The future Queen of Holland, Princess Juliana, in the quaint costume of the Flemish people over whom she will likely be one day called to rule. The Princess is now thirteen years of age.

(5) Mr. Alfred Price who, after forty years service with the C.P.R., has relinquished his duties as general manager of eastern lines on the advice of his physicians. Mr. Price began his business life as a telegraph messenger at Toronto and has come to be one of the most widely known and most popular railway men in Canada.

(6) John J. Scully who succeeds Alfred Price as general manager C.P.R. eastern lines. He joined the C.P.R. as office boy in 1881 and his advance to his present position has been marked by his having held a number of important posts in the company's service in both eastern and western Canada.

(7) With H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught time passes in a kindly way. This photograph was snapped in London less than a month ago and shows that extremely popular member of the Royal Family to have changed not at all since the time when he first arrived in Canada to assume office as Governor-General and incidentally to win the warm friendship of all Canadians.

(8) Here is the world's largest steer. He was born in Texas, weighs 4,200 lbs. and stands 19 hands high. Standing beside him is the world's champion boxing midget. He is eight years old and only 29 inches in height, and hails from Pennsylvania. [illegible]

PROFESSIONAL IRISHMEN

Jim Larkin, the notorious Irish Labor leader and chronic rebel, has appeared in Montreal where he addressed a meeting under the auspices of the Irish Republican League of Canada. It is reported that during the meeting a woman tore the Union Jack from the platform and threw it under the piano, and that Larkin endorsed this indignity to the British National emblem, and said that "wherever the Union Jack flies there is no liberty."

If there is no liberty under the British flag, how is it that such a blatant rebel and trouble-maker as Larkin is at large in Montreal? How was it possible to hold a meeting under the auspices of such a seditious organization as the Irish Republican League of Canada, and why should such a league be allowed to exist in Canada? The very fact that such a fanatic was permitted to open his mouth under such circumstances goes to prove that there is not only liberty under the Union Jack, but that there is too much licence. If Republicanism is synonymous with liberty why was Larkin denied his freedom under the Stars and Stripes? If we remember rightly, he was jailed by the American Republic for merely using his tongue too freely in the United States. What would have happened if he had committed the unforgivable sacrilege of throwing the Stars and Stripes under the piano would be too terrible to contemplate!

The truth is there is too much liberty under the Union Jack, and this is responsible to a large extent for the breeding and perpetuation of such rebels as Larkin and de Valera. They use the advantage of British freedom to carry on their propaganda against the very constitution that allows them to operate. Their object is not the establishment of a better form of government, but the establishment of themselves in positions of power, which, when attained, they have used in the most autocratic manner.

De Valera, Larkin, and all of that ilk are nothing more nor less than professional Irishmen, who go about with an eternal "chip" in their shoulders, and who have no other means of livelihood. Rebellion and sedition are bread and meat to them, and one wonders what would become of them if the British Empire were to go to pieces. Their aim is not to bring peace and better government to Ireland, or any other land, but to keep that country in a state of unrest and turmoil. If Ireland were to be established as a Republic their profession and vocation would be gone, or they would probably start another "agin the government" propaganda.

It was said of a certain class of people in Ireland many years ago that they were "in favor of Home Rule so long as they knew they were not going to get it." This quaint Irishism is just as true to-day when applied to the Republican agitators. These very men a few years ago were asking only for Home Rule, and as soon as that came within the range of possibility they shifted their ground and made demands for something they knew was impossible and that they could never get. It is futile for the British Government to try to satisfy such chronic malcontents and professional humbugs.

A SUMMER SCHOOL OF LITERATURE

Canadian teachers and educationists will be interested to know that members of their profession in England are instituting what are called "Education Weeks". It is said that these have been very popular and that the general public have taken a surprising interest in educational matters. These weeks are not organized merely by teachers, and are not exploited for purely professional interests. Teachers have a great deal to do with them, but the meetings are usually organized by the local educational authorities.

As a result of these conferences teachers are taking an increasing interest in the craft side of education are delivered by experts saide of education are delivered by experts and questions regarding salaries and professional economics are debarred. At Brighton, England, a summer school in psychology has been arranged for this summer.

Belleville knows something about summer schools, but these have been purely religious in character. Why does not someone start a summer school in literature or in science? The Muskoka Assembly is an attempt to combine a holiday with an educational course, and it has to some extent succeeded, although it has only been in operation for two seasons. The idea might well be taken up in a number of centres throughout Ontario. Belleville should be a convenient place for such an institution.

We have a beautifully situated city, and with a little improvement of the water-front it could be made very attractive. Holiday seekers could go a long way and not find a more restful place to spend a vacation. We must, however, let people know that we are "on the map", and the institution of a literary summer school would give us some distinction. Belleville would become the Mecca of all the literary aspirants in Canada—is this a dream?

PASSING COMMENT

This is great weather for corn, you can fairly see it grow.

Some folks' teeth are just aching to get into a boiled corn cob spread with butter and sprinkled with salt.

Every cent wisely spent on the beautifying of the water-front of Belleville City will bring a thousand-fold in return.

Greenleaf is an excellent name for a Parks Commissioner, and our Alderman of that name is in his right place—he is on his job.

"Acts of kindness are appreciated," says a heading in a certain daily. No one has yet been kind enough to provide that swimming pool for the "Kiddies" of Belleville—an act which they would greatly appreciate.

PRESS OPINIONS

THAT CHEESE.

(The Globe)

A London cable says that the Dover health committee blames Canadian cheese for an epidemic of peculiar sickness in the Tower Hamlets district as ninety per cent. of the victims had partaken of this. But the Canadian cheese they didn't eat could not have sickened the other ten per cent. The theory falls down at that point.

HUGE SUMS FOR ROADS.

(New York Times)

Federal aid for road construction will be continued as a result of the authorization of additional appropriations for this work amounting to $190,000,000 carried by the Post Office Appropriation bill, signed by President Harding on June 19. Of this sum $50,000,000 is authorized for the fiscal year beginning July 1 and $65,000,000 and $75,000,000 respectively for each of the two succeeding years. In addition $6,500,000 is authorized for forest roads for each of the fiscal years 1923 and 1924.

THE POINT OF VIEW.

(Ottawa Journal)

A man is walking along a dusty road, perhaps thinking of the rotten deal fate has given him, or wondering how on earth he is going to pay for the lawn-mower or the baby carriage, when there is an unearthly shriek immediately behind him, and he jumps just in time to escape an automobile driven beyond the speed limit by a grinning imbecile. He stands on the side of the road, spluttering with impotent rage, and rapidly running through his entire stock of profanity. A few weeks later fate with her usual perverseness, disposes of a forgotten uncle, and the man not only pays for the lawn-mower or the baby carriage, but fulfils his secret ambition by purchasing a magnificent car. In time he also is found on the same dusty road and with a wicked grin puts on speed and presses his diabolical siren just in time to scare the wits out of an innocent pedestrian. It is all, you see, merely a matter of the point of view.

I Want to Dig!

I want to dig dirt, black dirt, all full of squirming earth worms. I want to watch them wiggle. It makes me shiver—but I like to shiver. I want to plant a bean or two, stick in some onions, and look at the green grass. I want to spade around the pie-plant and dig about the gooseberry bushes. I want to drive a nail in the rickety old grape-arbor and tie up the vine with a calico rag. I want to putter around in the back yard. I want to dig!—Homesick, in Chicago Tribune.

Thomas Hardy's New Poems

By Wilfred Whitten

Thomas Hardy was a poet before he was a novelist ("Jude the Obscure" was published nearly thirty years ago) he remains a great and prolific poet, with a place in English poetry as much his own as was his place in English fiction. Hardy never conformed. On the other hand, he has never been insensitive to criticism. He abandoned fiction when "Jude the Obscure" was misunderstood and cheaply ridiculed.

The Past in Nature.

His new volume, "Late Lyrics and Earlier" contains more than one hundred and fifty new poems most of them absolutely new; others are older, having been held back from earlier sufficiently full volumes or overlooked in gathering previous collections. One or two go back more than fifty years. The first poem, "Weathers," strikes a blithe note:—

This is the weather the cuckoo likes,
And so do I;
When showers betumble the chestnut spikes,
And nestlings fly;
And the little brown nightingale bills his best,
And they sit outside at "The Travellers' Rest,"
And the maids come forth sprig-muslin drest,
And citizens dream of the south and west,
And so do I.

The next stanza concerns "the weather the shepherd shuns, and so do I"—but there is no note of sadness. But in other nature poems there is the old feeling for evanescence. Thus in "The Selfsame Song" he hears a bird singing just as in long years ago. And he adds:—

But its not the selfsame bird—
No: perished to dust is he...
As also are those who heard
That song with me.

It is exactly the same spirit that he looks at the summer landscapes at the Royal Academy, and throws out a thought which is peculiarly his own feeling and, one might add, in originality. These summer glories which seem "brought from the immediate season's need" are, after all, the glories of a summer dead. They create the illusion of the season in which they are seen.

But these, young foils so fresh upon each tree,
Soft verdures spread in sprouting novelty,
Are not this summer's, though they feign to be.
Last year their May to Michaelmas term was run,
Last autumn browned and buried every one,
And no more know they sight of any sun.

Ships That Pass.

In Hardy's poems of life and circumstance we have the same inveterate tendency to look back, to regret lost opportunity or to marvel at the outcome or the no-outcome of first meetings, and the emotion of remembering ships that passed in the night. It is thus in "The West-of-Wessex" girl who was "blithe as blithe could be," and had been his for the asking:—

But never I squired my Wessex girl
In jaunts to Hoe or street
When hearts were high in beat,
Nor saw her in the marbled ways
Where market-people meet,
That in her bounding early days
Were friendly with her feet.

And again in the little story-poem, "Faint Heart in a Railway Train," which is so short that I venture to quote it all:—

At nine in the morning there passed a church,
At ten there passed me by the sea,
At twelve a town of smoke and smirch,
At two a forest of oak and birch,
And then, on a platform, she:

A radiant stranger who saw not me,
I queried, "Get out to her do I dare?"
But I kept my seat in search for plea,
And the wheels moved on. O, could it be
That I had alighted there!

"Penance" is another such cry of regret and of all the poems in this vein the last stanza of "The Opportunity" is the summary:—

This is a bitter thing
For thee O man: what ails it?
The tide of change may bring
Its offer; but naught avails it.

Such laments have nothing to do with "pessimism," for they are of the texture of life and have their counterpart in the experience of every man and woman of us.

A Child of November.

But the past and the passage of long years are not always made a theme of sadness. In "One Who Lived and Died Where He Was Born" we have another note. The infant was carried downstairs for the first time; eighty years later he went up the stairs for the last time. The picture is one to quieten the spirit in an age like ours:—

On those nights in November—
Apast eighty years—
The babe and the bent one
Who traversed those stairs
From the early first time
To the last feeble climb—
That fresh and that spent one
Were even the same;
Yea, who passed in November
As infant and bent one,
Those stairs.

SHE RESENTS INSULT IN EMPHATIC WAY

Ottawa, July 14.—Mrs. Conchet Giraloml, 87 Murray street, appeared in the police court on the charge of having wounded Benjamin Gallo, 64 Murray street, last night. In defence it is alleged that while Gallo was visiting the house of Mrs. Giraloml yesterday evening he insulted her. She attacked him with a chair and opened a cut in his left cheek. Mrs. Giraloml could not stand trial this morning owing to a recent illness and the case was remanded until July 18.

HERE AND THERE

THE GOLDEN LION.

Before the numbering of shops and houses in London, Twinings' was distinguished by its sign, the "Golden Lion." The business flourished exceedingly, and from Thomas Twining descended to his son Daniel and his grandson Richard. In his walks up and down Fleet Street, Dr. Johnson—mightiest of tea-drinkers—must have been familiar with Twinings'. To the Rev. Thomas Twining, a native of the founder, we owe one of the short character sketches of Johnson. The firm has supplied the Kings and Queens of England continuously from Queen Anne to George V. Mr. Newton concludes by quoting Theodore Kook's epigram:

"It seems in some cases kind Nature hath planned
That names with their callings agree;
For Twining the Tea-man, who lives in the Strand,
Would be Wining deprived of his T."
To which he neatly adds, "And so would all of us."

G. K. C. A MASTER OF EPIGRAM.

Of living writers, Mr. Gilbert Chesterton is the most successful master of the aphorism. One could fill columns with examples from his pen. Here are a few:—

It is obvious that tradition is only democracy extended through time.

Reason is itself a matter of faith. It is an act of faith to assert that our thoughts have any relation to reality at all.

It never does a man any great harm to hate a thing that he knows nothing about. It is the hating of a thing when we do know something about it which corrodes the character.

Christ descended into hell; Satan fell into it. One of them wanted to go up and went down; the other wanted to go down and went up.

Private lives are more important than public reputations.

Most men have made one good joke in their lives; but to make jokes as Dickens made them is to be a great man.

Pessimism is at best an emotional half-holiday; joy is the uproarious labour by which all things live.

What happens when everyone is asleep is called evolution. What happens when everyone is awake is called revolution.

Thrift is the really romantic thing; economy is more romantic than extravagance.

GATHER YOU.

Gather you, gather you, angels of God,
Freedom, and mercy, and truth;
Come, for the earth has grown coward and old,
Come down, and renew us her youth.
Wisdom, Self-sacrifice, Daring, and Love,
Haste to the battlefield, stoop from above,
To the day of the Lord at hand.

Gather you, gather you, hounds of hell,
Famine, and Plague, and War;
Idleness, Bigotry, Cant, and Misrule:
Gather and fall in the snare!
Hireling and Mammonite, Bigot and Knave,
Crawl to the battlefield, sneak to your grave,
In the day of the Lord at hand.

—Charles Kingsley.

Woman's Sphere

THE POWER OF DREAMS

By Alfred Noyes

Say that we dream! Our dreams have woven
 Truths that outface the burning sun;
The lightnings, that we dreamed, have cloven
 Time, space; and linked all lands in one!

Dreams! But their swift celestial fingers
 Have knit the world with threads of steel,
Till no remotest island lingers
 Outside the world's great Commonweal!

Dreams are they? But ye cannot stay them,
 Or thrust the dawn back for one hour.
Truth, Love and Justice, if ye slay them,
 Return with more than earthly power!

THE COMPLETE LADY.

(Katherine Tynan, in the Daily Chronicle, London.)

Returning to London after more than a year's absence, I am aware of an unfinishedness in myself and my companion, who has the charm of youth and beauty. eW are country-cousinish. The ladies we meet in our friends' drawing rooms flutter in with an air of perfection which makes us dowdy.

Not only the complete ladies. The other day in the heat-wave I was talking to an honest comely woman in a London garden. She had that underlying tint of brown which goes with brown eyes and brown hair, and she was clad in browns and golds. But somehow she looked weatherbeaten, as though she worked in the fields. She was not in contrast, as we had been with smart London ladies. She was in contrast with the innumerable women who passed us by all day long in this incredibly crowded London.

Suddenly it flashed upon me. The short-lived sincerity of the war is over. The women have returned to "make-up." The finished article has not a gracious line in the face, an honorable wrinkle. She is not as God made her, but as the beauty shops make her.

Not by any possibility could she wash her face in May-dew. The sun has not kissed her. That wonderful thing the human skin, apple-bloom in the young and lusty, is buried deep beneath layers of powder, if it be not enamel.

The finished article smells of powder as she goes. Her face has the strange expressionless look which might be dope. It has an unnatural placidity, as though of a well-pleased cat. The London world becomes a world of wax dolls as to the feminine portion of it.

Get to, you London girls, and wash your faces! Many of you are young enough to save still something of the rose and white God made you, and the exquisite texture. Let the million little mouths of God's handiwork breathe once more. You shall have your reward in skin that will be rosy and white when you are old, on which will be written the tale of your good deeds, of your smiles and your graciousness, for after 30 your face is your own to make beautiful for your autumn and your winter.

TIME TO BE COURTEOUS

The other day a woman discovered a fact which she thought might be of interest to a business man. Without giving the matter much thought, she sent a little message about the matter.

In the next day's mail she received a letter which was unusual. It was a note of thanks from the business man for the trifling favor done him.

But it was not so much the fact that the man had thanked her that impressed this woman as the way in which he had done it. This very busy man had seemed to have plenty of time to be kind. The note was not the usual curt affair which in the minds of some betokens the busy person. It was courteous even to the point of leisureliness.

The letter was suggestive of the experience of a business woman who, when out of a position, half in a spirit of fun and half in earnest, made a tour of the avenue, stopping at every big establishment applying for a position.

"I wanted a position," she said, "but I wanted, too, to see how I would be treated. And the result was interesting. The more important the person I interview, the more courteous was my treatment. If, by chance I was directed to the president of a big company, he took time to ask me carefully about my training and my aims. In the main the less the company the more scant was the kindness they offered.

Both experiences are rather startling proofs of the old motto which used to adorn class banners: "Noblesse Oblige"— "Rank imposes obligation."

The man or woman who is too busy to be bothered is often the person who is busy with little things. It is the great people who are really kind, the busy people who have time to be courteous, the important people who have the inclination to lend an ear to those less important.—Florence Davies, in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

FASHION FANCIES

SUMMER ATTIRE IN NEW YORK

The poet who sang of the charms of his lady, "when as in silks my Julia goes," would find abundant inspiration in the streets of New York this summer. Everybody goes in silks often light of hue and amazingly varied in design. The city as well as the country is radiant as never before with flowered chiffons and silks, with hardly a hint of soberness. Fashion, with a flair for the much talked of international spirit, has borrowed colours and motives from all countries, and we see wending their way in and out of town this summer, dresses graceful in length, subtle in line, and glowing with colour.

In direct but none the less powerful influences on the summer mode for town are the war and the rise to fame and fashion of our own Long Island. In the strenuous brave days of four and five years ago, when noblesse oblige came to have a new significance, fashionable women left their country places and came to town regularly during the unfashionable months of July and August. With this change of habit came a change of thought. They realized that the accepted dark dress or suit which had always been considered the only correct thing for town, and which was worn with an expression of well-bred martyrdom, was desperately uncomfortable—and looked it. This was the unpardonable sin.

Long Island, at our very doors, in spite of the protest of many old families who strove to keep it simple and unpretentious, has become as fashionable as Newport. Frequent trips to New York are now definitely a part of the life of the summer, for in these restless times "within motoring distance" means an almost unlimited number of miles. And no longer will the woman of fashion who has recently learned wisdom accept the heavy formality of serge and taffeta for summer wear.—Vogue.

VEAL DISHES

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University

Veal is a delicious meat, but many feel it is difficult of digestion. But if thoroughly cooked there is no danger.

Cut in pieces for serving, roll each piece in well seasoned flour and cook in fat until brown, having about three tablespoons of fat in a frying pan.

If the fat is all cut from the meat, and tried out, it is as good as butter. Of course any other fat, as bacon, lard, dripping or butter, may be used.

After the pieces of meat are a good brown remove and, using the fat remaining in pan, add an equal amount of flour, and one or two cups of water salt and pepper. When thickened add the pieces of veal, cover closely, and cook one hour, over a slow fire.

Another good way to bake the cutlet.

BAKED VEAL CUTLET WITH NEW ONIONS

1 veal cutlet cut one inch thick
2 bunches young onions (scallions)
2 fresh tomatoes or 1 cup canned tomatoes
1 teaspoon paprika
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup water
2 tablespoons flour.
1 teaspoon sugar
1-8 teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons fat.

Roll the cutlet in the flour ond fry in the fat until brown. Place the meat in a casserole or baking dish. Cover with the onions cut in thin slices, using two inches of the green stalks, the tomatoes, seasonings and water. Cover and cook slowly in a moderate oven two hours.

If fresh tomatoes are used, peel, and cut in small pieces. This will serve five.

SHORT-HAIRED WOMEN

Russia has become a nation of short-haired women. This to the new-comer is supposed to be a symptom of Communist leanings, in a country where the men formerly advertised their faith in the Soviet brand of politics by wearing long hair, heavy beards, leather coats, and top boots. As a matter of fact, the majority of short-haired women are not Communists at all. They are said to have earned their short hair by surviving the typhus. Those who contract it, men or women, have their heads shaved. shaved.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

Before long, however, they swam silently into sight; then slowly, cautiously, by almost imperceptible stages the gap closed up until the tender ranged alongside and made fast to her gigantic sister.

Almost at once the incoming passengers began to mount the companion-ladder.

Staff promptly abandoned his place at the rail and ran down to the main-deck. As he aproached the doorway opening adjacent to the companion-ladder he heard a woman's laugh out on the deck: a laugh which, once heard, was never to be forgotten: clear, sweet, strong, musical as a peal of fairy bells.

He stopped short; and so did his breath for an instant; and so, he fancied, did his heart. This, then, was what Mrs. Ilkington had hinted at! But one woman in all the world could laugh like that . . .

Almost at once she appeared, breaking through the cluster of passengers on the deck and into the lighted interior with a swinging, vigorous manner suggestive of intense vitality and strength. She paused, glancing back over her shoulder, waiting for somebody: a magnificent creature, splendidly handsome, wonderfully graceful, beautiful beyond compare. . .

"Alison!" Staff breathed hoarsely, dumfounded.

Though his exclamation could by no means have carried to her ears, she seemed to be instantly sensitive to the vibrations of his emotion. She swung round, raking her surroundings with a bright, curious glance, and, saw him. Her smile deepened adorably, her eyes brightened, she moved impulsively toward him with outflung hands.

"Why," she cried—"Why, Staff! Such a surprise!"

Nothing could have been more natural, spontaneous and unaffected. In an instant his every doubt and, misgiving was erased—blotted out and as if it had been. He caught and held her hands, for the moment speechless. But his eyes were all too eloquent: under their steadfast sincerity her own gaze wavered, shifted and fell. She coloured consummately, then with a gentle but determined manner disengaged her hands.

"Don't," she said in the low, intimate voice she knew so well how and when to employ—"don't! People are looking . . ." And then with a bewildering shift, resuming her former spirit: "Of all things wonderful, Staff—to meet you here!"

She was acting—masking with her admirable art some emotion secret from him. He knew this—felt it intuitively, though he did not understand; and the knowledge affected him poignantly. What place had dissimulation in their understanding? Why need she affect what she did not feel—with him?

Distressed, bewildered, he met evasion with native straightforwardness, he told her, holding her eyes with a grave, direct gaze; "I'm afraid I don't understand. . . . How does this happen?"

"Why, of course," she said, maintaining her artificial elation—"I infer—you've finished the play and are hurrying home. So—we meet, dear boy. Isn't it delightful?"

"But you're here, on this side—?"

"Oh, just a flying trip. Max wanted me to see Bisson's new piece at the Porte St. Martin. I decided to go at the last moment—caught the Mauretania on eight hours' notice—stayed only three days in Paris—booked back on this tub by telegraph—travelled all day to catch it by this wretched, roundabout route. And—and there you are, my dear."

She concluded with a gesture charmingly ingenuous and disarming; but Staff shook his head impatiently.

"You came over—you passed through London twice—you stayed three days in Paris, Alison—and never let me know?"

"Obviously." She lifted her shoulders an inch, with a light laugh. "Haven't I just said as much? . . . You see, I didn't want to disturb you: it means so much to—you and me, Staff—the play."

Dissatisfied, knitting his brows faintly, he said: "I wonder . . . !"

"My dear!" she protested gaily, "you positively must not scowl at me like that! You frighten me; and besides I'm tired to death—this wretched rush of travelling! Tomorrow we'll have a famous young pow-wow, but tonight—! Do say good night to me, prettily, like a dear good boy, and let me go. . . . It's sweet to see you again; I'm wild to hear about the play. . . . Jane!" she called, looking round.

Her maid, a tight-mouthed, unlovely creature, moved sedately to her side. "Yes, Miss Landis."

"Have my things come up yet?" The maid responded affirmatively. "Good! I'm dead, almost. . . ."

She turned back to Staff, offering him her hand and with it, bewitchingly, her eyes: "Dear boy! Good night."

He bent low over the hand to hide his dissatisfaction: he felt a bit old to be treated like a petulant, teasing child. . .

"Good night," he said stiffly.

"What a bear you are, Staff! Can't you wait till tomorrow? At all events, you must. . . ."

Laughing, she swept away, following her maid up the companion stairs. Staff pursued her with eyes frowning and perplexed, and more leisurely with his person.

WALLACE REID FIGHTS KID McCOY IN NEW PICTURE "THE WORLD'S CHAMPION"

Kid McCoy, the ex-middleweight champion of the world, and famous a few years ago as one of the most aggressive fighters of his time, is seen in action in 'The World's Champion,' a Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid and Lois Wilson which will be shown on the double feature bill at Griffin's to-night to Wednesday. In the picture there is a fight sequence whereby Wally Reid as "Gunboat Williams" is seen to defeat his opponent, and win the middleweight championship of the world. McCoy was the man chosen to oppose Wally with the gloves and a most realistic battle is the result as the athletic star had to fight like fury to ward off the well aimed punches of the ex-champ and drive home his own blows.

"Cheated Hearts," the five reel co-starring vehicle of Herbert Rawlinson and Marjorie Daw, which is the second feature offering on the same program could be easily made the subject of innumerable editorials and sermons. It is not only a powerful drama, involving gripping events and a fascinating thread of romance, but it is also a detailed analysis of the character of a "gentleman." It encompasses every phase of the liquor question—but without a single mention of the eighteenth amendment or prohibition. Hobart Henley's skill as a director is responsible for the vigor of the presentation and the artistic effects noticeable in the action. "The Janitors" an amusing Fox Sunshine comedy is being exhibited on the same program.

HUSKIE WINS SECOND ROUND

Sailed This Morning on Triangular Course in Big Bay

Special to The Intelligencer by Staff Correspondent.

The "Huskie", of Watertown, N.Y., sailed by Ed. Lansing, had no difficulty in winning the second race of the George Cup series, sailed off Massassaga today. The race started in a half gale, southwest. "Scrapper", of Toronto, sailed by Major Windeyer, crossed the line in front and led for two legs of the first round of the course, both broad reaches, and on the thresh back to the home buoy. "Huskie" went in front the first mile. "Scrapper" broke down just as "Huskie" passed. The third boat, "Chiryia", of Kingston, dropped into second place but she met with an accident during a squall on the second round and was badly beaten by "Huskie." The "Scrapper" struggled around the course under a jury rig to save her point.

"Huskie" now leads with 5 points, "Scrapper" 4, and "Chiryia" 3. The next race, the last of the series, will be run tomorrow.

PROVINCE HAS POWER TO ANNUL CHARTER

Drury Government Learns it Can Stop Financing by Sale of Bonds

Toronto, July 15.—The advisability of cancelling the charter of the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association which wants to establish a race track at Port Credit, is not under consideration by the Drury government at present, but Hon. Mr. Nixon, the provincial secretary admits that he has had legal advice that it is in the power of the province to cancel the charter. Whether the province exercises that right may depend on the next move of the syndicate which bought up the 20-year-old charter.

The syndicate appears to be determined to go ahead with its venture. It had three ways open to it for financing its plans, namely, by selling additional stock after getting supplementary letters patent, which have now been refused; by putting up all the money itself and by selling bonds.

AIRPLANES FOR CATERPILLARS; FARMER SPRAYS TREES FROM THE AIR.

(Associated Press

London, June 17.—A farmer in Kent with a 50-acre orchard has solved in a new way the problem of ridding his fruit trees of a plague of caterpillars.

He engaged a flying machine and loaded it up with half a ton of insecticides. The machine flew to and fro over the trees at a height of from 15 to 30 yards, scattering the poisonous powder. In half an hour the job was done and it proved quicker and cheaper and much more effective than spraying the trees from the ground.

CHEAP BREAD AND MEAT IN MOSCOW

Moscow, July 15.—For the first time in several years prices of the two staple foodstuffs, bread and meat, have shown a slight drop in the Moscow markets. But other staples, such as sugar and butter, are rising. Simultaneously the Soviet ruble, which for more than a month had stood at about 4,000,000 to the dollar, advanced in value to the ratio of 3,800,000 to the dollar.

A number of factors contributed to the drop in bread prices, among them being the open sale on the markets of the contents of American Relief Administration food packages, and the arrival in Moscow of grain from abroad.

Prices are also dropping in the famine area, and in the country they are gradually becoming lower than in Moscow.

PLAY-OFF IN CENTRAL LEAGUE

Oshawa, Ont., July 17.—A playoff for the championship of the first section of the Central Ontario Baseball League was made certain on Saturday, when Lindsay came out of Cobourg with a win, and Leaside dropped both ends of a double-header in Peterboro, the official standing of the league to date being as follows:—

Team	Won	Lost	P.C.
Oshawa	11	3	.786
Lindsay	10	3	.770
Peterboro	10	3	.770
Cobourg	8	6	.572
Belleville	5	7	.417
Port Hope	3	8	.273
Leaside	3	9	.250
Bowmanville	1	12	.077

President Parsons has ordered Peterboro to play the protested game with Lindsay at the latter place on Wednesday, July 19, at three p.m., and the winner of this clash will go against Oshawa at a place to be selected later.

Saturday scores—Lindsay 5, Cobourg 1. Peterboro 5, Leaside 1 (1st game); Peterboro 5, Leaside 2 (2nd game).

BELLEVELLIE TIGERS DEFEAT DELORO

In a Trent Valley fixture at Deloro on Saturday, the Tigers team of this city came away with the long end of a 7-5 score against Leal. The Tigers are in the lead of the Trent Valley League, but can still be beaten out of the lead.

Whalen was on the mound for the Tigers and despite a very sore hand pitched a steady game, and pulled himself out of some very tight holes having himself eight assists without an error. Delora scored the initial run in the first innings, but the Tigers took the lead in the second when with one run in, two men out Cy. Young on 3rd base stole home unknown to the catcher or umpire.

The Tigers were still leading by 5-2 when Deloro in the lucky seventh with two men out got two men on bases, and Hughes at bat made the longest hit of the game to right field and driving two runs in and with a wild throw scoring himself. The Tigers made one run in the seventh and one in the ninth shutting Deloro out in the last two innings.

The Tigers this Saturday, July 22nd, play Frankford in Belleville at the Fair Grounds and this should be a first class game, as Frankford is the only team to hand the Tigers a defeat, and the Tigers are out this week to cinch the league and give Cline and Company a bad trimming.

The lineup for the Saturday game at Delora was as follows:

Tigers—O'Connor s.s.; Clapper c.f.; Kelliher 3b.; Platt 2b.; Goyer c.; Young and Langdon 1b.; Miles r.f.; Symons l.f.; Whalen p.

Delora—Brown s.s.; Ada c.f.; Regan 3b.; Hughes 2b.; Beandream c.; G. McInroy 1b.; Brady, r.f.; McInroy l.f.; Leal p.

Cy. Young playing first base, in the eighth inning collided with the runner and had his hip badly hurt and had to be taken out and replaced by G. Langdon.

ANOTHER CLAMANT FOR CHFESE FACTORY

Kingston, it is understood, also is anxious to secure the chadquarters of the trade.

CABINET WELCOMES TO PRINCE OF WALES

Lloyd George Praises His Service to Empire in His Long Tour of the East

London, July 15.—The Prime Minister gave a dinner at 10 Downing Street last night in honor of the return of the Prince of Wales from his Eastern tour. About seventy attended, chiefly members of the Government, representatives of the overseas Dominions and other officials.

Mr. Lloyd George delivered a speech of warm welcome to the Prince. After paying tribute to the part which India had played in the great war and pointing out that the Prince took the thanks of the King and Emperor and all his European subjects to the Indian soldiers who fought so well, Lloyd George went on:

"There were many men of deep devotion to the throne who felt and expressed doubts as to the wisdom of the visit to India under conditions which then existed. The tidal waves of unrest which have swept over the world since the great upheaval also agitated the crowded millions of India. But the Prince of Wales felt, and rightly felt, that it is the duty of the heir of so glorious a throne not to wait until the grass is high and the roses are in bloom before he visits the people over whom he will one day be called upon to reign. Every report from India speaks in terms of thrilling gratitude of the beneficent effect of the Prince's tour upon even the most troubled provinces of that great continent."

Referring to the Prince's visit to Japan, Lloyd George said:

"You know how delighted we all were at the news which came of the splendid welcome given by our Japanese allies. They and we have always been firm friends and nothing on the side of British statesmanship will ever make us otherwise."

Lloyd George then made mention of the Prince's visit to the Philippines, where he "made the acquaintance of another aspect of American genius and energy." The Premier concluded:

"We are now getting accustomed to great missions greatly discharged by the Prince of Wales. In many ways this last has been the greatest of them all."

The Prince replied with a modest speech. Referring to his Indian visit, he said he "soon realized that India is a continent and not a country; that her races, languages and religions differ more from one another than anything we have in Europe." But after meeting representatives of all classes he left India an optimist. He added: "Some difficulties there must be in the way of smooth and peaceful realization of our ideals, for in the aftermath of the war and in the present economic stringency, with the advance of civilization and education into unfamiliar fields, conflicts of ideas are inevitable."

The Prince said he could not describe all the places he visited, but he declared: "I must make mention of my all too short stay in Manila as the guest of the United States Government and the Governor-General."

CATHOLICISM NOT GAINING HEADWAY

English Nonconformist Pastor Controverts Statement Made Recently

Montreal, July 15.—"There is not, in my opinion, the slightest indication, nor possibility of England turning to Roman Catholicism," declared the Rev. J. W. G. Ward, pastor of New Court Congregational Church, Tollington Park, London, in commenting upon certain statements that were made at the recent convention of the Catholic Truth Society in a western city. The Rev. Mr. Ward, who has arrived in the city to supply for five Sundays the pulpit of Emmanuel Church, said so far as he was concerned at the heart of things in London, with his finger on the religious pulse of the metropolis, and with knowledge of ecclesiastical tendencies of the day, there was not the slightest evidence of any movement in that direction. "The fact of a growing democracy in religion," he said, "is the negation of anything like autocratic ecclesiastical authority re-entrenching itself in the religious life of Great Britain. The country is weary of ancient authorities and autocracy of every kind, and the democratization of Government, of religion and of social life is apparently the aim of the whole body of the people in this hour, and the restlessness is the proof of it. I do not think Rome is making any strides forward either in London or in Great Britain. The only possible support for such an idea would be that there is undoubtedly a growing desire for a more orderly and beautiful form of worship in the free churches, with more use of liturgy in some quarters; but that has nothing to do with going over to Rome; it is simply a development of the æsthetic."

BRITAIN'S TRADE PREMIER'S CARE

Disturbed by Effect on United Kingdom of Enforcing Reparations

London, July 14.—Premier Lloyd George, replying yesterday to a deputation from the National Union of Manufacturers, who urged the enforcement of the German reparation agreement, declined to discuss the question of reparations until the report from the Reparations Commission in Paris had been received, which, he hoped, would be in a few days.

The Premier, however, said he entirely agreed with the desirability of enforcing reparations if it could be done without harming Great Britain more than Germany.

The situation with regard to Germany's external trade was not so roseate as the members of the deputation seemed to think. Lloyd George said. The late Dr. Walter Rathenau, German Foreign Minister, had estimated the export trade of Germany at 25 per cent. of that previous to the war, and the French estimate of the German export trade was 40 per cent. of the pre-war export. How could Germany, the Premier asked, raise much capital on that basis of export?

WHO WOULD BE BRIDE OF BULGARIAN KING?

Supply of Princesses and Titled Ladies Running Very Low

Sofia, Bulgaria, July 15.—Premier Stambouliisky is understood to have asked David Lloyd George to suggest a suitable British mate for King Boris. To this the British Prime Minister is said to have replied humorously that he had not yet been able to find a wife for the Prince of Wales and that Boris would have to wait, as the supply of royal princesses and other titled ladies in Europe seemed to be depleted.

When the correspondent asked the King about his reported desire to marry, he said laughingly: "If you believe what some of our neighbors say, my throne is rather insecure and might not support two."

JUDGE HAS NO CONFIDENCE IN ALIENISTS' TESTIMONY

Montreal, July 14.—Declaring that he would never repose any confidence in the opinion of expert alienists, after what had happened in a recent case (the Delorme case) Mr. Justice Martineau refused to hear Dr. Tetreault of Longue Pointe Asylum, unless he were to give evidence on matters of fact, in the hearing here yesterday on the merits of the writ of habeas corpus issued on an allegation that Ernestine Menard, wife of Yvon Lamontagne, was being detained against her will in the asylum.

QUESTION IS RAISED OF CHANCE OR SKILL

Interesting Test Case Raised in Police Court Over a Game of Chance

Toronto, July 17.—Robert A. Barber, proprietor of a wheel on the Island, was charged in the police court on Saturday afternoon with running a game of chance. He pleaded not guilty, but Magistrate Jones decided otherwise, deciding that it was within the meaning of the statute. "As it is only a test case," he said, "I will remand the accused for sentence.

G. S. McLarty and Harris, Mr. A. M. Stretton, of the License Office and Provincial License Officer Greer, were the witnesses for the crown.

The officers explained that the wheel was numbered from one to twenty, each player purchased a number for 10 cents, he was also provided with a miniature paddle with which he had some influence over the wheel to stop it at a desired point. If successful he was awarded a doll or box of chocolates.

Mr. Roebuck, for the defense, contended that the game was one of skill, and not of chance, the officers on the other hand, held it was a gamble, pure and simple, with the odds all in favor of the owner.

It was stated that Barber had been refused a license on these grounds and had persisted in running the game in order to furnish a test case.

Mr. Stretton offered to take the position of the owner and play Mr. Roebuck for $5 a time. Learned council refused the invitation.

Sergeant McLeuty said he had tested out the game on several occasions. The owner in his opinion was invariably the winner.

"If one had six months experience," argued Mr. Roebuck, "would not one have a better chance to stop the wheel than a novice."

Sergeant McLeuty thought this might be possible.

"There is a chance then," concluded Mr. Roebuck.

"Decidedly a chance," replied the sergeant.

"I should not say chance," said Mr. Roebuck, "I contend this is not a game of chance."

"The fishing game in which a magnet is lowered into the water and the prize pulled out was licensed," said Mr. Roebuck, "and was just as much a game of chance."

"I am not trying the fish pond game," interpolated the bench.

Barber the owner of the wheel said he had altered the numbers recently so as to give the public an even better chance. The paddle he said constituted the element of skill.

"Would you expect any sane man to obtain even a measure of proficiency, by practising such a game at 10 cents a time," asked the bench.

There was no reply.

HOME CHILDREN ARE WELCOMED

Rector of Emmanuel Church Speaks to Marchmont Home Children

On Sunday evening about forty boys and girls from the Marchmont Home attended Divine service at Emmanuel church. They were in the charge of Miss Hipkiss and Mr. Taylor. The rector, the Rev. George Marshall, extended to them a very cordial welcome to the Church, and to their new home in Canada, he said that all present were in sympathy with the splendid work of the Marchmont Home, and greatly admired the self-denying efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Merry in connection with it. Proceeding the rector assured the children that all present joined him in wishing for them the best of everything that this great wonderful Dominion could provide. They were told that the best men, and the best women of Canada were great admirers of real good characters, and that it was in their power to make their own characters admirable, if they used the right things they could make them really beautiful. The essentials were gentleness, goodness and piety.

About half of the party form a very splendid choir, and in addition to taking an active part in all the singing, they also sang two selections from Redemption Songs, "An Everlasting Friend", and "O, to be Like Him" they were accompanied by the organist, Miss P. Wilder, and sang very sweetly and effectively.

At the close of the service the rector earnestly commended each little one to the continued care of our great God and Father who also numbers our hairs, watches the sparrow and feeds the ravens.

INITIAL SERMON OF NEW PASTOR

An Earnest Appeal for all in the Church to be True Christians

Rev. A. Brown who at the Bay of Quinte Conference held recently at Whitby was appointed Pastor of Holloway Street Methodist Church in this city, on Sunday occupied the pulpit for the first time in that capacity. Despite the warm weather good congregations were present and Rev. Mr. Brown created a favorabl impression. In the morning his address was chiefly of the nature of a personal talk to those present, as to his desire to do all he could for the church and asked the co-operation of all. In the evening the Pastor preached an appropriate discourse, his subject being, "Christians of Antioch." The text was the latter part of the 26th verse of the 11th chapter of The Acts. 'And the Disciples were called Christians at Antioch."

In his opening remarks the divine stated that the Antioch of to-day was by no means the Antioch of olden times. It was in the former days an important centre and was so recognised by the Apostles as a religious centre. The cities of to-day challenge religion as never before and if christianity is to make the cities better in order that they may be a radiating centre all should practise same. vants of Jesus Christ. The people's Antioch were. The grace of God was manifested through the faithful servants of Jesus Christ. The peoples faith was genuine. We may well ask are we worthy to be called christians? Do we serve the god of pleasure all other gods, or the true and living God? We should be like Christ, followers of His examples. God has not left himself without witness. Let us prove ourselves worthy of His name. The Antiochs were missionaries of the Lord Jesus Christ. The best churches in the world of to-day are the churches that are filled with evangleatic sentiments. We cannot be like Christ unless we love Him and are engaged in His work. They who were called christians in Antioch were ever ready to engage in good works and were ever ready to regard appeals for those in need. Christianity in its practicability means relief among the needy. As we have opportunity we should do good to all. When all in a church do what they can do that church becomes a church for good. Throw out the life line and bring into the church those who are without the fold. Apostolic succession does ot mean so much as aspotolic success. The word christian is sometimes lightly spoken of, but it is the greatest thing in the world.

During the service Mr. James Booth sang with much effect a solo.

Yes. And They Must Keep Well and Strong

Two Interesting Letters

Toronto, Ontario.—"When my husband was called back to England in 1914 I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to strengthen me so I could work. I had a trouble that used to make me weak, but I am able to do my work now and am perfectly satisfied with your medicine. I still get it at the chemist's and I strongly recommend it to anybody I hear of suffering as I did. You may publish this if you wish."—Mrs. E. Hoareltown, 390 Yonge St., Toronto, Ontario.

I Did Not Feel Like Working

"I was in a general run-down condition with a weak back and a tired feeling so that I did not feel like working. My mother was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and recommended it to me, so I have taken it and my back is better and I am now able to do my work. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my neighbors and you may publish my letter."—Mrs. Josephay A. Garnier, Box 47, Carbon, Alberta.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound should be taken when you first notice such symptoms as nervousness, backache, weakness and irregularity. It will help you and prevent more serious trouble. Give it a fair trial.

Quebec, July 17.—"Economical conditions may not return to normal immediately as a result of the bumper crop in sight but the situation will be improved over even the most optimistic expectations," said Hon. "As a result of the plentiful crop I believe the price of cattle will go up until the equilibrium has been re-established. The hay and clover crop alone is worth over 100 million dollars."

IMPORTANCE OF CUBAN LOTTERY

National Lottery Mixed up With Politics in Cuban Republic

Havana, Cuba, July 17.—What baseball is to Uncle Sam and cricket to John Bull, that and more is the National Lottery to Liborio, who is Cuba personified by the cartoonists.

But baseball never has threatened the Constitution nor cricket the Magna Carta, while the lottery has shaken the very foundations of the 20-year-old Cuban republic.

In the significance of the lottery to Liborio is included the willingness of some hundreds of thousands of Cubans to take a chance three times a month, and the opportunity this has given those managing the lottery to direct the republic's political destinies.

Created fifteen years ago during the administration of the late Jose Miguel Gomez and after being banned by the provisional American government, the lottery was modeled after that which flourished for decades under Spanish rule.

Just as the records of the Spanish governors general throw little real light on the intimate workings of the Nineteenth Century gamble so does the legislative tangle surrounding its Twentieth Century successor today keep almost everybody outside a charmed circle from knowing just how the wheels go round. From the snappy legal excerpts appearing on the back of the tickets it can be estimated that, if the government gets all it legally is entitled to and the 36 yearly drawings are all absorbed by the public, said public will have paid roughly $7,500,000 a year, for three dozen shots at the usual big prize of $100,000 and his smaller brothers.

But just as the lottery has drawn away from the secretary of the treasury, so do the prices paid in the street for tickets differ from the legal scale. The director of the lottery, responsible only to the president, has eclipsed in importance most of the cabinet members, and the prices paid peddlers for tickets are from 20 to 30 percent above par. During the dance of the millions that marked wartime sugar profits, they were double the legal rate. These phenomena have afforded grounds for bitter philippics by political outs and opponents of gambling on the size and recipients of these extra receipts.

Once a year a list of 1,000 names is published in the Official Gazette, purporting to be those who have been granted the trimonthly privilege of securing 82 full tickets from the government at $19 each and selling them at not more than $21. The publication of the last list, on May 1, was followed this year by charges filed in criminal court by Representative Enrique Maza that not only did persons long dead and others in insane asylums figure in the list, but that $3,240,000 a year lottery receipts were being diverted to purposes to him, and to the Cuban public, unknown.

Although Judge Antonio Garcia Sola, who investigated these charges to determine whether there existed grounds for indictments, announced he had found the lottery records in perfect order, the sensation produced by the publication of charges that had been going the rounds for months fixed the attention of both the public and congress on the lottery and the mysteries thereof. There was little surprise, when it was learned that one of the famous ten memoranda submitted to President Alfredo Zayas last month by Major-General Enoch H. Crowder, who speaks for President Harding in the national palace, was concerned with the management of the lottery and was as important, in its way, as the ones that insinuated the necessity of cabinet reform and a moral cleanup in the collection and disbursement of federal revenues.

That was when the foundations of the republic trembled, for while the other cleanup jobs were not considered unduly difficult, meddling with an institution with such widespread political ramifications as the lottery was a horse of a different color. Intervention reports flew thick and fast, based on the supposition that the administration would not permit foreign hands to tamper with the cogs of the Deus ex machina that furnished the motive power for the political steamroller.

Just after the house decided to construct a permanent base of operations for its lottery offensive, the word came from higher-up that the reform suggested in one of the memoranda would be brought about by presidential decree, and congress thus would be spared a great deal of complicated and probably disagreeable legislative formalities. The director of the lottery a few days ago held a long conference with President Zayas and it is reported that the president outlined to him what would be done to give the institution he still controls its pristine brightness of 1907. It is not expected that the axe will fall until after the end of the fiscal year on June 30, before which date congress has promised to enact much vital legislation. To act before that might delay much needed laws, [illegible] nobody knows [illegible] directions and how far the lottery's influence extends.

Throughout all the [illegible] and cry about the lottery it has been noticeable that demands for its complete suppression have been few and far between. Liborio is just as closely wedded to buying tickets three times a month as he is to raising sugar cane and tobacco.

There are many in Cuba, however, light sleepers for the most part, who are strong for at least one reform—that of putting teeth into the provision which prohibits lottery peddlers from shouting their wares. They have been awakened too many times in the early hours of the three mornings a month on which the blindfolded orphans draw the lucky balls from the cages for the big and little prizes, by the raucous shouts of peddlers who have only a few hours to dispose of their tickets and would rather have the sure margin that results from a sale than the theoretical chance of 1 in 32,000 of grabbing off $100,000 for $25 or thereabouts.

LABOR CRISIS IN RUSSIA

Caused by Limited Sales and Bad Trade Connections

Moscow, July 15.—Limitation of production and probably the closing down of several factories has been recommended by a special commission of experts in a report to the Council of Labor and Defense as a means of weathering the industrial crisis which after a few months of revival of Russian trade has again become acute.

Since 1918, the Soviet government has many times obliged to resort to limitation of industry due to shortage of fuel, raw materials or food, but the cause of the present stringency is different.

Limited sales, bad trade connections with the provinces, and the insufficiency of working capital at the disposal of the various government trusts and syndicates all have contributed to the present situation. Since the inauguration of the new economic policy the various nationalized industries have been combined in trusts and syndicates and reorganized to work on a commercial basis. All such concerns have been deprived of government supplies and their employes no longer are rationed. Having begun with very small capital at a time when the Soviet ruble was continuously depreciating in purchasing power, they had to fall back upon their old stocks and later they began to increase production in order to manufacture sufficient goods to obtain funds for future operations. As a result the markets soon were flooded with goods. Owing to the abnormality of trade conditions and the low purchasing power of the ruble, these goods could neither be sold freely to wholesalers nor direct to consumers.

The commission proposes that practically every industry be curtailed. The program fixes the following percentages of reduction; Coal industry by 15 percent; mines by 33 percent; gold and platinum by 12%; salt 33%; oil, six to seven percent; cotton textiles, 25 percent; wool, 20 percent; flax, 20 percent; silk, 10 percent; leather, 15 percent; chemical, 5 percent; glass, 64 percent; china, 34 percent.

The commission also reports that production has fallen greatly in comparison with pre-war output, the ratio being from seven and one-half percent in the metal industry up to 61 percent in the electrical.

"Industrial Life," in a recent issue, says that the new bankruptcy law now being drafted, will provide that the government shall not be responsible for the debts of state-managed concerns. This decree, however, has not yet been adopted by the Council of Commissars.

PALESTINE ARABS IN UGLY TEMPER

Inauguration of Aggressive Action Against British Mandate

Cairo, July 15.—Despatches from different parts of Palestine describe the inauguration of aggressive Arab action against the British mandate in its present form. It is stated that a general strike throughout Palestine by the Arabs began this morning, and that sympathetic messages were received from Trans-Jordania and Syria. Competent observers state that the Arabs are in an ugly temper. The authorities will have to exercise the greatest tact pending a reaction. It is thought that due to the unrest, the Arab delegation will return to London.

Coal Mines Must Be Operated Says Harding

The President "Invites" Miners to Return to Work "Coal a National Necessity"—"Good Offices" of Government is of no Avail—May Use Other Means

TO PASS LEGISLATION TO FORCE OPERATIONS

Washington, July 18.—Coal operators failed to agree on President Harding's proposal. He now invites them to "return to their mines and resume operations."

The President's statement to the operators follows:

"I have heard your decisiin. I would not be frank if I did not confess a disappointment in your lack of unanimity. To the large majority of you, who have pledged readiness to resume activities under the Government proposal, I must express my own and the public's gratitude.

"We have now reached a point, owing to the refusal of mine workers and a minority of our operators to accept the proposed arbitration, where the good offices of the Government in seeking a voluntary adjustment of the dispute between mine operators and mine workers are without avail.

"I cannot permit you to depart without reminding you that coal is a national necessity, the ample supply of which is essential likewise to the common welfare and to interstate commerce.

"The freedom of action on the part of workmen and on the part of employers does not measure in importance with that of public welfare and national security.

"I therefore invite you to return to your mine properties and resume operations."

This declaration it is pointed out, can have but one meaning—that Mr. Harding intends to furnish Federal troops for the protection of the operators who are able to reopen their mines with non-union labor.

May Seize Mines.

If this drastic step fails to produce the coal necessary to the national welfare, it is understood that the President will not hesitate to proceed to the execution of his original threat to seize the mines and operate them pending a settlement.

With this crisis at hand, rumors were prevalent about Washington tonight that the President would summon the House to cut short its recess and return to the Capital to enact legislation to meet the situation. Senator Cummins (Iowa), Chairman of the Senate Interstate Commerce Commission, announced that he would introduce a bill creating a Labor Tribunal for the coal industry patterned along the lines of the Railway Labor Board. Secretary of War Weeks, after a conference with the President, went to the Capital and had a long talk with Senator Wadsworth (New York), Chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

SMALL CYCLONE HITS PALMERSTON

Grist Mill Unroofed, Trees Uprooted and Barns Wrecked

Palmerston, Ont., July 18.—At four o'clock yesterday a cyclone struck the north part of Palmerston, uprooting trees and unroofing Wall's grist mill, demolishing barns and garages, and blowing in dwelling windows. Some maples fifteen inches in diameter were cleanly wrenched off six inches below the surface.

The cyclone moved east between Minto and Wallace Townships, damaging the farm buildings of Nairne V. Malletts, McEachern and others.

Fortunately, no lives have been reported lost, although Constable Melville had a narrow escape in being blown against a building to which he clung until the storm passed.

Heavy rain fell at the same time and sharp flashes of lightning.

DOGS INFEST CONSTANTINOPLE

Hordes of Canines Roam Through Streets of Turkish Capital—Turks "Too Humane" to Destroy Them

Constantinople, July 18.—Constantinople's hordes of pariah dogs have by no means been exterminated. Thousands of them, ownerless and hungry, roam the streets and constitute a menace to pedestrians. More than 450 persons are now being treated in the Pasteur Institute here for bites from these vicious animals. A new campaign for their suppression has been inaugurated, but the Turks are proverbially humane and sympathetic to all animals and hesitate to put the dogs to death. Many of the beasts are beislands in the Sea of Marmora where they meet death by starvation.

BLOCKS SHAKEN BY EXPLOSION

Fireman Killed by Falling Debris—Women and Children Hurled to Ground

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

New York, July 18.—A series of explosions in a six storey warehouse on Jane street to-day shattered windows for blocks around, and the falling debris from a cornice killed Fire Lieutenant J. Shoppmeyer and injured three firemen. Women and children fleeing from tenements were hurled to the pavements by the force of the blasts, and many were removed to hospitals.

The warehouse is occupied by the Manufacturers' Transit Co., and it is believed chemicals caused the explosion. Fireman James Malone of Brooklyn Station was killed when his fire engine struck the curb while racing to the scene. He was hurled under the wheels. About thirty were injured and three persons are missing.

MUST PAY DUES SAYS JUDGE

Important Decision Regarding Subscriptions to Belleville Chamber of Commerce

An important decision has been given by His Honour Judge Wills in connection with the subscriptions to the Chamber of Commerce.

In 1919 a campaign was inaugurated to put Belleville in a more favorable position, and a large number of citizens formed themselves into a Chamber of Commerce to advance the interests of the city. In order to make it a success members signed up for a term of three years, with an annual fee of $25.00, and, members having fallen in arrears, action was taken in four cases.

The first one was by Mr. George, a barber in town, who raised the defence that as he was not in the commercial class, but was a barber, his made at a special meeting, and the Court held his objection was a good one, as no special meeting had been held in his special case.

In order to remove any doubts in the matter a meeting was at once called and all matters in connection with the application for membership of tre various members were confirmed.

Other members have failed to pay and having refused, steps were taken to test the legal position of the Chamber of Commerce in the collection of these fees. Two of the parties, upon whom demands had been made, at once paid the arrears, but the third one permitted it to go to court and yesterday a decision was given in the third case.

In giving judgment the learned Judge stated that under the condition he was of opinion that every member would be liable who made application and whose application had been accepted, and that the steps taken by the Chamber of Commerce confirming the acceptance cured any defect in the matter if the organization meetings held at the Y.M.C.A. and the general meeting held at the City Hall were not considered sufficient.

There was an impression among some of the members that these dues could not be collected, but now that the Court has given the decision settling the matter there can be no further doubt on the question.

"SCRAPPER" AND "HUSKIE" TIE IN THE GEORGE CUP RACE

"Scrapper" Wins Third Race—Two Contestants are Running Once Round Course to Decide Greatest Yachting Event in History of B. of Q. Y. C.

INSPIRING SIGHT OFF MASSASSAUGA

(Staff Correspondent of The Intelligencer.)

Massassaga, July 18.—The yacht "Scrapper", of Toronto, won the third race for the George Cup this afternoon, winning easily from the "Huskie", of Watertown, N.Y.; the "Chiryia" came in third.

The starting gun was fired at 9.37 this morning and the three boats sailed off in fine style around the triangular course on Big Bay, the "Scrapper" finishing at 1.53.11.

The "Scrapper" now has two wins to her credit, and the "Huskie" has one first and one second. As a result of this tie another race was necessary, and it was decided to run it off this afternoon, the start being made at 3.30, once around the course, a distance of ten miles.

Robb Cup Race.

There were seven entries for the Robb Cup race, which started at 1.30. Six boats entered for the Industrial Alcohol Cup. A feature of this race was the fact that the "Thistle", of Kingston was "manned" by the three Taylor sisters. The "Thistle" was first over the line, but Commodore Jarvis' "Haswell" is sailing beautifully and is leading.

BUSY SWARM OF BEES INVADES RURAL OTTAWA

Ottawa, July 18. — Sparks street was invaded shortly after 2.30 yesterday by a swarm of bees. They numbered several hundreds and for a time caused considerable excitement.

Motorists drove right into them before they realized any danger, and the efforts of street car drivers who found themselves suddenly in the midst of the swarm rather amused the spectators. Curiously, the swarm kept to the middle of the street and made practically no attempt to invade the sidewalks.

No one could offer any suggestion as to where they came from, and fortunately they attacked no person.

ELECTION TO-DAY IN MANITOBA

Large Poll Expected—Precaution to Ensure a Clean Election

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Winnipeg, July 18.—Manitoba to-day is engaged in the serious business of choosing its new legislature. Voters, men and women, are turning out in tens of thousands to meet the obligation of citizenship. Candidates and their workers are putting to the test organizations which they have created during the past three months and are now concentrating on the matter of getting out heavy vote.

Reports from country districts indicated that the size of the vote promised will exceed expectations. Attorney General Jacob, himself a candidate in Winnipeg, announced that every precaution is being taken to ensure a clean election.

TO STAND TEST OF LEMIEUX ACT

Canadian Railwaymen and Roads Now Await Board of Conciliation

Montreal, July 18.—C. P. Riddell Secretary of the Canadian Railway Association, interviewed here this afternoon, stated that the question of the wage reduction, involving approximately 75,000 shop and maintenance-of-way men on the Canadian railways, effective last Sunday, is now out of the hands of the association. As to who will represent the railways on the board of conciliation, Mr. Riddell had nothing to say. The shopmen's representative will be Fred Bancroft, of Toronto, while David Campbell, of Regina, may represent the maintenance-of-way workers.

In connection with negotiations for a new wage schedule for 7,000 railroad employees outside the running trades, which opened yesterday afternoon between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Wage Schedule Committee of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Employees, there were no further developments last night.

The matter is one entirely outside the sphere of the Canadian Railway Association, and it is quite apart from the question of the wage reduction proposed in the case of shopmen and maintenance-of-way men. The men affected in this case are employees of the Grand Trunk only, and represent clerks, freight station men, firemen and oilers.

ARREST CAUSES SOME COMMENT

Alberta Phillips, One of the Star Witnesses in Moult Murder Case is Apprehended

Alberta Phillips the house maid at the home of the late George Wesley Moult of Tyendinaga Township and whose evidence at the inquest of the murdered man caused a sensation and considerable comment is again in the limelight in connection with the tragedy.

She was placed under arrest by a Provincial officer who is working upon the case and brought to this city. Later she was brought before proper authorities and admitted to bail returning to the Moult homestead. The Provincial authorities were interviewed by a representative of the Intelligencer in regard to the arrest but were reticent to make any comments in regard to the matter.

A report was current that Alberta Phillips had intimated that she was going to leave this section of the country and would not be present at either the preliminary investigation or the trial of Maurice Barrie who is accused of murdering Moult, and the supposition is that these reports were responsible for her arrest. She is now bound over in a considerable sum to be called upon to give testimony at the proper time. Her arrest it is needless to state caused excitement.

BABY SOLE SURVIVOR OF 7 IN AUTO CRASH

Father, Mother, Brother and Thrree Others Killed at Railroad Crossing

Waterville, Me., July 18.—Six persons were killed when a Maine Central Railroad train struck an automobile at a blind crossing near the Unity Station early on Saturday. A baby girl was the sole survivor of the party of seven in the automobile. The infant was thrown thirty feet from the tracks and escaped with minor bruises.

Mrs. Varney and her son, Miss Miss Hinckley and Mrs. Marshall were killed instantly. Varney and Burrill died in a hospital here soon after the accident.

The Varney family were on their way to Searsport Beach to attend a clambake, with Miss Hinckley and Mrs. Marshal, summer boarders, and Burrill, a step-brother of Mrs. Varney.

The automobile was struck just forward of the front seat by the cowcatcher.

CARDINAL CONDEMNS IRISH MURDERERS

Threatens Brigands With Ex-Communication

Belfast, July 18.—Cardinal Logue, the primate of Ireland, preaching on Sunday at Carlingford, County Louth, where he is taking a holiday, referred to the present disturbed state of Ireland. He strongly denounced the murders, lootings, burnings and raidings. He said in future those participating in such outrages would do so under pain of ex-communication.

The cardinal was astounded to find that Carlingford ,which he had been visiting for forty years, was not immune from terrorism.

LESS HARD COAL NEXT WINTER

Report Says There Will be a Shortage of Anthracite Owing to Coal Strike

Ottawa, July 18.—"There will probably be a shortage of anthracite for domestic use in Canada next winter," says S. J. Cook, Chief of the Mining, Metallurgical and Chemical Branch of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, in an opinion of the coal situation in Canada.

The opinion continues: "Imports into central Ontario of anthracite in domestic sizes during the six months ending June, 1922, amounted to 776,000 tons, the average quantity imported during the same period in the three preceding years. Of the same grades the Province of Quebec received 240,000 tons this year, as compared with a average importation of 515,000 tons in the three preceding years.

Fifty-five Per Cent. Behind

"The percentage of the average supply received by Ontario this year is therefore 55 per cent, and Quebec 47 per cent.

CANCEL FRENCH DEBT TO GREAT BRITAIN

Reduction of German Indemnity Also is Basis of Solution of Reparation Question

Paris, July 18.—The reduction of the German indemnity to fifty billion gold marks from the present total of 132,000,000,000 and the cancellation of the French debt to Great Britain is the basis of a solution of the reparations question now being seriously discussed by French and British officials.

Although the scheme has not yet officially reached the Reparations Commission, members of the latter have discussed the details. It is said the proposed plan will be one of the chief subjects of discussion in the forthcoming meeting of Premiers Poincare and Lloyd George.

The suggested solution has the hearty support of British officials, who have been urging its acceptance upon the French officials, it is announced.

DREAMING OF BATTLES LONG AGO

Shell-Shocked Veteran Hears Cannon and Imagines He is in the War Again

Peekskill, N. Y., July 18.—Investigation yesterday by General J. Leslie Kincaid, commanding the New York National Guard troops encamped here, disclosed that Benjamin Kress, private, who had to be overpowered and carried from the field during manoeuvres last night, was shell-shocked overseas and evidently lost his mind at hearing the roar of a cannon salute and imagined himself again fighting the Germans.

Kress, a member of Company G, 106th Infantry, was participating in a formal review tendered Dr. L. Y. Grouitch, Imperial Minister of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes, when the cannon on one side of the field boomed with the Ambassador's salute. Scarcely had the sound of the shot died away when Kress broke ranks with the cry, "The Hun, the Hun." A dozen comrades quickly overpowered him and carried him to the hospital.

Later General Kincaid and Dr. Grouitch visited him and learned that Kress made a record for gallantry in the World War. He was much improved to-day. Efforts will be made, General Kincaid said, to obtain official recognition of Kress's overseas service.

FRENCH PAPER SEES ORANGE CONSPIRACY

Denounces Manitoba Appeal to Vote for Norris and National Schools

Montreal, July 17.—Under the heading "The Orange Conspiracy," La Presse says editorially in a reference to the Manitoba elections: "We cannot ignore the interference, as arrogant as it is impertinent, and still more deplorable in the Orange school, which by its official organ, in its issue of July 11, launches an appeal adjuring the disciples of the lodges to vote for Norris and national schools. What constrains us to denounce this manoeuvre is not so much political intervention of the Orange sect in these provincial elections, as the motive itself, crudely avowed, of this interference, which, claiming to make the school question the sole raison d'etre of these elections, and consequently renewing the ancient and disastrous tactics of which experience has demonstrated the melancholy consequences, aims at nothing less than extending to the other provinces of the west this fanatical resolve of agitating the school question.

"We hope that this detestable attempt will fail with the Orange and Protestant electors of Manitoba, and that, weary of these stupid quarrels, they will close their ears to this appeal."

UNDERGROUND ROAD EXTENSION

Plan to Connect Hampstead Line With City of London

London, July 15.—The extension and the re-construction of the City and South London Railway, the pioneer of the underground system in London, which was started on June 12 by Sir Philip Lloyd-Creame, Secretary to the Department of Overseas Trade, cutting the first sod of the extension of the Hampstead line to Edgware, involves an estimated expenditure of approximately £1,000,000. The scheme is three-fold: to extend the Hampstead line from Golders Green to Edgware, a distance of 4.68 miles; to provide for a projection between the Hampstead line at Camden Town and the City and South London line at Euston, and to reconstruct the City and South London line to carry the standard rolling stock of the Underground Railways and to permit a through service of modern electric trains from Clapham Common to Edgware.

The plan for connecting the Hampstead line and the City and South London line, which provides for a six-track underground tubular junction at Camden Town, will permit a four-minute service to be worked from Charing Cross to Edgware and to Highgate. These services, having their confluence at Camden Town, will involve the running of sixty trains an hour in each direction—which will constitute a record. It is expected that this work will be finished by October 1st, 1923, but part of the general scheme will not be finished until the following year.

The most important feature of the reconstruction of the City and South London Railway is the enlarging of the tunnels from ten feet 6 inches to 11 feet 8¾ inches diameter. It is estimated that 30,000 tons of clay will have to be excavated in the process. The section between Euston and Moorgate will be first dealt with. This part of the line will be closed on August 9, and the work is scheduled to be completed by October 1, 1924. Stations will be rebuilt, platforms lengthened, and escalators provided at the principal stations.

As a result of the extension and reconstruction work the journey between Northwest London and the City will be considerably shortened.

SUFFERS SUNSTROKE ON ENGINE FOOTBOARD

Brockville, July 14.—Standing on the footboard of a locomotive in the G.T.R. Manitoba yard yesterday afternoon, John Vance, yardman, in the employ of the railway, was noticed by Yard Foreman W. M. Roberts and others to be in difficulties. When the railroad's surgeon arrived in response to a rush call his illness was diagnosed as the result of sunstroke suffered during the intense heat of the afternoon. Vance had just mounted the footboard of the engine after descending from a string of freight cars. Had he been stricken while on top of the cars or when the engine was in motion, it is likely that he would have suffered severe injuries.

"I Believe in Fair Play!" — Mr. SMP

Mr. SMP Copyright, Canada, 1922, by The S.M.P. Co. of Canada, Ltd.

An Appeal to Housewives

THE local hardware merchant is one of the most useful citizens in any community. His one object is to serve faithfully the householders of the community in which his store is located. Give him Fair Play.

He is vitally interested in the neighborhood and all its citizens. He pays his local taxes and helps maintain the community. The money he gets from selling his goods to you, he spends in turn with other merchants of the community. His life's savings are invested in the hardware business he conducts. He is raising his family and helping to keep up the schools where your children are being educated.

But, unfortunately, all these things are forgotten when some householders buy goods at their doors from peddlers or house-to-house canvassers. These individuals are very persistent in their efforts and will go to great lengths to sell you their wares. They deliberately play on your sympathies. They should be turned down at once! They have no grain or tittle of interest in you or the neighborhood, other than to sell their wares and be gone. You will probably never see him or her again.

When you buy kitchen utensils or household articles from one of these peddlers you are not playing fair either with yourself or the hardware man of your community. You are injuring your hardware man for the reason that these peddlers are in direct competition with him.

The hardware merchant is in business to serve you. To sell you his goods at a fair, reasonable price is his daily occupation. Strengthen him by buying from him and he will be of even greater service to you.

Loyalty to those who serve you is as fine a thing as loyalty to those whom you serve. Remember the hardware merchant. Buy from him when you can, and treat him with the same fairness that you expect from others.

Special Notice to Housewives

ASK your local hardware merchant to show you Diamond Ware or Pearl Ware, the two outstanding brands of high-grade enameled ware kitchen utensils. These S M P wares will last for many long years, giving service and satisfaction of which you never dreamed. WIRELESS CHAIN FOR EMPIRE USE

Radio Stations in Britain and India for Direct Communication

London, July 14.—In answer to questions in the House of Commons today, Rt. Hon. F. C. Kellaway, Postmaster-General, stated that the Government, in further considering the question of an Imperial wireless chain, had decided to erect in England a station of the ultimate power contemplated by the expert commission, instead of a station with smaller power, which was first proposed. The Government, he said, was advised that this station, with its greater power, would provide especially for direct commercial communication with India, South Africa and Australia.

Direct Communication.

The Imperial Government, Postmaster-General Kellaway said, would erect a station of similar power in India, with Indian Government work. This station would be capable of directly communicating with England, South Africa and Australia. As a corollary of this decision, the proposed second station in Egypt and a station in East Africa would be deferred, and the question of the erection of a station at Singapore and another at Hong Kong would be reconsidered.

Station in South Africa.

Mr. Kellaway said the Home Government was communicating with the Government of the Union of South Africa regarding a station in South Africa.

Canadian Government experts were expected to reach England very shortly, Mr. Kellaway said, in order to discuss the question of Canada's participation in the Imperial wireless chain scheme.

Canada's Participation.

Ottawa, July 14.—The Dominion Government intends sending two representatives to England to discuss the question of Canada's participation in the Imperial wireless chain scheme with representatives of the British Government. It is pointed out here that the question is not one of a pressing nature, as the intention is to start the establishment of stations in the Far East first. The original plan was to proceed in two directions from England, the first via East Africa, West Africa and the Cape, and the second via India, Ceylon, Singapore, Hong Kong and Australia. The jump from Australia to Canada would be an exceedingly lengthy one. The names of the two men who will proceed to England on behalf of Canada have not been made public.

BIG CROPS IN WEST

Ideal Weather in Alberta—Grasshoppers in Check

Calgary, Alta., July 17.—Special crop reports received at the offices of the general superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Calgary from points all over and compiled up to Friday night are decidedly encouraging. The reports are not generally published and are intended as the most accurate information possible for the information of the company. They can therefore be taken as an accurate gauge of the general situation.

During the week ideal weather, especially in the south country has prevailed and the crops are coming on rapidly there reports state. In the majority of instances the wheat is heading out. Grasshoppers are in check and little if any damage has been done by hail during the week. Further rain on Friday night and Saturday morning in some sections of the province with prospects of further moisture will further greatly benefit all crops.

SWEDISH SHIPPING RECOVERS FROM DEPRESSION

Stockholm, July 15.—Less than eight per cent. of Swedish shipping is now idle, according to the latest report of the Swedish Shipowners' Association. This report shows a sharp contrast to conditions a year ago, when in June Swedish shipping depression reached bottom mark with over 44 per cent. of the country's total tonnage idle and nearly 46 per cent of the men employed laid off. The report of the Shipowners' Association covers only its membership, but virtually all of the country's shipping is owned by members of the Association.

The recovery of Sweden in shipping is based largely on the country's return to normal in many of its most important industries and the rapid increase in exports.

EBERT UNITES SOCIALIST VOTE

State Secretaryship to be Given to Member in Reconstructed Cabinet

Berlin, July 17.—President Ebert, who returned from Freudenstadt on Saturday morning, conferred with the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. Bauer, and afterward met a few leaders of the Socialist and Independent Socialist party, the result of which conferences will probably be the immediate appointment of the Independent Socialist Leader and Editor Hilferding as State Secretary in the Ministry of Social and Economical Reconstruction.

This appointment will seal the union just formed between the two Socialist parties and at the same time secure the passage of the Bill for Safeguarding the Republic, the final vote on which will probably take place in the Reichstag tomorrow.

It is by no means out of the question that the United Socialists will leave the Foreign Office to the Centrist-Democrat or even Stresmann's candidate, who is said to be either Wiedfeldt, the German Ambassador at Washington, or von Kaumer, a friend of the late Dr. Rathenau.

ALLEGED THAT CROFT HAS CONFESSED CRIME

Report Prisoner Making Self-Defense Plea for Slaying Aged Farmer

Chatham, July 17.—Clayton Croft, awaiting trial on the charge of murdering Gustave Noel, his partner and benefactor, with whom he lived on a farm at Charing Cross, is alleged to have confessed. While the authorities have neither confirmed nor denied the report, it is stated that the accused, in addition to talking freely with his jailers, has signed an important statement. The nature of the alleged confession has not been disclosed, though it is reported Croft claims he attacked Noel in self-defense, alleging that the aged farmer brandished an axe threateningly.

"WETS" AND "DRYS" CLASH IN SWEDEN

Prohibition Campaign is Carried on By Means Statistics

Stockholm July 17.—Sweden's prohibition campaign, now at its height, has become largely a battle of statistics. While the "dry" forces point with pride to the fact that they won a victory in the Riksdag when that body voted to hold a consultative plebiscate of the "wet" and "dry" issue on August 27 of this year the anti-prohibitionists are quoting government statistics and the reports of medical authorities.

The reports of the government district physicians scattered all over the country are now being received by the Swedish Medical Board which recently went on record against total prohibition. Virtually all of the physicians report that drunkenness appears to be decreasing in their respective districts and that in many parts of the country home-brewing is declining.

The Royal Social Board's latest report shows that during the first quarter of this year inebriety showed a further decline there being only 5,285 cases of drunkenness reported throughout Sweden. The report sets forth also that during 1921 Norway and Finland, both prohibition countries were more wet in spots than Sweden with her liquor rationing system. Thus during 1921, Sweden's quarterly reports showed between 7,000 and 8,000 cases of drunkenness while prohibition Norway, wth about half of Sweden's population, had an average of nearly 9,000 cases of inebriety offenses during each quarter.

MUTILATED LAWN THROUGH MISTAKE

Hamilton Man Finds His Beautiful Grounds Destroyed

Hamilton, Ont., July 17.—Preparing to erect an apartment building on a vacant lot at Emerald and Main streets, Alderman C. Herbert Mackay met a man who deals in sod. He proposed that the man go and inspect the turf in question, and if it measured up to his satisfaction the latter was to return and quote a price. The man went on his mission—supposedly to Emerald and Main streets. Through some misunderstanding he went to the residence of John H. Clappison, president of the Hamilton Engine Packing Company, at Emerald and King streets. This home is surrounded by spacious grounds, with 123 feet frontage on King street and 143 feet on Emerald street. The lawn and perennials have long been things of beauty to local citizens. Mr. Clappison and his family are residing at their summer home at the beach.

Was Finest He'd Seen.

Returning to Alderman Mackay, the man said the turf was the finest he had ever seen. He quoted a price which was accepted. The bargain was closed and off went the man. With two assistants, each armed with razor-edged sod cutters' they went to work on Mr. Clappison's beautiful lawn. It was late yesterday when an acquaintance casually asked Mr. Clappison what he was going to build on his grounds. Mr. Clappison eyed the acquaintance shrewdly and ascribed his question to the intense heat of the last few days.

"Your lawn is all pulled up; I was just wondering, that's all," said the friend.

Half of it Gone.

When Mr. Clappison reached his Emerald street home, nearly half of the lawn had been cut and removed.

The man who did it vows that Alderman Mackay told him to go to "Emerald and King streets."

Alderman Mackay, with equal emphasis, says he told the man to go to "Emerald and Main streets."

Mr. Clappison will take legal action, he stated, as even though the lawn has been relaid, his years of work to make it what it was have been undone, and it will take him several years to restore the lawn to its former beauty, he said.

CAMBRIDGE MAY ADMIT WOMEN

If Parliament Refuses Grant its Doors Will Probably Open

Lodon, July 18.—Oxford University now admits women freely to its degrees and to university membership, but Cambridge still locks its doors against them. Naturally the women don't feel a bit grateful for such glimpses. They want the doors unlocked.

The women from the Cambridge Colleges of Newnham and Girton have demanded admission to degrees and University membership on the same terms as men. Not long ago some 2,600 of them signed a petition to this effect. The reply given by the Unversity was polite, but unsatisfactory.

Within the last two years Cambridge has voted and countervoted on various proposals to admit women. The only proposal which it has actually carried—and to this practical effect has not yet been given—is that women who are qualified for degree status may obtain "titles of degrees" but not real degrees.

In making this half-hearted offer Cambridge is proposing to treat women just as it formerly treated Jews and Nonconformists, whom also it tried to satisfy with the titular degree until Parliament stepped in and compelled the University to abolish its discriminations of creed.

Now women want Parliament to intervene and compel Cambridge to abolish its discrimination against their sex. And signs are not lacking that Cambridge itself is beginning to see that it will not pay to keep the woman knocking at their doors much longer.

A deputation consisting of several members of Parliament, the heads of Girton and Newnham Colleges and other friends of the movement recently talked with Mr. Fisher, Minister of Education. The Minister made it quite plain that he was on the side of the women and would do all he could to persuade Cambridge to open its doors to them. Parliament also was undoubtedly on their side. Cambridge was looking for a grant from the Exchequer, he said, but it was not likely Parliament would vote it while Cambridge continued to exclude women. If Cambridge found that by keeping women out the needed money also would be kept out she would probably quickly decide to let them in. It might not therefore become necessary to employ legislative pressure to force her to open her doors.

ACCUSED OF KILLING RIVAL LOVER

Woman Defies Third Degree—Denies That She is the "Hammer Murderess"

Tucson, Ariz. July 17.—Mrs. A. L. Phillips, held here for extradition to Los Angeles on a charge of beating Mrs. Alberta Meadows to death with a hammer, defied the third degree on Saturday.

"I'll talk when I get back to Los Angeles," was her only reply to questions.

The woman accused of deliberately killing the girl whom she considered a love rival, sits calmly and smiling in her cell here. She even denies that she is Mrs. Phillips.

"I'm ready to go back to Los Angeles," she said placidly when informed Sheriff Traeger of that city was en route here to take her in charge.

Confronted with letters found in her handbag signed with the name, Clara Phillips, the alleged 'hammer murderess' remained undisturbed and smilingly insisted she was not the person "wanted" for the slaying.

"Perhaps," and "I don't know" were her tranquil replies to the question fired at her by police in cross-examination.

HUSBAND DIES IN SEWER HOLE

Wife's Intuition Results in Finding Body Buried Under Earth Slide

Hamilton, July 17.—Yielding to her womanly intuition that some mischance had overtaken her husband, Mrs. Douglas Blaine, 190 Burriss street left her home shortly before 8 o'clock on Saturday, walked almost a mile to where her husband had been working, and there found him dead. The sides of the sewer he had been excavating had caved in and trapped him. He had been dead for an hour when his wife discovered the body.

Blaine was having a house erected at 44 Ashley street. He left his home on Burriss street yesterday afternoon to go to Ashley street and make an excavation of the lot for the sewer leading from the street line to the house. He said he would be home for supper about 6.30 or 7 o'clock.

When 7 o'clock came Mrs. Blaine became alarmed at her husband's absence, and felt that something was wrong. When 7.30 came and her husband was still absent, she could wait no longer, and decided to go to 44 Ashley street. There, behind a fence, she saw where her husband had been digging. One of his boots was protruding from the earth that had suddenly fallen upon him and snuffed out his life. The excavation was not a deep one, and was not shored. The fence concealed the excavation from passersby on the street. An inquest will be held.

ONTARIO IS LEADER IN BUILDING TRADE

Permits to Value $74,586,900 Issued in Ontario In Half Year

The building statistics of all the provinces in the dominion, compiled by the MacLean Reports, Limited show Ontario to be a conspicuous leader, accounting for more than 56 per cent. of the total building operations in Canada during the past six months. The half-yearly dominion total is $132,452,900, which is divided as follows:-

Ontario	$74,536,900
Quebec	31,294,200
British Columbia	9,738,600
Manitoba	4,969,000
Alberta	3,685,200
Nova Scotia	2,957,000
Saskatchewan	2,656,400
New Brunswick	2,387,200
Prince Edward Island	177,500

The swiftly rising building tide in Canada, month by month, is shown when these figures are analysed on a monthly basis. During the first half of 1922, the first month showed a small total of $8,392,600, but a steady expansion occurred until June the latest month under review, registered a $35,620,400 record. The progress of the building industry during each of the six months is set forth as follows:-

January	$ 8,392,600
February	10,718,300
March	13,465,000
April	29,423,400
May	34,827,300
June	35,620,400

When the dominion figures are dissected from the point of view of the type of work undertaken an energetic attack on the housing problem is revealed:

	6 Months Total.	P.C.
Residential	$53,435,300	40.3
Business	39,660,900	29.9
Industrial	10,050,700	7.6
Public works and utilities	29,305,100	22.2

It is rather unusual for residential building to lead, as shown in the following table, showing divisions of Canadian building during the past four and a half years, expressed in percentages:

	Res.	Bus.	Ind.	Public Works & Utilities
1918	14.7	26.2	29.0	30.1
1919	24.7	13.4	30.0	13.9
1920	21.4	23.7	35.3	19.6
1921	31.9	35.3	6.9	25.9
1922(6 mos.)	40.3	29.9	7.6	22.2

NEW WALLACE REID PICTURE A HIT

With Wallace Reid in a most suitable role, Lois Wilson as his leading woman and a splendid cast including Lionel Belmore, Henry Miller, Jr., Helen Dunbar, and Guy Oliver, "The World's Champion" the new Paramount picture which was shown on the double feature program exhibited at Griffin's last night, is living up to its name.

The hero is the battling son of a meek, nobility-worshipping British commoner. There are three fistic encounters—the first when the son pays informal court to a lady and daughter of the nobility and is attacked for his forwardness by her escort, Lord Brockington, and thrashed; the second, a ring bout wherein the hero wins the middleweight championship while in America and the third battle with Lord Brockington in which the now trained fighter returns him a dose of his own medicine.

Mr. Reid is in his usual good form as a love-maker and the picture is not lacking in romance, the characters, all English humorous types, provide a wealth of rare humor and are well portrayed. A man's fight against the sinister forces of heredity is portrayed by Herbert Rawlinson in "Cheated Hearts," the second feature offering on the same program. The hero is the son of an old Virginian who died from drink. While in a drunken mood he offends his sweetheart—and the only course open to him is to go away. Form this point the locale of the story is laid in Paris and Morocco and is unusually gripping. Marjorie Daw, Anna Lehr, Doris Pawn and Josef Swickard are assigned important roles which theyacquit capably.

BENEFITS OF GRADING

Standardizing of Farm Products Necessary for Best Market.

Instances of the Folly of Not Grading — Selling by Description vs. Inspection — Butter Exportation In New Zealand.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Grading of farm products is necessary for the enlargement of markets. It is based upon knowledge of what the consumer wants. It gives the consumer of farm products the kind, shape, size and quality of products desired. It brings increased returns to farmers and effects savings to the middlemen.

In the production of farm products, unavoidably widely varying shapes, sizes and qualities of products are brought into existence. These must be sorted out so that the product sent to a certain market will meet with the approval of the purchaser. Standardizing means that a grade of product will be the same year in and year out, in this way confidence in grades may be built up.

The Folly of Not Grading Instanced.

It must be remembered that consumers, like farmers, are engaged in business. They are not able to sort products. Therefore, when they purchase ungraded products they have to buy things they don't want, and this results in waste. Grading of farm products would mean a reduction in the cost of marketing. For example, out of 2,600 cars of apples appearing on a Chicago market within a period of three months in the fall of 1914, it was found that 410 cars were unfit for sale; and not only was this true, but they also depressed the price of apples. The freight, cartage and labor of handling had been paid for the purpose of starting 410 cars of apples on the way to market, which nobody would accept, did not want, and could not use.

Or to take butter: Investigations have demonstrated that lack of grading has resulted in serious loss to middlemen. In the state of Kansas for instance, one-fifth of the butter received was paid for at the rate of 27.1 cents per pound,—the ruling price for butter—though this 20 per cent. had to be reworked before it could be used by consumers. For this butter renovators paid 20 cents per pound, so that there was a loss of 7 cents per pound. No middleman can long stand this.

The problem of financing the sale of farm products is important. By grading farm products finance is facilitated. Suppose a farmer has a carload of a certain grade of product. He may go to the bank and say: "I have a carload of No. 1 apples, I want to borrow some money." The bank manager understands what this means and is prepared to advance money. But if the farmer goes to the bank with ungraded products the banker immediately asks, "What kind? Who grew them? Are they good or bad?" He may even require that they be inspected, and in the end the farmer will not get as satisfactory advances as though the products was graded.

Description vs. Inspection.

Grading reduces the selling cost by enabling sale by description rather than sale by inspection or by sample. Sale by inspection requires that products be sent to some central point and that people go to see those products. It is easily seen that this is an expensive way of selling. And not only is this true, but it is easy to over-estimate the requirements of buyers on a certain day, which results in flooding of the market, with consequent lowering of price. Sale by description is made possible through advertising, but before advertising can be successful products must be graded. Not all advertising is economical, but it has its place in effecting more efficient methods of selling.

Graded products always bring better prices to farmers. Agriculture is still the main industry in Ontario, and this means that we must export the surplus of farm products. In finding markets for this surplus we come into competition with New Zealand, Denmark, Holland, Australia, and United States. Most of these countries, certainly the first four named, enforce rigid inspection of products for export. Why? Because grading is the basis of enlargement of markets. Consumers demand the very best of all products, their likes and dislikes are varied, and we must meet these demands. For many years we have tried to make the Englishman eat the sort of bacon we thought he should eat; but he won't. He prefers Danish bacon because the Dane sells him the sort he wants, properly graded, to meet all his requirements. Or take apples: A short time ago a certain gentleman from Ontario endeavored to establish a market for Ontario apples through the consumer owned co-operative stores in Great Britain. What was the answer? "Just as soon as you get an organization from which we can order 10,000 boxes of No. 1's or No. 2's, graded and packed in such a manner that we can depend upon the quality year in and year out, we will talk business, but until then we cannot risk it."

New Zealand's Experience.

In New Zealand, farmers satisfied the home market for butter a long time ago. They had to export the surplus, and the Government offered a premium for the first shipment of butter which would satisfy consumers in Great Britain. What was the result? Dishonest people stole brands of quality products and shipped inferior butter under these brands. This had a bad effect. It was then found necessary to have Government inspection which would extend right back to the producer, so that inferior butter could be traced to its source and the cause removed.—J. Coke, Dept. Farm Economics, O. A. College, Guelph.

BACK TO THE STAGE COACH

The United States Government has started a motor truck service to transport mail matter on account of the shopmen's strike. It will be recalled that during the railway strike in England, the Government instituted a motor passenger service throughout the whole of Britain and people got quite used to going by road instead of rail. We will have to get back to the stage coach days if these railway people cannot run their business without periodically throwing the country into a state of chaos because they cannot agree as to the division of the profits.

A REVIVAL OF YACHTING

Notwithstanding the storm which broke on the Bay at noon yesterday, the day was an ideal one for the Regatta. It was a great sight to see the yachts with their white wings spread to the breeze skimming over the green and choppy waters. The hearts of many old Bellevillians were thrilled with the spectacle, which must have carried their memories back to the halcyon days of the past when the Bay was alive with picturesque sailing craft and many races were won and lost in these waters. It is to be hoped that this regatta will initiate a revival of old-time yachting, which abated during the years of the war. There is no more healthy, invigorating or manly sport than this kind of seamanship, in which men grapple with, master and harness the elements.

The Bay of Quinte is particularly well suited for yacht-racing, both from the sailor's and the spectator's point of view. The course is well within range of sight from Massassauga, where many people foregathered yesterday from various points on the Bay. Those who voyaged to that point from Belleville were rewarded with health-giving breezes and the picturesque vision of a fleet of beautiful sailing craft straining for the prize.

We congratulate the skipper and crew of the "Huskie" upon their fine work in winning the second race. They come from Watertown across the lake and we welcome them to our waters and trust they will come again and bring their friends. We are all of one blood, and the sea stirs us still.

Commodore Jarvis' fine yacht presented a magnificent appearance with her neat hull, towering masts and milk-white sails. The Commodore seemed as youthful and keen a seaman as ever. He has done more to keep alive the sea-consciousness of Canadians than any man living in Canada to-day. May his sea-fever become contagious, and may Campbell's lines never lose their power to stir British hearts, no matter how far inland they be—

"The spirits of your fathers
  Shall start from every wave;
The sea it was their field of fame,
  The ocean was their grave;
Where Blake and mighty Nelson fell,
  Your manly hearts shall glow,
As ye sweep through the deep,
  And the storming wind do blow!"

WEEDS ON VACANT LOTS

Complaints are coming in from citizens in regard to the growth of noxious weeds on vacant lots throughout the city. The heavy rains have kept the lawns green without artificial watering, they have also kept vacant lots in full bloom with sweet clover and "blue devil" weed. These blue flowers look very pretty, and they would be a harmless decoration if they would only confine themselves to vacant lots, but they have a habit of scattering their progeny over a wide area. They will soon be turning to seed and these will be blown on to neighboring lawns and flower beds, where they will spring up next year—some ten, some twenty, but most of them a thousand fold.

It is suggested that all owners of vacant lots where weeds abound should at once cut down these tares and cast them to the void. Sweet clover is all right on a farm or on a ranch, but until people go in for keeping cows in their back-yards and graze them on their front lawns, there is really no call for this kind of herbage in the city.

All ye owners of vacant ground, kindly put in the sickle and reap your harvest of tares!

PASSING COMMENT

It would appear that Premier King's visit to Washington was of some interest to bootleggers. The banning of armaments on the lakes would ensure the rum-runners a safe voyage.

The killing of a sheriff and twelve other men and the wounding of many others by the miners in Virginia will not help the cause of the strikers. There is only one way to settle with men who resort to such methods of securing higher wages.

Labor leaders who lightly plan for strikes that develop into civil war and misery for the workers have a heavy weight upon their consciences—if they ever possessed such a thing as a conscience.

An "extraordinary stone image" is reported to have appeared in front of Mayor Martin's quarters at the City Hall in Montreal. We were afraid they would get to that stage sooner or later. This attack of seeing things may convince our neighbor Province that it is time it went on the water-waggon.

Aldermen were put to the test by the Rotarians at their luncheon yesterday in regard to their views on the proposal to go ahead with the baths in Victoria Park under the Corby bequest. The only thing now is to go ahead.

HERE AND THERE

LITERARY RELIC.

One of the strangest of literary relics in England is the skull of Sir Thomas Browne, the author of "Religio Medici," and one of the greatest old masters of English prose, which for nearly eighty years has rested in a glass case in the museum of the Norfolk and Norwich Hospital. It was taken from Browne's coffin by Robert Fitch, the antiquary, while some repairs were being made in the Church of St. Peter Mancroft, Norwich, to whose vicar it is now going to be handed for reinterment on the site of the original spot in the chancel. Meanwhile, it has been placed in the hands of Sir Arthur Keith, the distinguished anthropologist, for detailed study. His full and final report is not yet issued, but he sends a long preliminary one to the London Times Literary Supplement.

TIME TO BATHE.

Now is the appointed time. In our climate we have but a few months during which to obtain the perfect and inimitable combination of baths of water, air and light. This summer, as last, is specially fitted for this hygienic and recreative purpose. The sunlight, incomparable food, tonic and antiseptic in one, is available. Domestic supplies of water are running out, thanks to our lack of foresight, and it will be increasingly difficult to maintain ordinary cleanliness of skin and clothes. But the seas are still full, and we should use their water around all our shores to the fullest possible extent during the next three months.

Lakes and rivers, where possible, should be used. There is no definite proof that sea-water, as such, is much more valuable than fresh for the unbroken skin, by which its salts are not absorbed.

But there is clear proof that, whether for the well or the ill, no indoor bathing establishments, however elaborate, nor any artifical light baths, however expensive, have the same value for the human body as its natural environment out of doors.—Dr. C. W. Saleeby.

THE WHIPPER-IN

By Thomas Hardy.

A youth who had quarrelled with his father and run away to sea, now returns, penitent, to his home with the intention to help the old man. Catching sight of a red coat, he imagines he sees his father going to the kennel-shed. To an old friend whom he has met he stops to parley and to realise the situation:—

"I curs'd and fought my father—aye,
  And sailed to a foreign land;
And feeling sorry, I'm back, to stay,
  Please God, as his helping hand.
  Surely it is my father
  Near where the kennels stand."

"True, Whipper-in he used to be
  For twenty years or more;
And you did go away to sea,
  As youths have done before.
  Yes, oddly enough, that red there
  Is the very coat he wore.

"But he—he's dead; was thrown, somehow,
  And gave his back a crick;
And though that is his coat, 'tis now
  The scarecrow of a rick;
  You'll see when you get nearer—
  'Tis spread out on a stick.

"You see, when all had settled down
  Your mother's things were sold,
And she went back to her own town,
  And the coat, ate out with mould,
  Is now used by the farmer
  For scaring, as 'tis old."

PRESS OPINIONS

GERMANY'S HOPE

(Vancouver Province)

The Germans have had enough of kaisers of the old type. They will not accept Bolshevism. A leader is needed who can appeal to the real democracy and bring the common people together in defense of the State against all gangs of domestic anarchists. This is the kind of superman that Germany needs and in the history of the world a man of that type usually appears when the need is greatest.

PUBLICITY PERILS

(London Free Press)

The evils of secret diplomacy in the past have not arisen from closed conferences, but from keeping the public dark afterwards as to the effect of treaties. Diplomates and statesmen of Europe have made secret agreements which were never made known. Publicity is one of the greatest of all political safeguards in a democratic nation, but publicity can be abused and made the mouthpiece of demagogism. If there had not been so much publicity at the Washington conference, and such a play to the gallery on the part of French politicians, more progress in the way of international disarmament might have been made.

FORCE TO FORCE

(New York Times)

These two lines of action seem plainly to be contemplated by the Washington Government. It is ready to go to the limit of conciliation, but will omit no word or act necessary to show its determination to maintain public order and to prevent the American people from being forced into needless hardship and peril. It is well to treat the strikers fair, but it is also well to let them know the exact truth. If they appeal to force, they will be crushed by a force infinitely greater than their own.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

(Mail and Empire)

A Canadian Wheat Board, even though of the same personnel as the last one, might therefore come very short of the success of the last one. The buying power of the consuming nations was practically illimitable in war time. It is not so now. It would have been a good thing for this country had the conferences at Genoa and The Hague been successful in reestablishing credit in the formerly prosperous nations of Europe. It seems not unlikely that the wheat yield of this continent will be a large one. What harvests of India, Argentina and Australia may be, we cannot say. They have their due season, and the marketing of the North American crop must be managed so as not to be put off until these nations are ready to throw heavy yields in to the scales. Because the Wheat Board of 1919 did well, it does not follow that a Wheat Board in the circumstances of the present time ought to do equally well.

WIT AND HUMOR

Joy is a great companion. Singing thoughts racing heartbeats, leaping pulses, and glowing brain, those are company for any man.

NOT REALLY WORTHLESS

Stage Aspirant—Do you think I can ever do anything with my voice.

Blunt Professor—Well, it may come in handy in case of fire.

TEST OF KNOWLEDGE

Hyde Park Orator—It's knowledge we want. Ask the av'ridge man when Magna Charta was King of England—an'e carn't tell yer."

TELLING HER THE TRUTH

"I have to tell you, miss, that it will need five years of intensive training before you can sing as well as you think you can now."

WHAT ARE BRAHMS ?

She—Tell me, are you fond of Brahms?

He—Oh, very. But I think I like shredded wheat biscuits even better.

THE EXCEPTIONS

"All men are liars," said the pretty girl, and burst into tears. "But my dear," said her friend, "you mustn't be such a cynic. There are exceptions." "Oh, very likely," said the pretty girl, "but all the really nice men are liars."

NOT WORTH TROUBLING ABOUT

The doctor had been summoned hastily, and he alighted from his carriage with a grave face.

A woman was awaiting him on the step, but he noticed that she had not the anxious look he had expected to see.

"I understand," he said, "that your boy has swallowed a shilling. Where is he?"

"Oh sir" was the reply, "I'm glad to tell you we made a mistake. It wasn't a shilling—it was only a half-penny!"

DORIS PUTS A POSER

Doris watched her mother sprinkle her furs with naphathalene powder.

"Why do you do that, mother?"

"To keep the moths away, dear."

"Why?"

"Because moths eat clothes, dear."

"Were there moths in the Garden of Eden when Adam and Eve lived"

"Of course, dear."

"Well, what did they eat?"

Two Bear Stories

(Vouched for by the Canadian Press.)

Prince George, B. C., July 15.—Two amusing bear stories, both vouched for by reputable eye-witnesses, are going the rounds here. Forest fires in northern British Columbia during the past month have had a peculiar effect upon some of the wild animals of the woods, judging from some of the stories brought in here.

A fight between a fire-crazed bear and a mule, in which the bear was worsted occured at L. Mason's ranch, at Bedneeti, B. C.

The forest fire routed the bear from its lair, and in its dash from the flames into the open country it collided violently with a jack-mule, which was grazing contentedly. The bear was promptly stretched out on the ground by a double tattoo from the capable hind hoofs, and the mule calmly resumed its interrupted grazing.

Thoroughly angered, the bear picked itself up and cautiously approached the mule from a different angle. The huge paw was brought down with a resounding thwack on the mule's ribs. This was unfortunate. The hoofs were again brought into play, after a quick accurate manoeuvre for position, and the fight was called off so far as the bear was concerned.

Mr. Mason, who witnessed the unusual encounter, dashed to the house for a rifle to finish the bear, should any life be left. Before he could get back to the scene, however, Bruin managed to get groggily to his feet and return to the less exciting environment of the forest fire.

A fire patrol ranger is sponsor for another bear story. While making a survey along the Grand Trunk Pacific railway in the mountain district, he came upon a young cub suffering from severe burns on the feet and body. The youngster was whimpering from the pain and the forester took pity on it and lashed it to his speeder.

The patrolman started on his journey only to discover that the mother bear had appeared and was in hot pursuit. As the track ran uphill at this point, the bear, making long strides, gained steadily and the need for strategy was clearly indicated. The forestry book of instructions does not cover a situation such as this, but the ranger was resourceful and decided that the best plan would be to throw the cub off the car. His attempts to untie the knots on the lashings which secured the youngster to the machine, however, proved futile.

Pursuer and pursued came to a yet steeper grade, with the advantage all with the former. Finally, with one mighty effort the bear threw herself on the back of the speeder, holding on by her claws and paws.

This is where the forester decided to resign in favor of the enemy. He dove off the car, and regained his feet in time to see it continuing its journey eastward, with a mother and child happily reunited as its passengers.

Later the speeder was found, run down and every thing intact except the side of the seat where the cub had been tied the old bear having torn it out to release her offspring.

Woman's Sphere

LADY ASTOR.

The Hon Edith Lyttleton, widow of the famous cricket player, who was secretary to Arthur Balfour when Mr. Balfour was Premier, accompanied Lady Astor on her trip to America. During the voyage on the Olympic Mrs. Lyttleton, long a close friend of Lady Astor, interviewed the first woman member of the British House of Commons for The New York Times.

We were lying side by side on deck chairs, the only fine, sunny day of this trip. Nancy, to my pleasure, had discarded her raincoat and her little brown cap, and was dressed in a plain and very chic pale-blue tweed coat and skirt, with an enchanting yellow and gray toque on her head. On the day before she sailed she had been out shopping with the children, and they had all insisted that she buy this hat. They were right.

"Everyone asks me," I began, "whether you think all women ought to go into politics."

"How absurd!" she said. "As if they could—I am so lucky. I have health and enough money to have secretaries and motors, and a husband who—" she paused.

"And then another thing I am asked about is whether you took any interest in politics before you went into the House."

She laughed. "Why, you know I did, but perhaps rather from a local point of view. I wanted desperately to get certain things done—temperance reform, maternity centres started and, above all, to get the lower deck grievances attended to. My heart is with those sailors."

I nodded, for, of course, I remembered. I had many times gone out electioneering with her. It was a funny experience; we used to hire an old open fly, driven by a regular Dickens character of a coachman, with a red nose and a very dirty livery. His broad back would shake with laughter over her sallies when she spoke he always had a supreme confidence that she would get the better of every interrupter. And she usually did. Someone generally came with us who would stand up and ring a huge dinner bell; then out of the little by-streets would dribble women and children, a stray man or two some keen girls, and so on. Often there were professional hecklers who followed her about. But they got no change out of her. Her fearlessness and frankness are invincible.

"But Nancy," I said, "your interest in politics wasn't only local; I remember lots of discussions at Cliveden in the library about imperial and international questions."

"Oh, yes," she said, "that all began with the 'Round Table.' There is only one gift I am sure I have, and that is for getting people of all sorts and conditions together, mixing them up and making them talk."

Again I nodded, for I knew how true it was; writers, politicians, philanthropists, working men and women are always being gathered together by her and her husband under their roof. The young writers of the 'Round Table'—that serious constructive review—who are a band of brothers in the cause of the British Empire, use Clivenden as a meeting place. They very often held their weekly 'mote' there, and sometimes arranged for a special week-end to discuss some burning question. They have the right to invite any stranger or any friends to come for a night or week-end and join in the discussion. But the 'Round Table' has no monopoly, for both husband and wife have always taken deep interest in labor questions. In a quiet and unostentatious way an employer and a labor leader have been brought together......

"I wonder," I said, "whether you would always have been content to work as you did, mainly through other people."

"Oh, I think so," she answered. "It wouldn't have occurred to me to go into Parliament if Plymouth hadn't invited me. When poor Waldorf had to be a Peer . . . it was a piece of bad luck for him."

It was indeed, for he was one of those Members of Parliament, entirely happy in his work, who loved the House and had made a strong position for himself. Then all at once on the death of his father he had as he became an hereditary member of the Upper House, to abandon his Parliamentary career altogether. The blow was softened to an entirely unselfish and unself-seeking man, by keeping his connection with Plymouth and the House of Commons through his wife.

"What I can't get over," went on Nancy, "is the queerness of some one who comes over just as an ordinary Virginia girl, keen about games and hunting, ending up by being the first woman Member of the British Parliament. It is extraordinary that none of the women who had been in the fight for the suffrage—been in prison lots of them—ever seemed to mind."

"Well," I answered, "you are not just an ordinary girl from Virginia to begin with, and then, the suffragists knew very well that it was a piece of rare good fortune to get the chance of a seat for any woman so soon after the vote had been given."

And to myself I thought of all her warm-heartedness, her radiant sympathy, her goodness, her wit and vitality and I felt that it did not need much generosity on the part of English women to welcome her as their first representative. But after all, it is said, it was a strange turn of the wheel which made the eager, sport loving Virginian, brought up on her father's place, running as I gather pretty wild, living chiefly on horseback, turn, first into a social queen living in the very centre of all that is most brilliant and most interesting in English life and then into an ardent social reformer. Finally, the first woman Member of the British Parliament. A curious and interesting, a very happy career.

"I like your way of dressing the part," I said, "your little black coat and skirt, white muslin shirt and three-cornered hat will become the uniform, I believe, for women Members of Parliament." Nancy laughed. "I don't know about that, but I am sure that women in the House ought to dress quietly. It might be too distracting for the Members if we put on all our adornments. All the same, I haven't lost my love of nice clothes."

She handed me a radio—in its yellow envelope—of inordinate length "I was so disappointed," she said "I thought it was from the children But it's only twenty-two questions from a newspaper."

No wonder she was disappointed for her six children are the great joy and delight of her life. Very often there is a severe tussle in her heart between her Parliamentary duties and her longing to stay in the nursery. Every opportunity is snatched I remember once driving down with her to the House of Commons and just as we were starting her nurse with the two younger children, aged three and one, appeared on the steps of the house and asked if they might come, too. They were all packed in and we drove into Palace Yard a happy nursery party. After she had disappeared into the building, the nurse said to me, "I always like to drive down with her if I can. I think it is a good thing for them men to see that she doesn't forget the babies. And she doesn't, you know, Ma'am."

"Let's go for a walk," cried Nancy, throwing off her rug. "I must have some exercise."

"All right," I said, "but just tell me one thing. Doesn't it feel like a dream coming back to America?"

She shook out her skirts. "Well, not exactly. I'm coming home, you see . . . but . . . I have got a dream anyway. You know what it is . . . my two countries must go hand in hand; they must, for the sake of the world. And it is the women who are going to make that happen . . . Come on, now."

On we went as hard as we could go. She was not content with the walk—oh, no. On the boat deck of the Olympic there is a wonderful gymnasium. She soon forgot all about interviews and speeches, skipping, while a huge Irish sailor and a little boy who was hanging about, held the rope. The 'imperishable child' in her was in possession, and for an hour she played with the football, jumped onto the artificial horse and the stationary bicycle, laughing and talking and giving vent to her peculiar little crow which happens when she is specially enjoying herself.

She has a wonderful physique, a great flood of life coursing through her being. And that being is made up of 'spirit dire and dew'—with a good spice of mischief thrown in.

No one can help loving her. At least that is my opinion.—Hon. Edith S. Lyttleton, Dame of the Order of the British Empire, in the Times, New York.

A SUGGESTION

"Oh, let us go and live in a perfectly new house!
Pretty as paint and clean, so clean—where all the doors
Move softly on their hinges and no broom could rouse
The least faint speck of dust from off the polished floors.

"A little house built cheerfully without much skill,
The sort we might have made ourselves, and let Golden nasturtiums tumble from each window-sill
Over a box, thick-sown with peas and mignonette.

"And when old ghosts come clamoring, as well they may
For long acquaintance' sake, importunate and thin,
Politely we'll throw wide the doors and bid them stay,
Knowing they'll leave again as soon as they come in!

"Because there's not a corner where a ghost could live,
No secret room or nook. But when annoyed they go
Quite, quite away, safely, at last, we'll make believe,
For fun, that we're as sad as other folk we know.

"And then we'll gaily kiss beside our new-laid fire,
Where roasting chestnuts crackle and green fir-cones burn.
Knowing that we have found the House of Heart's Desire
Where we may live and love—with nothing to learn!"

—Lady Margaret Sackville.

COLD CORN BEEF WITH JELLIED VEGETABLES

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Expert for N E A Service and Columbia University

Whenever possible save dishes by putting combinations on one platter or plate. Cold meat is always better when accompanied by a good salad or some appetizing relish.

Corn beef after being cooked should stand until cold in the water in which it is cooked. Remove from the water and press under a weight. Cut in thin slices and serve around a mold of jellied vegetables made as follows:

1 cup chopped cooked beets
1 cup thinly shaved cabbage
½ cup peas (canned or fresh cooked)
1 cup boiling water
1 tablespoon of gelatine
¼ cup cold water
1 tablespoon of vinegar
½ tablespoon of sugar
⅓ teaspoon of salt
1-8 teaspoon of pepper

Soak the gelatine in the cold water. Add to boiling water with remaining seasonings. When cool and beginning to stiffen add the vegetables. Turn into mold which has been wet with cold water. Put in a cool place until time for serving.

Unmold as directed above.

HOW TO RID THE ARMS OF OBJECTIONABLE HAIRS

(Aids to Beauty)

A simplified method is here given for the quick removal of hairy or fuzzy growths and rarely is more than one treatment required: Mix a stiff paste with some powdered delatone and water, apply to hairy surface and after 2 or 3 minutes rub off, wash the skin and every hair has vanished. This simple treatment cannot cause injury but care should be exercised to get real delatone.

SAY ENGLISHMAN SHOT WILSON

Belfast, July 18.—At a meeting of the Londonderry Corporation yesterday Mayor O'Doherty declined to accept a resolution of sympathy with Lady Wilson for the murder of her husband, the late Field Marshal.

"It appears this gentleman was assassinated by two Englishmen," he said, "and we have nothing to do with it."

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

As he turned aft on the upper deck, meaning to go to the smoking-room for a good-night cigarette—absorbed in thought and paying no attention to his surroundings—a voice saluted him with a languid, exasperating drawl: "Ah, Staff! How-d'-ye-do?"

He looked up, recognised a distant acquaintance: a man of medium height with a tendency toward stoutness and a taste for extremes in the matter of clothes; with dark, keen eyes deep-set in a face somewhat too pale, a close-clipped moustache and a high and narrow forehead too frankly betrayed by the derby he wore well back on his head.

Staff nodded none too cordially. "Oh, good evening, Arkroyd. Just come aboard?"

Arkroyd, on the point of entering his stateroom, paused long enough to confirm this surmise. "Beastly trip—most tiresome," he added, frankly yawning. "Don't know how I should have stood it if it hadn't been for Miss Landis. You know her, I believe? Charming girl—charming."

"Oh, quite," agreed Staff. "Good night."

His tone arrested Arkroyd's attention; the man turned to watch his back as Staff shouldered down the alleyway toward the smoking-room. "I say!" commented Mr. Arkroyd, privately. "A bit hipped—what? No necessity for being so bally short with a chap. . . ."

The guess was only too well founded: Staff was distinctly disgruntled. Within the past ten minutes his susceptibilities had been deeply wounded. Why Alison should have chosen to slight him so cavalierly when in transit through London passed his comprehension. . . . And the encounter with Arkroyd comforted him to no degree whatever. He had never liked Arkroyd, holding him, for all his wealth, little better than a theatre loafer of the Broadway type; and now he remembered hearing, once or twice, that the man's attentions to Alison Landis had been rather emphatic.

Swayed by him, he chose to avoid the smoking-room, after all—having little wish to be annoyed by the chatter of Mr. Iff—and swung out on deck again for a half-hour of cigarettes and lonely brooding. . . .

But his half-hour lengthened indefinitely while he sat, preoccupied, in the deck-chair of some total stranger. By definite stages, to which he was almost altogether oblivious, the Autocratic weighed anchor, shook off her tender and swung away on the seven-day stretch. As definitely her decks became bare of passengers. Presently Staff was quite a solitary figure in the long array of chairs.

Two bells rang mellowly through the ship before he roused, lifted himself to his feet and prepared to turn in, still distressed and wondering—so much so that he was barely conscious of the fact that one of the officers of the vessel was coming aft, and only noticed the man when he paused and spoke.

"I say—this is Mr. Staff, isn't it?"

Staff turned quickly, searching his memory for the name and status of the sturdy and good-looking young Englishman.

"Yes," he said slowly, "but—"

"I'm Mr. Manvers, the purser. If I'm not mistaken, you crossed with us this spring?"

"Oh, yes; I did. How-d'-you-do?" Staff offered his hand.

"Sure I recognised you just now—saw you on the main-deck—talking to Miss Landis, I believe."

"Yes . . . ?"

"Beg pardon; I don't wish to seem impertinent but may I ask, do you know the lady very well?"

Staff's eyes clouded. "Why . . ."

"Knew you'd think me impertinent; but it is some of my business, really. I can explain to your satisfaction. You see"—the purser stepped nearer and lowered his voice guardedly—"I was wondering if you had much personal influence with Miss Landis. I've just had a bit of a chat with her, and she won't listen to reason, you know, about that collar."

"Collar?" Staff repeated stupidly.

"The Cadogan collar, you know—some silly pearl necklace worth a king's ransom. She thought it in Paris—Miss Landis did; at least, so the report runs; and she doesn't deny it, as a matter of fact. Naturally that worries me; it's a rather tempting proposition to leave lying round a stateroom; and I asked her just now to let me take care of it for her—put it in my safe, you know. It'd be a divilish nasty thing for the ship, to have it stolen." The purser paused for effect. "Would you believe it? She wouldn't listen to me! Told me she was quite capable of taking care of her own property! Now if you know her well enough to say the right word . . . it'd be a weight off my mind, I can tell you!"

"Yes, I can imagine so," said Staff thoughtfully. "But—what makes you think there's any possibility—"

"Well, one never knows what sort of people the ship carries—as a rule, that is. But in this instance I've got good reason to believe there's at least one man aboard who wouldn't mind lifting that collar; and he's keen enough to do it prettily, too, if what they tell of him is true."

SEASON'S MODES ON "ROTTEN ROW"

Hats are Larger and Long Pointed Shoes Very Popular

London, July 19.—Observing the fashion world go by from a bench on London's "Rotten Row" one sees that the seasons modes tend to more conservative skirts, higher waist lines, picture hats a yard wide and pointed American shoes. The dressmaker's intent seems to be to cover what was once uncovered. Ankle-length skirts, voluminous sleeves, high neck-lines and loose-fitting gowns that subordinate the contour of the body, seem destined to restore woman's lost charm of mystery.

Most frocks are of the fluttering, flowing order which caught by the breeze, look very graceful. Foulards are taking the place of georgette and crepes of laces. Hats are circled with posies instead of being covered with plums. Parasols are of foulard with wallpaper designs, or figures of green parrots or love-birds. Long, narrow feet are the craze of the moment, and slendor, high-heeled shoes of snakeskin are coming into vogue.

For evening attire backless frocks with diamond or pearl supports with some women of fashion. Many evening gowns are of a new cloth of silver or gold that resembles molten metal ad that shimmers and glistens brilliantly under the electric light. Trains are inclined to be shorter, and are usually of gold or silver net. The new transparent cloaks which are being worn are trimmed with white grey and black monkey fur.

Very little jewelry is worn; only a simple chain of jade or amber, or a Chinese Mandarin's collar of teakwood beads.

She Thanks Parisian Sage for Her Glorious Hair

Why wouldn't she be grateful? Once she had thin, scraggly hair that no one liked. Now she has luxuriant hair with a sheen that fascinates and a beauty that compels admiration.

And Parisian Sage did it. This delightful invigorator and dandruff remover is sold by all druggists and at toilet counters. McKeown's Drug Store guarantees it.

How to Make the Most Delicious Cherry Jam You Ever Tasted

New Certo process astonishes housewives

Never fails—requires only one minute's boiling—retains all the color and flavor and makes more jam from same amount of fruit.

Cherries are now plentiful at a low price, sugar is cheap and housewives are putting up cherry jam and jelly as never before. The reason why is that the brand new and revolutionary Certo Process for making jams and jellies has eliminated every reason why any housewife should hesitate to make these delicious conserves. Anyone can now easily make a perfect cherry jelly, at a very low cost, with all the flavor and color of the fruit retained.

The new Certo Process for making cherry jam is very simple: Use sour cherries only, for finest flavor. Stem, pit and thoroughly crush about 2½ lbs. fruit. Measure 4 level cups (2 lbs). crushed cherries into large kettle and add ¼ cup water. Tie 2 heaping tablespoonfuls pits in cotton cloth and crush with hammer. Place in kettle with cherries, stir till boiling, cover kettle, simmer 15 minutes, then remove pits. Add 8 leveled cups (3½ lbs.) sugar and mix well. Stir mixture hard and constantly and bring to a vigorous boil over hottest fire. Boil hard one full minute, stirring continually. Remove from fire and add 1 bottle (scant cup) Certo, stirring it in well. From time jam is taken off fire let stand 5 minutes only, by the clock, before pouring. In the meantime skim and stir occasionally to cool slightly. Then pour quickly. This makes about 11 half-pound glasses of jam. For making cherry jelly, see Certo Book of Recipes.

The former guesswork or worry of making jam or jelly is now past. The Certo Process is endorsed by government authorities and cooking experts; it insures perfect results with every batch. Jam and jelly made this way keep perfectly. It is also very economical, never requiring more than one minute's boiling, and thereby makes two-thirds more jam or jelly than the old method. It also makes all kinds of jam or jelly, some you have never tasted before, like raspberry jelly and rhubarb jam, or unusual combinations like strawberry and pineapple, etc. Many housewives are exhibiting with no little pride the new flavors and better quality of jams and jellies made with Certo. Certo always pleases.

Certo is absolutely pure—contains no gelatine or preservative. It is Mother Nature's "jell-maker." Housewives, experienced and inexperienced, have received it with open arms because it is so certain, so economical, so simple and so useful. They are recommending it to all their friends. Ask some of your neighbors about it. Try it right away with fresh fruit like cherries, currants or raspberries. Then you will do all your preserving the new and modern way, the easy, economical, and better Certo process.

Send us your grocer's name and we will mail you a book of fifty-three recipes. If he does not have Certo, we will mail a bottle to you on receipt of forty cents. Douglas Packing Co., Ltd., Cobourg; W. G. Patrick & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

SCRAPPER AND HUSKIE IN GEORGE CUP RACE

Massassaga, July 17.—At an early hour this morning, officials were busily engaged arranging the final plans for one of the biggest events of the season, namely, the annual regatta of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club, and the Great War Veterans' Annual Picnic at Massassaga Park.

"The active hum of eager industry" was much in evidence at Massassaga Park. Boats arriving, giving up their human cargo, then plying back for another load; officials and residents making ready for the big day, and the sailors making ready their respective craft and leaving nothing undone which would contribute to the sailing of some real thrilling races.

Up until about 1 p.m. the weather was ideal, with bright sunshine, a half a gale from the southwest, and everything ideal for the day's sports. At 1 p.m., however, a heavy wind and rain storm which lasted more than half an hour, swept over the park and bay and caught the boats in the George Cup race on their second round of the race. Other sailing race boats which had been windbound in the Belleville harbor, and late in making their way to Massassaga Park, were also caught in it and considerable difficulty was experienced, especially by the Patricia who turned about, and whose sails were all up, were lashed about freely. The boys stayed with her, however, lowered the sails, and got a tow in to anchor.

Considerable inconvenience in the transporting of the crowds down to the park occurred as a result of two of the large gasoline launches, pressed into use as carriers, breaking down and being unable to proceed with the work. The crowds made their way down, however, and after the storm had passed over and the sun began to shine brightly once more, the races of the afternoon, as well as the G.W.V.A. program of sports, were thoroughly enjoyed.

The George Cup Race.

This race was 20 miles or twice around Big Bay course. Possibly there is no greater or more interesting race of the ragatta than the George Cup race, the second (of a series of three) of which was sailed Monday. This cup has been held by the cities of the upper end of Lake Ontario for some years, and a determined effort is this year being put forth by the eastern cities, such as Kingston, Watertown and Rochester to lift the cup, as it is an international trophy. The rivalry is keen and the excitement is sky high. The final race is being run off for this cup today off Massassaga Park.

There are three boats in this race: Huskie, of Watertown, N.Y., sailed by Edward Lancing; the Scrapper, which sailed in to Massassaga one half hour before the race, from Glenora, and entered, and the Chiriya, owned by A. Dalton of the Creston Yacht Club. This boat is the newest creation by Owen, the well-known Boston boat builder, who, by the way, designed both of the other boats.

The race commenced at 10.30 a.m. and the Huskie had no difficulty in winning the race. A half a gale from the southwest was blowing when the race started, and the Scrapper, of Toronto, sailed by Major Windeyer, crossed the line in front, and led for two legs of the first round of the course. Both legs were broad reaches on the thrash back to the home buoy. Huskie went to the front in the first mile, and the Scrapper broke down just as Huskie passed. The Chiriya, a Kingston boat, dropped into second place, but also met with an accident during the squall on the second round, and was badly beaten by Huskie. Scrapper made her way around the course under a jury rig, to save her points. The Huskie now leads with 5 points, Scrapper second, with 4, and Chiriya third, with 3. Today's race settles the matter. Huskie's time of finishing was 12.03.28, and Scrapper's 12.07.06. The Scrapper was in front 35 seconds at the second buoy, and the Huskie was ahead of the Chiriya 27 seconds.

Race for G.W.V.A. Cup.

This race was one of the most unusual races ever sailed, two of the fourteen boats entered in the various classes finishing a tie for first place.

These boats are the Patricia, of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club of Toronto, and the Whirl, of the Royal Hamilton Yacht Club.

The interest in this race was very keen locally, because of the fact that the Temeraire, a local schooner, was in the race. The Temeraire finished first, but owing to the handicap which she had to give the smaller craft she did not get a place, and was last in the race.

The result of the race was as follows:

Boat and Club	Start	Finish
Patricia, R.C.Y.C.	2.05	3.12.17
Whirl, R.H.Y.C.	2.20	3.12.1[illegible]
Italia, R.C.Y.C.	2.05	3.12.49
Haswell, R.C.Y.C.	2.00	3.14.50
Vivia, R.C.Y.C.	2.10	3.15.01
Thistle, Kingston Y.C.	2.20	3.15.26
Zoraya, R.C.Y.C.	2.00	3.17.13
Iroquois, Rochester, N.Y.	2.00	3.17.29
Scrapper, R.C.Y.C.	2.10	3.17.42
Heather, Napanee B.Q.Y.C.	2.20	3.17.54
Tantrum, Rochester	2.20	3.19.41
Swamba, R.C.Y.C.	2.10	3.20.15
Sylvia, Kingston Y.C.	2.15	3.22.02
Temeraire, B.Q.Y.C.	2.15	3.22.25

The Scrapper, which sailed in the George Cup race, entered the G.W.V.A. race in her class, in order to complete her second round of the course, which she did not do in the George Cup race, owing to the accident. It was necessary for her to do so to hold her points in the George Cup race.

It will be noticed that a handicap of five minutes is given by each class in the race for the Veterans' Cup.

The following is the classification of the boats:

"M" and "N" classes, starting at 2 p.m.—Haswell, Zoraya, both of R.C.Y.C., and Iroquois, of Rochester; "P" class—Italia and Patricia, of R.C.Y.C.; "R" class— Vivia, Swamba and Scrapper, all of R.C.Y.C.; cruising yawls—Sylvia, of Kingston, and Temeraire, of Belleville; twenty-footers—Heather, of Napanee, Thistle, of Kingston, Whirl, R.H.Y.C., and Tantrum, of Rochester.

Dinghy Races.

There were three entries in the dinghy race, which was three times around the small course, they being Wallbridge, B. Sword and Keegan. Keegan dropped out at the end of the first round, and Sword capsized. After righting his boat and receiving some assistance from the wrecker, he gamely finished the race. Wallbridge won handily.

The judges for the George Cup race were Mr. A. B. Bowes, Secretary of the Lake Yachting Association; Commodore T. World, of Q.C.Y.C., and Mr. Blake Van Winkle, also of Q.C.Y.C.

Judges for the G.W.V.A. Cup race were Mr. J. V. Jenkins, of B.Q.Y.C.; Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P.; Commodore T. World and Mr. A. B. Bowes.

Mr. William King Rogers was official starter for all races.

YACHTING NOTES.

Much credit is due Mr. Wm. Schuster and other indefatiguable officials of the B.Q.Y.C. for the courteous manner in which they manage the volume of business which follows such a large regatta as is being staged at Massassaga this year.

Officials of the B.Q.Y.C., guests, and representatives of the press, enjoyed a delightful cruise on the Wacouta steamer, owned by Mr. Bert Black, who was also an interested member of the party. The Wacouta followed the racing boats about the course and frequently docked at the park. Mr. Black very kindly placed the boat at the disposal of the regatta committee.

• •

Old time yachtsmen like Mr. J. V. Jenkins state that this regatta is certainly the biggest yachting event in the history of the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club. Mr. Jenkins, who once owned a yacht in the old days, states that twenty was the highest number of boats they ever had. There are more than thirty-five boats at this regatta.

• •

W. J. Cook was skipper of the Temeraire, with the following men for his crew: Col. A. P. Allen, V. Hyman, P. Walker, S. E. Carman, V. Doyle, George Caldwell and Keegan.

The Temeraire sailed for the Asbestos Pulp trophy.

The revival of yachting is certainly on in this district, as evidenced by the great hold it has taken upon the people. There is the greatest collection of boats at Massassaga ever seen in the Bay of Quinte yachting history.

• •

Mr. Fred Quick was a guest on board the crack craft Haswell, owned by Amelius Jarvis, Esq.

• •

When the boats arrived on Sunday afternoon, many of them continued on the sail up to the city, owing to the favorable wind. Hundreds of people and also hundreds of automobiles lined each shore from Massassaga up to Belleville, as the boats sailed by.

The yachts started from Prinyer's Cove for Massassaga on Sunday morning at 9 a.m. and they had all arrived at the park at 3 p.m., a distance of forty-eight and a fraction miles. All of the yachts sailed through the reefs at Telegraph Narrows with all canvas. This record beats steamboat time. The Haswell made the run in exactly 3 hours and 45 minutes.

• •

All yachtsmen were the guests of the Belleville Club during their stay in Belleville.

• •

E. Guss Porter, Esq., K.C., M.P., spent the entire week at Prinyer's Cove on board the Temeraire, and sailed on her in the race to Belleville.

• •

The Sylvia of Kingston, sailed by Commodore Casey, and the Temeraire of Belleville, raced neck and neck from the cove to Belleville. Each boat passed the other twice, but Sylvia won out finally.

Tom Wade is skipper on board the Patricia.

• •

Besides the local newspapermen, there are three other representatives following the races. They are Mr. Lou Marsh of the Toronto Star; Mr. J. Snyder, news editor of the Toronto Telegram, and Mr. Caltman, of Rochester, N.Y., representing the Toronto Mail and Empire and a syndicate of American journals, as well as Canadian Press.

INTERESTING NEWS.

An interesting fact in connection with the great regatta is that ninety-five per cent of the men taking part in the regatta (captains and crews) are ex-service men, and many of them wear decorations.

There are thirty men who won the M.C., three have the Order of the British Empire, 2 the Distinguished Flying Cross, and quite a number wearing the 1914 Mons Star. One man was observing officer with Col. Wm. Bishop, V.C., premier Canadian birdman, and another was the first Canadian to bomb German territory during the great world war.

Mr. Frank Christy, sailing the Iroquois, is an outstanding sailor among the many here. Frank has sailed for over 35 years. The Iroquois won the Canada's Cup many years ago, was challenged in 1907 by the R.C.Y.C., but retained the Cup, and has not been challenged since.

The Thistle of Kingston is owned by Professor Bruce Taylor, Principal of Queen's University, and sailed by his three daughters as crew: Margaret, a student at law, aged 22 years; Mary, a hospital dietician, aged 20 and Lole, a student at Queen's, aged 18.

The Taylors came frae the Land o' Cakes some eight or ten years ago, and are Scotch, you bet. The girls were brought up on the Clyde River, where they learned all about boats, having sailed boats there when mere children. This family adopts the idea of family re-union, and each year go about the country visiting all relatives, aboard the good ship "Thistle."

During the bad storm of last Wednesday night at Prinyer's Cove, the Taylor girls were just finishing the race when they were caught in the squall. A 50-mile gale was blowing, and it was getting dangerous. The power boats rushed out to the rescue, but the lassies stuck right to their boat, and only after much persuasion accepted a tow to shore. The Thistle finished sixth in the race for the G.W.V.A. Cup.

Commodore Amelius Jarvis is present at the regatta aboard his crack craft Haswell, the largest sailing vessel present. Commodore Jarvis is probably the most travelled and experienced yachtsman on the continent.

Commencing last December, the Commodore sailed in the Southern seas for some 15 or 16 weeks with the Haswell, where dangers from bad courses and weather conditions frighten off many larger boats. During that time he coaled in at one of the islands of the Cannon group, inhabited solely by blacks. Even the Governor was a black. Though intending to remain there but a few days, the Commodore and his crew were feted there for more than a week.

The good old boat Katie Grey, which was a champion some forty-five years ago, is down at Massassaga, the old sail still fluttering in the breeze.

SCRAPPER WINS ON TIME

Smallest Boat in Fleet Won the Cruising Race—Haswell Finished in Front

Belleville, July 17.—"The first shall be last, and the last first," came mighty near being true of the 48-mile race up the Bay of Quinte from Prinyer's Cove to Massassaga Point, three miles east of here.

Twelve boats started in a moderate wind and Vice-Commodore Jarvis, in his handsome schooner Haswell, the largest racing vessel at the L. Y. R. A. rendezvous at "The Cove" showed them all the way from start to finish, but when the time allowances were figured, little Scrapper, the R. C. Y. C. George Cup Challenger belonging to class R. the smallest class in the race, won the cup offered by the Bay of Quinte yacht club for the long race.

Haswell only got ninth place, despite her speedy journey. The race seemed made to order for her, for there was plenty of running and reaching on the trip, but she did not even win her class. Each class was sent away by itself and raced boat to boat for class prizes, while the fleet as a whole raced on time allowance for the silver trophy. Only Haswell and Iroquois, of the Rochester Yacht Club, started in class M. The crew of the slippery sloop, Zoray, of the R. C. Y. C., this year's class champion, was caught napping by the nine o'clock start, and were peacefully nodding after a busy evening. When the Iroquois and Haswell were sent on their way they broke across the line together, but Haswell, as usual, held the weather guage and commenced to pull away. At Glenora she had a nice lead after a 10-mile close haul. Running free up to Deseronto Iroquois gained, but when they hauled up on the wind again Haswell "horsed" right away and beat Iroquois 21.10, but Iroquois time allowance, 21.25, gave her the victory in class M by 15 seconds.

There were only two starters in Class P, William Johnston of the R. C. Y. C. with Seneca, the old Canada's Cup winner, and Percy Roberts of the same club with Saturday's victor, Italia. The Wop crossed 20 yards in front of Seneca, and gaining steadily, beat Seneca a mile or more. Italia caught Iroquois, thought she had started five minutes ahead, at Deseronto, and beat her from there to Massassaga Point.

A Merry Battle.

Behind the big boats there was a merry battle with small Class R racing boats, cruising yawls and veteran 20-footers all mixed up in a heap. Scrapper, the Marconi-rigged George Cup Boat, ultimately won the Bay of Quinte Cup for the race on her time allowance, but she had to battle. She started last of her class at Prinyer's Cove, but led all the rest of them at Glenora, after the 10-mile close haul. On the 11-mile run before the wind to Deseronto they all caught her, and so did the yawl Sylvia, owned by Commodore Casey. However, once they hauled up on the wind for Massassaga Point, where they finished, Crapper overhauled Sylvia and Swamba and won her class by 2.13 over Swamba. Viva II., sailed by Charlie Bourne of the R. C. Y. C., was badly handicapped without a spinnaker for the long run from Glenora to Deseronto, but she finished a bang-up third less than a minute behind Swamba.

In the cruising yawl class Sylvia nosed home in front of the Belleville entry, Temeraire, by 3.33. Whirl of Hamilton, sailed by Norman Robertson, added another to her unbroken string of victories in the 20-foot cruiser class by beating Tantarium of Rochester and Heather of Kingston. Incidentally, she made better time than Swamba and Viva of Class R, and they are 10 years younger than Whirl. When Whirl was in her prime she was the 20-foot champion of the lake.

The order of finish in the fleet race follows:

1—Scrapper, Class R., R. C. Y. C., Toronto.

2—Whirl, 20-foot cruisers, R. C. Y. C., Hamilton.

3—Swamba, Class R., R. C. Y. C., Toronto.

4—Viva, Class R., R. C. Y. C., Toronto.

5—Tanarium, 20-foot cruisers, Rochester.

6—Italia, Class P., R. C. Y. C., Toronto.

7—Heather, 20-foot cruisers, Kingston.

8—Iroquois, Class M., Rochester.

9—Haswell, Class M., R. C. Y. C., Toronto.

10—Seneca, Class P., R. C. Y. C. Toronto.

11—Sylvia, cruising yawls, Kingston.

12—Temeraire, cruising yawls, Belleville.

CHAMPION JOCKEY ARRIVES IN LONDON

Australian Has Ridden 1,500 Winning Horses in 17 Years

London, July 18.—With a record of having ridden 1,500 winners in 17 years on tracks in the Antipodes, Barney Page, an Australian jockey, has just come to London to resume the saddle on English tracks. The first thing he did on landing was to apply for a licence and then announce that he was anxious to know if he could teach anything to English riders.

Page lauded the Australasian rule that forces a rider, once he has entered the jockeys' room at the track, to remain there until the day's racing is finished and to keep absolutely away from the public. This applies whether the jockey is working or not. "In Australia racing is booming and there are undoubtedly many good jockeys there," he said.

MANY ARE AFTER THE ORIOLE MEN

Major Leagues Are Expected to Bid High For the Three Men for Sale

"Jack Dunn has constructed in Baltimore a team of first division major league strength. Despite all offers he has kept it intact. Further, he has kept his players satisfied—no little achievement when every natural ambition would make them want to break into larger fields of endeavor.

"In doing this, however, Dunn has hurt the International League by making a runaway race of the pennant drive. He has had his team so far in front by the end of June that no other city stood a chance.

"At a recent secret gathering other club owners in the circuit threatened to fight for a return of the draft if Dunn did not agree to let some of his stars rise to the majors. So the Baltimore president agreed, and next winter will see three of his best men on the auction block.

"Since McGraw offered $150,000 for two of the Orioles last year and was laughed to scorn; it may be imagined that the bidding will be altitudinous when major league club owners finally get a chance at the precious Baltimoreans."

While driving up to the Massassaga Hotel on Monday afternoon, and watching the progress of a sailing race, a car driven by Mr. Harry Green, Front Street, ran into a stump. He was bandaged, however, afterwards, and he was none the worse for the unpleasant experience.

GLUT OF TITLES DURING THE WAR

Lloyd George Offers to Appoint a Commission to Advise on Titles

London, July 18.—Prime Minister Lloyd George told the House of Commons yesterday that the government was quite prepared to assent to any re-examination of the question of the bestowal of honors which would be satisfactory to the House.

Lists Grow Longer.

In announcing the government's willingness to meet the wishes of the House if it desired a re-examination Mr Lloyd George said that during the last thirty or forty years there had been a considerable increase in the number of honors, owing to the increase in population and wealth and because of the setting up of a new order which had democratized honors to a great extent.

For the last twenty years, said the premier, there had been the same charges as were now being made of trafficking in honor, the employment of touts and a scale of charges. In the last six years there had been exceedingly heavy lists because of the war and the part the civilian population has played in it.

"There never was a time when the honors list was subject to such care and organized scrutiny as now," continued the premier. "During the whole of the last six years, in spite of the careful scrutiny, four names have been mentioned."

The premier announced that the government was prepared to appoint a royal commission to advise on the procedure to be adopted in the future in assisting the prime minister in making recommendations to his majesty of the names of persons deserving honors. The commission would consist of men of independence, interity and experience, the premier declared.

YOUNG MAN DROWNS IN SIGHT OF CROWD

Chatham ,Ont., July 17.—Harold McClaren, aged 21, son of Mr. and Mrs. John McClaren, who lives about four miles from Morpeth, was drowned Sunday evening while swimming in the lake at Terrace Beach, near Morpeth. He swam out some distance and on making for the shore complained of fatigue. His brother went to his assistance, but when only 12 feet from the dock Harold collapsed entirely, slipped from his brother's grasp and sank in deep water.

The body was recovered 10 minutes later, but all efforts to revive him failed. It is not known whether he was seized with a cramp or a sudden heart attack.

The accident occurred while hundreds of tourists and pleasure seekers were passing along the highway by the lake shore, and while many people were enjoying the bathing in the cool waters. It was a great shock to those swimmers who might have gone to his assistance had they not felt perfectly confident that his brother could get him to the dock with ease.

Tongues of Disease

That's just what physical excesses are The normal expenditure of energy always means fatigue; but the excessive and unnecessary expenditure of energy means physical punishment and drained resources. The most common cause of such excesses is eyestrain—not necessarily poor vision, mind you.

EUROPE'S "JEWEL JAG" IS ABOUT OVER

Huge Quantity of Stolen Jewels Dumped on the Paris Market

Paris, July 18.—Europe's 4-year 'jewel jag' is about over and the Paris pre-war expenditures in Petrograd trade forsees the passing of the crisis in the trade that resulted from the dumping of about a billion francs worth of stolen, confiscated and smuggled jewels on the Paris market, Leonard Rosenthal, the jewel expert employed to value the Hapsburg treasure, says the collapse in the precious stone market was prevented only by the war's creation of enough profiteers to absorb the oversupply.

This flood of jewels, Rosenthal says, came in three waves. The first was brought by fleeing Russian aristocrats who smuggled out fortunes in their hair or sewn in the linings of their clothing. Sometimes valuable stones were swallowed to be recovered by the use of emetics, and were even imbedded in the flesh. One Russian prince sold for 3,500,000 francs a group of emeralds his ancestors bought two centuries ago for 480,000. One of the Czar's emeralds was sold in Paris for 32 times its cost. A Russian duke congratulated upon selling his jewels for 10,000,000 replied, "How can I live on 500,000 francs a year?" His varied between 12,000,000 and 15,000,000 francs yearly.

The second wave consisted of jewels valued at 300,000,000 to 400,000,000 confiscated by the Soviets. The third wave was the dispersion of the collections of king and kinglets, princes and dukes of Germany and Austria-Hungary. The Hapsburg court furnished the treasure of 10 centuries and for this Emperor Charles' agents asked 50,000,000 francs but took between 25,000,000 and 30,000,000.

CO-OPERATION MUST SUCCEED BRUTE FORCE

London, July 18.—"How are you Britons, individually and collectively, using your strength?" was the challenge which rang out on Saturday evening in ancient Westminster Abbey when Rev. Canon H. J. Cody, Toronto, preached a stirring sermon to a packed congregation. The honor of preaching in the abbey is a much coveted one and in addition to the large gathering of Canadians there was such a crowd of worshippers at the evening service anxious to hear the famous Toronto preacher that many were obliged to stand in the aisles throughout the service. Those who were present were not disappointed for the canon delivered an eloquent address on the duty and privilege of the strong to help the weak. He declared that in the new age which was just dawning brute force must be a thing of the past and conflict must give way to co-operation, not only among nations, but within the community.

"Oppression reacts upon oppression as surely as the czars of Russia were followed by Lenin and Trotsky," he said.

Canon Cody was heard easily by every member of the congregation and his final challenge was flung out in a voice which penetrated to the utmost corner of the great building.

NEW OIL LAW IS POPULAR

Congress Passes a New Petroleum Law, Favoring Development

Caracas, July 18.—The oil industry is greatly interested in the passage by the Venezuelan Congress of a new petroleum law which is said to be more favorable than any previous similar law of this country, and to afford more workable conditions than any Latin-American law governing petroleum development.

Concessions for exploration are secured from the government in zones of 10,000 hectares each, for a period of three years and for the payment of two cents per hectare as a tax. Within this period the contractor has the right to select up to one-half of each zone for exploitation. There is practically no limit to the amount of acreage allowed to one contractor, although there is a nominal limit of 300,000 hectares for exploration and one-half this amount for exploitation. Above these amounts the financial ability of the purchaser governs.

The exploitation period is 40 years instead of 30 years as formerly. An initial tax of two bolivars per hectare or 16 cents per acre is payable at the beginning of the exploitation period, and annual rentals of two bolivars per hectare are collected for the first three years, four bolivars per hectare are collected for the first three years, four bolivars per hectare for the succeeding 27 years and five bolivars per hectare for the remaining 10 years of exploitation.

Formerly the contractor was obliged to select his quota of acreage in parcels of 200 hectares each, in checkerboard fashion, leaving an equal area as a national reserve. Under the new law the parcels are of 500 hectares or 1,235 acres each and these may be grouped as desired.

The government receives 10 percent royalty except in areas 200 or more kilometers distant from the sea or from Lake Maracaibo, or in areas south of the Andes, the production from which pays only seven and one-half percent royalty. In similar areas taxes are reduced to one-half.

In former laws the contractor was obliged to deposit a guarantee amounting to as much as $1 per hectare to insure compliance with the terms of his contract, but no such guarantees are now required.

Former contracts may be adapted to the new law simply by announcement of the fact to the Ministry of Fomento. It is probable that most of the companies and individuals now holding such former contracts will choose to operate the new and more favorable code.

It was the intention of the Venezuelan authorities to create a law that would be practical and sufficiently attractive to stimulate the development of this important branch of the national resources. That they have succeeded is evidenced by the interest being shown not only by the oil companies already operating, but by the increasing number of representatives of petroleum interests now investigating conditions in this country.

IRISH CARNIVAL OF CRIME

Grant, Minister of Education, stated yesterday morning that he had received a request for an interview from a number of people making up a "non-Catholic" deputation for the purpose of asking the Minister to adopt some standard form of religious instruction in the Public schools of the province.

"They have not laid their plans before me," stated Mr. Grant. "I understand, however, that they wish to have prayers and Scripture readings standardized for used in the schools."

The deputation will wait on the Minister on Thursday.

RESCUER STRUCK GIRL

Windsor, July 18.—The heroic effort of Lloyd Fowler, aged 30, 59 Cameron avenue to save the life of 26-year-old Ella Kinney, Crawford avenue, when she was drawning in the Detroit River at the bridge, Avenue Beach, Sunday afternoon, would have been futile and similarly disastrous to Fowler, had he not struck the girl until she was knocked unconscious. The girl grabbed Fowler by the throat and was strangling him. He managed to break loose and then struck her several severe blows, until she became unconscious. Fowler shouted to shore and two other men bathers, whose names were not secured, swam to the spot and assisted Fowler in bringing the girl to the shore.

JOCELYN OF THE BLUE ARROW LINE

By RAY LEWIS

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"So our little girl is determined to come home," said Captain McDonald slowly, tossing back to his wife the letter she had given him. "What shall we do about it, Molly?"

"There's nothing to be done," returned his wife. "Didn't you see that she was going to start at once? You'll have to meet her tomorrow if we dock in time."

Twenty-five years ago, attractive Molly Steward had braved her parents' opposition and married Bruce McDonald, a powerful young Scotchman, with more skill at managing perverse mule drivers than culture or education. But Molly had not been unhappy.

Then had arrived a little girl so pretty even in her first baby days that Molly, searching her brain for the daintiest name she knew, named her Jocelyn. And the child grew up to fit the name—slim, graceful, with softly curling sun-kissed hair and eyes like blue velvet pansies.

Vaguely at first, then quite definitely, the parents grew to realize that the crudeness of the girl's surroundings were not calculated to develop her mind and character as they wished. And there was the question of education. After many hours of anxious meditation, Molly sat down and wrote to her widowed sister—and enclosed a snapshot of Jocelyn.

As a result, Jocelyn went to live with her aunt in a distant city, where she went to school, learned how to speak the king's English correctly and how to dress. There had been money enough for it all without any asking of charity from the aunt, for Captain McDonald, in spite of diminishing traffic on the canal, had made good with his Blue Arrow line barges.

As the years passed the girl's visits to her father and mother had become less frequent, and they, considering the girl's welfare, had been satisfied. Now, sudden and unexpected, had come her letter saying that she was "tired of being away so long from her own home" and that she was "coming before they could tell her not to."

Jack Stafford threw his portfolio down on the bank of the canal, removed his straw hat and mopped his brow. Tramping the towpath on a hot August afternoon, even in the interests of a free lance story on the "Passing of the Old Erie," wasn't altogether delightful.

"A nice, slow motor boat that would steer itself would just about hit me off," he grumbled. "Then I could sketch as I traveled and yet go slow enough not to miss anything."

As if in answer to his wish a boat poked her nose around the bend of the canal—but not the motor boat of his desire. Instead appeared the head barge of a tow.

"Jupiter!" cried Jack suddenly. "An idea for fair!"

And when the barges drew abreast he stepped forward, picked out the man who seemed to be in charge and begged of him board and lodging for a few days, compensation to be given accordingly.

The man hearkened, then called his wife. "Molly, this young man wants to take a trip with us; can we put him up?"

On the lips of his wife formed a refusal. Then she checked it. "Why, if there is room on one of the other barges. Our daughter has just come home and our bunks are full, but you're welcome to take your meals with us."

So Stafford found himself installed and started on the plodding journey to Buffalo. The tow had been held up awhile at one of the locks as a previous string of barges was put through. Jack had climbed out to sketch the dock.

As he swung back to the forward barge, the occupant of a low rocking chair in the cabin doorway looked up quickly. Taken off his guard, Jack stared, unbelieving. Then he bowed, and said, "I'm going with the tow for a way. Are we fellow travelers?"

Jocelyn smiled. "I'm the captain's daughter," she returned simply. "So I guess we are."

Followed long, lazy days of leisurely travel, and the young people soon became oblivious to all but each other.

Long ago Jack's article on the old canal had lost much of its importance. Why worry about outside occupations when father's considerable business would some day be his—a business which in the meanwhile gave him a comfortable berth and a month's vacation? And yet—if it wasn't for his dependence on his father wouldn't he perhaps allow himself to think of this glorious girl more seriously? As it was—well, dad was an excellent parent and all that, but he did have exaggerated ideas about the importance of family and all that sort of thing. If his son ever suggested such a contingency as marriage with a barge captain's daughter, dad would go up in the air and Jack's prospects along with him.

But the little god of love seldom takes into account the parents of his victims. One stormy night Jocelyn and Jack stood together on the prow of the barge, peering into the night for the lights of the lock ahead, and thrillingly conscious of the nearness of the other. A sudden gust, fragrant with unshed rain, caught the fold of the girl's ulster and, to steady herself, she grasped at what she thought was the sleeve of Jack's coat. It proved to be his hand. At the sudden touch Jack forgot his father, his business—everything but the girl at his side.

"Jocelyn!" he cried hoarsely and folded her in his arms.

And Jocelyn, her velvet eyes lifted to his, let him see the love and surrender in them.

"You're going to marry me, girl!" he said, shaking her a little to emphasize his seriousness, "as soon as we can get the license after we dock."

"All—all right," said Jocelyn, breathless, but happy.

True to his word, Jack, the day the tow reached port, went up to the city hall to make investigations. Then he went around to the post office for his accumulated mail—bills, a letter from the firm, one from his father. Poor father! What a surprise he was going to get when he received the letter Jack had just mailed. Yet father got in his surprise first.

"Dear Jack—Don't know where this will find you. I shall be in Georgian Bay very shortly. Am going to marry Mrs. Cynthia Arnold. Everything O K. at factory. Yours,

"DAD."

Slowly Jack folded the letter and slipped it in his pocket. So his father was going to be married and going for Georgian bay for a honeymoon. He knew the lady by hearsay—knew that she was quietly well-to-do, of unassailable social position. This unexpected alliance on his father's part would not make the bargeman's daughter any more welcome to his father. Well, as far as that went, he would give up his father, his business, everything, before Jocelyn.

And then Jocelyn gave him the greatest surprise of all.

"It's all right about the license, honey," he said. Then, holding out his father's letter, "as long as you're coming into the family, you might as well know you're going to have a step-mother-in-law. I hope he will be happy. No one could be as happy as we are going to be!"

But Jocelyn was reading. "Am going to marry—why, Jack, how funny! Mrs. Cynthia Arnold—that's my aunt!"

Girls Who String Pearls.

Lightness of touch and quickness of eye are the first essentials of the professional pearl-stringer. Most girls have both gifts, so they make better workers than men. Yet there are hardly more than a hundred girls engaged in this occupation in the whole of London.

Pearl-stringing sounds easy enough, but girls have to serve an apprenticeship of three years before they are considered competent.

They must be able to do many things. They must be proficient in sorting pearls for color and graduating them for size. They must also be able to work out fancy patterns—most of them the designs of the firm, though sometimes a wealthy customer sends in a little pattern of his own. Artistry in the pearl-stringers is encouraged, and many of the prettiest designs originate with the girls themselves.

Often the hole of the pearl is too small for the silk. It is then enlarged by an instrument called a brochure. After a time the girls become expert in detecting artificial pearls by means of an instrument like a stereoscope—except that it has only one eyepiece. This instrument shows the difference in lighting effects.

State Soldiers Will Guard Men While They Dig

President Harding Sends Instructions to the Coal Mining States to See That Every Man Willing to Work is Afforded Protection

FEDERAL FORCES TO BE ON HAND

Washington, July 19. — President Harding has telegraphed the Governors of all the coal mining States asking them to encourage the owners to resume work in their mines and urging them to extend to these mines every safeguard, and to every man willing to work every protection, and the President adds to his message that the full support of the Federal Government will be behind this pledge.

Behind the temperate wording of the President's telegram is a stern message. Stripped of its verbal mildness it is as if the President had said to the Governors:

"Never mind the justice or injustice of the controversy. The mines must be operated by such labor as is obtainable. If the strikers attempt to prevent non-union men working, the Government expects you to put the State troops around them and to defend them while they dig coal. If your troops are not sufficient you are to call on the Government and the Federal soldiers will take over the job."

Government Statement.

This language was not used, of course, but that is what the President's message means. Its significance lies in the circumstances that the maintenance of order and the protection of people and property by every means in a State's power is the normal function and course of every Governor.

FREE STATE ARMY HAS 2,000 PRISONERS NOW

Continues to Repeat Successes Against the Irregulars in Irish Battles

Dublin, July 19.—Talk in Dublin continues to centre around the approaching operations on a big scale against the republican irregulars, but the Free State commanders so far have successfully hidden their plans. When an anticipated movement will begin is still only a matter of conjecture.

Meanwhile, the national army troops continue to reap repeated successes. It is officially announced that they now have captured Baltinglass, Tullow and Newtonbarry.

Including the prisoners captured by Free State troops during the recent fighting in Dublin, the Nationals now hold approximately 2,100 prisoners.

The Mountjoy and Kilmainham prisons are said to be filled to capacity.

An unusual order issued by one of the leaders of the irregulars, it was reported from Kilkenny, was found in the possession of a prisoner when he was captured by Free State soldiers. The document, it was said, instructs the recipient to "commandeer labor, work day and night and make all roads impassable. The man who disobeys must receive the extreme penalty.

"You are at liberty to inflict the same on anybody who disobeys your orders."

JUDGE OBJECTS TO KNITTING

London, July 19.—Women must not knit in court, according to the edict of Justice Horridge. The Justice announced this when he stopped hearing testimony at the Sussex assizes on seeing two well dressed women seated near the dock plying their needles industriously. He called an officer and told him to stop the women from knitting. The Justice stated that anything similar to knitting which is liable to distract the attention of the judge while hearing testimony, would not be allowed in his court.

LENINE "MURDERED", BUT IS "RECOVERING"

Story of Russian Leader Being Poisoned by Radicals

(Canadian Press Despatch).

Stockholm, July 19.—Not withstanding the denial issued by the Soviet embassy at Riga, the correspondent of Svenska Dagbladet wired today from Riga that he had obtained confirmation of his despatch that Premier Lenine had been poisoned. Cyanide of Potassium was the poison used, he said.

London, July 19.—An exchange telegraph despatch from Stockholm yesterday quotes the Riga correspondent for the Svenska Dagbladet as saying he has been reliably informed that Premier Lenine of Soviet Russia, has been murdered.

The correspondent says it is believed the Soviet Premier was poisoned on a train while journeying to a Caucasian bathing resort. According to the correspondent's information, the assassination is attributed to representatives of radical communists now in power in Moscow.

The Premier's body was said to have been thrown from a train while crossing the bridge over the River Don at Rostov.

According to the message, one of Premier Lenine's attendants, a member of the executive committee of the Third Internationale, reported as an accomplice in the assassination, is now impersonating the Soviet Premier at a bathing resort.

Moscow, July 18.—Leon. Kameneff, president of the Moscow Soviet, upon returning today from a visit to Premier Lenine, told the correspondent that the Premier was so improved in health now that it was only a matter of a few weeks until his health would be fully established.

NINETY PER CENT. FAVOR STRIKE?

Only Ending of U.S. Strike Will Prevent Canadian Shopmen Going Out

Montreal, July 19.—Heads of railroad employes unions left Montreal to-day to appeal to the Prime Minister against the action of the Canadian Railways in putting wage cuts into effect before Conciliation Boards under Lemieux Industrial Disputes Act had given decision on reductions. One official said the situation was so grave that "sheet of tissue paper only hangs between Canada and railway strike."

Ottawa, July 19.—The Grand Trunk Railway will not recede from its position to put into effect the wage reductions averaging about six per cent and applying to so called stationary employes, according to a letter received to-day by A. R. Mosher, President of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employes.

Washington, July 19.—An appeal was issued to-day by the American Federation of Labor Council, "to all workers to support railroad workers in their efforts to secure just settlement of railroad shops trades dispute."

Winnipeg, Man., July 19.—Only two alternatives are open to prevent a strike of railroad shopmen throughout Canada—the termination of the strike in the United States or the withdrawal by the Canadian railroads of the reduction in wages—in the opinion of International Union officials, declared S. R. C. McCutcheon, vice-president of the Boilermakers' Union, and Executive Board member of Division No. 4, Railway Employes' Department American Federation of Labor, who returned yesterday from Montreal where he acted on the schedule committee.

Fully 95 per cent of the membership who have recorded their votes are in favor, of laying down tools in preference to accepting the wage cut, Mr. McCutcheon stated.

The full vote of the shopmen will be known next Monday, when the schedule committee meets again in Montreal.

SOVIETS OFFER NEW PROPOSALS

On Compensation For Confiscated Property and Russian Debt

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

The Hague, July 19.—New proposals in connection with compensation for confiscated property and payment of the Russian debt were advanced by the Russian delegation at the meeting to-day with the non-Russian commissioner of the conference on Russian affairs here.

The Russians suggested an arrangement by which Russia would undertake to negotiate directly with foreigners for payment of compensation for confiscated property and with bond holders for a settlement of the Russian debt.

THE WANDERING "SHEEP" WAS WISE

Two Stories Told at a Scottish Rotarian Club by Lord Aberdeen and Sir James Taggart.

London, July 19.—A unique story-telling contest was held at Aberdeen recently between the Marquis of Aberdeen and Temair, a former Governor-General of Canada, and Sir James Taggart, a former Lord Provost of Aberdeen. The Marquis of Aberdeen and Temair had challenged the Rotary Club of the Scottish city to set up the Clubs two best men against him in the competition, but he found one was more than his match, as Sir James Taggart won by 60 votes to Lord Aberdeens 13. The story-telling match was held at a luncheon of the Aberdeen Rotary Club.

Sir James Taggart led off by a story about his opponent. Once, he said, when Lord Aberdeen was attending the assemblies in Edinburgh he was walking along High street. A drunken man knocked up against him and was sharply rebuked by a policeman, who said: "Do you know that you have run into the Marquis of Aberdeen and Temair?"

"Good lord," the man exclaimed, "am I as bad as that? Is there two of them?"

Lord Aberdeen's first story was of a parish minister, who was rebuking a shepherd for leaving his kirk and going to worship elsewhere.

"You are a shepherd Donald, and so am I," he said," and you would not like to see any of your sheep going to pastures they did not belong to."

"Weel, sir," replied Donald, "I dinna ken that I would object, gin the girss (grass) wis better."

SCHOOL BOARD ESTIMATES

Slightly Lower Than Last Year Despite Increases in Some Departments

At a special meeting of the Board of Education held last evening the principal business transacted was the adopting of the estimates for the ensuing year and passing same on to the City Council. Although there has been increases in expenditures in some departments, Mr. Elliott, chairman of finance in presenting the estimates stated that by economizing the Board was able to ask the City Council $1,659.19 less than last year and this in spite of the fact that the Board is losing this year the Government grant of $1,200 for the High School. This is owing to the report of the High School Inspector who refused to recommend a grant owing to the conditions of the school premises. Some other business of a general nature was transacted.

Members present were Messrs. A. McGie, F. S. Deacon, H. Chown, J. Elliott, F. H. Chesher, A. Jones, P. Harrison, G. T. Woodley, D. V. Sinclair, D. G. Bleecker and Mrs. A. McFee.

In the absence of Mr. Ackerman, Chairman of the Board, Mr. A. McGie filled this position.

MASONRY SHOWS REAL GROWTH

Grand Master's Address Tells of Progress in Number of Members

COL. W. N. PONTON

Port Arthur, July 18.—Some orphans of Canadian Masons are being cared for in the established homes of the Oddfellows and Foresters, some in the county Houses of Refuge, and at least two in Roman Catholic institutions, declared Lieut.-Col. W. N. Ponton, Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge, in the course of his address, in which he urged immediate measures for the purchase of a large central site or estate, and the erection thereon of a Masonic home, hospital and school, for the orphan children and widow dependents of deceased Masons, and for infirm and aged Masons without means.

"More and more Masonry must become the auxiliary the handmaid—of the Church militant," said the Grand Master. "And, like the Church, she is a ladder and channel of service. Sane and wholesome religion should be normally enjoyed and openly professed by every craftsman, who, if he believes in the brotherhood of man, must also believe in the Fatherhood of God."

The Grand Master set a membership mark of 100,000 to be attained by this jurisdiction during the year 1923. He was confident that it could be done. He recommended that each member contribute $5 toward the erection of the proposed Masonic home, making a fund of half a million to start with. The membership at the present time is approximately 94,500.

"Have we been faithful rulers of this great craft of 525 lodges in this great jurisdiction which is to be measured not by its immense area of almost half a million square miles, but by the number of square men—men good and true—of the household of the faithful whom it contains?" asks the Grand Master in the annual address to the Grand Lodge.

"By our intercourse with you throughout the year, and by our reports now to be submitted to you (but also always by the generous and considerate spirit of the craft), we will be judged. As your Grand Master—constantly in contact with all their activities, I can assure you I know of no Grand Lodge officer—no member of a committee—that has not done his full duty—none has buried his talents.

"Yet I feel all will acquit me of undue discrimination if I commend to your special approbation for arduous work continuously well done throughout the year the Grand Treasurer, the Grand Secretary and the Chairmen of the Finance and Benevolent Committees."

FARMERS HEAD THE GROUPS IN THE MANITOBA ELECTIONS

BRITAIN WOULD BE BANKRUPT UNDER LABORITE RULE

(Canadian Press Cable)

London, July 18.—In an electioneering speech at Mumbles last night, Sir Alfred Mond, stressing the necessity for people of ability dealing with financial questions at present time, said that if the Laborites came into power, tomorrow the banks would put an embargo on finances and all financial operations would cease.

POWER FAMINE TO BE AVERTED

Minister of Railways Suggests Compromise With Hydro Commission

SITUATION IS SERIOUS

Central Ontario Faced With Danger of Widespread Distress

Ottawa, July 19.—A serious industrial situation in central Ontario will be averted if a proposal made to-day by Hon. W. C. Kennedy, Minister of Railways and Canals, is accepted by Sir Adam Beck, Chairman of the Ontario Hydro-electric Commission.

There has been a dispute between the Railway Department and the Hydro Commission over the terms which the latter would accept in respect to the lease of the water at Ranney Falls, east of Peterborough. The commission has generators in place there and is ready to connect and generate 10,000 horse-power for the Peterboro', Belleville and Trenton district.

Asking $21,000 Annual Rent.

The Dominion Government has been asking for $21,000 for annual rental of the surplus waters running over the Raney Falls dam, and there are other conditions which Sir Adam Beck considers onerous. Yesterday there was a cut in the power supply and to-day another reduction was made. As a result the President of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce reported that 1,000 workers were idle in factories depending on the water power. Other places in central Ontario are seriously affected.

Kennedy Blames Hydro.

Mr. Kennedy, it is understood, contends that the whole responsibility of the situation rests with the Hydro Commission. The minister states that immediately upon the signing of the lease the commission can use the water and generate the necessary power and the terms agreed upon by any arbitrators who may be named will be accepted by the Government.

PROBE CHARGES MADE BY G.W.V.A.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, July 19.—The Ottawa Citizen says this morning that the commission to probe the charges made by G. W. V. A. against the pension board will be announced today and will consist of Col. Ralston, Halifax, who commanded the battalion overseas, Col. Dubuc, Montreal, former commandant of the 22nd battalion, and Col. Walter McKeown, of Toronto.

Three Liberal Ministers and Speaker of Last Govt. Defeated

NORRIS RETAINS SEAT

Only Six of His Supporters Will be in Next Assembly

Winnipeg, July 19.—Manitoba is to have a Government of United Farmers, following the precedent set just a year ago by the Province of Alberta. Yesterday the Liberal Government of Hon. C. S. Norris went to the electors for a vote of confidence and was rejected. Premier Norris himself was returned in Lansdowne, his old constituency, and Hon. Robert Jacobs, his new Attorney-General, will get a place in Winnipeg, but three of his colleagues, Hon. Dr. Thornton, Minister of Education, Hon. John Williams, Minister of Agriculture, and Hon. C. D. McPherson, Minister of Public Works, went down to defeat.

Probable Standing.

With all constituencies outside of Winnipeg heard from, although the returns from some are incomplete, it appears that aside from Winnipeg's ten seats, the standing of the parties will be:

Farmer, 24; Liberal, 5; Conservative, 4; Independent, 7; Labor, 2.

Dixon, Labor, is the only Winnipeg member to be elected on first choices. Indications are, however, that Winnipeg will elect three Laborites, three Liberals, two Conservatives, one Independent and one Progressive. If this is the case, the standing in the province, with three deferred elections to come, will be as follows:

Farmer and Progressive	26
Liberal	8
Conservative	6
Independent	8
Labor	5

Norris Will Resign.

Premier Norris undoubtedly will place his resignation in the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor. He will be asked to carry on until the farmers have had a chance to organise, and they will be called together at an early date—elected and probably defeated candidates—to select a leader, who will become automatically Premier of the province. At this time it appears to be very doubtful if George C. Chipman will be elected in Winnipeg, and it is impossible to predict what effect his personal defeat might have on the prospect of his election to the leadership. Mr. Chipman has been considered in many quarters to be the favorite for the position in the event of a farmer victory. He has been for years editor of the Grain Growers' Guide, and therefore associated closely with the economic and educational work of the organized farmers' movement in the western provinces.

OUTWARD TRADE NOW GOING AHEAD

And Consumption Imports For Last Month Show a Decrease

Ottawa, July 19.—Canada's export trade is going ahead. Domestic merchandise exported last month totaled $71,700,546 as compared with $69,148,171 in May and $58,576,299 in June of last year.

Imports entered for consumption compared with previous month show a decrease. Last month imports were $61,068,729; in May $66,121,374; in June 1921, $57,643,658.

The grand total of Canadian trade was $134,775,784 in June this year; $136,580,094 in May and $117,226,117 in June last year.

HERE'S A JOB FOR OUR MAYOR

Two English Girls Apply to Mayor of Victoria for Husbands—All in Vain

Victoria, B. C., July 19.—Husbands are scarce in the Old Country and English girls are turning to the overseas nations of the Empire in search of husbands, according to information received by Mayor William Marchant.

Two Manchester young ladies wrote to his worship inquiring if he had any husbands in view likely to suit us; and if so full particulars will be sent by us in our next letter, telling all that is wished to be known."

The mayor frankly admitted that he did not know of any young men, but he is keeping the two photographs which were enclosed in the letter to show to any young men who are interested.

KEEPS FATHER'S BODY PRESERVED 38 YEARS

Aged Man Gazes Daily on Face of Late Parent

Paris, July 19.—In a picturesque mountain valley situated in the Pyde Dome department, close beside the village cemetery at Viverols, stands a little private chapel. It is the property of a distinguished archaeologist, who built it in 1885 at the death of his father. Hermetically sealed to the public, all inquisitive eyes being carefully kept away, this chapel contains an extraordinary coffin in which the archaeologist, who himself is to-day a man of 80, has for 38 years kept his father's body preserved in spirits like an anatomical specimen. The devoted son could not bear the idea of never again seeing his venerated parent in the flesh. So, having obtained permission of civil and religious authorities, he built a zinc coffin with a glass top. In this, immersed in alcohol, he laid his father's body, fully dressed in every-day clothes. Every morning the old man visits this strange tomb and gazes upon his father's face, which, on the authority of one who knew him intimately, is in a state of perfect preservation.

GENERAL IDLENESS IRISH PROBLEM CRUX

Armed Youths with Nothing to do on Every Street Corner

Montreal, July 19.—The crux of the Irish problem is the general idleness among the youth of the country, says Dr. G. E. Armstrong, Canadian surgeon, who has just returned to his home here from Ireland, where he received a degree from Dublin University.

"The press in general," said Dr. Armstrong, "does not seem to have seized what appeared to me to be the essential and fundamental condition of things in southern Ireland. It struck me, as it did every person I saw, that the general idleness among the youth of the country was perhaps more responsible for the condition of affairs than anything else. On every street corner and turning of country roads there were invariably groups of boys ranging in age from 12 to 20, just standing about with sullen, morose expressions. In practically every case these boys are armed. Who are they, and why do they stand about like that? They are the rebels, is the answer; young boys and men devoid of education, matured since the war, who have never worked in their lives. There is no work for them. As there is neither coal nor iron in these parts there are no industries and the great problem is to find something for these boys to do—something to distract their minds, and to encourage an ambition for better things.

"The population is idle and disgruntled, no employment in sight, and this seems to me the crux of the whole situation. Idleness is the root of all evil, and never has it been better demonstrated than over there at this time."

CANADIAN SHIP WHICH LEFT QUEBEC FOR ARCTIC TRIP THIS WEEK

Snapshot taken in Quebec harbor of the government exploration vessel, "Arctic," which left Tuesday for northern waters. The "Arctic" is one of the best known exploration ships afloat, and has made a number of trips under command of the veteran master, Capt. Joseph Elzear Bernier (on right), who is again commanding the vessel. This will be Capt. Bernier's twenty-seventh trip, and, in spite of his three score and ten years, he is in excellent form and eager to face the cold winds of the far north once more. J. D. Craig, C.E., of the department of interior, is to be in charge of the party. Capt. Bernier will be in charge of the ship only. Inspector Willcocks, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Ottawa, is in charge of the party of police who will be taken north by the "Arctic", and has loaded enough provisions to last them two years. Inspector Willcocks declared they would go as far north as Ellesmere Land, and would collect duties, do patrol and exploration work.

BEGAN AS OFFICE BOY, IS NOW GENERAL MANAGER

John J. Scully Becomes Gen. Manager of C.P.R. Eastern Lines.

JOHN J. SCULLY

The Canadian Pacific operates something like 20,000 miles of railroad, and its employees number something like 80,000. On such a long road, and amidst such a large number of co-workers, one can only reach distinction and success by hard work and consistent application.

John J. Scully, who has just been appointed General Manager for Eastern Lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway, is a typical example of railway men who climb to the top of the ladder. On January 4th, 1887, when in his fifteenth year, young Scully embarked on his railroading career when he joined the Canadian Pacific as office boy in the offices of the Car Accountant at Montreal. In February, 1888, he became a clerk in the same office. Moving to Farnham, Quebec, in June, 1888, he became clerk there to the Assistant Superintendent. In August, 1890, he returned to Montreal headquarters as clerk to the Superintendent. April, 1891, saw him return to Farnham to his former position in that town. Mr. Scully joined the Mechanical Department of the railway at Montreal in March, 1893, as clerk. In September, 1894, he was transferred to Toronto Junction as clerk in the Mechanical Department there. Evidently Mr. Scully made good headway at Toronto Junction, for in March, 1898, he was appointed assistant to the Master Mechanic. In August, 1901, he was promoted to be assistant to the Master Mechanic at Winnipeg. Mr. Scully gained wide experience in Western Canada. In August, 1902, he became chief clerk in the General Superintendent's office at Winnipeg. In June, 1903, he became Assistant Superintendent for the Western Division. Promotions following were: July, 1903, chief clerk to Assistant General Manager, Winnipeg; April, 1904, Assistant Superintendent at Brandon; August, 1904, Superintendent at Brandon; November, 1906, Superintendent at Kenora; May, 1910, Superintendent Western Division; July, 1910, General Superintendent, Saskatchewan Division; April, 1922, General Superintendent at North Bay for Algoma Division.

Some few years ago George H. Ham visited one of the towns where Mr. Scully was stationed. A lady friend was speaking to George about the town, and telling him about its many fine qualities, "and one never need an alarm clock in our house," she continued.

"You are up with the sun, I suppose," said George.

"No," was the reply, "We're up with John J. Scully. Every morning at half past seven sharp, winter and summer, he goes past our door, and that is our alarm."

"John J. Scully is a great worker, and one of the best of men," added George.

Mr. Scully's wide experience in East and West will be a great acquisition to him in dealing with the many problems of his present position. The new General Manager of the Eastern Lines, C.P.R., is very popular, and has received congratulations from all over the country on his promotion. He succeeds Mr. Alfred Price, who after 40 years' service with the C.P.R., has relinquished his duties on the advice of his physicians and has been granted extended leave of absence.

COMMONS PREPARING TO EXPEL BOTTOMLEY

He Will be Given an Opportunity to State His Case to the House

London, July 19.—As the first step towards the expulsion of Horatio Bottomley from membership in the House of Commons, the Home Secretary, Rt. Hon. Edward Shortt, K.C., moved in the House for certified copies of his conviction for fraud, Bottomley having recently been found guilty of a series of frauds in connection with the Victory Bond Club and other enterprises, and having been sentenced to penal servitude for seven years.

When these certified copies are received the leader of the House of Commons, Rt. Hon. Austen Chamberlain, will formally move for Bottomley's expulsion. Bottomley, who represents South Hackney in the Commons, will be given an opportunity to make an explanation of his position on the floor of the House, and it is understood that his present intention is to avail himself of the opportunity. He appealed against his conviction, but lost his appeal, and pending the outcome of this proceeding action in the House was deferred.

BATHING MORE POPULAR

Not in Belleville

Toronto, July 19.—Civic bathing stations are being patronized on a much larger scale this year than last, although the Sunnyside, which was used by multitudes last year is not open yet. Statistics from the Property Department show that during the first two weeks of July this year, 2,090 boys attended the Fisherman's Island Station, as compared with 1,115 in the same time last year; 8,150 boys attended the Don station as compared with 3,050 last year, and 3,450 attended the Western Sandbar Station, compared with 2,211 last year.

FIND MORE RELICS NEAR PENETANG

Penetanguishene, Ont., July 19.—Indians on Christian Island, stirred ure in the River Wye, have been busy digging around the ruins of Fort Ste. Marie the Second and have recovered several mementoes of the French mission to Ontario centuries ago. These include the inscribed corner-stone which was taken by the Jesuits from their first fort on the mainland when they had to abandon it under the attacks of the ferocious Iroquois. This stone was incorporated in the new building on Christian Island, but only four Indians know where is at present. The finders could not read the inscription.

There is also an iron inkwell thought to have been used by the missionaries, two ancient keys dug up inside the old fort, and two knives.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

Old Bill Teeple's Ghost.

The young rabbit came out of the dogwoods and entered the pasture. A leisurely young one and inexperienced. I was too far away to be sure, but I think she was after dandelions. The recent rains have started fresh leaves to grow. Instinct taught her to be alert and she sat up frequently to look behind her. We can learn much from the rabbit. We have an idea, most of us, that we are hunting animals. It is to laugh. There is only one hunter in ten thousand, the rest are hunted. There is a man hunt on all the time. In nine cases out of ten they get him. And when they get him they eat him. Our young men went to the war and saved this land from the Hun. And what do we do with those who were fortunate, or is it unfortunate, enough to come back? Some of them would have been in great luck if they had never seen the sun set on Passchendaele or seen the sun rise on that last awful morning at Vimy Ridge. What do we do with our returned soldiers? We hunt them! Great hunting, O wolves!

The little lady rabbit nibbled her young dandelion leaves and the world went very well then. There was nothing in front and she was quite positive there was nothing behind her. But above? Look aloft, O thou foolish thing! Big Sis Swamp Owl floated out of nowhere and halted way up in the sky. She saw Miss Rabbit. She began to pussyfoot. You would think that silent killer was afraid to stir a leaf, to snap a twig. Not like a hawk, "like a thunderbolt he falls", not like a hawk but like a falling fragment of cloud, noiseless as old Death, Sis Owl lowered herself gently to the ground. It was getting too dark to see precisely what happened, but I heard a cry like the wail of a hurt baby, a shadow went fleeting towards the cedars and all was still. "Such is life!" I soliloquised, "we may be here this evening and the chances are we won't be here at dawn."

Somebody is going up in the air all the time. It is fatal. The sky overhead is full of dinosaurs and chicken hawks. The flying reptiles get the men and the chicken hawks get the chickens!

I climbed to the loft of the Wigwam for, like Uncle Toby, I wished I were asleep. And there sat Ole Bill Teeple's ghost.

"Son," he said, "I want to tell you somethin'. One world at a time is good fishin' The great motto of the universe, painted on the roof of heaven eons ago, is: 'One World at a Time!' All the earths of the universe are taught this in their infancy and they do as they are told, all but this one. This here world of your'n is always neglectin' its business to poke its old inflamed and unbeautiful proboscis into the next world. If you people would let the next world alone for three years and cultivate this one you'd pay off the national debt. The time wasted on the next world would make this one a paradise. If all the ginnies employed in telling their neighbors what the next world is and isn't like and how to get there would go to work at some useful employment you would be all lending money out at interest. One world at a time is good fishin'. You've gotta learn to mind your own business."

"Cock-a-doodle-doo-oo!

And ole Bill Teeple's ghost was gone.

The Khan.

ULSTERMEN FREED FROM INTERNMENT

Free State Troops Swoop Down on Camp and Disarm Guard

Belfast, July 19.—Dundalk inhabitants spent a restless morning owing to firing, which lasted several hours. They were relieved later when it was known that Free State troops had swooped down upon an internment camp, disarmed the guards took them prisoner, and then informed a score of bewildered Ulstermen that they might consider themselves released.

Some of the released prisoners had been captives for two months. They included farmers, storekeepers and clerks, who had been taken to the camp blindfolded.

FARM PROSPECTS ARE EXCELLENT

Crops are Now Being Harvested and are Satisfactory

Following is a summary of reports made by Agricultural Representatives to the Ontario Department of Agriculture:

Haying has been rushed the past week, between showers, and is practically finished in a majority of the counties. Some of the cut will suffer from weathering, but the crop generally will be a satisfactory one.

Alfalfa in the Lake Erie counties is ready for the second cutting, and has been proving a very good crop for fodder.

In Essex and Kent the greater part of the fall wheat has been cut, and harvesting of the crop will be general this week. In the Lake Erie counties there has been some injury from Hessian fly, but speaking generally, the grain promises to be good both in yield and quality.

In some of the counties barley is about ready for cutting, and looks well from every standpoint. Oats also promise to be heavy in yield, but there are some complaints of smut.

In the great corn growing county of Essex—raised chiefly for the ear—the corn crop is described as an unusually good one, standing from five to six feet high and bursting into tassel. In some of the counties where raised for the silo it is regarded as being rather backward owing to cool weather in the early summer.

Potatoes are likely to have a good yield this season, but the early varieties are said to be doing better than those planted later.

Lincoln reports peach prospects as very good. Spraying for the grapehopper has been general during the week.

The general outlook for apples is bright so far as quantity is concerned, but the quality is likely to be uneven. Durham reports apple scab prevalent in nearly all orchards except where sprayed, and says that some orchards had to be given a fourth spray this season. Lincoln reports a ready sale of early varieties of apples.

The season has been witnessing an unusual visitation of insect pests. The latest to appear is the army worm, reported as follows by the Lennox and Addington representative: "An outbreak of the army worm is reported near Roblin. The larvae have only started work, but considerable damage has already been done to the second crop of alfalfa, potatoes and cabbages. As the larvae is not in sufficient numbers to warrant the trouble of trenching, we have recommended that poisoned bran be broadcasted over the areas affected."

Middlesex voices the general opinion regarding live stock when it says: "The grazing districts report practically the same number of cattle carried as last year. This fact is accounted for through the purchase of increased numbers of stockers and feeders during last fall and this spring. Pastures have been keeping up excellently and the cattle are in good shape."

Good milch cows are bringing around $80 to $90 in Lennox and Addington, poorer ones $55 to $60, and cows for canning from ⅞c to 1½c a pound. York reports sales of cattle during the week at 8c a pound.

Old time activity is being manifested in swine raising. Essex says "Hog stock is increasing. A considerable number of pure-bred Yorkshire pigs are being reared and will greatly increase our breeding stock of bacon hogs."

Durham says: "Hogs are again popular, and many lots are being prepared for market, although the number is not much greater than normal."

York reports hogs as being comparatively scarce at $14.50 a cwt. at country points. In some counties, however, hogs are quoted as low as $13.

Lambs are doing well in Muskoka and Parry Sound, selling locally at from $7 to $8 each.

Bruce complains that egg production has fallen off considerably during the past few weeks.

A few fields have already been plowed for the new fall wheat in several counties.

King George School.

Mr. B. Jarvis, architect of the Board, wrote the Board that a certain quantity of joist procured for the new King George School was not of that quality that it should be and he had so notified the contractor, Messrs Manley & Son.

Mr. McGie stated that the building committee had notified Mr. Manley not to use the joist in question. The committee had refused the joist. The matter might be arranged between the architect, the inspector and the contractors.

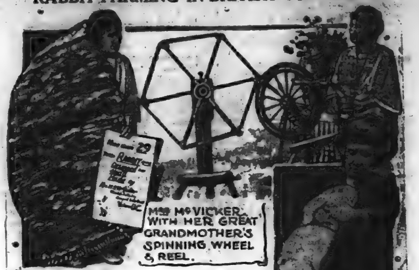
Mr. Sinclair—The Board should uphold the building committee in this matter.

Mr. Elliott—Let the contractor understand that the Board will uphold the action of the building committee in this matter.

A motion prevailed that report of building committee, the architect and clerk of the works be approved of and the matter be left with them to settle.

This completed the business and the Board adjourned until the September meeting.

RABBIT FARMING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA



MISS McVICKER WITH HER GREAT GRANDMOTHER'S SPINNING WHEEL & REEL.

A SPLENDID HEARTH RUG MADE FROM 29 TANNED RABBIT SKINS.

"GREY BOY" A NINE POUND FLEMISH GIANT.

MRS. McVicker, of "Tisvilde," Prospect Lake Vancouver Island, has one of the largest, if not quite the largest, rabbitry in British Columbia, and for the past year has been developing the idea of making yarn from the fine long fur of the beautiful Angora. Another idea is the weaving of rabbit fur rugs with a loom. Mrs. McVicker has kept rabbits on a commercial scale for the past five years.

"I have long got past the playful stage," she remarked, "and many people seem to think keeping rabbits is child's play, but it requires knowledge and experience like everything else if one is to be successful."

It is not only because she is making a success of an industry she is building up out of her own initiative that Mrs. McVicker is widely known She is a horticulturist and botanist, and has 115 varieties of plants growing in her garden. So remarkable is this garden of wild flowers that the Natural History Society of British Columbia makes a yearly pilgrimage to her home.

But to return to the rabbits. Among the breeds Mrs. McVicker favors are, besides the Angora, the grey, steel, and black Flemish giants, New Zealand reds, Himalaya, and black Siberians. While she began purely for pleasure, Mrs. McVicker has now gone thoroughly into the business. She is doing all she can to promote the industry, because she believes the value of the flesh and fur combined assures good profits.

The fur of the rabbits is very fine and close, and Mrs. McVicker has muffs and stoles made up from the black Siberian, blue Flemish and New Zealand reds, and lined with B.C. wool.

Rugs of woven rabbit fur made by Mrs. McVicker are very soft and pliable. Anyone with a loom can do the same. She has also plans for making other uses of the fur. She spins her own yarn from the pluck fur of the Angoras, and has a spinning wheel and reel belonging to her great grandmother.

In comparison with imported Angoras, the product of the B.C. bred rabbits favors the latter. Angoras are plucked two or three times a year. They must be hutched separately and kept immaculately clean and well combed so that the long fur is not matted. Otherwise they are cared for the same as other rabbits, and their flesh is a delicacy for the table. Mrs. McVicker's breeds are all white.

Some idea of the extent to which Mrs. McVicker goes in for live stock is gleaned by the fact that in addition to the big rabbitry she keeps chickens and pigeons among which are a pair of Blue Runts weighing 4½ pounds; 18 dogs and a Toggenburg goat.

INDIANS TO TAKE LAW INTO OWN HANDS

Brantford, July 18.—The local police court will have the privilege of administering justice to the red man of the Six Nations only for a short time to come, according to reports from the Six Nations chiefs this morning. The police are agog at the news that, in the near future, all misdemeanors among the red men will be tried by their own people, excepting when the misdemeanor takes place on the white man's land.

According to the report from the Six Nations chiefs, received in the local police circles this morning arrangements are being made for the erection of an Indian jail at Oshweken where all Indian miscreants will be incarcerated if they are found guilty of breaking any of the laws of the land.

There have been rumors to this effect for some time. The idea has been more or less scoffed at but the matter seems to be coming to a head and it won't be very many months before an Indian court of justice will be installed at Oshweken for the law affairs of the Six Nations men.

WOMAN PACIFIST MAY REVEAL IMPERIAL SECRETS

Vienna, July 19.—Countess Hetta Trauberg, the German pacifist who was interned by the Germans during the late war because she condemned submarine warfare, the deportation of Belgian and French women and children, and the treatment of Allied prisoners, has been expelled from Germany because she still persists in her peace propaganda.

She is at present in Vienna where she is compiling a book, deriving much of her material from the archives of Vienna. She is said to have secured war letters exchanged between the Emperor of Russia, Emperor William of Germany and the Austrian Emperor Francis Joseph.

QUEER EXCUSE FOR BIGAMY

Ottawa, July 18.—Because no banns were published in any Roman Catholic church, William George Woods, of Bourget, thought he could wed again after he had parted from his first spouse, to whom he was united in a Presbyterian edifice, according to his defence on a charge of bigamy to be heard at Rockland to-day. As proof of his sincerity accused is producing an announcement of his second marriage in a French newspaper. Friends told Woods, he says, as he and his first wife were Catholics, the marriage in a Presbyterian church was void.

PETEPBORO BOWLING TOURNEY

Peterborough, July 17.—The annual bowling tournament of the Peterboro' Club will be held on Wednesday and Thursday and prospects are for a large entry list. Dr. Brereton, Oakwood Club, Toronto, will be here and is looked upon as a strong contender for the Stratton trophy. Rinks will be here from Toronto, Belleville, Cobourg, Port Hope, Oshawa, Bowmanville, and Campbellford. It is now known eight local rinks will at least be in the running. The Stratton competition will first be run off and then that for the Warne Cup. The draw will take place at one o'clock Wednesday.

LIBERTY AND JIM LARKIN

A correspondent, in a letter which appears in another column, feels "compelled" to justify the characters of Jim Larkin and Eamonn de Valera, to whom we referred in a recent editorial entitled "Professional Irishmen". He accuses us of "the grossest falsifications", and goes on to say that Mr. Larkin's words about there being no liberty under the Union Jack had nothing to do with the throwing of the flag under the piano.

The throwing of the flag under the piano may not have had anything to do with Mr. Larkin's statement about British liberty, but both the action and the utterance occurred on the same platform at the same meeting, and they constitute a double insult to Britain and to the British people. If we have falsified or "calumniated" the characters of Mr. Larkin or Mr. de Valera we are sorry, and we hope that these gentlemen are better characters than they appear to us. We judge them by their actions as well as by their utterances, and we are still convinced that they are chronic rebels who have made a profession of not only calumniating, but of seditiously plotting against the British people. The very circumstances under which Mr. Larkin uttered his calumniation of Britain, and the fact that he is still at large, proves, to us at least, the falsity of his statement.

We were not "amazed that an Irish Republican organization should be allowed to exist in Canada". We were quite aware of its existence, but we used the fact to point out the difference between the kind of liberty which prevails under the Royal Union Jack and that which exists under the Republican Stars and Stripes. Jim Larkin would not be permitted to open his mouth in the United States in criticism even of the Statue of Liberty in New York harbor. He was jailed immediately he tried to start a labor agitation in the United States.

There is no comparison between Irish Republicanism and the Ulster movement; the latter is a loyalist propaganda for the maintenance of the British connection, while the former is an avowedly disloyal movement whose object is the severing of Ireland from the Empire and the setting up of a Sovereign State under such men as Larkin and de Valera. Would de Valera permit a seditious Ulsterite movement—not to speak of an army—to operate in Dublin or Cork if he once established his Irish Republic? We venture to affirm that the man who attempted to throw the Irish Republican flag under a piano in a Dublin hall under de Valera's Republic would be shot where he stood.

We have no concern regarding the salaries received by these Irish rebels, it was not the purely monetary returns that we were thinking of when we stated that they had no other means of livelihood. This fact is patent enough, that those men have developed into professional Irishmen, and rebellion is bread and meat to them. Their sole business is that of promoting sedition against Great Britain and keeping Ireland in a state of unrest and dissatisfaction.

HASTINGS AND THE COTTON CROP

There would appear on the face of things to be no connection between the cotton crop in the Southern States and the development of mining in Hastings County—but there is. According to chemists in the United States Agricultural Department the wastage in cotton through the depredations of the boll weevil in the plantations can be prevented by a scientific use of arsenic. For some years the production of arsenic has been below the demand, and manufacturers have been looking for new sources of supply. Hastings County has within its borders an immense store of arsenical ore which has not yet been touched. If such a treasure were located in the United States it would not remain long unexploited.

The Wall Street Journal in discussing the cotton situation, says: "Last season, because of drought, weevils and lack of fertilizers, the yield was only 124.5 pounds, and in the five preceeding years averaged 161.2. In making its estimate of 11,065,000 bales, the department can only assume normal conditions throughout the remainder of the season. But at this time the odds seem heavily against the crop.

"But should the weather be favorable, the weevils fail to hatch in force and the forecast be realized, what would be the situation? The world will need 13,000,000 bales of American cotton if it keeps on consuming at the present low rate. As the department has said, 'Surplus cotton has practically disappeared.' The attempt to fill a demand for 13,000,000 bales from a crop of 11,065,00 and still leave a surplus to carry over into the next season cannot succeed. That there would be a shortage is obvious."

If arsenic can eliminate the weevil, as is contended, then Hastings may yet be the means of increasing by saving the cotton crop.

PASSING COMMENT

Belleville is fortunate in having a Chamber of Commerce at the present time when the industries of the city need organized defence.

Cardinal Logue has come out strong in condemnation of Irish murderers and looters. The condemnation is a little belated.

A busy swarm of bees were reported to have invaded Ottawa. It is to be hoped that they wil sting some of the government departments into action—especially the Minister of Railways and Canals.

A policy that diminishes the death-rate of a great nation is a feat as considerable as any of those decisive battles of the world that generally decide nothing.

FOUR GREAT NEWS AGENCIES.

The world at large is divided, for the purpose of news gathering, among four great agencies. The Reuter Telegram Company, Ltd., of London, gathers and distributes news in Great Britain and all her colonies, China, Japan, and Egypt. The Continental Telegraphen Gesellschaft of Berlin, popularly known as the Wolff Agency, performs a like office in the Teutonic, Slav, and Scandinavian countries; and the Agence Havas of Paris operates in the Latin nations. The field of the Associated Press includes the United States, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippines, and Central America, as well as the islands of the Caribbean Sea.

Each of these agencies has a representative in the offices of the others. Thus the Associated Press bureau in London adjoins the Reuter offices. The telegrams to the Reuter Company are written on manifested sheets by the telegraph and cable companies, and copies are served simultaneously to the Associated Press bureau, the Wolff representative, the Havas men, and the Reuter people. A like arrangement obtains in Paris, Berlin, and New York, so that in each of these cities the whole panorama of the day's happenings passes under the eyes of representatives of each of the four agencies.

There are many minor agencies in the smaller countries that are linked up with the combine and assist in the world distribution of news:—

Thus, if a fire should break out in Milan, the Secolo, the leading newspaper of that city, would instantly telegraph a report of it to the Stefani Agency at Rome. Thence it would be telegraphed to all the other Italian papers, and copies of the Secolo's message would also be handed to the representatives, in the Stefani headquarters, of the Reuter, Wolff, Havas, and the Associated Press agencies.—Melville Stone, in "Fifty Years a Journalist."

HOMEWARD

I see as I trudge home from work,
Bright rainbow pools amid the murk,
The setting sun through torn cloudwrack
Glows on each roof and chimney stack.

His liquid light afar he flings,
Till slate tiles gleam like swallows' wings,
And pictured on the pavements wet
Are lamps and trees in silhouette.

I have no use for crowded car
When overhead the evening star
Shines clear above the twilight ways
Where lingers yet the sunset rays.

Heart of the night I look to thee
To set my work-worn spirit free,
And may the magic mystic spell
Of thy still spirit in me dwell,

—F. K. Rushworth.

PRESS OPINIONS

NOT A NATION OF GUM-CHEWERS

(Toronto Telegram)

Habit of chewing gum, which is generally regarded as a somewhat innocuous if superfluous form of exercise, is apparently a peculiarity of the inhabitants of North America.

Gum-chewers first invaded the British Isles in large numbers during the great war, and it was found necessary to stock up for their convenience. Now that the visitors have departed the drug stores and confectioners report there is no demand for the chicle products.

Attempt to graft the habit on the natives of British Isles has proved a failure. Apparently they have so many more important things to use their teeth on that they have neither time nor inclination to chew gum.

DE VALERA REPUDIATED

(Ottawa Journal)

One of the strangest, and most significant, developments of the Irish situation is the almost universal repudiation of De Valera by Americans of Irish extraction. A notable illustration of this is the attitude of the Gaelic American. The Gaelic American is the organ of the Clan-a-Gael. It is edited by John Devoy, one of the oldest living Fenians, and one who has been a consistent advocate of Irish independence. Yet in its issue to hand the Gaelic American declares that the present fighting in Dublin constitutes the "darkest chapter in Ireland's history," adding of the Republican irregulars: "They are deluded with the idea that they are fighting for a principle, when they are only engaged in an effort to advance the political fortunes of a charlatan whom the Irish people have emphatically repudiated."

If the attempt to set up an Irish Free State has done nothing else it has at least made easier the maintenance of friendship between Britain and the Republic to the South.

BREAKING THE NEWS GENTLY

A horse had been stolen in the wild and woolly west, and some one had come to break the news to the family of the dead man. A deputation went ahead and the leader knocked at the door of the bereaved homesteader, asking: "Does Widow Smith live here?"

A stout and cheerful person replied: "I'm Mrs. Smith, but I ain't no widow."

"Bet you a dollar you are!" replied the deputation. "But you've got the laugh on us just the same, for we've lynched the wrong man."

A MEAN MAN

A valet to a certain sporting nobleman who had procured leave to attend a race meeting, informed his wife that his lordship had predicted that a horse named Most Beautiful was a certain winner.

He arose upon the morning of the race to find that the name had escaped his memory; but his more retentive wife posed before him in her most alluring manner and asked: "Don't I remind you, James, dear?" Casting a hasty glance in her direction, he exclaimed excitedly: "I've got it—Ugly Duckling!"

STUNG

The candors of the brethern are illuminating. An American evangelist was engaged by a church for a week's special mission. On his arrival he went to see the minister. "What sort of church have you here?" he inquired. 'Well," replied the pastor, "I am afraid things are pretty bad. The people are wordly and careless, the congregations are small, there is no interest in missions, no one comes to a prayer meeting, dances and card parties go on all through the week, and the people are indifferent to the claims of religion."

"Well," sneered the evangelist, "if I had a church with members like that, I'd go out and hire a yellow dog to bite 'em."

"Yes," said the minister, "that's what we've done."—The Christian Register (Boston.)

How Long is a Dream?

By Arthur Lynch

Dreams are often, perhaps always, of short duration. I have experimented with dreams, and twice by such strokes of good fortune as fall to the man who waits, or rather watches, I have been able to obtain a measure of the length of dreams.

On one occasion I was awakened by a clock striking 9. I heard only one stroke and fell asleep, but I awoke once more on the last stroke. In that brief interval I had dreamed a long dream.

Since that time I have looked into the literature of the subject, and I find that there are other instances on record where a fairly accurate estimation of the length of a dream has been possible.

One of the most striking instances is that of the philosopher and physiologist Claparede, who experimented by allowing drops from a phial to fall upon his head at regular intervals.

In his dream he lived through the following sequence, which was not altogether destitute of emotion: He committed murder in Paris; he fled to London; he took ship; he arrived in New York; fled from police, entered Chicago; found himself tracked; escaped to San Francisco; embarked to Japan as supercargo; was sentenced to death at Yokohama; awoke. The question of the duration of dreams has long exercised the minds of philosophers.

Addison told a story in one of the early numbers of The Spectator to illustrate the doctrine of Malebranche as to relativity—even then—of time.

An unbelieving Sultan had ridiculed a passage of the Koran which records how the Angel Gabriel, having taken Mahomet out of his bed one morning, showed him hell, conducted him through the seven heavens of Paradise, enabled him to hold 90,000 conferences with God, and brought him back to his bed before the pitcher, which was overturned as the Angel carried him away, was emptied.

The Sultan himself was cast into a dream which was long and circumstantial, and when he awoke he found he had not stirred from the place where he had been standing.

But now, as the mathematician said of the ballet, what does it all prove?

These stories of the shortness of dreams do not prove the relativity of time at all; time is an essential incident of sensation just as definite as kind and intensity.

Moreover, dreams, in despite of the Freud school, are not of profound order of occurrences that stir up the depths of the "subconscious"—that happy hunting ground of humbugs—they are more often related to casual and superficial associations. In dreams we run over the heads of ideas, rather than live through them in their true character.

For instance, a lecturer, if he has a vivid style, and his lecture be well illustrated, may conduct us in an hour through a thousand years of history, but the sum total of the length of the time-elements of all our mental impressions is but an hour, so with dreams.—The Brooklyn Eagle.

PUBLIC OPINION

"PROFESSIONAL IRISHMEN"

To the Editor The Daily Intelligencer, Belleville, Ont.

Dear Editor,—

While it is not, at present, advisable to enter a plea for "Irish Republicanism," nevertheless, when the personalities of the consistent Leaders of the "Irish People" are misrepresented, I am reluctantly compelled to justify their characters against the false statements of the Press.

In your editrial of the 17th inst. under the heading of "Professional Irishmen," you calumniate the personages of Jim Larkin and Eammon de Valera by the grossest falsifications. That tearing up of the "Union Jack" at the Montreal meeting had nothing to do with Larkin's presence and, moreover, Larkin had not the remotest idea of the occurrence. Secondly, Larkins' statement that "wherever the Union Jack flies there is no liberty" was the concluding statement of a proved argument and had no relation to the tearing down of Britain's flag.

You appear quite amazed that an "Irish Republican organization" should be allowed to exist in Canada or that men of Larkins' type should have the liberty to speak.

Irish Republicanism has as much, if not more right to exist in Canada as the Friends of the French Legion or the "Red Hand of Ulster." Can I go further and say that Irish Republicanism is as much entitled to establish itself here as the "Emissaries of Russia." Moreover, Larkin is justly correct in speaking in Montreal as Wm. Coote, M.P., was, in speaking at Toronto. Did the Press trouble-maker when he came here to inculcate the fire of sectarianism and religious intolerance, backed up by lies and fabrications? But we still have liberty? We yet have fair play and equality of treatment?

Larkin and De Valera have no other means of livelihood but that of the disturbing political profession—so goes your editorial. The least paying proposition in Ireland, past and present has been that of the labour and rebel leaders. Larkin in 1914, as organiser of the Irish Transport Workers' Union received a salary of $9 per week. Any money Larkin had to spare went to clothe and feed the children of the unemployed in Dublin. Larkin has always been a penniless man. Moreover, several times he has been offered good salaried positions outside of Ireland, and these he refused, as his life was given to the heart-stirring cause of the Irish worker.

Eammon de Valera has never received a cent in salary from "Dail Eireann," save expenses, and that only by voucher. His wife is wealthy—he himself was a Professor drawing five thousand dollars before he took up the Leadership of the Irish people. He never looked for nor desired leadership. The Irish People forced him to accept and, like a man, he did, though it carries untold risks.

Though you and the majority of Canadians disagree with those men at least give them credit for sincerity of character and honesty of purpose.

Woman's Sphere

A GARDEN WALL

(By David Morton, in the 'Bookman,' New York.)

The Roman wall was not more grave than this,
That has no league at all with great affairs,
That knows no ruder hands than clematis,
No louder blasts than blowing April airs.
Yet, with a gray solemnity it broods,
Above the walk where simple folk go past,
And in its crannies keeps their transient moods,
Holding their careless words unto the last.

The rains of summer, and the creeping vine
That season after season clings in trust,
And shivered poppies red as Roman wine,—
These things at last will haunt hi crumbled dust
Not dreams of empire shattered where they lie,
But children's laughter, birds, and bits of sky.

18TH CENTURY WOMEN SMOKERS

Complaints of heavy smoking among women are by no means new. In a 'Statistical Account of Scotland,' published in 1791, a writer lamented the prevalence of smoking among the working women of that time, which, he said, was more excessive than men. 'There is scarce a young woman who by the time she has been taught to spin, but has also learnt to smoke.'

WOMEN AND THEIR OWN MINDS.

It is the foible of every age to believe that its women are, for better or worse, marvellously unlike the women of the old time before. Therefore, when we hear an orator proclaiming that 'the woman of Early Victorian days has nearly disappeared,' we need not be excessively alarmed, and when he goes on to describe her as 'the gentle, quaint, prim, yet graceful lady with her tippet and poke-bonnet, her samplers and her still-room,' we feel that these outward and visible signs are not evidence of an inward and spiritual difference.

Dr. Schofield made a confession disastrous to his theory when he admitted that 'nothing to him was more marvellous and delightful than the quiet, decent, self-respecting dignity of the modern latch-key young lady living in her own rooms in London.' There is nothing marvellous, though there may be something delightful, in the fact that the girl of 1920 and Laura Pendennis are sisters under their skins, or rather, under the jumper and the tippet. We have indeed changed many conventions. We no longer believe that a girl's business in life is to stay at home. We no longer think that a woman's ability is not fit for a man's education, and is not designed to hold its own in the work of the world. But we have not abandoned the ideals of decency and self-respect and dignity, and we have not changed human nature. Even in the days of tippets and poke-bonnets a poet was ascribing to womanhood 'The reason firm, the temperate will, Endurance, foresight, strength and skill.'

Dr. Schofield complains of 'the remarkable lack of women's interest in their own minds.' We should have thought that one of the chief characteristics of our time was the development of the self-consciousness of women, their intense, a cynic might say their morbid, interest in their own minds. His point is that no woman has written a systematic scientific treatise on female psychology. Phychology is not only studied by treatises. The novelist and the poet are also authorities in that department. It is surely obvious that women writers have given every elaborate attention to the thought and emotions of their sex. If women psychologists, and men, too, for that matter, have not cared to treat the female mind as a subject of study separate from the male, the reason is, we take it, that science does not recognise any specific difference, that it regards men and women as, apart from physical distinctions, very much alike. Much trouble might be spared us if we all recognised the truth of that view.

We agree with Dr. Schofield that 'the future of England largely depends on the quality of woman's mind to-day'; it did so depend yesterday and the day before, but now more than ever, for in addition to woman's influence on children and men she has now a direct influence upon industry and the conduct of State affairs. We may give our support to his appeal 'for a change of view as to the provision of daughters as compared with sons,' though it must make the vocation of the parent more arduous than ever. But our flesh refuses to creep at the prophecy of the way in which the independent woman of the future may be found selecting her mate.—(The Daily Telegraph,' London.

FASHION FANCIES

NEW LINES IN SUMMER MILLINERY

Midsummer millinery has not been so reactionary for many seasons, for the modistes, instead of striving for radical originality, have gone frankly back into the recent past to an epoch sartorially more complicated, but politically far more simple than our own. The women of 1922 may have relativity on the brain, but on their heads the majority of them will have the capelines of their grandmothers, the headgear of a day when the sweetly feminine was the ideal, and fainting at the sight of a mouse was the favourite form of exercise. Women were so unimportant political ly that they had to force themselves upon the attention of the world somehow or other, so they wore skirts and hats of such immense proportions that they at least succeeded in being in everybody's way.

During the war, European women found themselves a factor to be reckoned with, even politically. Immediately after it, therefore, they thought that they might safely go about in slips of black dresses, with little inconspicuous "sensible" hats, pulled down over their eyes. But "out of sight out of mind" is an extremely wise proverb and it is not perhaps without significance that the women who influence the modes are beginning to last to turn their attention towards the revival of more complicated and important fashions, the first symptom of which is the return of the immense hat and the revival of the charmingly feminine capeline of the Second Empire.

Oddly enough, it is not of the period of the second Empire that the creators of the mode seem to be thinking. They are giving signs of interest in the period that succeeded it—the fashions of 1875 to 1880—the characteristics of which were the tieback, the waterfall, the Grecian bend, the chignon, and, more ridiculous still the bustle.

New Lines in The Mode

Two years ago, there was a mild attempt at a revival of the bustle, and it met with flat and ignominious failure; it is not probable, therefore that this particular feature of the modes of late 'seventies and early 'eighties will be tried again as soon. But that we shall have a long, slender almost princesse line, with ruffles about our feet, a bell-like silhouette and possibly some laveuse drapery, seems highly probable.

Hats of this period were frequently of the flower-pot persuasion, high and narrow, with the trimming placed directly up the front, or they were larger, covered with trimming and turned up on one side, often with a cache-peigne. We shall watch eagerly for the first sign of such models in the advance autumn millinery; and already we begin to see a tendency to-wards the high narrow trimming, which may very easily be a precursor of these styles.

MACKEREL IN JELLY

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University

During hot weather plan to have fish and meat oftentimes cold instead of hot. The following recipe is very good and hearty enough to be served as the main dish for luncheon or supper. Any fish may be used in the same way:—1 two-pound mackerel, 3 cups cold water, 1 small piece bay leaf, 2 slices onion, 1 sprig parsley, 2 teaspoons of salt, 1 tablespoon vinegar, 2 tablespoons of granulated gelatine, ½ cup of cold water, 1 cup of sour cream, 2 tablespoons grated horseradish, 1 tablespoon vinegar, salt to taste.

Cut off head and tail of mackerel and cook in the water with the seasonings, salt and vinegar until tender.

Take from the water, remove skin and bones and separate into small pieces. Strain the liquid remaining and add boiling water to make two cups.

Add the gelatine which has been dissolved in the cold water, season with salt and pepper and allow it to become cool.

As it begins to set add the mackerel and turn into molds which have been dipped in cold water. Set away to harden.

At serving time, unmold on lettuce leaves and serve with the sour cream beaten until stiff, to which has been added the horseradish and seasoning.

PRIDE IN OUR OWN FOLKS

(By J. E. Middleton)

In Canada there are many business institutions of extraordinary magnitude and efficiency which every citizen regards with satisfaction. There is a certain pride in the achievements of our own people, in the realization that Canadians have the vision, the intelligence and the courage necessary for the organization and development of any great institution designed for the service of the community. Thousands of men who never even saw a share in the Ogilvie Mills consider the operations of that Company with approval—whatever the price of flour may be. The ordinary Canadian holds his head a little higher while he tells his American visitors of the ramifications of the T. Eaton Company and the enormous operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

There are private corporations organized for profit. They have done great things and their operations have been for the advantage of the country. But none of them has had the rapid growth or has attained the solid success of the Hydro-Electric System of Ontario. Eleven years [illegible] it was an infant with a problematical future. To-day it is a giant, and still growing.

Because of the Hydro-Electric System the cities of Ontario are able to provide electric light and power of the first quality at rates which private corporations elsewhere cannot even approach. Villages are served at a rate lower than is paid in many large American cities. Great sections of farming country are situated so that the people can have the advantage of urban lighting and power at a rate that makes the service economically desirable.

The demand for service has been so insistent during the whole eleven years that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission has been hard pressed to meet it. Great hydraulic development plants have been acquired and constructed and the work has been done in a manner to command the approval and admiration of engineers from all parts of the world. The outlay has been immense; which was not unnatural, considering that much of the work had to be done in the period of labor scarcity, high prices and economic uncertainty caused by war and reconstruction. But the entire investment has been carried by the ordinary revenue and not one cent of municipal or Provincial taxation has been necessary.

Scores of municipalities have piled up reserve and surplus funds despite frequent reduction of rates. Some have their balance of liability entirely provided for. The city of St. Thomas, for example, has obligations on Hydro-Electric account of $111,453.40. Its reserves and accumulated surplus taken together are $300,351.69. Yet the rates in St. Thomas have been reduced and reduced until they now stand at 2.2c per kilowatt-hour. Eight cents was a common charge in the big cities before the Hydro-Electric System of co-operative municipal ownership was devised.

The Canadian who is proud of industrial achievements in other fields may well be still more proud of the "Hydro." It is a Canadian invention, organized and developed by Canadian administrators, built and maintained by Canadian engineers. It has won its success in the face of persistent and unscrupulous opposition and now has the entire confidence of the public.

"Now you're getting interesting. Who is this man?"

"Oh, quite the swell mobsman—Raffles and Arsene Lupin and all that sort of thing rolled into one. His name's Ismay — Arbuthnot Ismay. Clever—wonderful, they say; the police have never been able to fasten anything on him, though he's been known to boast of his jobs in advance."

"You told Miss Landis this?"

"Certainly—and she laughed."

This seemed quite credible of the lady. Staff considered the situation seriously for a moment or two.

"I'll do what I can," he said at length; "though I'm not hopeful of making her see it from your point of view. Still, I will speak to her."

"That's good of you, I'm sure. You couldn't do more."

"You're positive about this Ismay?" Staff pursued. "You couldn't be mistaken?"

"Not I," asserted the purser confidently. "He crossed with us last year—the time Mrs. Burden Hamman's jewels disappeared. Ismay, of course, was suspected, but managed to prove every kind of an alibi."

"Queer you should let him book a second time," commented Staff.

"Rather; but he's changed his name, and I don't imagine the chaps in Cockspur Street know him by sight."

"What name does he travel under now?"

The purser smiled softly to himself. "I fancy you won't be pleased to learn it," said he. "He's down on the passenger-list as Iff—W. H. Iff."

V
ISMAY?

When Staff went below a little later, he was somewhat surprised to find his stateroom alight,—surprised, because he had rather expected that Mr. Iff would elect to sleep off his potations in darkness.

To the contrary, the little man was very much awake, propped up in his berth with a book for company, and showed no effects whatever of over-indulgence, unless that were betrayed by a slightly enhanced brightness of the cool blue eyes which he brought to bear upon his roommate.

"Good morning!" he piped cheerfully. The bar's been closed an hour and more."

"What on earth got you up so early?"

"Is that why you came to bed?" enquired Staff.

"Sure," agreed Mr. Iff complacently.

Staff quietly began to shed his clothing and to insert his spare form into pajamas. Iff lay back and stared reflectively at the white-painted over-head girders.

"Got to slip it to you," he observed presently, "for perfect mastery of the dignified reserve thing. I never knew anybody who could better control his tumultuous emotions."

"Thanks," said Staff drily as he wound up his watch.

"Anything 'special troubling you?"

"Why do you ask?"

"You talk so darn much."

"Sorry if I'm keeping you awake," said Staff politely.

"Oh, I don't mean to seem to beef about it, only . . . I was wondering if by any chance you'd heard the news?"

"What news?"

"About me."

"About you!" Staff paused with his fingers on the light-switch.

"About my cute little self. May I look now?" Iff poked his head over the edge of the upper berth and beamed down upon Staff like a benevolent, blond magpie. "Haven't you heard the rumour that I'm a desperate character?"

"Just what do you men?" remanded Staff, eyeing the other intently.

"Oh, simply that I overheard the purser discussing me with his assistant He claims to recognize in me a bold bad man named Ismay, whose specialty is pulling off jobs that would make Sherlock Holmes ask to be retired on a pension."

"Well?"

"Well what?"

"Are you Ismay?"

A broad, mocking grin irradiated the little man's pinched features. "Don't ask me," he begged: "I might tell you."

Staff frowned and waited a minute then, receiving no further response to his enquiry, grunted "Good night," turned off the light and got into his berth

A moment later the question came out of the darkness overhead: "I say—what do you think?"

"Are you Iff or Ismay—you mean?"

"Aye, lad, aye!"

"I don't know. It's for you to say."

"But if you thought I was Ismay you'd shift quarters, wouldn't you?"

"Why?"

"Because I might pinch something of yours."

In the first place," said Staff, yawning. "I can't shift without going into the second cabin—and you know it: the boat's full up. Secondly, I've nothing you could steal save ideas, and you haven't got the right sort of brains to turn them to any account."

"THE WORLD'S CHAMPION" PLEASES

Wallace Reid's new Paramount picture, "The World's Champion" is receiving its final exhibition on the double feature bill at Griffin's to-night. This is a delightful photoplay which should go far to winning him a new army of admirers. Lois Wilson is charmng in the leading woman's role and other noted favorites are in the cast.

You won't see much of the hero sober in "Cheated Hearts" which is the second feature offering on the same program at Griffin's to-night. He's the son of a man who died from drink and so inherits a curse with a few millions. And to think that Herbert Rawlinson, the star did it all on short distance beer!

"The Janitor's" a 2 reel Fox Sunshine comedy will be exhibited on the same program in addition to the two feature offerings.

AGNES AYRES COMING IN SIR. GILBERT PARKER'S "LANE THAT HAD NO TURNING"

Agnes Ayres announces that in "The Lane That Had No Turning," her first Paramount star picture, which is the feature offering at Griffin's Tomorrow to Saturday, with a matinee Saturday, there isn't a single mounted policeman, though it is laid in a French section of Canada.

"Not that I have anything against mounted policemen, or that I suppose them to be unattractive to the photoplay fans, but it seems odd. When they told me I was to do this picture which is from Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, I said to myself: 'Ah, here's where I have a handsome sweatheart in a red coat and broad brimmed hat.'

I was wrong—the play is of a different type entirely, and I am married to the Seigneur of Pontiac, who meets with an injury and becomes a hunchback. After his death I am affianced to an English gentleman. Neither of them wear uniforms.

"Seriously, it is a most interesting story, quaint and highly emotional. I have a very difficult part, but one that I just loved to play."

Theodore Kosloff, Mahlon Hamilton and Frank Campeau are seen in the principal supporting roles.

"HUSKIE" WINS THE GEORGE CUP

Closest Race of Regatta in Big Event—"Huskie" Wins from "Scrapper"

"HASWELL" ROBB CUP

"Vivia" of R.C.Y.C. Wins Alcohol Cup in Close Race

(Special to The Intelligencer by a Staff Reporter.)

Massassaga Park, July 19.—When the "Huskie" of Watertown, N.Y., sailed by Ed. Lancing, crossed the finishing line at 5.03.16 p.m. last evening in the final race for the George Cup, she had successfully lifted the cup, and by so doing had won the greatest and most coveted cup of the regatta held here. The George Cup is an international cup and the competition between Canadian and American boats for this trophy is very keen. For a number of years this trophy has been held by the cities at the western or upper end of Lake Ontario, and it has been the ambition of the eastern cities at the lower end of the lake to lift the cup. This feat was accomplished Tuesday and the cup goes to Watertown, N.Y.

What was thought would be the final race for the George Cup commenced at 9.37 a.m. Tuesday, when Scrapper, of the R.C.Y.C., of Toronto, sailed by Col. Windeyer, Huskie of Watertown, N.Y., sailed by Ed Lancing, and Chiryia of Kingston (Creston Yacht Club) and sailed by A. Dalton, sailed over the line in a start Big Bay course. The Scrapper won this race handily, finishing at 1.53.11 p.m. The Huskie was second and Chiryia third.

The boats started in a light, shifty breeze which blew from nor'west. The wind changed over to the sou'west, however, before noon, and increased some. Chiryia was first over the line and the Huskie last. The Scrapper soon pulled out and took the lead on the first leg. After rounding the first buoy both the Huskie and the Chiryia struck a soft spot, and the Scrapper had almost rounded the second buoy when they squared away from the first buoy. The breeze then picked up, and the Scrapper took a commanding lead, which she held until she crossed the finishing line away out in front of the other two boats. This is the result of the race:

Boat	Start	First Round	Finish
Scrapper	9.37	11.56.30	1.53.11
Huskie	9.37	12.30.50	2.09.30
Chiryia	9.37	12.46.08	2.21.17

Boats Are Tied.

The result of this race meant two wins for Scrapper, one first and one second for Huskie, and a second and two thirds for Chiryia. In other words, the Huskie and Scrapper were tied for first place. It was immediately decided to start the two boats in a final race for the George Cup at 3.30 p.m., once around the Big Bay course.

Race Again.

Sharp at 3.30 p.m. the two rivals got away to an excellent start, the Scrapper going over the line slightly ahead of the Huskie. Huskie immediately went to windward, the wind being heavier but puffy. The crew of the Scrapper were working the main sail all the time on the first leg, and it was certainly a pretty race. Scrapper led Huskie at first buoy, and gained some 200 yards after rounding the first buoy. The Scrapper was well to weather at the second buoy and the wind was lighter. Then came the trouble. Both boats lost the second buoy, and the Huskie picking it up first, gained a slight lead rounding the buoy, and then had the advantage for the third leg of the race and home stretch. Both crews struggled hard on the third leg, excellent seamanship being displayed by both crews in their tacking and manoeuvring, but the Huskie had a slight lead which it was impossible for the other boat to regain, and they sailed over the line, the Scrapper just 48 seconds behind the winner. It certainly was a wonderful race.

Boat	Start	Finish
Huskie	3.30	5.03.16
Scrapper	3.30	5.04.04

Robb Cup Race.

Seven boats entered in the Robb Cup race, which was sent off at 1.30 p.m. and which was twice around Big Bay course. "M" and "N" classes and yawls wer the competitors in this event, which was a handicap race and started at 1.30 p.m. A feature of the race was the start of the Haswell, which was almost upon the buoy when the crack of the gun announced the start. It was the cleverest start of the whole regatta.

The seven boats bunched for the first half of the first leg of the race, except the Haswell, which kept a long lead and finished strong, winning the race and the Robb Cup despite her handicap on the other boats in the race.

This is how the boats finished:
(All started at 1.30 p.m.)

Name	First Round	Second Round	Time
Haswell	2.44.10	3.59.36	2.29.36
Italia	2.52.12	4.13.25	2.33.11
Zoraya	2.53.30	4.17.14	2.31.10
Iroquois	2.51.20	4.20.35	2.51.31
Senica	2.53.20	4.20.25	2.40.56
Sylvia	2.56.45	4.27.25	2.39.56
Temeraire	3.02.40	4.52.10	2.48.00

Industrial Alcohol Cup.

Six boats entered the race for the cup donated by the Industrial Alcohol Distilleries of Corbyville, and a splendid race it was. Vivia, a trim little craft of the R.C.Y.C., sailed by Charlie Bourne, won the race, and cup. It was a flat race, there being no handicaps.

The boats got away to a good start sharp at 1.40 p.m., the Thistle, of Kingston, sailed by Professor Bruce Taylor and his three daughters, being first over the starting line, in a pretty start. The other boats sailed close behind, however, and positions shifted considerably before reaching the first buoy. This race was also close, the boats finishing close upon each other. Tantrum and Whirl had a close sail for second place, Tantrum finishing 10 seconds ahead of Whirl.

The race, in order of winners:—

Class "R" and 28-Foot Cruisers.

Name and Club	Start	Finish
Vivia, R.C.Y.C.	1.40	3.12.18
Tantrum, Rochester	1.40	3.14.00
Whirl, R.H.Y.C.	1.40	3.14.10
Thistle, Kingston	1.40	3.15.24
Cheeta, R.C.Y.C.	1.40	3.16.12
Heather, Napanee	1.40	3.17.10

The Dinghy Races.

Five dinghys started in the race Tuesday afternoon around the 6-mile course. The race was three times around, all buoys to port, and for the Hanna Cup, donated by His Worship Mayor Hanna.

The boats were given the starting gun at 2.01 p.m. and crossed the line in good form, the dinghy sailed by the only lady sailor in this race Miss V. McLean, crossing the starting line first, and the finishing line first also. Miss McLean finished at 3.18.50. Arthur Wallbridge was second, finishing at 3.23.05. Roy Spafford's dinghy was third, sailed by Rear Commodore Ed. George and Bob Brown ;and Alex. Kerr fourth. Bert Sword's dinghy sprung a leak in the first round, and he had to quit the race.

The Stafford boat was late arriving from Belleville and the others were gone a good five minutes before he crossed the starting line. The crew "hollered" to shore, informing the officials that they were in the race, and they made a splendid exhibition finishing third place.

Miss V. McLean won the Hanna trophy.

When the Huskie sailed in to anchor after lifting the George Cup, the boat and crew were cheered to the echo by all the sailors on the bay, led by Commodore Amelius Jarvis and his crew on board the Haswell, which lay at anchor closest to the finishing line. The crew of the Scrapper were also cheered when they sailed in, the crew of the Huskie entering heartily into the greetings. That's the sort of sportsmanship that counts.

The beach at Massassaga Park was crowded with people, as well as the hotel verandah and balcony, while the bay was dotted with every conceivable sort of craft. Everybody was watching the big races, and they certainly were well worth while watching.

Commodore T. World, Mr. A. B. Bowes, Secretary of the L.Y.R.A.; Mr. Blake Van Winkle, of Q.C.Y.C.; Captain T. Naylor, Commodore (Judge) Wills, of the B.Q.Y.C., and official starter William King Rogers were the gentlemen who were responsible for the official starting and timing of the boats in all the races yesterday. • •

Mr. Bert Black kindly placed his steamer Wacouta at the disposal of the B.Q.Y.C. committee and their friends on Tuesday. The boat was crowded with officials and a most enjoyable cruise was thoroughly enjoyed. The Wacouta followed all the races around the course and docked at the wharf several times during the day.

The Toronto yachts including the Haswell were towed up the bay by the Wacouta, through the Murray Canal and to Presqu' Ile, on their way to Toronto. They passed by the city here at 5 a.m.

• •

An idea of the vast importance of the George Cup race here will be realized by the fact that the result was immediately cabled to London, England.

• •

And to think that this truly wonderful race was sailed in the Bay of Quinte, off Massassaga, near Belleville. May we have many such races in the future.

LEWIS WINS BOUTS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Has Knocked Out Frank Burns Since Return From America

London, July 19.—Kid Lewis, the welter and middle-weight champion of Great Britain, must have learned much during his long stay in the United States, despite his reverses in his last year there, for he has won all sorts of championships since returning home. His latest achievement was knocking out Frank Burns, the middle-weight champion of Australia, making Lewis the title holder of the Empire in that division.

Up until the eleventh and last round of the bout Burns out-pointed Lewis, in the opinion of several boxing experts, but in that period the Kid made a clever feint and then crossed a smashing right to the jaw that landed the Australian on his back. Lewis was criticized for holding part of the way Burns lost the championship, for which he had come all the way from Australia, but he took home a gold medal for rescuing a drowning man. One night at his training camp Burns jumped out of bed and into the Thames in the dark after the unfortunate man, and succeeded in bringing him ashore.

REGATTA CLOSES WITH DANCE

Cups Presented by Commodore Wills—Speeches by Commodore Jarvis and Ed. Lancing

As a fitting conclusion to the splendid and highly successful Regatta held Monday and Tuesday, a successful dance was given on Tuesday night at the Pavilion at Massassaga Park.

The dance, in accordance with the other features of the Regatta, was most successful, there being between seven hundred and one thousand guests present. Many guests were present from Kingston, and a boat load from Deseronto.

At 10.30 oclock, Commodore J. F. Wills presented the trophies to the skippers of the winning boats.

Mr. Ed. Lancing, Skipper of the "Huskie" which won the George Cup, on receiving his trophy, made a speech in which he covered the history of the George Cup. The R. C. Y. C. has held the cup for several years, and natives of the city of Watertown, N. Y., have built five boats in an endeavor to lift the George Cup. The "Huskie" is the fifth boat, and was built at a cost of $8,000, although some of the others cost as high as $18,000.

Commodore Amelius Jarvis upon receiving the Robb Cup also made a speech, expressing his hopes that the Bay of Quinte Yacht Club would have another Regatta soon, and assured the audience that be would be present at it.

"The arrangements in connection with this Regatta, have been stamped with efficiency," said the Commodore.

The trophies were also presented, after which supper was served. Dancing then continued until 3 a.m. when the most successful regatta ever held in the Bay of Quinte district was brought to an appropriate close.

ARRANGE SCHEDULE THURSDAY

Notice has been received that a very important meeting of the Central League Executive will be held in the Queen's Hotel, Port Hope, on Thursday, July 20th, at 10 o'clock in the morning. All matters concerning the second section, league business and financial report of the Peterboro and Lindsay game on Wednesday will be taken up.

GAME AT PORT HOPE

Bowmanville will play a postponed game at Port Hope to-day at 5.15.

OSHAWA LOSES FIRST BASEMAN THROUGH AN ACCIDENT

Oshawa, Ont., July 17.—The local Central League Baseball Club loses their regular first baseman, Roy Wilson, for the balance of the season. "Buck", as he is better known around the circuit, was piloting a tested Chevrolet car to the shipping room when he fell off the chassis, breaking his right collar-bone. The big boy, who did his heaving around the diamond from the left side, will be greatly missed by his team.

The play-off, Peterboro at Lindsay, on Wednesday will be in charge of Umpires Rosevear, Port Hope, and MacDonald, of Toronto. The winner of this game will meet Oshawa at Cobourg on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. The horse show town was chosen owing to grandstand accommodation and the fact that Belleville, Cobourg, Port Hope, Bowmanville, Oshawa and Leaside are all Lake Shore towns and are accessible by good train connections.

Glover, Toronto, and Barnes, Cobourg, will handle the Bowmanville at Port Hope postponed game of May 20th, which has been ordered for Port Hope Wednesday at 5.15.

BIG GAME IN LINDSAY

Petes and Greybirds in Big Play-off Game

All the Institutions in Victoria and Haliburton Counties must be thrown open for to-day's big play off game in Lindsay between the Greybirds and Jake Solomon's Pets; according to the following item from the Lindsay Post.

From the north and the south, from far and near, from the wild and untamed fastnesses, with their rocky roads and bearded men, from the land of boot-leg whiskey and boot-heel cigars, the lollygaggers, slick gents, flippers, flappers, forty-miners and sod-busters, all are planning for a grand descent on Lindsay Wednesday, when for the third time this season the Lindsay Greybirds will do battle with the Peterborough Leaguers. It will be a battle worth the time and money, for when was there a Peterboro-Lindsay meeting that was not a grand to-do. The last event of that nature produced a free fight, but tomorrow the teams are out to play real ball, for both must have the game and only one can take it.

Jack Ouellet's town, Fenelon Falls, is declaring a national holiday, and the citizens are coming in a body. Peterboro' is sending a large army of rooters in a desperate attempt to take the game away. A hugh crowd will be there to see the championship game. It is billed to start at three o'clock. The umpires are Rosevear of Port Hope, behind the bat, and McDonald, of Toronto, on bases. John Nott, of Oshawa, Secretary, will be the League's representative, and he arrived Tuesday to rest up for the strenuous event. Cars will be allowed across the track.

The winners of to-day's game will meet Oshawa at Cobourg on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, according to an order from President Parsons.

SERIOUSLY INJURED WHEN DRILL SLIPPED

Toronto, July 18.—A peculiar accident, attended by serious results, occurred yesterday when Irwin O. Young, 99 Pendrith avenue, an employe of the Gutta Percha Rubber Company, drilled himself in the abdomen with a compressed air drill, which he was operating in the company's tube department.

Young was drilling holes in solid metal when the machine slipped, inflicting very serious injuries. He was taken immediately to the General hospital, where an operation was performed. The authorities there say his condition is critical.

Young has lived some years in the city and resides with his sister, Mrs. May Monkman.

Berlin, July 19.—A theft of valuable paintings which occurred four years ago has been announced by the Frankfurt police issuing a proclamation to the effect that "a collection of pictures were stolen from a railway carriage of the Second Guards division en route from Brussels to Germany, November 8, 1918. Included were a portrait of the Spanish Infante by Valesquez, two works of Rubens, a Van Dyck and other old masters. A reward of 1,000,000 marks is offered for their recovery."

No explanation is given as to why the pictures were on the way from Brussels to Germany or to whom they belonged.

GOVERNMENT SHIP LEAVES FOR ARCTIC

Will Collect Duties and Make Census in Lost Lands

Quebec, July 19.—At three o'clock yesterday afternoon Captain Bernier, of Arctic fame, left on board the good ship Arctic for an extensive trip in the northern region in the interest of the Canadian government, being tendered a bon voyage by hundreds of people from the King's Wharf. At six o'clock this morning the ship left the King's Wharf where she had been making the final preparations for the last six weeks. Compasses were adjusted by experts, and Mr. J. D. Craig, of the department of the interior, who is in charge of the expedition, and Captain Bernier, who is in command of the Arctic, gave the departing sibnal.

The trip will not be a very long one Captain Bernier expects to return to Quebec in November, but the Royal Mounted Police will not be replaced before two years, remaining on duty in the lost islands of the north until 1925. This detachment is in charge of Inspector Wilcox. At various posts a non-commissioned officer with two constables and an Eskimo guide will be stationed. Each mountie has two suits of Chinese goatskin covering him from head to foot.

While in the northern regions the mounted police will collect duties and also make a census of the population, which can be located.

POLITICAL WAR IN HOLY LAND

Secret Treaty Said to Have Been Signed With France

Jerusalem, July 19.—The Transjordania country has been invaded by Ibn Saoud, Sultan of Nejd, and leader of the powerful Wahabi tribe. Saoud has declared hostilities against Abdullah Emir of Transjordania, and at the head of 10,000 well-armed Arabs he is within four-hours march of Amman, the capital of Transjordania, which is about 50 miles east of Jerusalem.

This invasion came without any warning, the latter part of May, and it has added materially to the turbulence of Anglo-French relations in this part of the world. It has brought to light what is alleged to be a secret treaty concluded some three months ago between Saoud and representatives of the French Republic.

Emir Abdullah realized at once the seriousness of this move by the Wahabis, whose home territory is in the central part of the Arabian peninsula, and did two things; sent a delegation to Saoud to negotiate peace, and informed the Palestine representative in Amman, and General Ghalib Pacha, composing the delegation to the Wahabis, were seized by Saoud's followers and released only after very strong representations to the Wahabis from Sir Wyndham Deeds, the British acting High Commissioner in Palestine. Saoud is still encamped within a short distance of Amman.

The alleged secret treaty with France is said to have been negotiated by a Wahabi named Mohammed Pacha el Osseimi. It involves military and political relations and is aimed against Great Britain and her proteges, King Hussein of Hedjaz King Feisul of Mesopotamia and Emir Abdullah of Transjordania. Its clauses have been published here. They set forth, among other things, that the French government recognizes the sovereignty of Ibn Saoud; engages to supply him with money, arms and ammunition and to support him if he is attacked by the governments of Hedjaz, Mesopotamia or Transjordania. In return Saoud engages to counteract any tendency toward the formation of an Arab confederation in the Arabian peninsula under the guidance of Great Britain, and to help with troops in case French soldiers in Syria are attacked by troops or irregular bands from Mesopotamia or Transjordania.

It will be recalled that Ibn Saoud last year declared war against Hussein, father of Emir Abdullah, and probably would have captured Mecca had it not been for the timely intervention of Great Britain.

RESEARCH WORK AT NICARAGUE

A Fine Collection of Rare Animals and Birds is Obtained

Philadelphia, July 19.—Wharton Huber, assistant curator of the ornithology section of the Academy of Natural Sciences, returned recently to this city from hitherto little known regions of Nicarague where he assembled a large collection of birds, beasts, fish and reptiles, a number of which he believes have not yet been classified. He also claims to have penetrated to the villages of Sumo Indians who rarely had seen a white man. The scientists' specimens include 600 birds, 40 rare mammals and 2,000 fish, reptiles and insects, all of which will be placed on exhibition in the local institution.

"My research work was done about 180 miles inland from the Nicaraguan coast," said Mr. Huber. "We established our headquarters at a small mining camp whence we made trips farther into the country. The average annual rainfall here is 147 inches. From the time I reached the interior until I left there never was a dry article of clothing on me. The country is infected with red bugs, smaller than fleas which burrow under the skin and inflict serious wounds.

"I went up the Prinza Polka river for 180 miles in a pitpan an open boat made of a hollowed-out mahogany log. Then in a smaller pitpan I ascended the Banbana river to Mininda. The district is hilly, and covered with tropical forests so dense that it is impossible to enter them until a way is cut by Indians.

"The only inhabitants are a few scattered tribes of Indians apparently of Spanish and Miskito Indian descent. With a body of these Indians as guides I penetrated to certain villages of the Sumo Indians.

"The Sumo men are very skillful hunters, but the tribe is rapidly becoming extinct. With all their ability in hunting and their courage in facing wild animals, they are excessively timid of strange human beings, and will run away even from members of other Indian tribes., Miskito Indians sometimes walk into their villages and take anything they want without meeting resistance. The Sumo, numbering about 500 souls all told, have the slant, almond eyes of the Chinese and their skin is about the same color as that of a Chinaman."

Mr. Huber had with him a number of dogs two of which were killed by jaguars. The scientist believes that fully 40 per cent of the birds and animals he shot were lost because neither dogs nor Indians could make their way into the jungles to the point where they fell. He used dynamite to secure his fish specimens.

Mr. Huber emerged from the jungle region weighing 40 pounds less than when he entered, at which time his weight was 180. Although he warded off illness during his expedition, he was taken down with fever immediately it was over.

TRAIN TRAVEL IN RUMANIA HAS ITS DANGERS

Galatz, Rumania, July 19.—Some railroad trains in Rumania are so jammed with the roving populace that the conductors are powerless to collect fares. Hence the impression is conveyed that one may travel for nothing, which serves only to bring larger numbers to the already overcrowded coaches.

Like most other war-affected countries, Rumania has not enough passenger coaches to take care of the throngs of people who want to travel. The Germans and Austrians confiscated most of the rolling stock. Passengers today are forced to ride on the roofs, bumpers, running boards and even on the undertrucks of the coaches. Fist fights and altercations, to say nothing of accidents, fatal and otherwise, are of frequent occurrence.

THE GREAT MOMENT

By A. MARIA CRAWFORD

(©, 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

He had just asked her to marry him, but even when he took her in his arms and kissed her gently, as a brother might have done, Milly felt that she was being cheated of her birthright. For it is the sum and substance of every girl's life to love and to be loved, and Milly knew instinctively, as it is always given to girls to know, that while Dick Carter passively held her there in his arms he was thinking of Juanita Estes and of what a joy he would have experienced in possessing her. But Juanita had wantonly jilted him six months before.

Since the days when she was hailed by boisterous schoolmates as "Freckle Face" because of the fine dusting of brown flecks across the bridge of her pretty nose, Milly had loved Dick, and because of that love of ten years' growth she had felt a comforting sense of possibility when she heard the welcome news of his jilting by the proud, cold beauty, Juanita. With no compunction of conscience, Milly had set herself the happy task of comforting him and now he had asked her to marry him, but Milly did not feel the wild elation of heart and spirit that she had so hopefully anticipated. After all, she reflected, as she stood there, her cheek resting lightly against his regularly beating heart, she had gambled with the odds against her and she had won him, but she had lost the thrill of that great moment in every girl's life when the heat of a man's passion kindles the fire of her own. Suddenly she remembered old Grandma Winston's eagerly proffered advice, "Two people never love each other in the same degree. It's safer to marry a man who loves you better than you love him."

"You are going to marry me, Milly, dear, aren't you?" questioned Dick in that rich, throaty voice of his to which the cords of her heart had always responded like the strings of a musical instrument to the hands of a master.

"Oh, yes, Dick, you know that I will. I have always loved you," she answered without a moment's hesitation. Then she was hurt, humiliated over her confession, for Dick had not said that he loved her. He had merely told her that she was the very finest girl he knew and that it would make him very happy indeed if she would marry him.

But he held her a little closer at that and a flush crept over his face. "I don't deserve you, Milly," he said thickly, "but I am going to try mighty hard to make you happy."

And Milly, with age-old wisdom, out of the mother heart of every woman who loves truly and is therefore forgetful of self, slipped her arms around his shoulders in utter abandonment of pride to help him through what she felt was a trying situation. He was giving her the best that he could offer. Fate had cheated him just as it was cheating her, and more than anything else in the world, she wanted her love for him to help him to comfort him, to make him forget the girl who had held the priceless boon of his love so lightly.

"What kind of a ring do you want, dear?" he asked then. "I want you to have it before the dance tomorrow night, if," he smiled down at her whimsically, "if you will do me the honor to wear it then."

"I'll love to wear it, Dick. I want a solitaire, if that suits you. A gold band, but the stone mounted in platinum," she answered directly.

"You're so sensible, Milly. You're going to make me a wonderful wife."

She knew why he wanted her to have the ring before the next night. Juanita would be there, home from a six-months' visit in New York, where she had promptly taken herself after jilting Dick.

Milly had always been much more economical than she really needed to be, and when her mother chided her about her lack of interest in new clothes, the girl had always told her that she was going to be an old maid and that her parents would have to support her as long as she lived. It was not like having a daughter who would soon be married and off their hands for life, she said.

Her mother, of course, was thrilled over her engagement. She was beginning to fear that Milly would indeed be an old maid, which state of affairs invariably seems to hurt the mother more than the daughter. It is a sort of shock to their own pride to feel that they have produced something which no man wants. Milly's mother was delighted when, the next morning at breakfast, the girl expressed a desire for a new evening dress. "Something really nice, mother, and a handsome wrap."

No homely girl can dress up and suddenly appear to be a ravishing beauty, but fine feathers make fine birds, and a masseuse, hairdresser and really gifted buyer for a ready-to-wear shop certainly did do wonders to Milly on that momentous day. Dick actually blinked his eyes a bit as he stood at the foot of the stairway and watched her walk slowly down. She wore an apple-green tulle dress with a long floating veil caught at the shoulders and worn like a court train. Her yellow hair was held high on her head by a man-shaped Spanish comb, and a string of lustrous pearls circled her slim throat. Dick folded the heavy green velvet wrap with its short cape of ermine around her and then caught her close to him with arms that trembled a little. Happiness lighted her eyes and curved her smiling lips.

"You're beautiful, Milly," he said, and then added, unsteadily, "and you're mine. You make me think of spring, eternal spring, and apple trees in bloom."

She had made a good beginning, Milly thought, as he slipped his arm back of her in the automobile and bending toward her, whispered, "Let's go home a little early. I'd like you all to myself for a while."

But her period of happiness was doomed to be short. Juanita was already in the ballroom, regal, superb in sheathlike white satin, and from the time Dick entered the room everybody there was instantly aware of the astonishing fact that Juanita had evidently changed her mind again and that she not only openly wanted Dick, but that she had also decided to take him. That it would not be an effortless task was a foregone conclusion, for everybody knew that Dick had adored her and that he had been crushed when she had jilted him.

Milly was instantly surrounded, for men naturally gravitate toward beauty as flowers grow toward the sun, but she was not so entirely surrounded that she did not hear Juanita's soft voice murmur to Dick: "Dick, dear, I've missed you terribly. See, I've saved half of my dances for you."

In the ear turned a little toward the two Milly heard Dick say: "Well, you're mighty kind, but I'm fully up, all but one," and Dick's voice was reassuringly steady. There was not a hint of regret in it.

Even when the news of their engagement spread like a little running forest fire in the dead leaves of small talk, Juanita still angled for Dick. Milly's heart under the soft green tulle was as heavy as lead. She was just a dog in the manger. She could never make Dick happy, and she was keeping him from Juanita, who could crown his life with joy. Behind some palms that screened them from the ballroom where they were sitting out a dance, Milly turned to Dick and, stripping off her shining new engagement ring, said heroically: "Dick, you've always loved Juanita. I want you to be happy. Nothing else matters to me."

She was wholly unprepared for what followed, for Dick seized her in arms that appeared to have been hungering for her for untold ages. He kissed her with a passion that kindled the fire of her own. His heart pounded like the heavy waves of an angry sea. "Oh, Milly, girl," he said brokenly, "I love you more than I ever loved anybody before. I never dreamed that there could be a girl in the world for me like you, so beautiful, so sweet, so unselfish. I think that I have been in love with you ever since I called you 'Freckle Face.' Remember, sweetheart? I feel a blissful contentment with you that I never before experienced. You're my girl. You're going to be my own dear little wife. When, Milly, dear? Don't put me off! I found out today that I could buy the Henderson place, way up there on the hill, if you like it, dear. Home there—with you waiting for me—. When, Milly? I love you so. When?"

He was not to be denied. "Soon, Dick, if you really want me," she said happily, but there were tears in her eyes when he leaned down to kiss the sparkling ring on her finger, and the little pink palm that fluttered in his hand like a homing bird.

Life had not cheated them out of the thrill of their great moment after all.

Pessimistic.

George, who lives in London, happened to meet the vicar of his native parish the other day. He asked after some of his old acquaintances.

"And old Mr. Jones," he asked; "have you seen him lately?"

The vicar shook his head. "I shall never see him again," he answered, slowly. "Mr. Jones has gone to Heaven."

Barrie Admits That He Murdered G. Wesley Moult

Signed Confession by Accused Read by Crown Attorney Carnew at Police Court Yesterday — Says "Another Man" Helped Him to Cover up the Crime—Prisoner is Dejected

COMMITTED TO ASSIZES FOR TRIAL

Following the completion of evidence given on the stand by Inspector F. Naphen, of the Provincial Police, and Jail Governor T. Ketcheson, on Friday afternoon at the preliminary trial of Maurice Barrie, charged with the murder of Wesley Moult, the accused was sent up for trial at the Fall assizes, which opens here at Belleville on Tuesday, September 19, before Mr. Justice Latchford, by Police Magistrate H. H. Bedford, of Deseronto, who had charge of the preliminary trial.

The trial culminated in a portion of evidence given by Inspector Naphan, who is in charge of the case, and was substantiated by Mr. Ketcheson, who was a witness, when the following confession, dictated by the prisoner, and signed by him after he had been repeatedly warned that anything he might say would be used in evidence against him at his trial, and after the confession statement had been read to him:

July 1st, 1922.

I, Maurice Barrie, declare that on Thursday, June 29th, 1922, I did shoot and kill Wesley Moult, 40 rods north of Moult's barn, between the hours of 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. I fired one shot at him with a 22 rifle, belonging to Charlie Sargent. Moult lived about half an hour after I shot him. I was not there when he died. He did not die in the lane where he was shot. Another man and myself brought him to the barn, and laid him on the barn floor. The other man then told me to go down to the barn for the car, and drive around for a while, and come back, which I done, and stayed driving around for an hour. When I came back to the barn, I found Moult was gone, and the other man was not there.

I have known the man who was with me when Moult was shot for about one month or six weeks, but I don't want to tell his name at this time. He fired the first shot at Moult, but I don't know whether it took effect or not, but Moult was down on his knees when I saw him.

This statement is true, and made voluntarily.

(Signed) Maurice Barrie.
(Witness) T. Ketcheson.
F. Naphan.

J. E. Butler, counsel for the accused, objected strenuously to the reading of the confession, and entered his objection after it was read also.

Barrie Ill That Day.

Thomas E. Ketcheson, jail governor, when called to the stand, testified that every statement made by

PAYS 5-CENT FARE DODGED IN 1910

New York, July 22.—The Public Service Railway Company in Newark added 5 cents to its "conscience fund" yesterday. A letter, in which five one-cent stamps were enclosed, read as follows:

"Twelve years ago I got on a car and the conductor didn't see me. I want to live a Christian life, and in order to do so I had to make things right, which the Lord showed me right away. Trusting to be forgiven, yours truly, N.P." The letter bore the Jersey City postmark. No promise was made to remit later the 4 cents interest due.

Sellers and buyers were to-day upon the market in large numbers and much for sale, and the greater portion was farm and garden produce was offered disposed of at fair prices. Fresh dairy butter was sold at 42c and 40c per pound. Some basket lots were procured at 40c.

Strictly fresh eggs were quite plentiful selling at 25c and 30c per dozen. Buyers are paying 25c and 26c for crate lots.

Dressed chickens still command a good price, selling at $2.00 to $2.50 a pair, according to size and quality. Broilers sold at $1.00 and $1.25 a pair.

Garden products such as cabbage, peas, beans, onions, potatoes, beets, etc., were in abundance. New potatoes were sold at 40c a peck, cabbage 10c and 15c each. Ripe tomatoes were sold at 25c a berrybox. Green peas were 25c a quart.

RAILWAYMEN'S WAGES MERE SUBSISTANCE

Says President Mosher—Proposed Reduction of Wages "Imposition"

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, July 22.—"An imposition and an utter disregard of every sense of fairness and justice" was the description applied by A. R. Mosher, president of Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Employees, in discussing the proposed reduction in wages at the opening of the conference of the Brotherhoods Grievance Committee to-day. He declared that the wages received by most of lower paid employes on Canadian railways could not be described as more than "mere subsistance allowance."

TWELVE-YEAR-OLD LIFE-SAVER

Boy Has Saved Three Lives From Drowning in Past Three Years—Says "It Wasn't Nothin' at all."

Halifax, N.S., July 22.—Harry McDonald, a twelve-year-old lad living at Fairview, on the outskirts of Halifax, has saved three lives from drowning within the past three years.

His latest feat was the saving recently of five-year-old Teddy Moller, when the small boy fell through a hole in a Fairview wharf. Young McDonald had to dive over the wharf and swim a distance of twenty feet among the piles. The young Moller boy was going down for the third time and was unconscious when reached, but McDonald clutched him and then holding to one of the piles directed the remainder of the saving operations. These were carried out with the aid of a cod line passed down from the wharf.

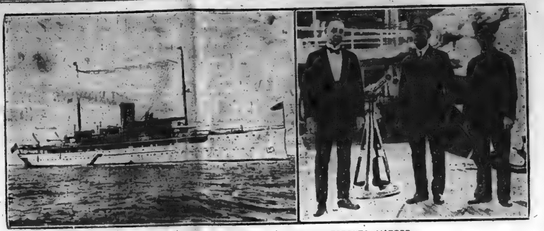
Questioned about his first life-saving exploit, Harry said:

"Aw, it wasn't nuthin' at all. The O'Brien kid that lives on Stanley street fell off a raft down by the shipyards and I went in and pulled him out."

The description of the second exploit, when he rescued Arthur Metham, was:

'He was my chum, so I had to get him back."

It was not until after his first two rescues that the young life saver learned to swim. In the first instance he plunged after the "O'Brien kid" into the water over his head, and managed somehow to get him back to the raft. In the second he went to his chum's rescue partially supported by a stick.



TWO MILLION DOLLAR YACHT STANDS OF TORONTO HARBOR.

Delphine II., owned by Mrs. Horace E. Dodge, widow of the founder of the famous automobile firm, now cruising in Ontario waters. The captain of the vessel, Frederick C. Jarvis, claimed she was too deep in the draught to enter Toronto harbor. Officers of the Delphine II. are shown on the right: In the centre, Capt. Frederick L. Jarvis, steward Fred Griffith, from the land of Lloyd George, and on the right, Chief Engineer John Cobb, who hails from Aberdeen, Scotland. The yacht is a marvel of luxury, and the officers are of the kind one would expect to find in charge of such a floating palace.

QUEBEC IS AFTER BLIND PIGGERS

52 Residents of Hull to be Charged—Jails Preparing to Receive Them

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, Ont., July 22.—Fifty-two residents of Hull, some of them well-known in city, will be charged early next week with violation of the Quebec Liquor Act following a campaign conducted against blind pigs. As the penalty for selling liquor is a jail term, plans for the reception of many prisoners are being made.

THESE THIEVES WORK ON THE SABBATH

Hoboes Rob Cobourg House While Residents Attend Church

While James Tucker, of Cobourg, was attending church on Sunday morning thieves broke into his house and stole considerable of his wearing apparel. When he returned he found the clothing missing, and Chief Ruse was at once notified. On visiting the house Chief Ruse found the two culprits hiding under a bed upstairs. On Monday morning they came up before P. M. Floyd. They gave their names as Raymond Little, of Nova Scotia, and Jas. Mohoney, of New Brunswick, and were committed for trial. The two are hoboes, and had taken a coat, ties, shaving brush, pair of boots and sweater, in which they had attired themselves. Evidently Mr Tucker returned before they had a chance to get away, and they decided to hide under the bed until opportunity of making a safe getaway arrived.

Maloney, who is 56 years of age and Little, who is 19 years of age came up in the county judge's criminal court Wednesday and pleaded guilty to the burglary charge. Both admitted having been out of work in Vancouver, and were beating their way back to New Brunswick. They were remanded to see if they had any previous record. It was also explained how Mr. Tucker found they were hiding under the bed. The two had taken a bottle of ginger ale, which they left out in the yard. When the sun struck it, the cap on the bottle blew out with a noise like a revolver shot. Thinking someone was taking a shot at them, they moved around, and Mr. Tucker hearing the noise, called up Chief Ruse, who soon had them under lock and key.

Minister Says He Knows Nothing About New Chairman

Windsor, Ont., July 22.—Hon. Geo. P. Graham told a reporter yesterday afternoon that he would under no condition accept the chairmanship of the Canadian National Railways.

"It is not me," said the Minister, "You can take that as strong as you like."

"Could you give a line on who the chairman will be?" asked the reporter.

"I know nothing about it. I can say nothing. It is not me and I know nothing about who it will be, that is definite."

The Minister declined to discuss the mater further. He goes East to-night.

MOSQUITO OVERTURNS AN AUTOMOBILE

Kearney, N.J., July 22.—A large Jersey mosquito alighted on the nose of Louis Leonett, who was driving his auto around Dead Man's Curve, near here, and in trying to swat it, he lost control of his car, which overturned in a ditch. The five occupants escaped injury.

RANEY DEFIES THE GLOBE

Challenges It to Name "Boss" Gambler Who It Insinuated Has Pull With the Govt.

Toronto, July 22.—The suggestion of the Globe in to-day's leading editorial that the Drury Government was being infuenced by "the boss gambler who still has friends at court" brought a warm retort from Hon. Mr. Raney, the Attorney-General, today.

Raney's Challenge.

Mr. Raney issued this challenge to the Globe: "Let it give the public the name of the boss gambler and also let it give public the names of the members of the present Ontario Government with whom he has influence."

"The suggestion of the Globe," said Mr. Raney, "is worthy of Howard Ferguson or of the Toronto Evening Telegram. The plain insinuation is that the Ontario Government is being restrained from some action that it ought to take towards the suppression of race-track gambling through the influence of the boss gambler.

FIVE KILLED IN COLLISION

U.S. Trains in Head-on Collision at Logan, Missouri

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Springfield, Mass., July 22—Five persons were killed and several injured to-day when the St. Louis-San Franciso train struck the train known as "the Meteor" in head-on collision at Logan, Missouri. The list of dead is not available.

LOCAL MAN INJURED

Collides With Motor Car While Riding Motorcycle Near Whitby

With a compound fracture of both legs, a cut in his head and several serious wounds in his body, Carman Ashley of West-Huntington, near Belleville, lies in the Oshawa General Hospital. The young man, who is only 22 years of age, and single, was riding a motorcycle west on the Kingston road, to the west of Whitby, when he ran into a motor car recently. His injuries were very serious and his condition is such that Dr. R. F. Maclaren, of Whitby, who is attending the injured man, doubts if he could give any detailed account of the accident.

The young man is employed in the McLaughlin Garage at Belleville. His mother, Mrs. C. Ashley, is now in Oshawa. The unfortunate youth will not be able to leave the local hospital for some considerable time, Dr. Maclaren states.

BAY WATER IS CLEANER NOW THAN IT WAS IN OLD DAYS

Mr. Mikel Makes Plea For Use of Water Along Shores of Island—Wants Dressing Rooms and Timber Booms

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:—It may be readily conceded that the water in the Bay of Quinte is not as attractive for bathing as the water in some other localities, nevertheless, the water at Victoria Park is in much better condition than it was years ago.

For generations back the boys of Belleville each Summer have enjoyed the pleasures of bathing in the waters at the east, west and south of the park, wherever they could get a chance to put on a bathing suit, and sometimes without that formality. I have heard the late Senator speak of swimming there.

Thanks to the efforts of His Honour Judge Wills when in the City Council a few years ago, the system of garbage collection was inaugerated. Before that the garbage from places along the river and other parts of the city was dumped into the river. Dead dogs, cats and even horses used to be dumped into the river. Along the banks of the River were constructed out-houses overhanging the water. The domestic sewerage of the City poured into the River at the Lower Bridge. These polluting practices have been stopped and the water rendered more acceptable for bathing than it was for generations before when thousands of Belleville boys bathed in these waters with never a complaint. Now the out-houses have been removed, the deposit of garbage and dead animals in the river stopped, and the domestic sewerage of the city is diluted and washed by thousands of gallons of water traversing the sewers for a distance of from a half mile to two miles, thence through a pipe along the bottom of the river and bay before it is emptied into the water.

In former days, wide booms of timber were extended out into the water each Spring from the side of the Park and were hauled in again in the Fall. The boys ran out on these booms and jumped off into water of a depth to suit them.

Timber booms could now be extended out into the water around the Park in the same way. This would get over the objection, raised to permanent cement swimming pools around the Park, resulting from the great variation in the depth of the water in the Bay from year to year. And it would reduce the expense. Let a start be made with dressing rooms and timber booms.

TRADE PARALYSIS CREEPING OVER U.S.

Widespread Shortage of Power and Fuel Expected in Few Days

Washington, July 22.—Slowly paralyzing the nation's industries, threatening widespread shortage of light and heat within a few days, causing inconvenience, disorders, loss of life and property damage already running into millions, the combined rail and coal strikes have brought on an industrial crisis, the magnitude of which was revealed in reports today from all parts of the country.

Not only are wheels slowing on the country's transportation systems, but public utilities are closing down and actual suffering because of shortage of coal is not far off, advices gathered today indicate.

Disorders are reported from coast to coast. New England carriers announce increasing sabotage on many lines, Pacific coast roads report kidnappings and beatings.

Trouble is feared in western Pennsylvania, West Virgina and Ohio as mines are reopening. State troops are out in New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

Serious Fuel Shortages.

Serious fuel shortages, due in part to the coal strike, but to the car shortage caused by the rail shopmen's walkout as well, are reported from all parts of the country.

Some steamship lines on the Great Lakes are down to four days' supply. Cleveland has only three days' ration of coal for its light plant. Farmers are hard pressed for fuel to run threshing machines and public utilities.

WATCHMAN IS MURDERED

Old Man Slain in Jam Factory—Robbery the Motive

Hamilton, Ont., July 22.—A brutal murder was discovered in the jam factory of Senator Smith and Son, Winona, early this morning when the body of the night watchman, E. F. Caddy, aged 77, was found in a pool of blood in the warehouse at the rear of the factory. Examination showed that the bullet had been fired directly through his forehead.

While there were no signs of a struggle, i was apparent that the motive was robbery, as a vault in the offices was blown open and an attempt made to open a small safe. A small sum of money is missing.

COAL FAMINE TO BE AVERTED

Toronto Board of Control Votes $100,000 to Purchase Welsh Coal

Toronto, July 22.—The Board of Control, on the motion of Mayor Maguire, to-day voted an appropriation of $100,000 to be set aside to purchase Welsh coal to relieve the situation in Toronto next winter.

"The situation is serious, and unless we take some action the people of this city will be without coal this winter," said Mayor Maguire. "We ought to take every precaution."

The Mayor pointed out that there was grave danger of famine. "Where else do you propose to get coal?" he asked. "We are going to be caught unless something is done."

Con. Foster wanted to get reports on the situation first.

Mayor—"We can't wait until winter."

Con. Foster wanted to consult the officials first.

Con. Gibbons—"The fact that the money is voted does not mean it has to be spent right away."

The Mayor stated that the city would have to take precautions or many citizens would be without coal. "We can vote an appropriation now and the details as to amount and price and transportation can be settled later."

The board consented and the recommendation goes to Council Monday.

The Labor Leader to-day emphasizes the seriousness of the coal situation, and says: "The people of Ontario must be protected. Some means must be found to assure us of a coal supply. It may be necessary even to bring coal from England," and "calls upon the Provincial Government to take the initiative immediately in calling a conference of the municipal authorities to deal with every important matter."

FERGUSON WILL NOT REPLACE THE O.T.A.

Expressed no Such Opinion as Western Despatch Reported

Toronto, July 22—Hon. G. H. Ferguson returned to Toronto from his western tour yesterday afternoon and granted an interview immediately on his arrival, in which he asked if he would displace the O.T.A. if returned to power.

"Neither in the west nor in the east nor anywhere have I spoken against the law, the O.T.A.," declared Mr. Ferguson. "The people have expressed the sentiment for which they stand and we are prepared to stand by that sentiment and give it effect in legislation. But I have criticised the method of enforcing the law. There is certainly room for improvement in that."

Mr. Ferguson made it clear that he had not objected to the principle of the O. T. A., that he had not authorised or given the interview in Victoria, B. C., credited to him, and that at no time had he suggested a new law to replace the O.T.A. He had discussed prohibition with Westerners from their standpoint, but never with a newspaperman.

NEPHEW MISTAKEN FOR BURGLAR

Had Forgotten His Key and Was Seen Climbing Into House—Police Arrive and Retire

New York, July 22.—Excitement was caused at Police Headquarters in Brooklyn the other evening, when a female voice said to one of the operators on the telephone switchboard: "I wish to report that somebody is breaking into Commissioner Enright's house." The commotion was repeated in a few seconds when the information was relayed to the Atlantic Avenue Precinct. All the available patrolmen and detectives were rushed in an automobile patrol wagon to the Commissioner's home at 587 St. Mark's Avenue.

The policemen threw a cordon about the house and while they were consulting on the best method of procedure, a young man opened a window on the second floor and inquired the cause of their presence.

"Who are you" shouted the policeman in charge.

"I am Commissioner Enright's nephew," was the answer.

In explanation the young man told the policeman that he was stopping in the house during the Commissioner's stay abroad. When he arrived at the house he found he had forgotten his keys, and in order to get in he went to the home of Dr. B. G. Herzog and asked permission to go to the roof. He crossed several roofs to that of his uncle's house, and then dropped to the roof of an extension and broke a window pane on the second floor and entered the house.

It later developed that a young woman saw Mr. Enright enter the house in approved burglar fashion and notified the police.

BYNG OF VIMY MEETS OLD "BYNG BOY"

Presents Capt. Swift, M.C., With Autographed Photograph

Calgary, Alta., July 20.—"There's a man! He's the boy for me!" I'm just hoppin' around this old cow town telling people all about it. I'm a pretty chesty son-of-a-gun, 'I'll tell the world." In this manner Captain R. G. Swift, M.C., described a meeting with the Governor-General Lord Byng, here recently. In the rotunda of a local hotel the governor-general recognized Captain Swift as one of the "Byng boys" who served under him at Vimy Ridge, and while they chatted for some ten or fifteen minutes, the battle was fought over again. To-day, the captain is the proud possessor of an autographed photograph of the Governor-General and Lady Byng presented to him by Lord Byng following their little informal chat.

Captain Swift, now the postmaster at Magrath, Alta., was with the first C. M. R.'s at Vimy where he lost his leg in a shell explosion. He enlisted at Lethbridge early in the war, and was drafted overseas shortly afterwards.

SWEDEN'S FUTURE NAVAL PROGRAM

Stockholm, July 21.—A parliamentary commission supported by navy experts has proposed for the Swedish Navy a building program for the next ten years of four fast armored cruisers, 12 destroyers, six big torpedo boats, three mine layers, 22 submarine chasers and a number of smaller craft. The armored cruisers are to be 6,500 tons each with a speed of 30 knots, with eight 21 centimeter and six 12 centimer guns.

As the proposal is based on parliamentary consideration there is a probability of it being passed during the coming sessions of Parliament.

GERMANY INVENTS NEW WAY TO TAX FOREIGNERS

Berlin, July 21.—The Prussian government has drafted a bill for the legalisation of taxation, in all communities of over 1,000 inhabitants, on all persons who rent rooms for a sojourn of a period under six months. The tax amounts to 40 percent where the lodging charge is more than 500 marks. In the case of persons who have not resided in Prussia previous to January 1921, the tax is 200 percent.

While the proposed assessment is ostensibly applicable to all persons, five-fold assessment indicates a universal lodging impost fundamentally aimed at foreigners. Officials explain that local communities participate to a very limited extent in the nations taxation proceeds. Hence they are oblidgd to look around for fresh sources of revenue, and the lodging house tax affords one of the easiest ways for communities to increase their income.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

A Terrible Story.

Extremes meet. This is not a proverb, like rolling stones gather no moss, and it isn't a saying. It is a truth. In prehistoric tombs we unearth mummies who were buried doubled up. They were trying to make extremes meet, which is a natural law, for a baby when he comes into the world can put his foot in his mouth, and that is the way our prehistoric ancestors went out of the world. The first coffin was a jar, and it didn't have to be such an awful big jar, either. There is where we get our expression, "Wouldn't that jar you?" The first comic song ever written was the Gates Ajar—the pall-bearers dropped the crock.

Well, as I was saying, extremes meet. Walking is becoming a recreation, a fashion in exercise. The streets and highways are full of autos and many thoughtful and sane people have taken to the good old habit of walking. Last year I rode twenty thousand miles in my car and never met anybody on foot, unless it was somebody who couldn't borrow gas, or a jack, or an air-pump, or an extra tire, or a magneto, or something like that. This year I have met several people walking—just out for a walk. I am not trying to be funny—this is a fact. And their numbers will increase. They will not make a walking expedition along the main highways; that would be too dangerous. But they will walk along the back roads, the quiet concessions, and see the world—another world. You get no idea of our beautiful land from a railway train or from an auto on a great highway. The highway is simply a continuation and a slithery replica of Yonge street, King street, Main street. The railroad is simply the street railway on a large scale. Get off the highway and hit the dirt roads through the sequestered fields. There are a great many things you can take in the world. They can be had for the taking. Take a walk!

One of him called in to see me the other day and I told him to lay down his knapsack and his parcel and put his little cock-robin kodak where I couldn't see it, and I asked him to stay all night. He was walking across western Ontario, and I envied him. He is having a wonderful holiday, and it is costing him hardly anything. He followed unknown trails through the hills and swamps and every secluded farmhouse was a King Edward Hotel, only he didn't have to pay anything. If he hit the house at meal time he was asked to sit up, and at evening he was a Godsend.

I inquired if he had met any famous people on his travels, and I noticed that he suddenly became morose.

"What's the matter with you?" I asked. "Ain't you feeling well?"

"Oh, yes," he said with a sigh, "but I have had one painful experience."

"Tell me about it," I says; and he did so, as follows:

"When I was passing Listowel, I thought it would be nice to call on the Hon. Wellington Hay, the revered leader of the noble old Liberal party. I have never seen him, but I thought it would be nice to gaze upon his face and be able to tell my children (if I have any luck that way) how I had conversed with the gentleman who was wearing Sir Olliver Mowat's shoes. I admit that I had other reasons. I was dry—awful dry—and to tell you the honest truth I wanted a drink. I knowed that Wellington had the stuff in his suller—he got it a couple weeks ago—lots of it; an' I thought I'd give him a song and dance and play him for about three fingers or so. He is a very nice man, an' cordial, but he didn't 'pear to be partickler pleased to see me tho' I told him I was the genuwine article. 'Mister Hay,' I says, 'my fambly has voted grit for three generations, and I'm grit an' by thunder,' I says, 'I'm going to stay grit,' I says, and I thought that this would start him down suller after somethin.' But it didn't; he just smiled benign.

"Then I took another tack. I told him that my grandad hid William Lyon Mackenzie three days in our pig-pen, when he was fleeing from the blood-thirsty British. I told him that we used that pig-pen yit—and we hev, too, it is the worst antique in western Ontario. The French Knajins hev the Papineau gun, but we've got the original pig-pen what sheltered that immortal patriot, William Lyon Mackenzie, when there was a price upon his head. Mister Hay remarked, 'How very interesting. Pray go on.' But he never went down suller

"I told him we hev the porringer that my granny took his porridge to him every morning, and it sits upon the whatnot in our parlor to this day; and if I'm not mistaken we've got the churn that furnished the buttermilk for his mush.

"And then he up and says to me, 'Will you have some lemonade, my friend?'

"Oh, it was then the iron entered into my soul.' Lemonade! And him with a cellar full of the real thing. And me a genuine grit—all others are base imitations. I left him more in sorrow than in anger, and when I got to the gate, I says 'The back of my hand an' the sole of my foot to you, Mister Hay.' The devil take me if I ever vote grit again,' an' I won't either."

In came Sar Ann with a tumbler of raspberry vinegar on a tray and a couple of cookies.

GROWING BOYS AND GIRLS

Need Rich, Red Blood to Keep Up Health and Strength.

It is a mistake to think that anaemia is only a girl's complaint. Girls probably show the effect of weak, watery blood more plainly than boys. But many boys in their teens grow thin and weedy, showing that they have not enough blood, or that it is thin and watery. Let the boy in this condition catch cold and he will lose his strength and his health becomes precarious. To overcome this trouble give both your weak boys and girls Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and see how soon good appetite returns and the weak boy or languid girl becomes full of activity and high spirits. Mrs. P. Garvey, R.R. No. 5, Mono Mills, Ont., tells what this medicine did for her young son. She says:— "Three years ago, my little boy, who was then 11 years old, was very pale and weak, he would take fainting spells and complained of a pain about his heart. One day a lady friend who noticed his run-down condition told me her daughter had been in a similar state and found new health through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I therefore got a supply for my boy, and by the time the first box was used his appetite seemed better, and by the time he had taken half a dozen boxes everyone was surprised at the change in his condition, he was such a fine, healthy looking boy. He had grown tall and stout, with no signs of his former run-down condition. I believe Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are unexcelled for anyone weak and run down."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ANOTHER WAR REVELATOR ANNOUNCES HIS WARES

London, July 21.—Startling revelations respecting the dethronement and death of former Emperor Nicholas are promised by Alexander Kerensky, one time President of the Russian Republic, who has been quietly writing his memoirs in a London flat. Kerensky's plan was to spirit the Emperor of Russia to a neutral European country or to the United States, but this, he contends, was frustrated by Great Britain.

The book of the former Russian dictator will begin with the inception of the war and cover the final collapse of the Empire. It will explain not only the causes of the Romanoff overthrow, but the failure of Kerensky's own government.

The writer declares that if the Allies had been willing to let Russia remain passive for a period, they could have kept her as a valuable ally. The book will point out that the Entente insisted on Russia displaying energy on the front while in the throes of a revolution at home.

His own overthrow Kerensky atributes to simultaneous pressure from the two extreme parties, the Royalists on the right and the Bolsheviki on the left, aided by the hostility of the army.

A MODEL FACTORY

One of the most admirably equipped factories in the world has recently been erected near London, England, for the manufacture of confectionery and for the packing of tea. In the tea department the whole of the work is done by machinery, the tea not being touched by hand from beginning to end. The tea chests are brought in barges to a canal dock and lifted out of the barges by means of an electric transporter which carries them into the factory. They are then raised by an electric conveyor to an upper floor where a sample is taken for tasting purposes. The tea is then emptied down shoots leading to automatic machines which weight out the tea in pounds, half pounds, or quarter pounds, as required, shape a package out of sheets of paper, fill the package with the exact weight of tea, and then close the packet. This packing operation is done at the rate of one complete package per second. The packages are then made up in parcels of one dozen or more and placed on electric trucks which convey them to the despatch department. There they are placed on an electrically driven endless band which projects inside the wagons in the loading bay.

Barrie Admits He Murdered G. Wes. Moult

Inspector Naphan with regard to the confession was true.

To Mr. Butler, witness told of Barrie having been seriously ill on the day that the confession had been made. Barrie, it seems, had taken a fainting spell (to which Barrie alleges he is subject) and jail surgeon J. J. Farley had considerable difficulty in restoring him to consciousness.

Mr. Butler's objection was therefore that it was not legally correct to take a confession from an accused person, after such a serious illness, without accused having been first examined both physically and mentally by the jail surgeon.

Witness declared, however, that Barrie meant to make the confession, when he asked him to get Inspector Naphan as he wanted to see him. And Naphan also warned him again that anything he said would be used as evidence against him.

"Everything was purely voluntary," said the witness, "and the statement was read over to him afterwards."

Barrie Feels Position.

While the confession was being read, Barrie buried his face in his arms as he leaned forward on the dock rail, and he did not raise his head for 20 minutes or half an hour. When Mr. Butler rose to object to the procedure, Barrie raised his head and listened intently, and later when being taken below by the provincial constables, he tarried to whisper a few words to Inspector Naphan and his counsel.

Description of Man.

Though properly approached on more than one occasion by Inspector Naphan to see if he would divulge the name of the man who he states assisted him in his terrible deed, Barrie stoutly refused to give his name.

The most that he would tell was that the man was about 35 years of age, lived between one and two miles from Moult's farm, and yet was a stranger in the neighborhood.

Barrie said he would never tell who he was ,as there was no use of getting him mixed up in t he affair. "Personally," said he, "I am too far gone myself, so I won't get anyone else in on it." This was told to Inspector Naphan in a cell at the police station on the morning of July 2nd.

Barrie Was Soldier.

Barrie also told the officer that he was a member of a Montreal battalion of soldiers, commanded by Colonel Hayes, and he also called the M.O of the battalion by name, but the inspector had forgotten the name.

When Dr. Farley examined Barrie on July 2nd, he said he had a bit of a cold, but was not very ill.

Alberta Phillips Held.

Until such time as bondsmen thus pledged themselves that Alberta Phillips, maid at the Moult home, would appear and give evidence at the trial at the assizes, she was held by crown officials. Terms were finally arranged.

It was feared tha possibly the girl might get married and leave this section of the country

All evidence seemed to pale in the face of the startling confession which caused a spontaneous gasping in the court though a pin dropping would have been quite audible when the confession was being read.

Nothing startling or of a new character was given up until the time that Inspector Naphan took the stand. The public, however, are so interested in this mysterious and shocking affair that the testimony will all be published for the benefit of those who could not be present at the trial, or who could not gain admission to the court room.

Court room was crowded to the doors one hour before the preliminary trial of Maurice Barrie, was continued on Friday afternoon at 2 p.m. before Magistrate H. H. Bedford of Deseronto, and remained so until the conclusion of the trial.

Mrs. Lily Mae Moult, widow of George Wesley Moult, deceased, continued her evidence in the afternoon, although she had been on the stand for one hour and a half at the morning session.

"Mr. Butler—"Were the little differences between Moult and Maurice substantial?"

"How far did they go ?"

Mrs. Moult could not give any instances of a real quarrel.

"I did not know who was driving the horses when the democrat and horses were driven to the Carter place at 8 a.m., the morning of the morning of the 29th of June. Wes returned at noon and we had dinner about 12 o'clock. It took about 20 minutes to eat the meal, and Wes. sat back in a chair and slept for about 10 minutes with one of the children on his knee. When he awakened, he went out to find Maurice about a quarter to 1 o'clock. That is the last I ever saw of him. I went out myself after 1 p.m. when I saw Maurice standing in the horse stable door. The bottom half of the door was closed, and he was standing behind it, in the doorway of the stable.

'It took me about five or ten minutes to feed the chickens that day, I would think. I do not know whether the horses were in the stable then or not. Barrie was in the house, (when I went to get the water for the chickens), or else came in shortly after. I do not know what time this was. When he came in and asked me if I wanted anything from the store, it would be about 2 p.m. He returned and I saw him working in the drive house about 4 p.m., just before he left for Hamilton's. He returned about 4.45 p.m. and about 5 p.m. told me Wes would not be home for supper. We had supper after 6 that night'.'

"I did not ever see the rifle hang on the nails in the barn as described by the officer to-day."

"As far as I know, Wes and Maurice were rather friendly. Maurice was getting unsatisfactory towards the last. Wes told me this and also told the neighbors. Wes would put up with more than I would."

Alberta Phillips

Alberta Phillips maid at the Moult home, sworn said:

"I commenced to work at Moult's on April 17th of this year. I had worked previously in this capacity. I was to receive $20 per month. I am 19 years of age today, have two sisters and one brother. I went home last Tuesday, as Monday was the end of my month.

"Wesley Moult always treated me as a gentleman, acting honourably towards me. Barrie was not, and I first noticed this shortly after I came there. He was jealous of me. When I went home every second Saturday, he was different. I have a steady gentleman friend, who came to see me at Moult's and I would go away with him. My first disagreement with Barrie occurred about two weeks after I went there. I had never told Wes about this disagreement Maurice kissed me in front of Wes one day at noon. One Saturday Mr. Moult drove me home after I had refused to go with Maurice. But Maurice got into the back seat of the car, and we all went to my father's home."

Moult Teased Them

Maurice and I kept on scrapping over little things but Moult did not know anything about our quarrels that I know of. Moult teased us.

One time I went away with another fellow and Wes said to Maurice, 'Now see what you get with your head in the air.'

'I hadn't spoken to Maurice for one and a half weeks before June 29th."

"I saw Maurice and Wes. on the democrat and driving the grey team to the Carter place on the morning of June 29th last."

"I saw Maurice go into the drive house where I heard him pounding there. Moult came up about a quarter to twelve, on the democrat with the grey team. The three children were with him. Wes then came down to his dinner. Maurice went up with the whey can about eleven a.m. I did not see Maurice during the whole noon hour. He had always been on time for dinner. I do not know why he was late that day."

"Maurice said he did not want any dinner although I had kept it hot for him in the oven. He came in later and ate the pudding and went out again."

Witness then told of Barrie having come into the house, and later taken the car to Plainfield, parallel to the evidence of Mrs. Moult.

"I did not see any person with fire arms the day of the 29th of June."

"He wasn't gone five minutes between the time he refused dinner and then returned to eat the pudding. I saw him next about four p.m. when he took the car out to the road again and down east. He returned about five p.m. He told Mrs Moult that Wes would not be back for supper, but would be back to help milk. We had supper about 7 p.m. and the milking was not done before supper. At supper, Mrs. Moult said it was funny that Wes would go away and not tell her where he was going."

"Maurice sai dthe cows are back in the Timothy, and I will go back and put the out and look for Wes. Maurice shaved, and then went up the lane, and when he returned he said, "I don't see anything of him back there."

"Mrs. Moult then told him to go and get Dan Coffey."

The evidence of witness was similar to the evidence of Mrs. Moult in this connection.

"I do not know whether Barrie was back to the house after he left that night or not, and I do not know how the ladder got to the window. I saw the ladde r there, however."

To Mr. Butler—"I am very bitter against Barrie and everything that is true that I can say against him, I will say. I never heard Wes or Maurice quarrel, and I saw the two of them driving off to work that morning. The last I saw of Barrie about the house that morning was when he went up stairs. I did not hear Moult say what he intended to do that afternoon."

"Moult rested in the chair about an hour after dinner. I could not see whether the horses were taken out of the stable that afternoon or not. Barrie showed up at the house about 15 or 20 minutes after Wes left the house for the barn."

Charles Hamilton

Neighbor of Wesley Moult sworn stated that on the 29th of June, Moult was not at his place that he knew of. "I was on the place all day and Barriewas not there, that I know of either,' concluded witness.

Daniel Coffey

Daniel Coffey farmer, Lot 4, Concession 8 Tyendinaga, neighbor, sworn said:-

"I know Barrie since March. I was up to Mr. Shannon's in the afternoon of the 29th of June Barrie was not at my place to my knowledge on that day."

Charles Sargent

Charles Sargent, farmer 6th Concession Tyendinaga sworn said:

"I loaned my 22 rifle to Barrie early in April. It requires 22 long or short, rim fire ammunition. Barrie borrowed it to hunt woodchucks and came to my place for it. He never returned it to me. I would know the rifle if I saw it. I loaned it to some boys once and they got a bullet caught in it, and they flattened the muzzle trying to get it out. (The rifle was presented and witness immediately recognized it.) I saw the gun hanging on the inside of the swing beam of the barn, the muzzle pointing north. The magazine is not working but the single shot may be fired from it easily enough.

William Goodfellow

William Goodfellow farmer, Lot 4 Concession 6 of Tyendinaga, sworn said:

"I know Barrie. I saw him about 10.30 a.m. June 29th, walking up past my place coming from the east. He was carrying a gun of some sort, for he waved the gun at me as a salutation. I would be about 40 or 50 rods distant from Barrie at the time I was standing down at the road about four p.m. and Barrie drove past in the car, and that was the last time I saw him at large."

Francis J. Naphan

J. Naphan, 144 Chatham St. Belleville, Provincial Inspector in charge of the case, sworn said:

"I motored to the Moult farm on the morning of June 30th. I have known Moult for 20 years, District Inspector Adams and Provincial Constables Hughes and Davis joined me there that morning. We got there about 2.30 a.m.

I found Moult's body in the grain bin in the barn, the body was left in charge of Davis. I notified Coroner W. W. Boyce, and later went to Shannonville in search of Barrie, the suspect, about 5.30 a. m."

Witness then explained very clearly and in detail, the search for Barrie that morning by the posse of police officers and about 100 farmer neighbours, until he met the officers with their prisoner in the car, on the road.. Witness told of having personally seen Barrie running through the second field on the fourth concession of Tyendinaga before his capture. "When we arrived at the Belleville police station," continued witness, I searched Barrie, and locked him up. I saw accused on July 1st about 10 a.m. in the jail here. In the meantime I had interviewed some 20 people out around the Moult home in connection with this case.

Barrie asked me what he was charged with, and when told he was charged with murder by Jail Governor T. Ketcheson, he said he had nothing to say.

I notified him that anything he said would be used against him at his trial, as I was on the other side of the case."

Mr. Butler—"I object to any statements because the crown officials must prove without shadow of doubt that such statement is voluntary, and an officer's testimony is not sufficient to prove this." Continuing witness told of Barrie having told him his story of his movements on June 29th.

"Maurice said he had been down to the Carter place that day, and that Wesley Moult had sent him up to the home place at 10.30 a.m. to build a fence. He said he fixed the fence. They had a 22 rifle with them that day. While fixing the fence his wrist watch got a bang, he said and would not go, so that he had to guess at the dinner hour, and that explained his being late for dinner that day. He said that he met Moult at the back of the barn, and Moult told him to go to his dinner, and to then unharness the horses. He then gave Moult the gun and Moult went back to the fields. He told Mrs. Moult that Wes was back fixing a fence. He went down to the house and ate some dinner after Mrs. Moult told him to. He then had the car out, and after returning he did the chores. He said that Mrs. Moult missed Wes and had something to say about it. At 9 p.m. he went into the drive house, and lay down and slept till 1 a.m. When he awakened, he went to the line fence of Coffey's farm where he heard something said about him that was not very nice. He then stated he went across the road into a field, where he remained until 4 a. m. and then went about the fields until 6 a.m. when he gave himself up to Mr. Peter McLaren.

Telling the story of the happenings on July 1st last at the county jail when Barrie had instricted Mr. Ketcheson to have him come up to the jail for an interview, Inspector Naphan stated that he had seen accused about 6.15 p.m.

"When I went into the jail with Mr. Ketcheson, Barrie asked me for pencil and paper."

"On being reminded by Mr. Ketcheson, I again warned prisoner that anything he might say would be used against him at his trial."

"We three went out into the governor's office and Barrie asked me to take down something. I wrote his statement down." Witness then produced the statement and read it before the court.

"They told me Barrie had had an epileptic fit that day, so I asked him if he was subject to fits and he said no. He said he had had a fainting spell, and was subject to faints."

Mr. Butler—"The onus has not been shown by the crown that this man made a statement, while in a fit physical condition. The duty of the crown is to produce the jail physician, and ascertain if the accused was in such a condition so as to make such a statement."

The following conversation took place between F. Naphan and prisoner on the following morning.

Inspector—"Who is this man you mention in the confession?"

Accused—"I'm too far gone myself so there is no use drawing anyone else into it. I won't say who he is."

Inspector—"Is there such a man?"

Answer—"Yes."

Question—"Did he have any reason for killing Moult?"

Answer—"I won't say."

Inspector—"You may some day."

Accused—"I never will."

On two or three occasions witness testified that the accused man had told him that while unharnessing the horses that afternoon, according to Moult's orders he heard a shot fired back in the lane. Going back there he found Moult on his knees, and taking the gun from this mysterious stranger's hands, he too fired out of the same gun when Moult was on his knees."

A Co-incidence.

All present in the court room, appreciated quite readily, the unfortunate celebration of Alberta Phillip's birthday, when she informed Crown Attorney Carnew, during her examination that she was 19 years old yesterday.

No doubt on her eighteenth birthday, she little dreamed that on the very next anniversary of her birth, she would be the centre of one of lifes' most mysterious and tragic dramas.

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

But already she had released him and moved away, with a lithe and gracious movement evading his arms. "No," she told him firmly, shaking her head: "no more than that, Staff. You mustn't—I won't have you—carry on as if we were children—yet."

"But Alison—"

"No." Again she shook her head. "If I want to kiss you, I've a perfect right to; but that doesn't give you any license to kiss in return. Besides, I'm not at all sure I'm really and truly in love with you. Now do sit down."

He complied sulkily.

"Are you in the habit of kissing men you don't care for?"

"Yes, frequently," she told him, coolly taking the chair opposite; "I'm an actress—if you've forgotten the fact."

He pondered this, frowning. "I don't like it," he announced with conviction.

"Neither do I—always." She relished his exasperation for a moment longer, then changed her tone. "Do be sensible, Staff. I'm crazy to hear that play. How long do you mean to keep me waiting?"

He knew her well enough to understand that her moods and whims must be humoured like a—well, like any other star's. She was pertinaciously temperamental: that is to say, spoiled; beautiful women are so, for the most part—invariably so, if on the stage. That kind of temperament is part of an actress' equipment, an asset, as much an item of her stock in trade as any trick of elocution or pantomime.

So, knowing what he knew, Staff took himself in hand and prepared to make the best of the situation. With a philosophic shrug and the wry, quaint smile so peculiarly his own, he stretched forth a hand to take up his manuscript; but in the very act, remembering, withheld it.

"Oh, I'd forgotten . . ."

"What, my dear?" asked Alison, smiling back to his unsmiling stare.

"What made you send me that bandbox?" he demanded without further preliminary; for he suspected that by surprising the author of that outrage, and by no other method, would he arrive at the truth.

But though he watched the woman intently, he was able to detect no guilty start, no evidence of confusion. Her eyes were blank, and a little pucker of wonder showed between her brows: that was all.

"Bandbox?" she repeated enquiringly. "What do you mean?"

"I mean," he pursued with a purposeful omniscient air, "the thing you bought at Lucille's the day before we sailed, and had sent me without a word of explanation. What did you do it for?"

Alison relaxed and sat back in her chair, laughing softly. "Dear boy," she said—"do you know?—you're quite mad—quite!"

"Do you mean to say you didn't!"

"I can't even surmise what you're talking about."

"That's funny." He pondered this, staring. "I made sure it was you. Weren't you in London last Friday?"

"I? Oh, no. Why, didn't I tell you I only left Paris Saturday morning? That's why we had to travel all day to catch the boat at Queenstown, you know."

He frowned. "That's true; you did say so. . . . But I wish I could imagine what it all means."

"Tell me; I'm good at puzzles."

So he recounted the story of the bandbox incognito, Alison lending her attention with evident interest, some animation and much quiet amusement. But when he had finished, she shook her head.

"How very odd!" she said wonderingly. "And you have no idea—?"

"Not the least in the world, now that you've established an alibi. Miss Searle knows, but—"

"What's that?" demanded Alison quickly.

"I say, Miss Searle knows, but she won't tell."

"The girl who sat next to Bangs at lunch?"

"Yes—"

"But how is that? I don't quite understand."

"Oh, she says she was in the place when the bandbox was purchased—saw the whole transaction; but it's none of her affair, says she, so she won't tell me anything."

"Conscientious young woman," said Alison approvingly. "But are you quite sure you have exhausted every means of identifying the true culprit? Did you examine the box yourself? I mean did you leave it all to the housemaid—what's her name—Milly?"

He nodded: "Yes."

"Then she may have overlooked something. Why take her word for it? There may be a card or something there now."

Staff looked startled and chagrined. "That's so. It never occurred to me. I am a bonehead, and no mistake. I'll just take a look, after we've run through this play."

"Why wait? Send for it now. I'd like to see for myself, if there is any-

CORBY BATHS AND ZWICK'S ISLAND

In an editorial on "Small Town Life", the Mail and Empire says some very timely things which might well be taken to heart, not only by small town folk in Ontario, but by the people of the smaller cities of the Province. It is pointed out that the census figures of small towns reveal a high average of wealth, taxes that compare in ratio with those in large communities, and general good economic standing. Notwithstanding this prosperous condition, the young people migrate to the large cities because they regard their hometowns as "dead". To quote the editorial referred to:

"Girls in them complain there are no nice young men—these have flown to places of more business opportunity. Small town life often is monotonous because of petty jealousies and cliques that prevent co-operation in the creation of amusements. How many of these towns have libraries, suitable rinks, tennis courts, a recreation field fitted up, a community dancing hall, a literary society, or other aid to youthful enjoyment? In a small town land is cheap, and buildings easy to obtain. But leadership in the creation of clubs, societies, or associations is too often the great lack. Community leadership is the great need of semi-rural Canada."

While this criticism does not apply in its entirety to Belleville, there is one point that we would like to emphasize, and that is the need for leadership and co-operation. There is no doubt that petty jealousies, and cliques that have pet schemes, all tend to prevent reform and progress.

To take one case in point, the proposal to go on with the installation of a swimming pool in Victoria Park. This proposition has been held up for years because of the clashing of rival schemes. The laying out of Zwick's Island has been put up as more desirable for bathing purposes, and owing to dispute as to which is the better of thetwo, nothing has been done for either of them.

The fact of the matter is that both of these schemes are highly commendable, and they should not be set one against the other. The practical question is, which of them can be started first? It is certain that the city cannot enter upon any extensive work on Zwick's Island in the near future, on account of the need for curtailing expenditures. This obstacle is not in the way of proceeding with the baths in Victoria Park, for which a sum of money was donated by the late Senator Corby. The amount, $5,000, may not be sufficient to complete the swimming pool, but a start can be made and doubtless more will be forthcoming.

The Civic Committee has already taken action and no doubt the Council will sustain its recommendation to take soundings in order to test the feasibility of the scheme.

A CANDID AMBASSADOR

Sir Auckland Geddes, the British Ambassador at Washington has been saying some plain things to the people of England about their attitude toward the people of the United States. He stated at a speech in London the other day that England did not understand America. He said it was vital that more people of England should visit the United States in order to become acquainted with the remarkable characteristics of the people and the extraordinary industrial, engineering, civic and educational progress of the country.

America, he said, had accomplished in the brief century and a half of her existence, what it had taken Great Britain a thousand years of slow progress to create.

"America has given to the world the riches of a continent which but yesterday was a wilderness," he continued. "Of course, she is absorbed in her own affairs. How could she be otherwise? Her thought is in that tremendous structural and industrial work which has made her one of the greatest nation on the earth."

Sir Auckland had some caustic things to say about English lecturers who come to America. He said it was a rare thing for a Britisher to come to the Embassy at Washington who knew anything worth while about the vast continent. But here is the unkindest cut of all—

"Endless numbers of Britishers go to America to deliver lectures or beg money. It has been my pleasure to tell such persons humbly to keep their mouths shut and to give up begging and return home. I have visited forty of the forty-eight States of America and I am frank to say that I have yet a tremendous lot to learn."

Sir Auckland defended American newspapers, and declared that they were rendering an astonishing public service to the people, and were printing much more enlightening news from Europe than English papers were publishing about the United States.

There is a great deal of truth in what Sir Auckland says, and he is to be commended for his frankness. There is no doubt that there is a vast ignorance in Great Britain about conditions in the United States and in Canada also. There has been a glut of mendicant lecturers from the old land in the last few years. It is time we sent some of our men over to the British Isles in exchange.

PASSING COMMENT

A man in Russia is said to have eaten his wife. This was surely carrying fondness too far.

The importance of public opinion is exemplified in the effectiveness of the protest that came from the citizens of Belleville against the shutting off of power. There is nothing like a big kick for raising water levels.

PRESS OPINIONS

COLLECTING TAXES.

(St. John Globe.)

A Paris physician who made false returns of his earnings, was sentenced to four months' imprisonment and a fine of ten thousand francs, in addition to the payment of the taxes due. The incident is one of many indicating the resolute course France is following in making the rich pay their fair share of war burdens. Canadian Governments, municipal as well as Federal, may find in the story of what France is doing in collecting taxes suggestions of practical value.

U.S. AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

(New York Times.)

Would it necessarily shock the Senate into an appoplexy if the administration were to declare that it recognized the League as a most useful and promising institution—at least for the rest of the world? Would the foundations of the Republican Party be destroyed if President Harding were to announce his desire to co-operate cordially with the League in every way possible? We know what the steps are in first enduring, then pitying, and finally embracing Vice; what would be the harm of endeavoring to do the same with regard to Virtue? It might have to be done tentatively and timidly, with one eye on the Senate but some day it will only waiting to know when a beginning is to be made.

Verdun.

(London Morning Post.)

Where would the liberty of England, the liberty of the world have been, without France and the sacrifice of France at Verdun? Thousands of Englishmen, now sleeping on fields as glorious and tragic as those of Verdun, realized the menace which Prussianism constituted to human freedom. Are those who survived willing to forget and see less clearly the truths which could not be obscured by the smoke of battle? Liberty, like every other precious gift, can be obtained only at the price of eternal vigilance. That is why in season and out of season we have fought for a complete understanding and alliance with France. We believe that Great Britain and France are the guardians and sentinels of the freedom of Europe, and that despite the passing differences and difficulties of everyday politics, the two countries which have maintained for so many centuries the bright traditions of intellectual freedom, and which only yesterday joined hands in fighting against the greatest menace which ever threatened them, are peculiarly fitted to keep watch and ward together in the dark days which are still to come.

WIT AND HUMOR

Golfing Minister.

A popular minister was also an enthusiastic golfer, and on one occasion he was greatly upset at the loss of a match game, which until near the end seemed to be his.

His defeat worried him considerably, and on the following Sunday he rose in the pulpit to announce his text which very solemnly he gave out as: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose the last hole?"

Courteous, Anyway.

Pat was visiting the house of a friend who was the proud owner of a parrot. Pat had never seen a parrot before.

"Halloa!" exclaimed the bird, as the visitor walked past the cage.

Pat turned in amazement, and, after staring at the parrot for a moment, raised his cap in salute.

"Good morning to yez," he said, politely. "Sure, at first I thought yez was a bur-rd!"

Cutting!

The landlord of he Green Jug had a weakness for running "raffles." Bill Blonks had taken part in all of them, but always discovered that the prize had been won by some member of the landlord's family.

One morning Bill walked in, and the landlord produced another bunch of tickets.

"Here you are, Bill," he exclaimed. "Only a shilling a ticket, and the prize is a handsome violin."

"That's funny!" commented Bill Blonks.

"What's funny?" queried the landlord.

"Why," replied Bill, "I didn't know that anyone in your family could play a violin."

His Non-Stop Swim.

Two negroes in New York were bragging about their ability as long-distance swimmers, and a local sportsman arranged a match. The man who swam the longest distance was to receive five dollars.

The Alabama Whale changed immediately, but the Human Steamboat said he had to attend to some business and would return in a few minutes. The Whale swam around for twenty minute for exercise, and by that time the Human Steamboat had returned.

He had a sheet-iron cooking stove strapped on his back. Tied around his neck were a dozen packages containing bread, flour, bacon and other eatables. The Whale gasped at his opponent in amazement.

"Whar yo' vittles?" demanded the Human Steamboat.

"Vittles fo' what?" asked the Whale.

"Don't yo' ask me fo' nothin' on the way ovah," warned the Human Steamboat. "Mah fust stop is London."

HERE AND THERE

FRITILLARIES.

Matthew Arnold sings of fritillaries spring flowers which some folk call snakes' heads:—

"I know what white, what purple fritillaries
The grassy harvest of the river fields
Above by Ensham, down by Sandford, yields,
And what sedged brooks and Thames' tributaries."

The name fritillary is said to be derived from fritillus, a dice-box, which the form of the flower resembles.

A TENACIOUS TORTOISE.

Part of the heart of a tortoise beating half an hour after the death of the animal was shown yesterday at the meeting of the Medical Research Council, 15 Buckingham street, London, England.

"It will go on for 4 or 5 hours more," said the demonstrator, "and then cease to beat gradually."

The little piece of the heart consisting of the two auricles was contained in a glass vessel through which oxygen bubbled up continuously. One end of a thread was attached to it and the other end to a lever which recorded the movements on a revolving drum.

The vessel was filled with a solution composed of salt (sodium chloride), potassium chloride, and calcium chloride, drugs which help to keep the heart beating.

The heart was beating with the same regularity as in life, 180 beats to the minute.

A PREHISTORIC NIAGARA.

A dead and buried Niagara, its thunders stilled for countless ages, once perhaps as great in height and volume of water as the present falls, has been unearthed by excavations made in the course of the new Welland ship canal near Thorold, in southern Ontario.

No memories of this lost Niagara linger even in aboriginal tradition. When it existed or when it ceased to exist has not even been conjectured. It may have been thundering in primeval solitudes before the age of man. The mastodon and the pterodactyl may have pastured upon its brink Giant winged lizards may have sailed above its clouds of rainbow vapors.

The engineers who partly uncovered it believe it was the original Niagara marking the course of a paleolithic river that connected Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. Some mighty prehistoric cataclysm, it is supposed, diverted the course of the stream and buried the falls and the old river bed level with the surrounding country.

THE STORM.

(By Lord Byron.)

The sky is changed! such a change! O night,
And storm, and darkness, ye are wondrous strong,
Yet lovely in your strength, as is the light
Of a dark eye in woman! Far along,
From peak to peak, the rattling crags among,
Leaps the live thunder! Not from one lone cloud,
But every mountain now hath found a tongue;
And Jura answers, through her misty shroud,
Back to the joyous Alps who call to her aloud!

And this is in the night! Most glorious night,
Thou wert not sent for slumber! Let me be
A sharer in thy fierce and far delight—
A portion of the tempest and of thee!
How the lit lake shines—a phosphoric sea—
And the big rain comes dancing to the earth!
And now again 'tis black—and now the glee
Of the loud hills shakes with its mountain-mirth,
As if they did rejoice o'er a young earth-quake's birth.

A BUSINESS COUPE FOR BUSINESS MEN

This car represents a new and important achievement in commercial transportation.

For the first time in motor car history, business men are enabled to buy a closed car, the body of which is built throughout of steel.

The advantages of this all-steel construction—reserved until now to open cars—are particularly marked in a coupe built to weather the wear and tear of hard commercial usage.

Immediately you will be impressed with the beauty and lightness of this coupe. Time will convince you of its unusual stamina. The doors snap neatly shut. Body squeaks are eliminated. Dodge Brothers enamel is baked on the body of the steel—a permanent lustrous finish, impervious to wear.

The interior is roomy and thoughtfully equipped with every appointment necessary to the owner's comfort and all-weather protection.

Business houses that equip their salesmen with motor cars have been quick to recognize in this coupe a very unusual investment.

Clingstones--A Week A California Factory

I met Selma in the cannery to which I had been sent to investigate conditions. It was one of the few canneries in California which are on a sort of 'Black List', and therefore must not be regarded as typical.

An advertisement appeared one Sunday in the San Francisco 'Chronicle,' which read:

AAAAA
Wanted—Cannery Workers
$3.00 a Day Guaranteed
Eight Hour Day
Tents on Cannery Camp Ground
Apply U. S. Dept. of Labor

I applied on Monday morning at the office of the Department of Labor in the Claus Spreckels Building, and took an afternoon train for the little town in the valley.

'Hello! You a blonde, honey?' I looked up from my camp cot and saw outlined against the moonlight a striking silhouette.

'God! I got an awful cold. My neck's so sore! I'm French. My name used to be de Grodey. What's your first name, honey? Mine's Selma. D'ja just come from Frisco?' Most of this in one breath, while she opened up a big straw suit-case. Boxes of powder, a bottle of bandoline, white shoe polish, and some soiled lace, I could just make out in the dim light.

'Say! Ain't you got no candles? Was you ever married, dearie? I never worked before; did you? They say the cannery's a fierce place to work in, too—awful insanitary.' She did have a bad cold.

'Want some gum? Oh, that's all right, I got plenty.' She began to sing, Oh, I wish I had my Daddy right here!' but interrupted herself with, 'You see, we was married last January, and I always called him "Daddy." Here's is picture. Ain't he cute? Say, I bet you want to go to sleep. No? Then what'n the devil d'jou go to bed so early for? Ain't there even a picture show in this burg? Gee, you brought sheets an' all, didn't cha? God My back aches!'

The next morning at seven-thirty we reported at the office of a canning company, were given a number, four knives, and sent in to work. I wandered around in puddles on the cement floor, looking for some one to tell me where to go. After a few minutes the forelady came up to me. D'you mind a draught?' She led me to the long working bench. A draught there was, and water mixed with pear peelings and peach pits underfoot.

'Gee! We don't get rich to-day! Clingstones! We had pears yesterday, and they're 'some different!' This from a fat girl of about twenty, next to me, as she slipped a large oilcloth apron over her head.

Machinery buzzed. The canning was done in the other part of the same room. In our part of the room there were two long work-benches, each having about thirty women working at them. In an aisle between, three or four forlon-looking old men were carrying peaches in pails of water up and down, stopping now and then to empty them into some thing else which I could not see. A great splash accompanied this operation. Some one shouted in a raucous voice 'Box!' Some one else, 'Hey, there! get a move on, ole man!' 'Fruit!' This was the way to get a fresh box of fruit to work on when one had been finished.

I tried to get onto the job. Finally the forelady came over to me and showed me how to 'ring' the peach with one knife, and how to get out the pit with another.

'Now work, quick, honey,' she said. 'You'll soon git the hang of it, and you git twenty cents a box.' I looked at the size of the box of peaches beside me.

Twenty cents a box?' I asked. The forelady turned away from me.

'Shut up, there, Mary, or I'll give you your time.' she shouted at a dried-up little old woman with snow-white hair and a sharp nose, who was over at the other table.

'Shut up yourself!' mumbled Mary.

The fat girl next to me called to one of the old men in the aisle, Oh, Mr. Pieman, won't you empty my pie?' He came over to her and cleared out her box of mashed pieces, kown as 'pie.'

She's got a grand name for me, ain't she'' he addressed to me, with a wink and a kindly smile.

Machinery scraped away in the other part of the room, water seemed splashing all around me, and the draughts were getting worse. There was very little light in the place, which had not been built for a cannery, and was about six feet below the surface of the ground.

'Ask that man for a board to stand on, dearie,' said the fat girl to me. "This floor's somethin' fierce.' But when I looked around the man had already passed.

'Aw, yell at him,' she added. I yelled at him, and after a while got the board.

I began to get onto the job, too, and the knife did not slip through the peach to my hand quite so often. But before long the forelady came around my way.

'Look here, now,' she said to me, as she felt around in my several pails and drew forth two or three halves, 'all them are "C's." What cha got 'em in "B" for? Look out what cha do, now, girlie.' As she turned away she called to a girl down at the door, 'Here, you quit eatin' fruit, there Angie! I seen you. Next time you're fired.'

Selma was nowhere in sight. She was probably working in the other part of the room, beyond the canning machinery, where I could see some work-benches.

At noon I went into the washroom to wash my hands. No towels. 'Never is none,' said some one, good-naturedly.

'Hello, honey: How many boxes?' and there was my tent-mate, husky-voiced, chewing gum, and smiling at me. She was pretty, there was no denying it, but very pale except for the two unskillful dabs of rouge. She had done her hair in the morning in two large bunches over her ears—it was jet black—and drawn it tightly back in front.

'Say ain't this awful, Katie? Come on and eat with me.'

We went to the New Luxembourg,' near by, and ate. The Chinaman brought us ham and eggs, ten cents according to the dirty card, and coffee, five cents.

'Don't cha get nothin' else?' Selma asked him; 'no potatoes nor nothing? Gee! this ain't no meal.

The afternoon's work was over. Although I had doubled my morning's record, the check-lady had punched but six holes altogether in my card she had pinned to my shoulder. If twenty cents a box was the pay, then I had earned one dollar and twenty cents. I had heard mutterings during the afternoon about the pay.

'Who said you get three dollars a day for eight hours?' asked some one who had been there two weeks. 'Aw, go wan! no such thing!'

'You ain't up to average,' the forelady told me, not unkindly. Then we surged out, some staying on to learn a little more. Ahead of me a girl here and there grabbed a handful of peaches as she went, with a furtive look at the forelady.

I did not see Selma on the way home. The tent was empty, so I went out, found two large tin cans, filled them with water from a pipe which was sticking up from the centre of the roadway leading into the camp-ground, and took them into the tent for a sketchy bath.

The camping place was a block from the public square of the little town. Because of the urgent need for cannery workers, the company had sent for fifty tents and had huddled them together on a vacant lot. Whole families had come from the city on the day I had arrived, in answer to the same advertisement. Next to our tent, a woman of about fifty, her face and hands deep-seamed, brown and unwashed-looking, slept in a single cot with a ten-year-old girl. The other cot in the tiny tent was occupied by 'Tommie,' a man of thirty or so.

'No, he's just a friend of ours,' the woman explained to me, when I asked something about her son.' The camp swarmed with babies, dirty and unkempt, who were left in charge of children with babyhood barely passed, while mothers and aunts and sisters and brothers worked all day in the cannery.

Where was Selma? Six o'clock came. I was standing in the tent with very little clothing on, doing my hair, when I heard, just outside the tent, 'Hello, dearie, you here?' and Selma burst into the tent, followed by a man.

'Meet Mr. Cole,' she said. We met. I suggested that he wait outside the tent. 'He's my uncle, come down to work in the cannery.' He was a gay and flashily dressed man of thirty or so. Outside he found a box, placed it on end right in the doorway, and sat down.

'Say, you got a pair o' eyes yourself, Katie! Come on down and have some grub with us.' He lighted a cigarette. 'Honest to God, this is a fierce place for feed, ain't it?'

'You said it!' I answered; but I ain't hungry, thanks, just the same.'

Selma was half undressed by this time, and after rummaging around in feverish haste among the articles in her suit-case, she put on a white skirt and a bright-yellow sweater—no blouse, and the sweater was very tight.

'Gee, but it's hot in this tent! Got a safety-pin, dearie? Thanks. Say, you're some kid!' She poured some bandoline upon her hair, added some rouge to her cheecks, and she was ready. Mr. Cole gazed at her in spell-bound admiration.

'Well, s'long, Katie!' he flung back at me over his shoulder as he grabbed the arm of the yellow sweater and led the girl away. I started soon after in the other direction to find a place to eat.

The next day I was conscious of more discontent at the cannery.

'Eight hours nothin'! Swell chance of gettin' that three dollars!'

Say, where d'jou apply? Department of Labor?'

'Yes, and they thought it was all O.K. Somethin's queer.'

Selma was working nearer to me to-day. She coughed a lot.

'Where's your uncle?' I called across, when the forelady was out of earshot.

'Oh, he's got a swell job. He's one of the bosses over in the canning place. Some draught, ain't it, dearie?'

That afternoon I worked an extra hour, and when I got back to the tent Selma was coming out with her suit-case. She looked really ill.

'Gonna leave you, honey. My uncle's stayin' at a swell place downtown, and he got me a room there, too.' I tried to keep her a minute, asked her where the place was, etc., but she seemed in a hurry and rushed off. Inside, on the overturned box which we used for a dressing-table, there was a litter of trash—some hair, a dirty powder-puff, an empty candy box, and a crumpled envelope. I smoothed this out and read: 'Mrs. Tom Cole, General Delivery, Oakland, Calif.' Who was this man, and what could I do?

In the middle of the next morning a little man in shirtsleeves, with a straw hat on the back of his head, appeared in the doorway, and every one stopped talking. It was the boss. Somehow, a pretty little Armenian child had slipped in between me and the woman next to me, and was 'ringing' peaches at an astonishing rate of speed. She looked up, saw the boss, and disappeared under the bench. After he had passed she reappeared. She and her mother kept looking around. After an hour or so he caught her.

Look here, now, I told you twice your kid can't work here. She's gotta get a permit: I gotta protect myself.' He turned to the youngster.

'Now, you go home, d'you hear? You gotta get a permit, I tell you.'

The child went out. I asked the mother how many boxes she could cut without the child's help.

'About fifteen,' she said, 'workin' nine hours. I get three dollars some days, but that ain't so much when you got three kids.'

A week passed. The new workers had speeded up, and by working early and late could do quite well. But at the end of that time I went in and asked to see the boss. He was sucking a cigar in a little room marked 'Private.' I asked him about the advertisement in the paper. He turned quickly.

'Oh, that was a mistake. I'm sorry it happened. The ad wasn't worded right. It wasn't my fault. On Monday I wrote to the Department of Labor and told them to change it. You see, we got so much fruit on hand, we gotta work mor'n eight hours.'

'Yes, that's all right, but what about—' I tried to go on, but he got up and smiled.

'I'll refund your fare, if you ain't satisfied. Come back in an hour and I'll give you a check.' Of course he wanted me out of the way.

'A great old place, I guess, that cannery, isn't it?' said the cashier of the bank where I cashed my check. 'He's a slippery one, all right. I saw that ad in the paper and smiled when I read it.'

I wanted to see Selma before I left. She had not been at work for three days, and all of my efforts to find the place where she was staying had been unsuccessful. Her 'uncle' had not been at work for the same length of time. There was something about her I liked, and perhaps I could help her just a little. But where was she?

As I was crawling into my cot that night I heard outside. 'Say, can you you come downtown?' It was Mr. Cole's voice. 'Selma's sick. She sent me to find you. I can't find a doctor. God but she's sick!' I flung on some clothes and joined him outside. He led me down past the centre of the town and around two or three corners. Up a flight of stairs, and there was the girl, sitting on the edge of an untidy bed. The yellow sweater was on the floor. She had on an undershirt and a pink satin camisole.

'I can't breathe!' she gasped. 'Why the devil can't he get a doctor? He's a fool, anyway.' She fell back.

'Are you her uncle or her husband?' I asked him.

'I ain't either one. She's a bird, she is. She married my brother, an' he left her.'

'We must try to get some one,' I broke in, and started for the door. 'You stay with her.' But just then a woman appeared in the door-way. She was large and very cross-looking.

'The doctor's wife sent me,' she said. I'm a nurse. What's up?' and she went over to the bed. Selma sat up, struggling for breath, and fell back again.

She's dead' said the big woman.

Mr. Cole disappeared.

After a while I went out into the night, and he appeared at my side. We walked along in silence across the tiny public square, and past the entrance of the movies, where vivid bill-boards announced 'Charlie Chaplin.' From within, as we passed, came a bit of 'I Am Always Blowing Bubbles.' Suddenly I realized that the man was speaking. His voice was rather low.

'Y' see, I thought I was engaged to her, but she married my brother. I was crazy over her ever since I seen at that dance in Oakland. She wasn't no good, I knew that, but I ain't much good either, and, honest to God, I thought I could be good to her. When Tom left her she didn't have no money nor nothin', and so when she come up here I followed her, And now she's dead, damn her!' His voice broke.

I loathed him and pitied him and loved him, as I loathed and pitied and loved so many of those others around me. Where were they all going?

I did not see Mr. Cole again after he left me that night.

The next afternoon, as the train raced toward the city, I began the official report of my investigation for a certain welfare society, but after a few paragraphs were finished, I turned to another part of my note-book and at the top of a fresh page I wrote 'Clingstones,' and under that 'Selma Cole.' Then I sat for a long, long time and wrote nothing at all.

FOOTBALL GAME AT COBOURG

Belleville G.T.R. Team Defeats Brockville G.T.R. Team

These teams met at Cobourg on the occasion of the Library Picnic as one of the features there. Both teams were well presented having not met before and the large crowd present witnessed a fine game. The Brockville boys won the toss and gave the locals a slight breeze and sun to face. From the kick off Harvey and Maker went to the Brockville goal and Maker just missed with a hard drive. From this goal kick Oakley got possession but was smartly pulled up by Griffiths and play was in centre field. Gatchene kicked out and Robinson headed back again and the Belleville team pressed. Nice footwork took them to their opponents' goal and Maker opened the scoring with a good shot, giving Mills no chance whatever. From the kick off Brockville settled down and the Belleville defence were hard pressed. Poole put in a good centre and Gorman saved from Reddick. Oakley now forced a corner which Robinson headed away and Grant relieved, who passed to Hickin to get away on the right but Russell drove the locals back. Brockville now were showing splendid combination and Johnson and Taylor were hard pressed. Gorman made a good save from Eastop. Cook also tried a shot but this was cleared. Cope now got away and passed to Lancaster who shot but Mills was safe. Brockville was attacking when the whistle went for half time, the only goal being scored by the locals, although Brockville had most of the play: After the interval Brockville kicked off and were soon at the Belleville end, Johnson having to concede a corner which was finally cleared. Lancaster went to the other end and Harvey headed in but Mills saved and Russell cleared. Cook and Fraser passed to Eastop, who shot but Taylor charged it down and Robinson kicked clear. The locals now pressed and Mills had one busy time fishing out thrice in quick succession. Gatchene eventually cleared and after tricking a couple of players he passed to Markell who centred in and Culting forced a corner. The ball was well placed and hung around the Belleville goal until Johnson cleared. Play now was very fast and Belleville were soon at the other end Maker and Harvey just missed. From a goal kick Brockville came through and Reddick tested Gorman with a dandy which was fisted away midfield. Play followed until Belleville forced a corner but nothing resulted. Finally Grant passed to Hickin who scored for Belleville with a good shot, Brockville tried hard now and pressed and from a corner Gorman was beaten. Brockville still pressed but could not equalize. The whistle now blew leaving Belleville winners of a good hard fought clean game of 2 to 1.

Mr. Thompson was referee tnd gave every satisfaction. Brockville are now anxious to meet Belleville on their own ground and are confident that they can reverse this defeat.

The following players lined up:—

Brockville G. T. R.—Mills, goal; Gatchene and Russell, backs; Markell, Cook, Capt., Fraser, halves; Oakley, Reddick, Eastop, Culting, Poole, forwards.

Belleville G. T. R.—Gorman, goal; Taylor, Johnson, backs; Grant, Robinson Capt., Griffiths, halves; Hickin, Maker, Harvey, Cope, Lancaster, forwards.

BABY ABANDONED

Kindness of Miss Brower is Rewarded by a Nice Little Present

New York, July 22.— A black-haired, blue-eyed boy, just a week old, was placed in a crib in the Kings County Hospital beside 16-months-old Ruth Silver, who was abandoned in a Coney Island marsh. The boy was abandoned in a Brooklyn hallway, apparently by a young woman without funds.

Shortly after midnight Monday the telephone in the home of Joseph Dyas, 563 Fortieth Street, South Brooklyn, rang and a woman's voice asked if Miss Elizabeth Brower, Dyas's sister-in-law, was at home. Miss Brower answered the telephone, but not recognizing the voice, said: "Miss Brower is not at home."

"Tell Miss Brower that a package will be delivered for her and tell her to take good care of it," said the woman on the other end of the line.

Miss Brower told Dyas of the message and he advised her to pay no attention to it. An hour later, however, the family was aroused by the cries of a baby. Dyas investigated and found an infant in the hallway, wrapped in a white blanket with a blue border, its little head resting on the coat of a woman's blue serge suit. Pinned to the clothing was a note which read:

"Dear Elizabeth.—It is with great sorrow that I had to do anything like this. I am just out of a hospital and haven't seen my husband for three months. I seem to know that you will take care of the child. Please have him baptized. I will make good to you for his care. For God's sake, don't turn him away. I stood in the street a long time before I did this. The baby is a week old. I have no money but expect to get work soon, and then I will repay you. A FRIEND."

The police were notified, and Detective Ray Honan learned from Miss Brower that she formerly had been employed in a tinfoil factory, and that a number of the girls there had been in the habit of confiding their troubles in her. She said she thought one of them might be the mother of the child.

OLD SPRING POPS UP AND FLOODS A CAFE

Lunchers at Beaux Arts Startled and Drenched as Water Burst Through

New York, July 22.—While a score of persons were lunching in an alcove of the downstairs dining room in the Cafe des Beaux Arts, 80 West Fortieth Street, yesterday noon, a cluster of small mosaic tiles in the centre of the alcove leaped into the air in a shower of water that spattered the nearest guests.

The water burst froth like the pop of a champagne cork, bringing a policemen, stationed in the upstairs while the outcome of a charge of prohibition violation is awaited, downstairs on a run. All that the policeman found was a group of bedrenched patrons staring in wonder at the jet of water that flowed from the middle of the floor.

Michael Ettlinger, the cafe manager, got workmen busy digging up the tile flooring. They could find no leak in the pipes, although about half of the alcove was dug up. Engineers were then called in and they arrived at the theory that the damage must have been caused by a spring, long pent up, which had suddenly forced its way through.

The vicinity of Bryant Park, according to the oldest inhabitants of the section, is honeycombed with springs and brooks. Years ago Bryant Park was part of a fertile farm that was famous for its clear spring water. Builders have experienced much difficulty with these in the construction of new buildings in the neighborhood and several times the stream has been diverted.

There's a strength in "Gutta Percha" Tires which makes them stand the strain of hard driving.

PRICE: Some Tires cost more than others. This is not because the manufacturer insists on a bigger profit but because he has put more actual cost into the making. You get what you pay for in this world. It pays to pay the price and get "Gutta Percha" Tires.

PAY ROLL MONEY GONE

New York, July 22.—Four armed men snatched a leather bag containing $5,355 pay-roll Monday away from Jacob Alux, vice-president of the Stutz Company, cigar box manufacturers this afternoon at Columbia and Broome streets, on the lower east side. The bandits made their get-away in an automobile.

A FISH STORY; JONAH'S TALE BEATEN

Middletown, N.Y., July 21.—Clarence Gray of Walden reports a strange occurrence while on the Wallkill River the other evening. A large bass suddenly leaped from the water and fell into the boat. Gray was smoking a cigaret at the time, and thinks the fish mistook the light for a firefly.

LUSITANIA RAISING

German Paper Voices Suspicion of Salvage Operation

Berlin, July 21.—Commenting on a report that the American salvage steamer Blakeley is engaged in raising the treasure chest of the Lusitania, the Tagliche Rundschau asks why this operation cannot wait until the entire ship is brought up shortly, and also why nitroglycerine is to be used in the operation when the Lusitania could otherwise soon be raised intact, except for the damage which she sustained when she was sunk.

The newspaper says that the quick sinking of the Lusitania, which made the rescue of passengers impossible, was due to a number of explosions among the munitions aboard, rather than to the torpedo of a submarine, which at best would have caused only two compartment in the forepart of the ship to fill with water.

It remains to be seen, the Tagliche Runchau continues, whether the German Government, in view of the importance to Germany of the evidence gathered from the investigation, takes the proper steps to be represented at the raising of the liner or stands idly by through fear of the Entente. It suggests that the Blakeley may be intended to remove documents from the Lusitania which would be "weighty as evidence."

TRAVELOGUE

Col. Ponton in "The Spotlight"

(From Toronto Star.)

A distinction could be drawn between prominence and eminence, between well-known and distinguished. Belleville's best known citizen is Col. William Nesbitt Ponton. He was almost that during the later years of ex-Premier of Canada Sir Mackenzie Bowell. During a considerable period Northrup; M. P., thought he could become leader of the Conservative party in suppression of Mr. Borden. But that hope faded and was finally extinguished when Northrup got out of the Union election at the end of 1917, and expectedly found himself Clerk to the House of Commons at the beginning of 1918. Gus Porter, M. P., holds his seat, but does not expand his fame.

Northrup, Porter and Ponton are all Belleville lawyers. Ponton has thought of parliament, but has found his metier in local and provincial worlds. He isn't highly original and he doesn't develop antagonisms towards himself. He accepts as many invitations to speak as opportunity allows. In a dozen varying departments of voluntary public service he's as busy as twenty-four hours a day will let him be. Just at present his position as Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Ontario of the Ancient, Free and Accepted Masons has brought him to the great conclave of that body at the Twin Cities, where eastern Ontario greets the west, and brings him into prominence because he has produced an address which gives the uninitiated a bigger glimpse of Freemasonry than used to be customary at similar seasons.

The antiquity of Freemasonry appeals to Col. Ponton because of his historical sense—he is a pillar indeed of the Ontario Historical Society—and in spite of its elevating the trowel above the sword—he rose from lieutenant of the 15th to lieutenant-colonel between 1882 and 1895.

The colonel-lawyer, then, is a fine type of citizen. His range of service includes an advance from an associate-editorship of Varsity, when that heartsome journal was first written, to a senatorship of his Alma Mater, and a guiding hand in almost every unselfish enterprise—outside the Liberal party—in the city upon which he opened his eyes sixty-three years ago, and which nothing on earth could persuade him to leave.

Harold Lloyd who is appearing in a highly amusing 2 reel comedy on the double feature bill at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday.

SUGAR WILL GO UP

Refiners Say Profit Too Small—If Another Rise In Wholesale Price Public Will be Touched

Toronto, July 22.—"The last advance of 25 cents a hundred on the wholesale price of sugar is only one of several jumps that that commodity is going to take in the next few weeks," said the representative of one of the leading sugar refineries in the city.

Canadian refineries buy the raw material at $3.50 per hundred f.o.b. Cuba. Add to this freight and marine insurance, 35 cents; exchange, 10 cents; duty $1.69, and loss of 7 per cent., 21 cents. The total cost to the refineries is therefore $5.85 for 100 pounds, and their price to the wholesaler is $7.39 per hundred.

Prices Vary.

The retail price is different in nearly every store. Some sell below cost and a great many at cost as an advertisement. The larger retailer usually sells at 8 cents a pound, which gives him a profit of 1¾ per cent., which is very low, but he must keep sugar down on account of those who use it as an advertisement.

LABORITE BEATS LIBERAL, GLAMORGAN SEAT RETAINED

London, July 22.—In the by-election in the Gower division of Glamorgan, Wales, D. R. Grenfell, Laborite, was victorious over D. H. Williams, Coalition-Liberal, the vote being as follows: Grenfell, 13,296; Williams, 9,841. The vacancy was caused by the death of John Williams, Laborite, who had represented the constituency since 1906.

In the last election in the Gower division of Glamorgan, D. H. Williams, who contested the seat then as a Liberal candidate, received 8,353 votes and John Williams, 10,109.

CALLED BY DEATH

MRS. JOHN RYAN.

The death occurred on Sunday of Mrs. John B. Ryan (nee Norine Tisdale) at her home at Lima, N.Y. Deceased who was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Tisdale of this city, was well known and respected among the citizens of Belleville. Mrs. Ryan was in her 46th year and a Roman Catholic in religion. She is survived by her husband, three children, her mother, two brothers and three sisters. The brothers are Leonard, of this city, and Raymond, of Ohio. The sisters are Mrs. Jno. Givins, of Kingston, Ont., and Mrs. E. R. Smith, of Erie, Pa.

The funeral took place on Tuesday.

Music and Drama

MAY McAVOY, GLADYS WALTON AND HAROLD LLOYD HERE MONDAY

Sir Marcus Ordeyne and his irrepressible protegee Carlotta, two of the most whimsical and delightful characters ever conceived by William J. Locke, the popular English novelist, have been brought to the screen in Realart's recent release, "Morals," with May McAvoy as Carlotta, and William P. Carleton as Sir Marcus.

Manager Forhan has booked the attraction for exhibition at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday on a double feature bill, and the fact that it is a William D. Taylor production adds to the interest of the attraction. Thousands in Belleville will recall the delightful story of the little English orphan, reared in a Turkish harem, whom circumstances throw into the home and life of Sir Marcus Ordeyne, a staid author. The innocent ingenuousness of Carlotta involves Sir Marcus in more embarrassing situations than one could have thought possible. He thinks he doesn't like it—but when the little nuisance goes away for a week-end he comes to the sudden realization that he loves Carlotta, a decision intensified when the master of the Turkish harem comes to London to claim her.

But the path towards the culmination of this romance is anything but smooth, a fact that provides many unexpected dramatic features to this popular, human and entertaining story.

Kathlyn Williams, Sidney Bracey and William E. Lawrence have leading parts in the story.

"The Wise Kid" wasn't wise enough to see through Harry, the genteel sport, when he first flashed his phoney diamonds under his nose, but she was wise enough to quit playing when the balloon was punctured. As "The Wise Kid" Gladys has a flapper role that is a knockout in the five reel Universal comedy-drama of that name which is the second feature offering on the same program.

A highly amusing Harold Lloyd comedy will be exhibited on the same program.

AGNES AYRES IN SIR GILBERT PARKER STORY

Agnes Ayres proves herself a capable star in her first stellar Paramount vehicle, "The Lane that Had No Turning," which has been exhibited with great success at Griffin's this week end, and which is receiving its final exhibition tonight.

The scenes of the story are laid in Canada and the heroine is a young bride who sacrifices her career as a singer to remain with her husband who is suddenly deformed.

There is an abundance of thrills in the development of this story by Sir Gilbert Parker. Miss Ayres is artistic in her portrayal of an exacting role, while Theodore Kosloff, Mahlon Hamilton and Frank Campeau render efficient support.

"The Strap Hanger" an amusing Century comedy, an interesting Travelogue, and George Walsh in "With Stanley in Africa" the historical chapter play are being exhibited in addition to the feature offering.

STOMACH ULCER AND GALL STONES

After Suffering 25 Years, Completely Relieved by "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

MR. EDWARDS

MAPLEHURST FARM, HILLHURST, P.Q.

"I am in my 78th year. About 25 years ago, I began to have trouble with my Stomach. One doctor said I had Cancer; another said, Ulcer of the Stomach; another, Gall Stones; others, Ulcers of the Liver and Inflammation of the Gall Bladder.

Three years ago, I consulted one of the best specialists in Montreal. He said I must go to the hospital, have an Ulcer cut out of my stomach and gall stones removed. I was then 74 years old. I said "NO."

Then, I began to take "Fruit-a-tives". I found they helped me a lot, and I still take them occasionally, and I am so much better that my old friends often ask me what I have done to myself to look so well. I am gaining in weight and enjoying life very much"

THE DAY OF THE LORD COMETH.

"For yourselves know that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night (unobserved to the world) . . . but ye brethren (those fully consecrated to do the Lord's will) are not in darkness that that day (the second advent of our Lord) should overtake you as a thief. ye are the children of light". Thess. 5 2-4. Are there any indications that we are now living in "the day of the Lord"? Yes, many. What did Jesus say would be the conditions on the earth at that time? "Upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity . . . men's hearts failing them for fear for looking after (forward to) those things which are coming on the earth." Are these Scriptures now being fulfilled? Surely they are. Would you like a clear understanding of these momentous events showing clearly that we are NOW living in "the day of the Lord"? Then send 60c to I.B.S.A., Box 60, Intelligencer, and receive the Harp Bible Study Course.

Power Shortage Still Holds Up Our Industries

Local Chamber of Commerce Takes Pessimistic View of Situation: Strong Messages to Hydro Commission and Department of Canals—Demand Settlement by Arbitration.

SIR ADAM BECK LOOKS TO FUTURE

Not withstanding the optimistic messages given out at the week-end, the power situation today is again bad and a large number of our factories are closed down and others are operating only in part. Hydro officials do not hold out any hope of material improvement unless the improbable happens and we should have unusually heavy rains. As the rainfall in the three months, April, May and June was abnormally heavy, it now seems likely that we are entering into a period when precipitation will be lighter than it has been in the period just closed. Evaporation is now at its greatest, owing to the long hot days and the powerful sunshine.

It was pointed out by Hydro officials this morning that Monday and Tuesday are the days of the week in which they are forced to carry the heaviest loads. Monday is "washday" and the electric washers are now numerous enough to affect in a very serious way, the load carried. Tuesday is even worse in this respect, for on that day the electric irons are all brought into requisition and it is a well known fact that the iron consumes far more current than is required to illuminate every room in a house.

The latter part of last week Hydro was borrowing a large block of power from the Quaker Oats at Peterboro'. To-day this assistance is withheld and therefore conditions are that much worse.

Owing to the extremely [illegible] of the situation, the Manager of the Chamber of Commerce forwarded the following telegrams this morning, in hopes that the conference at Ottawa to-day, between Sir Adam Beck and W. C. Kennedy, might be somewhat influenced thereby towards arriving at a satisfactory adjustment.

Belleville, July 24.

Hon. Sir Adam Beck,
Chateau Laurier,
Ottawa, Ont.

After a slight improvement at week-end, power situation now looking worse. Factories again forced to close. Orders being cancelled. Financial and business conditions most serious. Trust you will use utmost endeavor to reach settlement. Opinion here that differences should be arbitrated after reasonable reservations made.

J. O. Herity.
Manager, Chamber of Commerce.

Belleville, July 24

(Canadian Press Despatch)

TWELVE-YEAR-OLD GIRL SAILS WINNING YACHT

New York, July 22.—Ruth Pearl, a little twelve-year-old girl, surprised the old seadogs of the Rockaway Park Yacht Club by winning first prize in the Sea Mews class, the only sailing division in the annual regatta of the organization on Jamaica Bay. The little miss sailed her craft home first in a fresh breeze from the southeast in splendid style. In the motorboat divisions, interest centred in the high speed class, which was won by Vigilant III., the property of M. J. Sullivan. Vigilant I., which belongs to W. J. Sullivan, was the winner in the powerboat division for craft over 45 feet. The day was ideal and there was a large crowd at the clubhouse to see the regatta.

BOY FLAGS TRAIN WITH RED HANKY

Saves Lives of 300 by Standing on Track and Waving Torn Handkerchief

Grand Rapids, July 24.—Standing on the track facing a speeding loco motive, waving a torn red handkerchief, an unknown farmer lad signalled a train on the Pennsylvania system yesterday, and caused it to stop in time to save the lives of 300 resorters.

A defective rail had attracted the boy's ateution. After the train was stopped the lad disappeared and railroad officials are looking for him to offer a reward.

J. G. Meyer, engineer of the resort train, in telling of the boy's exploit, said: "We were going 45 miles an hour, when I noticed standing in the middle of the track a small boy, waving what appeared to be a torn handkerchief. There are strict orders to disregard no danger signals, so I put the sand to the engine and stopped in about 300 feet. The lad stepped off the track, and we slid by him and over the danger spot, but were going so slowly no damage was done.

"As the train crew came running up, the boy pointed out a bad break in the rail which he had discovered a few minutes before while hiking along the track.

"While the crew were examining the rail, the lad disappeared and has not been found yet."

"PUSSYFOOT" JOHNSON PREFERS CIGAR

Prohibition Champion Now in Isle of Wight Was in Collision and Was Regarded as a Jonah

London July 24.—"Pussyfoot Johnson, dry as ever, landed at Portland Isle of Wright, from the crippled liner Remuera, which collided with the freighter Marengo in a dense fog off Devonshire shortly after midnight. "Pussyfoot," who is on his way to New Zealand to continue the liquor fight, said later: "The other passengers said I was the Jonah aboard and that if I had been thrown to the whales this would never have happened.

"The bump was right bang up against my stateroom and covered me with splinters of glass while I was in bed. I went over to investigate, where I met the steward, who asked me if I wanted 'a shot,' meaning brandy.

"I said no, and went below and got a cigar instead."

The Remuera was able to limp into the harbor under her own steam this afternoon and was beached there after "Pussyfoot" and the other 533 passengers were taken off. They will be returned to Southampton where they began their voyage and from where the international prohibitionist will start again to help New Zealand put aridity across.

After the collision the Marengo apparently went on its way. There was no panic on board the liner, but the captain sent out an S. O. S. for tugs. These soon came up, but only stood by, for the Remuera, by keeping her pumps going continuously, was able to make Portland, but with a big list to starboard.

ELEVATOR AT OMEMEE BURNED

Caught Fire it is Believed From Spark of Passing Engine

A spark from a passing G. T. R. engine is believed to have started the fire that burned to the ground Saturday morning the elevator and store house of the John Douglas Elevator Company at Omemee. The tall building alongside the G.T.R. on the west side of the village was discovered in flames about 10-30 o'clock and although the local fire brigade and many citizens responded promptly to the first call the fire was soon beyond control.

As the flames enveloped the wooden structure it provided one of the most spectacular sights seen here in a long time. Its contents of 1,000 bushels of grain were consumed and Beattie's local sheds, nearby were also lost. Both buildings were partly insured.

When it was realized that the fire in the elevator was beyond control, the people turned their attention to the neighboring houses and a G.T.R. engine which arrived from Lindsay used its supply of water to good effect, and the combined efforts prevented further loss.

COPPER WAISTCOATS FOR LIQUOR SEIZED

Bridgeport, Conn., July 24.—Hollow waistcoats of copper, fitted to the body, and designed to hold whisky, have been seized by the police. The men inside them were also taken.

From the waistcoats liquor could be supplied to customers while the wearers were on the street, or they could be used to carry contraband whisky from one place to another.

NO FEAR OF A COAL SHORTAGE

Dealers of Quebec City Have a Very Optimistic Outlook

Quebec, July 24.—Local dealers, in a statement to the press, claim that the coal situation is not by any means as bad as it is pictured owing to the strike in the United States coal mines, and that the public have no reason to be unduly alarmed as to a shortage of coal next winter.

They claim that the recent strike will not last longer than October 1st, which will allow them nearly two months to get their suppies by water, and even longer by rail. If necessary, coal can be imported from overseas, which was not possible during the war.

The dealers assert that the public should not take reports published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics too seriously. Confidence is expressed that the bureau has no accurate information regarding the situation, and is absolutely wrong in its statement as to Quebec and Montreal.

REBELS FLY TO THE HILLS

Galway Irregulars Burn Barracks and Retire Toward Ballinasloe

(Canadian Press Despatch)

London, July 24.—Unconfirmed reports in London to-day said that the Irish Insurgents were retreating with all speed into Galtee and Knockmealdown mountains, harrassed by National troops who are pressing them hard and preventing them from concentrating for resistance.

Dublin, July 24.—National army troops have gained a fresh victory in West Ireland by capturing Ballyhaunis, County Mayo, from the insurgents, it was announced to-day. Free State triumph in capture of Limerick was swiftly followed by successes in surrounding district.

Dublin, July 24.—Telegraphic communication between Galway and Athenry was restored last night.

The Galway irregulars burned the Dunmore, North Galway, police barracks Saturday morning and then retired in the direction of Ballinasloe from which place, it is reported from the irregulars' field headquarters, they have withdrawn from Castlebar.

This is held here to indicate that the irregulars intend to abandon County Mayo and retreat to the mountains, which afford them ample cover.

Had Larger Force

Limerick, July 24.—From the beginning to the end of the operations which ended with the capture of Limerick, on Friday by the Free State forces the irregulars outnumbered the Nationals. Not more than 700 Free State troops were engaged, while the Republican forces reached at least 1,000.

The whole centre of the city was involved in the battle zone, the line of the National troops extending the length of Thomas and William streets, and at some points the combatants were separated by less than ten yards.

FIFTH WIFE SEEKS A DIVORCE

Very Much Married Comedian Has Not Yet Met the Right One

New York, July 24.—Mrs. Elda Hopper will begin an action for absolute divorce against her husband, De Wolf Hopper, the comedian, in the Supreme Court of Queens County in Long Island City today. Mr. Hopper, who is now playing in Baltimore, is not expected to be present or to contest the suit.

Although the divorce will be asked for on statutory grounds, there will be no mention of a correspondent by Mrs. Hopper. She will ask for the full custody of her son, De Wolf Hopper Jr. who is 7 years old. Mrs. Hopper lives at Douglas Manor, L. I. She was married to the comedian on May 8, 1913, at Riverside, N. J.

The present Mrs. Hopper is the comedian's fifth wife. His first wife was Ella Gardiner, a second cousin on the mother's side of the family. The second was Ida Mosher. Edna Wallace was the third, in the days of "Wang." Nella Bergen was his fourth wife. Mrs. Hopper said last night that if her suit should be granted she would keep her stage name of Hedda Hopper.

Mr. Hopper, who is playing a four weeks' engagement in a revival of Gilbert and Sullivan's operas in Baltimore, was served with papers in the action a few days ago. The attorney representing Mrs. Hopper is Benn Barber of Douglaston.

MEN HOLD UP PAYMASTERS

Get Away With $2,000 but Leave $30,000 Behind Them

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Coniston ,Ont., July 24.—Armed men to-day held up two paymasters, Stephenson and McDonnell, of the Mondnickel Company, while they were on their way from the branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce with thirty-two thousand dollars with which to pay workmen at the Smelter Works. The paymasters were crossing a field to the plant, and McDonnell carried a parcel of thirty thousand dollars and Stephenson a parcel of two thousand dollars. Realizing his position McDonnell dropped his parcel in the long grass, but the bandits robbed Stephenson and made their getaway.

Toronto Professor Issues Writ Against University and Asks big Damages

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 24.—James Craig, Professor of Oriental languages at the University of Toronto, in a writ issued at Osgoode Hall to-day, is asking the court to restrain the Board of Governors and President Falconer of the Uiversity from retiring him under the rule affecting Professors of 65 years of age.

He asks for an injunction, and, as an alternative, wants $50,000 damages.

CROSS OCEAN IN TWO DAYS

Big Flying Liner to Carry 40 is Now Under Construction

London, July 24.—A great flying boat, the largest air liner in the world, is under construction at the Super Marine Aviation Works, Southampton, says the Daily Chronicle. It will be able to fly from an English port to New York in 24 hours, the paper says, and may carry 30 or 40 passengers in addition to the crew.

The greatest secrecy is being observed in its construction and only three or four people are acquainted with the details. Workmen employed in the manufacture of the various parts are sworn to secrecy.

Special attention has been given to the hull, which involves certain new principles, and in appearance is like that of a large ship. The craft will be fitted with two engines, each of 650 horsepower.

Cargo and Passenger Ships.

Designs have been produced for both cargo and passenger carrying flying ships, and in each case the size is far in excess of that of any flying boat that has ever before been built. If descent at sea becomes necessary the ship will be able to land safely in the worst weather, it is said, and ride at anchor or proceed through the water under its own power.

If the normal freight were replaced by fuel the vessel would be able to stay at sea for very long periods, and this will likely give it considerable value as a fighting craft. It will also be able to climb rapidly to considerable altitudes.

Mr. Scott Payne lifted the veil of secrecy when interviewed by The Chronicle's Southampton correspondent.

To Face Heavy Weather.

"She is being built," he said, "to go to sea and stop at sea even in very heavy weather. The primary object is to construct a hull that will be perfectly seaworthy and yet can fly. There will be living quarters on board for the crew.

"The idea of this great ship was conceived at the Super Marine Aviation Works and we put it before the Air Ministry abou 18 months ago. We are now developing the plan at these works for the Air Ministry. We have made good progress with the hull and it is expected to be ready for launching by September. The completion of the flying boat, it is expected, will take about 12 months."

PRINCESS MARY IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Lord Aberdeen's Car Crashed Into Her's—Shaken But Not Hurt

London, July 22.—The Daily Mail announces this morning that Princess Mary had a narrow escape from serious injury in an automobile accident yesterday.

She was returning home from the garden party at Buckingham Palace, when Lord Aberdeen's big car crashed into hers. The chauffeur driving the bigger car swerved quickly to avoid a collision, but could not help running into the rear wheel of the Princess' machine.

Princess Mary was shaken up and startled, but was not injured, attending a private dinner shortly after.

ALLIED PREMIERS TO DEAL WITH REPARATIONS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Paris, July 24.—The whole reparations problem is now in the hands of the Allied Premiers, and it is considered quite unlikely that the reparations commission will render any decision on Germany's request for a moratorium until after the opening session of the Allied Council in London early next month.

GOVERNMENT TO TRANSPORT COAL

Rules to be Suspended and U.S. Government to Take Control

TO FOIL CONSPIRACY

Attorney-General Believes There is Conspiracy Relationship Between Strikes

Washington, July 24.—The Interstate Commerce Commission is expected to-day to issue a declaration of the existence of an emergency, within the meaning of the Transportation Act, as the first step toward Government control of the movement of coal.

Such a declaration, when issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the provisions of the Cummins-Each law, means the suspension of existing rules as to routing, pooling of terminal facilities and locomotive and car equipment; in short, virtual operament control of the mechanical operation of the railroads of the country.

To Foil Conspiracy.

Preliminary steps in connection with putting into effect the tremendous control of railroad facilities vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission by the Cummins Each law were taken at a conference between Attorney-General Daugherty and Chairman McChord and Commissioner Aitchison of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The final steps are awaiting further conferences tomorrow.

This Government action is the result of recognition of what is believed by legal officers of the Government to be a conspiracy between rail and mine strikers to prevent the transportation of coal being produced in the non-union fields.

Attorney-General Daugherty has unofficially declared his belief in the existence of a "conspired or inspired" relationship in the two strikes, but so far has been unable to obtain sufficient proof upon which to begin legal proceedings against the alleged conspirators.

DEAL SEPARATELY WITH THE GERMANS

Both French and Russians Carrying on Business Arrangements in Berlin

Berlin, July 24.—The Deutsche-Allgemeine Zeitung, Hugo Stinnes' organ, today asserts French and Russians are carrying on separate business dealings in Berlin. The paper charges both parties are using the present political turmoil as a cover to their negotiations.

The matters discussed are declared to be chiefly economic. Both sides deny that any deal is on foot, but it is known that French interests in German concerns are already busily directing their attention to these ends.

The Allgemeine Zeitung's information, however, obviously comes from the Stinnes' organization, which is in constant touch with Moscow.

MORE TIME ON "OLD SOL"

Scientist Says He Has Proved That Time Passes More Slowly on the Sun Than Here

Paris, July 24.—M. Perot of the Meudon Observatory stated today that he believes he has physically proved that time passes more slowly on the sun than on the earth, thus proving the correctness of Einstein's theory of time.

According to the Einstein theory, time must pass more slowly on the points fo the universe where gravity is the strongest. The gravity on the sun is twenty-seven times stronger than on the earth.

Taking the fact that the spectroscope has given science a knowledge of the identity of the metals burning in the sun and using as a basis of experiment the duration of the vibrations of atoms of the same metals burning on the sun and on the earth. The experiments, he states, showed that the vibrations of atoms of metals burning on the sun are much slower than those of the same metals on the earth. Moreover, the differences in vibrations were almost exactly that provided for in Einstein's theory.

FEDERATION OF UNIVERSITIES

Such a Step May be Taken in the Maritime Provinces

Halifax, N. S., July 22.—(By Canadian Press)—Federation of Maritime Universities, now under consideration by these institutions and recently recommended by the Carnegie Foundation of New York, may be said to have been first broached with the founding of Dalhousie College at Halifax in 1818.

King's College was founded as an Anglican institution at Windsor, N. S., in 1789, and subscription to certain tenets of faith was a prerequisite for prospective students or instructors.

In 1818 the then Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia, Lord Dalhousie, decided that there should be a seminary of higher learning in the province open to those who did not subscribe to the Anglican faith. He accordingly founded Dalhousie College in Halifax financing its beginning with about ten thousand pounds of the "Castine Fund." This was a sum of money collected as Customs duties from the United States naval base of that name in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts during the seven months following its capture in August 1814, by an expeditionary force out of Halifax. Lord Dalhousie expressed the wish that King's College unite with the new institution and there began an agitation for the union of these colleges which has continued to the present day.

In 1838 Dalhousie began to function as a college. Two attempts at union with King's had been made in 1822-1824 and 1829-1836, but failed.

The opening in 1838 of the institution which had been founded with the purpose of effecting college union, saw a setback to the movement. A contest was waged for a college appointment and the defeat of one candidate caused the Baptist supporters of Dalhousie to separate themselves and found Acadia College at Wolfville, N. S.

Dalhousie closed in 1843 to "allow funds to accumulate." The following years saw the establishment of St. Francis Xavier College in 1855 at Antigonish, N. S., by the Methodists, and of a Presbyterian Arts College in Truro, N. S., in 1860. The University of New Brunswick had been founded at Fredericton, N. B. in 1800.

In Nova Scotia in 1860 there began a growth of a new interest in both common and higher education. Leaders in the movement included Hon. Joseph Howe, Dr. afterwards Sir Charles Tupper, George Munroe Grant, later Principal of Queen's University, Kingston, and Rev. Allan Pollock, of the Church of Scotland. Dalhousie was re-organized by Act of Legislature in 1863 with the expressed object at the time of uniting the various church institutions of the Province into one strong, well endowed and non-denomination University. The act stated that nomination of a professor might be made by any body of Christians which should provide an income of twelve hundred dollars per annum for the support of any chair in the institution.

The Presbyterians responded by closing their Arts College at Truro and supporting two chairs at Dalhousie, but withdrew this support with the death of the incumbents appointed in 1863. The Church of Scotland in Nova Scotia, without any institution of its own, endowed a chair. Previous to the re-organization of Dalhousie the Arts department of Gorham College at Liverpool, N. S., supported by Congregationalists, transferred to Dalhousie "with a view to the furtherance of the establishment of a Provincial University.

An attempt was made in 1877 to bring the colleges of the Province into closer co-operation by the establishment of the University [illegible] Halifax, which was to have the power of granting degrees to the students of other colleges who passed its examinations. It ceased to exist in 1881 and another attempt to bring about Maritime College Union was made.

WOMEN'S VOTE AFFECTS TARIFF

Shoppers of the Family Will Pay Keen Attention To Prices

Washington, July 24.—One large fact in connection with the present efforts of the republican leaders at tariff-making has been to a great extent lost sight of, at least until recently. This is that it is the first time an attempt has been made at general tariff revision in the United States since the women of the entire nation have had the ballot.

The political possibilities involved in this are very great and a part of the leaders, both on the republican and the democratic sides of the Senate, are just beginning to waken to them.

Women, of course, are the shoppers of the family and pay more keen attention to their prerogatives as consumers than men do. If the pending bill when it becomes effective, increases prices in any way to stir the ire of the women who are both consumers and voters, it is not easy to reckon the political consequences.

Senator Pomerene of Ohio undoubtedly had this fact in mind recently when he presented a statement purporting to be the findings of an expert as to what the proposed new tariff law would cost the women for clothing. According to these figures, the women of the United States will be out more than a billion dollars by reason of the increase in rates, on articles of clothing alone. This says nothing about foodstuffs and other items.

SIR JOSEPH ANSWERS QUERIES AT LINDSAY

Will Not Be C.N.R. Chairman—G.T.R. Board Retired Voluntarily

Lindsay, Ont., July 22.—Sir Joseph Flavelle, for months past the chairman of the Grand Trunk Railway Board, was interviewed this morning by long distance telephone at his summer residence at Sturgeon Point. Asked if the board had resigned at the invitation of the government, Sir Joseph replied, "No, that is not correct, the board voluntarily resigned in a spirit of co-operation and to facilitate matters."

"Is there any truth in the statement that an expert from the United States is being brought in. "I do not know," replied Sir Joseph.

"When will the new chairman of the board be appointed?" "That I cannot say."

"Will you be the new chairman of the board?"

"My dear sir, you know I will not be the new chairman, I advised from the very start, from the time I took hold of the G. T. R. that I would not be the permanent chairman, neither will I be now. That is all I have to say regarding the matter."

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

The Great Adventure.

The noblest study of mankind is man. The most fascinating study of mankind is women. He who studies these enchanting subjects will get an idea as to why we are a dominant people. Why is it that the Hindoo stands still and the Chinaman has been a fixture for ages? It is tradition, and caste. They marry their girls in the tribe—you may call it family. There is no big adventure about it. The girl knows that she will be given in marriage to one of these brown or yellow or mottled young gentlemen sooner or later, and she will have nothing to say about it—nor he either for that matter.

There is no fun in that. It does not cultivate the spirit of adventure. It breeds people without ambitions—folk who never do and dare. The Italians were great people because their young men and women took big chances. Romeo took his life in his hands when he went courting the fair Juliet. If his folks had caught him at it, they would have made a pincushion out of him for their swords. If them young people had been married their children would have had the adventurous spirit without which all nations must stand still. In a closed community the girls must marry their near relations or what is almost as bad, young men whom they know too well.

If your girl knows you like a book she won't love you as she had ought to. We can't get away from this The Unknown Quantity appeals strongly to every girl; every young lady is an adventuress in the true sense of the term. If your girl went to school with you, and was reared in the same community with you all her life, she will never go dippy over you. She may like you well enough but you are not an adventure.

Marrying with you will not be a voyage of discovery in perilous seas, in fairie lands forlorn. It will be a trip across the motionless to Old Niagara and back, with an occasional voyage to Burlington Beach or Frenchman's Bay on the side.

Bildad Duckunder and his wife were a childless couple, so they took a pretty girl to "raise." Topsy, if you remember, "just growed." Most of us were raised. It is quite a chore to raise a young one, whether it is yours or not. In the old days almost every farm had a pet lamb every summer. This little creature most generally was a disowned or deserted or orphaned lamb. She was taken in to the home and raised by hand. And she generally turned out all right. She was a good deal of a nuisance most of the time, but in the long run she paid her way. It doesn't cost much more to raise a young one by hand than it does to raise a pet lamb, and more than that it is a bigger adventure.

Bildad was glad his missus adopted this little girl, for, as he said, she could grow up to be quite a help to her in the house-work, and his missus said, "Bildad, 'taint fair. You goin' 'dopt a nice boy to help you do the heavy work on the farm when you git old. And Bildad thought it was a blamed good idear, so he 'dopted his dead sister's little boy Emerson, and proceeded to raise him by hand.

The two handsome children grew in beauty side by side and gradually developed into young man and young womanhood. Bildad and his missus put great store in their getting married. It would be just splendid to have the young folks wedded and living together always in the beautiful old house in the orchard. But girls are queer. Tildy wouldn't think of it, to the intense grief and disappointment of the good old folks.

"I love Emerson," she said. "'Course I love Emerson I'd die for him. But I don't love him that way. I love him like a brother. Why, I never was jealous of Emerson. Love ain't real sweet 'less you're a lil' bit jealous. It's terrible sweet when you are awful jealous. I jes' love to see Em join with the other girls. It would tickle me all to pieces if he would marry Suzie Sevenpiper or Kitty Teeple."

Now there's the situation. What can be done about it? Emerson would marry her in a minute, for it would save him a whole lot of expense and trouble, and she's got the ropes, and he is wise enough to know that he couldn't possibly do better. With him it is a case of "Barkis is willin'." What I'm afraid of is that some alluring wastrel, some good-for-nothing, will come along one of these days and get Tildy, and she will leave the comfortable and lovely old home where she has lived all her days, and go wandering over the universe with a man who will never have a roof over his head he can call his own till they put him in a pine box.

It is the call of the wild. When the Lord wanted to people His peopleless places, he broke up the old tribal customs where a girl was obliged to marry her fourth or fifth cousin at the best, and the great adventure was substituted.

Folks say that Tildy is a little fool.

But Emerson is a bigger fool than she is if he don't leave her alone after this.

The foundation fill for the pier is already in place. The new work will give employment to several hundred men for approximately 12 months. This is the largest work undertaken in several years in Vancouver by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The pier will be 850 feet long and 328 feet wide and its estimated cost is about $2,000,000. It is proposed to have it completed by September 30, 1923. Tenders are to be in by July 17.

The new station will be 35 feet wide and 75 feet long and will run parallel with the railway tracks. The foundation will be of concrete laid on the piles, while the building will be constructed of rug brick with stone trimmings. The roof will be of slate.

The waiting room will be in the centre of the building, with a ticket office looking out upon the railway tracks. The baggage room and office will be located at the north end and a smoking room and lavatory accommodation at the south end. The best of materials will be used and all the most modern ideas in station construction have been incorporated in the plans.

Chatham, Ont. — Saturday night officer Sinnott was patrolling Lacroix Street near the C.P.R. crossing when he noticed a number of children running out to the track to view trains passing. The children were getting a little close to the tracks, and Sinnott took their names and spoke to one of the parents, George Hardey, and advised him to keep his offspring away from the tracks.

Hardey didn't like this interference on the part of the officer and it is alleged that he proceeded to tell him so in language which is not used in the best of circles. It is also said that the enraged parent took off his coat and wanted to fight. An information has been laid against him and he will explain his action in the police court.

Fort William. — A. F. Hawkins, superintendent of terminals, Canadian Pacific Railway, received framed and autographed photographs of Lord and Lady Byng, as souvenirs of what they characterized as a very pleasant day spent at Savanne, a point a short distance west upon the Canadian Pacific Railway. A letter, written Superintendent Hawkins, read as follows:

"Their excellencies, the governor-general and Lady Byng, of Vimy, desire to express to you their warmest thanks for all the arrangements you made for their comfort and recreation at Savanne last Sunday. They had a most enjoyable trip on the lake in the motor boat provided, and feel greatly benefitted by the rest which they feel was largely due to your trouble. Everyone on the train is very grateful to you for what you have done.

"Their excellencies hope you will accept, the photographs of themselves, which accompany this letter as a souvenir of what was to them a very pleasant day."

COLD FEET

By R. RAY BAKER

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

When Dexter Runnels scampered blithesomely up the brown-stone steps of the Dolliver home at five minutes to three he fully expected that within the next two hours Marion would begin spelling her last name with a capital R. The arrangements were all made. The minister had been engaged, Dexter had his license and honeymoon railroad tickets and was dressed and groomed for the ceremony—but Marion was not at home.

Under Dexter's light brown overcoat were his best clothes. They were not full dress, because it was going to be an informal occasion and because Dexter had no such outfit. He had never found time to get measured for formal afternoon clothes. His stock business occupied his attention every waking minute and he was almost inclined to begrudge the half-day needed to have the connubial knot tied.

But things were going to change. He had resolved to slow up his nerve-racking business pace when he became established in his new home. Not only had he resolved it, but Marion had served an ultimatum that demanded it.

"I'm going to have my share of your time whether we get rich or starve," she had said. "It's not only that I won't be neglected, but this intensified activity of yours is making you absent-minded. It wouldn't surprise me if you forgot the date of our marriage."

But Dexter had marked the calendar and he had not forgotten. Early that morning he had wired: "Will leave New York on 11:30 train." This gave him a good two hours' leeway, in case the train was late, for Marion's home city was only 60 minutes' run from the metropolis. But the train had been practically on schedule, so Dexter had time to spare.

As he pushed the bell button beside the Dolliver door he felt that he was shedding his business cares. No more frenzied finance for him. He had installed an able manager in his office and now he could take things easier.

And Dexter had "slowed up" in another way—in the matter of caution. Inasmuch as his shoulders soon would be bearing the responsibilities of providing a livelihood for two, he had adopted a policy of "look twice." The first consequence of the new policy was a decision to back out of a deal in new motor stocks for which arrangements had been made in Detroit.

It looked like an opportunity to reap big profits, but there was also a chance of going financially flat. Under the old policy he would have taken a chance; under the new one, he was afraid. So this very day he had sent a wire to Detroit reading:

"Call off the deal for a while. I've got cold feet."

The bell was not answered, so he pressed it again; but still there was no response. It was queer that Marion's father had not met him at the station with the automobile, but the fact that no one answered the bell was strange.

However, he reasoned probably Marion was busy dressing, and the rest of the household occupied with other matters attending the marriage. There were no servants.

He tried the door, but it was locked. He went to the rear entrance, but encountered no more success there. Furthermore, the blinds were down, a fact he had not noticed when he approached the house. His mind had been too occupied. Now it was occupied fully as much, but less abstractedly. A very concrete problem confronted Dexter.

Finding all the doors locked, he went to the garage. The door was fastened, but through a window he ascertained the car had been removed. It looked as if the Dollivers had gone on an overnight trip, else the garage door would have been left open.

Dexter, for all of his lifelong residence in New York, had never seen the whirlpool of Niagara; but now he had an idea of how it would feel to be caught in the seething vortex, for his brain had been transformed into a maelstrom. He was dazed as he turned from the garage and started back along the cement driveway. A call from the house next door brought him to a halt.

"Mr. and Mrs. Dolliver and their daughter went away this morning in their car," said a man in a smoking jacket, looking out of a window. "They had a trunk fastened on behind, so I suppose they're going for a tour."

"Thanks," returned Dexter, weakly, and he staggered from the premises and wandered aimlessly down the street, suffering from a wide-awake nightmare.

He obtained a room in a hotel and sat down to study the problem; but the more he thought the worse the situation appeared and the less he could make head or tail of it. Marion had left him in the lurch, there seemed no doubt of that, but it also seemed that she might have gone to the trouble to let him know that she had changed her mind. Surely there must be some good reason, and he was resolved to find her and learn what it was.

He could think of no more probable destination for the Dolliver motor party than Rochester, where Mr. Dolliver's brother resided. Dexter had visited the brother in company with Marion and a mutual liking had developed between the two men.

Dexter went to the telephone, and after a half-hour wait got in connection with Marion's uncle at Rochester and asked whether he expected a visit from his brother.

"Yes," was the reply over the wire. "I received a telegram this morning that they were coming by automobile, but they haven't arrived."

Dexter was not long in acting on this information, and a half hour later found him in a taxicab running at high speed along the road to Rochester.

Although the car was traveling at a forty-mile clip, it seemed to Dexter to be only crawling. He urged the driver to increase the speed, and the throttle was opened still further and the auto bumped and swayed over the turnpike.

Farms and forests, cities and villages flashed past, but no sign was there of the Dolliver party.

"They have a good start," Dexter thought; "but I ought to catch them, unless they've stopped at a hotel along the way."

He was worrying about this new possibility when the taxi rounded a curve and came upon a machine drawn up beside of the road. One of the wheels was jacked up, and a man was replacing a punctured tire. Dexter gave him a casual glance, and then his gaze rested on a girl standing beside him.

"Stop!" he called to the driver, rising and thumping that individual on the back. The taxi went a good half block before it could be brought to a stop and was turned around and headed back.

The man at the tire was just letting the wheel on the ground when the taxi rolled up in front of the disabled machine. Dexter was out of it before the wheels had ceased rolling, and was rushing to the girl, who was preparing to enter the tonneau, where an elderly women was seated.

"Marion!" Dexter exclaimed, seizing the girl by an arm. She looked at him in palpable amazement and her face grew white as she drew back. The man at the wheel looked up, and a stern expression crossed his countenance when he recognized the newcomer.

"Mr. Runnels, I believe," he said coldly. "What is the meaning of this, may I ask? Have you taken leave of your senses, young man?"

Dexter was nonplused by the strange reception and felt like answering Mr. Dolliver's question in the affirmative. He tried to give tongue to an explanation, but inasmuch as there was nothing for him to explain, he found it difficult.

"Your feet seem to have warmed up somewhat," was Mr. Dolliver's dry remark, as he approached Dexter. Marion had entered the machine in a semi-fainting condition and was being supported by her mother.

"I don—just what do you mean?" Dexter sputtered, addressing her father.

The latter, his face still stern, drew a rumpled yellow sheet of paper from a pocket and handed it to Dexter, who read the line of blue capital letters extending across it.

"Call off the deal awhile. I've got cold feet."

His mind a worse muddle, if possible, than before, he gazed dumbly at the typewritten address:

"Miss Marion Dolliver, 623 Lake avenue, Brockton, N. Y."

A sickly smile swept over his face.

"I got the message mixed," he said and sank wearily to the running board of the car.

Reconciliation proved difficult, but it was accomplished, and twilight saw the Dolliver machine, with Dexter as a passenger, drive up to 623 Lake avenue.

One of Dexter's first acts was to seize an evening paper and scan the stock columns. He looked up with a smile of satisfaction.

"Marion, I've made a fool of myself by getting those messages twisted, but it's meant a twenty thousand dollar profit for me—for us. In Detroit they're probably puzzling over my message, 'Will leave New York on 11:30 train,' but the Mars motor stock must have been purchased, because my countermanding order was not received—and the paper says the stock soared on the market today.

"Marion, will you forgive me—if I promise not to be absent-minded any more?"

"I'll try," she told him, a light of sympathy and understanding in her eyes.

Curious Experience.

Perhaps one of the most curious experiences which ever fell to the lot of a man was one which happened to Mr. Priestly, who was the geologist to the first Shackleton expedition to the South pole, and later was geologist to the Scott expedition. The party ashore at Cape Royds on the first Shackleton expedition were at dinner when the Nimrod arrived to take them off. They were obliged to leave their meal and go aboard the ship immediately. Three years later Priestly returned to Cape Royds with Scott, and going ashore entered the hut, and completed the meal which he had commenced in 1907. He tells that the food was in exactly as good condition as it was on the day he laid his knife and fork down. This fact is accounted for owing to the dryness of the atmosphere. During the three years that the hut had been uninhabited, the intense cold had frozen the food, thus preserving it.

V. C. Engines.

The London and Northwestern Railway Company have adopted a novel method of commemorating the military achievements of members of their staff. Three of their locomotives have been named "Lance-Corporal Christie, V.C.," "Private F. Sykes, V.C.," and Private W. Wood, V.C."

Pygmies.

Discovery of a race of pygmies, averaging only four feet in height, is reported by an explorer who returned from Central Africa. The tribe is called the Mambuti and they are known as daring hunters of elephants and rhinoceroses.

Eskimos own approximately 70 per cent. of all reindeer in Alaska.

They Furnish Interesting Clues to Your Ancestry.

It is by no means every man who knows that in the name he bears there is probably an interesting and valuable clue to his ancestry.

Thus, if he signs it Harcourt or Venables, Pelham or Percival, Dawnay or Daubney, he may be pretty sure that the founder of his family had his cradling in Normandy—though whether he was a lord, a knight, or a scullion is hidden from him.

Similarly, if he bears the name of any town or village in England, it is probable that that village or town was the cradle of his forefathers; though here, again, he gets no clue to the quality of its first bearer, who might be the lord of manors or an honest tradesman or artisan. And when there are several places of the same name, often in different counties, he is still ignorant as to which of them he originally hails from.

Even when a man's surname throws no light on the place of origin, it often gives interesting clues to past history. Thus, if he is called Tanner or Glover, Butcher or Baker, Carter or Carpenter, he may know that the first of his forefathers to bear that name followed one or other of these occupations.

The first Thwaytes was a feller of wood; Jenner was a joiner; Milner, a miller; Webster, a weaver; Barker, a tanner; Lorimer, a maker of bits and spurs; and so on through the long list of old-time trades, many of them now scarcely identifiable by the average man — such as Stringer, a man who made bow-strings; Tipper, who tipped arrows; and Fletcher, who affixed the feathers.

When surnames throw no light upon the place of origin, they occasionally reveal the situation of the original home. Thus, Tom who lived at the foot of the hill was labelled Underhill; if his home was on the shore, he was Tom By-the-sea. And similarly we get such patronymics as Undercliff, Atwood, Atmoor, Byfield, and so on.

Other surnames tell us what kind of men were they who first bore them: Dark or Fair, Ruddy (Russell) or Pale (Whiteman); whether they were "Long" or "Short" or "Broad"; "Merry" or "Sadd"; "Bold" or "Coward"; "Lightfoot" or "Heavyside."

When in those old days there was no such way of distinguishing a man, says a writer in "John o' London's Weekly," it was an easy matter to identify him as his father's son. Thus, Richard's boys became known as Richardson; William's as Williamson; and Robin's as Robinson. And when, in process of time, these labels grew too plentiful and confusing, the father's name was modified in other ways—to such an extent, indeed, that the connection is almost impossible to trace.

Even names which suggest undesirable lineage are often both ancient and honorable. Mr. Hobson can derive comfort from learning that before the Conqueror set foot on the shores of England a Leuric Hobbesune figured among Saxon tenants in Suffolk. Mr. Muggins and Mr. Banks will be relieved to find that their names "came over with the Normans"; and Mr. Snooks can point to Sevenoaks as the cradle of his family.

Lucky Horseshoes.

Why do we regard horseshoes as lucky? Many people believe that the superstition comes from the sea-god Neptune, whose horses were looked upon as sacred. A horseshoe picked up on the road was supposed to belong to one of them.

But the truth is that the horse is the national animal of the English people. The first Saxons who came to England were Hengist and Horsa, both of whose names mean horse.

Smiths were regarded with peculiar reverence, since theirs was held to be almost a sacred art.

Do not forget that a horseshoe is lucky only if its points face you as you find it, for luck streams out from them. If it is lying the other way, walk round it until you are opposite the points; then pick it up and carry it with the points uppermost.

Nail it on your door in the same position. Good fortune will then be showered—so says the old belief—over your house. If the points are downward as it hangs on the door, the lucky influences will pass into the earth and be lost.

Letters as Newspapers.

At one time there were no newspapers, and news had to be passed on entirely by word of mouth.

The first papers were in the form of letters, and the earliest of these was the "Acta Diurna" (Daily Happenings), published in Rome in 691 B.C.

The last news-letter was issued in America in 1794. This was the Boston News Letter, several copies of which are to be found in the collection of the Boston Historical Society.

The first newspaper printed from type was called the Gazette, and was published in Bavaria in 1457, while the first advertisement that appeared in print was the announcement of a reward for the recovery of two stolen horses, and was contained in the London Impartial Intelligencer in March, 1648.

Fish for French Lakes.

Two hundred thousand small fresh water fish, from German lakes, have been transported to France and safely consigned—without one casualty—in their new homes in the lakes of Picardy, famous for their fine fish. The transaction is a reparations item. The fish were transported in a special train consisting of wagons containing cisterns of water. The purity of the water was renewed every four hours with oxygen.

Palace of Versailles.

The Palace of Versailles, near Paris, is said to be the costliest ever built. Louis XIV. destroyed all the documents relating to this wonderful building, to prevent its real cost ever being known.

Destroy Gold.

Chinese are estimated to destroy two million pounds worth of gold annually by their custom of burning small pieces of gold leaf on certain anniversaries.

Sir Auckland Geddes Was Anything But Beloved by British House of Commons

Whenever the former assistant professor of anatomy in the medical faculty of McGill University, Montreal, Canada, commenced to lecture the House of Commons, the more exquisite members of that celebrated club used to writhe and feel again like small boys in hard forms before superior taskmasters at Eton, or Rugby, or Winchester. How they used to loathe him and his manner! More unpopular than his brother, the business man and engineer, if that were possible. No Parliamentary manner at all, old thing. In fact, old bean, a most unparliamentary and frightfully improper manner, and all that sort of thing, old top. Frightful! Jolly beastly! Meanwhile, the lecture (alias a speech) would go on in the most benevolently authoritative and disconcerting manner—the Geddes manner.

Dr. Geddes has been "doctored" again, this time by the University of Toronto, only it was his Excellency, Rt. Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, M.D., D.C.L., P.C.K.C.B., His Britannic Majesty's Ambassador to the United States. Like Sir Robert Horne, the popular Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Auckland is a product of John Watson's College, Edinburgh. His further training was in medicine, and so he never acquired quite the Oxford manner, getting no nearer to "the universities" than Edinburgh. No wonder the Commons loathed him.

SIR AUCKLAND GEDDES.

But he was a soldier in the South African campaigns with the 3rd Highland Light Infantry, and in the Great War proved his quality as an administrator, as director of recruiting and director of national service before entering the Cabinet and taking up his course as lecturer on local government, reconstruction and trade in the House of Commons, as Minister in charge successively of these vital departments of after-war Government. When he left for Washington the Commoners, whether of his own Unionist stripe, or of opposing parties, cared little that he had been promoted, so long as he had gone. His unpopularity with them, however, was not so great that they could deny his solid merits and good-will. In honoring him the University of Toronto recognized brilliant services and abilities.

Wonder Weighing Machine.

In the gold room of the Bank of England stands the most remarkable balance in the world. This huge pair of scales is seven feet high and weighs almost two tons.

Place in the scale pan a huge gold bar that two men can scarcely lift, and the great balance will give its weight to a minute fraction of a grain.

In addition to being able to deal accurately with heavy weights, it is so delicate that even a fly crawling over the pan will cause the pointer to move more than a hand's breath. It will weigh a quarter of a ton of gold or a single cigarette paper with equal ease.

The cost of this machine ran into many thousands of pounds, for every part had to be made with the most minute accuracy.

The slightest trace of moisture would throw the whole machine out, and even dust invisible to the eye would affect its accuracy, for the balance would register the weight of the dust as well as that of the gold.

Picture on a Pin's Head.

What is undoubtedly one of the smallest engravings in the world has been made by Mr. C. Habicht, a former Government engraver, of Washington.

It is a picture of the United States capitol cut on the gold head of a pin. Three days were spent in getting a finely polished surface on the pin-head, and the engraving took four months to complete.

So small is the picture, which was stippled out with fine diamond points under a powerful glass, that it can only be seen through a microscope.

The details—door, windows, columns, and so on—are all perfect.

Above the picture is written, "United States Capitol," and beneath, "Washington, 1922."

Mulching Paper.

Weeding would become a lost art if the use of mulching paper could be applied to all gardens as successfully as it is in growing pineapples, says an article in Popular Mechanics. In this case the strips of paper are rolled out where it is desired to plant, and slits are cut in the paper through which the pineapple suckers are planted.

JADE.

Where This Fashionable Mineral Comes From.

Jade has recently become fashionable in this country, and at jewelers' shops and stores of dealers in articles de luxe one can buy bracelets, cuff buttons, scarf pins, belt buckles, charms, etc., of this material. A fairly decent string of jade beads may be had for as little as $1,000.

Its expensiveness probably has more to do with the new popularity of jade than anything else. To the untutored eye it is not specially beautiful. One must be educated up to an appreciation of it.

In the Orient it is held in extraordinary esteem, particularly in China, where it has been sought so eagerly that accessible deposits of it have been almost worked out. Most of the jade used in China to-day, or exported from that country, comes from Burmah and Turkestan. There are also rich mines of it in New Zealand.

Jade is blue, green, yellow, black and white. Practically all of the white comes from Turkestan. The center of the green jade carving industry is Canton, where it employs 10,000 workmen. No machinery is used, the work being all done with hand tools.

Jade in China is indispensable to official dignity. Persons employed in important capacities under the Government wear it as part of the conventional regalia appropriate to their rank, in the form of thumb-rings, snuff-boxes, and tubes to contain the feathers attached to their hats.

The Horned Toad.

The horned toad can live for 119 days not only without water, but in an absolutely dry atmosphere. This fact has been demonstrated by Prof. F. G. Hall, of the University of Wisconsin. The scaly, impervious skin of the toad prevents evaporation from its body, it is found, while its organs are adapted to excrete insoluble crystals of uric acid instead of a fluid. Any water absorbed when the toad does take a drink remains in the body, keeping the blood fluid almost indefinitely. How well the animal is protected is shown by the fact that after four months in an atmosphere made absolutely dry by inclosing a pan of concentrated sulphuric acid in the container, the toad lost only 35 per cent. of its weight. Unlike the toad experimented upon by Prof. Hall, the camel does not really do without a drink, but simply converts stored up fat into moisture. An Arab picks out a camel with a fat, well-developed hump for travel in the desert. The camel will not drink on the journey, but at the end of the trip the hump is thin and shrunken. As the camel's tissues start to dry, the oxygen dissolved in the blood attacks the fat and changes it into water. Since part of this "metabolic water" comes from the air, a pound of fat makes several pounds of fluid.

Birds That Fell Trees.

A bird's nest as big as a house! It sounds a tall order, and you might think that only some kind of super-ostrich could make it.

As a matter of fact, it is built by a little fellow no bigger than a canary. South African society birds like company. They live in large colonies, all the members of which build in the same tree.

Each pair constructs a nest of mud, joining its walls to those of its next-door neighbors. As the colonies are several thousand strong, the bird town soon reaches a very respectable size.

The following season the colony occupies the same tree, building new nests on top of the old ones. The tree creaks and groans, but the society birds take no notice.

Sometimes the huge mass of nests comes crashing down, and the air is filled with dust, feathers, and frightened squeaks. But often the tree itself is weighed down by the industrious colonizers, until eventually it collapses beneath the weight of their homes.

First Thimble.

How many women are familiar with the origin of the thimble?

As a matter of fact, it dates back to the year 1684. In that year Nicholas Benschoten, an Amsterdam goldsmith, sent a thimble as a gift to a lady with the dedication: "Ty Myfrou van Renselaer, this little object which I have invented and executed as a protective covering for her industrious fingers."

At first thimbles were costly, so that only well-to-do women could afford them, but they became much cheaper on being made of lead and other common metals.

The word thimble points to the fact that originally this protection was worn on the thumb to parry the thrust of the needle, and not, as at present, to help to push it through the material. The Dutch term finger-hat or finger-hood became in this country the "thumb-bell," from its bell-like shape. Eventually the word was changed to thimble.—Tit-Bits.

Wanted: An Engine.

A prize of 1,000,000 francs has been offered by the administrative council of the committee for aeronautical propaganda in France, for an airplane engine which will give satisfaction in severe tests of durability, reliability, swift dismantling, erecting, etc. Tests will begin in June, 1923. Competition is open to the world.

TIME TO STOP WAR.

The Chinese, With Their Millions, Have Learned to Fight.

The Chinese have at last learned the art of war from Europe.

This, much more than any details about the merits of the Chinese civil war, is the significant news coming out of China.

The recent campaigns have been conducted in an efficient manner that has surprised foreign observers.

Chang-Tso-Lin's cavalry and infantry trains, according to the military expert of Le Temps (Paris), were moved with high efficiency. The condition of the animals was excellent. The men were fed well. The mobilization proceeded without a hitch. Thousands of troops were held in reserve in northern Manchuria and they compared favorably with the Europeans who marched against German invaders towards the Rhine. The troop trains were almost invariably on time. The commissary was managed with something approaching genius.

The efficiency of the general staff of Wu-Pei-Fu was even higher in quality. Wu is estimated highly as a strategist by the Europeans. It was a contest on equal terms as regards men and munitions, but Wu showed his superiority in handling large masses of men with speed. Speed was the decisive factor and the forces of Wu are believed to have exceeded a hundred thousand actually in movement, to say nothing of his reserves. The movement of his army up the Peking-Hankow railway is praised in the French daily as "a masterpiece."

In the view of Debats (Paris), the capacity of the commanders on both sides and the morale of the men have made the campaign an event filled with possibilities for good or evil to the whole civilized world. If the brigands and dictators with which the provinces tend more and more to become familiar achieve much more in the way of militarizing the land, China will become the last home of the art of war. Perhaps, comments the French paper, the four-power treaty signed at Washington was not negotiated a moment too soon.

"This whole episode," says the military expert of the Rome Tribuna, "should teach the world that China, as a military power, has arrived at the hour when disarmament is the supreme need of civilization."

Boring for Steam.

For many years an observatory, under the direction of Prof. Jaggar, has been maintained at the crater of Kilauea, on the Island of Hawaii, for the study of that volcano—remarkable because, while at all times manifesting a tremendous activity, it is not explosive.

It is believed that Kilauea's fires come from a great subterranean "pool," so to call it, of molten material that has pushed its way up through the earth's crust from the inconceivably hot interior of the globe.

Experiments, long contemplated, are now being undertaken by boring deep holes down through the rocks in the neighborhood of the crater. It is hoped by this means to tap sources of volcanic steam, which could be used to great advantage for industrial purposes in Hawaii, where there are no deposits of coal.

The Hawaiian Islands are wholly of volcanic formation, having been thrown up in an ancient epoch from the floor of the sea. There is plenty of evidence to show that in former times Kilauea was much more violently eruptive than it is to-day. It emitted vast lava flows, and threw out enormous quantities of ashes, deep beds of which remain to tell the tale.

In these ash-beds are found millions of "volcanic marbles," many of them perfectly spherical, which are most curious because nobody can tell why or how they were formed.

Paying Debts With Axe-Heads.

Our primitive ancestors had only one form of money—axe-heads. At first these were made of flint, but later they were cast in bronze.

Difficulties arose as commerce became general. Certain things were not worth a whole axe-head. Consequently miniature axe-heads were cast which were worth a quarter, or even an eighth of the full-sized ones. These were the first real coins. They were triangular in shape, with a square hole in the centre for the haft.

When man began to have pockets he found the triangle an awkward shape for his coins, since its points wore holes very quickly. He therefore adopted a circular form in place of the three-cornered one, but preserved the hole in the centre.

This old axe-head coin remains to-day in China in the form of the "cash," a brass piece of money about the size of a halfpenny. The cash is the direct descendant of the axe-head, and two English words are borrowed from it; whenever we speak of cash, or brass," we are really talking of axe-heads.

Game Reserves.

While game laws with longer close seasons and more restricted bag limits have done something to prevent the rapid if not appalling diminution of all kinds of game from the lordly moose to the diminutive plover and sandpiper, the total result in comparison with the annually increasing number of gunners and the improvement of weapons of destruction is not encouraging. Of recent years the sentiment seems to be growing among conservationists that the only hope of preserving a remnant of many species is by establishing here and there a nucleus in the shape of a park of sanctuary where destruction shall be absolutely prohibited. Recognizing the legitimate needs of sportsmen, these oases of protection, which may also serve as forest reserves or recreation parks, may preserve species which would otherwise become absolutely extinct, and the overflow from the boundaries afford a perennial and certain supply to surrounding territory. The United States have done much along such lines, but Canada, a newer country with more unoccupied land, has, as Dr. Hornaday says, "set out to get for herself a-plenty of national parks and game preserves while the getting was good. No province seemed disposed to be left behind in this conservation enterprise. As a final result, these red-spotted maps tell a great story of enlightenment and progress. Until it enters its decadence, no city, state, or nation ever deconsecrates and gives back to commercial uses a park or a wild life sanctuary that has once been dedicated to the whole people as theirs."

Eastern Canada has four huge game reserves, Manitoba and Saskatchewan have thirty-one, mostly small ones, Alberta and British Columbia have seven between them, including the immense areas of Jasper Park and the Rocky Mountains Park at Banff. Maps of these parks and wild life sanctuaries are gi[illegible] together with accounts of th[illegible] principal attractions, and [illegible] in Canada or outside of it [illegible] ever to spend a vacatio[illegible] should have the boo[illegible] panion.

Horatio Bottomley Has Turned Out a Criminal Was Once Almost a Hero

At one time it seemed certain that Horatio Bottomley would take his place among the British heroes of the war. Instead he lines up with Whittaker Wright, Ernest Terah Hooley and Jabez Balfour, as one of the notable English swindlers of modern times. How many millions he was able to extract from the British public, apart from what he earned honestly as the proprietor of the weekly paper, John Bull, is not known, but it is supposed to be not less than $3,000,000. Very little of it is likely to be recovered. Bottomley's extravagance, his town house, his country estate, his string of race horses, his betting operations, the money that was extorted from him by people who were privy to some of his schemes—all these sources drained away from him the golden flood that the credulous public directed upon him. His victims were for the most part the poorest of people, nearly all of them returned soldiers or the mothers or widows of soldiers whom he induced to invest their war savings and gratuities in his crooked schemes.

His services in the war were undoubtedly great. The war itself seemed to have regenerated him. He did not renounce the atheism that he has clung to all his life, but again and again in his addresses to the soldiers and in his powerful writings he sounded a deep religious note. He visited the men at the front on several occasions, and it is said that nobody else had the power he had to reconcile them to their bitter lot and prevent a deterioration of morale or discipline. The men felt that he was in truth one of themselves. In his paper he fought unceasingly for their interests. Perhaps more than any other civilian in the British Isles, he was the hero of the common British soldier at the front. His power as an orator is probably not surpassed by any other Englishman. He has a voice as beautiful as an actor's, and he knows how to act. He, too, has a keen brain, ready wit, courage, impudence and the utmost confidence in himself. To the last he believed that no ordinary London jury would find him guilty.

HORATIO BOTTOMLEY.

In one respect his downfall was brought about in somewhat similar circumstances to that of Oscar Wilde. He himself brought an action. He lost, and the evidence given at the first trial was such as to prompt an order for his arrest. It was another weekly paper that eventually laid him low, namely, Truth, founded by Henry Labouchere, and famous for its exposure of English scoundrels and swindlers high and low.

Bottomley's uncle was George Jacob Holyoake, the disciple of Robert Owen, and a leader in mid-Victorian secularism. Bottomley was brought up in an atmosphere of mingled socialism and atheism. He first came into prominence as a promoter of joint stock companies dealing in West Australian mining shares. He did not do any mining, but he sold plenty of shares that promised to pay ten per cent., fifty per cent., or one hundred per cent. We are not aware whether any of them did pay, but they helped start Bottomley on the way to fortune. No criminality was proved against him, but for more than thirty years people who study city affairs regarded him as a slippery customer who had the makings of a rather high-class swindler. Twice he was prosecuted, but he escaped, partly as a result of his remarkable skill in defending himself before juries. He boasted that he was the best lay lawyer in England, and probably the boast was justified.

He owned an evening newspaper, the Sun, since defunct, and established the Financial Times. In later years it has been one of his boasts that he gave Lord Northcliffe his first job, and has offered to sell the letter in which a certain young Alfred Harmsworth asked for a rise in salary. He has been through the bankruptcy court and has been in Parliament off and on since 1906. In the House he sought to identify himself with small, human matters which could be successfully played up in his papers. He was always original. Part of his election campaign was to parade his race horses through the streets bearing signs in his interest. On one occasion the sandwich boards used to advertise John Bull displayed the sensational announcement: "Nothing in John Bull This Week." His last desperate ruse which preceded his downfall was original. He employed a man to sue him, and then to withdraw his action, in order that others might be scared off. But all tricks failed in the end, and, after a long run, Horatio Bottomley is behind prison bars.

THE POWER SITUATION

The local power situation is not clearing up as quickly as was expected. To-day there are many factories closed down and according to a telegram received by Mr. Herity, manager of the Chamber of Commerce, from Sir Adam Beck, the dispute with the Ottawa authorities is not yet settled. Sir Adam says the Hydro Commission is doing everything possible to effect a settlement. The sooner this is actually possible the better for Belleville, for the Hydro Commission and the Department of Canals.

THE WORLD'S UNREST

Canada is having trouble with her Indians. What the trouble is all about the average man knows nothing, and seems to care less. There is no dobut that the Indians have grievances that are more or less justified, but much of the agitation is due to the spirit of unrest and the desire for cavil that have taken hold of humanity since the war. In every country on the surface of the globe just now there are some people who are dissatisfied with things in general or particular—with the exception of Iceland where it is probably too cold to complain.

This spirit of unrest in the people is not a thing to be altogether deplored. It would be a bad thing for Lake Ontario if its waters were to stop flowing into the sea, or if it was not stirred to its depths at times by storms Life on this earth would become as a big stagnant pool if there were no psychological tempests and social, religious or national upheavals. These disturbances are part of the order of things, they keep us alive—or they indicate that we are alive.

It would be a poor and a tame world indeed if there were no dissatisfaction somewhere. If things became static this newspaper would go out of existence. There would be no news, and no advertisements. The peoples of the earth would go jogging along in the old way and life would become a piece of monontonous mechanism in which we would lose all interest. Nobody would do or say anything new, and so there would be no news. Nobody would make or want anything new, and there would be no advertisements.

Movement is the supreme law of life, and without it there is no life. There is nothing fixed in this universe, even the so-called fixed stars are in reality moving at a tremendous rate and are in some instances undergoing violent changes. — There is movement wherever there is life. Death itself is merely another form of movement, for the body undergoes a change—

"Nothing of him that doth fade,
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange."

INCREASE IN POPULATION

Comparative figures of the increases in population in the United States and Canada show that between 1911 and 1921 the population of the Dominion increased a little over one million and a half, while that of the States advanced by nearly fourteen millions. A Maritime paper expresses disappointment at the great disparity between the two increases, but the Ottawa Journal points out that, judged by percentage, Canada shows the biggest advance.

The census return for the United States in 1910 was 91,972,266. In 1920, it was 105,683,108, an increase over 1910 of 18,710,842 or 14.9 per cent.

The census return for the Dominion of Canada in 1911 was 7,206,643. For 1921 the return is 8,788,483, a gain of 1,581,840, or 21.95 per cent.—nearly half as large again a gain proportionately as that of the United States.

STOP AT CROSSINGS

A very sensible law is being enforced in New Jersey in regard to railway crossings. Every motor has been ordered to come to a full stop at all grade crossings in the State to ascertain if it may cross the track safely. Failure to observe this rule will be considered as sufficient cause for the withdrawal of the license to operate a motor car.

But why restrict this order to busses? The enforcement of such a regulation over the entire continent would mean the end of all crossing accidents. Under the present freedom from such restrictions we shall continue to have human beings flung into eternity because some speed-crazed driver is blind and deaf to all danger. Here is something that might be done at once in the way of prohibitive legislation. The loss of time in stopping will be more than made up, for the mad-motorist will not be allowed to cut the time and the lives of other people short by his carelessness.

PASSING COMMENT

Paralysis is said to be creeping over United States' trade as a result of the strikes—it looks to us more like apoplexy.

If these strikes continue to crop up in national life, they will become quite an institution and we will have to establish a Department of Strikes.

Toronto is looking to Wales for its next winter's supply of coal. Only a year or so ago the Welsh miners were on strike and England was looking to America for coal—what strange freaks this strike business plays upon mankind!

Mr. Mikel's idea of bathing "booms" and "dressing-rooms" at Island Park appeals to us from a euphonious as well as a practical stand-point. It at once suggests an aquatic ode, beginning something like this:

"Let us go down to the dressing-rooms,
And there we'll bathe among the booms,
All in the summer afternoons—"

It is a pity "noons" doesn't quite rhyme with "booms", otherwise the last line is not bad.

HERE AND THERE

SACREDNESS OF WORK

There is a perennial nobleness, and even sacredness, in Work. Were he never so benighted, forgetful of his high calling, there is always hope in a man that actually and earnestly works; in Idleness alone is there perpetual despair. Work, never so Mammonish, mean, is in communication with Nature; the real desire to get Work done will itself lead one more and more to truth, to Nature's appointments and regulations, which are truth.

The latest Gospel in this world is, Know thy work and do it. "Know thyself"; long enough has that poor "self" of thine tormented thee; thou wilt never get to "know" it, I believe! Think it not thy business this of knowing thyself; thou art an unknowable individual; know what thou canst work at; and work at it like a Hercules! That will be thy better plan.

It has been written, "an endless significance lies in Work"; a man perfects himself by working. Foul jungles are cleared away, fair seedfields rise instead, and stately cities; and withal the man himself first ceases to be a jungle and foul unwholesome desert thereby.—Carlyle.

THE MILKMAID

Health, content, even beauty, are the results of wholesome work. Old Thomas Overbury compared the milkmaid with the fashionable town lady:—

She doth not, with lying long abed, [illegible] both her complexion and conditions; Nature has taugh[illegible] [illegible]o, immoderate sleep is rust to the soul; she ri[illegible] [illegible]th chanticleer, her dame's cock, and at night [illegible] [illegible] her curfew. In milking a cow, and strai[illegible] [illegible]ugh her fingers, it seems that s[illegible] [illegible]e milk the whiter or sweeter; for never came almond-glove, or aromatic ointment on her palm to taint it. The golden ears of corn fall and kiss her feet when she reaps them, as if they wished to be bound and led prisoners by the same hand that felled them.

Her breath is her own, which scents all the year long of June, like a new-made haycock. She makes her hand hard with labour, and her heart soft with pity; and when winter's evenings fall early (sitting at her merry wheel) she sings a defiance to the giddy wheel of fortune. She doth all things with so sweet a grace, it seems ignorance will not suffer her to do ill, being her mind is to do well. She bestows her year's wages at next fair, and in choosing her garments, counts no bravery in the world like decency. The garden and beehive are all her physic and surgery, and she lives the longer for it.

MY LOVE

Were I as base as is the lowly plain,
And you, my Love, as high as heaven above,
Yet should the thoughts of me, your humble swain,
Ascent to heaven in honour of my Love.
Were I as high as heaven above the plain,
And you, my Love, as humble and as low
As are the deepest bottoms of the main,
Wheresoe'er you were, with you my love should go.
Were you the earth, dear Love, and I the skies,
My love should shine on you like to the Sun,
And look upon you with ten thousand eyes
Till heaven waxed blind, and till the world were done.
Wheresoe'er I am —below or else above you—
Wheresoe'er you are, my heart shall truly love you.

PRESS OPINIONS

THREAT OF FAMINE

(New York Times.)

Disguise it as they may seek to do, the miners' unions are putting themselves in the position of keeping back a necessary of life and by threats of a coal famine endeavoring to coerce the Government. In such a dispute no true American can be in doubt which side to take. He will hold up the hands of the President who speaks and acts in the name of the public welfare.

DO THEY REALLY WALK

(Toronto Globe.)

A contemporary distrusts globe-trotters who walk into cities loaded down with testimonials that they have walked so far in so many years, on a wager, or for some scientific purpose.

It saddens us to have our faith shaken in these knights-errant. The notion of walking around the world strikes a chord of romance in the hearts even of those who do not care to embark on such an adventure. A real, honest walker would see many things that escape the eye of the traveller by train or motor. His freedom is as nearly complete as can be in this world. "Fair and free is the King's highway." To such a one we would not begrudge even a modest collection from lovers of the road. But now a seed of doubt has been sown, and we are sadder, if wiser, because of the dark suspicion of the good faith of the alleged walker. Is there no way of testing his honesty?

WIT AND HUMOR

IN IRELAND

A young fellow wrote to a firm in the south of Ireland which was selling razors at five shillings each. This is the style of his letter:

'Please send me one of your razors for which I enclose P. O. for five shillings.

'P. S.—I have forgotten to inclose the five shillings, but no doubt a firm of your standing will send one.'

They replied:

'We beg to acknowledge your esteemed order, and have pleasure in sending the razor, which we trust you will like.

"P. S.—We have forgotten to inclose the razor, but no doubt a fellow with your cheek won't need one.'—'Stray Shots.'

APPEAL TO ZOOLOGY

A woman recently selecting a hat at a milliner's asked cautiously:

'Is there anything about these feathers that might bring me into trouble with the Bird Protection Society?"

'Oh, no, madam,' said the milliner.

'But did they not belong to some bird?' persisted the lady.

'Well, madam,' returned the milliner, pleasantly, 'these feathers are the feathers of a howl, and the howl, you know, madam, seein' as 'ow fond he is of mice, is more of a cat than a bird.'—London 'Tit-Bits.'

PREMATURE REJOCING

Just because a man is an officer in the territorials, it doesn't mean to say he can ride a horse.

At least that was the case with Col. Knut, of the Tuttleton Terriers. An inspection was to him a nightmare. So when the general commanding came along the colonel sat on his horse uneasily. Then the band started to play.

At the first bang of the drum the colonel's horse started two-stepping. With the fifes he tangoed. The colonel set his teeth and hug on grimly.

The Terriers got mightly excited. Would he stick or not? Anxious to see the fun, they pushed forward until the front rank looked like a football crowd.

'Ease off, there!' yelled the sergeant, angrily.

'No, 'e ain't,' retorted an enthusiastic watcher, 'but 'e will be in a minute!'—Boston 'Globe.'

STEEL FOREMAN GIVES DETAILS TO THE PUBLIC

He Suffered A Complete Breakdown from Overwork But Was Completely Restored by Tanlac and Gains 11 Pounds, Declares Edward White

"I want to give a little history of my case just to let the public know what Tanlac has really done for me," said Edward White, of 27 Caroline St., South, Hamilton, Ont., a well-known foreman for the Dominion Steel Company.

"About two years ago I suffered a complete breakdown brought on by overwork. We were doing a great deal of overtime work, which finally got the best of me and I just had to go to bed and stay there for several days. This left me in such a bad condition that I had no appetite at all, and was so weak that when I walked around, I would just stagger. I took all kinds of medicine but failed to get any better.

"However, Tanlac has built me up until I feel like a different person. I've gained eleven pounds, and am back on the job working as good as ever. I just can't thank Tanlac enough for putting me in such fine condition."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

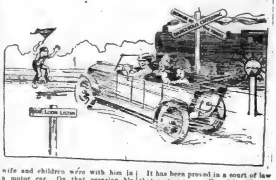
REMARK ABOUT A GIRL HALTS CHURCH SERVICE

St. John, N.B., July 24.—A preliminary hearing in the case of the three Hamilton brothers of Oak Point, charged with disturbing public worship at the Baptist church there, of which Rev. George C. Pincombe is the minister, was held at Brown's Flats before Magistrates Graham and Morrissey, and after six witnesses had been heard the case was adjourned until August 1.

The prosecution produced evidence to show that Rev. Mr. Pincombe was the duly qualified pastor of the Oak Point Church and that by preventing the service the accused committed a violation of sections 199 and 200 of the criminal code. It is also alleged by the prosecution that assault and battery was committed upon the person of the minister. The prosecution has not finished the case.

The case grows out of an alleged objectionable remark made by the pastor to a young woman of the congregation.

SAVING TIME AND WASTING LIVES



EXPERIENCE is a great teacher—sometimes. But it is to be remembered that you may take a horse to water, but cannot always make him drink. Similarly, you may drop a succession of bricks on or about the head of a man suffering from a habit of walking under ladders, but if he has in his head no mental mechanism of the kind that puts cause and effect together, you will still have difficulty in making him realize that walking under ladders is by no means conducive to normal health or long life.

The same thing may be said of the man who habitually crosses railway tracks without giving a thought to trains. To the vast majority of men and women, the sight of a railway track crossing a road brings to the imagination a moving train which they know moves with unhesitating, undeviating surety according to an unsuspendable law of nature. They know that under that law an object of less weight and force than the moving train will, when struck by it, be brushed aside with results more or less disastrous to that object. In most cases the imagination sees what happens if a frail human body attempts to impede the progress of the train, and reasonable people act with due precaution. As an aid to these the railways have adopted all possible safeguards and warnings at level crossings, but there are still human beings whose imagination apparently can never be stirred and who persist in walking into certain disaster as unconcernedly as they would walk into their own homes.

A curious case of this kind was reported from an Ontario town less than a month ago. As an electric radial car approached a crossing, a team driven by a local farmer came along the road towards the track. Passers by saw the radial car coming up and heard its whistle as well as the ringing of the crossing bell that automatically warned of the car's approach. Despite the efforts of a witness to stop him, the farmer drove on until the car struck his horses' heads, killing one and injuring the other, and had it not been for the prompt action of the passerby, the driver would undoubtedly have been killed. When it was all over the farmer admitted having heard the warning bell, but failed to say why he had not stopped in time. The amazing thing about the affair was that less than two years ago the same farmer had an almost identical accident at the same crossing at which time his wife and children were with him in a motor car. On that occasion his wife was injured and his car badly smashed. He then sued the company for damages, but failed to get a judgment as it was shown that he had been extremely careless.

A large percentage of level crossing accidents happen in just this way, and railway men are continually astonished by the persistence with which drivers of motor cars and horses dash over the crossings in utter disregard of the possible approach of trains. It is a fact that an amazingly large percentage of accidents are caused by motor cars hitting moving trains, instead of being hit by them, sure evidence of utter carelessness on the part of their drivers. At Mattawamkeag, in May last, a motor car dashed into the last of 23 cars that were moving over the crossing at the rate of four miles an hour, carrying away the rear steps of the car. At Cote Des Neiges, Que., crossing recently, disregarding the engine's whistle, the ringing of the electric alarm bell, and the frantic waving of a watchman stationed at the crossing, a motor car only managed to get across the tracks, with nothing worse than a broken wheel because the engineer had seen the car approaching from a distance away and had been able to stop his train. As the engineer saw the motor approaching, it must also have been possible for the motorist to see the train. In the same month a woman in broad daylight drove a horse and buggy into the rear coach of a four-car train on a crossing near Woodstock, Ont., and was fortunate enough to escape with her life, although she had to spend some little time in the hospital.

It has been proved in a court of law that motorists equally with railroads are expected to observe caution at level crossings. At Cleveland, Ohio, last winter, a train struck a motor truck, and while no lives were lost, the locomotive was damaged. To set an example to careless drivers the railway company sued for the damages sustained and was awarded judgment for the full amount claimed.

In a recent letter to the Toronto Globe, W. J. Moodey, who is one of the pioneer motorists of Toronto, had the following to say on this subject:

"To the Editor of the Globe: Once again we pick up the morning paper and read of another accident. 'Auto hit by fast express.

"Why will motorists continue to take chances? I contend that no driver should attempt to cross a railroad until he has a clear view. Do not place too much confidence in the bell ringing. It may be out of order.

"Here is an instance: Last summer I was motoring east from Cooksville. As I approached the C.P.R. track near Lambton, a long C.P.R. freight was going west. I stopped; another motor came up behind me. When the freight had passed I continued to wait. The motorist behind sounded the horn and called to me to go ahead. I replied, 'Just wait until I get a clear view of the other track.' Just at this minute along came the Detroit flyer, 40 miles an hour. The motorist got out of the car and said, "My, but we had a narrow escape." I said, "You mean that you had a narrow escape—not me. Safety first."

"It is better to wait two or three minutes at a crossing, than spend two or three months in some hospital, or longer in a cemetery."

SONG

Stay, stay at home, my heart,
and rest;
Home-keeping hearts are happiest,
For those that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble and full of care.
To stay at home is best.

Weary and homesick and distressed
They wonder east, they wander west,
And are baffled and beaten and blown about
By the winds of the wilderness of doubt;
To stay at home is best.

Then stay at home, my heart,
and rest;
The bird is safest in its nest;
O'er all that flutter their wings and fly
A hawk is hovering in the sky;
To stay at home is best.

MARGOT ASQUITH AND PROHIBITION

In a recent letter to the Westminster Gazette, Mrs. Asquith said:

"Since the publication of my 'Impressions of the United States and Canada' in the Evening Standard I have read the speech of Dr. C. W. Saleeby (chairman of the National Birth-Rate Commission, and author of many scientific books and pamphlets), and I regret if any words of mine should convey a wrong impression.

"It was perhaps unwise of me to write at all upon Prohibition as during my short stay I only saw particular kinds of people in the great cosmopolitan cities of the United States, which did not represent more than one small statistical stratum in that great community of 105 millions, to quote Dr. Saleeby. This is quite true. I only could write of what I saw. But I do not 'profess' Temperance: I have advocated it in all my life. If we are to save the youth of this country we shall all have to fight close together with every weapon we possess. The only point I wished to make was that laws should be enforced or amended in such a manner as to make the common sense of the community obey them.

"I understand since I wrote my 'Impressions' that I have been wrong and that though there is a great deal of drink concealed and consumed and even corruption on a considerable scale going on in the United States, it is infinitely less than there was before Prohibition came in. All Dr. Saleeby's health statistics prove this abundantly.

"Although my opinions are not likely to be of interest to anyone, I do not wish to be quoted as 'linking up' with those who think drinking alcohol in moderation is harmless. The enemies of Temperance are those who drink alcohol in moderation more than the habitual drunkards, as the latter disgust everybody. Drinking alcohol can never be harmless."

JANE AUSTEN: NATURAL HISTORIAN.

(By Robt. Lynd.)

Jane Austen has often been praised as a natural historian. She is a naturalist among tame animals. She does not study man (as Dostoevsky does) in his wild state before he has been domesticated. Her men and women are essentially men and women of the fireside.

Nor is Jane Austen entirely a realist in her treatment even of these. She idealises them to the point of making most of them good-looking, and she hates poverty to such a degree that she seldom can endure to write about anybody who is poor. She is not happy in the company of a character who has not at least a thousand pounds. "People get so horribly poor and economical in this part of the world," she writes on one occasion, "that I have no patience with them. Kent is the only place for happiness; everybody is rich there." Her novels do not introduce us to the most exalted levels of the aristocracy. They provide us, however, with a natural history of county people and of people who are just below the level of county people and live in the eager hope of being taken notice of by them. There is more naste snobbishness, I think, in Jane Austen's novels than in any other fiction of equal genius. She, far more than Thackeray, is the novelist of snobs.

She was herself a clergyman's daughter. She was the seventh of a family of eight, born in the parsonage at Steventon, in Hampshire. Her life seems to have been far from exciting. Her father, like the clergy in her novels, was a man of leisure—of so much leisure, as Mr. Cornish reminds us, that he was able to read out Cowper to his family in the mornings. Jane was brought up to be a young lady of leisure. She learned French and Italian and sewing; she was "especially great in satin-stitch." She "excelled at the game of spillikins."

She must have begun to write at an early age. In later life, she urges an ambitious niece, aged twelve, to give up writing till she is sixteen, adding that "she had herself often wished she had read more and written less in the corresponding years of her life." She was twenty-one when she began to write "First Impressions," the perfect book which was not published till seventeen years later with the title altered to "Pride and Prejudice."

FASHION FANCIES

SUMMER MODES IN TOWN

The background of the city itself, to be sure, is always formal, but chiffons and silks, however vivid their designs, possess a certain attractive formality of their own. Indeed, the mode this season is not only more formal, but more elaborate than in the past, with a silhouette tending to absolute flatness in the back, skirts draped in the front, and the waist-line slightly raised. In many day-time gowns, the neck-line opens in a point, higher in back, a reaction against the ubiquitous bateau neckline. Many afternoon gowns have sleeves that are fairly short and are worn with light coloured suede gloves, which are wrinkled half way to the elbow. A cool and charming example of this type of frock is the frock of printed chiffon having long lace sleeves and worn with a large transparent hat, and another frock all black lace over black chiffon, has a softness and grace which only lace can give. By the presence of frocks like these it has been most apparent since society appeared in early spring at the races that the more feminine type of dress holds its own.

Certain Restrictions

Definite limitations in the matter of fabrics are still observed. Chiffons figured and plain, georgette crepe and crepe gauze, plain and figured are to be worn in town, and on an exceptionally hot day one does see a few tub frocks. These muslin dresses should be worn only in the stronger shades, however, such as navy blue, red, and black and white figured, and never in the pale shades, pink, blue or green. This year the possibilities of the cotton frock are vastly increased by the vogue of chintz and toile de Jouy. One especially charming model is of white batiste and cretonne with unusual applique embroidery. Another substitute for the black so long in favour, is white. A white matelasse top-coat, sometimes trimmed with monkey fur, may be worn with a coloured skirt, or a white skirt with a coloured top-coat, and there is frequently a touch of white to be found somewhere about the costume.

thing: you see, you've roused a woman's curiosity; I want to know. Let me send Jane."

Without waiting for his consent, Alison summoned the maid. "Jane," said she, "I want you to go to Mr. Staff's stateroom—"

"Excuse me," Staff interrupted. "Find the steward named Orde and ask him for the bandbox I gave him to take care of. Then bring it here, please."

"Yes, sir," said Jane; and forthwith departed.

"And now— while we're waiting," suggested Alison—"the play, if you please."

"Not yet," said Staff. "I've something else to talk about that I'd forgotten. Manvers, the purser—"

'Good Heavens!" Alison interrupted in exasperation. She rose, with a general movement of extreme annoyance. "Am I never to hear the last of that man? He's been after me every day, and sometimes twice a day. . . . He's a personified pest!"

"But he's right, you know," said Staff quietly.

"Right! Right about what?"

"In wanting you to let him take care fo that necklace—the what-you-may-call-it thing—Cadogan collar."

"How do you know I have it?"

"You admitted as much to Manvers, and Mrs. Ilkington says you have it."

"But why need everybody know about it?"

"Enquire of Mrs. Ilkington." If you wanted the matter kept secret, why in the sacred name of the great god Publicity did you confide in that queen of press agents?"

"She had no right to say anything—"

"Granted. So you actually have got that collar with you?"

"Oh, yes,' Alison admitted indifferently, "I have it."

"In this room?"

"Of course."

"Then be advised and take no chances."

Alison had been pacing to and fro, impatiently. Now she stopped, looking down at him without any abatement of her show of temper.

"You're as bad as all the rest," she complained. "I'm a woman grown, in full possession of my faculties. The collar is perfectly safe in my care. It's here, in this room, securely locked up."

"But someone might break in while you're out—"

"Either Jane is here all the time, or I am. It's never left to itself a single instant. It's perfectly ridiculous to suppose we're going to let anybody rob us of it. Besides, where would a thief go with it, if he did succeed in stealing it—overboard?"

"I'm willing to risk a small bet he'd manage to hide it so that it would take the whole ship's company, and a heap of good luck into the bargain, to find it."

"Well," said the woman defiantly, "I'm not afraid, and I'm not going to be browbeaten by any scare-cat purser into behaving like a kiddie afraid of the dark. I'm quite competent to look after my own property, and I purpose doing so without anybody's supervision. Now have that understood, Staff; and don't you bother me any more about this matter."

"Thanks," said Staff drily; "I fancy you can count on me to know when I'm asked to mind my own business."

"Oh, I didn't mean that—not that way, dear boy—but—"

At this juncture the maid entered with the bandbox, and Alison broke off with an exclamation of diverted interest.

"There! Let's say no more about this tiresome jewel business. I'm sure this is going to prove ever so much amusing. Open it, Jane, please."

In another moment the hat was in her hands and both she and Jane were giving passably good imitations—modified by their admiration of the thing.

Staff was conscious of a sensation of fatigue. Bending over, he drew the bandbox to him and began to examine the wrappings and wads of tissue-paper which it still contained.

"It's a perfect dear!" said Miss Landis in accents of the utmost sincerity.

"Indeed, mum," chimed Jane, antiphonal.

"Whoever your anonymous friend may be, she has exquisite taste."

"Indeed, mum," chanted the chorus.

"May I try it on, Staff?"

"What?" said the young man absently, absorbed in his search. "Oh, yes; certainly. Help yourself."

Alison moved across to the long mirror set in the door communicating with her bedroom. Here she paused, carefully adjusting the hat to her shapely head.

"Now, sir!" she exclaimed, turning.

Staff sat back in his chair and looked his fill of admiration. The hat might have been designed expressly for no other purpose than to set off this woman's imperious loveliness: such was the thought eloquent in his expression.

Satisfied with his dumb tribute, Alison lifted off the hat and deposited it upon a table.

"Find anything?" she asked lightly.

"Not a word," said he—"not a sign of a clue."

"What a disappointment!" she sighed. "I'm wild to know. . . Suppose," said she, posing herself before him,—"suppose the owner never did turn up after all?"

"Hum," said Staff, perturbed by such a prospect.

"What would you do with it?"

"Hum," said he a second time, noncommittal.

"You couldn't wear it yourself; it's hardly an ornament for a bachelor's study. What would you do with it?"

"I think," said Staff, "I hear my cue to say: I'd give it to the most beautiful woman alive, of course."

"Thank you, dear," returned Alison serenely. "Don't forget."

She moved back to her chair, humming a little tune almost inaudibly; and in passing lightly brushed his forehead with her hand—the ghost of a caress.

"You may go, Jane," said she, sitting down to face her lover; and when the maid had shut herself out of the room: "Now, dear, read me our play," said Alison, composing herself to attention.

Staff took up his manuscript and began to read aloud. . .

Three hours elapsed before he put aside the fourth act and turned expectantly to Alison.

Sport Gossip From Many Fields

FRANKFORD WINS FROM TIGER TIRE

Defeated Tigers on Their Own Lot on Saturday Afternoon 10-6

They left the fields, threw down the hoes,
Took up the ball and bat,
And dangled down to Belleville
To hunt the Tiger cat.

Yes, sir, all that the Frankford crew left at home on Saturday afternoon was the hamlet, and a corporal's guard, when they journeyed down to Belleville to take the measure of the Tiger Tire nine. They did take their measure at that, for when the long drawn out battle was finally over, the visitors had the big end of the 10 to 6 score.

The game was slow and listless, featuring much hitting and many errors on both sides. "Soup" Goyer and Herr each made a home run, and Young made a three-bagger in the second inning. A bit of spice was added to the exhibition by the enthusiastic rooting of the visitors (women especially). The Frankford folks certainly back their team up, and speaking of leather lungs, O Henry! you should have heard the big noise. A short fistic exhibition varied the fore part of the game, too although it did not last long. There was a fair sized crowd present.

Frankford have one smart stalwart on their team. His name is Herr (compres?) and he hails from Rochester. He's lucky enough to be a "summer" boy, and smart enough to try and show his team-mates the fine points, and the rough stuff in baseball. Nearly every small town baseball team within ten miles of a summer resort is afflicted by at least one such person on their baseball team each year. While running the bases between first and second, Herr sailed into the Tiger shortstop like a locomotive. Unfortunately, however, he collided with an Irishman, and zowie! O'Connor was on him like a regular Tiger.

Herr can play a good game of ball but the Frankford home brews can show him something yet, when it comes to playing the game as it should be played.

"Chuck" Jeffrey pitched five innings for the Tigers and was then relieved by Whalen, who finished the game. Klein, although quite ill, pitched the whole game for the visitors. Jeffrey had 4 strikeouts, Whalen 1, and Klein 8. Klein passed 5, Whalen 1 and Jeffrey none. None of the pitchers were seen at their best Saturday. The infielders on both teams were loose, and even when they picked off a grounder their throws were either slow, or they were slow in getting their throws away. Some easy rollers got through them too. The outfielders were better, and Sammy Symons, centre fielder for the Tigers, pulled down a bunch of them in good style.

The Tigers got one run in the first inning, and three in the second. Frankford got one in the second and three in the fourth, tieing the score. Then in the fifth, Frankford got 4. Tigers came back in their half and tallied ' and that finished their scoring. Frankford tallied another in the sixth, and Herr pounded out a homer in the last inning, running the score up to ten.

Before leaving for home, the visitors challenged the Belleville Grand Trunks to a battle any day they name. Walt. Gerow and Co. are used to kidding, however.

The game by innings:—

1st Inning.

Klein struck out. Griffiths flied to Platt. Munn hit to centre field. Lawrence grounded to Clapper, who threw Griffiths out at second.—0 runs, 1 hit, 0 errors.

O'Connor walked. Clapper bunted, sending O'Connor to second. Young grounded to Klein, who threw O'Connor out at third. Goyer hit to Griffith, who threw Young out at second, sending Clapper to third. Platt grounded to Klein, who missed, scoring Clapper and sending Goyer to third. Platt stole second. Miles grounded to Griffiths, out at first.—1 run, 1 hit, 1 error.

2nd Inning.

Waddell out at first, rolled to Jeffrey. Herr hit a Texas leaguer to left field. Herr out stealing second. Simmons safe at first on Clapper's error. James safe on Platt's error, Simmons reaching third, James stealing second; Simmons scores. Rose popped to Young.—1 run, 1 hit, 3 errors.

Symons hit safely over second stole second, and took third on an overthrow at first. Cornell walked and stole second. Jeffrey watched the third go by. O'Connor sacrificed Symons home, and Cornell took third. Clapper got first on third baseman's error, Cornell scoring. Young tripled, scoring Clapper. "Soup" Goyer rolled to Klein, out at first.—3 runs, 2 hits, 1 error.

3rd Inning.

DEMPSEY LET SALESMAN DOWN

Traveller Asked Pugilist For His Signature to Tobacco Ad. at Kingston

Perhaps here is one of the secrets of Jack Dempsey's success in the ring.

The story is told around Kingston that a certain Kingston salesman, representing a large Montreal tobacco firm, approached the world's champion pugilist at the Frontenac hotel on Wednesday morning last. He had a proposition to make to the big fellow, and naturally he was nervous of the outcome.

Finally, summoning up courage, he addressed Dempsey as follows, "Will you sign this letter I have here? It states, in part that 'I have tried these new cigarettes, and they are scrumptious,' or words to that effect.'

"Nothing doing," smiled the champion, "and not for any price. If I signed that statement, naturally it would soon get in the papers, and would be broadcasted throughout the States and Canada. How about the youngsters who would then be able to say "Well, if Jack Dempsey breaks his training rules, and smokes cigarettes, I guess I can."

The salesman apeared a bit flabbergasted at this, but held his ground.

"I have signed similar statements in the past," continued Jack, "and for nothing, too, and I will attach my signature to anything within reason. But this is different. I'm afraid the example would be very bad."

With this final word of discouragement, the big man gave the salesman a friendly handshake, and left him to devise some other plan to advertise his firm.

This little incident goes to show that Jack Dempsey is still quite human, and also that he realizes that the boys of America look up to him as one of the greatest of all athletes. Apparently he isn't such a bad fellow after all.—Kingston Whig.

YACHT SKIPPER HAS GOOD HOPES

J. A. Dalton, Skipper of Chiryia II. Satisfied with New Craft

J. A. Dalton, skipper of the new yacht Chiriya II which has been causing so much ink to be spilled in Toronto papers recently, is entirely satisfied with the new craft which took part in the L. Y. R. A. regatta at Prinyer's Cove last week.

Mr Dalton would make no comment on the adverse criticism of the boat which has been appearing recently in the Toronto papers when discussing the races with the Whig on Thursday. He stated that he had read only one or two "squibs" in the papers and he felt that the Toronto newspapermen were merely looking for an argument or catering to the swollen pride of R. C. Y. A. hangers on.

It has already been pointed out that the Toronto newspaper correspondents from Prinyer's Cove were wrong when they said that the Chiriya II. could not stand up to a stiff breeze. That was obvious from the sturdy construction of the boat, her heavy keel of nearly three tons of lead and other features.

Beauty is always a matter of opinion but those who have seen the Chiriya II. skip through the breeze declare that she makes a very pretty sight and her double rudder assures absolute control even in the heaviest weather.

Mr. Dalton pointed out that on Wednesday morning in participating in the races at Prinyer's Cove he was taking only a long shot. The boat had barely arrived when he had to sail for the cove necessary parts of the rigging unobtainable in Kingston were still lacking, the boat was not turned up, the sails had not been properly stretched and to cap it all the races at Prinyee's were run in light breezes for which the Chiriya II was not built.

On the whole, however, Mr. Dalton is completely satisfied with the boat and declared that he is confident that the Chiriya will show its heels to its rivals yet.—Kingston Whig.

CAMP LIFE AT MOIRA LAKE

First Hand News of the Week at Belleville Community Camp

(Special to The Intelligencer)

On arriving at the camp grounds on Monday morning, organization of the camp was started at once. Tents were assigned, six boys to one tent, each tent having a leader. Then at supper time a mass meeting was held and the four baseball teams chosen. It began to rain toward dusk, so after supper all the boys gathered in the pavilion and around a roaring fire of old pine logs in the huge fireplace they had one of the best joys of camping. During the hour around the camp-fire stories were told and the camp program drawn up, which is as follows:

Revielle—7.30 in the morning; dip, wash and clean up.
8 a.m.—Breakfast.
8.30 to 9—Tent inspection.
9 to 11.30—Program of sports, nature study, etc.
11.30 to 12—Swim.
12 to 12.15—Life-saving.
12.30 Dinner. Rest till 2 p.m.
2 to 4.15 p.m.—Free to go anywhere or do anything.
4.15—Swim.
4.30 to 5.30—Ball game.
5.30—Tea.

After tea, ball game, camp-fire, and lights out at 9.30.

Of course no one slept much on the first night in camp and everyone was up bright and early the next morning to begin camp life in earnest.

The weather so far has been ideal, warm days and cool nights, the only hindrance to sleeping is the mosquito pest. They are very plentiful, but are gradually dying off.

A spring-board is installed on the new dock and diving and life-saving classes are held regularly. The baseball schedule is in full blast. The Keeberites and the Skeeters are a tie for first, and the Pie-eaters and the Pikers are a tie for second. On Tuesday a long hike was made around the south shore and the boys cooked dinner there and returned for supper.

And so the time rolls by at Community Camp with everyone enjoying themselves immensely and preparing to enjoy it still more the following week.

Music and Drama

"MORALS OF MARCUS" PROVIDES RARE FILM PLOT

Almost as appealing and whimsical a heroine as Barrie furnished her in Grizel of "Sentimental Tommy", is the role of Carlotta, from Wm. J. Locke's immortal "Morals of Marcus", in which May McAvoy is to be seen on the double feature program at Griffith's tonight to Wednesday.

As a young English girl who lived from infancy until she was grown, in a Turkish harem, and was then suddenly transplanted into the atmosphere of sophisticated London drawing rooms, Miss McAvoy gives an impersonation of rare charm and appreciation of comedy values. William Desmond Taylor directed this Realart offering.

Wisdom thy name is flapper! "The Wise Kid" in the 5 reel Universal special attraction of that name, impersonated by Gladys Walton, is a typical American figure. She is smart—too smart for her own good in the beginning, but that comes out "in the wash"—and pretty according to dance hall standards, "The Wise Kid" is the second feature offering on the same program which also include a very amusing 2 reel Harold Lloyd comedy.

GOYER HIT HARD BY GALT

Galt, July 22.—"Chuck" Henry's bad throw to second to catch George Himes stealing, the ball going to deep centre gave Galt its winning run over Guelph here on Saturday by 6 to 4 in a most sensational finish to a great "comeback by the locals. The game started in a drizzling rain, with "Lefty" Goyer opposing Wilbur Kress. The latter found it difficult handling the wet ball, and issued several walks in the early stages and these, with a couple of errors and two timely singles by O'Connor, sent the visitors off to an early start, with the score 5-1 in their favor at the end of the third.

The Terriers were "touching up" Goyer's offerings, but without much success, in the early stages, while, with the rain letting up in the fourth, Kress settled away, and, regaining his control pitched airtight ball. Adding their second run in the sixth, the locals forced Goyer to beat it to the showers in the seventh when they garnered enough hits to count three runs and tie the score Henry was rushed to the rescue, and then the break came in the ninth.

ENGLISH ARE GOOD EMIGRANTS

London, July 24.—Interviewed by a newspaper in regard to Prof. Caldwell's letter to the press wherein Prof. Caldwell declared that only a very small percentage of Englishmen are really fit for life on the land in Canada and that the average Englishman often seems somewhat inferior and took years to discard his "side" and amateurishness. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner, said the only kind of people wanted in Canada to-day were those who could settle on the land.

It was no insult, said Mr. Larkin, to an English town dweller to say that if he took up farming in Canada he might possibly be a failure. The English country dweller was not a failure.

Col. Obed Smith of the Canadian immigration department pointed out that the records of Canada were full of instances of Premiers of provinces, lieutenant governors, merchant princes and bankers who had immigrated from England in youth. The immigration figures showed Englishmen were not comparative failures. A certain number of Englishmen failed to adapt themselves immediately on reaching Canada, but once they readjusted themselves they took their proper place with the rest.

OIL KING ADMITS FEW

John D. Rockefeller is the Despair of Newspaper Men

Tarrytown, N. Y., July 23.—Is John D. Rockefeller, passing the Indian summer of his life on his vast estate in the Pocantico Hills, at last letting down the barriers he has always raised against photographers and reporters?

This is a question which has been interesting the newspaper profession ever since the world's richest man, on a recent Sunday, permitted camera men to snap him to their heart's content after they had consented to follow him into church for service.

Mr. Rockefeller, who bears the reputation of being one of the most camera-shy men in America may be becoming more lenient in his attitude toward photographers, but as yet he has given no indication of taking reporters into his confidence.

An effort to interview Mr. Rockefeller on the recent occasion of his 84th birthday anniversary—made, as usual, through a third party representing the household—brought the response "Impossible." As no reporters as yet have succeeded in storming the well-guarded gates of the Rockefeller home, the modern Croesus goes uninterviewed.

Even to his fellow townsmen the little man, slight of frame, who appears in midsummer in leather waistcoat, overcoat and muffler, is very much of an enigma.

Tarrytown points out to each visitor the home of John D. Rockefeller, urges the visitor to go up and see where Rockefeller lives, talks constantly about Rockefeller—but rarely sees him itself.

Very seldom do Tarrytowners get inside the gates which guard the big home in the hills. Once in awhile they see John D. come downtown and sit in his machine while a chauffeur goes into a bank or a store—but Tarrytown almost never talks to its richest citizen. He comes and goes—there is excitement while he is downtown and discussion afterwards and that is all of Tarrytown's claim on its most famous citizen.

Ever since the oil king celebrated his 84th birthday, Tarrytown has been seething over the question of who is its oldest citizen. There is no question as to its most famous.

An ancient who sits in front of the big hardware store, just around the corner from the station, concedes first place to John D. The ancient admits he is only 83.

But an Italian has asserted his grandfather is 88—and there is a farmer who lays claim to 90. Still, even in the face of odds Tarrytown stands loyally behind its prominent citizen, and announces to the world that its oldest citizen today is none other than the man who made oil famous.

But the town maintains that Mr. Rockefeller is still a youngster in spirits.

"Any man who plays golf as frequently as he does," began one citizen, when he was interrupted with a question as to whether John D's private links were regular size.

"Certainly it is, but John D. goes around it slowly" replied the citizen, but another Tarrytowner broke in with a denial.

"It is not. It is only about four holes of a normal course. And John D. takes three hours to make two of 'em."

Last but not least, in Tarrytown's viewpoint towards its leading citizen is the tradition of the dimes, the day of days for boys and girls. Spasmodically, John D. Rockefeller gives 10 cent pieces away to children. How did it start?

Three stories are current:

Number one—Three boys, many years ago, walked up the hill, climbed the stone wall, went up to the porch and saw Mr. Rockefeller. They asked him for a dime apiece—and got it. Since then, it is said, the oil magnate had held his yearly party.

Number two—A boy was standing downtown when the Rockefeller machine drove up. A package was dropped out. The boy picked it up and handed it to Mr. Rockefeller personally. The boy got a dime, and John D. Rockefeller got an inspiration which he has followed ever since.

Number three—A lad was lost. He wandered onto the Rockefeller mystery links. The oil king saw him. He took him into the house, gave him a dime and sent him home. And the 10 cent party sprang from that.

Whatever the cause, "Dime Day" has become to the youth of Tarrytown a day apart, ranking with Christmas and the Fourth of July.

WOMAN TOO WEAK TO WALK

Now Works Nine Hours a Day.—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Strength

Union Village, Vt.—"I was weak and nervous and all run-down. I could not walk across the floor without resting and I had been that way for weeks. I saw your advertisement in the paper and after taking one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I felt the good it was doing me and I took seven more in all. Before I finished I was able to work nine hours a day in a steam laundry. I cannot say too much in favor of your medicine. I trust all sick and suffering women will take it. It has been two years since I took it and I am strong and well."—Mrs. L. A. GUIMANN, Union Village, Vermont.

This is only one of such letters we are continually publishing showing what Lydia E. Pinkham has done for women, and whether you work or not Mrs. Guimann's letter should interest you.

Many women get into a weak, nervous run down condition because of ailments they often have. Such women should take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at the first sign of trouble. Good health is necessary and this splendid medicine will help you to keep it.

POWER SHORTAGE STILL HOLDS UP OUR INDUSTRIES

re Ranney Falls. Factories here again closed down. Financial and business situation most serious.

J. O. Herity.

The following telegrams passed on Saturday between the Belleville Chamber of Commerce and the Hydro Electric Commission:

Belleville, July 22.

Sir Adam Beck,
Chairman, Hydro Electric Power Commission,
190 University Ave.,
Toronto, Ont.

Your refusal to sign lease or arbitrate differences regarding Ranney Falls power severely criticized at meeting Belleville Manufacturers and Directors Chamber of Commerce this afternoon. Your attitude regarded as most unreasonable. Meantime manufacturers and workmen suffer severe financial losses. Why not connect Ranney Falls immediately and arbitrate differences. Power shortage caused vital business losses here two years ago. Several important newly located industries threaten to leave our city at once. Manufacturers stated they would enter action for damages against Hydro.

(Sgd.) J. O. Herity,
Manager, Belleville Chamber of Commerce.

In response to his message, the manager of the Chamber of Commerce received the following telegram from Sir Adam Beck:

J. O. Herity,
Manager, Chamber of Commerce,
Belleville.

This Commission is doing everything possible to effect a settlement with Dominion Government re Ranney Falls development. We have agreed to appointment of J. B. MacRae as independent engineer to report on situation. Hope to have conference with him at Ottawa, Monday, with view to bringing about early settlement it must be borne in mind that limit of available power supply in this district is not many years distant owing to natural growth in use of power and a larger supply must be made available in near future.

Adam Beck.

The manufacturers of Belleville are extremely anxious that this longstanding dispute between the Dominion Government and the Hydro should be brought to a head. Arbitration, they regard as the most feasible plan to secure immediate action. The belief was expressed that a tentative agreement could be signed by the two parties of the dispute by which Ranney Falls could be connected up with the Hydro System at once, and immediate relief obtained, and insurance guaranteed against future interruptions and losses.

At Ranney Falls, the Hydro Commission has established a new power plant costing one and a quarter million dollars. This plant could have been connected up and started as long ago as June 1st. had this dispute not existed between the Hydro and the Department of Railways and Canals, and 10,000 additional H. P. would have been available for the manufacturers, assuring an abundant supply for a long period of time to come. But as it is, with this dispute dragging and waiting for the determination of their respective rights by the courts, it may be many months before a settlement is reached, unless a more accommodating method is pursued than has been the case up to the present time.

FLYING POLICE ARREST IN AIR

New York Police Department to Stop Aviators Flying Over City

New York, July 24.—Arrests in the air are threatened by the New York Police Department if aviators don't stop violating a recently passed city ordinance. The ordinance prohibits aviators from flying over the city at a height lower than 2,000 feet. For the last month, according to a statement issued at police headquarters complaints have been coming in that aviators are flying low over the ball parks and other places.

Deputy Commissioner Rodman Wanamaker, who is in charge of the aviation division of the police department, is in Europe, but his assistant, Inspector John F. Dwyer, has ordered the reserve to be ready for duty. Captains of all precincts have been ordered to instruct patrolmen to keep a weather eye skyward. If they see a plane which in their judgment of distance is flying below the sky limit they are to flash police headquarters. Headquarters at once is to order a patrolman of the aviation reserve to take the air and pursue the violator. The orders say "using force if necessary."

The aviation reserve has two air ports, one at Eighty-fifth Street and the North River and the other at Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn.

MAD ESKIMO AMUCK SLAYS WHITE MEN

Was in Police Station Charged With Killing Five Eskimos

Edmonton, July 24.—Word of the murder in the far north of two white men—Constable Boak, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and G. Binder, Hudson Bay factor, by an Eskimo last March, has been received here.

The Eskimo was incarcerated in the police station on Herschel Island in charge of Constable Boak, charged with the killing of five of his countrymen.

During one night in March, it is reported by another mounted policeman who had reached the city, the Eskimo secured a rifle and shot Boak while he was sleeping. Binder came along shortly after the murder and the Eskimo shot him dead and effected his escape.

The Eskimo then left the station and made his way back to the tribe, informing them that he had killed two whites and might as well do for the remainder of them that were on the to R. C. M. P. headquarters and within twenty-four hours of committing the double murder he was again a prisoner.

BRITISH ARMY TO USE RADIO IN THE FIELD

London, July 24.—Radio instead of cable telephones will be used in trainin infantry divisions of the army, Lord Cavan, Chief of the Imperial General Staff, announced today while speakin at the Eton officers' trainin camp. This was his firm intention, Lord Cavan declared, owin to the fact that thousands of men were killed during the war while laying telephone wires. It was also believed that the use of radio in this manner by the army would encourage its general use.

Sir Adam Returns With Falls Lease In His Pocket

Dispute Over Ranney Falls is Settled After Conference at Ottawa—Work on Falls to be Completed Immediately — Power Shortage Problem to be Solved

DAM NUMBER 9 ALSO TO BE LEASED

While the electric power situation in this city to-day did not show any great sign of improvement the outlook is now promising for the immediate future, owing to the fact that a settlement has been reached in a dispute which arose between Sir Adam Beck and the department of Railways and Canals at Ottawa, in reference to obtaining certain power on the Trent Canal.

There is now every indication that power will be forth-coming and its advent will be hailed with delight by the manufacturing concerns of this city that have had considerable idle time during the past few days owing to lack of power.

Ottawa, July 25.—As a result of conferences concluded late yesterday between Sir Adam Beck, chairman of the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, and Major G. A. Bell, deputy minister of railways and canals, agreement has been reached in the dispute between the department and the Hydro in the Welland and Trent districts. Sir Adam returned to Toronto last last night with a lease of Ranney's Falls for submission to the commission. The conference, at which the difficulties concerning power rental charges and other matters were cleared up, lasted for more than four hours, and was preceded by a preliminary conference between Major Bell and Hydro officials which occupied [illegible] morning.

A joint statement on the conference says:

"At a prolonged conference between officials of the department of railways and canals and representatives of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, in the office of the deputy minister of railways and canals, an agreement was reached with regard to all matters in dispute between the department and the Hydro in the Welland and Trent districts.

"A lease of Ranney's Falls was finally decided upon and has been taken to Toronto to be submitted to the Hydro Electric Commission at a meeting to be held in the course of a day or two, and it is fully expected that the work of completing the development at Ranney's Falls will be started immediately.

"In the meantime arrangements have been made by which the Hydro Electric Commission are to make application for a lease of dam number 9, the last remaining waterpower development of importance in the lower Trent district."

CIVIC GRANT TO MEMORIAL HOME

G.W.V.A. Ask for the $10,000 Voted by Electors for Home

At the City Council meeting on Monday evening a communication was read from the Great War Veterans Association of the city, stating that the Hub block on Front street had been purchased for a memorial home and asked that the $10,000 voted by the electors of the city toward this project be paid.

Ald. Ostrom in answer to an enquiry as to where the money was coming from stated that debentures for same would be issued.

The following motion relative to the matter was unanimously adopted:

Ald. Ostrom moved, seconded by Ald. French that we grant the request of the trustees of the memorial home fund for the $10,000 voted by the people to the Great War Veterans Associations for the purchase of a memorial home, that it be paid to them at once, they having now arranged for purchase of a building for this purpose.—Carried.

MINISTERS ARE "BABOON BOOSTERS"

Says New York Preacher—Should Found "Church of the Apes"—Attacks Evolutionists.

New York, July 24.—The Very Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, dean of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, was attacked for his theology by the Rev. Dr. George W. McPherson, a Baptist, in a sermon last evening at Old Tent Evangel, across the street from the Cathedral at Amsterdam Avenue and 110th Street. In the course of his sermon he said:

"Dean Robbins and Dr. Fosdick in repudiating Genesis repudiate the New Testament. Alll such teachers, if consistent in the propagation of this pagan evolution theory, should establish a new church for evolutionists. They should name their church, not the Cathedral of St. John the Divine or the First Presbyterian Church, but they should name it 'A Church for the Descendants of Apes,' for the trail of these men leads not to Bethlehem's manager or Calvary's cross, or the open grave, or the coming triumphant Christ, but to the wilderness. One should naturally gravitate to his own company, and if he is truly ethical, get his own crowd to pay his salary and not, leech-like, engraft himself and his pagan ideas upon Christian churches built upon the inerrant Word of God.

"Those who profess beastly ancestry should form churches of their own, and the sooner this is done the better for all concerned. Those who claim to bear the mark of the beast cannot be in full fellowship with those who know they are made in the image of God.

"If these evolutionists, these botanical baboon boosters to which Dean Robbins and Dr. Fosdick belong are consistent, they will see that they form new churches, and that above the doors of such there appear in large letters, 'Only those permitted to worship here who believe themselves to be of beastly origin. The religion that dominates Dean Robbins and Dr. Fosdick, as above faith, will never win the world to God."

CATTLE BAN IS NOT YET LIFTED

Premature Rejoicing in Toronto at News of British Commons' Action

MERELY AN OPINION

Chamberlain Says There Will be no Legislation This Session

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Toronto, July 24.—The publication of the news that the British House of Commons has carried a resolution supporting the withdrawal of the embargo against Canadian cattle is apt to be construed as tantamount to the actual lifting of the embargo. That is a mistake. The resolution was merely an expression of opinion invited by the Government, but not necessarily binding the government to action. However it is very likely that bill carrying into effect opinion of House will be brought down.

(Canadian Press Cable.)

London, July 25.—With regard to the Government's action on the embargo, in view of the vote of the Commons Mr. Austen Chamberlain today said that he had not time to consult with the Cabinet on the matter and he frankly declared that he did not think there was any prospect of legislation being passed this session to remove the embargo.

London, July 25.—The House of Commons, after having rejected an amendment to a motion removing the embargo on the importation of Canadian store cattle, agreed to the bill without division.

Canadian cattle up to the present have been admitted into the country only for slaughter at the port of entry.

The Cabinet and the political parties were so divided on the question of removing the embargo that the Government permitted the House to have a free vote on the question.

The vote [illegible] was 247 to 131.

Canadians Hear Debate

From the Distinguished Strangers' Gallery of the House of Commons several prominent Canadians listened to the debate on the Canadian cattle embargo question, which opened yesterday afternoon. Among them were the Canadian High Commissioner, P. C. Larkin, P.C., Sir George Foster, N. W. Rowell and R. B. Bennett of Calgary.

The Peers' Gallery contained the Marquis of Lincolnshire, who came early and went away early. He never at any time had more than three Peers to keep him company.

Ministers Withdraw

The debate opened immediately after the question period, the opening being signalized by the immediate withdrawal, amid a babel of chattering, of two-thirds of the members then present on the Ministerial bench. Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, Colonial Secretary, and Sir A. Griffith Boscawen, Minister of Agriculture, were the only prominent figures present in the first hour. H. H. Asquith, former Premier, and present Leader of the Independent Liberals; Lord Robert Cecil and J. R. Clynes, Labor Leader, lolled in front of the Opposition bench, but dropped out pretty soon, to reappear again later. Bonar Law had an inconspicuous back-bench seat, but he, too, left early.

A STRANGE RADIOGRAPHIC PHENOMENON IN BELLEVILLE

Marvelous Coincidence in Editorial Writing—Two Editors Think, Speak and Punctuate alike—"A Wireless Chain" Indeed!

It has been said that all great minds think alike, but it is not often that they put their thoughts in exactly the same words. Such a coincidence of expression has occurred at last, however, and rright here in Belleville.

It is generally known that there are two newspapers in this city, and presumably, two editors. The editor of The Daily Intelligencer spends part of his time writing editorials, and one of these appeared on July 15, entitled "A Wireless Chain."

By some telepathic or radiographic process the brilliant ideas contained in this original editorial were transmitted to the receptive brain of the editor of The Daily Ontario, who not only caught the ideas but transcribed the article word for word in his editorial columns yesterday, exactly nine days after it appeared in The Intelligencer. The marvelous thing about it is that the very punctuation is identical. The two editorials are here printed in parallel columns for purposes of comparison:

A WIRELESS CHAIN

The British Empire is to be encircled by a wireless chain. The Imperial Government has decided to erect in England a station for direct communication with India, South Africa and Australia. Canadian Government experts are expected to arrive in England shortly for the purpose of discussing Canada's participation in the scheme.

Such a scheme, while it is instituted primarily for commercial purposes, appeals strongly to the imagination, and should send a patriotic thrill through the heart of every Britisher scattered over the Empire. With the perfecting of the wireless telephone the entire planet will eventually become a great whispering gallery, and the actual voices of long absent and far distant friends will be brought to our very ears. Then shall be brought to pass the scriptural prediction—"There shall be no more sea."

The Bylaw was passed through its various stages after some members had spoken on it and it was understood the special Committee would report to the Council as soon as possible any transactions that take place.

"MAC", A FINE COLLIE, LOSES LIFE IN FIRE

Stoney Creek, Ont., July 25.—In the Stoney Creek fire yesterday one life was lost—that of "Mac", a collie dog belonging to McClung brothers. The dog had been running in and out of the burning building until finally, confused by the smoke and fire, he leaped back into the flames, where a chimney fell on him. His owner, Mr. Fred McClung, said in sorrowful tones: "He was a good watchdog. He had more friends in Stoney Creek than anybody I know."

SPEND MILLIONS ON CHEWING GUM

Challenge Issued to Presbyterians by Foreign Missions' Secretary.

LUXURY STATISTICS

Toronto, July 25.—In issuing a foreign mission appeal to the Presbyterians of all Canda, which will at once be forwarded to the conveners of all Synods and Presbyteries in the Dominion, Rev. R. P. McKay, General Secretary for Foreign Missions, yesterday afternoon pointed out that, although the church appeal was so urgent, Canadians last year spent $1,600,000 on face powder, alone: $3,680,000 on chewing gum, $61,000,000 on cigars and cigarettes, $28,000,000 on soft drinks and $13,000,000 on amusements in just one of the smaller Canadian cities. In contrast to this Presbyterians of Canada could only spare six cents per week per member in aid of the work of the demonination in the Dominion and abroad.

It was also pointed out by other church officers that, although one church congregation alone in the United States could raise $700,000 for a new church plant, all the Presbyterians in Canada put together could not prevent a $300,000 deficit in mission work.

Dr. McKay, in his appeal, draws attention to the fact of the General Assembly of the Church having accepted responsibility for the welfare of 14,000,000 souls in its ten foreign mission fields. Refusal to adequately carry on the work, he declares, would be a breach of faith

At the end of the church year, 1920, there was a deficit of $63,182, which was increased at the end of the church year, 1921 to $166,661.

In asking "What remains?" Dr. McKay states shall we "Cut the work? Close up stations? Recall missionaries? The board has not done that. They do not think the Presbyterian Church in Canada wants them to do that. The board will not do it until they receive a mandate from the General Assembly."

GERMANS ARE NOT BANKRUPT

"Richest Country in the World" says New Yorker Just Arrived from Europe

ALL "CAMOUFLAGE"

Germany is Overloaded With Goods to Flood World Markets

(Special to The Intelligencer by J. Harry Smith.)

Quebec, July 25.—An interesting passenger who came out, a cabin passenger on the Metagama today, is Mr. Alfred E. Henderson, a former New York journalist, and founder and president of Henderson's School of Oratory, New York, and now Paris.

"Germany," said Mr. Henderson," is the richest country in Europe today. She could meet her obligations to the Allies if she wished. The depreciation of the mark is a part of her camouflage to blind the financial experts who have gone into Germany to confer with the Berlin financiers. She is overloaded with manufactured goods with which she intends to flood the European and American as well as Canadian markets. With large manufacturing interests in all countries she is quickly shipping her goods into Norway with the object of making that country a port of export to European and American markets.

"And to give you an idea of the cheapness of her manufactured goods I will say that I bought twelve safety razors in Holland for three kronen or sixty cents of our money, that came from Germany.

"France and Belgium have their right argument. They know the Germans, their deception and their lying deceit in regard to Germany's economic situation and her ability to pay. There is only one way to settle the political and economic conditions in Europe and the nations must cooperate to bring about readjustment, and when this is accomplished in a practical, common sense manner, the United States will join in with the co-operation to reach a settlement which will adjust the trade and commerce of the world to assure peace and the march back to normal."

In Dublin early today two men were killed when an armed band attempted to raid a public house.

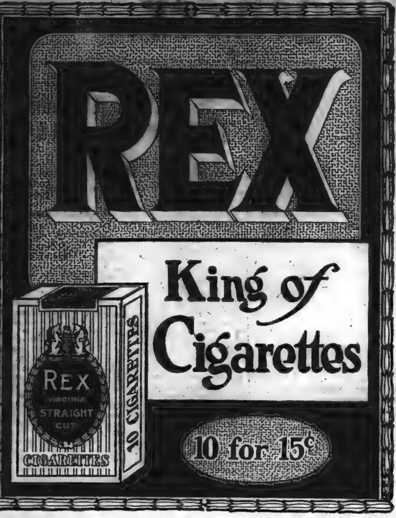
GOLD CIGAR BOX COMES BACK

Stolen From Charles M. Schwab Comes Back on Caronia After Two Years in Berlin

New York, July 25.—A gold cigar box weighing twenty-four ounces, presented to Charles M. Schwab by the City of Baltimore, was stolen by a German footman two years ago. It came back on the Cunarder Caronia in the care of T. W. Cummer, the European representative of the Duff Manufacturing Company of Pittsburgh, to whom it was delivered in London by Henry D. Megary of the Chicago Pneumatic Tool Company, who received the box in Germany.

The gold box, which bears the marks of the vicissitudes it has passed through since leaving Mr. Schwab's study on Riverside Drive, including a trip in a sailor's kitbag and a sojourn in the lockers of a German "fence," is inscribed "A Gift of the City of Baltimore to C. M. S." and is engraved with a picture of the plant at Sparrow Point, Md., the harbor of Baltimore, and the coat-of-arms of the city. The cost of the box is put at $5,000 and it is estimated that twice that sum has been expended during the last year and a half in tracing it.

News of the theft came by a cable message from Berlin on Nov. 29, 1920, which stated that the box had been found among a quantity of loot seized by the police of that city. The owners of the shop where the gold box was found had paid 1,500 marks for it to two seamen from an American steamship who were later arrested in New York but were afterwards discharged, as Mr. Schwab would not appear against them.



PARLEYS MAY CLOSE STRIKE

In Meantime, Government May Take Over Operation of Roads

Chicago, July 24.—Any new Federal move to end the railway strike probably will come from Washington. The United States Railroad Board has finally abandoned its peace efforts.

Ben. W. Hooper, Chairman of the Board, returning to Chicago from his conference with President Harding on Saturday, tonight answered that "no further action by the Labor Board is in contemplation at this time."

Probable Federal action, perhaps through the section of the Interstate Commerce Act, will be to authorize the Government to assume control of and operate railways in an emergency. Reports are that a peace parley, Baltimore and Ohio railroad officials are to have with union leaders to-morrow, may lead the way to a general strike settlment by separate agreements on roads.

POPULATION GAINS IN OLD COUNTRY

Lowest Death Rate Since 1862—New Record in Births

London, July 24.—That the year 1920 supplied some record vital statistics is shown by the annual report of the Registrar-General of England and Wales.

It states that births totalled 957,782, a new high record. Deaths numbered 466,130, which is at the rate of 12.4 per thousand of population. This is the lowest death rate since 1862, when the population was only half that of 1920.—The infant mortality was the lowest recorded, the rate being eighty per thousand births.

Marriages totalled 379,982, which is also a record. The natural increase in population was 491,652, the largest ever recorded.

Divorces were nearly three times the number of any year before 1919 The death rate from tuberculosis was considerably below any previous year, while deaths resulting from measles almost doubled. According to the report, deaths from cancer increased.

GOVERNMENT BY COMMISSION

(By Special Correspondent.)

Ottawa, July 24.—"Government by Commission" was a charge that Premier King and his supporters persistently hurled at the late government. Mr. King has been in power six months and in that brief period has delegated the solution of two important problems to Royal Commissions that he in opposition so strongly condemned. For five years a parliamentary committee annually solved the problems of soldiers' civil re-establishment. The first attempt of the new government on this quesion ended in disaster. No doubt the soldiers' representatives were convinced that a change of government had brought a change in sentiment into authority in parliament and that there was an ill-concealed hostility where formerly there was friendly desire to assist. Finally in disgust they demanded a Royal Commission indicating their lack of confidence in the good faith of the government. Mr. King weakened and in granting the Commission practically admitted that his party had forfeited the confidence of the overseas men. Another instance of repudiation of policy was in the case of the B. C. fisheries. For some years there has been a steady decline in the salmon fisheries on the Pacific Coast and many rivers have ceased to be productive. Instead of having the departmental experts deal with the situation, Mr. King again appointed a Royal Commission composed principally of Nova Scotia politicians who know nothing of British Columbia fisheries Three Liberal members from Nova Scotia, Messrs. Duff, Martel and Chisholm, will have a summer's junketing at the expense of the country. All are disappointed in patronage and the disappointment is to be salved by this free trip at the country's expense. Under the late government the war and reconstruction brought many problems and there were many reasons why the government should seek outside assistance in their solution. Those periods are past but the new government continues a practice which they condemned when excusable and now practice when inexcusable.

The Washington Junket

Premier King's trip to Washington would be amusing to the Canadian people if it were not so ludicrous and farcical. For over a century the Rush-Bagot treaty has preserved peace between United States and Canada. It has proven to be the greatest instrument for the peace that has ever existed between two countries and it is this great bond that Premier King would disrupt and endanger. With great domestic problems to be solved, he has, without excuse, busied himself in an international compact that has stood the test of a century. The Montreal Gazette, not unfriendly to the government, declares that his mission is "a piece of gratuitous folly." The Gazette describes Mr. King's statement as "pure nonsense" and continues with the following warning:

"The Rush-Bagot agreement has not lapsed. It continues to have the same binding force as a century ago, suffices for its purpose, and cannot be strengthened by any new compact. Why open the subject? No one in Canada contemplates conquering the United States by force of arms, and we are sure no one in the United States proposes to subdue Canada. Has the Washington disarmament conference gone to the Premier's head, that he desires to make a new treaty with our neighbors? What is there to disarm? A hundred-ton vessel, and a ten pounder gun. Such a ship and such equipment might serve the sportsmen in duck hunting, but surely are not an important menace. There is nothing to disarm, but when Mr. King begins to open the subject of international relations, when he stirs sleeping dogs, the danger is that the end of the negotiations may find the lion and the lamb peacefully reclining,—with the lamb inside the lion."

The Farmers' Sun is equally severe on Mr. King's unwarranted interference but does not take an equally serious view of his act as it says, but the importance of his mission can be estimated "when it is pointed out he is taking with him that other renowned statesman Hon. George P. Graham."

Mr. King is in Washington not to promote trade or any useful agreement but to interfere with an agreement that has given Canada and the Unit States a 3,000 mile international boundary without a fort or a warship.

ARABS ARE PLEASED WITH RECENT PLEDGE

Resolution Against Balfour's Declaration Does Not Please Zionists, However

Jerusalem, July 25.—The inhabitants of Palestine, both Moslem and Christian, are immeasurably pleased that the British House of Lords recently passed a motion disapproving the Balfour declaration of 1917. The native press is jubilant; many pan-Arab demonstrations have been held, and the local cable office has been swamped with congratulatory messages from Arabs to the House of Lords.

The Balfour declaration pledged the erection of a Jewish homeland in Palestine. The resolution opposing it, which was passed by a vote of 60 to 29, set forth that "The mandate for Palestine in its present form is unacceptable to this House, because it directly violates the pledges made by His Majesty's Government to the people of Palestine in the declaration of November, 1918, and is as at present framed, opposed to the sentiments and wishes of the great majority of the people of Palestine, that, therefore, its acceptance by the Council of the League of Nations should be postponed until such modifications have been effected therein as will comply with pledges given by His Majesty's Government."

The Arabs regard this incident as a great victory. "It is the bounden duty," says an Arab call to a demonstration of celebration, "of all of us to set ofrth our gratitude to the House of Lords for having proved to the world that God and justice still live in Great Britain."

The Zionists are correspondingly disappointed. They have cabled strong protests to London. The chairman of the Zionist organiaztion here said to the Associated Press:

"All our hopes have been shattered on the rocks of political expediency. If the House of Commons follows the lead of the House of Lords, then Jews of the world will have been dealt a more staggering blow than that administered by the Emperor Hadrian 1800 years ago, when his persecutions brought about the last dispersion of the Jewish race."

NEGRO MEMBER FOR U.S. CONGRESS?

Outcome of Fight in New York District Awaited With Interest

New York, July 25.—For the first time in nearly a quarter of a century the United States Congress may have a Negro member after March 4 next. A concerted effort is reported among Negro leaders in the 21st District embracing the greatest colored belt in the city and a part of the fashionable Riverside Drive section, to nominate one of their own race in the Republican primary.

Representative Martin C. Ansorge, the present member from that district, is a candidate for renomination. The colored men mentioned as his probable opponents are James Weldon Johnson, secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of the Colored People, and William H. Ferris, editor of the Negro World. Both are reported as having strong backing among members of their own race as well as some white politicians. It is not likely that both will enter the primary, as this would insure Ansorge's renomination. An effort will be made to concentrate the Negro vote behind one of them.

There are approximately 35,000 Negro voters in the 21st District, which is more than 40 per cent. of the total vote of the district.

Ansorge achieved considerable newspaper prominence recently when he named a Negro youth for the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis. The boy later failed in the entrance examinations and was unable to qualify.

George N. White was the last Negro representative in Congress. He came from North Carolina and served in the 55th and 56th Congresses, retiring in 1899. There have been two Negro senators, both from Mississippi, and each serving during the reconstruction period. These were Hiram R. Revels and B. K. Bruce. Bruce was a former slave, whose master educated him. Revels was a minister and organized two Negro regiments in Baltimore at the outbreak of the Civil War. No northern state has ever sent a Negro to Congress, and the outcome of the fight in the 21st New York District is being watched with great interest by politicians.

THE PERFECT HOUSEKEEPER

By JANE OSBORN

(©, 1920, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Three times within the two blocks that Doctor Andover had walked down College street from his house had he been greeted with the smiling congratulations of some neighbor or other. If he had not already been sure of his blessing in having secured the services of Mrs. Hildegarde Taylor as housekeeper he could not but have been after these felicitations.

"She is such a perfect housekeeper," Professor Ogden's wife had cooed. "Up to the day he died old Mr. Mergan had her tea biscuits every day of his life. He couldn't get along without them—and such pies!"

"Yes, indeed," agreed Doctor Andover, somewhat embarrassed but duly grateful to providence for having showered such abundant blessings on his shoulders.

"And she's so economical, too," Mrs. Partridge had said after offering the young bachelor president of the college her felicitations over the advent of Mrs. Taylor in his home. "No cause for your complaining now over the high cost of living."

"No, indeed," smiled Doctor Andover and, as he neared the corner where dwelt old Doctor Forbes, dean of his faculty, the fragrance of juicy beefsteak broiling in the Forbes kitchen came to him. He had had supper that night from tea biscuits, tea, sardines in jelly and prune whip. That as nearly as he could remember was all there had been to it.

Helen Forbes, not extraordinarily young or extraordinarily slender, but radiant and magnetic, only daughter and housewife for Doctor Forbes, opened the door for the young professor. The rest of the college town had got used to Helen. Of course, she was quite a beauty—but, then, she was only Helen Forbes.

Nice girl, too, and a few years before freshmen every year had gone quite silly over her; but she was a little too old for students now. But Doctor Andover had not quite got used to the radiance of her, and there were times when he would have more eagerly gone to spend an evening with old Doctor Forbes in discussing college plans and policies had it not been for Helen. She was a little disturbing. She didn't quite seem to belong to the little old college town.

On this occasion, however, it was necessary that he consult with Doctor Forbes. The tempting aroma of beefsteak grew even more tempting as Helen Forbes opened the door for him.

An apron protected her light summer frock, and she led Doctor Andover rather breezily into the dining room. "We are having dinner late," she said. "Dad's been working on examination books and didn't want to be disturbed until seven. Now, it's planked steak supper. Dad's so fond of it. You don't mind coming right out, do you? And perhaps we can tempt you to have some."

Doctor Forbes had appeared and Helen had disappeared, to return presently with the plank on which was laid the smoking steak with the tempting border of mashed potatoes and various vegetables.

"We must congratulate you," said Helen, as she laid the plank on the rather informally set table. "I don't suppose anyone can tempt you to meals, now that you have got the wonderful Mrs. Taylor. You certainly were lucky in these days, to get a perfect housekeeper like that. And you know she was with old Mr. Morgan twenty years—stayed till he died —and she was saying today that she expected to do the same for you."

"Why, that's very kind, I'm sure." It was then that there loomed before Doctor Andover an image of Mrs. Hildegarde Taylor, with her thin-lipped and rather acrid smile, as she sat behind the coffee things at breakfast and the tea things at supper, for she was one of those housekeepers who never fail to take their places at meals with their employers.

She had sat like that before Mr. Morgan twenty years, and then he had died. How would it be to see that face for twenty years? Her coffee was clear and doubtless good, but she was sparing of the coffee, and she regarded cream as an extravagance.

Doctor Andover was wondering whether he would have to drink coffee every morning for twenty years, just like that, or whether he would have courage to ask to have it stronger—and with cream.

"She really is wonderful," Helen Forbes was going on. "I only wish I could manage the way she does. I don't suppose you could be tempted to take a little of this planked steak?" She had put quite a generous piece on the warmed plate and was passing it to him.

"But, daughter," suggested Doctor Forbes, kindly, "If Doctor Andover has had dinner, it will only be doing him an unkindness in forcing more upon him."

But Doctor Andover mumbled something about "rather light supper," and for the next few minutes joined the Forbes household in the delectable task of eating a perfectly broiled planked steak.

After that, though it was sometimes a little difficult for Doctor Andover to walk right up to the front door of the Forbes house when he knew he would be met there by the disconcerting Helen Forbes, it was even more difficult to stay away. Sometimes he would definitely decide not to call. If his own evening repast was early and it seemed to add to the desirability of a short after-dinner walk down College street.

But despite his decision not to stop at the Forbes house, he would stop. Sometimes he was tempted even further by the tantalizing aroma of dinner, huckleberry pie or roasted lamb or fresh aromatic coffee. Mrs. Taylor's coffee could never be smelled that way when it cooked. Doctor Andover remembered that she had once told him that the way she made it she kept all the flavor in the coffee pot and that was what made it taste so good.

It was the test of good coffee, she said, not having the smell of it escape from the pot. But Helen Forbes' coffee always smelled all the way round to the front of the house, and to Doctor Andover it was perfection in the cup.

So it happened that quite often, without exactly intending to do so, the young college president shared some of the good things that Helen had prepared for her father's dinner and always when he did there was the evidence of the greatest pleasure on the part of the hospitable old professor, who, though he may have worn his coats until they were shabby, certainly did not curtail himself on the good things of the table.

"Of course, though," said Helen once when Doctor Andover had come out with an enthusiastic bit of praise of her cookery, "if I were a perfect housekeeper like your Mrs. Taylor I could set a better table on much less money. She must be quite remarkable. Why, just today she was telling us at the missionary society that she can make a pound of coffee go two weeks and the meat bills aren't $3 a week. Of course, she said she couldn't manage that way unless she felt a real interest in you. You really were mighty lucky to get her. Really, it was quite amusing.

"Professor Partridge's wife told Mrs. Taylor that if you never married it would be her fault, and then Mrs. Taylor said that at any rate you'd never marry for a good home and a good housekeeper. I thought that was so sweet of her—"

"Yes, I am sure it was," weakly rejoined Doctor Andover. He recalled then that he had fried cornmeal for supper, although he had begged the perfect housekeeper to omit cornmeal for a few weeks. He had never liked it anyway, he said, but he didn't say what he felt, that he had been cornmealed to death since her arrival.

Of course it was because of the economy in using cornmeal that she persisted, and Doctor Andover did eat it because he had a healthy young appetite and he had to eat something.

"But, then," continued Doctor Andover, "a man doesn't marry for a home or for a good cook. If the woman he loves happens to be a good housekeeper and all that sort of thing it is just an added blessing, I suppose."

Doctor Andover was preoccupied after that. He tried to discuss the new system of student grading with Dean Forbes, but his thoughts did not seem to collect. At a quarter to nine he rose to leave. Nine was the dean's habitual bedtime.

He bade the dean good night rather hurriedly, and then as he turned to Helen he looked very intently at her, so intently that the radiant Helen dropped her eyes. "I'm coming back at half past nine. See me alone on the veranda."

It was a rather chilly spring night to be philandering on verandas, but there was a soft, radiant moon and Helen had swathed herself in a soft woolen scarf and was waiting when Doctor Andover returned.

"I want to talk to you—down here in the garden," he said, ascending only one step of the veranda, and Helen slowly went down to meet him.

"It's about marrying you that I want to talk, Helen," he said when they had reached the dark shelter of an old lilac hedge. "You have always been the kind of woman I'd want—a real woman, magnificent and radiant and beautiful. It's the kind of woman I've always dreamed about. But, hang it all, I don't want you to think I'm asking you because you are such a wonderful cook and housekeeper. I'd feel such a contemptible blackguard to marry a woman for a housekeeper. You know it is you, Helen, that I want? I've feared there wasn't a chance you'd have me."

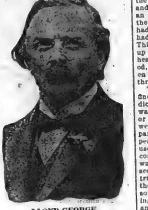
It's funny how gossip goes in a little college town like that. A week later when Helen and Doctor Andover's engagement was announced there wasn't a professor's wife in town but had known it for weeks.

Helen, they said, had always been setting her cap for the new president. For a time they said it seemed as if he might have preferred Mrs. Hildegarde Taylor, in spite of the slight difference in age. And it was such a pity he didn't, for Mrs. Taylor was such a good cook—such a perfect housekeeper.

Lloyd George Once Denied Important War Interview Matter Is Now Up Again

On March 31, 1919, the Westminster Gazette published a despatch from its Paris correspondent, Mr. Sisley Huddleston, giving what purported to be "the authentic British view" of the proper peace terms as furnished to the correspondent by "a high authority." Since the peace policy there set down was much more moderate than the "shilling for shilling and ton for ton" program on which Mr. Lloyd George had won the general election in the previous December, 370 members of Parliament, alarmed by this and other evidence, sent to the Prime Minister their famous telegram demanding that he "present the bill in full" to the Germans. Mr. Lloyd George quieted their fears, and eventually responded, in a considerable degree, to their demands. Moreover, coming back to Parliament two weeks later, he pooh-poohed the assertion that the despatch to the Westminster Gazette was "a reliable source" of information as to the British policy at the conference.

Now, after three years, publication of Lloyd George's private memorandum of March, 1919, confirms in the main this "anonymous article" of which Mr. Lloyd George complained.



LLOYD GEORGE.

Apparently, it was "a reliable source" of information. Then who was the "high authority"? According to Mr. Huddleston, it was Mr. Lloyd George himself. In what sense that gentleman can be described as "reliable" we leave the professors of ethics to determine, says the New York Times. Asked recently about the matter in the House of Commons, he fell back on the usual excuses of the politician. He had no recollection of any such interview, the text of it had not been shown to him for revision, and in any case he had been misquoted. The incident raises a question of considerable importance in the morality not only of journalism, but of politics. The interview with a statesman who begins by saying "Don't quote me," and has to be veiled under the designation of "a high authority," is commoner in Washington than in Westminster, and is responsible for some of the most serious problems of Washington reporting. Obviously, it affords excellent protection for an unscrupulous correspondent. The "high authority" may be anybody, even the correspondent himself.

The Westminster Gazette, in some editorial comment on this episode, lays down the general principle that a politician talking under pledge of anonymity ought to tell the truth and not "a pretense thrown out to test opinion," and that if he repudiates his statements upon finding that they are unpopular the reporter should be permitted to name his informant. The life of a newspaper man would be a good deal easier if this were the case; but in Washington, at least, it wouldn't work. A correspondent who broke the pledge of secrecy, especially if he did it to prove that the official and not the correspondent was a liar, would get no more interviews with that official.

Mr. Huddleston remarks: "I consider this system to be detestable. If a statesman has something to say, let him say it in his own name. If he does not wish it published, he is not obliged to talk to journalists."

Excellent moral principle, but beside the point. For the statesman will talk, but will talk only on condition that his identity be kept secret. Newspaper men serving a public that wants to know cannot refuse to listen to him, or to publish the information they got.

In the meantime, the British seem to have made matters easier for the politicians by the invention of Lord Riddell. At the Washington Conference and elsewhere, this gentleman, professing himself only a seeker for truth like the other reporters—though enjoying exceptional facilities for getting at it—was the chief medium for news from the British delegation, whether that news happened to be facts or "a pretense thrown out to test opinion." Of course, Riddell's news could always be disavowed, for he was only a reporter; so this system left the real reporters three jumps away from the truth, as Plato used to say. The education of public opinion would cure the evil, but that education progresses with painful slowness. In the meantime, newspaper men have to grin and bear it.

The Best China.

In Holland it is still the fashion for ladies to wash the dainty china and silver after tea or breakfast in the presence of the family and guests.

YOUR OCCUPATION.

Sometimes It Will Leave Its Signs Upon You.

"It goes without saying that one's vocation must needs leave some trace upon one's appearance," writes J. C. Goodwin in Chambers' Journal. "We speak of a policeman's walk, a soldier's bearing, a sailor's roll, an artist's hands, and the face of a dreamer, while were an ostler and a curate to exchange his clothes neither would conceal his real vocation for long.

"When the American professor, Webster, murdered his victim at Boston, it was the very skill with which the corpse had been dismembered and destroyed that pointed to the fact that some one with an intimate knowledge of anatomy had done the deed, and that fact, having been established, the net was not long in closing round Webster.

"The Sherlock Holmes narratives teem with skilfully conceived sketches of the art of deducting vocations from appearances. Engineers frequently show a callosity at the junction of the thumb and the forefinger of the left hand, due to the friction of the chisel, while oil collects in the crevices of the skin and harbors iron filings and similar impurities, and in course of time a hard discolored patch makes its appearance.

"Stone masons also develop a peculiar condition of the skin, but in their case the skin feels hard and dry, almost brittle. Riveters are similarly afflicted, and their hands generally bear the marks of scorchings in addition. Most manual workers whose occupation entails the chafing of their hands with the instruments of their toil show a thickening and hardening of the skin at the parts which come into contact with their tools, and among them may be grouped hand-loom weavers, coachmen—in whose case the constant friction of the reins is responsible—gardeners, and joiners. In the case of joiners, an incident is related by Dr. Bross, the eminent criminologist. A crime had been committed, and the culprit had left his coat behind on the scene. This garment was accordingly sealed up in a strong bag and beaten with heavy stiks. The bag was then opened, and the dust which had been beaten out of the coat was examined through a microscope.

"This scrutiny disclosed some very fine sawdust, this fact serving to indicate that the wearer of the coat was either a joiner or a carpenter, or was employed in a sawmill. There were, however, also found minute particles of gelatine and glue. Carpenters and sawmill employes do not use glue, and the opinion was accordingly formed that the criminal was a joiner, which view was subsequently confirmed at the resultant trial. It is of interest to note that the right shoulder of a joiner is somewhat higher than the left, owing to his constant work with saw and plane. The use of these tools is also responsible for the right hand being larger than the left."

Handel's Big Appetite.

Many great musical composers had exceptionally large appetites. When Handel dined alone at a restaurant he generally took the precaution of ordering a meal for three. Once, on asking, "Is de tinner retty?" at a tavern where he was little known, he was told, "As soon as the company comes," and he astonished the waiter by seating himself with the remark, "Den pring up de tinner—I'm de company!" Haydn, yet more voracious, delighted in dining alone, and was known to consume a meal that would have satisfied five ordinary appetites.

In the Forest of St. Leonard's, where the lily of the valley still grows, its presence is accounted for by the following legend: "Here in days of yore did St. Leonard fight a victorious fight with a huge dragon. Though victor, he sustained many wounds, and wherever a drop of his blood fell on the ground, from that spot sprang up one of these pure and spotless lilies." The number of its names testifies its popularity. Prettiest, perhaps, of all these is "Ladder to Heaven," which refers to its quality of purity and humility, not, of course, to its habit of growth. The French and Germans call it respectively, "Muguet de mai" and "Mai blume."

Loud Speakers.

It is interesting to note how many devices are being introduced for service as loud speakers in connection with the receiving of broadcasted music. One of the new devices is a simple horn provided with two arms that terminate in soft rubber caps. The ordinary pair of telephone receivers clamp right over the two arms, so that the sound must then pass up through and be amplified by the horn. Another device takes a single receiver, which is placed in the base. Several receivers are provided with special coupling members so that they may be fastened to the usual phonograph tone arm, for amplifying the sound. There can be no doubt that broad-casted music is at its best when it is heard through some form of loud-speaker.

New Automobile Engine.

A valveless, gearless engine, intended ultimately for automobile use, has recently been brought to the bench test stage in Manchester. In a very general way it may be said that the cylinders are so arranged, in multiples of three, that ports between them open and close in a fashion which permits each piston, on the return stroke of its two-stroke cycle, to compress its own charge and to drive a charge into the combustion chamber of the adjoining cylinder.

Too Impulsive.

"My wife was feeling ill this morning, and asked me to send for the doctor, but I reminded her that the sales were starting, and she felt better at once."

"But wouldn't it have been cheaper to send for the doctor?"

"Ah! I never thought of that."

ANTS AT BATTLE.

They Are Not So Very Different From Human Beings.

Ants, like other insects, display something much like human nature, especially reprehensible human nature. In an article in the Atlantic Monthly on the leaf-carrying tribe of ants, Mr. William Beebe describes a furious fight between ants that he once saw in Guiana.

"A quadruple line of leaf carriers," he says, "was disappearing down a hole, bumped and pushed by an outpouring, empty-jawed mass of workers. As I watched them I became aware that a group of ants beyond the hole were greatly excited about something. Getting down as nearly as possible to ant height, I saw two giants locked in each other's jaws; and each had lost his abdomen.

"The unnatural combat had stirred scores of small workers to the highest pitch of excitement; and now and then out of the melee that surrounded the giants an ant would emerge with a smaller one in his jaws. When the ball of fighters cleared twelve small ants were clinging to the legs and heads of the mutilated giants, which now and then would loosen their hold on each other, turn and crush one of their tormentors. Occasionally the less exhausted one would stagger to his four and a half remaining legs, hoist his assailant, together with a mass of midgets, high into the air and staggered a few steps before he fell beneath the onrush of new attackers.

"I left them struggling there, and half an hour later when I returned the episode was just reaching a climax. My hero was exerting his last strength, flinging off the pile that assaulted him, and fighting all the easier because he had lost his heavy body. He lurched forward and dragged the second giant, which was now dead, not towards the deserted trail or the world of jungle round him, but headlong into the lines of stupid leaf carriers, where he scattered green leaves and flower petals in all directions. Only when dozens of ants threw themselves upon him did he rear up for the last time; then with the whole mob clinging to him he rolled down into the yawning mouth of the nesting hole, carrying with him all those hurrying up the steep sides."

The Unhappy Czar.

A dramatic little story that illumines in a flash the strangely unwholesome life that the Czar of Russia had to live in the old days is to be found in James L. Ford's book, "Forty-odd Years in the Literary Shop." Mr. Ford had an intimate acquaintance with Baron de Grimm, whose father had been the tutor of Alexander III. of Russia, and who himself had been an intimate friend of the czarevitch. From de Grimm Mr. Ford gained an idea of the isolation of an autocrat and the atmosphere of dread, suspicion and uncertainty that surrounds an autocratic court. When the Czar Alexander II. sent his son to the Riviera for the sake of his health he received from the young man's attendants only vague reports in regard to his condition, although couriers arrived daily with letters. On one occasion the soldier who brought the post-bag was ushered into the presence of the czar, who after a hasty glance at his correspondence exclaimed: "There is no letter from my son, and it is some days since I have heard from him!" "But, sire," exclaimed the soldier, "he is no longer able to write!" "Not able to write!" exclaimed the sovereign of all the Russias. "Will nobody ever tell me anything?" And it may be remembered, adds Mr. Ford, that Nicholas II. uttered a like despairing cry when the news of the January massacre, which his courtiers had sedulously kept from him, finally reached his ears.

Camel-Like Natives.

Mrs. Harry K. Eustace, African big game hunter, and the only woman in the world, who has looked the great white rhinoceros of the jungle in the face, has arrived on this continent with her husband and daughter, with whom she has hunted.

Mrs. Eustace is known to the natives as "Catasi Moga," which means "sure aim." She says it isn't necessary to waste more than one shot on an elephant, no matter how big he is.

She tells of the women in a bush tribe in the Gordonia desert, Central Southwest Africa. These women have developed glands in the back in which they store water like camels. When they drink a great deal of water, the glands make them appear deformed. After a few days on the desert with little or no water, their reserve supply is exhausted and they look normal. They can go without water longer than a camel.

Palaeolithic Religion.

The cave man buried his dead with as solemn religious rites as any in vogue to-day. Such is the conclusion of Prof. Mainage, of the French Catholic Institute, from his painstaking studies of relics and ethnological records. Furthermore, he is convinced that their religion was not basically different from ours, and that the latter is merely an evolution of the former. The tombs and carvings reveal nothing in common with animation or totemism, although the cave man's belief undoubtedly accepted a plurality of gods, from which the idea of one supreme being later emerged. Prof. Mainage's investigations, while pointing to the evolutionary nature of religion, throw no light on the origin of the monotheistic concept.

Brief Consultation.

Doctor: "Good morning, what can I do for you?"

Young Visitor: "I—I called, sir, to ask for the hand of your daughter."

"Humph! Appetite good?" "Not very." "How is your pulse?" "Very rapid, when—when I am with her—very feeble when away." "Troubled with palpitation?" "Awfully when I think of her."

"Take my daughter; you'll soon be cured. Five dollars, please."

Agricultural Wealth.

The gross agricultural wealth of Canada is estimated at $6,831,000,000. Ontario comes first among the provinces, with $1,887,000,000; Saskatchewan ranks second, with $1,513,000,000; Quebec, third, with $1,288,000,000, and Alberta fourth, with $814,000,000.

Earl French Says Wells Was Wrong in Estimate Of Greatness of Napoleon

Field Marshal Earl French considers that H. G. Wells has not summed up Napoleon's character in the way he would do it.

This is what Wells says about Napoleon:

"It would be difficult to find a human being less likely to arouse affection. One reads in vain through the monstrous accumulations of Napoleonic literature for a single record of self-forgetfulness. There is no proof that this unbrotherly, unhumorous egotist was ever sincerely loved by any human being. He had never a gleam of religion or affection or the sense of duty. He was, as few men are or dare to be, a scoundrel, bright and complete. What he wanted he wanted simply and completely, and got—if he could. There lies his fascination."

But Lord French, hale and hearty, and slightly Napoleonic in his characteristic attitudes, told a different story, and he did it in a single sentence:

LORD FRENCH.

"I think that Napoleon was one of the greatest men who ever lived."

"Then there was a good side to Napoleon despite what people say?"

"Indeed there was."

"'And you have a number of Napoleonic relics?"

"I have." (People who know say that it is a very fine collection).

Napoleon has been French's lifelong hero. Then why is French so humane a man? How came he by a reputation for extreme carefulness of human life? How is it that his sister, Mrs. Despard, who was a prominent figure in the English Woman Suffrage movement, has said of him that he regards war as a hideous outrage? Why is it that he sees no romance in war?

The answer is that he worships Napoleon not because of the merciless, war-fired spirit of that extraordinary man, but because he was a master of strategy. Strategy is a fascinating game that calls for the keenest use of brain power. It is a game with human lives for the stakes. Napoleon's strategical skill has been a source of wonder and inspiration to French, and, because he went over the field of Waterloo so closely in imagination with Napoleon, he gained a mass of information that he was able to put into practice when he found himself commander-in-chief of the British Expeditionary Force in 1914.

Absurdities of Instinct.

Instinct sometimes leads animals and insects to do oddly useless things. In "A Naturalist in Himalaya," Capt. R. W. G. Hingston tells this story, which illustrates the power that instinct can have over an insect: A sheet-building spider, he says, was waiting for visitors at the entrance to its tube, where the shell of a fly that had long been dead was lying, when a stinging wasp came and entanngled its feet in the web. Though the sheet-building spider is armed with fangs and poison, it is by no means valiant, and ordinarily will not fight with an angered wasp. When the spider felt the web vibrate it darted forward at once, but, seeing the wasp, sprang swiftly back. But the presence of the wasp seemed to have roused the spider's instinct to capture something. Again it darted forward, this time to sink its fangs deeply into the fly it had long ago cast aside.

The Glass Harmonica.

One of the most curious musical instruments ever made was the glass harmonica that Benjamin Franklin invented. It was composed of glass disks of different sizes set on a spindle and made by a treadle to revolve in a trough of water. The player touched the wet edges of the disks as they revolved, and thereby produced musical notes of unusual sweetness. The instrument was in great vogue for many years, but the music was said to have an injurious effect on the listener's nerves, and the friction of the glass disks made the player's fingers sore.

China.

The Chinese civilization is the oldest. When the people in most parts of Europe were going about dressed in skins of wild animals, and using pieces of stone tied to sticks as tools and weapons, the Chinese were a skilful and highly cultured nation.

Sheao Nuts Rotting.

From 60,000 to 100,000 tons of sheao nuts are annually rotting along the Gold Coast of Africa; 300 miles of railway would provide a remunerative outlet for these nuts.

GOLD MADE TO ORDER.

Science Still Trying to Follow Lead of Alchemists.

A considerable sensation was recently caused by a rumor that a German chemist has discovered a method of producing gold from another metal —possibly copper. Later reports proved that it was only a rumor; the great secret of making gold is still undiscovered.

As most of us are aware, the chemists — alchemists as they were called — of the Middle Ages spent their lives in searching for methods of manufacturing gold from cheaper or baser minerals. Fifty years ago their efforts were regarded as merely ludicrous by the scientists of the day; but our views have widened, and today it is realized that it is only a matter of time and research before the transmutation of metals is an accomplished fact.

So long ago as 1907 that great chemist, Sir William Ramsay, did actually effect a transmutation by means of a gas evolved from radium. Only in this case, what he did was to "degrade" copper down to the first member of its group of metals, namely "lithium."

About the same date three members of the French Society of Modern Alchemy were announced to have succeeded in making a synthesis of gold. In other words, they had built up gold out of its constituents.

Gold, of course, is still considered to be an element; that is, a simple substance which cannot be broken have their doubts as to the so-called elements, and to believe that they are all built up out of one primal substance.

The result of a successful synthesis of gold would be to upset the whole system of the world's commerce, and we should have to find some other medium of exchange. For the time being the upset would be terrific.

Japanese Woman Printer.

Writing of a certain Japanese newspaper office, Miss Francis Little says in Harper's Magazine:

"Not only is it done for women, but by women. And one would have to go a long journey before he could find so cheerfully busy a group as that which I found in an office, neither spacious nor sumptuous, but just a place where work could be done, and no time lost in powdering noses or reddening lips.

"The girls gave me a cordial welcome. They were neither shy, embarrassed, nor bold. Simply women who, having been thrust out into the world, adapted themselves to conditions which their great-grandmothers would have committeed hara-kiri before submitting to. The girls could smile, too, at the long hours, at their hard tasks, and at the curious stranger who was asking them all kinds of questions.

"I watched one of the girls prepare her material for the morrow's issue. Did she luxuriously lounge before a typewriter which was guaranteed to do everything but talk out loud, and click off page after page of neat type? Not so. With sleeve turned back, she dipped a little brush in India ink and, beginning at the top of a long strip of paper, she bent to her work of painting characters. Each character on that clean white page looked to me as hopelessly intricate as a mussed-up puzzle, but every stroke told a story, and her slender fingers went at such a giddy speed it fairly made me cross-eyed to follow."

Mr. Eaton's Experience.

Mr. R. Y. Eaton, the newly-appointed president of the T. Eaton Co., Toronto, is laughingly telling his experience in waiting on his first customer since accepting the position as head of the big store.

Mr. Eaton was rather hurriedly giving the big business the 'once over' and happened to be going through the tinware department in the basement when a foreigner, evidently mistaking him for the manager of that department, accosted Mr. Eaton with, "Please, say, have you a sort of dish you call a 'jiffy,' —no?"

"Sure, we have," was the quick reply, "but we probably have another name for it. What is it like"?

"'Well, you see" (pulling a packet from his overcoat pocket) 'the directions on this package of Alabastine says, 'Mix in a jiffy with cold water'."

Elephant's Intelligence.

Charles Meyer, who has been in the remote places of the earth catching wild animals for various zoos, has written a fascinating book, "Trapping Wild Animals," in which he controverts with vigor the popular idea of the elephant's intelligence. This, he says, has been greatly exaggerated. The animal's gentleness, and its very serviceable trunk, gave rise to the myth. It is obedient and teachable, but its "reasoning" is far below a dog's. An elephant will stupidly fall into any pit lightly covered, though provided with a trunk capable of guarding against such an accident. Its fellows make no effort to assist the fallen one, but flee in terror. They are easily caught and recaught; lovable, stupid brutes. The notion that they are treacherous and retentive of injury is false.

"The White Feather."

"To show the white feather" is a phrase that has survived cock-fighting days. A thoroughbred game cock has only red and white feathers. A cross-bred bird is known by a white feather in his tail. As the slightest impurity of strain was said to destroy the bird's fighting spirit, the plume was adopted to show lack of pluck among men.

Fireflies.

Fireflies are not a particular kind of insect. The name is simply a general one for several kinds of beetles. There are two classes of them, one of which is found in Central and South America and the West Indies, and the other in Europe and the United States.

Much the more brilliant are those of the tropics. One kind, called the lightning spring beetle, because when it falls on its back it springs into the air so as to get on its feet again, is more than an inch long, and gives forth such a beautiful light that the Cuban and Mexican ladies use them as ornaments.

The Indian natives of those countries catch them by holding up burning coals on the end of a stick, which attracts the insect. They sell them to ladies, who shut them up in small cages of fine wire, and feed them on bits of sugar-cane.

When they wish to use them, they sew them up in little bags of lace and gauze, or twist them in their necklaces or girdles. Sometimes they cruelly put a long pin through the poor betties under the chest, and wear them in their hair instead of diamonds, or with the jewels, the result being a pretty effect.

Travelers who visited the West Indies, at first excited the incredulity of their friends at home by declaring that the natives sometimes put a number of the fireflies into a cage, and thus gain enough light to enable them to read. The story has been confirmed by many scientists, however, and is now accepted universally as the truth.

A WIRELESS EDITORIAL

We would direct our readers' attention to an item on the front page of this issue which records a peculiar coincidence of thought and expression between the editor of this paper and that of The Daily Ontario. We wish it were possible for us to pick up such good copy by wireless. It is a pity that The Ontario's version of the editorial appeared so late, it would have been still more marvelous if it had appeared simultaneously with the original.

THE PRICE OF INDEPENDENCE

Sir John Willison, in an article in The Nineteenth Century, puts some practical questions to the self-determinationists in Canada who are claiming a greater part in the affairs of the Empire. Referring to the demand that all treaties and international agreements made by Great Britain should be submitted for the approval of the Canadian Government, Sir John says: "Clearly where we take absolute power we must take absolute responsibility. If we reject co-operation, we must take the consequences of independence. If we assert absolute control over British policy in North America, we can not reasonably appeal to Great Britain if we find ourselves in conflict with Washington over questions of vital consequence to the welfare and security of Canada.

"If we are to have a voice in all questions which affect the Empire all over the world, what obligations shall we assume for the defense of the common interest? Surely where we assume to give advice we must be ready to give support. If we undertake to dictate policy in North America, we must have some reserve of power to give effect to our policy if it is challenged. Or do we mean to rely wholly upon Washington and the League of Nations, to which Washington will not subscribe? Unless the nations agree upon general disarmament, the United States will have a Navy second only to that of Great Britain. However much we may rely upon the good disposition of Washington, could we safely neglect all provisions for defense unless the American Army were disbanded and the American Navy dismantled? What would be the cost of providing such defense of Canadian interests as the British Navy now affords? Have we greater reason to trust the United States than we have to trust Great Britain? Do we mean deliberately to declare that we regard our connection with Great Britain as a danger on this continent and that we will feel more secure when we have established at Ottawa a complete sovereignty over all our relation with the Republic?"

Some people use the word "autonomy" without understanding what it entails. Independence is a splendid quality—if you can afford it. We know some very glib young men who flout their "independence" and "freedom" in the face of their fellows, but who are absolutely dependent upon their parents or family connections for protection. If Canada is to assume full autonomy, and be equal with the British Isles in dealing with all matters concerning the Empire, then Canadians must pay an equal share with Great Britain for the maintenance of the naval and military forces that are necessary for the preservation of the Empire.

If, on the other hand, Canada decided to cut itself off from the Empire and become an independent state, the people of this Dominion would have to pay for a Canadian navy—unless they were content to accept protection from the United States, in which case they would not be independent.

BLIND LEADERS

Labor Leaders in these days are blind leaders of the dumb. The average working man has very little to say about the calling of a strike and his wife and children are not consulted at all. We are told that 95 per cent. of the railway men in Canada are demanding a walk out, but how many of the women and children who will suffer as a result have had an opportunity of expressing their opinion on the matter?

Whatever the rights and wrongs of the dispute between master and man may be, there are rights and wrongs to be considered in regard to family life, and in regard to the life of the community at large. Labor needs leaders who know whither they are leading, and who have some sympathy—or at least some consideration—for the women and children. These leaders themselves do not suffer by strikes, but rather gain prestige and notoriety. What a mighty man J. L. Lewis is just now! His word seems to carry more weight than that of the President of the Republic. He has it within his power to freeze to death the great mass of the people of this continent next winter by "standing pat" on the coal strike issues. He, himself, will not freeze, nor will he want for food; we doubt if he will smoke one cigar less. How long will the worker allow themselves to be driven by such despots in the sacred name of Democracy?

PASSING COMMENT

What would Toronto manufacturers say if their factories were to be closed for lack of power?

The Belleville Chamber of Commerce should be equally emphatic in its demands from the Minister for Railways and Canals as they are from Sir Adam Beck.

Sir Adam Beck is looking to the future in his refusal to accept the Federal Government's lease of the Trent water powers. In this he is to be commended for we need men of vision and foresight, but the present must not be forgotten.

HERE AND THERE

WOMEN'S DRESS.

The fate of kingdoms has depended on more trifling things. A large hat may make all the difference to a modern Cleopatra in ensnaring a modern Mark Antony (in a white topper), and the course of civilization may be diverted as a result. There is no doubt that it is easier to fall in love in some years than in others, and this is almost entirely due to the fashions of the day. It is at least twice as easy to fall in love in a year of long skirts as in a year of short, and in a year of large hats as in a year of small. Love with the ordinary human being is a perfectly superficial emotion, and, if the novelists were true to life, they would write less about hearts and more about dresses. There is a great deal of nonsense written in the tradition of King Cophetua and the beggar maid. That irregular love affairs of the kind have occurred is, no doubt, true, but happily they are rare.

Women sometimes indignantly deny that they dress for the eyes of men. They dress, they say, to please themselves, and are more interested in what women think than in what men think about their clothes. We must not dismiss this too summarily as a feminine falsehood. New pleasures have undoubtedly arisen in the course of the evolution of women's dress, and these derivative pleasures have probably become the chief pleasures of many well-dressed women. Dress, like poetry, began as an art with a purpose. It has evolved into an art for art's sake. Hence modern women will discuss each other's dresses in much the same spirit in which Georgian poets will discuss each other's poems. They are artists, and they know it, like all artists, that their most sympathetic audience is one of women. They are no more concerned with the origins of dress than a poet is with the origins of verse.

Certainly, women would have a poor time of it if they had to depend on men for intelligent appreciation of their clothes. Men are influenced by women's clothes as they are influenced by the architecture of churches, but the influence in both cases is hypnotic; it does not awaken the observation and intelligence, but overwhelms them. Only a man of the worst sort, on returning from a party, could tell you how the women to whom he talked were dressed. Men get little more than a vague impression of color, if they get as much as that.

TO MY WIFE.

Those eyes that were so bright, love,
Have now a dimmer shine—
But all they've lost in light, love,
Was what they gave to mine;
But still those orbs reflect, love,
The beams of former hours,
That ripen'd all my joys, my love,
And tinted all my flowers!

Those locks were brown to see, love,
That now are turned so grey—
But the years were spent with me, love,
That stole their hue away;
Thy locks no longer share, love,
The golden glow of noon—
But I've seen the world look fair, my love,
When silver'd by the moon!

That brow was smooth and fair, love,
That looks so shaded now—
But for me it bore the care, love
That spoiled a bonny brow.
And though no longer there, love,
The gloss it had of yore—
Still Memory looks and dotes, my love,
Where Hope admired before.

PRESS OPINIONS

COMMUNION WITH SINNERS

(Toronto Telegram)

In stating that the Liberals have been false to a good policy and the Conservatives have been true to a bad policy, Miss Agnes MacPhail M.P., puts the case neatly enough from her standpoint. The Liberals are revealed as much more capable than the Conservatives, even so.

In playing false, as they have done the Liberals were guilty of deceit and untrustworthiness, lack of fidelity to principle; all the Progressives can hold against the Conservatives is the Conservative loyalty to Protection, the value of which, to Canada, cannot be challenged.

The great Progressive philosophy of righteousness therefore culminates in a proposal to unite with a political party convicted to deceit in order to fight a political party which has been honest.

THE MALE FLAPPER

(Hamilton Spectator)

"It's a legacy of the war."

The alibi, coined in 1914, before the troops had become accustomed to puttees and bully-beef, has done noble duty. It has explained away almost everything from restaurant prices to grandma's rheumatism.

If that is a legacy of the war then there should be no more war From the khaki-clad, mudbespattered Tommy, seeking the elusive cootie to the Harold Teen one sees upon the streets to-day, whose raiment hints of a raid upon sister's boudoir, is a stretch too far for the most elastic imagination.

The rugged pioneers who blazed the trials—who built for this and succeeding generations—what would they say if they could come back to look us over?

Just one word, before they rushed back to their pillows in the wildwood:

"Sissy!"

And the description would be quite the "Hornet's Elbows," now wouldn't it?

WIT AND HUMOR

TOO WISE

'There's such a thing as being too wise,' said Chief of Police Butler the other day. 'Indeed, that is how we catch many thieves. They are too clever and it gives them away. They remind me of the new clerk in the seed-store.'

'Some one, just for a joke, asked for some sweet-potato seeds. The clerk hunted all through the seeds but could find no sweet-potato seeds and finally appealed to the boss.

'The latter explained that he was being kidded and cautioned him about not letting smart Alecs put anything over on him.

'A few days later a lady entered the store and asked for some bird-seed.

'Aw, go on,' grinned the clerk, 'you can't kid me. Birds is hatched from eggs.'"—Los Angeles 'Times.'

The native minister was telling the missionary in charge of his district that a sparrow had built a nest on the roof of his house.

'Is there anything in the nest yet?' asked the missionary.

'Yes said the Indian brother, proud of his English, 'the sparrow has pups.'—The 'World Outlook.'

BOOSTING HIS BUSINESS

The vicar's appeal had been a most eloquent one, and had even penetrated the depths of Mr. Blachleigh's granite organ. The latter came forward and offered £50 for the fund.

The worthy cleric was overjoyed.

'I don't know your name, sir,' he cried; 'but I thank you from the bottom of my heart. I thank you! May your business prosper, sir!'

Then there was a solemn hush, and the committee looked askance at the vicar.

'What's the matter?' whispered the clergyman, turning to the chairman.

'Well—er—that donor is an undertaker!'—Pittsurg 'Sun.'

THE RETORT CRISP

After a grand review of German troops at Potsdam the Kaiser called out to the officer commanding the Prussian Guard, in a voice loud enough to be heard by all the distinguished guests who were grouped in front of the palace: 'Pick me out a hundred men from the Prussian Guard!' Then, taking the arm of King Edward VII., who was there, he said, 'Come with me.' He escorted King Edward very delicately round the hundred men and then said banteringly, 'Well, do you think you could find a hundred men in England to beat them?'

'I don't know so much about that,' promptly replied the late king, 'but I could easily find [illegible] who would try.—The 'Agomabt.'

NATURE'S CHAMPION SLEEPERS.

Mud That Protects Frogs From the Dangers of the Winter.

During the cold days of winter every frog in the land is tucked away in the mud at the bottom of some deep pond, where he remains in a kind of trance, quite motionless and not even breathing.

On the arrival of warmer weather the frogs awaken from their long sleep and float up to the surface to draw their first breath for many months.

Then, rapidly becoming more active, they make their way ashore, and soon the evening air is resounding with their hoarse love-songs. The male's croak sounds like a cross between the cawing of a rook and the quack of a duck, while the lady frog trills her tremolo lay on a higher pitched note.

Once their courtship is over, neither parent takes the slightest interest in family affairs. The eggs which look like great masses of sago pudding speckled with black points, are left to look after themselves, and they provide dainty morsels for a variety of water creatures.

Ducks, geese, swans, and other aquatic birds, water beetles, fish, and enemies of many kinds launch an immediate attack upon them, and it is just as well for us that they do, for otherwise the whole country would soon be one crawling mass of frogs.

At the end of a day or two the black speck that lies within each egg begins to grow in size, and gradually it takes on the shape of a tiny fish-like creature with a big head, no body, and a long tail.

In about a month the tadpoles eat their way through the covering that protects them and set out to find their own living in the pond in which they are born.

For the first week or two of their lives they have large branching gills, but gradually these grow smaller until finally they disappear altogether. Hind legs begin to make their appearance, followed after an interval by the fore limbs. The tail, which at first was used as both propeller and rudder, shrinks until soon it disappears altogether.

The creature is now no longer able to live entirely under water; it must rise to the surface to breathe. One day it makes its way to the side of the pond and rests for a time upon a leaf, the head of which is above water. Then, greatly daring, it pulls itself ashore and hops away into the grass, a tiny frog no larger than a ten-cent piece.

Its life whilst it remained in the water was no time of peace, for tadpoles are regarded as a delicacy by most pond creatures—even by their own bigger brothers! But on land things are worse than ever, for birds, grass snakes, rats, and badgers are waiting to welcome the young frog as he goes for his first walk.

His own diet consists almost entirely of flies and other insects, which he catches in an ingenious way. His tongue is hinged, not in his throat, but at the front of the lower jaw, so that when it is extended it protrudes quite a long way.

The young frog sits quite motionless in the shadow of a leaf. Presently an unsuspecting fly alights and begins to walk about. The frog does not move; he is waiting until the fly comes within range. The instant it does so, out shoots the long tongue. The fly is captured and transferred to the frog's capacious mouth in a fraction of a second.

The frog which is eaten in European cities—only the hind legs are cooked, by the way—is not similar to the one we see in this country. He is bigger, and his voice is much more powerful. Often, just before rain, these frogs are so noisy that sleep is impossible in houses near lakes and ponds.

The Name of Lacrosse.

Although the white men adopted the game of lacrosse from the Indians, they invented their own name for it. It would have been impossible to call it by any of the names used by the Indians, with the possible exception of "baggataway." Even that one, although you can say it, is rather a mouthful.

Listen to some of the others.

The Algonquins called it "Telontsesiksaheks."

The Iroquois gave it a name which has been rendered thus, "Tahontshik-8-sheks."

The French found it easier to invent a name of their own. The sticks that the Indians used looked like a bishop's crozier, and accordingly the first settlers spoke of the implement as "la crosse." In course of time the two French words came together into the modern "lacrosse."

There are still some old-fashioned persons who speak of the lacrosse stick as the crosse.

Woman's Sphere

THE HOUSE AT EVENING.

(By William Rose Benet, in the Yale Review.)

Across the school-ground it would start
To light my eyes, that yellow gleam—
The window of the flaming heart,
The chimney of the tossing dream.
The scuffed and wooden porch of Heaven,
The voice that came like a caress,
The warm kind hands that once were given
My carelessness.

It was a house you would not think
Could hold such sacraments in things
Or give the wild heart meat and drink
Or give the stormy soul high wings
Or chime small voices to such mirth
Or crown the night with stars and flowers
Or make upon this quaking earth
Such steady hours.

Yet, that in storm, it stood secure,
And in the cold was warm with love
Shall its sim[illegible]ode endure
Past trophies that men weary of,
Where two were out of fortune's reach,
Building great empires round a name
And ushering into casual speech
Dim worlds aflame.

WANTED—"ODE TO A DRESSMAKER"

On the whole, the world has never done justice to women's clothes. When they are mentioned in literature, it is usually with sarcasm or denunciation. The prophets, satirists have said more about them than have the lyric poets. True, there are charming pieces in praise of dress, such as Herrick's: 'When as in silks my Julia goes.' But in the higher sort of poetry little is made of silks and satins. Shakespeare replies to the question, 'Who is Silvia? What is she that all the swains commend her?' by telling us that she is holy, fair and wise, but he does not tell us that she is exquisitely dressed. It is almost impossible to imagine Wordsworth addressing a serious poem to a well-dressed woman. Perhaps, if the dressmakers would get rid of their intolerable jargon, which alarms poets by suggesting that clothes are a mystery for experts, men of letters would feel less shy of approaching the subject. It is certainly extraordinary that a theme which moves a far greater number of human beings to the passionate depths of their nature than philosophy should be made so little of in literature. Surely, there is a great 'Ode to a Dressmaker' to be written, putting into immortal verse the whirl of emotions that a woman feels in choosing a new frock. For her the silkworms, the little silkworms, labor out their lives. For her the seal perishes in its ocean cave. For her the murex is fished up and plants yield up their dyes. For her the ostrich is tracked down in the sandy desert and resigns his feathers to one who can wear them with a better grace. The corn falling to the scythe in the field provides her with the simplest of her hats. She has borrowed from the fields and the forests, and walks about clad, not merely in her proper beauty, but in the general beauty of the earth. Strange that she is never content with the result for long. She puts off the beauty of yesterday as though it were a faded bouquet, and she moves on towards the beauty tomorrow, as restless as Alexander seeking new worlds to conquer. If she has a fault, it is that she is satisfied to conquer almost any world, if only it is new. There is, so far as can be seen, no principle in the changes of her fashions. She does not care whether she has a high waist or a low for the swift passage from one to another. She has been compared, in her spring fashions, to the year in efflorescence. But, after all, the flowers, if life to themselves do not change. It is only when human beings take them over and cultivate them in gardens that they, too, become subject to the fashion of the hour. It is strange that the ancient poets looked on the flower of the field as the perfect symbol of impermanence. Here, at least, is promise of return. The flower fadeth, but either in seed or root it is already preparing to be born again. No such fate awaits a discarded frock. It may fade into a shabby second existence, but its glory is brief almost as a bubble's, and has as complete an end.

ADVICE ABOUT HEELS

Bathers and vacation campers who stand around barefooted or in flat-soled sneakers are not taking the right course if they want to preserve their foot arches, according to the Reconstruction Hospital, which says that girls who wear high-heeled pumps with beach suits have the right idea for avoiding weak or flat foot. Even children with a tendency to weak feet risk the probability of this painful disfigurement by going barefooted or in flat-soled shoes. Activity may save them, for it is improper standing for long periods without raised heels which breaks down the foot arches.

These timely hints for the Summer vacation season are contained in a report prepared last week on the orthopedic work of the Reconstruction Hospital. This first hospital of nation-wide scope to deal exclusively with industrial disabilities has treated many cases of flat feet. In addition to surgical correction, where such is required, certain exercises are prescribed which assist in effecting improvement.

The simple, easily remembered rule emphasized for avoiding or correcting flat feet is: Wear heels and walk, toes forward, on the outer edges of the shoes. The "toes out" standing postures and walk is now held responsible by orthopedic authorities for many cases of flat feet.

To straphangers on crowded cars, the advice of the Reconstructed Hospital's orthopedic surgeon is: Stand pigeon-toed, throwing the weight of the body on the outer bottoms of the foot if it is necessary to stand for any length of time. It may look funny, but it relaxes the muscles which support the foot arches and which, if stretched too persistently, will eventually fail to do their duty.

Housewives should don low-heeled shoes upon rising to prepare breakfast, say the surgeons, adding that altogether too many women risk painful flat feet by putting on flat bedroom slippers to prepare the morning meal and then continuing to wear this footgear throughout the forenoon until the household chores are done: Policemen who stand at fixed posts, motormen and conductors, all classes of men who stand for a long time at their work are apt to suffer from this very real and painful affliction.—New York Times.

PICNIC LUNCHES

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University

This is the season for picnics and someone must always prepare a lunch.

Once was the time when a basket must be carried containing plates, spoons and linen napkins, all of which had to be carried home.

Nowadays there are wonderful lunch boxes and baskets, containing everything one could possibly need, and the automobile carries the burden.

Or the lunch is eaten by the roadside, in an attractive spot, while seated comfortably in the car.

For less fortunate people there are paper plates, cups, spoons, forks, tablecloths and napkins. Also paper containers, in which may be carried moist food, make it possible to have salads.

Patented bottles, now very cheap, will keep the coffee or tea hot, and the ice water cold. With such equipment and a pasteboard box no one has to carry home anything.

What You Need

The one preparing the lunch needs oiled paper, or waxed paper, in which sandwiches, hard cooked eggs, cake, cookies or pickles may be wrapped and straws, to go with the grape juice or ginger ale.

It is wise to have three different types of sandwiches one with meat or eggs, one plain, and one sweet. Deviled eggs, each one wrapped in its own piece of paper, or plain boiled eggs with a little packet of salt and pepper mixed are always enjoyed.

When a fire is possible, the lunch may be varied in endless ways. Chops, small pieces of steak to be broiled on a stick, and bacon make one happy just to think about them. Potatoes are a good accompaniment. Marshmallows to be toasted on a stick should not be forgotten.

Following are three suggested menus—one a cold, simple lunch, one hot, where a fire is possible, and one automobile lunch:

Cold Menu

Ham and Egg Sandwiches
(Slice of ham and chopped hard cooked egg, mixed with salad dressing)
Plain Brown Bread Sandwiches
Hard Boiled Eggs
Olives or Pickles
Small Sponge Cakes
Tea or Coffee in patented bottle)
Fruit (whatever is available)

Automobile Menu

Chicken Salad Sandwiches or Chicken Salad and Buttered Rolls
Olives
Cut-up Fruit, Cakes, Candies
Hot Coffee or Tea Punch

Hot Menu

Chops and Bacon
(Allow two chops and three slices bacon to each person)
Rolls to Split and Toast, Butter
Tomato and Chopped Cabbage Salad
Chocolate Layer Cake
Coffee
Marshmallows (to toast)

The Bandbox

BY

Louis Joseph Vance

Elbow on knee and chin in hand, eyes fixed upon his face, she sat as one entranced, unable still to shake off the spell of his invention: more lovely, he thought, in this mood of thoughtfulness even than in her brightest animation. Then with a little sigh she roused, relaxed her pose, and sat back, faintly smiling.

"Well?" he asked diffidently. "What do you think?"

"It's splendid," she said with a soft, warm glow of enthusiasm—"simply splendid. It's coherent, it hangs together from start to finish; you've got little to learn about construction, my dear. And my part is magnificent: never have I had a chance to show what I can do with comedy. I'm delighted beyond words. But. . ." She sighed again, distrait.

"But—?" he repeated anxiously.

"There are one or two minor things," she said with shadowy regret, "that you will want to change, I think: nothing worth mentioning, nothing important enough to mar the wonderful cleverness of it all."

"But tell me—?"

"Oh, it's hardly worth talking about, dear boy. Only—there's the ingenue role; you've given her too much to do; she's on the stage in all of my biggest scenes, and has business enough in them to spoil my best effects. Of course, that can be arranged. And then the leading man's part—I don't want to seem hypercritical, but he's altogether too clever; you mustn't let him overshadow the heroine the way he does; some of his business is plainly hers—I can see myself doing it infinitely better than any leading man we could afford to engage. And those witty lines you've put into his mouth—I must have them; you won't find it hard, I'm sure, to twist the lines a bit, so that they come from the heroine rather than the hero. . . ."

Staff held up a warning hand, and laughed.

"Just a minute, Alison," said he. "Remember this is a play, not a background for you. And with a play it's much as with matrimony: if either turns out to be a monologue it's bound to be a failure."

Alison frowned slightly, then forced a laugh, and rose. "You authors are all alike," she complained, pouting; "I mean, as authors. But I'm not going to have any trouble with you, dear boy. We'll agree on everything; I'm going to be reasonable and you've got to be. Besides, we've heaps of time to talk it over. Now I'm going to change and get up on deck. Will you wait for me in the saloon, outside? I shan't be ten minutes."

"Will I?" he laughed. "Your only trouble will be to keep me away from your door, this trip." He gathered up his manuscript and steamer-cap, then with his hand on the door-knob paused. "Oh, I forgot that blessed bandbox!"

"Never mind that now," said Alison. "I'll have Jane repack it and take it back to your steward. Besides, I'm in a hurry, stifling for fresh air. Just give me twenty minutes. . . ."

She offered him a hand, and he bowed his lips to it; then quietly let himself out into the alleyway.

Coveted Prize Won by Apex Trail Rangers of St. Andrew's Church

Word has been received by Mr. Newton Thompson that the "Apex" Trail Rangers of St. Andrew's Church, of which he is the Mentor, are Dominion Champions of Athletics as specified under the Rules and Regulations governing all Trail Rangers' Groups. Each year an Athletic Contest is held wherever Trail Ranger Groups are formed and the results are forwarded to Head Office, Toronto. These are tabulated and the Group winning the highest points are entitled to the "Dominion Shield." This "Shield" comes to Belleville this year. Out of a possible 500 points the "Apex" Group won 474. "Beaver" Group of St. John came second with 425 points. The "Apex" Group are to be heartily congratulated on the winning of this "Shield."

TOMORROW'S GAME.

The second series of the Central Ontario Baseball League will commence tomorrow when all teams in the league will be in action. Oshawa will be in Belleville to try conclusions with the G.T.R. team here. As it will be a half holiday in the city there will no doubt be a large attendance of spectators at the Agricultural Park. Our boys are out to win the second series and every encouragement should be given them. The game will be called at 3 o'clock.

WANTS MORE TIME

Jess Willard will not consider September 29 as a date for his proposed championship bout with Jack Dempsey, according to Gene Doyle, the challenger's local representative. Willard wants an additional two or three weeks of training to make sure that he will be in condition for the match.

AUSTRALIA'S OFFER

Word comes from Australia that a syndicate of sportsmen of Sydney will offer Champion Jack Dempsey $100,000 flat or a liberal percentage to fight Harry Wills, colored challenger, 20 rounds at the Sydney stadium at a date to be agreed upon. In addition, the syndicate will furnish a side bet of $25,000 or more for Dempsey to cover.

WON 3,350-MILE RACE

Paris, July 24.—Lambot, a Belgian bicyclist, yesterday was declared the victor in the longest bicycle road race on record.

The Belgian negotiated a 3,350-mile trip around France, in 222 hours 9 minutes 54 seconds, actual riding time.

One hundred and twenty-five riders started in the race from Paris on 25th June, and thirty-eight finished yesterday.

WORLD BILLIARD RECORD

Roger Conti, the French billiard player, in a match with Gibelin, another Frenchman, ran 3,600 points at 18.2 balk line in 59 innings, for an average of 61. French billiardists claim this a world record average, the former record of 57.5 having been held by Jake Schaefer the world champion. Conti's high run in the match was 432, as against Schaefer's record of 436, made in 1921. Gibelin in the match scored 2,136 points.

New York, July 24.—Miss Hilda Jamon, premier English woman swimmer, is now on her way to the United States to compete in the international long distance race for the Joseph P. Day Cup, on August 1. She will meet the foremost American women swimmers in the distance swim, which is to be held in New York.

WILL NOT DEFEND TITLE

Arthur Pullaw, who holds the trophy of the American Canoe Association for single blade paddle, which he won last year, will not defend it this year, on account of an operation he underwent a short time ago for appendicitis. The races are to be held on August 12th.

"LIVERPOOL JACK'S" SCHOOL FOR CRIME

Was Teacher and Leader of a Gang of Youths

New York, July 25.—Detectives delving tonight into the shadowy activities of "Liverpool Jack" Walsh, who ended an international career of crime on Saturday when he died alone, staunching the wounds of four police bullets with tissue paper, were working on the theory that the 65-year-old safe-breaker was the mentor and leader of a band of young burgars.

When Policeman Arthur Loewe, war veteran, fought four thieves in the darkness preceding Saturday's dawn, in a yard in South Brooklyn, he received four wounds which caused his death. Before he died in the Methodist Episcopal Hospital he learned that "Liverpool Jack", one of the four yeggs who escaped, had died from his bullets.

That left three of the band to be accounted for, and spurred on by Loewe's death, detectives went out after them, determined to bring them in. But, up to late tonight, no arrests had been made. Checking up, however, the records of Walsh's crimes, they found that the old crook had one cardinal rule which he never violated—whether he was cracking a safe below New York's "deadline"—which he did once—or rifling a strong-box in England. That was that he must be the leader of every criminal enterprise in which he enlisted.

But, the detectives' pointed out, Walsh came out of prison the last time an old man—he would have been sixty-six years old in a few months—and they were working on the conviction that in order to gratify his quirk for leadership he would have to use young confederates. The police admitted, however, that they had no direct evidence that "Liverpool Jack" was running a school for crime, and refusing, in fact, to disclose the exact extent of their progress on the ground that to do so would handicap the hunt.

BRITISH COAL JUST AS CHEAP

Wholesalers and Railwaymen Believe Canada Will Require Welsh Coal

Toronto, July 25.—If the miners were to commence working to full capacity to-morrow and the railroads were to get back to normal at the same time, there would still be danger of a shortage of coal in Toronto this winter, according to local dealers. Stocks in the city are very low, with practically no anthracite coming in, and very little bituminous and many dealers who had stock piles, sold them some time ago.

K. E. Graburn, manager of the Acme Coal Company, wholesalers, says that his firm was experiencing the greatest difficulty in obtaining coal. This was due as much to the railroad strike as to the trouble in the mines.

Must Act at Once.

As far as the importation of coal from Wales is concerned the dealers look on it not so much as a matter of price as a matter of necessity. "I am afraid that it is going to be a question of coal at any price," said one man, "but we will have to act at once if we expect to get anything from across the ocean."

The Century Coal Company is already bringing in coal by water from Nova Scotia, but has not gone into the ques-

Wales.

"Coal is going to be $16 a ton here," said one freight official, "and I cannot see why it cannot be brought from the old country just as cheaply, if supplies are available. The ocean shipping costs should not exceed $3 per ton."

Railroads in Canada have not yet been affected by the tie-ups, but if the strike continue they undoubtedly will.

RUSSIAN APPEAL TO LL. GEORGE

Exiles Believe he Can Save Condemned Churchmen

Paris July 25.—Pointing out to Mr. Lloyd George that this is his opportunity to show that his efforts to place the Soviets in relationship with the rest of Europe have "neither commercial nor material motive," MM. Bourtseff Kartachoff and Schebeko, prominent Russians, have presented to the British Premier in the name of twenty-seven Russian organizations in Paris an appeal for help to save the members of the Russian clergy condemned to death by the Bolshevik. The principal part of the text of the appeal reads:

"Archbishop Benjamin, Metropolitan of Petrograd, his coadjutor and nine collaborators have just been condemned to death by the Soviet authorities. Their only crime consists of having issued peaceably a protection against robbing the churches of objects considered most sacred, after they had humbly transmitted other objects of value to the Soviet Government.

Monsieur the President, it is now that you can show to the entire world that your Government reflects the chivalrous British spirit universally recognized and glorified. Now you can likewise prove that your efforts to bring the Soviets into relationship with Europe have neither commercial nor material motives—which according to you do not influence England—but emanate from your intense desire to install definite peace in Europe and at the same time lead the Soviets to abandon the savageries—as you have designated their acts—and make them walk in the ways of civilized nations.

"You are at present perhaps the only man in Europe who can influence the Soviets and oblige them to apply towards the unhappy captives what is only the most elementary justice. It is consequently on your intervention that the lives of the members of the Russian clergy condemned to death defend.

LOOK BEFORE YOU DIVE

Toronto, July 24.—A peculiar accident happened in the Humber River, near Toronto, on Saturday afternoon, when J. Haddow, while diving into the water, struck J. Stalks, aged 12, as Stalks was emerging from under water. As a result of the accident, Stalks is in the Western Hospital with a fractured skull. His condition is regarded as serious.

Young Stalks and his companions were following one another in diving from the river bank. Stalks was ahead of Haddow. He emerged from the water, unable to see for the moment, and was struck on the forehead by Haddow's head as the latter dived. The impact drove Stalks under water again, where he lay unconscious. Haddow and other witnesses of the accident brought Stalks to the surface. Haddow was slightly injured.

SUN HATCHES CHICKS ON BECALMED SHIP

Tacoma, Wash., July 25.—A small flock of chickens and ducks was hatched out of the cook's eight cases of Australian eggs, while the ship Matzalan lay helpless in the doldrums, with the thermometer averaging 102.

The flippers of a giant sea turtle were cooked for food of the baby chicks. When a few ducklings appeared, a tub of sea water was kept on deck for these youngsters to bathe in.

BRITISH TAXATION

Say They Are Solvent Without Income Tax

London, July 25.—The announcement on Friday last by the chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Robert Horne, that he proposed to raise the question of increased contributions to the imperial exchequer from the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands has caused some stir among the islanders. These islands are in the happy position of being solvent without an income tax.

The Manxmen assert that the British government has no power to levy taxation on the Isle of Man, which possesses an independent legislature, and though the British parliament is able to pass overriding legislation, it would be totally out of accord with modern sentiment if it did so.

With regard to Jersey, one of the Channel Islands, it is worthy of note that the privy council recently refused to sanction a local bill because it considered the existing indirect taxation of the island sufficient.

LOVE FOR TREES LEADS TO DEATH

James S. Wallace Killed by Fall at His Summer Home

Toronto, July 25.—All his life a lover of birds and trees, by strange irony of fate the death yesterday of James S. Wallace, a prominent chapman of this city, was directly attributable to his interest in, or rather affection for, trees. The morning after his arrival at Fancy Free, the camp on Rideau Lake where for twenty-five years he had spent his annual vacations, he climbed an old poplar tree in order to prune away some dead limbs. In his bachelor life, flowers, birds and trees had come almost to fill the place of a family. But in ministering to this old friend, he took hold of a decayed branch and fell upon his back to the ground.

Nurse Hears His Groans.

He had been alone at the time, but, hearing the injured man's groans, Mrs J. A. Washburn and Miss M. Washburn, who were on the island, came to his assistance. Mrs. Washburn was a trained nurse and everything possible was done for him until the arrival of Dr. Harold Whitcomb, camping nearby and Dr. Cregan of Portland.

It was found that the fifth vertebra of his neck had been broken, and after consultation he was removed to the hospital in Smith's Falls, where he was operated upon on Sunday night in a vain effort to stave off death, which came yesterday.

ENGINE, RUNNING IN GARAGE, EXHAUSTS OXYGEN, KILLING MAN.

Jersey City, July 25.—With the engine of his automobile running, Arthur Welsh, 28 years old, was found dead on the floor of the garage at 225 Clerk street, Jersey City, yesterday. Surgeons attributed the death to carbon monoxide poisoning, the engine eating up the oxygen in the small house.

Welsh had taken several friends, including his brother-in-law, Harry A. Dennison, for a ride Saturday night, returning early yesterday morning. He left the party and took the machine into the garage. He closed the door and with the engine running went to sleep on the floor.

When Welsh failed to return home, Dennison went to the garage, where he found Welsh dead.

LORD ROSEBERRY ENTERS PROTEST

London, July 25.—The proposal to erect within Edinburgh Castle a war memorial to Scottish soldiers has drawn more than one letter of protest from Lord Rosebery, who declines to accept the proposition as a national one and condemns tampering in this manner with ancient buildings.

The Duke of Atholl, who is chairman of the committee in charge of the project, declares that the large number of small individual subscriptions proves that there is general support of the scheme, and he denies that the castle will suffer any injury by the memorial. The subscriptions amount to £130,000, which is £50,000 more than is required.

A WORLD POWER CONFERENCE

A World Power Conference, to be held in London in 1924, is now being organized by the British Electrical and Allied Manufacturers' Association, with Mr. D. N. Dunlop as director. The conference will concern itself with actual and potential sources of industrial power, and will, in particular, discuss the world's mineral fuel resources, hydro-electric power, irrigation and transportation, the improvement of technical education and other cognate subjects. It is anticipated that the conference will result in the compilation of an inventory of the world's power resources, the acceleration of mechanical progress and an improved means of exchanging information relating to scientific invention and discovery. The proceedings are being organized in connection with the great Exhibition to be held in London in 1924, at which there will be the greatest display of machinery ever yet attempted.

BRITISH RAILWAY NOVELTIES

One of the leading British railway companies has recently completed its first electric locomotive for main line traction. This locomotive is capable of hauling a full size train at a speed of 65 miles per hour; and at its recent trials it completely fulfilled the exacting specifications which had been placed before its designers. All the electrical and other equipment for this locomotive was designed and manufactured in Great Britain. The same railway company has been conducting an interesting series of experiments with the object of improving services on certain branches of the line where the running of long trains is not justified by the volume of traffic. On such routes vehicles closely similar to the ordinary motor omnibus have been placed, the wheels being flanged as required for running on rails. After the results of the experiments have been ascertained the company will probably construct special omnibus vehicles with a view to giving a frequent service on lines of low traffic density.

BRITISH COAL FOR CANADA

London, July 25.—British collieries are receiving many inquiries for coal to be shipped to Canada to meet the shortage which the strike of the United States miners is expected to cause next Winter. It will be remembered that during the last miner's strike in this country, Canada shipped several cargoes of coal to Glasgow, mostly for use by the Glasgow municipal gas works, an action which was strongly objected to by the Labor members of Glasgow Council. The movement now promises to be all the other way. It is said that orders from Canada, the United States and South America have brought up the Scottish export figures almost to pre-war figures, although actual shipment has scarcely commenced. Welsh steam coal has advanced one shilling per ton in price.

CUNARD LINER SNAPS ELECTRIC CABLES

Montreal, July 25.—Industrial districts on the south shore of the St. Lawrence were deprived of power and light last night as result of the masts of the Cunard liner "Tyrrhenia" bringing down four of the six big cables of the Shawinigan Water and Power Company which cross the river at Banlieu, a mile and a half below Three Rivers. No loss of life was reported.

INCREASE IN COTTON RATES

New Duties Cause Protest From U.S. Consumers'

Washington, July 25.—In the course of the debate on the cotton schedule in the tariff bill, it has been clearly demonstrated in the Senate that the rates on cotton yarns, cloths and cotton goods of various kinds are being increased at the instance of the finance committee to an extent which will almost inevitably cause a protest from U.S. consumers when these rates go into effect. While a number of the Republican Senators are joining with the Democrats in trying to reduce the rates in the cotton schedule, they have not succeeded in reducing many of these rates. Only about half a dozen of the Republican Senators are willing to make a consistent fight for the lower duties.

Senator Simmons, the ranking Democratic member of the Finance Committer, made a statement in connection with the high rates which is of interest as showing the trend of the new duties on cotton goods. He was referring to the rates proposed—and later adopted—as contained in one paragraph of the cotton schedule covering a large number of cotton goods commonly used in the household such as towels, quilts, pillow-cases, cotton blankets, sheets and the like.

Senator Simmons said it was "a very remarkable thing that we are able to export to Canada about four times as much of these products in value as we imported from all the world."

"Canada, which is a Dominion of Great Britain," said Senator Simmons," which has a preferential tariff with Great Britain, is able or prefers to buy our products instead of buying the British products. Of course, the tariff, being preferential in favor of the Mother Country, is lower upon the British products than it is upon the American products, and yet Canada buys from us, which indicates that we can sell for less than Great Britain, who is our great competitor in these products."

Senator Simmons called attention to the fact that U.S. exports of these goods are large not only to Canada but to other countries; that the imports to the United States of these goods amounts to but little; and, as shown by U.S. exports to Canada, that this country can hold its own in competition with Great Britain. In other words Senator Simmons pointed out the United States is making cotton goods for a price which enables U.S. manufacturers to export them to Canada in large quantities despite the preferential tariff of Canada with Great Britain.

Senator Simmons demonstrated, from official figures of the tariff commission, that the present Underwood-Simmons law is amply protective so far as cotton goods are concerned and the imports are negligible. Yet in face of this and in the face of evidence that cotton goods can be produced in the United States as cheaply as in Europe, and especially as cheaply as in the United Kingdom, the rates are to be raised. He pointed out that the effect would be to add still more heavily to the burden to the United States consumers.

It was admitted in the course of the debate that part of the rates in the cotton schedule were actually written—in other words, dictated by former Senator Lippitt of Rhode Island, a big cotton manufacturer, who has visited Washington frequently in recent months.

LLOYD GEORGE, THE MAN

(George Renwick, in The Daily Chronicle, London.)

Mrs. Philip Snowden has, in the German political weekly, 'Das Tagebuch,' been telling the German public what she thinks of Mr. Lloyd George

At the outset of a remarkable article she frankly admits that she has changed her mind with regard to the Prime Minister, and says that had she been asked about him during the war, at the time of the struggle with the Boers, or during the suffragette campaign for the vote, her opinion would have been different from what it is to-day.

'I know a man who sat opposite Mr Lloyd George in the House of Commons for 18 years,' she says, 'and at the end of that period he had to admit that the British Premier was as great a puzzle as ever.

'But one thing I know of him, and that is really an outstanding feature of his character: he is free from malice. He is incapable of mean revenge and paltry personal spite......I have never heard that Mr. Lloyd abused an open, honorable opponent.'

Mrs. Snowden says she is quite sure that Mr. Lloyd George will continue to play a role in public life in England whether he remains Prime Minister after the coming General Election or not.

Personally she believes that 'his brave fight at Genoa has so heightened his prestige that he will remain in office. But, Minister or not, he will be a power to be reckoned with.

'He is filled with healthy Radicalism to his finger-tips,' Mrs. Snowden goes on. 'And he it was, more than any other, who held the nation together during the war. He accomplished this by virtue of the magnetic power of his living and energetic personality, which discharged itself in impassioned speeches and brilliant 'winged words.'

'I believe that Mr. Lloyd George is the greatest living coiner of 'winged words.' Again and again during the war he aroused the nation with some energetic sentence, and with some remarkable formula kept it, united and energetic, at its terrible work.

His speeches which he hurls out under the influence of the greatest excitment, are a mixture of romance and prophecry. There is a power in them that can rouse the dead to life, and can clothe the pale skeleton of doubt and hesitation with the glowing flesh of hope and trust.

Imagine the man he is. He is nearly 70, small of figure and a trifle stout. His white, flowing hair falls loosely about his head, sometimes over his coat collar. He has the merriest, most friendly, blue-grey eyes which, when his sense of the comic or his detestation of evil is aroused, will twinkle humorously or else frown angrily.

'He walks very rapidly, his movements are definite, and he acts always for a certain reason. He has the energy of ten average men, and there is no strolling through life for him. His hands are small and pointed, like an artist's. The breadth of his shoulders suggests unusual muscular strength, and the rapidity of his movements speaks of extraordinary vitality.

'Mr Lloyd George is the master politician, and he knows the political game from the first to the last letter of its alphabet.

'But his love is for music. I once heard him say that he would rather be a musician than Prime Minister of England. That was a very interesting light on his character.

'Folk songs and glorious old hymns he adores, and he himself sings them not at all badly. My most pleasant memory of him is this—a tired man decorated with all the orders he had to wear at a great official banquet at the Genoa Conference, sings, before he leaves the house, an engaging little song of his native Wales.

'At Chequers, the official country seat of the Prime Minister, we have sung the songs of all races, even the gloomy, hopeless revolutionary songs of suffering Russia. But the most impressive moment was when the whole company sang a religious hymn of thanks, and when Mr. Lloyd George led, with a voice and hand, to the last note of triumph. On such occasions the real Lloyd George reveals himself, a man of faith and humility.

'Let his numerous critics point to weaknesses in his temperament; let them accuse him of failure in Paris and say that he sinfully concluded compromises which must enslave our children's children; let angry Tory die-hards drag his limehouse speech to the light; let self-righteous Liberal assert they could have done things better (though their past gives that the lie); let office aspirants in the rank of the Labor Party grumble that he makes use of their political properties; let the French rage at that which, in their stubbornness, they regard as treason—his faith will always save him. And it will also save us. And Europe.

Far more important and stronger than anything else in Mr. Lloyd George's character is his piety. Through that, and in spite of everything, he will understand—if he does not already do so—that he belongs to Europe, and no longer merely to England.

'The people of Europe dream that the man who led England to the conquest of Germany will yet lead England and Germany, and, if they will, Russia and France and Italy, to the conquest of peace and to the rescue of Europe.

RIVAL EDITORS COME TO BLOWS

Not In Belleville—Striking Incident as Result of Strike

Ware, Mass, July 24.—Divergent views on the merits of the textile strike here led two rival editors to meet in combat in front of the Town Hall yesterday morning. Later in the day C. E. Pickner, correspondent of a labor periodical, swore out a warrant charging Captain W. H. Dearden, editor of a local newspaper, with assault.

When the 2,500 employees of the Otis Company went on strike March 7 Pickner took their part and in his articles attacked Captain Dearden for remaining neutral in the controversy. One of Pickner's articles, which appeared yesterday, charged Dearden with being "yellow from his head down to his shoes."

Early yesterday when Captain Dearden took a walk to the postoffice he found Pickner sitting on the Town Hall steps.

"I guess it's about time to show you how yellow I am", remarked the Captain, and, according to bystanders, he hauled Pickner to his feet and knocked him down. When Pickner refused to get up again. Dearden lifted him to his feet and knocked him down once more.

A special police officer held Dearden's spectacles while the militant editor worked.

CURED WHILE HE WAITED

Paris, July 24.—A paralytic cripple on a train of pilgrims going to Lourdes has not been obliged to wait for a cure by the miraculous well. His cure was effected by an express train during a stop at Dijon depot. With a number of the party he was partaking of refreshment at the railroad restaurant when a bell suddenly rang announcing the departure of the pilgrim train. Hobbling slowly across the track the cripple saw a fast train bearing down on him. A cry of horror rose among the spectators. But the cripple dropped his crutches and raced to safety. Fear had cured him.

MAY McAVOY PLEASES IN ANOTHER FAMOUS ROLE

Those pessimistic persons who bewail the "cheapness" of motion pictures should all see "Morals" which opened at Griffin's last night, with May McAvoy in the stellar role.

For "Morals" is none other than a screen version of that delightful whimsical novel by William J. Locke "The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne." So here is the best of modern British literature brought to the screen without injury in the transition, by those two finished artists in their respective fields, Julia Crawford Ives, Scenarist, and William Desmond Taylor, director.

Those who admired the remarkable human appeal of May McAvoy in "Sentimental Tommy" will have additional cause to commend that quality after seeing "Morals." She makes the little Anglo-Turkish harem girl a real person, a maid whose developing character provides new pleasures as the picture proceeds on its way.

William P. Carleton is an excellent choice for Sir Marcus Ordeyne, Kathlyn Williams is splendid as usual in the important role of Judith Mainwaring.

Accompanying a solo on the hash-house cash register over which she presides with excellent eye technique Gladys Walton is some swell little flapper vamp in "The Wise Kid," the Universal comedy drama which was the second feature offering exhibited. In the first part of the story she craves too much class, but in the last part she is perfectly satisfied to nestle in the comfortable arms of a baker's boy with an honest chest measure.

A amusing Harold Lloyd comedy was exhibited during the evening and was well received.

CALLS PROLETARIAT TO TAKE OFFENSIVE

Moscow, July 25.—For the first time in many months the executive committee of the third internationale has sent an appeal to the proletariat of the world recommending its taking the offensive. In view of the "white terror" and the attacks on workmen abroad, the appeal says, it is time defensive tactics ceased.

The committee also sent a special appeal to the Germans declaring their national leaders had betrayed them, and recommending that the workers take power into their own hands and dismiss the leaders if the latter failed to overcome the monarchial reaction.

REMARKABLE GROWTH OF CABLE SERVICE

London, July 25.—Fifty years ago yesterday the Eastern Associated Telegraph Company laid their first submarine cable. At that time there were only 8,000 miles of cables in existence, and only a limited portion of the earth was covered. To-day there are 325,000 miles of cable, encompassing every part of the habitable globe.

At yesterday's jubilee celebration of the Eastern Company's birth, the Duke of York, Prime Minister Lloyd George and other notables congratulated the corporation on its long and useful career and said it could claim a large share of the credit for bringing the countries and peoples of the earth closer together.

Moscow, July 25.—A note just addressed by the Soviet Government to Great Britain, France and Italy protests the failure of these countries, as custodians of the Dardanelles, to prevent Greek warships from passing through the straits and bombarding an Italian port. TO INVESTIGATE SEWER WORK

Special Committee of City Council to Report upon all Sewer Work

At the City Council meeting held last evening the business transacted was chiefly of a routine nature. A recommendation was adopted increasing the salary of Mr. Wm. Harden, manager of the Gas department, being the only official whose salary was touched. A by-law was passed appointing a special committee to deal with all matters regarding the purchase and sale of debentures and investment of sinking funds. Some other matters of minor importance were attended to.

Members present were Mayor Hanna, Aldermen Ostrom, French, Patterson, Thompson, Donohue, Robinson, McCreary and Greenleaf. Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Reports of committees, communications, etc., were laid on the table and council went into committee of the whole on reports, etc., Ald McCreary in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed also the following recommendation.

Increased Salary.

Recommended that the salary of Mr. Harden, as manager of the Gas department, be placed at $1400 per year, commencing on July 1st.

That two dummy policemen be procured on 30 days trial and if satisfactory to the Chief of Police to be purchased.

That accounts for shovelling snow, properly certified by the City Foreman and not already paid be charged on the taxes of the property liable for.

That tenders be asked for the privilege of handling the old city ambulance for contagious diseases.

Investigation Committee.

The Mayor and members of the Council were requested to be in attendance at the official visit of the Ontario Legislature Hotel Investigation Committee who are to meet in this city on July 28th.

Mayor Hanna—The Committee will meet at the Chamber of Commerce building at 9.30 on the 28th inst and the members of the council can attend same.

The communication was ordered to be filed.

That Aldermen Patterson, Donohue and Greenleaf be a special committee to have soundings taken and report on the feasibility of the construction of the Corby baths or swimming pool on Victoria Park.

Enquiries.

Alderman McCreary asked if employment could be given to a Mr. Saunders a returned man who was in need of work for his family.

Ald. French—Possibly a job can be found for him on the water works.

Mayor Hanna—What about the construction of the sewer on Pope street which had been petitioned for?

Ald Donohue—A motion prevailed that all sewers petitioned for be constructed under a by-law to be passed.

Ald. Greenleaf—Is the garbage being dumped on the legal dumping ground?

Ald. Robinson—The dumping at present is in the marsh off the bay bridge road to connect with Zwick's Island.

Mayor Hanna—They are dumping it on the opposite side of the road. It is dumping on a good street.

Ald. McCreary—It is being dumped on College street near the bridge and causing a bad odor in that locality.

Ald. Robinson—I will see the Inspector in reference to this matter.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Moved by Ald. Robinson, seconded by Ald McCreary that Aldermen Greenleaf, French, Patterson and Thompson and the City Engineer be a committee to investigate the construction of sewers built during the past five years, in order to ascertain whether such work has been properly done in accordance with plans and specifications relating to same, and that said committee report to this council any discrepancies or irregularities that may be found.

The motion prevailed after several of the Aldermen had spoken on it.

Council adjourned until Friday next.

Trent Waters Not Enough to Supply Power

Sir Adam Beck Says St. Lawrence Power Will Have to be Used for Central Ontario—"Situation is Serious"—Price of Power to Go Up

RANNEY FALLS LEASE TO BE RATIFIED

Toronto, July 26.—Sir Adam Beck has arranged with the Federal Government for the water rights at Ranney's Falls at a flat price of $24,000 per annum, and has succeeded in eliminating the demand for a $7-per-horsepower rental fee for consumption exceeding 6,000 horsepower. Originally the Federal proposition was for $3.50 per horsepower up to 6,000 h.p. The maximum under the new agreement is 12,000 h.p.

"We consider the rental excessively high," said Sir Adam upon his return yesterday: "and chiefly because of this there will have to be an increase in rates in that district, a schedule of which the engineers are preparing. It is a very serious increase, and it means an increase in the rates of all the district.

Power Will Soon Be Gone

"But the most serious thing is the natural growth in the east and the increased usage of electricity. In a year or two the whole of the power available from the Trent will be gone, and the engineers are now arranging and drafting the maximum amount that will be available to each of the municipalities in that district. We are going to tell them now just what each municipality is going to be able to receive, so that they can govern themselves accordingly.

"After the Trent power is all utilized, there is nothing further in sight for that district but the St. Lawrence. The St. Lawrence is the next step in eastern Ontario. All the power will be used, however, before the St. Lawrence can be developed. We think the municipalities ought to know just where they are at in connection with power matters."

Approve of Investigation

According to Sir Adam, the commission yesterday dealt at very great length with the situation in the Trent district, and approved of the suggestion and recommendation that Mr. McRae, consulting engineer, of Ottawa, investigate and report on the location of a joint guaging station and regulation of the Trent waters so as to avoid confusion and dispute as to the regulation and flow of the water in the Trent system, which has resulted in controversy between the operating departments of the commission and the Government as to the possible flow and the water available on the Trent River.

The lease for Ranney Falls was authorized to be signed, and the commission expects to proceed with the completion of the connection at Ranney's Falls and the development plant of the commission, and a large force will be put to work to complete it at the earliest date.

Situation Most Serious

"The power shortage in the district is a most serious one," said Sir Adam. "The commission is satisfied that the normal growth in demand in this district, due to the increased cost of coal and gas, and electricity being substituted to a

CHILD STRANGLED TO DEATH BY CLOTHING

Oshawa, July 26.—Eleven-months-old Mary Rita, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Stramour, 27 Bond street east, was strangled to death in the absence of her mother from the house. Mrs. Stramour was called out of the house on some business, and, having no one to mind the child, she pinned its clothing to the bed mattress. During her absence the infant rolled on to the floor, the pinned garment being loose enough to permit the child a certain amount of motion, and was dead from strangulation when the mother returned.

REBEL LEADERS GET TEN YEARS

South African Treason Court Deals With Revolutionists

(Canadian Press Cable.)

London, July 26.—The special treason court, trying cases growing out of the recent Rand revolt, concluded its first case today, when Rasous Peter Erasmus, one of the principal leaders of the revolution, was sentenced to ten years' penal servitude, says Reuter's Johannesburg correspondent.

ONTARIO ELECTION WILL BE NEXT YEAR

Drury Won't go to Country This Year—By-Election Coming

Ontario, July 26.—The Drury government is not going to the country this year. That much is pretty certain as a result of a survey of the whole situation. The government gave more or less definite pledges to the legislature two years ago that the legislature would be allowed its full span of life unless the government was defeated in the house. This fact, among other considerations, is said to have had weight with the ministers.

If a general election is not to be held in October, thus spoiling Hon. Howard Ferguson's prediction, a date must soon be set for holding the South-east Toronto by-election to fill the seat vacated by the death of John O'Neill and the Russell by-election for filling the seat made vacant by the passing of the late Mr. Racine.

A number of prominent Toronto citizens have expressed a readiness to run as government candidates in the South-east Toronto contest, but while the government would put a man in the field if it felt he had any chance of being elected, no selection has yet been made. But the date for polling is likely to be announced at an early date.

If a general provincial election is not held this year it will have to be held by the fall of 1923.

"GOOD LIQUOR" GOES BEGGING

Unclaimed Car Load of Booze Peddled in Vain by Prohibition Officials

Philadelphia, July 26.—Genuine Gordon gin and "Johnny Walker" whiskey is going begging here for less than a dollar a quart. The Federal District Attorney and the United States Marshal are meeting with very little luck in their efforts to peddle a carload of choice liquors which prohibition officials seized several weeks ago when it arrived in a railroad yard marked "assorted vegetables".

There is a bill of $500 due the railroad for freight and ice and it's up to the government to pay it. The parties to whom the car was consigned waived all interest in the shipment, and declared they hadn't the remotest idea who could have addressed so much liquor to them.

A representative of the United States Attorney has been going the rounds of the hospitals trying to sell the whiskey for one dollar a quart, in lots not to exceed three cases. Even though, he declared the government would guarantee its genuineness and finally consented to knock off twenty-five cents on the price of each bottle, there was no rush of legal customers. The gin would be sold for most any price, he said.

Most of the hospitals appear to be well stocked, the government agent said.

RAILWAY STRIKE IS AUTHORIZED

Montreal Union Officials Issue Statement on Shopmen's Ballot

NO DETAILS OF VOTE

Conciliation Board is Asked for on Wage Reduction

Montreal, July 26.—Although the union officials of Number 4 Division, Railway Shopmen of Canada, were not disposed to give out any figures with regard to strike ballots, which are now being counted and which are arriving in Montreal from all parts of Canada, an official statement issued here declares that a strike has been authorized, and will be declared "should the railways carry out their threat to reduce wages."

It is probable that detailed ballot figures will be announced some time to-day.

The official statement is issued over the signature of James Somerville, vice-president, International Association of Machinists, and, after recounting at some length the steps leading up to the present position, states that the railways, through the Canadian Railway Association, have "flouted" the Dominion law by putting the wage reduction into operation before the Board of Conciliation has even commenced its hearings, and claims that by doing so the railways have assumed responsibility for inciting or causing a lock-out or strike under the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, sections 56, 57 and 58."

The statement is made that for the past year and a half on the Canadian Pacific Railway the earnings of the highest paid skilled mechanics average slightly over $100 a month and for the past seven months less than $90.

NOUGHT SO UNKIND AS MAN'S INGRATITUDE

Montreal, July 26.—For stealing $141 from a man who had found him destitute on the street, taken him home, fed and employed him, Hector Cartier was yesterday sentenced to three months' imprisonment by Judge Cusson. Complainant was Louis Stgermain, who said Cartier had told him the day after he stole the money that he had spent it on a good time.

KIDNAPPED WOMAN IS FREED BY JUDGE

Incarceration in Asylum Illegal, He Finds

Montreal, July 26—Mrs. Yvonne Lamontagne was ordered to be liberated from the Hospital for the Insane at Longue Pointe yesterday by judgment rendered in Superior Court by Mr. Justice Martineau. The judgment holds her incarceration, which was made at the request of her husband, and on certificates from two practising doctors of the city, as illegal, and orders that she be freed forthwith.

It was alleged in the request for liberation, that three unknown men had set upon the women on the afternoon of July 5, as she was leaving her sister's home on Amherst street, and forcibly took her to the asylum.

BANKING RETURNS.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Ottawa, July 26.—The note circulation of the chartered banks showed an increase in June over the previous month, though there was a decrease from June, 1921. The monthly bank statement issued by the Finance Department gives the circulation of bank notes as $166,065,839 for June, as compared with $155,652,145 for May and $196,675,217 for June, 1921. Call and current loans in Canada both show decreases for June from May figures.

MISSING WARDS ARE LOCATED

Three Youngsters Who Escaped From Shelter are at Long Lake

Some time between the hours of 7.30 and 10 o'clock on the night of the 14th inst. three children, Ephraim Sweet, Lulu Sweet of Napanee, and Elsie Martin of Frankford escaped from the Children Shelter here and no trace of them was found until to-day. A postal card was this morning received from Mr. Robert Babcock of Long Lake, near Parkham, County of Frontenac, stating that on the 18th inst. three children came to his place and were from the Shelter here. An offical of the institution left to-day to bring the youngsters back, who were respectively twelve, nine and eight years of age. How they reached Long Lake is not at present known.

PEACE MISSION FROM CORK CITY

Lord Mayor Heads Party Which Has Arrived in Dublin

Dublin, July 26.—The Lord Mayor of Cork and other delegates have arrived here on a peace mission, according to the correspondent of the London Times, who says he learns their proposal is that the members of the new Irish Parliament and of the old Dail Eireann, shall meet forthwith, for the purpose of reaching terms of settlement. He expresses the belief, however, that the provincial government officials will consent to nothing short of complete surrender, and the laying down of arms by the Republicans.

The correspondent has information also that the provincial government has decided upon a further postponement of the meeting of the new parliament.

Latest news from Cork, contained in a message received here yesterday, is that the city is quiet, but expectant.

STUNT IN WATER COST HIM HIS LIFE

Pittsburg, July 26.—Two men were in jail here yesterday in connection with the drowning of William G. Githens, who died while attempting to free himself under water from thongs which bound his hands and feet. Two companions, to whom he had boasted of his ability to escape from knotted cords, tied Githens at his request, police say, and dropped him into the river. He rose to the surface screaming and attracted nearby batseys. They were too late to rescue him.

DELAYS CERTIFYING DELORME INSANE

And Appointment of Curator to Manage Priest's Estate is Held Up

Montreal, July 25.—The petition of the Delorme family for the appointment of a curator to administer the estate of Adelard Delorme is held up pending the issue of a certificate of insanity by the medical superintendent of the hospital in which he is detained, Dr. Brochu, superintendent of Beauport asylum. The application was made immediately after Delorme was declared unfit to stand trial and the delay in issuing the certificate of insanity is arousing no little interest.

The law requires that for the purpose of appointing a curator the certificate of insanity must emanate from the superintendent of the institution in which the insane person is detained. It may be that Dr. Brochu is anxious to make a thorough examination of his patient before certifying him insane. But the need of such a long examination suggests to many the possibility of a difference of verdict. Eight experts in Montreal have found the man insane. The position would be interesting if Dr. Brochu differed from them: Dr. McTaggart, it may be remembered, was not prepared to certify the man insane.

Previous cases have been known where the Quebec experts differed from those of Montreal.

COWARD THUGS BEAT WOMAN

Bandits Rob Farm Home Woman Puts up Fight With Fists

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Prairie Duchien, Wis., July 26.—Bandits yesterday beat Ellen Horigan in a farmhouse in Kickapoo Valley and escaped with twenty-five thousand dollars in gold which the woman and her two brothers had in their home. The woman, who is sixty-four, put up a good fight with fists, but one of the bandits struck her across the back and broke her shoulder.

MEN IN FAVOR OF RAIL STRIKE

Union Officials Announce That 97 Per Cent. Call For Walk Out

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 26.—Railway Union officials announced today that out of 49,936 ballots cast by Canadian Railway Shopmen on question of striking against or accepting wage cuts recently tentatively introduced by companies, 97 per cent favored striking.

A telegram was immediately sent to Premier King over the signature of R. J. Tallon, President of Division No. 4 of the Railway Employees Department of the American Federation of Labor, announcing the result of strike vote, and asking if the railways had agreed to withdraw the reductions. The telegram requested an immediate answer, and until this is received no definite action will be taken.

Adams of this district, License Inspector J. F. Naphin is in charge of the office here.

BRITISH COAL FOR AMERICA

Attitude of U.S. Workers During British Strike Is Remembered

UNION MEN AGREE

Price of Welsh Coal Advances as Result of Big Orders

London, July 24.—The price of Welsh steam coal advanced about two shillings a ton this afternoon as a result of the heavy demand from across the Atlantic and large orders from South America, which hitherto received its fuel from the United States.

Important contracts, reported to involve 1,000,000 tons, have been placed with Scottish pits for immediate shipment, and additional contracts for another 1,000,000 tons are under negotiation. The first shipment of Welsh coal has already departed for America.

No Interference by Union.

Rumors that British organized Labor would refuse to permit English coal to be shipped to America during the strike were denied to-day. An official of the Miners' Federation said: "The matter of sending coal to America was not even discussed at last week's conference of the miners' leaders at Blackpool. The miners would not listen to any proposition to ban from America English coal. When the British miners were out on a strike the Americans sent as much coal as they possibly could out here, and the English miners remember that."

Sir Samuel Instone, the head of a big firm, said: "Orders are pouring in especially at Newcastle. Restriction of our exports would be ill-advised,, and I do not expect such action. During the English strike last year the Americans flooded the foreign ports with coal, so that when the strike ended the British coal trade collapsed. The British miners and mine-owners must look after themselves if they want increased revenues."

It is reported that 20 steamers have been chartered to carry coal to America from Australia.

GERMANS STILL AT WAR GAME

Fort is Camouflaged as a Range-Finding School on Kiel Canal

Paris July 26.—Council of Ambassadors decided to-day to send a sharp note to the German Government demanding the immediate destruction of the fire control and range finding school quietly established at a strategic point on the Kiel Canal. Allied experts say the school is convertible into a fort commanding the canal entrance.

NO COAL SHORTAGE IN EASTERN CANADA

So Long as Coal Comes From Nova Scotia and Wales

Montreal, July 26.—As long as the coal mines of Nova Scotia are producing coal and coal is available from Wales there will be no shortage of coal in Eastern Canada, despite the regulations imposed yesterday by the United States Government with regard to exportation of coal to the Dominion, prominent coal merchants declared today.

LONDON PASTOR COMES TO BELLEVILLE

Rev. N. S. McKechnie, B. A., B. Th., of Wortley Road Baptist Church, London, Ont., has accepted a call to the pastorate at Victoria Avenue Baptist, Belleville.

He will assume the duties of his new charge early in September.

SAYS BRITAIN IS SOOTY PLACE

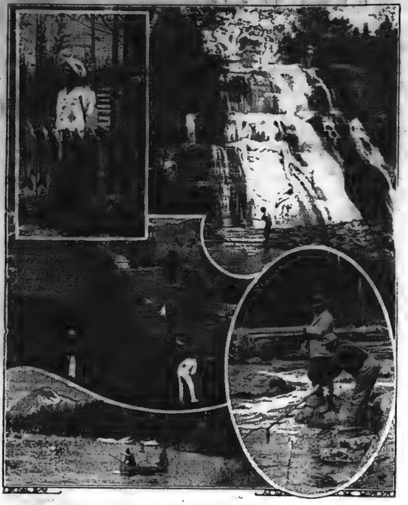
Lord Newton Tells House of Lords That England and Scotland are the Dirtiest Countries in Europe

London, July 26.—Lord Newton, speaking in the House of Lords declared England and Scotland were the dirtiest countries in Europe. His reference was not to the habits of the people, but to the practically unrestricted use of soft coal in factories and for domestic fires.

Lord Newton quoted statistics to show that 300 tons of soot fall every year on each square mile of London, which was enough to build a pyramid four times as high as the famous clock tower over the Houses of Parliament.

Conditions in some provincial cities, he declared, were much worse. In Birmingham, for instances, he declared, the chimneys deposited annually 540 tons of soot per square mile, while in Sheffield and some of the manufacturing cities the deposit was even greater. He said it was estimated that the smoke in Manchester caused an extra expenditure of £50,000 annually for washing men's collars.

Summer on the Lower St. Lawrence



Canada has been blessed with many noble rivers, but queen of all the rivers of the Dominion, and the most historic, is the broad, steel-blue St. Lawrence.

Both shores of the lower St. Lawrence from the quaint old grey-walled city of Quebec to where the river enters the Gulf, are lined with delightful French villages, many of which have developed into decidedly popular and fashionable summer resorts.

Along the rugged north shore, with its purple headlands behind which rise the darker purple Laurentian hills, are to be found Murray Bay, Cap à l'Aigle, St. Irene and Baie St. Paul. Here the French customs and language together with the charm and hospitality of the habitants, have a peculiar fascination for the Anglo-Saxon.

The scenery is magnificent, the river is so wide that the opposite shore appears like a hazy blue line on the horizon; there is the tang of the sea in the air, the hills are studded with lakes abounding in trout; hotel accommodation is good and whether the tourist chooses Murray Bay, the rendezvous of wealth or fashion, or one of the quieter little French villages, he is bound to have a worth-while holiday.

The south shore, while less rugged, is equally enticing with its long white sandy beaches. Rivière du Loup, Cacouna, Bic and Metis Beach are among the most popular, all offering the best of boating, bathing and fishing amid rare natural scenery. There are excellent golf courses on both the north and south shores.

Those, however, who would escape from all traces of civilization, will find sanctuary in the great forest-clad back country of the Province of Quebec, which abounds in lakes and rivers. Lake St. Joseph, Lake Edward and Lake St. John regions and Laurentides National Park abound in fish and game.

All this territory is served by the Canadian National Railways.

To Win the Love of Philip Utard

By DORA MOLLAN

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

That "A woman with fair opportunity and without an absolute hump may marry whom she likes." And "Vanity Fair" being the book chosen as the week's English lesson for the senior class at the Pitman high, it came naturally about that this fragment of the philosophy of a wise man should be the subject of discussion by a group of girl students gathered in a corner of the big assembly room.

"Why, it's no more to be doubted that Professor Bank's toupe!" This calm statement by Susan Belden ought to have settled the question forever—for hadn't Susan littered the steps of Pitman's school system with heartbreaks? Nor was she the prettiest girl in the class, by several.

Some budding iconoclast in the group murmured, sotto voce, "Her mother feeds 'em!" This drew smothered giggles. But it was Anne Tyson, the acknowledged brains of the senior class, who had the temerity to openly qualify the dictum of the class belle.

"You can win a man, girls, by trickery. But you can't keep him by the same method—not if he's worth it." Came a day when this shaft, sped at a fair mark, was to turn, boomerang-like, and fly back at the archer.

Fate seems to have her own inscrutible reasons for requiring certain pairs of individuals to "fall in" side by side and march in step, even when there is no particular sympathy, or even liking. It was that way at school—and afterward—with Sue Belden, daughter of the proprietor of the town's one little department store, and Anne Tyson, whose father was the town's leading physician.

They lived on the same street, played in the same group as children, were members of the same class in "high," both graduated from the commercial course—and then obtained positions in the same office—that of a big chair factory, which was Pitman's leading industry. And to top it off fate carried her fantasy so far as to plunge them both in love with the same man at the same time.

Philip Utard, son of the senior member of the firm, had been transferred from the Boston headquarters to the Pitman plant to learn the details of production. And gossip speculated as to whether he would not follow the example of his father and of an elder brother—and acquire also a life partner from among the establishment's female personnel. That was getting to be quite the Utard way.

If Philip did meditate any such step it was soon apparent enough—to the watchful gossips—that his choice lay between Anne Tyson and Susan Belden, for Philip divided his leisure very evenly between the Tyson and Belden homes, or escorting the girls alternately to such entertainments as the town afforded. Perhaps he enjoyed the company of Anne's father, for Doctor Tyson was a man of broad and genial culture. And it was still said of Sue's mother that she "fed 'em."

Anyway, on a certain day in January it would have been necessary for Phil Utard himself to toss up a penny had he been pinned down to a decision there and then.

It was on this day that Susan took close note of Anne's heightened color as Utard passed close to their desks. She leaned slightly toward Anne, and with a laugh that was just a little machine made, inquired whether she remembered the schoolroom discussion on the Thackerayism. "What cocksure little idiots we were!" she exclaimed. "Wise men change their minds, don't they, Anne—and wise women?"

There was a challenge in the girl's voice. But from the well-poised Anne it got no response beyond a non-committal "sometimes."

Yet the thoughts of Anne were "long, long thoughts" in the hour intervening between her arrival home and the serving of dinner by the rotund Lucinda, boss of the Tyson menage. This hour Anne habitually spent before the fire in the living room awaiting the doctor's return from his afternoon round of calls.

It was here that Anne confessed to herself what she had never confessed before—that for weeks she had been trying with all her might and main—like the nursery rhyme man of the bramble bush—to win the love of Philip Utard. And had she, like the bramble bush man, scratched out both her eyes in the proceeding?

Just because she considered herself a more fit wife than Sue Belden for a man of Philip's mentality, did it follow that she would be able to make him happier? Suppose that, with deliberate effort, she won him—wouldn't he be very likely to discover later that he had been the man of her choice, instead of her being the woman of his? And would that make for happiness for either? There was nothing for her to do but jump right back into that bush!

That evening Philip came to call—and departed vainly trying to recall what he could possibly have done to so change Anne toward him. Not once had she responded to word or look of his in her usual bright, sympathetically interested way. And when her father appeared after his office hours she excused herself and said she was going to retire. So it happened the next time—and again.

Now the cooler Anne grew toward Philip the more desirable she became to him, but try as he would he could make no progress toward finding the cause of her new indifference. Denied even the satisfaction of his instinctive social qualities, Utard turned more often to Susan Belden for companionship and the oftener he did the more persistently his thoughts were occupied with Anne.

It was a cold, sullen February Sunday afternoon when it came to Philip that he could stand this state of affairs no longer, and he set out for the Tyson home, determined to corner Anne and get the truth from her if possible.

From her window Anne caught sight of Philip as he toiled up the hill against the bitter north wind. In an instant she was into her fur coat and tam and running down the back stairs. In the kitchen she successfully dodged the vast bulk of Lucinda, who couldn't see "no sense nohow" in going out on such a day—and was on her way down the back road, which led straight out into the open country, at the moment when Philip rang the bell.

Lucinda, with a wave of her pudgy black hand, pointed out the direction of Anne's flight, disclaiming with a shake of her wooly head any responsibility for "sech foolishness." There was a grim, do-or-die look about Philip as he snugged his coat collar about his neck and set out in pursuit.

Anne looked back from the first rise in the road and saw Philip striding across the back yard. As she reconnoitered again from the summit of the second rise he was just topping the first. The wind whipped her short walking skirt tight against her legs. It was hard going. It began to snow, fine light flakes, forerunner of a real storm. But to Anne the pursuit had become a symbol. She had not the slightest thought of turning back. If Philip really wanted to see her—to be with her—badly enough not to give up in spite of anything—well, she would test him to the utmost of her strength.

And Philip—it seemed to him that his very life depended on overtaking that light figure flying before him into the teeth of the storm, even as his happiness must depend on what was to transpire at the end of the chase. He was gaining fast. The snow blinded Anne's eyes, and the bite of the wind sent tears coursing down her cheeks; but still she managed, somehow, to keep putting one foot ahead of the other. He was almost up to her. Her strength was gone. But surely she could take one more step. And then—she vanished from the sight of the man behind her as though the earth had swallowed her.

There was an excavation—some road work going on and the light timber barrier had been blown away by the wind. Unhurt, but exhausted, Anne lay where she fell. But a strong arm lifted her and held her tight, and Phil's voice said: "I was prepared to follow you to the ends of the earth, but not to the center of it. But we're here. And before we get out you've got to tell me why you have frozen me; why you have avoided me; why you ran away from me just now."

Anne was too tired to lift her head from that broad shoulder. "It was because," she said—"because I didn't have an absolute hump."

Phil let it go at that, then. But a hundred times since, over coffee or crib, he has tried to find out what she meant. But Anne only laughs.

Irish Had "Mayflower" Adventure.

Students of Anglo-American history have just directed attention to the fact that Ireland also had her "Mayflower." This was the Eaglewing, which, no later than 1636, set sail with a full passenger list of Ulstermen for the American colonies. There were 40 passengers, among whom were four ministers. Ill-luck began at once, for unconquerable winds drove the vessel to the Scottish coast. A leak then held the ship in the "Kyles of Bute." Starting again, she achieved mid-Atlantic, but there a hurricane did such damage and caused such general discouragement that finally the Irish pilgrims made up their minds that Providence was frowning on their emigration, and turned their vessel back to Ireland.

A Close Race.

In Texas they tell how, years ago, an Englishman there imported a famous wolfhound from Europe, in order that he might attain wealth catching wolves, by reason of the scalp money offered by one of the state authorities—$10 each.

Some dyed-in-the-wool Texans were invited to witness the first chase. They followed many miles through the prairie grass, but without getting sight of either wolf or hound. Finally they came to a wooded spot, where a native was chopping:

"Did you see a wolf and a hound pass just now?" cried the Britisher.

"Yes, sir; they just passed."

"How was the race?"

"Pretty hot—nip an' tuck. But the dog was a little ahead."

THE BEEHIVE——Chas. N. Sulman

A CURE FOR LEPROSY.

Was Found in Oil by Chemist in Hawaii.

Reports of the discovery of a cure for leprosy by means of ethyl ester, a derivative or ingredient of chaulmoogra oil, are confirmed by Dr. Claude Lavindar, of the United States Public Health Service. The discovery was made by Prof. L. E. Dean, head of the chemical department of the College of Hawaii. As a result of Dr. Dean's work, it seems, the ethyl ester solution was prepared and experiments on fifty-nine lepers were so successful that they were released on parole and, after a year, not the slightest symptom of recurrence of the disease can be detected.

"While chaulmoogra oil has long been a specific for the treatment of leprosy," declared Dr. Lavindar, "it never achieved the results now reliably claimed for it until Dr. Dean prepared the solutions. Dr. Dean's discovery is the greatest thing Hawaii has yet given to the world."

It is announced that the Louisiana State Leper Hospital, which has been bought by the Government, will be enlarged and placed in charge of Dr. O. E. Service, who will carry on work there in connection with the reported cure for leprosy discovered by the service in Hawaii, which involves the use of ethyl esters of the acids of chaulmoogra oil. It is planned to have the best laboratory in the world at the Louisiana hospital, where research will be carried on with a view to improving the methods used in the reported cure. There will be accommodation at the hospital for 500 patients. Two hundred sufferers from leprosy are known to be in the United States, but it is believed that there are in reality ten times that number, secret cases.

The chaulmoogra oil treatment involves hypodermic injections of ethyl ester of the acids of that oil. As reported on by President A. L. Dean of the University of Hawaii, and Dr. J. T. McDonald, director of the leprosy investigation station in Hawaii, the treatment is not as yet claimed to be an absolute cure, but it is stated to have been successful apparently in relieving sufferers from leprosy and checking the spread of the disease, in a number of cases all traces of the trouble having disappeared for a year or two, two or more up to date.

Births and Deaths in England.

While the death rate in England and Wales during 1921 was the lowest on record for the country as a whole, the birth rate was, except for the war years, 1915-1919, the smallest recorded for the whole country. The figures were 12.1 and 22.4 respectively. In the 96 great towns, including London, the figures were: Birth rate, 23.5; death rate, 12.3; and deaths of infants under one year per 1,000 births, 87.

U. S. Farm Implements.

During 1920 the United States manufactured farm implements to the value of $537,000,000; gas tractors accounted for a third of the total 203,000 of them, valued at $193,000,000.

CLIMBERS' FEAT IS PRAISED

What Has Been Accomplished in Scaling Mount Everest is Encouraging

London, July 20.—"Mountaineering proper is not necessarily rashness, but is entirely a question of prudence and of courage, of strength and steadiness, and of feeling for nature and her most hidden beauties, which are often awe-inspiring, but for that reason the more sublime, and to a contemplative spirit the more suggestive."

Sir Francis Younghusband, speaking before the Royal Geographical Society on the Mount Everest expedition, used the foregoing words to express the sentiment which has animated all those connected with the expedition, and then said they were written 33 years ago by a certain father Ratti, who has now become Pope Pius XI.

After describing what the expedition had accomplished, Sir Francis said: "The experience gained this year shows that skilled mountaineers are able to take those unskilled in high mountain craft to the highest altitudes. Geoffrey Bruce had never climbed to snow and ice work, were able Yet under Finch's skilled leadership he was able to attain a height of 27,300 feet. And the Sherpa porters, though they were practically untrained to snoy and ice work, were able, under General Bruce's stimulating influence, to carry loads up to 25,500 feet, some of them making the journey four times and so earning the unstinted praise of the best mountaineers.

"By careful organization and combination of effort, using experience to guide inexperience, and by the display of indomitable pluck on the part of the highest climbers, the expedition has at a bound brought the record up from 24,600 feet to 27,300 feet and thus left only 1,700 feet to be climbed before the crowning summit is reached.

"The standard of human achievement has thereby been sensibly raised. And many another traveller, and many another struggler upward in the walk of life and in every country will be braced and heartened in remembering what Finch and Mallory, Somervell, Norton and Bruce have this year accomplished on Mount Everest. And this, to my mind, is incomparably the most valuable result of the expedition, and a result which makes their efforts in the highest degree worth while."

SAYS SPIRITS CAN FIND MURDERER

Dr. Abraham Wallace Claims Success as a Detective

London, July 15.—(By Mail).—Can spiritualists find out those who commit murder?

"Had I been asked that question," said Dr. Abraham Wallace, of Harley street, at the spiritualists' international conference recently at Finsbury, "I should have made a direct answer in the affirmative." He mentioned that the query had been recently put to Sir A. Conan Doyle in America, and that he gave an evasive reply.

Proceeding to deal with various murders that had been enacted in recent years, and experiments carried out in connection with them by himself, Dr. Wallace said he had abstained from doing anything in this line of investigation for some years.

A few days after a recent murder, however, he had a short sitting with a medium with whom he was carrying out interesting experiments on other lines. Some statements were made which had already been confirmed, and had he been able to obtain an article belonging to the murdered woman he could have been in possession of all the important details.

Corby Bath, A Protest and a Proposal

To the Editor of The Intelligencer.

Sir:—Regarding the Corby public baths, for which we have been waiting so many years, it was with a good deal of surprise and disappointment that the writer heard lately that there is a movement under way in this matter for the building of a concrete pool or bath on the island, to be filled with water drawn from the city mains. Surely, I thought, such a scheme cannot be seriously considered, but on enquiry I learned that such is actually the case, and that this concrete pool filled with pumped water is fathered by one of the aldermen, and suported by an influential few of our leading citizens, so with some fear and trepidation I venture to write this note of protest.

I protest first on sanitary grounds. The Y.M.C.A. authorities could tell, if they would, some of the disagreeable features of a public bathing pool, even when those using it are compelled to go under the shower bath before entering the pool. They could also give specific data as to the cost and trouble entailed in keeping the water in such a pool filtered and purified by their continuous action mechanical filters and violet ray purifiers. The Island concrete pool would not likely have the preliminary shower bath, nor would it have these costly continuous filters, nor would it likely have a trained physical culture man in attendance to assist in maintaining sanitary conditions.

I protest secondly on the grounds of cost of maintainance. A concrete pool of the proper size would hold an enormous amount of water. Even if this water were changed only once a week as in so many indoor pools it would cost the city a large sum each year for pumping this water.

I protest again on the grounds of common sense, though in doing so I beg the pardon of the sponsors of this scheme. Does it seem reasonable to use pumped water, and use it over and over again for perhaps hundreds and hundreds of people, and that right on the edge of running water that is constantly changing? I have talked with several on this subject and find a strong opinion in the city in favor of the running water, and against the pumped water.

I also protest (on my own authority) on behalf of the donor of the gift of $5,000.00 for these public baths. It is perhaps unfortunate that the late Senator Corby was not more explicit in specifying the nature of the 'baths' which he desired to give to the people of Belleville. But those of us who have been in Ottawa, where Mr. Corby spent so much of his later life, and have seen the splendid floating baths in the river right under Parliament Hill, will have a pretty good idea of what the late Senator had in mind when he made this generous bequest.

I have sat on Parliament Hill and have seen this bath in operation, and I doubt not that Mr Corby has also sat there, and has seen this Ottawa Public Bath in operation hundreds of times, until it became a familiar every day sight to him—yes, such a familiar every day sight that he did not deem it necessary to enter into details when making his will, but took it for granted that the idea of such a bath would be as natural to the citizens of Belleville as it was to himself.

A good description of this Ottawa Public Floating Bath appeared, I am told, in last Thursday's issue (July 20) of the Montreal Star, and any one having a copy of this paper can see for himself what I believe, and many others with me, that Mr. Corby had in mind when he gave this $5,000.00. If some one having a copy of this paper to spare would kindly bring it in to the editor of this paper it would be appreciated, and would doubtless help along this good cause.

This Ottawa Floating Bath which Mr. Corby knew was self contained, that is, the dressing rooms and pool were all in one structure, floating in the river, anchored to the shore, and approached by a small gang plank or bridge. Being in running water the water in the pool would be constantly changing. A janitor was in charge to look after the dressing rooms, etc.

Not being a practical builder, I could not say for certain, but I believe that the bequest of $5,000.00 would easily build such a structure as the Ottawa Bathing Pool. It would at any rate build a floating pool such as would suit a place the size of Belleville, and to suit Belleville conditions.

And this brings me to another point. In Ottawa land in that section is valuable, and the shores steep, so it was better there to build the Baths self contained—that is with the dressing rooms and pool all in one structure, and all floating. But conditions are different here in Belleville. Down on the Island it would be possible, if thought desirable, to build the dressing rooms on the shore, and have only the pool floating, and anchored close to the shore, in near proximity to the dressing rooms.

This floating pool would, of course, have a wooden floor, two or three feet under water, at the right depth for the kiddies who would use it. It would also have slated sides, so the water in it would be constantly changing with the natural current of the stream. The upper edge of this pool would likely be made of heavy timbers (such as came from the old vinegar factory, for instance) and form the basis of a path or runway all around the pool, somewhat similar to the old booms advocated so ably by Mr. Mikel. The older ones, who are strong swimmers, could dive off this outer board walk and swim in the deep water outside.

In the fall this floating pool could easily be towed up the harbor for the winter, and then replaced in the Spring.

I commend this floating pool to the earnest consideration of the aldermen and to all the other good citizens who have been working so hard for years for the establishment of some kind of Public Baths. But whether this plan is adopted or not, I strongly urge three things.

First, immediate action towards some kind of public baths, to utilise this generous bequest to the best advantage.

Second, immediate decision on Victoria Island Park as the site for these Public Baths, as requested by the donor of the gift.

Third, the use of the running water which the Good Lord has so generously provided, and the abandonment of this plan to use pumped water drawn from the city mains.

Mr. James Vannevar, Aged 96 Years, says World News Once Seemed Happier

Toronto, July 25.—James Vannevar, who is a well-known figure to many old students of the University of Toronto, celebrated his ninety-sixth birthday at his home, 49 Bleecker street on Sunday, when he received a large number of congratulations and well wishes by mail and personal call.

Mr. Vannevar, is perhaps best known to citizens of this city, and especially to graduates of the University, as the proprietor of the well-patronized book store on Young street, opposite Carlton, which he conducted from the time of his settling in the city until his retirement nine years ago.

He counts among his friends many customers who have long since risen to places of great prominence.

World Becoming Sadder.

"Long ago the news seemed to be happier," he said.

Although he and his wife were wont to go on frequent brief travels, the one he recalls with greatest fondness was their honeymoon excursion on muleback up to the top of the White Mountains. They stayed there several days, hoping to see the sun rise. But their patience was not rewarded. Mr. Vannevar does not think the trip would be so enjoyable now, owing to the luxury of modern travel.

His wife died thirteen years ago. Mr. Vannevar has lived at his present home on Bleecker street for 30 years. He has a daughter, Mrs. George Kent, in Montreal.

The superintendent of a penitentiary was one day escorting a party of women visitors through the building. They entered a room where three women were busily sewing. As they turned to leave the room, one of the visitors said:

"What vicious looking creatures! What are they in for? They really look capable of committing any crime."

"Well," replied the superintendent, "you see, they have no other home. That is my private sitting room, and they are my wife and two daughters."

LOSSES TO LITERATURE

Canadian Writers Have Had Manuscripts Destroyed.

The late Marjorie Pickthall, one of Canada's most distinguished poets, had been so broken-hearted on the occasion of her mother's death that she buried all her unpublished manuscripts in the casket with her mother's remains. We now learn from an article by Isabel Eccleston Mackay in the Canadian Magazine that Charles Mair, the Western poet and patriot, suffered a severe loss through the destruction of a trunkful of manuscripts at the time of the first Riel rebellion in 1870.

Mr. Mair, who is now almost 83, passed through Vancouver last autumn to spend the winter in New Zealand, and while in the Coast city made a pilgrimage to the grave of his old friend, Pauline Johnson. He is, perhaps, best known as the author of "Tecumseh: A Drama," published in 1886, and giving a vivid impression of the life of the Shawnee Chief who did so much for the British cause in the war of 1812. During the Riel rebellion Mr. Mair was imprisoned by Riel with other Winnipeg loyalists, and sentenced to be shot, but escaped.

"These are stirring memories," writes Mrs. Mackay, "but it was not upon any of these that Mr. Mair dwelt with clouded eye. The one thing which touched the iron in his soul was the capture and wanton destruction of his precious trunkful of manuscripts, the work of years—the literary flower of his young manhood. This trunk was taken, with all other personal effects. No trace of it was ever found. When things were in hand again every search was made, and a large reward offered, but without effect. After a time a story drifted through of a young officer who declared he had seen a room in Fort Garry stacked with captured papers of all kinds in incredible confusion. This part of the fort had been burned and its debris must have been the grave of documents whose value will never be known. With them, in all probability, the early manuscripts of Charles Mair may have met their fate."

Result of a Dream.

That the Canadian war memorial to be erected in France by Walter S. Allward, the Toronto sculptor, was the result of a dream is the statement of an article by Anne Anderson Perry in the International Studio. Mr. Allward, as his friends know, felt the significance of the great war acutely, and it is really no surprise to those who know him best that his feeling should at length have found expression in the magnificent design for the Canadian memorial, which is to cost one million dollars and require five years to construct. Mrs. Perry quotes Mr. Allward as giving the following account of the origin of the idea:

"When things were at their blackest in France during the war, I went to sleep one night after dwelling on all the muck and misery over there. My spirit was like a thing tormented, so I dreamed. In my dream I was on a great battlefield. I saw our men going up in thousands and being mowed down by the sickles of death, regiment after regiment, division after division. Suffering beyond endurance at the sight, I turned my eyes and found myself looking down an avenue of poplars. Suddenly, through this avenue I saw thousands marching to the aid of our armies. They were the dead. They rose in masses, filed silently by, and entered the fight to aid the living. So vivid was this impression that when I awoke it stayed with me for months. Without the dead we were helpless. So I have tried to show, in this monument to Canada's fallen, what we owed them, and will forever owe them."

Court Laughed at Boy's Retort.

W. S. Brewster, K.C., of Brantford, is well known in legal circles in Ontario. He was not only formerly M.P.P. for South Brant, but possesses a large practice, a successful capacity for argument, and a genial disposition. He likes a good story, even though it may be on himself.

In the Brantford police court recently Mr. Brewster was defending four Montreal youths who got into trouble at Burford, where, the crown alleged, they shot at a farm woman and her son, who discovered the men asleep in the haymow and ordered them off the premises. The farmer boy, a lad of 18, showed considerable aptitude in replying to cross-questions from the accused's solicitor.

Mr. Brewster asked witness about the shooting and the young man told the court that he chased the intruders across the field in spite of a fusilade of bullets. Five, he said, were fired at himself and at his mother.

"Weren't you afraid that you might get hit?" asked the lawyer. "I think if shots were fired at me I'd quit in a hurry."

"Yes, I've no doubt but what you would," replied the lad quickly.

Courtroom officials and spectators rocked with laughter at the sally and Mr. Brewster himself enjoyed the diversion as much as Magistrate J. R. Blake, of Galt, who appreciates a good laugh as well as anyone.

Improvement on Tractors.

A new attachment designed to give the small tractor greater bearing area and increased pulling power, replaces the round wheels with two large sprockets, according to Popular Mechanics. Outside of each sprocket is a cast-steel arm which projects forward and downward, carrying at its front end a smaller idler wheel. A track tread passes around the sprocket and idler wheel, giving the tractor increased bearing area.

A Nice Family.

Brown: "Some redeeming quality about the third one, eh?"

"Yes, he's already been there."

"It's mighty lucky for the codfish that she doesn't have to cackle over every egg," said a student who came from a farm.

ROBERT PEEL AND TITLES

Proportion of English Peerages Has Increased Since Gladstone's Day

London, July 25.—In view of the recent criticisms of the British system of distributing titles and the debates in the House of Parliament upon the conferring of honors, it is interesting to recall that Sir Robert Peel, in a letter to Cobden, wrote of the "odious power that patronage confers." Prime Ministers since Peel's day have been perplexed frequently over the question of patronage.

Sir Robert Peel showed his dislike of patronage by his rare use of it. In five years of office he recommended the conferment of six peerages—three military, one for diplomatic service, one for Indian service, and one for Lord Francis Egerton, whom he made Earl of Ellesmere. In September, 1841, he refused to recommend for the peerage a "very worthy man" and a good partisan, giving as his reason "the state of the House of Lords in reference to the immense additions recently made to its members." The "immense additions" had been made at the instance of Lord Melbourne.

"The distinction of a peerage," said Sir Robert Peel to the Duke of Wellington, "and every other distinction, has been degraded by the profuse and incautious use which has been made of them." Peel, nevertheless, was pestered with applications. He replied to many of these piquantly. He hesitatingly offered to recommend Hallam, the historian, for a baronetcy, and was delighted at receiving a refusal of the offer. So pleased indeed was he that he immediately asked Hallam to allow his portrait to be painted for the collection which Peel had formed of the most eminent men of that time. Hallam accepted the compliment.

Disraeli was a careful dispenser of Crown patronage and honors, and prided himself upon avoiding what he considered to be Gladstone's lavishness in their distribution. Disraeli, however, did not approach Peel's austerity. Between 1874 and 1880 he advised the creation of twenty-six new peerages and nine promotions. His basis frankly was the principle of making "useful" appointments. "The spirit of the party," he wrote to a friend in 1858, "depended greatly upon the distribution of patronage. The interests of the party can never require an improper appointment. An improper appointment is a job, and nothing injures a party more than a job. But at the same time there is nothing more ruinous to political connection than the fear of rewarding your friends, and the promotion of men of opposite opinions to qualified adherents."

Disraeli recommended persons for appointments in the church with a view to political results. His treatment of ecclesiastical appointments casts an ironic light on the matter of patronage. "Send me down the Clergy List," he wrote to his private secretary in 1868. "I don't know the names and descriptions of the persons I am recommending for deaneries and mitres." On one occasion he declined to appoint Magee,—then Dean of Cork, to the Bishopric of Peterborough, though Queen Victoria pressed him to do so. His excuse to the Queen was that the appointee must be an Oxford man. Writing about this, Disraeli said: "One objection to Magee is that his appointment would give us nothing, and that is a great objection."

Gladstone also had his utilitarian principle, although extremely scrupulous, especially in church appointment. His very large additions to the Peerage—the number is given by one authority as sixty-seven creations and fourteen Scotch and Irish additions to the House of Lords during his various periods of Premiership—were made with the definite notion of "improving" the House of Lords out of its persistent Toryism.

Taking the present population of Great Britain and Ireland at about 46,000,000 and the number of members of the House of Lords (with the addition of Peers who are Minors) as 730, there are at present about [illegible] Peers for every million of the population. The proportion has increased since Gladstone's and Disraeli's day. A notable feature of the evidence in regard to the grant of honors to be found in the records of Peel, Gladstone and Disraeli is the absence of any suggestion of direct or indirect pecuniary considerations leading to any of the grants.

"How many ribs have you, Johnny?" asked the teacher of physiology.

"I don't know, ma'am," giggled Johnny, squirming around on one foot. "I'm so awful ticklish I never could count 'em."

POWER, PRESENT AND FUTURE

Citizens of Belleville in general, and manufacturers in particular, will feel relieved at the news from Ottawa to the effect that the dispute between the Hydro-Electric Commission and the Department of Railways and Canals regarding the leasing of Ranney Falls has been settled. There is no doubt that the prompt action of the local Chamber of Commerce had a great deal to do with the closing of the dispute, and Mr. Herity is to be commended upon his persistent negotiations in behalf of the city's interests. So far, so good; but is the problem of securing adequate power for this district solved?

In his telegram replying to the message of the Chamber of Commerce, Sir Adam made a significant statement, to which we would draw the attention of the manufacturers of Belleville. The telegram read as follows:

"This Commission is doing everything possible to effect a settlement with Dominion Government re Ranney Falls development. We have agreed to appointment of J. B. MacRae as independent engineer to report on situation. Hope to have conference with him at Ottawa, Monday, with view to bringing about early settlement. It must be borne in mind that limit of available power supply in this district is not many years distant owing to natural growth in use of power and a larger supply must be made available in near future."

The latter portion of the above message seems to indicate that Sir Adam takes a pessimistic view of the future regarding the supply of power in this district. The question arises, will the new lease of Ranney Falls provide for an adequate supply of power for the future? If the answer to this question is in the affirmative, all is well; but if Ranney Falls will only give temporary relief, then we shall be in as bad a plight later on.

Now is the time to deal with this problem of future power. It is useless to invite manufacturers to locate in this city if there is to be a periodical hold-up through shortage of power. In these days electric power is essential to industry, it is being used more and more in domestic life, and it is the duty of the Hydro Commission to see that the supply is kept up to the demand. It is also the duty of local manufacturers to support the Commission in its efforts to secure the best bargain from the Federal authorities in the use of waterways.

A FISH STORY

Incredulity regarding fish stories is a strange trait of human kind. Why the word of a fisherman should be doubted any more than that of a golfer, we could never quite understand. Indeed a golfer's story of how he did the nine holes in thirty-six (alone) is, to us at least, less believeable than the yarn of the angler who measures off with a stretch of his arms—and of his imagination—the exact size of the fish he caught last summer.

But with all our partiality for fishermen, we balk at the story that comes from the West about a sturgeon that was actually driven to market b ya fisherman in a canoe, using the hook and line for bit and reins. However, we give the story as it comes to us, and we recommend that it be taken with a little salt. It is as follows:

"Sturgeon were actually driven to market this year, and at the same time furnished the motive power for the fisherman who drove them.

"At the sturgeon fishing grounds, the mouth of the Torch River, which empties into the Saskatchewan, the practice of the fishers after catching sturgeon is to hook through the gills by short lines attached to a longer line, and put them back into the water until a small steamer visits the grounds.

"The fish are then taken from the water, killed, dressed and iced, and taken by the steamer to Cumberland House, where a larger steamer takes them to The Pas.

"An accident to the boat this season found the fishers with large strings of fish on hand. They commenced to die. Quick action was necessary. Dougal MacKenzie, who had about 26 sturgeon weighing from 50 to 90 pounds each, conceived the idea of hitching the fish to the bow of his canoe, and have them pull him to Cumberland House. The 26 fish were attached to two lines, one on each side of the canoe, and MacKenzie started for Cumberland."

PASSING COMMENT

If Sir Adam Beck is trying to secure Provincial control of the waters of the Trent River for power purposes, he should have the whole-hearted backing of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce.

A copper waistcoat for carrying liquor is said to be an invention of some American genius.There is nothing new in that, men have been known to carry liquor under the waistcoats for years.

Scientists tell us that time passes more slowly on the sun than it does on the earth. We have no desire to go there, however, the summers are too long.

A mosquito is reported to have been responsible for the overturning of a motor car in New Jersey. The insect alighted upon the nose of the driver, who lost control in an attempt to swat it. That was nothing—These pests spoilt a game of bowls the other evening.

HERE AND THERE

TOBACCO ABSTINENCE.

The British Lord Chancellor, who has sacrificed tobacco to his eyesight, is only one of many illustrious temporary abstainers. There was Carlyle, for example. He had been smoking all day when his friend, Gavan Duffy, called upon him. The visitor, who found Carlyle more than usually strabilious, remonstrated. "Well," said the sage, "I gave up smoking for an entire year at the bidding of a doctor who said my only ailment was too much tobacco. At the end of the year I was walking one day in the country so weak that I was hardly able to crawl from tree to tree, when I suddenly determined that whatever was amiss with me that fellow did not understand it, and I returned to tobacco and have smoked since without let or hindrance." Charles Lamb also. We may be sure that his "Farewell to Tobacco" was not final. He did his best to inflame himself with fierce resolution, but as he explains pathetically:

> "'Twas but in a sort I blamed thee;
> Irony all and feigned abuse—
> Such as perplexed lovers use."

SUNKEN TREASURE SHIPS.

One of the most interesting wrecks on record is that of the British frigate 'Lutine,' which was sunk off the coast of Holland in 1799. It was customary in those days to carry much gold and silver on war vessels, and this particular ship was known to have 1,900 gold bars and 500 bars of silver with a total value of over six million dollars. It was driven aground in a storm and sank in comparatively shallow water. Great Britain at that time was at war with France, and Holland, an ally of France, claimed the frigate as a prize of war. The water was so shallow that at low tide it was possible for a fisherman to reach it with scoops and grapples and recover some of its treasure. A salvage company organized by the Dutch people to recover the wealth of the 'Lutine' succeeded in getting out more than half a million dollars' worth of gold and silver. The position of the wreck, however, was decidedly unfavorable. It was in an exposed spot and the bottom was swept by strong tidal currents. Gradually it became buried in sand, and all salvage operations had to cease.

There are other rich treasures in the sea. In Cumana Bay, Venezuela, lies the wreck of the Spanish flagship 'San Pedro,' with $2,000,000 worth of gold on board, which so far has defied all attempts to salvage. The richest treasure of all is probably a Spanish galleon, sunk off Lizard Point on the Cornish coast, in 1784, which is believed to have aboard $85,000,000 worth of gold.

But we need not go so far afield for valuable wrecks. Our own lakes are filled with them. In fact, Lake Huron is known locally as the 'Lake of Sunken Treasure.' It is estimated that some $12,000,000 worth of gold and silver is buried in the deeps of the Great Lakes.—Everybody's Magazine.

HUNTING SONG

Rise! sleep no more, 'tis a noble morn,
The dews hang thick on the fringed thorn,
And the frost goes back like a beaten hound,
Under the steaming, the steaming ground.
Behold where the billowy clouds flow by,
And leave us alone in the clear grey sky,
Our horses are ready and steady, so ho!
I'm gone like a dart from the Tartar's bow,
Hark! Hark! Tally-ho!
Who calleth the maiden morn,
From her sleep in the woods and the stubble corn.
The horn! the merry sweet ring of the hunter's horn.
Tally-ho! Hark away!

Now, through the copse, where the fox is found,
And o'er the brook, at a mighty bound
And o'er the highlands and o'er the low,
O'er furrows, o'er meadows, the hunters go.
Away, as a hawk flies at its prey,
So flies the hunter away away.
From the burst of the cover, till set of sun,
When the red fox dies, and the day is done.
Hark! Hark! Tally-ho!
What sound on the wind is borne?
'Tis the conquering voice of the hunter's horn,
The merry, bold voice of the hunter's horn,
Tally-ho!

PRESS OPINIONS

IRELAND'S BIRTH PANGS

(Montreal Gazette)

Ireland may yet have cause to rejoice—sadly though it be—for the birth pangs of liberty she is enduring. Similar rebellious out-breaks took place in Berlin and Budapest, where governments were weak and wavered, and it was only by firm measures such as Collins is now adopting that the forces of law and order were enabled to prevail. The Collins' Government have signified their intention of seeing this thing through, and in this resolve they will be backed up by properly constituted Irishmen everywhere. When Collins gets the Free State Government functioning it is generally expected that a working arrangement will be speedily made with the Ulster Parliament, so that a United Ireland may be born again. William Penn, in the year 1681, made a promise to the group of Dutch, Swedes and Quakers in the Pennsylvania colony as follows: 'You shall be governed by laws of your own making and live a free, and if you will, a sober and industrious people. I shall not usurp the right to any or oppress his person; in short, whatever sober and free men reasonably can desire for the security and improvement of their happiness, I shall heartily comply with." This has a present-day interest as applied to Irishmen, who are promised the same privileges by Britain.

PADDLE YOUR OWN CANOE

(Ottawa Journal)

The man who has worked hard for 11 months is entitled to a rest, and rest for any active man does not mean loafing but rather a complete change of occupation, the more complete the better. As a good many of us are compelled to spend most of our lives in cities, the ideal holiday is to get right out into the wilderness away from every thought or suggestion of business. There are several ways in which this may be accomplished, but none is more effective than to go away on a canoe trip.

Beg a canoe from your friend, if you have not one of your own, or if you must do so, hire one from a boatman. It is not good for the average man to spend a holiday alone. A congenial friend, or preferably two, who are not afraid of roughing it, will add immeasurably to the pleasure of the holiday. Lay in a stock of provisions, get together your equipment, buy tickets to some convenient point in the north country frim which you can put your canoe into the water, take with you an extra pipe and plenty of tobacco, and hurrah for the wilds!

WIT AND HUMOR

Golfer (after the fourth miss)—Dear me! Whatever can I be thinking about?

Caddie—Mebbe ye're thenkin' aboot yer new breeks.

He had never been to sea before. "Can you keep anything on your stomach?" the ship doctor asked "No, sir," he returned feebly, "nothing but my hand."

She was a widow, and he a bluff sailor, but not finding it easy to make a landsman's direct proposal, he decided to address her in the speech of the sea.

"Kate," he said, "your boat is drifting down the stream of life, with no strong hand to steer it past the rocks. May I be your captain and sail it for you?"

"No, Jack," Kate answered, with an engaging blush. Then, in a firm tone of voice, "But you may be my second mate, if you like."

The teacher had worked that morning explaining the injustices done by Nero, and then asked questions—

"Now, boys, what do you think of Nero? Do you think he was a good man?" No one answered. Then the teacher singled out a boy. "Charlie, what do you think? Do you think he was all right?"

"Well," returned the boy, after a long wait, "he never done nuthin' to me."

"How did the Queen of Sheba travel when she went to see Solomon" asked a Sunday school teacher. No one ventured an answer. "Could she have gone by railway?"

"Yes'm," said a little girl.

"Indeed! Well, we would like to know how you found that out?"

"In the second verse," responded the child, "it says she came with a great train."

The late Dr. W. B. Robertson, of Irvine, was once addressing a boys' meeting, and having delighted them with some of his racy anecdotes, he began to draw to a close by saying, "Now, I'm going to point out the moral of all this."

"Niver mind the moral," shouted a little fellow from the middle of the hall; "gie's anither story."

Sir Henry Wilson

(T. P. O'Connor, M.P., in The Daily Telegraph, London.)

I never saw Sir Henry Wilson till he entered the House of Commons. I had, however, already had some communication with him of a private and a friendly character. He was supposed to have been one of the authors of what was known at the time as the Curragh revolt; as a matter of fact he had not—at least directly—anything to do with it, though, as will be seen, he was rather in sympathy with it. I spoke to him on the subject a few days ago, and he said emphatically that he was not in it, and of course he told the truth. He was not a man to conceal his thoughts, and he had the full courage of his opinions. He was a curious combination of apparently opposite characteristics in the representative of the complex character of his country. For no man could be more agreeable, more friendly, more cordial, even in private conversation, and yet his opinions were rigid, severe, and inflexible. One of the surprises of the House of Commons was to see him just after his return to Parliament frequently in that home of democratic, impartial, and friendly intercourse—the smoke-room of the House of Commons—spending an hour or so with the chief Nationalists in the House, listening attentively, but pleasantly and silently, to what they had to say. Once, indeed, incredible as it may seem to-day, he went to Mr. Devlin—personally representative of an entirely opposite set of opinions—to have a friendly—I had almost said consultation—with him as to what he ought to say on his coming visit to Belfast. It was the first time, he said, he had gone to that city, and he did not know what he ought to say. Mr. Devlin made the obvious answer that if he told Sir Henry what he ought to say he would not say it, as indeed he would not, for Wilson was not capable of making a speech without saying exactly what he thought, and his thought was direct, clear, and uncompromising. It was doubtless his speech in that visit to Belfast that brought him into the prominence which has ended in such a tragic and horrible manner, for he was not repressed in his expression of opinion, and by the severity of his language he became known to thousands of people to whom up to that time he had remained unknown; the great work done by great soldiers in the secrecy of War Councils and Downing-street does not penetrate to the streets of Belfast. But from that visit he became more than almost any other man in public life the representative and the embodiment of the view that the solution of the Irish question was the reconquest of Ireland and the reimposition of the Union.

And here I must again point to the complexity of the man. By many who disliked his views, he was expected to speak always in the exaggerated and violent language of the firebrand, and then he got up and in a voice that was singularly quiet, in sentences that had the reserve of the best and chastest style, putting his views rather with the Socratic method of asking awkward questions than in any direct statment, sometimes summing up a whole controversy in a dilemma, short, simple, interrogative, he stated his case; never was there in literature or oratory as known to me a more remarkable example of a man with a clear mind, a distinct and rigid line of thought and a gospel of something like irreconcilability, putting that gospel in language that had such sobriety and such simplicity. It was not rhetorical, but the speech had the deadliness which you find in those disastrous interrogatories of Socrates with the sophistries of the super subtle prophets of the Agora in Athens.

The face was in some respects an index of that curious contradiction of expression and opinion. People used to say that he often spoke of himself as the ugliest man in the army. He was not handsome certainly, but his deprecatory description of his face was not accurate. The face was long and hatchet-shaped, the nose was long and stretched as it were over the face downward, and the complexion was somewhat ruddy; the form was slight, alert, suggesting the blade rather than the swashbuckler; in short, the type of the modern officer who has science in his brains rather than the athlete who trusts to his thews. And the general expression was entirely opposite to what one would expect. It was distinctly pleasant and good humored; there was never even an approach to a scowl; on the contrary the face usually wore a smile and a very pleasant smile—not even made unpleasant by the rather long teeth which it unveiled when he did smile. In short, he looked a good-natured fellow who did not take life tragically, and rather liked than disliked his political opponents. I never hesitated, even when he made a speech of which I disapproved, to go up to him and discuss it with him, and he never hesitated to discuss it with me, always with that curious smile, and always with the perfect friendliness of two men who respected each other and each other's opinions. But I could not move him to my point of view any more than he could move me to his, and thus there was good feeling on both sides with utter irreconcilability of opinion. He summed up to me his views with regard to Ireland in the statement that there was no solution but the re-establishment of the Union, and if pressed—which, of course, I never did—he would not have shrunk from describing the military measures which would have been necessary to bring about that solution.

A STEEL FOUNDRY IN A GARDEN CITY

Almost the last place in which one would expect to find a steel foundry is one of those Garden Cities which enlightened town planners have constructed as a model. Nevertheless, in a garden city near London, England, there exists a steel foundry which is so well equipped and so well designed that it does not interfere in any way with the standard of general well-being appropriate to a garden city. Normally this foundry employs about one thousand workers and its equipment includes a large electric furnace. The output of the foundry is about eight hundred tons of steel castings per month, and among its specialities is the casting of ships' davits which form an extremely difficult job. In spite of its remoteness from the large centres of raw materials this model steel foundry is very successful in competition with foundries in the orthodox steel districts.

LAUGH AND BE MERRY

John Masefield

Laugh and be merry, remember, better the world with a song
Better the world with a blow in the teeth of a wrong.
Laugh, for the time is brief, a thread the length of a span.
Laugh and be proud to belong to the old proud pageant of man.

Laugh and be merry; remember, in olden time.
God made Heaven and Earth for joy He took in a rhyme,
Made them, and filled them full with the strong red wine of His mirth,
The splendid joy of the stars: the joy of the earth.

So we must laugh and drink from the deep blue cup of the sky,
Join the jubilant song of the great stars sweeping by.
Laugh, and battle, and work, and drink of the wine outpoured.
In the dear green earth, the sign of the joy of the Lord.

Laugh and be merry together, like brothers akin,
Guesting awhile in the rooms of a beautiful inn,
Glad till the dancing stops, and the lilt of the music ends.
Laugh till the game is played; and be you merry, my friends.

PROPOSED BILL WOULD LIMIT HUSBAND'S PRIVILEGES

Atlanta, July 26.—From now on Georgia husbands will have to tell their wives the truth as to their reasons for not coming home nights. Especially must they beware of fish yarns if a bill just introduced in the Senate is adopted.

Should the bill pass, it would be unlawful for any married man within the State of Georgia to "slip away from home" without the full consent of his wife, stating his whereabouts at all times, and in the further exact language of the bill, "any and all married men who shall go fishing without the consent of their wives shall be guilty of felony, and their sentence shall not be less than five years nor more than twenty years at hard labor."

Perhaps one of the most hopeful signs of the present day, writes Cicely Hamilton in the London Daily Chronicle, is the fact that our manners to our fellow-citizens are rapidly and visibly improving; that in streets, in shops, and on railway platforms we are getting back to something like the standard of pre-war politeness.

The assistant who supplies us with groceries or garments is no longer openly unwilling; the passenger astray in a London terminus may ask for direction without fear of a sulky reply, and the blessed improvement is not confined to England; a traveller recently returned from France found porters as friendly as in days gone by, and officials less surly than of late; the fit of collective bad temper which attacked a nervously-exhausted world would seem to be wearing itself out.

We are returning (thank heaven!) to what used to be our normal friendliness; we no longer trail our coat for anyone to tread on or dislike ou fellow-creatures on sight.

The change means more, and a goo deal more, than increase of comfort and the general sweetening of existence; it betokens the reasonable attitude of mind which makes peace between men—and even between nation —something more than a far possibility.

Without that reasonable attitude o mind agreements and arrangement industrial or national, will alway work badly and crumble; the historia of the future will probably point ou that the troubles of the world in th post-war days were largely due to th fact that its peoples, one and all, wer uncommonly snappish and bad-tempered.

IFF?

Late that night, Staff drifted into the smoking-room, which he found rather sparsely patronised. This fact surprised him no less than its explanation: it was after eleven o'clock. He had hardly realised the flight of time, so absorbed had he been all evening in argument with Alison Landis.

There remained in the smoking-room, t this late hour, but half a dozen deached men, smoking and talking over heir nightcaps, and one table of bridge layers—in whose numbers, of course, here was Mr. Iff.

Nodding abstractedly to the little nan, Staff found a quiet corner and sat lown with a sigh and a shake of his head hat illustrated vividly his frame of nind. He was a little blue and more han a little distressed. And this was othing but natural, since he was still n the throes of the discovery that one an can hardly with success play the ual role of playwright and sweetheart o a successful actress.

Alison was charming; he told himself, woman incomparable, tenderly sweet nd desirable; and he loved her beyond xpression. But . . . his play was also ore than a slight thing in his life. It eant a good deal to him; he had orked hard and put the best that was him into its making; and hard as the ork had been, it had been a labour of ve. He wasn't a man to overestimate s ability; he possessed a singularly ne and clear appreciation of the true alue of his work, harbouring no illusions to his real status either as dramatist r novelist. But at the same time, he new when he had done good work. nd A Single Woman promised to be a ood play, measured by modern standrds: not great, but sound and clear and trong. The plot was of sufficient riginality to command attention; the onstruction was clear, sane, inevitable; e had mixed the elements of comedy nd drama with the deftness of a sure and; and he had carefully built up the haracters in true proportion to one anther and to their respective significance n the action.

Should all this then, be garbled and listorted to satisfy a woman's passion or the centre of the stage? Must he be ntrue to the fundamentals of dramaurgic art in order to earn her tolerance? ould he gain his own consent to preent to the public as work representave of his fancy the misshapen monrosity which would inevitably result of ielding to Alison's insistence?

Small wonder that he sighed and agged a doleful head!

Now while all this was passing through mind wrapped in gloomy and profound bstraction, Iff's voice disturbed him.

"Pity the poor playwright!" it said in ccents of amusement.

Looking up, Staff discovered that the ttle man stood before him, a furtive winkle in his pale blue eyes. The ridge game had broken up, and they wo were now alone in the smokingoom—saving the presence of a steward awning sleepily and wishing to 'Eaven hey'd turn in and give 'im a charnce to atch a wink o' sleep.

"Hello," said Staff, none too cordially. What d'you mean by that?"

"Hello," responded Iff, dropping upon he cushioned seat beside him. He napped his fingers at the steward. "Give a name," said he.

Staff gave it a name. "You don't nswer me," he persisted. "Why pity he poor playwright?"

"He has his troubles," quoth Mr. Iff heerfully, if vaguely. "Need I enumerte them, to you? Anyway, if the poor laywright isn't to be pitied, what right e you got to stick round here looking ike that?"

"Oh!" Staff laughed uneasily. "I was hinking. . . ."

"I flattered you to the extent of surnising as much." Iff elevated one of he glasses which had just been put beore them. "Chin-chin," said he—"that s, if you've no particular objection to hin-chinning with a putative criminal of he d'p'st dye?"

"None whatever," returned Staff, lifting his own glass—"at least, not so long s it affords me continued opportunity o watch him cooking up his cunning ittle crimes."

"Ah!" cried Iff with enthusiasm—"there spoke the true spirit of Sociologial Research. Long may you rave!"

He set down an empty glass.

Staff laughed, sufficiently diverted to orget his troubles for the time being.

"I wish I could make you out," he said lowly, eyeing the older man.

"You mean you hope I'm not going to take you in."

"Either way—or both: please yourself."

"Ah!" said the little man appreciatively—"I am a deep one, ain't I?"

He laid a finger alongside his nose and [illegible] unutterably enigmatic.

At this point they were interrupted: man burst into the smoking-room from he deck and pulled up breathing heavily, as if he had been running, while he aked the room with quick, enquiring lances. Staff recognised Mr. Manvers, he purser, betraying every evidence of a disturbed mind. At the same moment, Manvers caught sight of the pair in the corner and made for them.

"Mr. Ismay—" he began, halting before their table and glaring gloomily at Staff's companion.

"I beg your pardon," said the person addressed, icily; "my name is Iff."

Manvers made an impatient movement with one hand. "Iff or Ismay—it's all one to me—to you too, I fancy—"

"One moment!" snapped Iff, rising. "If you were an older man," he said stiffly, "and a smaller, I'd pull your impertiment nose, sir! As things stand, I'd probably get my head punched if I did."

"That's sound logic," returned Manvers with a sneer.

"Well, then, sir? What do you want with me?"

Manvers changed his attitude to one of sardonic civility. "The captain sent me to ask you if you would be kind enough to step up to his cabin," he said stiltedly. "May I hope you will be good enough to humour him?"

"Most assuredly." Iff picked up his steamer-cap and set it jauntily upon his head. "Might one enquire the cause of all this-here fluster?"

"I daresay the captain—"

"Oh, very well. If you won't talk, my dear purser, I'll hazard a shrewd guess by your leave."

The purser stared. "What's that?"

"I was about to say," pursued Iff serenely, "that I'll lay two to one that the Cadogan collar has disappeared."

Manvers continued to stare, his eyes blank with amazement. "You've got your nerve with you, I must say," he growled.

"Or guilty knowledge? Which, Mr. Manvers?"

A reply seemed to tremble on Manver's lips, but to be withheld at discretion. "I'm not the captain," he said after a slight pause; "go and check him as far as you like. And we're keeping him waiting, if I may be permitted to mention it."

Iff turned to Staff, with an engaging smile. "Rejecting the guilty knowledge hypothesis, for the sake of the argument," said he: "you'll admit I'm the only suspicious personage known to be aboard; so it's not such a wild guess—that the collar has vanished—when I'm sent for by the captain at this unearthly hour. . . . Lead on, Mr. Manvers," he wound up with a dramatic gesture.

The purser nodded and turned toward the door. Staff jumped up and followed the pair.

"You don't mind my coming?" he asked.

"No—wish you would; you can bear witness to the captain that I did everything in my power to make Miss Landis appreciate the danger—"

"Then," Iff interrupted suavely, "the collar has disappeared—we're to understand?"

"Yes," the purser assented shortly.

They scurried forward and mounted the ladder to the boat-deck, where the captain's quarters were situated in the deckhouse immediately abaft the bridge. From an open door—for the night was as warm as it was dark—a wide stream of light fell athwart the deck, like gold upon black velvet.

Pausing en silhouette against the glow, the purser knocked discreetly. Iff ranged up beside him, dwarfed by comparison. Staff held back at a little distance.

A voice from within barked: "Oh, come in!" Iff and Manvers obeyed. Staff paused on the threshold, bending his head to escape the lintel.

Standing thus, he appreciated the tableau: the neat, tidy little room—commodious for a steamship—glistening with white-enamelled woodwork in the radiance of half a dozen electric bulbs; Alison in a steamer-coat on the far side of a chart-table, her colouring unusually pallid, her brows knitted and eyes anxious; the maid, Jane, standing respectfully behind her mistress; Manvers to one side and out of the way, but plainly eager and distraught; Iff in the centre of the stage, his slight, round-shouldered figure lending him a deceptive effect of embarrassment which was only enchanced by his semi-placating, semiwistful smile and his small, blinking eyes; the captain looming over him, authority and menace incarnate in his heavy, square-set, sturdy body and menace incarnate in his heavy, squareset, sturdy body and heavy-browed, square-jawed, beardless and weathered face. . . .

Manvers said: "This is Mr. Iff, Captain Cobb."

The captain nodded brusquely. His hands were in his coat-pockets; he didn't offer to remove them. Iff blinked up at him and cocked his small head critically to one side, persistently smiling.

"I've heard so much of you, sir," he said in a husky, weary voice, very subdued. "It's a real pleasure to make your acquaintance."

Captain Cobb noticed this bit of effrontery by nothing more than a growl deep in this throat. His eyes travelled on, above Iff's head, and Staff was conscious of their pentrating and unfriendly question. He bowed uncertainly.

"Oh—and Mr. Staff," said Manvers hastily.

"Well?" said the captain without moving.

"A friend of Miss Landis and also—curiously—in the same room with Mr. Iff."

"Ah," remarked the captain. "How-d'-you-do?" He removed his right hand from its pocket and held it out with the air of a man who wishes it understood that by such action he commits himself to nothing.

Before Staff could grasp it, Iff shook it heartily. "Ah," he said blandly, "h' are ye?" Then he dropped the hand, thereby preventing the captain from wrenching it away, and averted his eyes modestly, thereby escaping the captain's outraged glare.

Staff managed to overcome an impulse to laugh idiotically, and gravely shook hands with the captain. He had already exchanged a glance with the lady of his heart's desire.

An insanely awkward pause marked Iff's exhibition of matchless impudence. Each hesitated to speak while the captain was occupied with a vain attempt to make Iff realise his position by scowling at him out of a blood-congested countenance. But of this, Iff appeared to be wholly unconscious. When the situation seemed all but unendurable for another second (Staff for one was haunted by the fear that he would throw back his head and bray like a mule) Manvers took it upon himself to ease the tension, hardily earning the undying gratitude of all the gathering.

"I asked Mr. Staff to come and tell you, sir," he said haltingly, "that I spoke to him about this matter the very night we left Queenstown—asked him to do what he could to make Miss Landis appreciate—"

"I see,' the captain cut him short.

"That is so," Staff affirmed. "Unfortunately I have no opportunity until this afternoon—"

Alison interposed quietly. "I am quite ready to exonerate Mr. Manvers for all blame. In fact, he has really annoyed me with his efforts to induce me to turn the collar over to his care."

FASHION FANCIES

TOWN AND COUNTRY WEAR

By way of warning, all white, which is most fashionable this year and which is always perfectly correct and delightful in the country, is not appropriate for town wear. Moreover, tub frocks of organdie, dotted Swiss muslin, batiste, gingham, and linen, apart from the fact that they can not retain their freshness through one day in town, lack the formality needed for the city, except on the rare days when extreme heat makes any more substantial fabric unbearable. Bold, vigorous embroideries of Russia and gay prints are almost exclusively appropriate to the country. Beige and grey, on the other hand are ideal city colours, cool and restful.

Most of the silk dresses which make the summer mode have matching wraps or capes that mean little in the way of warmth but much in the way of decoration. These are often trimmed in an unusual fashion with lace or velvet or fur, and hats, surprisingly enough, not to be outdone, also cling to fur—or allow it to cling to them—in an interesting combination of pompon of ermine or black crin, for example, or badger on beige.

What graceful hats there are—hats which have a decided tendency to be as wide as they are beautiful. One of Reboux's, dramatic in colouring, as well as in size, is of a deep citron shade, and the crown is draped with a bandanna of black, Indian red, and yellow orange, caught at each side of the back with ends falling to the brim. When flowers are used, they are water-lilies or huge daisies or roses. Hats, as a rule, do not match the dress, but present a contrast in colour.

For formal occasions, the large transparent black hat is the accepted mode, although with organdie frocks, very simple organdie hats, untrimmed except for pleating of the crisp fabric itself, are a distinct vogue. One form of trimming high in favour with the mode is the round motif placed generally in the front of the crown, and twists of velvet and taffeta, often repeated, are also good. Side trimmings, as a rule, have ceased to wander and are caught fast under the brim.

The mid-Victorians used to say that one could judge a lady by her gloves and shoes. For such a long time it has been fashionable to laugh at those mid-Victorians . . . . but our laughter became a trifle hysterical, and strange things happened to our clothes. Are we not beginning to realize the value as, well as the need, of distinction? There are certainly signs of it in the mode. The rococo, overornamented shoes, for example, are no longer seen; those worn this season are simple and beautiful in line. The colour of the dress has little influence on the colour of shoes with the exception of beige and grey. Both these colours are worn with matching shoes, although sometimes with beige one sees a subtle combination which might be called "A Study in Brown": a beige dress worn with a dark brown hat, very dark brown shoes, and thin dark brown stockings. Black patent leather is still widely worn, and sandals which are so light and open as to be ideal for summer wear, are high in favour, although they are definitely more conservative and simple than they have been.

BEES ONLY STING PROFANE PERSONS

Ottawa, July 26.—Bees will not sting persons who do not swear. At least this is the dictum of John Stuyvers, a Belgian, who may be plaintiff in a police court action here.

John says the swarm of bees which held up pedestrians and street car traffic on Sparks street here last week, are his property and it was only when he charmed the queen bee into captivity that normalcy was restored. Another man, however, secured the swarm and John intends to bring action unless this man will go fifty-fifty on their value.

John's offer to prove the immunity for the non-swearing fraternity is being seriously discussed, however, by police court officials.

BOTTOMLEY MAY APPEAR BEFORE HOUSE OF COMMONS

London, July 26.—The House of Commons yesterday adopted a resolution presented by Austen Chamberlain, the Government leader, which instructs the governor of Wormwood Scrubbs prison to bring Horatio Bottomley, who is now serving a prison sentence for fraud, in custody to the House on Tuesday, if the prisoner so desires. The regulations of the House of Commons provide that a member has a right to defend himself in person against expulsion proceedings, which have already been instituted against Bottomley.

LIMIT MARRIAGES TO THREE A SUNDAY

Hammond, La., July 26.—At last night's meeting of the Auto League a resolution was passed limiting marriages to not more than three on Sunday. This was deemed expedient owing to the fact that it is impossible for the livery garages to handle the vast crowds attending nuptials. Taxed to capacity has been the slogan of the garage owners during the past when more than two couples wedded on Sunday. Hammond is modern, if anything.

CANADIAN GOLF CHAMPIONSHIPS

Many Professionals From Canada and U. S. to Compete

Montreal, July 26.—The Canadian Open Golf championship will be competed for this year on July 28 and 29 over the links of the Mount Bruno Golf Club near Montreal. It is expected to attract all the professionals in Canada as well as a number from the United States, and also the best amateur players all over the Dominion. As the contest does not conflict with any important tournament in the United States, it is expected that among visitors from across the border may be Kirkwood, the remarkable Australian, as well as Hutchison, ex-British Open Champion; Hagan, who recently won the British Open championship, and Barnes, open champion in the United States last year.

Canada's first line of defence will be C. R. Murray, of Montreal, winner of the Quebec Provincial Championship; George C. Cummings, winner of the Toronto and District Open Championship, and Davis Black, of Vancouver. The championship is open to all amateurs and professionals. It will consist of 72 holes medal play, 18 of which will be played in the morning of the first day and another 18 in the afternoon. The second day's program is identical. The tournament which will take place under the rules of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, will commence on the morning of July 28.

The Rivermead Cup, a trophy to be competed for annually under the rules of the Royal Canadian Golf Association, will be presented to the winner and will be held for one year by his club, or until the next annual competition takes place.

The list of players and runners-up follows:—

1920	Douglas Edgar	298	T. Armour (Rivermead)	Ottawa
			C. R. Murray (Rivermead)	Ottawa
1921	W. H. Trovinger	293	Michael Brady	Toronto

The score of Douglas Edgar at Hamilton is one of the best scores ever recorded in a championship. Mr. Edgar was killed in a motor car accident at Atlanta, Ga., in 1921.

The course at Mount Bruno comprises a distance of 3,244 yards going out with 3,299 yards coming in, making a total of 6,543, an exceptionally lengthy course. The holes are all good, but the twelfth is worthy of special mention, being 505 yards from tee to pin, and the thirteenth, which is 440 yards long. Up to the twelfth hole, the player has been looking over a picturesque panorama of valleys and distant hills, but when he faces the flag he is looking towards cools woods. Apart from the vista, however, he is facing a difficult task. The average player requires three full shots to be hole high, while five is very often exceeded. Besides the great length of the hole the course runs uphill, which greatly adds to its difficulty. The thirteenth is another picturesque hole, the bush having been cut away to provide a fairway, and when he has left the tee, the player emerges into what appears to be a new world.

GAME POSTPONED.

The Peterboro Examiner has the following reference to baseball games:

"Because of the Rotary picnic at Cobourg on Wednesday, the first game in the second half of the Central Ontario League schedule between Cobourg and Peterboro scheduled for that day, has been postponed until Thursday, at the request of the Cobourg club. Chris. McCarney, formerly of the C.G.E. team, will be on the firing line for the Petes in this game, while Heckman gets a well-earned rest.

"'Heck' will be back on the firing line on Saturday when the fast Belleville team will appear at Riverside Park in what should prove one of the best games in the second half. The fans are still talking of the last Belleville game here, and with Williams, the Indian southpaw, lined up against Heckman, Saturday's game should be equally as exciting. Belleville are expected to be keen contenders for the honors in the second section."

LACROSSE GAMES AT CAMPBELLFORD

Lovers of Canada's National game will have an opportunity of seeing two of the best Lacrosse teams in the Dominion of Canada cross sticks at the Agricultural Park, Campbellford, on Saturday, July 29th, 3 p.m.

The Riversides of Toronto need no introduction to the public. Everybody knows the Senior Amateur Champions of Canada. The Riversides have a reputation to keep and they will be at Campbellford with a full line up of regulars and spares. The Campbellford team have found nothing in Eastern Ontario in their class and they are going up against the Champion Riversides with the intention of coming out on top.

Campbellford Lacrosse men are going to considerable expense to give the lacrosse loving public of the Trent Valley an exhibition of lacrosse which will thrill every spectator through and through. This will undoubtedly be the best game witnessed in this part of Ontario for a long time.

R.C.Y.C. Selects Patricia and Cara Mia for the Test Yacht Races

The sailing committee of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club has selected Tom Wade's Patricia and Jack Gordon's Cara Mia of the "P" class for the international test seamanship races between United States and Canadian amateur crews, to be held in Toronto Thursday, August 24, and following days.

The United States skipper will be Charles Francis Adams, who sailed the Resolute to victory in the last America's Cup race against Shamrock IV. Skipper Adams will select his crew in Boston and New York.

The R.C.Y.C. has selected Norman Gooderham as the Canadian skipper, and he will pick his crew from the members of that club, five in addition to himself. Gooderham has had plenty of experience in international cup races, having sailed the Patricia when she beat the Seneca, the Patricia when she defeated Michicago, the Nirwana when she won from Cresent, and the Nirwana when she beat Neagha. Gooderham is recognized as one of the smartest yachtsmen on the Great Lakes.

Two races will be sailed daily, over the lake course, off the Island, morning and afternoon. The skippers and crews will alternate daily in the two boats selected.

TRADE TREATY WITH SOVIETS

Hon. J. A. Robb Goes to England to Discuss Russian Trade

(By J. Harry Smith.)

Quebec, July 25.—The Canadian Pacific 24,500-ton Empress of Scotland, in command of Capt. J. Gillies, left Quebec this afternoon, scheduled time four o'clock, for Southampton, Cherbourg and Hamburg, with six hundred passenigers on the saloon list. There are many prominent people from Canada and the United States, including Hon. J. A. Robb, Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce, accompanied by Mrs. Robb.

Speaking of his trip to the United Kingdom, Mr. Robb said he was going over there to pay a visit of inspection to all the agencies of his department, likewise visit the agencies of the Canadian Immigration Department and have them co-operate in regard to Canadian Government interests. He also was going to meet in London the recently appointed trade commissioner and discuss with him where he would establish his headquarters in Russia.

"You will understand," said Mr. Robb, "the Canadian Government has entered into a business treaty with the Russian Soviet Government on the same basis of principal which the British Government has arranged a treaty with the Soviets for interchange of trade. The Canadian Government, let it be understood, will be responsible for the goods sold by Canadian business men to the Soviet purchasing interests.

"They are advised to collect payment in advance for all goods which they will sell to the Soviets. In the meantime the Soviets will deposit in the Canadian banks to meet the payment of all purchases on the condition which the Canadian Government has agreed to, that this gold be immune from seizure for old debts and only subject for payment of new purchasing contracts. I will remain away from Canada until the first of September, when I will sail back by the Canadian Pacific Empress of France."

He built the house in which he lives and has occupied the same for the last 75 years. He was born near Stanbridge in 1823. A brother, Mr. George Davies, residing with him is eighty-nine years of age. Both are in declining health, though Mr George Davies goes about performing minor duties. Residing in the house of Mr Davies are three persons whose aggregate age is 275 years.

CANADIAN SCULLER

Hilton Belyea, the Canadian champion sculler from St. John, N.B., passed through Belleville on his way to St. Catharines, Ont., where he will train in preparation for the meet next week. To an interviewer Belyea said he was in good condition, and would do his best to retain his laurels won last season. From St. Catharines he will go on to Philadelphia to compete in the American National Regatta on August 3 to 5.

A very good-natured lady, who frequently assisted a very extravagant relative, having one summer lent her a considerable sum of money, was surprised and annoyed a few months later to be asked to make a further advance in order that some pressing debts might be settled. "I am very sorry," said the kind-hearted lady, "but I can't possibly help you again just now. In order to lend you that money some time ago I was forced to go without a motor car this season."

"Dear me," was the reply, "if I had only known that I should have been delighted to lend you mine!"

YOU DIDN'T HEAR ABOUT ME DID YOU? I DIDN'T TELL YOU ABOUT MY GOOD FORTUNE— I MADE A LOT OF MONEY SINCE I SAW YOU LAST— MY UNCLE— YOU KNOW I TOLD YOU ABOUT, THAT RICH UNCLE OF MINE— A WIDOW SUED HIM FOR BREACH OF PROMISE FOR A MILLION DOLLARS— HE GAVE ME $100,000.00 TO GO OVER AND SETTLE IT AND I SETTLED IT FOR $50,000.00 AND KEPT $50,000.00 FOR MYSELF—
WELL— NOW I SUPPOSE YOU'RE GOING TO SPEND THE REST OF YOUR LIFE LOAFING— BE A BARNACLE ON THE SHIP OF INDUSTRY— SIT AROUND CRITICISING AND RIDICULING THOSE WHO WORK FOR AN EXISTENCE— A PHILOSOPHER EXPECTING EVERYBODY TO LOOK UP TO YOU BECAUSE YOU HAVE MONEY—
OH I DON'T KNOW— I THINK IT'S A WHOLE LOT BETTER FOR A MAN TO QUIT AFTER HE HAS ENOUGH— DO YOU THINK I'M GOING STRUGGLING ALONG IN COMPETITION WITH THOSE WHO ARE FIGHTING FOR AN EXISTENCE? AND FOR WHAT? JUST TO LEAVE IT TO SOMEBODY WHO WILL RUN THROUGH IT! WHO'S GOING TO GET ALL YOUR MONEY? I'LL BET YOU SOME RELATIVES WILL FALL HEIR TO IT THAT YOU DON'T EVEN SPEAK TO NOW— AND YET YOU GO ON STRUGGLING— DENYING YOURSELF EVERY LUXURY— NOT ME— I'M GOING TO SPEND MY OWN MONEY—

COLLAPSED AT PRAYER

Wife of Canadian Officer Dies During Service in a London Church

London, July 26.—Mrs. Ethel Beckles Willson, an Ontario woman and wife of Lieut.-Col. Beckles Willson, died with tragic suddenness while at prayer at Mitcham church on Monday morning. She was fifty years of age.

Mrs. Willson had hurried to church with her son, and was kneeling for opening prayer when she collapsed. She died before the service had ended.

Col. Willson, as an officer of the Canadian corps, was associated during the war with Lord Beaverbrook in the ministry of information, and later as official collector of Canadian war mementoes. Subsequently he became the town major of Ypres.

Mrs. Willson assisted during the war to found the famous Paris canteen, popularly termed "Corner of Blighty." Recently she was prominently connected with the Ypres League movement and was about to accompany the Earl of Ypres to Ypres.

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glass-wearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, nervousness, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON - WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

MOSQUITOES HAVE SENSE OF COLOR

Scientist's Experiment Finds That Midges Are Fastidious

Cambridge, England, July 26.—Sir Arthur Shipley, vice-chancellor of Cambridge University, a distinguished scientist, has been making a series of careful experiments to discover the color of cloth on which British mosquitoes most delight to sport and browse. Sir Arthur asserts there are 18 varieties of mosquitoes in this country.

In his experiments he submitted 16 colors of cloth to the mosquitoes. "To his surprise he found that navy blue cloth was the favorite of mosquitoes. They showed a distinct antipathy to white wollens, but not so much as the yellow.

They learned Sir Arthur also discor-

The learned Sir Arthur also discovdusk, or during the night, although certain species will bite in broad daylight, if anyone attacks them, say with a bulldog or a mosquito swatter.

SAFE LANDINGS FOR AMUNDSEN

Places Have Been Selected for the Landing of the Flying Explorer

Christiania, July 25.—Lieutenant Valming Thellefsen, chief of the Norwegian Military Flying School returned here yesterday from King's Bay, Spitzbergen, where he went to pick out a landing place for Captain Raold Amundsen on his arrival after flying from the North Pole.

Lieutenant Thellefsen selected two landing places, both near King's Bay. One is at New Aalesund, the other at Quad Hook; they are in sight of each other, and are in valleys running in opposite directions. Amundsen, supposedly, will select the place better suited for alighting against what ever wind may be blowing. A landing will be difficult, because the ground is soft, but if the weather is dry, a safe landing is possible at either place.

Aalesund is a small island on the west coast of Norway, 68 miles southwest by west of Christiansund. As these despatches have told each landing place will be marked "Landing place for Raold Amundsen," in white letters 16 feet high. Coming from the North Pole, Amundsen will soon be able to see Spitzbergen, for its mountains are very high. On reaching Spitzbergen, he doubtless will follow the coast line, flying at a height of 500 to 800 metres, and so, unless the weather is very foggy, he can scarcely fail to find either landing place as it is directly on the coast.

Miss Alice Fairman, of Winnipeg, and Miss M. Ryan, of Toronto, are visiting at Mr. and Mrs. E. Luddle's, 16 Hillside street, city.

JOHN W. THOMAS, well-known insurance man of Wilmington, Del., who declares Tanlac promptly overcame his stubborn stomach trouble and run-down condition following two attacks of influenza. Gains weight and now feels fine.

"The flu left me in such a run-down condition life was miserable and work a burden," declared John W. Thomas, well-known insurance man, 600 Tatnall St., Wilmington, Del., in a recent statement regarding Tanlac.

"Twice I was a victim of the flu," he continued, "the last time about two years ago, and since then I suffered from stomach trouble, nervousness and dizzy spells. After eating, gas on my stomach worked up through my chest and made my heart beat so fast it alarmed me and I nearly smothered. I could never get a good night's sleep and got up mornings with a mean taste in my mouth and all tired out.

"Other medicines seemed to do me harm instead of good, but three bottles of Tanlac rid me of indigestion, the nervousness and dizziness. My sleep is restful and I am feeling like a different man. Tanlac is certainly great."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

JUVENILE CRIME ON INCREASE

Toronto, July 26.—Over last week-end there were 12 juveniles arrested by the Toronto police on various charges of theft and shop-breaking. A striking instance of a juvenile underworld, which promises to develop unless measures are taken to prevent it, was that of a boy of only eleven years, who was caught in the act of breaking into a house.

Chief of Police Dickson stated today that the increase in juvenile crime was becoming serious.

"Hereafter, juveniles arrested will be held in the station to which they are taken until their case comes up in the juvenile court," said the chief. "It is not right to simply arrest these boys and then turn them out on the streets only to carry on their work again. Unless their parents will come down to the station and supply bail and substantial guarantees that the boys will be looked after, they will be kept in the station just the same as an adult who is arrested. It would be an unwarranted action for us to turn them out on the streets again."

The chief said that he had instructed Chief Inspector Beattie to see that in every division the juveniles who are thus held are kept in a separate room, entirely apart from any other prisoners who might be in the station.

No New Detention Home.

"This action of holding these boys is made necessary by the fact that the old detention home on Simcoe street is condemned and the new one is not ready for use yet."

Chief of Police Dickson stated that the boys who were committing these crimes were operating in certain districts. At present more houses and stores in the neighborhood of Dundas street and Bathurst street were being entered than in any other district.

The fact that the holidays for school children are now so long and that the parents in a great many cases go out of the city in the summer time and leave the boys in care of someone else are factors to which the chief attaches importance. He also blames a number of parents who send children to buildings in the course of erection to get wood. The children, when they go on such an errand, frequently see tools lying around and consider that they are only being mischievous in taking them.

SNAKES ALIVE OVERTURN CAR

Motorist Meets Two Snakes in Mortal Combat and Tries to Run Over Them

Cape May, N. J., July 24.—John Sapelton, a travelling salesman, yesterday was driving a roadster from Goshen to Swainton through a densely wooded road, when he saw two snakes in the road apparently in deadly combat.

Thinking he would kill both by running over them, he aimed his car at them. The reptiles became entangled in the steering gear, and before Sapelton could stop the car ran off the road and turned turtle.

Sapelton was not injured. Passing autoists helped him to right the car. The reptilian combatants were found to be two king snakes, each nearly seven feet long. Sapelton has changed his views about runing over snakes in the road.

SUDDEN DEATH AT THOMASBURG

Well-Known Lady Found Dead by Her Husband In Her Home

Death came suddenly on Tuesday morning to Mrs. Edward Porter, the wife of a well known yeoman at Thomasburg, Hungerford Township. Mrs. Porter in the early part of the morning was engaged in picking berries and came to the house shortly before 10 o'clock. Soon after, her four year old daughter Muriel ran out to Mr. Porter who was in a field near by, informing him that her mother had fallen down. Upon arriving at the house Mr. Porter discovered his wife lying on the floor in the pantry and was horrified to ascertain that life was extinct. Heart disease was the cause of death. Deceased was 35 years of age and was a daughter of the late Mr. Charles Geen and a niece of Rev. A. L. Geen of this city. She was a deservedly popular lady with her many relatives and friends. Mrs. Porter was a member of the Anglican Church. In addition to the husband a young daughter, Muriel, survives.

DAUGHTER WAS WEAK AND NERVOUS

Mother Gave Her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with Happy Results

Cobourg, Ontario.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me for my daughter. She had trouble every month which left her in a weak and nervous condition with weak back and pain in her right side. She had these troubles for three years and frequently was unable to attend school. She has become regular and feels much better since she began taking the Vegetable Compound and attends school regularly.—Mrs. John Toms, Ball St., Cobourg, Ontario.

Every mother who has a daughter suffering from such symptoms should give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It is prepared from roots and herbs, and can be taken in safety by young or old. It has been used nearly fifty years, and many, many women owe their good health today to the timely use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

BETTY COMPSON AND BABY PEGGY HERE TOMORROW

Betty Compson leads a dual life in her latest Paramount picture, "The Green Temptation," which is the feature offering at Griffin's tomorrow to Saturday.

As Genelle, she is an Apache dancer and gem thief in the underworld of Paris, and as Coralyn, a dancer of the Parisian high class theatres. Later she enters the war as a Red Cross nurse, assuming the name of Joan Parker, and during the conflict comes her regeneration. Thus she plays, as it were, three different characterizations which afford her wonderful opportunities of dramatic portrayal. To sustain these roles completely was no small task, but the star accomplished it with skill. Mahlon Hamilton and Theodore Kosloff head a strong supporting cast. Baby Peggy, the child wonder, and dog Brownie, appear on the same program in a two-reel Century comedy titled "Circus Clowns." A beautiful Travelogue and George Walsh in "With Stanley in Africa" are also announced for exhibition.

OLDER MEN MAKE BETTER LOVERS

The showing of "Morals", one of the current feature pictures at Griffin's tonight, has revived the ancient debate as to which makes the better lover, the youth or the experienced man.

The leading man playing opposite little May McAvoy is William P. Carleton, distinguished actor of forty years' experience. He makes love "gorgeously," say the girls who have seen the film. "It's me for an old man's darling!" exclaimed one young thing as she came out of the theatre last evening. "When a girl marries, she needn't make it exactly a case of May and December. But a man who is along in the late September or October period certainly makes a better protector than a kid boy just the same age as the girl."

"The Wise Kid"—like to meet her? She is appearing on the same program in the five-reel Universal special attraction of that name. Gladys Walton impersonates her. "Kind Deeds", the original title of the story when it was published under William Slavens McNutt's signature in the Metropolitan Magazine, symbolizes the wild goose chase the girl of the story was sent off on by a society matron.

An amusing Harold Lloyd comedy is being exhibited on the same program.

HARDING BACKS UP THE LABOR BOARD

Washington, July 26.—President Harding is determined to enforce recognition of the Railroad Labor Board as the "supreme authority" in railway labor troubles, upon both the executives and the employes. This was stated emphatically at the White House yesterday.

President Harding and his Cabinet have obviously decided to play a waiting game in the hopes that a sufficiently large number of the bigger roads will make agreements with the workers to give efficient transportation service. It is felt that once the main trunk lines have reached a working agreement with the strikers the others will be brought into line.

large extent, as in other districts has grown very rapidly. This shortage has been apparent for some years. It is conclusive that, if the percentage of increase is maintained since the commission took over the system, all of the water available will be in use in the course of a year or two.

Power Rates Go Up

"The additional cost owing to the high rental that is being paid to the Dominion Government will necessitate a rearrangement of power prices to various users, all of which make it very essential that a larger supply of power should become available within the very near future, not only on the Central Ontario System, or Trent District, but also the St. Lawrence District as far east as Cornwall and the Rideau and Ottawa District lying between the St. Lawrence River and the city of Ottawa. The St. Lawrence is the only available supply that will meet the demands of the whole eastern district between the city of Toronto, or Whitby, on the west, and Ottawa and Cornwall on the east."

GOV'T CONTROL FOOD AND FUEL

Commission to Distribute Coal and Food in the United States

Washington, July 26.—Virtual control of the mechanical equipment of the transportation system of the country having to do with the movement of coal and food will pass back to the Government today as the first drastic step toward the aversion of a coal famine.

The control is to be vested in the Interstate Commerce Commission which, acting under the power vested in it by the Transportation Act declared the existence of an emergency and issued an order effective to-morrow, suspending rules and regulations governing the use of rolling stock and the necessary motive power.

While primarily designed to aid in the distribution of coal in a manner efficiently to prevent interruption to interstate commerce supply public utilities whose bins are empty, and to prevent suffering in communities, the emergency order applies also to the railway rolling stock necessary to the movement of food for human consumption, feed for live stock, perishable products, coke and fuel oil.

WALES CAN'T FILL U.S. COAL ORDERS

American Purchasers Have Cleared Old Country Market for Month

Cardiff, Wales, July 25.—There was a decided advance in coal prices here yesterday on the American demand. Welsh coal, recently selling at 24 shillings per ton for export, is now 27 shillings and business is more active than for many months past. The leading companies are booked up until the end of August and are refusing to accept more orders.

American purchasers seem to have cleared the Welsh market for fully a month ahead, and it is believed here that the United States is ready to take two million tons monthly if the strike continues. Wales is hopeful of securing half of these orders.

RAT CAMPAIGN A SUCCESS

Many Rodents Have Been Exterminated the Past Week

The local campaign launched here a week ago to exterminate rats in the city is proving a notable success. Yesterday Mr. Urry baited all the public dumps and this morning most of the bait had disappeared and numbers of dead rats are being found. Hundreds of rats have been exterminated in the past week in Belleville and great interest is being taken in the campaign, and great satisfaction is being expressed. Mr. Urry and his staff expect to complete their work here tomorrow. Mr. Urry expressed the hope that the citizens would continue the work and make Belleville a ratless city.

ONTARIO LIQUOR PROFITS.

Ottawa, July 26.—A profit of $64,566.94 was made during 1921 in the operation of the Ontario Government dispensary at Ottawa. The percentage of net profit was 22.02, which compares favorably with that in other dispensaries.

Notwithstanding the opposition from Hull, the Ottawa dispensary turnover for the year was $293,255.06, which left a gross profit of $107,646.50.

In Toronto the total sales brought in a revenue of $1,188,009.36, the net profit being $264,186.75 or 22.24 per cent. The business throughout the province fell off slightly, but the total sales were $3,336,588.45, the gross profit being 33 1-3 per cent. However, the net profits were pared down to $691,598 or 21.98 per cent.

TEN OF "RILEY ARMY" TO RECEIVE GRATUITIES

Ottawa, July 25.—About ten members of the "Riley Army" will receive gratuities from the Dominion Government, it was announced by Hon. George P. Graham, Minister of Defense, last night.

Some months ago his department advertised in Toronto and other Ontario papers to secure the names and the regiments of those enlisted in the "Riley Army." No response was received from these advertisements, so the department made a careful investigation, and as a result some of them are found to have valid claims to monetary reward from the Government.

It is understood that it is not through any demonstration of force or protest on the part of that organization that a small number of them will be paid gratuities, but solely as a result of the independent initiative of the department.

Rail Shop Men Forced to Strike Says Tallon

Declares That U.S. Engines Are Being Repaired in Grand Trunk Shops in Canada—Department of Labor Giving Men's Grievances Close Attention

APPEAL OF MEN TO LEMIEUX ACT

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 27.—An announcement that the Canadian railway shopmen were being practically forced to declare an immediate strike because engines and cars from United States railroads, whose shopmen are on strike, were being repaired in the Grand Trunk shops in the Dominion, was made this afternoon by R. J. Tallen, president of division number four, Railway Employees Department of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Tallen said that he had received a reply from the Minister of Railways at Ottawa in reference to his telegram of yesterday acquainting the Minister with the desire of the men to down tools because of a tentative reduction of wages imposed by the railways on the shopmen. The reply, Mr. Tallen said, stated that the position was being discussed at Ottawa.

Ottawa, July 27.—The threatened strike of shopmen on Canadian railways is receiving the close attention of the Department of Labor. It is not thought likely here that a strike will be declared before Saturday, but the end of the week is regarded as likely to be crucial one way or the other. The railways have until Saturday to select their representative on the board of investigation which has been applied for under the Lemieux Act. If they do not notify the Minister of Labor before that time of the name of their nominee it is understood that he will appoint a representative to act for them.

Ottawa, July 26.—It was understood here tonight that the Prime Minister had not yet received the telegram forwarded by R. J. Tallon, Montreal, president of Division No. 4 of the Railway Employees' Department of the American Federation of Labor, announcing the result of the strike vote taken by the shopmen and asking if the railways had agreed to withdraw the wage reductions. It was believed that the telegram would probably be received and answered tomorrow morning.

The Prime Minister, Hon. W. C. Kennedy, Minister of Railways and Canals, and Hon. James Murdock, Minister of Labor, are not in the city tonight.

DIVORCE RING SHOWS BROKEN CUPID ARROW

Paris, July 27.—Jewellers have just designed a special ring for divorced people. It has not yet been decided whether to call it the 'divorce ring" or the "ring of disunion."

The design consists of a cupid's arrow broken in half. It can be executed in various ways with various stones.

Jewellers predict that the new fashion will quickly become popular, divorce having become so frequent that it is considered there is a need for a distinctive emblem. It has been suggested that there be a special ceremony of exchange of "divorce rings" after a court issues a final decree in such cases.

BURGLARS BORE THROUGH WALL

Burglars Working From Empty Bank Building Carry Loot to Truck

New York, July 27.—Burglars having headquarters in a building recently vacated by the Industrial Bank of New York chiseled their way through a 12-inch brick wall into the adjoining building occupied by the Lorraine Silk Mills at 325 Fourth Avenue and escaped with $10,000 worth of stock. The police, after suppressing news of the theft since last Saturday, said yesterday that the robbery was one of the most daring in recent years.

The former bank building is on the corner of Twenty-Fourth Street and Fourth Avenue, one of the busiest sections of the silk wholesale district, and the police and officials of the company cannot understand how such a large amount of plunder could be carried off without exciting suspicion, or how the burglars knew just where to drill the hole and get away with the silk without striking the burglar alarm system. The plunder was carried off in a truck.

Abraham Kreizel, head of the firm of Kreizel & Bernstein, which represents the Lorraine Silk Mills, said he believed that some one who knew the layout of the building helped in the robbery. Silks bearing marks easily traced were avoided, and the robbers showed the professional touch by selecting only bolts of the finest quality.

A MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE

A Proposal in Open Court—Mercenary Desires Land Girl Into Peck of Trouble—Bald-Headed Adonis Prepares For Wedding

Toronto, July 27.—"A Marriage of Convenience" in embryo might aptly be used as a title to the story told in Police Court yesterday by Miss Roselle Patterson, of 250 Lee avenue, and the victim, to the tune of $400, of the wicked schemes of two men, William Hunt, alias James D. Madison, and John D. Mahoney.

It was represented to the woman that a legacy of $55,000 would be available to Hunt, provided he got married. He professed temporary poverty, and borrowed $400 to fit himself out for the wedding ceremony.

"I didn't get married. I was very lucky," said Miss Patterson.

Fletcher Kerr, defending, was very personal, and turned his searching eye upon the maiden's heart.

'Was there any love?" he asked.

"No love at all," admitted the girl, adding that Hunt, alias Madison, was "perfectly gentlemanly" in her company.

"It was a business transaction. I advanced $400 to make secure my claim on the $55,000," she said.

"Would you marry him now?" asked Mr. Kerr.

"I wouldn't marry him now," said the young lady.

"If you could have got the $55,000 you would have done so," said Mr. Kerr.

"Wouldn't you take $55,000?" asked the girl.

"He wouldn't have been here if he had had the $55,000," added Mr. Kerr.

"And I wouldn't have been here if he hadn't got my $400," concluded the girl.

"There is no proof of theft," said Mr. Kerr. "She handed him the $400 to prepare for marriage. He is prepared to marry her now. Call in a preacher right now and he'll marry her. She was actuated by mercenary desires. Even at that he was ready to hand himself over for life. All is fair in love and war. In his zeal as a suppliant for her hand he may have made brave statements. Many people do. It is no joking matter for him to marry her after what she has said."

Magistrate Cohen announced a conviction and reserved decision till Monday.

G.T.R. ECONOMIZE IN FUEL SUPPLY

Passenger Engines Now Run From Montreal to Belleville

Brockville, July 26.—With a view to the conservation of fuel, the motive power department of the Grand Trunk initiated a new departure in the operation of its locomotives hauling passenger trains between Montreal and Toronto by routing them without change between Montreal and Belleville, thus doing away with the consumption of coal while locomotives are awaiting their trains.

The first train to be affected by this change was No. 15 (The International Limited), which did not change its engine here to-day as has been customary. The engine crew was, however, changed, and fitters inspected the engine on its arrival. Coal passers were also on duty.

Under the new ruling, the engines of trains Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 19 will not be changed here, although the crews will do so. Trains No. 9 and 10 now change engines at Kingston and with them there will be no change.

Since the inception of the coal strike in the United States fields the Grand Trunk has been largely consuming on this section of its system coal brought from Nova Scotia pits. The change in the operation of engines is for the purpose of obviating the consumption of coal while engines have steam up here and also after they have been re-lighted.

Some years ago the Grand Trunk tried the same scheme with the lighter classes of motive power which were then in operation, but found that the engines could not carry sufficient coal to run the 222 miles from Montreal to Belleville. With heavier power this difficulty is no longer confronted, but it will be necessary for the engines to take water, probably at Prescott.

FOR PREFERENTIAL TARIFF

Toronto, July 27.—J. N. Shenstone first vice-president of the Massey-Harris Company, who has just returned from a six-month's tour through the Australian Commonwealth, states that using the "yellow peril" argument, Australian manufacturers have succeeded in forcing their government to greatly increase its tariff wall.

"Negotiations are now under way," he stated, "between the Canadian and Australian Governments, which, if successful, will result in a reciprocal preferential tariff being drawn up."

RELIGIONS OF THE U. S. A.

The other 96 are divided as follows:

The three largest bodies are: Methodist, 22,171,951; Baptists, 21,538,700; Roman Catholics 17,885,646.

THREE MEN IN A BOAT ADRIFT ON THE LAKE

Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 27.—Three men who had drifted in a small boat on Lake Ontario from Saturday afternoon until yesterday morning landed exhausted, twelve miles east of Fort Niagara.

The men were Captain L. S. Shooner, of Portland, Oregon, Olympic rifle team captain and assistant instructor in military tactics, at the University of Pennsylvania; Captain J. Stiff, of Toronto, and an officer named Walker, of Montreal. They started out early on Saturday afternoon for a day's sail, carrying a lunch with them.

The sail boat was well out into the lake when a storm shattered the mast. The auxiliary engine refused to work. there was a tiny dory aboard the sail boat, but no oars for it. Finally Captain Shooner fashioned a pair of oars from the remnants of the broken mast. With this, the men took turns rowing the dory and towing the sail boat. After many hours they came to shore. Except for the exhaustion, the men suffered no ill-effects from their experience. The lunch they carried, rationed carefully, served them as food for the three days.

The three men had intended to take a pleasure sail of a few hours and return to their starting point, Niagara-on-the-Lake.

CHICKEN-BONE IN THROAT IS PUZZLING SPECIALISTS

Chatham, July 27.—Mrs. Joseph McKee of this city is in Harper Hospital in a critical condition as the result of a peculiar accident Monday evening. At supper on that day a small piece of chicken-bone lodged in her throat. Efforts of local physicians failed to dislodge the bone, and she was rushed to Detroit, and according to latest reports surgeons there have failed to locate the obstruction.

LABOR VICTORY IN WALES

(Canadian Press Cable.)

London, July 27.—Concurrently with the announcement of the victory of T. Hardy Jones, Labor candidate, over T. A. Lewis, Coalition Liberal, in Pontypridd, Wales, yesterday in a by-election, in connection with which the Labor candidate concentrated on the unemployment situation, the Government has decided to establish a special Cabinet committee to reconsider unemployment problems.

GALLANT LEADER

RT. HON. ARTHUR MEIGHEN

Travels Steerage to 'blige a Lady.

Quebec, July 27.—Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, former premier of Canada and now leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, who is summering at Tadousac, on the St. Lawrence, with his family, proved a gallant knight once more yesterday. He boarded the steamer Cap Diamond on his way to Quebec. The boat was crowded, but reservations had been made for the distinguished passenger. Just as he was on the eve of retiring he noticed that the saloon was filled with people who had no accommodation. Gallantly he offered his cabin to a lady and spent the rest of the night sleeping comfortably as a steerage passenger.

DR. CHOWN REPLIES TO PRESS CRITICS

English Papers Claim Canadian Methodism Not Well Managed

London, July 27.—A spirited controversy has been in progress for some time in the religious and a section of the secular press of England concerning the efficiency with which the Methodist Church is being conducted in Canada. The Methodist Recorder of this month contains an answer by Rev. Dr. S. D. Chown, general superintendent of Canadian Methodism, to these criticisms, which he characterizes as preposterous. Rev. C. Ashlin West, however, repeats them in the Yorkshire Telegraph, in a communication in which he states that though Methodist emigrants from Britain pour into Canada, Methodist churches there are being closed up, and "there are fewer Methodists by many thousands than the previous position of our church in the new land would warrant us in expecting."

CAIRO POLICE ARREST LEADERS

Take Three Into Custody for Issuing Circular Attacking Cabinet as Pro-British

Cairo, July 27.—There was a recrudescence of political excitement in Cairo this week when the police, acting in accordance with orders from the British military authorities sought to arrest members of the Executive Committee of the Zagloulist Party. Three leaders who in Cairo were immediately taken into custody. Four others, who are out of the city, will be apprehended as soon as their whereabouts is discovered.

It is understood that the occasion for the arrests is the inflammatory circular charging the Cabinet with betraying Egypt and holding it responsible for the consequences of its policy co-operation with the British which the agitators regard as against Egypt's real interests.

MAN KILLED IN QUARREL

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Nanaimo, B.C., July 27.—According to information received here last night, one man was killed and two others injured in a quarrel on the Indian Reserve at Port Alberni. The Provincial Police are investigating.

DROWNING ACCIDENT.

LORDS FAVOR CATTLE BAN

Vote Down Amendment for Unconditional Removal of Embargo

London, July 27.—The debate in the House of Lords yesterday afternoon indicated that the Peers are inclined to regard the actual removal of the embargo against Canadian store cattle as only a matter of time, and some strong advocates of the embargo manifested a disposition to accept the situation.

Yesterday's proceedings were a continuance of the debate started on July 13, when Lord Chaplin presented a resolution urging the maintenance of the embargo, and Lord Lincolnshire moved a resolution demanding the fulfilment of the pledge of 1917 that the embargo would be removed. The weight of the speeches of July 11 was decidedly against any change of policy, but sentiment, it was shown to-day, on the issue has undergone a remarkable change

Accept a Compromise

After a considerable array of prominent Peers had addressed the House, the Lord Lincolnshire amendment, favoring unconditional removal of the embargo, was voted down by 91 to 53, but the House adopted the Lord Long amendment as a substantive resolution, accepting the conclusions of the Findlay Royal Commission, that Canadian herds were free from the plague of pleuro-pneumonia and foot-and mouth disease, and expressing the opinion that steers from the Dominions might be admitted as store cattle, subject to quarantine precautions.

Monday's vote in the House of Commons on the embargo issue had a material effect on the debate, and Lord Ancaster, who represents the Board of Agriculture in the upper Chamber, made it quite plain that he anticipated legislation lifting the embargo and that he was only anxious that the removal of the embargo should be accompanied by certain safeguards.

105 PRISONERS ESCAPED

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Belfast, July 27.—Through a hole blown in the wall by a mine 105 prisoners escaped from Dundalk jail, County Louth, today. The shock of the explosion shook the town, shattering the windows of the county hospital and houses of the town's best residential district.

RAILWAY STRIKE IS IMMINENT

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Toronto, July 27.—Before leaving Montreal last night a member of the executive of division number four, Railway Employees' Department of the American Federation of Labor, expressed the view that the strike would be called before Sunday night against wage reductions.

LEADER LEWIS HATES TROOPS

Their Mobilization "a National Farce," Declares Mine Workers' Chief

HARDING HAS FAILED

Men Will Not Be "Driven Back" He says—500,000 Tons From England

New York, July 27.—The American coal miners will not be "driven back to work at starvation wages" and the strike can be settled only on a national basis, John L. Lewis, international President of the United Mine Workers of America, declared in a statement issued here. He said:

"The miners are anxious to settle this strike and resume the production of coal. We are ready to meet in joint conference with the coal operators at the earliest moment that such a conference can be arranged in harmony with the contractual obligations of the coal companies and in line with the procedure which has prevailed in the industry for more than a quarter of a century.

"No district conferences or agreements will be sanctioned by the mine workers' organization. The mine workers' representatives will hold themselves in readiness to respond to any logical and practical attempt to effectuate an adjustment.

"Ten days have elapsed since the President directed the coal operators of the country whose mines are on strike to return to their homes and resume the production of coal, following which he telegraphed the Governors of the several commonwealths urging them to accord military protection to all coal companies employing strike breakers. Despite the promulgation of this policy by the Federal Government and its punctilious application by several Governors, there has been no increase in coal production.

"Not a single union miner has returned to work throughout the length and breadth of the land, and it must now be obvious to all that the American miner will not be driven back to work at starvation wages and under non-union conditions by any fanfare of trumpets or vain military display. The assembling and parading of engines of war to awe American citizens who are merely exercising their inherent constitutional right to cease work in order to maintain their industrial and social status as citizens of the Republic would be a national farce did it not possess the elements of tragedy

Assails State Troops.

"The presence of State troops in large numbers in communities where no transgression of the law has occurred in itself constitutes a menace to domestic tranquility and creates a situation repugnant to the ideals of every free born American. Aside from the questions of equity and constitutional rights which are involved, the public is being heavily taxed to maintain military forces in the field to assist mining corporations who deny industrial justice to their employes and are applying labor-crushing anti-union policies. The employment of citizen soldiery of our country in the protection of imported strike-breakers in the mining industry is bound to lessen the respect of a large part of our citizenship for the National Guard as an impartial institution.

"The lamentable breakdown of the Federal policy naturally lessens the desire of the public for further experiments of this sort. The public is primarily concerned with its future coal supply and the Summer is on the wane. Time is an important factor. The loss of an additional ten days to further develop fantastic schemes in the field of industrial experimentation can hardly be afforded. The mine workers are resolved not to be driven back to the mines by any threat of force and neither do they intend to return until the coal operators of the country are required to meet them in joint conference in order that a new wage scale may be negotiated. The principles of collective bargaining are at stake and the right to employment at a living wage is an issue which must be considered.

It has fallen to Mr. Milligan's lot, a member of the staff of The Globe, to attend and report many ecclesiastical gatherings. In particular he has been in attendance on the General Assembly, in this capacity, for a great number of years; and those who know will testify that his sympathies have always been with the things of the Church, the things of the spirit, the things that make for the higher life of men. Mr. Milligan has contributed to The Witness both in prose and verse, and we know that we express the sentiments of a large circle when we wish him all success and happiness in his new field of labor.—Presbyterian Witness.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

"Give Us Barabbas!"

It may be history, but as an allegory it is safeguarded for all time. The story is that a great and potent people had the Lord of Hosts as their Governor. He was their King, their Senate, their Parliament, their Prime Minister and He was the Head Master of the Public School.

But they were not satisfied with this. They wanted a King of their own to rule over them "like the other nations," and from that hour to this they have never had a day's luck. They didn't know when they were well off. They were like the Sinn Fein to-day, and the Bolshevists and the U.F.O. and the Lord's Day Alliance et al. They wanted a King of their own making to rule over them and, as the Lord never forces Himself on anyone, they had their own wish and mighty Babylon. Old Rome didn't do a thing to them. Not that you'd notice.

Some of you can recall the time when the Patrons of Industry in this province were the most beneficent organization that ever blessed the land. The farmers of every brand of politics and religion regardless of their previous condition of servitude united for the purpose of uplift and advancement and great things would have been accomplished only—

They wanted a King, and that's what the allegory means. They united to get into Parliament. They wanted to sit on a throne. They wanted to make a lot of laws that no one would, could or should keep. They elected a King called Hayfork, or Haycock or Hayman and they put him on the brood mare, and led him up and down the seventh concession roaring, "Hayman, long live Hayman."

One would have thought that the experience they had with Mr. Hayman would have been a lesson to them, but now they are at it again and there is going to be a public execution one of these days that will stagger humanity.

One of the horrors of war is the barbarous practice of making a prisoner dig his own grave.

But the U.F.O. haymen consider it a prerogative, a privilege. Mr. Raney hath elected himself chief grave digger and he certainly does make the dirt fly. Every now and then Mr. Drury spits on his hands and says, "Gimme the shovels," and the dirt flies higher. And yet they won't need such a big hole. When the funeral song is sung and the funeral rite is read the cavity big enough to contain the carcass of the U. F. O. needn't be big enough to hold the remains of a dead jackass, and all because they wanted to have a King of their own. "Give us Barabbas," they said. Now Barabbas was an old mossback who skimmed the milk he sent to the creamery.

Recent events go to show that a home-made King is no good. You never see a procession of Roman Catholic priests and laymen trolloping up University avenue to lay a petition at the feet of King Raney. No, and why? You have got to hand it to our Roman Catholic friends. They have poise, dignity, balance. They make the King come to them. That's the talk.

"Most potent, grave and reverend fathers, permit me to kiss your ring or anything else that is handy or convenient."

The spectacle of a bunch of Catholic priests kowtowing to a Raney or a Drury in the Legislature buildings and pleading for some arbitrary law to be passed "for heaven's sake" will never be staged on this earth. The Catholics recognise only one King and the Pope's proudest title is "Vicar of Christ," and that is where they have the Protestants where the hair is short.

It was only the other day that I expressed the opinion that the procession was a thing of the past. I hope to live to see the day when the deputation will be a Has Been. The petition and the deputation are relics of the Dark Ages. I hope to live long enough to see a Prime Minister in Queen's Park kick a deputation downstairs and then follow them outside and boot them as far as the gums. The deputation habit is a vicious one. When the war was on the embattled farmers of Ontario fired a shot heard round the world. They sent a deputation to Ottawa to protest against any horny-handed son of the old man being conscripted while 'taters was seven dollars a bag. And yet these stupendous Reubens will tell you that they don't believe in class legislation. Well, the deputation went to Ottawa and got kicked downstairs, the one outstanding incident in the story of Union Government which will live longest in history. Of course, the deputation was sore and no wonder, and to get even they formed the U.F.O. Treason and Creed chambered together, and the outcome is a little party of which that capable farmer's wife, Mistress Raney, is wet nurse and Jay Jay brings it home some losenges every time he goes to town.

The deputation is doomed. The last deputation to go to Ottawa cried: "Give us Barabbas."

Now Barabbas is not a robber. He is a gentle old mossback who thinks that everybody should pay income tax but the horny-handed son of toil.

SAILOR'S STRANGE WILL ADMITTED TO PROBATE

London, July 27.—Strange as the story of any document told in fiction is that of a will which has just been admitted to probate and is now filed in Somerset House.

It is the "last will and testament" of a sailor, William Skinner, who lost his life when his ship, the Indefatigable, was sunk in the battle of Jutland. It is in the form of the ordinary identification disc. On one side, in the usual deeply-punched letters, appear the name, number, rating and religion of the man to whom it had been issued.

On the other side the disc appears at first sight to be just a circular piece of smooth, polished brass. But when viewed at a certain angle, there can be seen about 75 minutely engraved words. With a microscope they can be plainly read. They constitute Skinner's will by which he bequeaths everything to his wife. The disc had been recovered from the sea with Skinner's body and on being cleaned revealed its secret.

TICKLED COCKROACHES

Rochester, N.Y., July 27.—A device for the electrocution of cockroaches was the subject of much controversy in the city court here when George D. Forsyth, an attorney, appeared as his own counsel in an action against the Triangle Tool and Die Company, charging breach of contract, in the manufacture of the contrivance invented by him.

Two of the "chairs" were in court. It was alleged one of them was defective because the roach was warned of danger by a tickling sensation in his front feet when he touched the live metal.

The roach, according to the specifications of the invention, was to have been induced to walk on the metal by quantities of celery juice placed at convenient spots. Decision was reserved.

Morrison Proposes Establishment of Eastern Branch of Canadian Council of Agriculure

Berlin, July 27.—Prussian monarchists, according to Vossische Zeitung, are responsible for the present trouble between the federal government and Bavaria. The latest reports from Munich indicate that a show-down cannot be much longer postponed, as the ruling party in Bavaria, the people's party, is determined not to observe the federal law for the defense of the republic as passed by the Reichstag, but will insist that the Bavarians pass their own law.

It is considered in Berlin, that unless President Ebert acts with a strong hand to veto the adoption of any separate defense measure on the part of Bavaria, he will not only weaken his own position and that of the Berlin government, but he will be lending encouragement to the monarchists in their propaganda against the republic.

The majority of the Berlin newspapers that are loyal to the republic are urging President Ebert to call Bavaria's bluff and to settle the Bavarian question once and for all.

Felicia's "Quick Lunch Room"

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(©, 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

During their honeymoon the Newtons read poetry together. "There would be so little time to do that when they were settled down and James had to hurry so much. And so, during this blissful period, James Newton frequently reminded his charming wife that to him food was a mere incident of life. Had not old Omar said:

"Here, with a Loaf of Bread beneath the Bough,
A Flask of Wine, a Book of Verse—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
And Wilderness is Paradise enow."

Felicia Newton listened and loved her lord all the more for his indifference to the material pleasures of eating and drinking. But of course there came an end to the honeymoon, and there was the exquisite pleasure of the return home to the new house in the suburbs, the little round of social events, the novelty of getting a husband off to catch the 8:15 train to town every morning, and wrestling with the vagaries of an incompetent cook.

Within one short week after their return home James Newton had ceased to quote Omar Khayyam, and Felicia suspected tearfully that he was yearning for the flesh pots of his bachelor days. To tell the truth, James was plainly dissatisfied. Compared to the ruinous food that Biddy served even the memory of downtown white-tiled lunchrooms became endearing. There followed days when he quoted from the menus of his quick lunch palace amid the skyscrapers, and Felicia for the first time learned that corned beef hash and griddle cakes, well cooked, were esteemed by her husband even above the peace and refinement of his own home, where the table was spread with fine damask, wedding silver and a centerpiece of cut flowers.

"Dear heart," sighed Felicia, who looked ravishing in a silk negligee with a cobwebby lace cap on her sunny head, "isn't this heaps and heaps better than a lunchroom which looks like the inside of a refrigerator and all kinds of smelly things cooking around?"

James peered into his cup of weak coffee, stared at the petrified hot "biscuits," sniffed at the greasy platter of blackened bacon and pushed back his chair.

"I'm hungry, Felicia," he said in a strained tone. "Honest-to-goodness hungry for food! Can't you fire the cook and get another one, darling?"

"I will send her away today, Jimmy," said Felicia meekly; "but I am afraid I cannot get another one. I tried the other day and Miss Minchin said all she had was a girl who had worked in a lunchroom—James Newton," as his face brightened, "would you rather eat in that horrible white p-pi-pla-place than in our lovely dining room?"

"I've got to eat somewhere, somehow, dear! I cannot eat Biddy's burned stuff. I cannot survive long on the lovely table appointments or browse on the bunch of flowers, can I? Of course not—good-by, honey; I'll have to race for that train after all."

So Jim raced for the train as he did every morning, and Felicia stood on the front porch and waved her hand until he was out of sight. Then she turned back into the house and sank down on the couch in the living room. "Hurry! Hurry! Hurry! all the time," she groaned. "James wants his food prepared here so he can eat and run in the morning and eat and sit down and read at night—and—I'm going to give it to him."

First, she cried, which cleared the atmosphere considerably. Then she went into the kitchen, paid Biddy in lieu of a month's notice and let that damsel go. Then she telephoned to Miss Minchin to send along the girl who had worked in a lunchroom. The rest of the day she spent shopping in town and working feverishly in the pretty, white-enameled kitchen with the new girl, whose efficiency was somewhat dazed by her young mistress' astounding proposition.

Meanwhile, James has reached the lunchroom of his choice and enters to eat griddle cakes and coffee and bacon and eggs. From the bottom of his heart he loathes the whole tribe of griddle cake bakers. During his bachelorhood he had snatched hasty breakfasts and luncheons from these white tables and he had hoped that he was done with them forever. Now he braced himself for the ordeal, entered and enjoyed a hearty meal.

Beside Biddy's wreckage of food this was nectar and ambrosia. At noon he bolted down another meal with less enthusiasm, and he began to look forward to the evening with its daintily-appointed dinner table and questionable viands. The roast would be overdone and the pie underdone, but there was Felicia and home and quiet.

Evening came and home once more. he paused in the front hall and sniffed the air. What was that stifling, familiar smell?

Griddle cakes!

With darkened brow he entered the dining room, it was dark and there was no sign of dinner. He opened the kitchen door and stopped there, dumb with amazement. Some weird trans- [illegible] screen hid the cooking range, but in the middle of the floor was a large white enameled table and in one corner was a small square one, with a chair before it. On the small table was a glass stand heaped with folded paper napkins, a big sugar bowl of a familiar variety, pepper and salt shakers and a typewritten menu card.

Felicia was garbed in white, with a large white apron, and there was a glimpse of a grinning maid similarly attired. Here in his own adored home was the atmosphere of the hated lunchrooms, and there was a crude sign on the wall, "Watch your hat and overcoat."

Felicia came and pecked his cheek. "Isn't it great? So easy to prepare things, so easy to serve and so easy for you to eat, dear. Hurry, now, and sit down. Oakly Ransome has telephoned for you to meet him at the station at 7:10 and go into town to some new show, and you can make it if you hurry!"

"Hurry!" How James hated the word.

He smiled feebly and loked at the card Felicia gave him. She had been faithful to detail and had not omitted one of the standard dishes familiar to the peripatetic luncher-out. "Griddle cakes," ordered James sportingly.

James did not eat much, though the new girl was a very good cook; he was very thoughtful as he finished the last leathery bit of pie and, leaving a tip on the table, he went out of the room. But there was a discouraged droop to his shoulders and there was no sign of hurry in his gait. Felicia watched him anxiously as he went into the library and, calling Oakly Ransome up, he told him he could not go into town. He sat down to read the evening paper, when Felicia came in, attired in one of her charming frocks. She kissed him and called him "dear old Omar," and he did not smile until the new maid demurely announced dinner and Felicia laughingly dragged him into the dining room to the dainty table set for dinner. The meal was delicious and James cared not that Felicia lectured him all the way through on the evils of hurried eating.

"I've got to hurry now," he said; "she probably won't last long."

"She's going to stay forever," promised Felicia wistfully, and then her husband stopped eating and smiled tenderly at her. "I can't help loving you better when I'm not hungry," he confessed as he kissed her contentedly.

NEW YORK AS REST HAVEN

Almost the Last Thing With Which the Visitor Would Credit the Noisy Metropolis.

An attractive young woman, wearing a wedding ring and an intensely wornout look, sat by a window in the train coming down the Hudson from Tarrytown. She was surrounded by bags of various colors and shapes and evidently was going somewhere to stay for a while.

As the train passed through Yonkers she gave a contented sigh and turned to the middle-aged man beside her. He had made several vain attempts to start a conversation, but now she seemed more responsive.

"It's fine to get near the big city," she said. "I needed this trip so much."

"I take it you have lived in New York before," replied the man. "I commute, myself, but I can readily understand how lonesome people must become when they move away from the city after being so accustomed to the noise and crowds."

"Oh, I'm afraid you are mistaken, sir," she interrupted. "I've never lived in New York before. My home is in Haverstraw, but I got so tired of the drudgery of housework that I had to come to New York to rest my nerves."

"Le Sport."

The news that the French government has appointed a minister for sports, to encourage games and physical training, is interesting for several reasons. In the first place, this move must mean expenditure, and France is already sunk a good deal further into the financial quagmire than we are ourselves. Either, then, France can face bankruptcy with a smile or she has decided that "health" is an essential service, and that the road to health is paved with good athletics. Secondly, it shows how public opinion in France has maintained its steady trend toward an ideal of muscular Latinity. The emergence of Carpentier as an international figure had an immense effect on the general thought of France and fired idealism of "les sports" as well as of "les arts."

How They Love One Another!

Here's a story for the ladies:

Mrs. Smith meets Mrs. Jones, who is wearing a new batiste waist. Mrs. Smith does not observe the waist.

"You know," says Mrs. Smith, after the conversation inevitably runs to clothes, "I simply cannot stand batiste for waists. It looks so much like underwear."

Next day Mrs. Smith meets Mrs. Jones again. This time she observes the waist.

"Such a beautiful waist," she smiles, "I think batiste is so nice for waists. So simple, you know."

HORSE FARM IN QUEBEC

An Important Breeding Establishment in the County of Montmorency

It is not generally known that the most important horse breeding establishment east of Manitoba is situated at St. Joachim, County of Montmorency, Province of Quebec. This Farm was started by the united efforts of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, the Quebec Department of Agriculture, and the French Canadian Horse Breeders' Association. The work is being carried on by the first-named and is under the direct supervision of Mr. Gus. Langelier who is also Superintendent of the Dominion Experimental Station, Cap Rouge, Que. There are at present, on the Horse-Farm, over ninety horses, all pure-bred French Canadians; an idea of the scale on which breeding operations are conducted can be had when it is known that twenty-two mares have youngsters this year, whilst thirty-four are due to foal in 1923.

It is fully admitted that part of the work is to improve French Canadian horses, but it is also clear that most of the problems as well with this breed as with any other. These problems are quite numerous; inbreeding, close, in line, and outcrossing; in feeding roughages, concentrates, pastures; in housing, the big special barn, part of the cattle barn partitioned off, cheap single-boarded shelters; in management, work or no work for breeding animals, prevention of diseases in youngsters, raising autumn colts. These in themselves show the advisability of having started such a Farm

What will be the future of the place? From an investigational point of view it is assured, as even a quarter of a century is not near long enough to solve many of the problems. As to the effects of any improvement of the French Canadian horse accomplished thereby and the scope of the distribution of improved breeding stock, the future of that enterprise is really in the hands of the farmers of the Province of Quebec. If they show enough interest, no doubt French Canadian horses will continue to be bred at St. Joachim; but if it is found out, which is improbable, that French-Canadian stallions and breeding stock are not in demand, then it will surely be in order to look into the question of using another breed for the experimental work at St. Joachim.

In the meantime, old Quebec can boast of having the most important horse breeding establishment in Eastern Canada.

FRUIT REPORT FOR JULY

Apple Yield Promises Better in Ontario Than in Other Provinces

The July fruit and vegetable report of the Fruit Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture is full of matter of importance to growers and shippers. Apples on the whole promise exceedingly well in Ontario, although Spy, Baldwin and Greening promise to be light. In the other apple-growing provinces a crop 25 per cent lighter than last year is indicated. Peaches and plums promise well in Ontario; so too do cherries and currants, while grapes and raspberries are likely to prove a fairly good crop, but pears appear to be below the average.

A larger acreage than usual has been sown to onions and one per cent less to potatoes. The Prairie Provinces, British Columbia, and the Maritime Provinces all show a rather larger decrease in the acreage devoted to potatoes and Quebec shows an increase of six percent over last year. In British Columbia, peaches, plums and prunes promise to be better than the average, apricots, raspberries, and currants about an average, cherries fair and loganberries light. An increase of the acreage devoted to onions is reported.

Taking Canada as a whole 703,600 acres are covered by potatoes this year compared with 701,912 acres last year, being an increase of 1,688 acres. Returning to apples the total production last year in the five apple-growing provinces was 4,046,813 barrels against 3,382,540 in 1920. The care that is required in packing and shipping fruit to avoid damage is emphasized, and the special arrangements that have been made by the branch for transportation by lots are set forth, with particular reference to the distribution of British Columbia fruit in the Prairie Province. Attention is directed to the Provisions of the recently passed Act regulating the Sale and Inspection of Root Vegetables, as they affect potatoes and onions.

THIS WEEK'S CROP REPORT

The Army Worm Situation is Now Well Under Control

The appearance of the army worm in Lennox and Addington and in Peel was noted early, and it looks as if local measures in each case have the situation under control. For the eastern visitation, the Lennox and Addington representative says: "Three outbreaks of the army worm have occurred in this country. In each case, we have investigated and successfully controlled the army worm by poison bran mixture. I estimate that this mixture was 75% effective three days after first treatment. However, we were fortunate in being informed of the outbreaks at their very first appearance and in no case have the worms advanced more than 12 feet."

The Peel representative says that farmers are on their guard, and are applying the trap furrow and poisoned bran mash methods, and that it is not likely that the injury will be severe.

Essex reports fall wheat harvesting as completed, and says the yield is good, in some cases running from 30 to 35 bushels an acre.

Kent also has completed the fall wheat cut, and says that yields are reported running from 35 to 45 bushels an acre.

Other counties are not so fortunate Brant puts the average yield of that county at about two-thirds of an average, and Waterloo reckons it to be at about a half crop.

In Western Ontario much of the fall wheat has been threshed in the field, and stook threshing is likely to be more popular in the future.

Barley and oats are going to be heavy yields. Considerable of the barley is already cut.

Kenora says: "Peas are now being harvested for the new canning factory. This, of course, the early crop, and the first to be raised in the district.

Kent states: "About twenty-five carloads of early potatoes have been shipped by local co-operative associations. Prices are not too good, although there is a fair profit with the present yield, which is going about 100 bus. to the acre in the best cared for fields. Three up-to-date grading machines have been installed."

Oxford says that there is rust in oats, but not so much as the press has stated—probably about 5 per cent is seriously affected.

"Corn continues a banner crop," says the Essex representative, "and is now in the tassel and ear, and in some fields, stands from seven to eight feet high."

North Simcoe says that cutting sweet clover with the binder has proven very satisfactory.

Raspberries have turned out a most satisfactory crop, as the yield was better than was expected, and prices were good.

Peel says that there seems to be a larger area than usual being fallowed this year, and that a number of farmers are plowing down sweet clover.

Kent says that the larger percentage of heavy steers have been marketed off the grass. Elgin also speaks of large shipments during the past week at prices as hight as 7½c. a lb.

Bruce says that three carloads of export cattle were shipped from Elgin recently.

Lambton says that the first shipload of export steers for the season will leave next week for Liverpool.

Huron also states that a shipment of cattle for overseas is being prepared in the southern portion of that country.

Waterloo quotes cream as being 40 cents a lb. butter-fat and milk 24 cts. a gallon.

Essex says that hog stocks are on the increase but Peterboro reports them as scarce, not more than fifteen or twenty going from a shipping point at one time during the past few weeks.

South Simcoe states that considering the scarcity of young pigs more mature sows are being disposed of than one would expect. Lennox and Addington comments on the short supply of hogs on hand owing to hand owing to poor spring litters.

Bruce is of opinion that lambs will be marketed earlier than usual this fall, owing to the good summer pastures.

Grey claims a brighter outlook for the farmer. Ten new binders were sold in one village in that county this season, compared with none last year.

TRY A "WANT" AD in The Intelligencer

STRANGE TRIBE OF BURMA

These Savages Have Most Gruesome Custom of Head-Hunting

Rangoon, July 27.—Ralph E. Henderson, a Harvard graduate who has spent the past eight months traveling in southern Asia, has just completed a trip through the British "unadministored territory" of northeastern Burma and into the Chinese province of Yunnan, neither of which have been thoroughly explored by white men.

Among the wild tribes encountered on this trip were head-hunting Was. Hitherto little has been definitely known concerning the life and customs of this tribe, as most of those who intruded upon Wa territory failed to return. The Was do not hunt heads primarily from cannibalistic motives, btu rather because of their belief that their crops will fail unless some fresh human skulls are imported every year. Under this impression, they organize head-hunting expeditions every spring, and it is small consolation to the unfortunate traveler who falls into their hands that it is only his skull that is wanted.

Writing of the wild Was, Mr. Henderson says:

"The Was are especially keen on hunting heads during February, March and April—just before the planting season. From the Wa angle of looking at it, the business isn't the madness we take it to be. It is convention, and quite as reasonable as afternoon tea. Every decently religious Wa knows that unless the seed grain is properly charmed and conjured with a human head, the crop raised from it will be a failure. And who wants to starve? In fact, if worst comes to worst, and there are no heads forthcoming from raids on neighbors, the Was prefer to take the head of some feeble person of the village, rather than run the risk of scant crops and consequent empty stomachs.

"In February, March, and April then, the wild Wa men go a-hunting. Of course, any head that offers itself to be collected is regarded as fair game, and it behooves the man working alone cutting jungle or the woman hoeing alone in the field to be cautious when the Was are afoot. A common artifice is to barricade some jungle highway and lie in ambush, some just behind the barricade, some on either side, to rush down on the flanks of any party caught in the trap.

"Heads of men, women and children over 12 years old are acceptable. Heads marked with small-pox, fir superstitious reasons, are not desired. A successful foray is one which yields one or more corpses. Immediately the heads are cut off and put in bags. Then back home go the rejoicing Was, not neglecting to take the bodies along for the larder, and raising a tremendous whooping and hulabaloo along the way. At home there is a ceremony to perform. The wife or mother of the man who made the kill takes the head out of the bag and proceeds to wail over it formally. She must wash the blood from the dead face and wail an incantational song as she does so. She must work herself into a sentimental frenzy, which feat under the circumstances is usually easy of performance. If her wailing lacks the ring of genuineness, her husband helps to supply that which is lacking by beating her.

"This song, strangely enough, beseeches the aid of the spirit of the head, and addresses it as a mighty ruler. It is this spirit which is to promote the growth of the crops, and it must be treated with great reverence, I heard this song once.

"After the head has been washed and wailed over, a raw egg is put into the dead mouth, to feed the spirit. Then the head is thrust up on a pole. A basket of seed paddy (rice) is put under it and left there for a few days. As the head decays, the droppings fall into the seed paddy, and are thoroughly mixed with it. The paddy is then ready to plant, and a good crop is insured."

DUMPING SHELLS IN THE CHANNEL

French Dumping Explosives There to Get Rid of Them

Paris, July 27.—One hundred and seventy tons of gas shells a day are being dumped by the French at present in the English Channel as the best maner of getting rid of them. Ever since the war ended these shells, some 80,000 in number and most of them British, have been lying in a depot in North France and have been regarded as no small menace to the people of the district.

How to destroy them was a great difficulty. The French have decided to ship them twelve miles out to sea off Dunkirk and drop them gently to the bottom, which is a deep layer of soft mud. There will be no danger of any being washed up by the tides and if poison gas escapes it will do no one any harm.

Berlin Insists That Ebert Should Act to Quash Monarchists

Toronto, July 27.—On his arrival in Winnipeg to attend the Canadian Council of Agriculture, J. J. Morrison intends submitting to the meeting a proposal to establish an eastern branch of the organization with headquarters in Toronto. His proposal would be to have Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces share the expenditure, acording to membership. He estimates the cost at $4,000.

"We have 60,000 members in Ontario," said Mr. Morrison, "about 12,000 in the Maritime Provinces and 2,700 in Quebec. Thus, the cost of establishing a branch in the east would be about five cents per member.

"The idea is to bring east and west closer together. We in the east know little of agriculturists in the west, and likewise they do not understand us. I think that the establishment of this branch would do much to overcome difficulty and promote better relations."

Rural Depopulation.

Mr. Morrison differs from Professor Reynolds in regard to any falling off in the rural population of Ontario. The U. F. O. secretary holds that there has been a great falling off in the rural population, and says that figures prove his contention. He thinks that Professor Reynolds' statistics include the suburbs of cities in the agricultural districts, whereas they are by no means agricultural. He attributes the depletion of population in the country districts to economic causes.

"To-day the farmers are not prosperous," he said, "and they seek the cities, with the result that the outlying districts become greatly lessened in population."

LEEDS VILLAGE IS FIRE-SWEPT

Conflagration Comes Near Entirely Wiping Out Newboro'

Kingston, July 26.—A fire which broke out about 10 o'clock last night from an unknown origin came within an ace of wiping out the main portion of the village of Newboro'. Eight buildings were destroyed and the damage will reach into the thousands, but a telephone message received here to-night states that the loss is well covered by insurance and that the work of rebuilding will be commenced at once.

The following buildings were destroyed: General store owned by George Bawden, formerly of Cataraqui; G. Houghton's ice cream parlor and grocery store; E. A. Wiltse's harness shop; residences owned by Mrs. Stanley Heath and occupied by Arthur Telford and G. Bell; hardware store of R. G. Bawden, son of George Bawden; outbuildings owned by Dr. King; Portland Garage; vacant building owned by William Eves.

There was but a light wind and the heroic efforts on the part of villagers and farmers from the surrounding district who formed a bucket brigade to combat the flames were indoubtedly the means of limiting the fire, which raged furiously for hours. This morning the main street of the village was a mass of ruins.

Although there were many narrow escapes during the fire no person is reported to have been seriously hurt. Many were scorched by the intense heat of the flames.

SIR ADAM'S PESSIMISM

The fears expressed in The Intelligencer yesterday regarding the future supply of power in this district have been confirmed by a despatch from Toronto, in which Sir Adam Beck is quoted as giving expression to some very pessimistic views on the outlook. It is important that the people and the manufacturers of Belleville should weigh well the words of Sir Adam, when he says:

"The most serious thing is the natural growth in the east and the increased usage of electricity. In a year or two the whole of the power available from the Trent will be gone, and the engineers are now arranging and drafting the maximum amount that will be available to each of the municipalities in that district. We are going to tell them now just what each municipality is going to be able to receive, so that they can govern themselves accordingly.

"After the Trent power is all utilised, there is nothing further in sight for that district but the St. Lawrence. The St. Lawrence is the next step in eastern Ontario. All the power will be used, however, before the St. Lawrence can be developed. We think the municipalities ought to know just where they are at in conection with power matters."

Without being unduly alarmist, one might read into these words coming disaster for the industries of this district. If Sir Adam's fears are justified, it is the duty of the industrial leaders of Belleville to at once get together and plan to avert such a disaster. There are those who contend that the "Power King" is getting gloomy in his old days, and several Belleville men who have recently been over the Trent river declare that there is plenty of water for present and future purposes. Stories are told of volumes of water tumbling over dams unused, of water wasted on navigation that is of no consequence, and of petty squabbling about private power-rights, of the delay and indifference of federal officials.

All of these things, and some other things, should be enquired into at once. The whole question of the navigation of the Trent River should be considered in the light of the needs of the district. The Government might be asked to present a balance sheet showing the profits or losses gained or sustained by its operation of the river as a canal.

One citizen of Belleville who visited the Rice Lake region the other day declared that the only navigation that he saw was a small gasoline launch waiting to pass through the locks. While this individual pleasure boat was given free use of the waters and allowed to pursue its pleasure trip, the factories of Belleville were stopped and thousands thrown out of work.

The first thing that we have to do is to co-ordinate or unify the control of the Trent Waters so that there shall be the minimum of waste and the maximum of power-production. If there is to be constant friction and disputing between the Provincial and the Federal authorities the sooner this division of authority is abolished the better. The simpleminded citizen is asking why the Province has to pay simple-minded citizen is asking why the Province has to pay waterp?

So far as the St. Lawrence scheme is concerned, to which Sir Adam pointed as the only hope, that is too remote and problematical. We must concentrate upon what is immediately practicable. It has been suggested that Niagara power might be extended to the cities beyond Oshawa. This is a feasable proposition, but, again, Sir Adam casts a gloom over our prospects by telling us that Chippawa power will not be sufficient to supply the needs of Western Ontario. In any event, it is the duty of local leaders in industry to insist upon a solution of the power problem of the future as well as the present.

HEALTH AND MIDDLE-AGE

Middle age is a supremely critical period for both men and women, for it is at that stage in existence that they begin to fully realise that they are mortal. Youth is the great period of faith and hope, when the body is supple and free from the cumulative humors of later life that seem to settle in the joints and veins and refuse to be thrown off. In dealing with "Middle Age, Health and Fitness", Dr. Ash assures those who have passed the age of forty that there is no need to worry if they will only take care of themselves.

He says that the most important thing is to preserve the elasticity of the joints and tissues. Elasticity is one of the most vital conditions to preserve after the age of forty, when a tendency to increasing rigidity sets in. The doctor recommends gentle exercise, but warns against overdoing it. The training should be graduated by walking a little more each day, adding cycling to walking, and perhaps a little running. The rule is to make haste slowly, and not attempt too much as it is risky. Dr. Ash believes that gout has much to do with the ill-health of middle aged. This malady is sometimes attributable to the bad habits of our ancestors, but this is a mean insinuation, and often is untrue. Dr. Ash states that gout is undoubtedly due to the eating of heavy meat and the drinking of strong liquors.

The sum of the whole of this doctor's advice to the middle-aged seems to be contained in the words "diet" and "exercise". The tendency with people as they get older is to eat too much and to exercise too little. Young people can cram themselves at the table with impunity because they can run it off with the superabundance of energy generated, whereas older folk sit around and accumulate unnecessary flesh.

PASSING COMMENT

There is one bright spot in the pessimistic prospect of Sir Adam Beck, and that is where he speaks of the raped industrial growth of this district.

It would be even better than Welsh coal transported over the ocean if they could only divert a portion of the Gulf Stream in this direction.

If Father Delorme was not insane in the first place he will be a first class lunatic by the time the psychiatrists are finished with him.

The suggestion by Mr. J. Arthur Marsh for a wooden swimming pool is one that commends itself to us as highly practicable. Why not call for tenders on the proposition at once?

The Globe made a sprawing display of the news that the British House of Commons had lifted the cattle embargo—it is a pity it wasn't correct, as it might have been another triumph for the King Government, like that epoch-making visit of the Premier to Washington, when we were just saved from war with the United States!

HERE AND THERE

TRIFLING IN ART.

There is a common belief now that content in literature, and in all art, matters nothing; that it is most artistic, even to concern yourself with trivialities because you prove your indifference so to any but æsthetic values. This belief seems contrary to common sense and to our experience of life, for, if in life we concern ourselves only with trivialities and negative things, we suffer intellectually and æsthetically no less than morally; we become silly, mean, and ugly; we are not even worth talking to. Some things are, in their nature, more interesting than others; and we are not interesting unless we care for interesting things.

A. Clutton-Brock.

ANTHONY TROLLOPE'S "BOH!"

In his book, entitled "Pages from the Past," John Ayscough (Monsg. Bickerstaffe-Drew) tells some good stories.

"My mother knew Anthony Trollope," he says. "The first time she went to his house he popped out from behind the hall door and squeaked 'Boh!' as it opened, thinking she was Mrs. Trollope. Whether he would in any case have assumed the airs of a great author may be doubted, for he was the simplest of men; but after that introduction he certainly did not attempt it."

Mr. Ayscough recalls Lady Dorothy Nevill's story of the vicar's wife who insisted to the sextoness, who was cleaning the church, on the necessity of open windows, "or we shall have those horrid microbes coming." "And aren't they communicants?" inquired the sextoness, at a loss to understand the ecclesiastical lady's obvious desire for their exclusion from church privileges. Here is another story about the microbes:—

"A certain great lady of my acquaintance had just arrived from London at her husband's Scottish country home, and she made haste to visit the gardens.

"'Donald,' said she, encountering a gardener, 'I hope you have kept well all the winter and spring.'

"'Na sae weel, me leddy. Na that weel! Whiles I think we nane of us has our healths the same since they McCrawbies came in.'"

A CONVENT STORY.

"A certain nun, very holy, and very humble, one evening in the choir, in the dusk, the gas not being turned up, though lighted, became conscious of a light and warmth near her head, and thought it a supernatural manifestation beyond her poor meritings. 'Too much!' she murmured. 'Too much for me.'

"'A great deal too much, sister, for you or any of us,' declared the nun in the next stall; 'you've got your veil in the gas-jet.'"

There is a most entertaining account of Lady Cardigan and her home. In the middle of the hall was a huge glass case, in which stood the horse, stuffed, which Lord Cardigan rode in the Balaclava charge. She took her guests to the church.

"'This,' she said, showing us a large enclosure along the south wall, 'is my pew. There I sit. These stools'—of which there were nine or ten—'are for my dear dogs. If the clergyman preaches too long, I pinch them and they yelp. That is my little hint.'"

FORTITUDE.

It is not life that counts for much:
  With thwarted hope and futile power,
We snatch the cup from fortune's clutch,
  And drain its lees in one wild hour.

Nor death itself can count for more:
  The years must end, our loved depart,
And leave within us, stricken sore,
  The bleeding tendrils of our heart.

'Tis only courage matters here:
  Though wounds be many, faint the breath,
It is our role to master fear,
  To mount life's ramparts, vanquish death.

Louis I. Newman, in New York Times.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE DELORME MURDER CASE

(Perth Expositor)

The Delorme murder case is one of the sensations of the day. Father Delorme was arrested on the charge of killing his half brother. He was tried in the first instance to prove he was insane. A jury of his co-religionists has returned a verdict that he is insane, and the cleric now escapes trial for murder. We are not going to ask what would have been the procedure if a Protestant clergyman were in Father Delorme's position, but we want to know this: Will Quebec courts in future prove the sanity of men and women charged with murder, before trying them on the capital offence? Possibly there are a few who would exact the full penalty had Father Delorme been found guilty of murder, but the great majority think he should have been tried for murder, and if found guilty, his sanity could have been inquired into afterwards. Why was this course not followed? There can be only one answer to the question. Then the murder is still unsolved. The Expositor commends the views of the Belleville Intelligencer.

THE RAILWAY STRIKE

(New York Times)

Ill advised and wanton from the first, the strike of the railway shopmen now shows signs of waning strength. Its original plan and strategy includes strikes by other railway workers. But the maintenance men and the signalmen and the telegraphers failed to come to the aid of the shopmen, evidently seeing defeat written upon the strike of the latter. And as soon as the first claims of the strikers were given up, and it became a question merely of seniority rights—that is, on what terms the men could get their jobs back—it was certain that many of the old employes would presently be applying for their former positions, as some are now doing. The strike leaders see the ground slipping from under their feet.

One of their gross miscalculations has just fallen to the earth. The President has refused to intervene in their behalf. They sought Government help, but he now points them to the Railroad Labor Board as the sole Government agency established by law to deal with precisely such cases as theirs. The strikers had defied and flouted the Labor Board; now they must go back to it if they are to make any further argument at all. In deciding to keep his hands off, Mr Harding must have come to believe that the railway managers knew what they were talking about when they said that they would soon win the strike if let alone.

WIT AND HUMOR

The famous humorist had partaken heartily of the feast. Acute indigestion had laid him low. As his friends gathered about him he smiled feebly. 'At any rate,' he murmured between spasms of pain, 'I am able to keep up my reputation as a humorist.' His friends were puzzled. 'Di-gesting!' he gasped.—The 'Forecast.'

Alice came as slowly as she could. 'Oh,' she howled, turning a wrathfully tearful face to her mother, 'why don't you obey your mother?'—'Harper's Magazine.'

A Letter From Old London

(By "Solace" in The Montreal Gazette).

"A marvellous river this St. Lawrence," said an Englishman, as the ocean liner swung out into midstream from Montreal, "a river that is dry on one bank and wet on the other!"

In fact it was a marvellous trip all the way over, lasting but eight days, though the vessel was garnished with icebergs and blanketed with fog for a day and a night; but with "The Maid of the Mountains" leading lady to sing for us and a purser who proved to be a second George Grossmith to sing and play to us—and one of the table stewards proved to be a music hall artist and doing his turn—all these sweet sounds smothered the fog horn's dismal note.

The boat train from Southampton took us through lovely lands abloom with pink and white May, laburnum and chestnut blossom. They certainly "say it with flowers" when it comes to June in England.

A Day in London.

Just as Big Ben struck the hour 10 P.M. we arrived at Waterloo Station, a fine new terminus recently opened by Queen Mary—and we were whirled away into the London streets (it was still dusk). Our first morning was spent in the Middle Temple library, where a ponderous law library is artistically housed. There are over three hundred thousand volumes—dating back from Shakespeare's day up to the present. A three-volume catalogue of all this material was presented and some day will be added to the accessions of the Westmount Library. Next the famous old Temple Church was visited and a vergeress with gentle voice explained to us the tombs of the Crusaders. The crossed legs of the bronze effigies indicate the number of wars in which the dead knight took part; if the leg is crossed above the knee, it indicates two or more Crusades; if crossed below the knee, but one Crusade was indulged in, while the legs straight means—no Crusades at all.

A memory of this day will be the barristers in wigs and tattered gowns flitting about the court yard, while a half dozen "cookies" were gazing at the tomb of Oliver Goldsmith, and about a nearby fountain a more serious group were reading aloud the scene from "Martin Chuzzlewit," where Ruth Pinch met John Westlock.

Dicken's Grove.

Late in the week, on the anniversary of Dicken's death, a quiet little ceremony took place at Westminister Abbey, when many wreaths from the various branches of the Dickens' Fellowship were placed on this author's grave. There was a most beautiful emblem from the Montreal Fellowship, as well as from New York and Philadelphia. The best event of that week was a visit to Daly's Theatre, when King George and Queen Mary sat in the royal box, which was framed in pink roses, and attended a benefit matinee for a deaf and dumb institute. The program was made up of short sketches given by London's best talent. The flapper songs of Gladys Cooper evidently pleased the royal pair best of all.

Aftermath of the War.

Yes, England is recovering from the war, though one still finds its echo in the nervous and irritable manner of some classes. During the great upheaval the duke's son and the cook's son were pals, while the duchess herself tossed aside her jewels and was ready to scrub floors if necessary. All worked together against a common enemy. Suddenly the object for which all worked so willingly is gone—and it is hard for this poor old jazzing world to regain its balance all at once. But if we all could work for peace and justice exactly as hard as we worked in wartime, worked with a heart in it—why peace would be sure to follow. There are some good signs; it is now considered vulgar to play tennis Sunday morning; the cigarette is also vanishing from my lady's lips as she goes about town. Trade is picking up; price of food is down a bit; there are not quite so many men sleeping all day in the parks; road construction is going on and building is picking up. Let us hope that soon there will be work for anyone, and as for money, well there are seventy thousand tourists with their American express cheques ready to spend—spend—spend. Motor cars take one everywhere. The roads are perfect, the month is June, and on every side one hears this: "Tomorrow the Prince of Wales gets home—God bless him—and I wonder whom he is to marry."

CLEAN GETAWAY

No Trace of Robbers Who Took Sudbury Payroll

Sudbury Ont., July 26.—The police have absolutely no clue in connection with the daylight hold-up at Coniston on Monday, when bandits secured thirty-six hundred dollars of the Mond Nickel Company's payroll while it was being taken from the Bank of Commerce to the plant. The bandits were attired in overalls and wore masks, but further than this the men in charge of the money can give no particulars. The country is being fine-combed, but the police have little to work on. A dozen or more suspects have been picked up, examined and released. It looks like a clean getaway. Company and bank officials are, however, congratulating themselves on the fact that the robbers overlooked a package containing twenty-five thousand dollars.

A Christian Worker.

The Hamilton Spectator gives a few details of the remarkable evangelistic career of Rev. P. W. Philpott, pastor of the Gospel Tabernacle of Hamilton. The career of this pastor of the largest undenominational church in Canada—founded and moulded by himself from a saloon origin—is worthy of intensive and sympathetic treatment. Under the analytical microscope of a Lytton Strachey, for instance, measuring causes and effects, motives and reactions, efforts and results, the character and work of this man would probably measure up among the great of his field. Because his work was single-handed, in a sphere that laid no great stress upon life values, as measured by biographers, Mr. Philpott has had only a partial recognition.

To him, however, the work itself seems to have been his reward. Fame and eminence could have been his many times, because he has often turned down flattering offers to take important posts in church organizations. In the early nineties, he left the Salvation Army to become a "street-corner evangelist" in Hamilton, and 26 years ago established his mission in an old saloon. He had a large family, but he conducted his little personal mission on an income of from $12 to $14 a week. Sown in his privation and struggle, the seed began to grow. Two years after larger quarters were necessary, then a small chapel followed, then a theatre had to be rented. In 1907, the new Gospel Tabernacle was built at a cost of $40,000. It seats 1,500 people. The mortgage has been cleared, and there is virtually no debt. During the winter months, one of the big theatres has been required to accommodate the crowds that flock to this church built by the energy of one man. This Ontario church has thirteen workers in the foreign field, and twenty-five young men and women training for the ministry at home and abroad. It has several missions in neighboring communities.

Postmen of the Sky.

A thrilling sight that may become common in the near future is that of postal airplanes picking up mail bags at a speed of a hundred miles an hour.

Experiments in picking up objects from the ground without alighting or slackening speed have been carried out by Air Force pilots at Farnborough and by airmen in France and America. One ingenious scheme which is to be adopted by the super express air-mail between New York and San Francisco has been found to work well.

In the airplane there is a coil of wire with a weight attached to the end. This can be lowered and raised in a very short time by a machine worked by the engine of the airplane. On the ground two wooden stages are built. These slope towards each other, forming a "V," with the opening towards the approaching airplane.

The post-airplane, flying low, with the weighted wire-trailing on the ground, crosses the staging and the wire is guided automatically up the "V" until it catches in a cleft between two metal rods, where there is a clip with a wire connecting it with the mail-bag. The wire from the airplane catches in the clip and the bag is pulled up.

Here in Canada it has been announced that an aerial postal line will shortly be established to the Yukon.

The Potos.

The species of monkey, known as the Potos, is very swift. Built somewhat like a greyhound, it can gallop at a speed of 13 miles an hour, and out-distance a good pony.

FASHION FANCIES

SKIRTS WILL NOT BE LONGER

"Ten inches from the ground has been the average length of skirts this summer," said the head of the dressmaking section of a large establishment yesterday, "and it is not likely they will lengthen more than one inch."

"While in New York two weeks ago I saw them eight inches from the ground and they looked decidedly sloppy," interjected a buyer for the same firm.

"I am afraid," she continued, "that the chances for long skirts are slim. Our women have become attached to short ones for street wear and will consent only to a slight lengthening. They will probably compromise between the ten inches of the past season and the eight inches which the fall styles provide for.

Much Misunderstanding

"There is much misunderstanding anyway about skirts. It is true they have become longer in Paris, where they are now about the same distance from the ground as our own. We never adopted the extreme fashions of Paris, however, and their alterations in this respect will not affect us. There are two reasons for my believing that skirts will not lengthen to any extent for street. One is that the fall and winter coats are not any longer, which they should be if they are to be worn with elongated skirts, and the other is that so many women have bobbed hair, and a combination of short hair and long skirts would be absurd.—The Globe.

HOT CHICKEN SANDWICHES

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH
Cooking Authority for N E A Service and Columbia University

These sandwiches are sufficient for luncheon or supper as the main dish. They use any left-over cold meat as well as chicken—and the bread may be stale, but not too dry.

The proportions given will make six good sized sandwiches:

12 slices bread
1 cup chopped chicken
Salt and pepper to taste.
2 eggs
½ cup milk or cream
2 tablespoons butter
Butter for frying the sandwiches
1½ cups milk
½ teaspoon salt

Cook the chopped chicken in the butter and milk or cream until creamy but not too dry. Spread between two slices of bread and trim off a little of the crusts.

Beat the eggs slightly, add the one and one-half cups of milk and salt. Dip each sandwich in the egg and milk and cook in a pan until brown on both sides, using as little butter as possible. Serve at once, garnished with a little parsley or watercress.

Modern Housekeeping

A clockwork household suits clockwork temperaments, and some people brought up in one are never happy under any other system. If circumstances oblige them to lead what we may call a hand-made existence, full of inequalities, varieties and mistakes, they are miserable. To them the daily certainties of home machinery counterbalance the incalculableness of their working lives. For them there is peace only where they know exactly what to expect. Perhaps a little while ago the majority of educated people would have come into this category. Old-fashioned people are apt to use the words 'a good housekeeper' only in connection with someone who can cater for these lovers of routine. But there has been a reaction, and in the young matrons of to-day it is to be seen in its full force. They are not worshippers of order, they make no boast of method, they even affect to live 'hugger-mugger.' But it is a sham 'hugger-mugger,' like the sham simplicities of Arcadia. They appear to act upon the spur of moment, but realy they have thought out their work in the night watches—unexpected guests, or lightning changes of plan, do not throw the household out of gear, but the 'gear' is a slight affair untrammelled by convention. Given a bad housekeeper the new way is more uncomfortable than the old, but it is freer. The old ordered way of life lumbered dully along by its own impetus, often with a certain degree of dignity with its bondsmen found consoling. The new way is beset with greater dangers—like all the best ways, we suppose. The hospitality of today (what there is of it) is, perhaps, productive of more delight than the older and more conventional kind. We have, however, lost one kind of pleasure, the pleasure of preparation. Before a wedding or a dance, or even lesser entertainments, the whole house was turned upside down. Everyone lived in a state of excitement. The empty room seemed to pant with expectation and its state when all was over was literally one of collapse. Doubtless to a good many people, especally big children and girls, these preparations and dilapidations prolonged the joy of a festival. They gave a strange importance to pleasure like that given by Christmas or any family anniversary loaded with tradition and memory. The conduct of these great occasions was a strain upon the housekeeper and a test of her powers, and if she were bad at her job probably made her ill with work and worry. Poverty has simplified the fashion. You cannot turn a house topsy-turvy if you have no servants to put it right side up again. There are ways in which housekeeping is plain sailing compared to what it was. On the other hand, it is not very easy to keep people amused without preparation and real social talent has perhaps more scope than it had, and the want of it is certainly more disastrous.

Housekeeping on a very small scale scale that precludes all entertainment in any form whatever, ought not to be a difficult thing. As a rule, it means one woman racking her wits to please one man. Her rules of housekeeping depend entirely upon his taste, perhaps modified by the requirements of a child. When two women live together, we think it is in a way harder. It is true that women care less about comfort than men, but then there is no particular reason why one should give it to the other. There is no sex influence to reinforce a natural desire to please, the question of which should keep house is often a disputed one, a good many friends quarrel and part over it.—World-Wide.

DANISH WRITERS SEEK PROTECTION

Organization of Authors to Control Works of Dead Colleagues

Copenhagen, July 26.—A new copyright bill is to be introduced by the Danish government. The present copyright act gives to an author and dramatist unlimited rights in his own production during lifetime, and to his descendants unlimited rights until 50 years after his death. Thereafter the rights are "free", and a publisher or theatrical manager can respectively publish or produce his works without paying any author's fees.

On behalf of its members the Danish Authors Association has been agitating for a revision of the copyright act. It insinuates that publishers and theatrical Manager republish and make use of the works of authors who died more than 50 years ago because no royalties are involved. Thus the dead authors and playwrights are, they say, being used in unfair competition against living authors and dramatists.

The Association demands than an organization of living authors and dramatists, and not the state, control the works of dead colleagues after the expiration of the 50-year period; that the rights should not then become free and that it is empowered to decide to whom royalists be distributed.

According to the Dannish press the authors have succeeded in making the government see their point of view and Mr. Appel, Minister of Education has requested representatives of associations of authors, dramatists, composers and artists to become members of a joint committee to work out a bill to be put before the Rigsdag.

Danish organizations are said to be working jointly in this matter with their colleagues in Norway and Sweden, and similar bills are likely to be introduced in these countries.

NOT A POUND OF COAL FOR LOVE OR MONEY

Ottawa, July 26.—Only five thousand tons of anthracite coal are stored in Ottawa yards as provision against winter demands. Last winter 150,000 tons of coal were used and to use one merchant's expressive and emphatic utterance, "not a pound of coal can be bought by the dealer for love or money.

The situation is declared to be startling.

"Thank you," said Manvers bowing.

There was the faintest tinge of sarcasm in the acknowledgment. Staff could see that Alison felt and resented it; and the thought popped into his mind, and immediately out again, that she was scarcely proving herself generous.

"It's a very serious matter," announced the captain heavily—"serious for the service: for the officers, for the good name of the ship, for the reputation of the company. This is the second time a crime of this nature has been committed aboard the Autocratic within a period of eighteen months—less than that, in fact. It was June, a year ago, that Mrs. Burden Hamman's jewels were stolen—on the eastbound passage, I believe."

"We sailed from New York, June 22," affirmed the purser.

"I want, therefore," continued the captain, "to ask you all to preserve silence about this affair until it has been thoroughly sifted. I believe the knowledge of the theft is confined to those present."

"Quite so, sir," agreed the purser.

"May I ask how it happened?" Staff put in.

The captain swung on his heel and bowed to Alison. She bent forward, telling her story with brevity and animation.

"You remember"—she looked at Staff—"when we met in the saloon, about half-past five, and went on deck? . . . Well, right after that, Jane left my rooms to return the hat you had been showing me to your steward. She was gone not over five minutes, and she swears the door was locked all the time; she remembers locking it when she went out and unlocking it when she returned. There was no indication that anybody had been in the rooms, except one that we didn't discover until I started to go to bed, a little while ago. Then I thought of my jewels. They were all kept in this handbag"—she dropped a hand upon a rather small Lawrence bag of tan leather on the table before her—"under my bed, behind the steamer trunk. I told Jane to see if it was all right. She got it out, and then we discovered that this had happened to it."

She turned the bag so that the other side was presented for inspection, disclosing the fact that some sharp instrument had been used to cut a great flap out of the leather, running in a rough semicircle from clasp to clasp of the frame.

"It wasn't altogether empty," she declared with a trace of wonder in her voice; "but that only makes it all the more mysterious. All my ordinary jewels were untouched; nothing had been taken except the case that held the Cadogan collar."

"And the collar itself, I hope?" Iff put in quietly.

The actress turned upon him with rising colour.

"You hope—!" she exclaimed.

The little man made a deprecatory gesture. "Why, yes," he said. "It would seem a pity that a crook cute enough to turn a trick as neat as that should have got nothing for his pains but a velvet-lined leather case, worth perhaps a dollar and a half—or say two dollars at the outside, if you make a point of that."

"How do you happen to know it was a velvet-lined leather case?" Alison flashed.

Iff laughed quietly. "My dear lady," he said, "I priced the necklace at Cottier's in Paris the day before you purchased it. Unfortunately it was beyond my means."

"A bit thick," commented the purser in an acid voice.

"Now, listen"—Iff turned to face him with a flush of choler—"you keep on that way and I'll land on you if it's the last act of my gay young life. You hear me?"

"That will do, sir!" barked the captain.

"I trust so, sincerely," replied Iff.

"Be silent!" The captain's voice ascended a full octave.

"Oh, very well, very well. I hear you—perfectly." With this the little man subsided, smiling feebly at vacancy.

Staff interposed hastily, in the interests of peace: "The supposition is, then, that the thief got in during those five minutes that Jane was away from the room?"

"It couldn't have happened at any other time, of course," said Alison.

"And, equally of course, it couldn't have happened then," said Iff.

"Why not?" the woman demanded.

"The girl was gone only five minutes. That's right, isn't it?"

"Yes, sir," said Jane.

"And the door was locked—you're positive about that?"

"Quite, sir."

"Then will anyone explain how any thief could effect an entrance, pull a heavy steamer trunk out from under a bed, get at the bag, cut a slit in its side, extract the leather case—and the collar, to be sure—replace the bag, replace the trunk, leave the stateroom and lock the door, all in five short minutes—and without any key?" Iff wound up triumphantly: "I tell you, it couldn't be done; it ain't human."

BETTY COMPSON IN "THE GREEN TEMPTATION" AT GRIFFIN'S TONIGHT

The various locales in "The Green Temptation," Betty Compson's Paramount picture, directed by William Desmond Taylor, and the feature attraction at Griffin's tonight to Saturday, takes the spectator on a veritable Cook's tour, giving him intimate views of some of the most interesting places in the Old World as well as the New.

In the brief time required to run six reels, one gets in this picture a cross-section of life that it is not the tourist's good fortune to see even after spending thousands of dollars in railway and steamship transportation.

Opening with a scene on the Rue Macabee in Paris, showing "Le Petite Cirque" in action, the picture speeds through the haunts of the Apaches in the old Roman Catacombs, to the dressing rooms of Europe's most famed dansuese in the "Theatre de La Capitale", to one of the old mansions of Paris of the grand period of architecture during Imperial rule; into the torn and battered French villages behind the battle lines; and thence across the sea to one of New York's fashionable tea rooms and the Long Island home of the nouveau riche.

Into such a picturesque background Monte M. Katterjohn, as the scenarist, has woven Constance Lindsay Skinner's gripping story of buffoonery, romance and regeneration, published under the title, "The Noose."

"The Circus Clowns" is the title of the Baby Peggy and wonder dog Brownie comedy. A beautiful Travelogue and George Walsh in "With Stanley in Africa", the historical chapter film, will also be exhibited in addition to the feature offering.

LOST HIS SAVINGS IN STOCK SPECULATIONS

New York, July 26.—After writing individual notes to newspapers requesting that someone be sent "to see a real suicide," and another to a relative to have his body cremated and the "ashes sent to the head of the brokerage firm where he did his trading to fertilize his lawn," a middle-aged, well dressed man jumped from a ferry boat in the Hudson River early to-day and was drowned. Other messages, which he left in his hat, carefully placed on the desk before he climbed to the rail to jump overboard, stated that he had lost all his savings speculating in stocks. The body was not recovered.

OSHAWA BEATEN BY LOCAL TEAM

By a Score of 9 to 3, G.T.R. Players Win Ball Game

How the Oshawa baseball team came to be tied with Peterboro in the first series of the Central Ontario Baseball League, it is hard to comprehend by those who saw that team in play here yesterday. They certainly did not by any means play championship ball. This cannot be said of our own G.T.R. team, for to many spectators they certainly played a championship game. To use a very common phrase, our boys had it over the western town team like a tent, and that of a large capacity. It was the first game of the second series and if the G.T.R. team play every game in the series as they did this game, there can be but one result. There was a good crowd of spectators present ,and nearly every one present left the grounds in a happy mood ;and why should they not have done so, when our boys walked off with the game by a score of 9 to 3, Jack Williams pitched for the winning team and was perhaps never in better form than yesterday, having no less than thirteen strike-outs to his credit, and only three hits were secured from him by the Oshawa players. His pitching was, to put it mildly, superb. To the remaining players of the team praise cannot be stinted, as all played gilt edge ball. Whilst Gallagher, pitcher for Oshawa, did fairly well in the box, be was by no means steady. He had seven strike-outs to his credit, and also no less than 12 hits were made off him, three being circuit clouts. W. Mills must be given credit for a home run, whilst Stanley Hagerman had two to his credit. It was, from the local standpoint, a fine game to watch, and joy reigned supreme. Details of the game are as follows:

1st Inning.

Belding struck out. Fair struck out. Rowden flied to Meagher. — 0 runs, 0 hits, 0 errors.

Liners.

The G.T.R. team had one of their old time batting streaks and here's hoping they will keep the good work up.

H. Mills at first base made two exceptionally good stops, in one instance turning a somersault after catching the ball.

The grounds were kept well cleared of spectators and vehicles.

RIOT AND SHOTS FIRED

Chicago, July 27.—Rail strikers were dispersed yesterday by the police responding to a riot call after Paul Misko, a non-union mechanic, employed at the Burnside railroad shops, had been assaulted in a melee, during which several shots were fired.

"You've got to quit work," Misko was told when stopped by the strikers while on his way to work, according to the police report. He defied the strikers ,and the fight followed, Misko being severly beaten on the head and face.

ANNUAL PICNIC EASTERN STAR

Hillcrest Grove Visited by a Jolly Crowd of Bellevillians

Ten cars and four bus loads of Belleville Chapter Eastern Stars, No 5, and families, totalling about 135, motored to Hillcrest on Lake Consecon, Wednesday afternoon, on their third annual picnic.

The program for the day was made up of races, games, bathing and baseball, all present taking part, after which everybody sat down to a community picnic table which fairly groaned under the weight of good things spread upon it. More groans were heard from most of the members on arising after having eaten for half an hour or so. These groans were most noticeably heard coming from Bros. Mayor Hanna and Dr Cronk.

After supper dancing was the order of the evening till about nine o'clock when the cars brought their cargo back to Belleville, everybody tired, but voting this picnic the best yet.

The Winners of the Races.

Candle race, ladies—Mrs. Wilson.

Combination race, men—Mr. Allen.

Bead-threading race, girls—Miss Calcutt.

Kangaroo race, boys—Philip Claire.

One-step race, ladies and men—Miss P. Hallam and Mr. E. Chesher.

Time race, open—Mrs. Allen.

Lucky number race, ladies—Mrs. Chesher.

Stop race, men—Mr. R. Redfern.

Shoe race, ladies—Miss Irene Baker.

Officers' race, ladies—Mrs. Allen, Mrs. H. Morgan, Mrs. Boyn.

Guessing number of beans in jar—Miss Katy Torrance. (697 beans in jar, winner's guess 698).

Bro. Mayor Hanna was official starter.

Notes.

Palm Beach had nothing on Hillcrest Beach. During the afternoon the many-colored bathing suits of the ladies presented a picture that has never been seen on the shore of Consecon Lake before.

A bathing beauty contest was to be held but owing to the rush of applicants for the position of official judge it had to be called off.

The only thing to mar the day's sport was the mysterious disappearance of a lemon pie belonging to Sister Ormand. We do not like to say who took it, but Bro. George Cornish was heard to say lemon pie was his special favorite.

W. M. Barlow was a great favorite with the kiddies, especially when he was throwing out kisses by the dozens (paper wrapped ones).

There is some talk of Mr C. Delisle trying for a place on the G.T.R. team as a pitcher.

If you want to know of a good place to go for a picnic, ask anyone who was present yesterday, and they will tell you "Hillcrest," on Consecon Lake.

PENSION RESTORED

Accident in Civil Life Deprived Him of Stricken Member on which Disability was Based

Ottawa, July 27.—If an ex-soldier in receipt of a permanent pension for a wound in the ankle, subsequently loses the leg through an accident in civilian life, have the pension authorities just grounds for cutting of the pension?

This puzzling problem was presented to the Dominion Command, G.W.V.A., some time ago, in the case of ex-Private John Munro, of Lake View Ranch, Mineola, B. C., and has recently been settled by the restoration of the pension, which had been discontinued following the accident in which Munro lost his legs. There is probably not another case of parallel circumstances in the records of Canadian pensions.

Munro was awarded a permanent disability pension of $90 a year because of lameness. A few months after his return to civil life he met with an accident in Vancouver, B. S., in which both legs were amputated. The British Columbia Workmen's Compensation Board found him eligible for $600 per year as an industrial casualty, but the Board of Pension Commissioners discontinued his military pension on the ground that the accident eliminated the disability which was attributable to service, and that he was amply compensated for his subsequent injury.

GERMAN BREACH OF NAVAL TERMS

Government at Berlin Seeks to Establish Fort to Command Kiel Canal

Paris, July 27.—The Council of Ambassadors decided yesterday to send a sharp note to the German Government demanding the immediate destruction of the fire control and range-finding school, which, together, naval authorities have quietly established at a strategic point on the Kiel Canal. Allied experts' opinion has declared the school convertible into a fort commanding the entrance of the canal.

Allied control officers who reported the school to the council termed it the most flagrant of the long series of violations of the naval terms of the Treaty of Versailles on the part of Germany. Experts reported these violations to have extended over a period of two months and strongly urge action by the council.

Among other charges made against Germany was that of attempting enlistments for the German navy far beyond the quota allowed by the treaty. Failure of the Germans to destroy the coast defense guns was also among the complaints.

NEEDN'T FEAR COAL FAMINE

Toronto, July 27.—"I can give the positive assurance that, by Sept. 1 at the latest, the coal miners in the American fields will have returned to work, and production be in full swing again." is the comforting message which Miss Sophie Kohen brings to Toronto from the strike zone. Miss Kohen, who represents the Canadian Coal Supply Co., with offices in Scranton and Pittsburg. Pa., and mine connections in West Virginia, and who is a dealer in coal on a huge scale, advises the public not to get panicky, and all will be well.

FOREST FIRE PLAGUE

Has Cost Country so far this Year, Say $1,000,000—Nearly all Caused by Human Hands

Ottawa, July 27.—As a national disaster the loss of the Parliament Buildings by fire was trifling compared with the season's devastation of the Canadian forests, Robson Black, manager of the Canadian Forestry Association, stated to-day. "On a conservative estimate," he added, "the Dominion's forest fire losses this year, so far, have robbed the people of more timber than would be sufficient to build 100,000 comfortable homes."

Mr. Robson declared that the lumber bill of every Canadian was being steadily raised by forest fires. "The annual plague of burning forests constitutes the heaviest income tax that the ordinary citizen has to face. It cannot be too often stressed that every forest fire must be paid for. The people of Canada own eighty-five per cent. of the forest lands in the Dominion, and for every dollar that a private owner loses through fire the workman and the merchant, and the Government treasuries sacrifice at least four, he stated.

"The forest fire, "said Mr. Robson "is kept alive by persons who need the forest most the camper fisherman, trapper, settler and others. Nearly all forest fires in Canada can be traced to a pair of human hands not usually through malevolence, but stupidity, and the too common spirit of "don't care."

WOMAN AND BABE MISSING

Toronto, July 27.—Relatives, friends and police are utterly at a loss to find any trace of Mrs. Olive Wren, 140 Dundas st., west, and her two and a half year old child. Mrs. Wren, with the baby, left the house one week ago in a not unusual manner. Police officers investigated the case of a woman swept over Niagara Falls, but the clothing did not tallly with that worn by Mrs. Wren. She is 5 feet tall, with dark hair and complexion. She was wearing a blue skirt, white blouse and blue hat with fawn trimming. The child is fair and with short hair.

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glass-wearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, nervousness, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON-WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

TAKES BLAME TO SAVE SON

Old Man Swears He Alone Caused the Death of Their Neighbor

New York, July 27.—When Raffaele de Raffaele, 62 years of age, and his son, Dominick, 30, were called for trial in Judge Talley's part of General Sessions on a first degree murder indictment, the father pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the second degree and declared that his son did not do the killing as the wife of his victim had sworn. With Spartanlike affection, the father declared through Alexander Kaminsky, counsel for both the accused men, that he did not want his son, the father of two children to suffer for his deed and was willing to go to prison to save him.

The elder De Raffaele on the evening of June 9, last, shot and killed Salvatore Pirone, 37 years old, in front of the tenement at 187 Forsythe Street, in which the two families resided. It was an impulsive murder, and the wife of the slain man was the innocent cause of it. On the evening before the killing she was watering geraniums in a box on the window of her apartment, one floor above that occupied by the de Raffaeles.

Amara De Raffaele, daughter of the slayer, happened to lean out of the window of her apartment as the water trickled down. Some of it fell on her head, and, disregarding Mrs. Pirone's apology, she upbraided her.

Mrs. Pirone told her husband about it that evening, and he urged her not to continue the quarrel. The De Raffaeles, however, were not in the least inclined to let the matter drop, and the following evening, when Mrs. Pirone saw Miss De Raeffaeles and her sister-in-law standing at the entrance of the tenement, she hurried out to meet her husband. On the way to the house she told him that she believed the women wanted to resume the quarrel, and it was agreed that they would offer an apology for the occurence of the day before and then hurry up to their apartment.

Before Pirone could make an explanation, however, both the De Raeffaele women began to denounce him in angry tones. Dominick De Raeffaele came along just then and he joined in the verbal attack on the Pirones. His father was seated at supper in their apartment upstairs, and when he heard the voices of his son and the two women members of the family he became crazed over the fancied insult to his daughter.

He grabbed a pistol which he kept in a dresser and rushing down the stairs to the sidewalk, shot Pirone through the heart. Then he and his son bolted for a surface car, while Mrs. Pirone threw herself on her husband's body and the DeRaeffaele women ran up to their apartment.

Policeman Max Lobel captured the father and son after a chase of a few blocks.

When the Grand Jury was investigating the killing Mrs. Pirone, it was said, swore that the son fired the shot which killed her husband. Indictments thereupon were returned against both men charging them with murder in the first degree.

In preparing the case for trial Assistant District Attorney James E. McDonald found that there was little likelihood of the father being convicted of murder in the first degree because Mrs. Pirone's statement conflicted with that of other witnesses. He therefore contented to the acceptance of a manslaughter plea for the father. After Judge Talley had remanded the father back to the Tombs for sentence to-morrow his lawyer announced that he would ask that the indictment against the son be dismissed.

FILMS DEPICT AMERICANS AS BARBARIANS

Missionaries Blame Films—Say Pictures Shown in the Orient Misrepresent Americans

Pasadena, Cal., July 27.—The American motion picture was blamed for the troubles of American missionaries in the Orient in a report from the Women's Board for Foreign Missions, presented here to the annual sessions of the Presbyterian Synods of Arizona and California.

The report declared the natives of Canton, Shanghai, Tokio, Calcutta, Bombay and Jerusalem, viewing "Western" pictures, concluded that all American men are "barbaric savages," who gamble for a living, drink whiskey like water, carry two guns and a bowie knife, and kill their fellow men as a pastime; that American women are dance hall girls who smoke cigarettes, drink heavily, and "sell themselves for a coin or a smile."

The other pictures shown in the Orient are of the eternal triangle variety, the report continued, and the missionaries have a difficult time explaining that all American men and women are not like the characters in the pictures.

"In Jerusalem, within 100 yards from the grave to the garden where the Saviour of the World lay after his crucifixion," the report declared "there is a movie run by an enemy of all righteousness, showing revolting and sensual pictures of American life. These people in foreign lands have no means of knowing that presentations are a gross libel on the majority of our population."

CHURCH RAFFLES WITHIN THE LAW

Toronto Roman Catholic Organization Issue Tickets for Lotteries

Toronto, July 27.—At the City Hall two Roman Catholic religious organizations have recently taken out permits for a raffle, and in at least one case the interpretation placed on the Code by Gen. Williams, Provincial Commissioner of Police, after consultation with the Government's legal department, is being ignored.

In a circular of instructions to Police authorities, General Williams has said:

> "It is to be presumed that persons who conduct bazaars for charitable or religious purposes will want to obey both the spirit and the letter of the law, and if their attention is called to the matter they will no doubt conform to the suggestion of an officer that no raffling should take place, even where permission has been given by the municipal authorities, until it is reasonably clear that the articles will not be sold at the bazaar in the ordinary course."

The instance in which the injunction of the Provincial Commissioner of Police is ignored is that of St. Agnes Italian Roman Catholic Church, who plan an annual picnic at the Transportation Building, Exhibition Park, on Civic Holiday, Monday, August 7, for which advertisements are already out for a raffle of a fifty-dollar gold watch and a live lamb.

That it is the intention of the Church to raffle these articles without any attempt to sell them first, thougr this is a stipulation in the Ontario Police regulations, was made clear this morning by a member of the Church in whose place of business an advertisement is being displayed.

"Have you any tickets for the raffles on these articles?" he was asked.

"No," replied the man, "but I will have some by the end of the week. Can I sell you some?"

"We'll see then. I thought the intention was to sell the watch and the lamb on the grounds."

"Oh, no; they will be raffled."

The permit for this raffle was obtained in the ordinary way from the office of the Mayor by Miss E. Micell, 11 Grace street, secretary of the Daughters of Italy, Local No. 2. While the raffle will be for their benefit it will be held under the auspices of St. Agnes R.C. Church at its annual picnic.

A permit for a raffle has also been obtained for Toronto Roman Catholic parishes to hold raffles at the Roman Catholic Carnival in the Arena, Mutual street, on October 2. The proceeds of the raffles are to go to the aid of St. Augustine's Seminary.

That the provision of the Code requiring goods to be offered for sale before being raffled is clearly not contemplated to be followed at these events is indicated by the fact that raffle permits are being sought so far in advance.

NEW PASTOR FOR BELLEVILLE

Rev. N. S. McKechnie Comes to Baptist Church Here

The following article appeared in the London Free Press of Monday, July 24th:

Rev. N. S. McKechnie, B. A., H. Th., pastor of the Wortley Road Baptist Church, has resigned his pastorate to accept a call to Belleville, Ontario.

At a special meeting of the congregation yesterday, in which many expressions of appreciation and regard were heard, his resignation was accepted with deep regret. He will assume his new charge early in September.

Mr McKechnie has been in London for three and a half years, but during this comparatively brief residence he has made many close friends. His manliness and sterling Christian life, together with his fearless preaching of the Gospel, have contributed largely to the upbuilding of the cause for which he labors, but he will go from London with the best wishes of all who know him.

Before coming to London, in February, 1919, Mr. McKechnie had been engaged for several years on the staff of Woodstock College, of which his father, Dr. N. S. McKechnie, is vice-principal. He succeeded Rev. W. M. Martin in the pastorate of Wortley Road Church, under somewhat difficult conditions, but has been able to strengthen the charge greatly during his term of service. His pastorate was described by a member of his church last night as "exceptionally successful." He has been highly esteemed by clergymen of the city and is vice-president of the London Ministerial Association.

Mr. McKechnie, who during July has been preaching to the united congregations of Wortley Road Baptist and Knox Presbyterian Churches, goes on vacation in August and is to preach his farewell sermon on September 3.

At Victoria Avenue Church, Belleville, he succeeds Rev. W. H. Wallace, who resigned on June 25 to go to England.

No one is yet in view for the Wortley Road vacancy, Mr. McKechnie's resignation being unexpected, but the matter of a successor will be in the hands of a pulpit committee.

COMMISSION TO VISIT THIS CITY

Several Matters Appertaining to Hotels Will be Considered

The Hotel Investigating Commission appointed by the Ontario Government and composed of Messrs. Edgar Watson, Sam. Clarke, Col. W. H. Price, Malcolm Lang, J. Crusland and W. A. Lane all members of the Provincial Legislature will visit this city tomorrow. The meeting will be held at the Chamber of Commerce building at 9.30 a.m. The committee are travelling by motor on what might be termed a sight seeing and investigating tour. The committee are selecting the beauty spots in the Province so that they may let our cousins to the south know where to spend an enjoyable and profitable holiday in the summer. That part of the work is easy for the beauty spots in Ontario are numerous with Belleville as one of the leading sections. But to solve the other part of their mission the improving of hotel conditions is a very difficulty problem. Suggestions from the Commissioners to overcome these conditions vary from the system of government credit to return of the sale of reel beer. Other proposals are to give the hotelkeepers the monopoly of the sale of the present light beers and wines permitted under the O.T.A. and also the monopoly of the pool and billiard business. The proceedings will be quite informal and all who attend can be assured of a hearty welcome and a sympathetic hearing.

At 12.30 p.m. the Commission will be entertained at luncheon by the Directors of the Chamber of Commerce.

ALAS! POOR ACTOR

New York, July 27.—The move long expected in the theatrical world, to bring a reduction in the salaries of actors and actresses has been made by H. Woods, who addressed a general appeal to the profession through the Actors' Equity Association to accept a reduction.

Mr. Woods warned the players that unless they were willing to join in the general wage reduction now under way that "next winter would be a lean one for many of the profession."

Other managers who agreed that a cut was necessary, indicated that in general, salaries representing a reduction up to 30 per cent. would be offered players for next season.

Mr. Woods said that next season would see leading men and women getting from $300 to $400 a week, and average salaries running from $100 to $250 a week.

GERMAN SAILORS SERVE ON BRITISH VESSEL

Berlin, July 26.—Shipping circles here note with satisfaction that German sailors are again in demand for the personnel of ships sailing under foreign flags.

The most recent instance cited is that of a moderuly equipped salvage vessel which an English company has sent to the Baltic Sea to stand ready for assistance in all cases of distress. It is said here that, although the ship's captain is English, as is also its flag, the crew consists of 38 Germans hailing from Danzig.

BREACH OF PROMISE AGAINST ROTHSCHILD

Son of Noted Banker Defendant in Suit by French Girl

New York, July 27.—James Henri de Rothschild, son of Baron Henri de Rothschild, head of the famous Rothschild family of France, was sued for $500,000 damages, in the State Supreme Court yesterday by Mrrie Porquet, a French girl, who alleged she came here last spring upon his promise to marry her, and that he has since refused to fix a date for the marriage.

A statement issued by the Baron's counsel, former State Senator Edgar T. Brackett, declared the French nobleman "denies most strenuously the statements of the plaintiff." The statement said the Baron is now in Paris. The papers filed yesterday showed the complaint was served on him here at 375 Park avenue on June 27.

LINDSAY 7, PORT HOPE 2.

Lindsay, July 27.—By playing snappy ball in the field and by clouting the ball the Greybirds succeeded in defeating Port Hope yesterday by the score of 7 to 2. Oulette was in fine form for the Birds, having 14 strikeouts, while Dear, for the visitors, had 6. The playing of Ashton at second for the winners was a feature of the game, the youngster having two safe hits and accepting six chances in the field without a slip.

ANOTHER 250,000-TON ORDER FOR COAL SENT TO WALES

London, July 27.—Orders have been received in Cardiff from America for another quarter million tons of Welsh steam coal for September and October delivery. There a shortage of tonnage at the moment. A Northumberland coal owner today said that the northern collieries are refusing to book orders, because of the big American demand. Shipping freights are advancing rapidly as a result.

TOMATOES ROLL IN FROM KENT COUNTY

Toronto, July 27.—Kent county is living up to its name as one of the great gardens of Ontario. An indication of this could be seen at the Union Station last night, when no less than eighteen carloads of tomatoes and ten carloads of other vegetables arrived in care of the Dominion Express Company.

As each of the tomato cars contained in the neighborhood of 1,800 baskets, this means that no less than 32,000 baskets of tomatoes will be available on the city's markets this morning.

LUSITANIA STILL BRITISH PROPERTY

U.S. Government Decides Against Any American Attempt at Salvage

London, July 27.—The United States Government will not demand permission for an American salvage vessel either to attempt to raise the Lusitania or to obtain the bullion on board, the American Embassy announced yesterday.

Although the Lusitania was sunk ten miles off shore, or outside the three-mile limit, the fact that it was British property is regarded as entitling British salvagers to lift it or to get the booty.

Owned by the Cunard Line, the Lusitania was subsidized by the British Government and insured under the War Risk Bureau, which was a Government concern.

An English firm is outfitting a vessel to seek the Lusitania's gold hoards, and it was announced in Philadelphia that an American ship is about to try the same thing. The English company asked the Admiralty to protect its rights in salvaging the ship, and it is reported here that the American firm asked the State Department to safeguard its interests in seeking the sunken Lusitania on the ground that it is more than three miles off shore and therefore public property.

The Washington decision that the Lusitania still belongs to the British is expected to settle the knotty problem, which might have raised the spectacle of a naval battle between the salvage crews, both of whom were determined to seize the bullion.

DECAPITATED BY LIVE ELECTRIC WIRE

Petoskey, Mich., July 27.—Professor Ernest Haines, assistant weather forecaster for the Chicago district, was killed at Harbor Springs this afternoon in a spectacular accident.

Prof. Haines, who had gone to Harbor Springs to inspect the weather tower, fell from a ladder of the tower and struck a live wire. His neck was almost burned through and his head was hanging only by a thread when his body was picked up.

Prof. Haines was in charge of the Storm Warning Bureau on the Great Lakes. He was directly under Prof. Cox, taking his place during his vacation. Haines had been employed in the United States Weather Service for 17 years, 15 of which had been spent in Chicago.

May Avert Strike Of the Canadian Railway Shopmen

Both Sides Agree to Arbitration Under Lemieux Act to Discuss Question of Reduction in Wages—One Tribunal to Act for all Canadian Companies

GRAND TRUNK HEADS DENY STATEMENT

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 28.—A denial was made at the Grand Trunk headquarters here today of statements made by R. J. Tallon, president of Division No. 4 Railway Employees' Department, American Federation of Labor, to the effect that the Grand Trunk Railway was practically forcing men to strike by their determinaion to have more and more United States engines and cars repaired in Canadian shops.

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

Montreal, July 28.—In a statement issued today the Railway Association denies that the railways are unlawfully forcing anything on their employes, either in the way of reduced wages or changed conditions of work.

Ottawa, July 28.—The threatened strike of the railway shopmen will not materialize, it was indicated from official sources here last night, provided arrangements already under way were made effective. The situation, which has been regarded as critical, was relieved when it was understood that a Board of Arbitration would be fully constituted and able to meet within a few days. It was stated authoritatively there was every expectation that the board would be functioning by the first of next week.

Whether or not the railways would agree o withholding the wage reductions until after the Board of Arbitration completed its work could not be ascertained, but it was pointed out that the American railways, such as the Pere Marquette, which were arbitrating the dispute with their Canadian employees, were withholding the reductions, pending the decision of their boards. It was assumed from this that the Canadian railroads would take similar action.

The Candin brotherhood of Railroad Employees, embracing 14,000 of the lower paid men, and of which A. R. Mosher is Grand President, has

The older boy was feeding the chickens when the accident occurred.

NOT YET SURE DELORME INSANE

Supt. of Asylum is Watching New Patient for Signs of Insanity

Montreal, July 28.—Adelard Delorme is still the subject of critical observation as regards his mental condition, being under a course of inspection whihe may last another fortnight. Dr. M. D. Brochu, superintendent of the Beauport Asylum, where the ex-priest is now confined, referring to a report that he had refused to issue a certificate of insanity, states that such a statement is incorrect. The ex-priest is still under observation, in accordance with the usual procedure followed by Dr. Brochu in such cases.

In this connection Dr. Brochu has made the following statement:

"I have been asked to give a certificate of insanity by the civil court in Montreal to allow the interdiction of Delorme and the appointment of curators. I was told that I could do this without examining the patient. However, as this has to be given out under my personal responsibility, I have thought that it is my duty to place the accused under observation as in similar cases. I have been very busy since the internment of Abbe Delorme, and have been unable to make the necessary examination. Consequently, I have asked for the ordinary delay and have not yet completed my observation, which may take a fortnight or more.

Not New Procedure.

"This conduct on my part is in accordance with the system followed in any other case.

Delorme is not placed with the other patients but has been given guards to prevent any attempt of escape. Since his incarceration this patient has been behaving very well, and has abided by all the regulations of the institute, though he is placed in private rooms. He has asked for no special treatment. He has caused us no worry, and, as far as reported, has manifested no intention of starting to write his memoirs, as has been reported. He is not saying his mass. For the present Delorme will not be allowed even to receive his parents, and this order will remain in force until such date as found suitable."

Left to Government.

Asked whether a report on his part to the effect that Abbe Delorme was sane gould mean that he would be placed before a jury for trial, Dr. Brochu said: "Not necessarily. It would be left to the attorney-general to act, and he would be in no way bound to follow my finding. I will only have to make a report on the conditions of this patient when asked to do so, not before. Of course, that is apart from the present case, where I have to give a certificate."

CASE REFERRED TO SESSIONS

Alleged Forgery Case Sent to Higher Court by Magistrate

Magistrate Masson yesterday afternoon gave judgment in the case of Edward Mc Inroy of Rawdon Township who was charged with forgery. The case arose out of a cheque which it is alleged was altered so that when it was cashed it was for a larger amount that it was originally made out for. The Magistrate gave it as his opinion that the case should be tried at the sessions which will be held here in December. Mr. Mc Inroy was admitted to bail.

U.S. RAIL STRIKE TO END SOON

Leader Gompers Believes End of Strike is at Hand

TENTATIVE PROPOSALS

Conferences With President Harding Extend Into the Night

New York, July 28.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, expressed the belief to-day that a settlement is not very far off in the railway strike.

"If the parties can be gotten together," said he, "without the Labor Board or anybody else, and left free to settle in their own way, an agreement could be reached, I am sure. But it will never be reached if a condition precedent to settlement is the surrender by the men of their seniority rights."

Washington, July 28.—A meeting of Executives of the 148 major railroads of the United States will be called in New York next Tuesday to consider a plan for settling the strike now in progress. T. Dewitt Cuyler, Chairman of the Association of Railway Executives, announced to-night after a conference with President Harding.

Washington, July 27.—Peace, or a truce, in the rail strike was believed to be close at hand, following a day of conferences extending far into the night at the White House between President Harding and representatives of the warring factions.

Although the utmost secrecy prevailed during the conference and the statements at the close were non-committal, there is a growing belief that the end of the strike is not far off.

In some optimistic quarters the impression prevailed that an order would go out to the striking shopmen to return to work. B. M. Jewell declared, however, that he had no intention of issuing such an order tonight.

The attitude of the Executives, it was understood, remains unchanged concerning the seniority rule, the chief obstacle to peace, notwithstanding pressure brought to bear by the President to induce them to abandon this stand.

Government Jurisdiction.

The basis of an armistice has narrowed down to this: That the striking shopmen return to work with the assurance that the Railroad Labor Board will grant them a rehearing on their grievance and assume jurisdiction over the most disputed issue—the seniority question. It was pointed out that this plan might be followed without the acquiescence of the railroad Executives.

The men would return to work and if their old places, under the seniority rule, were denied them they could carry the dispute to the Labor Board, which would then proceed to deal with the seniority question.

CHEESE FACTORY BURNED DOWN

A Well-Known Eastern Factory a Prey to the Flames

On Wednesday morning at 6 o'clock the Plum Hollow cheese factory, one of the best equipped in Eastern Ontario, was destroyed by fire. The fire is thought to have originated from an over-heated pipe from the boiler. It started in the upper part of the building and the whole structure soon was destroyed. A drive barn and ice house adjoining were also burned. In the factory at the time were 175 cheese ready for shipment. The loss is estimated at $5,000, and is partially covered by insurance. The factory was owned by B. Newsome, Plum Hollow, and John Hudson was the cheesemaker. He was engaged in weighing the milk of N. Lapoint when the fire was discovered. The factory was built about 45 years ago.

DRURY HITS OUT AT THE PRESS

Says News Columns Used for Unfair Purposes

Orillia, July 28.—Premier Drury yesterday revived the old truth that "a prophet is not without honor but in his own country." At the East Simcoe U.F.O. picnic he devoted considerable time to discussing newspaper ethics and declared that the time had come when the people of this country must demand "that we have a decent Press and fidelity in the news columns."

Particularly the Premier criticized The Globe, the enmity of which, he said, the Government had earned because of its legislation on race-track gambling. "That enmity, once incurred, was unrelentant, and struck high or low, fair or foul," said Mr. Drury.

Favors Fixed Elections.

The Premier further found fault with the display treatment given his remarks on Wednesday at Oro, when referring to the rumors of a general election, he said the Government had no intention of going to the country before its allotted time. "I believe," he said, "we should have a definite Parliamentary term and the date of elections fixed by statute. This should not be deviated from unless the Government were defeated in the House."

Two sessions ago he proposed an amendment to the election laws along this line, but the matter was then so strongly opposed by the Leaders of both political parties in the House that it was dropped. It made no difference to him, and, in fact, the Government was better off without that legislation.

Returning to his complaint, the Premier read the headlines, "Drury opposes facing election before he must."

Claims Hit Below Belt.

"Is not that a hit below the belt?" he asked. "I do say this, ladies and gentlemen, hat we must seek fidelity not only in the actual words, but in the interpretation given in the news columns." With editorial opinion he had no controversy. It was the right of any newspaper, as it was the right of any individual, to have an opinion.

Leaving for a moment the newspaper question, the Premier dwelt for some time on the record of the Government. It had been an active record, a diversified record, but one that had not been free from assault, said the Premier.

The Government had been assailed for appointing several commissions. In doing so it had been following well-established British constitutional practice. He differentiated, however, between a commission of inquiry and one of administration. The latter type relieved the Government of responsibility, which had not been done druing his term of office.

PUGILISM PAYS

(Canadian Press Despatch)

Jersey City, July 28.—After Tex Rickard announced to-day that receipts from the Leonard-Tendler fight were about four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, the fight fans figuring Leonard's share which was 42½ per cent., estimated that the lightweight champion would get about $191,250, while Tendler will receive about ninety thousand dollars on the basis of twenty per cent. Rickard's expenses were fifteen thousand dollars and his profit was declared to be about $153,750.

ST. JOHN CANINE HERO TO WEAR PROUD BADGE

St. John, July 28.—A fine collar with cross attached has arrived here for "Hero", a Newfoundland dog owned by Wm. Orm of this city, in recognition of his saving 92 lives in the wreck of the steamship Ethie on December 10, 1919, on the coast of Newfoundland. The dog swam through the big waves, taking a line from shore to the ship, and by means of this a heavier line was put aboard and all saved. The collar and cross are from the Starry Cross of Philadelphia. Mayor McLellan of this city has added exemption of "Hero" from the local dog tax.

THE EMBARGO MAY YET GO

Lloyd George Promises to Deal With Embargo Problem Soon

London, July 28.—Replying to questions in the House of Commons yesterday regarding recent developments in the cattle embargo situation, Premier Lloyd George said the Government accepted the vote of the House of Commons as a mandate to deal at the earliest possible time, with the embargo problem on the lines of he resolution adopted by the House.

The Government, continued the Premier, hoped to consider the decision of both Houses at a very early date and decide what action was required. Legislation, of course, would be necessary.

Personal Conference Suggested.

P. A. Hurd (Coalition Unionist) asked whether, in view of the vote and in order to promote good feeling with the Canadian people, the Premier would intimate to the Canadian Premier that the British Government desired to enter a personal conference with the Canadian Ministers in order to devise arrangements regarding the embargo and other outstanding commercial questions.

Premier Lloyd George replied that that was a matter that would have to be considered. He thought it probable such a conference would be desirable, and, with that proposal in mind, it would be difficult for him to make a definite statement for a few days regarding he Government's proposed legislation.

Is Equivalent Bar Proposed?

Captain Wedgwood Benn (Liberal) asked: "Does the Premier think the decision of the House would be satisfied by the imposition of quarantine, which would be equivalent to an embargo?" Col. W. Grant Morden (Coalition Unionist) asked: "Is the Premier aware that certain members of both Houses are openly stating that they will so manoeuvre matters that no bill will be introduced during this session?"

To these questions the Premier replied that the questions could be put next week, when he would be in a better position to answer, but, obviously, a good deal of consultation would be necessary. There was a resolution of a different character passed by the House of Lords, and this also had to be taken into account.

ROAD HOG MURDERS DOG

Ottawa, July 28.—The meanest motorist has been found. After hitting a valuable dog belonging to B. E. Black, of Ottawa, the road hog yesterday cut the animal's throat. It died a few hours later in severe pain. The police are investigating.

FROM THE SKIES

Toronto, July 28.—Ambrose Kent, entering his garden the other morning after being away several days, was surprised to find a large nickel plated cylinder stock several feet in the ground. Mr. Kent reported the find to the police, and discovered that the cylinder was one that fell from an airplane flying over that secteion on Monday, in charge of Mr. O'Donnell. If the cylinder, which it is thought fell some 2,000 feet, had struck his house, it would have gone right through, Kent says.

REBELS SEIZE BIG WIRELESS

Put it Out of Commission—Free State Troops Take Mayo

London, July 28.—The Irish Irregulars have seized and apparently put out of commission the great Marconi wireless station at Clifden, County Galway. This was one of the company's most powerful stations.

For a time officials waited with some curiosity to see whether the Irregulars, following the example of Russian Bolshevists and German Sparticists, in 1919, would use the station to address messages to sympathisers throughout the world.

"However, we are now convinced from internal evidence," said a Marconi official, "that in their ignorance the Irregulars have sufficiently damaged the station to put it beyond their possible use. We now are sending Canadian messages through our station at North Weald, England."

Clifden was the first great wireless station, dating back to 1907.

Mayo Cleared.

Free State troops have routed the Irregulars from virtually all important posts in Mayo. They have formed into small guerilla bands, rounding up of which will require some time.

In Connacht, they have been likewise dispersed. Before leaving Castel Bar, they attempted, after burning the jail and military barracks, to destroy the post office, but the townspeople, headed by the clergy, made them desist.

Westport, the Irregulars' headquarters in the west, was hastily abandoned by them when the Free Staters made a surprise attack Monday, the garrison fleeing to the hills.

Railway lines between Tullamore and Port Arlington, which were repaired Thursday, were again destroyed last night.

EXPENSIVE BOTTLE

One Bottle of Whiskey is Cause of Fines to Three Parties

One bottle of liquor was yesterday responsible for upwards of $600 being collected in fines, which were imposed by Magistrate Masson. It appears that three young men were apprehended for being intoxicated and upon the case being investigated it was ascertained that the bottle of liquor which caused their intoxication was procured in Belleville. The seller of the liquor paid a fine of $350 and costs, two of the offenders $100 and costs, and the third party $10 and costs. All the parties in the transaction are residents of the city.

Cridland, M.P.P. and W. A. Lane, Secretary were in this city to-day. The Commission are visiting several places in Ontario with an object of enquiring into hotel conditions with a view to improving same if possible also with the object of inducing tourists to visit Ontario.

Chairman's Remarks

Mr. Watson opened the meeting and explained the object of the Commission, which Commission was not political, namely to try and do something to help the hotel accommodation of the Province. Ten years ago the bar room made the profits largely for the hotel and we must find out what can be done to help the hotel men. Many of the latter find it hard to-day to meet all expenses. To-day traffic is principally on the roads by automobile and the hotel has a necessary public function to perform. The question is what is to be done? Many of the hotels have not kept up to the times. Some suggest that a hotel commission be appointed to look after this matter, composed of expert men. A process of elemination has taken place since the O. T. A. came into effect, namely from some 1800 hotels to 1,200. We must suggest something for the tourist trade of this Province. We have wonderful play grounds in this Province, yet the governments have not a publicity department in regard to the tourist traffic. The railways push certain districts such as Muskoka, when near by there are other districts possibly just as attractive as Muskoka. Mr. Watson explained minutely some things which might be done by the Government to increase the tourist trade. What can we do to assist in these matters is the question.

Mayor Hanna was in accord with the remarks of Mr. Watson and he favored assisting the hotel men as much as possible.

Tourist Trade

Mr. J. V. Jenkins, proprietor of Hotel Quinte in addressing the Commission stated that tourists were coming this way in more numbers this year than in former years which was probably accounted for by better

PRINCE HAS MANY DOUBLES

Thousands of Applicants Offer Themselves to Exhibition For Leading Role in Durbar

The number of young men in Ontario, who believe they bear a resemblance to the Prince of Wales is so large that if they were brought to the city at one time they would easily fill the Coliseum, according to Exhibition officials.

Recently the Canadian National Exhibition advertised for a young man bearing resemblance to His Royal Highness to assume the leading role in the great Indian Durbar spectacle, which is to be staged before the grandstand this year. Replies to the advertisement have been pouring in.

Each mail brings additional aspirants to the honor of portraying the Empire's greatest Ambassador. From morning till night young men present themselves at the Exhibition offices on Adelaide street, with the request to be "looked over." Manager Kent has no rest, even when he returns home from the office. On several occasions he was greeted on his arrival at his residence with some would-be princes, who had ranged themselves about his porch waiting the arrival of the man who is to judge whether they can qualify.

"Some of the young men, indeed, bear remarkable resemblance to His Royal Highness." "It is believed that with the aid of a little grease-paint and some stage make-up, the selection will prove satisfactory to the public.

"The final selections will be made within a few days. The most likely looking applicants will be asked to come to the Coliseum, where the judges will make the choice."

YPRES RECOVERING FROM WAR RAVAGES

Famous Cloth Hall and Cathedral Now Being Restored

Paris, July 28.—Ypres is slowly recovering from the devastation it suffered during the Great War. The famous Cloth Hall, which became a scarcely recognizable ruin as a result of the German bombardment, is being cleared of rubbish, and such of the walls as are still standing are being strengthened by the replacement of the original stone. The restoration of the Cathedral of St. Martin, adjoining the Cloth Hall, of which only part of the eastern doorway remained intact when the enemy bombardment ceased, and in which most of the works of art were destroyed, has progressed as far as the rebuilding of the apse and transept.

Ypres, as a whole, has 1,588 houses restored, 1,000 of these having been restored by the State, Ypres, though never taken by the Germans, was systematically bombarded from November, 1914, to May, 1918, and it remained a "salient" of the Allied armies throughout the war. The terrific attacks to which the town was exposed during the war resulted in its almost entire obliteration.

A national subscription has been promoted by prominent French newspapers for the erection in the Forest of Compiegne, France, on the anniversary of the signing of the Armistice, a granite slab bearing the following inscription: "Here succumbed the criminal pride of the German Empire, vanquished by free peoples whom it sought to conquer." The slab is to be placed on the spot where the Armistic plenipotentiaries met.

FEWER SETTLERS COME TO CANADA

Decrease of 39 Per Cent. is Shown This Year

Ottawa, July 28.—During the first three months of the present fiscal year, April, May and June, a total of 25,092 immigrants entered Canada as against 41,472 for the corresponding period last year, or a decrease of 39 per cent.

Great Britain provided 11,695 of the newcomers, the United States 8,425, while 4,972 came from other countries. For the corresponding period last year, 22,458 came from Britain, 11,831 from the United States and 7,183 from other countries

WILL TRY TO NAVIGATE DANGEROUS RAPIDS

Kingston, July 28.—Captain Fleming, an Ogdensburg, N. Y., pilot, is going to Detroit in September to bring east an 80-foot motor boat completed at Detroit for his personal use. He will take the boat to Montreal outside all the way, including the shooting of the Long Sault and the plunge through the dangerous Lachine Rapids. On reaching Montreal he will turn back and will make the attempt, for the first time in the history of navigation on the St. Lawrence River, to run up through the Lachine and Long Sault rapids. This feat has never been accomplished by any craft.

not yet appointed representatives to the two boards authorized to investigate the reductions affecting its members. It was understood tonight that several names were being considered and that the appointments would be made within a few days.

Pitblado Represents Companies

Montreal, July 27.—Isaac Pitblado, K.C., of Winnipeg, has been appointed to represent the Canadian railway companies on the Board of Conciliation which will attempt to settle the dispute between the companies and the railway shopmen (Division No. 4, Railway Employees' Department, American Federation of Labor). The American Federation has been received by the Department of Labor). The recommendation has been received by the Department of Labor at Ottawa, according to a despatch from the Capital to-night.

It was decided that the Railway Association of Canada will not have a representative on the Cnciliation Board, and the officials of the railway companies in Montreal, after a meeting held on Tuesday afternoon, decided to name a representative to act for all the roads.

James Simpson of Toronto has been appointed by the shopmen to act for them, and the two will now endeavor to agree upon a Chairman If this should prove impossible, the Minister of Labor will name a third member to act as Chairman.

Able Representatives

Mr. Pitblado acted in a similar capacity during the railway wage disputes recently, and Mr. Simpson, who was formerly on the Board of Control of the city of Toronto, is regarded as an able champion for the shopmen.

It was announced tonight by the Railway Association of Canada that each of the railway companies has received notice of a Board of Conciliation with regard to the shopmen's dispute. Several meetings have been held by the association but it was decided that the railway companies name a representative outside of the Railway Association of Canada.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ON P.M. COLLAPSES

Believed Wash of Steamer Weakened Wallaceburg Structure

Sarnia, July 27.—Believed to have been undermined by the heavy wash of the passenger steamer Rapids King, the foundations of the Pere Marquette Railway bridge in the town of Wallaceburg gave way at 7.30 yesterday morning and the bridge collapsed. Fortunately no loss of life was incurred.

Until a late hour Sarnia was out of communication by rail with Wallaceburg and the centres south of that town, but finally the local agent was able to procure a passenger train from the American side and take passengers as far as Wallaceburg, where they were accommodated with a train on the other side of the bridge.

Several trainloads of freight are stranded on both section of the track It is by no means certain, officials state, that traffic will be resumed before Friday or Saturday.

OIL WELL REFUSES TO YIELD SECRET

Another Attempt to Blow Mineral Springs Drilling Fails

Hamilton, July 27.—Efforts to successfully "shoot" a well owned by the Valley Oil & Gas Company on the property of John Gartshore, near Mineral Springs, failed yesterday because a heavy charge of solidified nitro-glycerine failed to detonate, despite the fact that a charge of liquid nitro-glycerine exploded. The hole "bridged," and nothing came out of the top but a strong flow of gas.

Operations will not be abandoned, however, as E. P. Roe of Toronto, Acting Geologist, is postive that there is a large pool of profitable oil in or near where drilling has been carried on.

The drillers say the well is a regular "Jonah" because of the difficulty that has been experienced in "shooting it." Repeated attempts have been made during the past few months to do this, but each time the charge has failed to detonate.

BANDITS BAFFLE POLICE CORDON

Search for Would-be Robbers of Payroll Results in One Arrest

Sudbury, July 27.—The dragnet which the police threw around Coniston and Sudbury six hours ago, following the hold-up of two pay clerks of the Mond Nickel Company at Coniston early on Monday forenoon, and which has been strictly maintained since, has, so far, brought forth but one development. Numbers of persons both here and at Coniston, have been stopped, searched and interrogated, but the net result is that one man has been held over for further examination.

This individual was taken in charge late this afternoon, at a local hotel by Chief Fyvie's force, after a search of his room had revealed a loaded revolver. The man, who is an Italian, with a police record, has been about town for several days, and, while the police so far have nothing really definite to connect him with the hold-up, a further inquiry into his actions has been decided on by Inspector Storie of the Provincial squad and Chief Fyvie of the Sudbury police.

roads being provided. The route taken by American tourists the past few years to Montreal and other eastern points was by way of the American side.

Mr. Watson—What's the attraction to Montreal?

Mr. Jenkins—There are seevral attractions in that city. Continuing Mr. Jenkins said that we have in Hastings County a large territory and it is equal to Muskoka. Fishing is abundant in the northern part of the County. Speaking of the hotel business he said that he could not make enough money to pay a bar tender since soft drinks, etc. are sold at so many places. The hotel keeper was at the mercy of the travelling public. He would suggest that all soft drinks should be in the hands of the hotel keepers also cigars and cigarettes.

Bar a Loss

Mr. Kingsley of the Kingsley House said that the hotel men were as it were routed out of his bar which was a great loss. He suggested that cigars, cigarettes and soft drinks privileges should be centered in the hotel. A city or town is known by the cleanliness and the up keep of its hotels. He would also like to see 5 per cent. beer again. The 2½ per cent beer was only a second consideration as he sold two to three dollars worth of other sold drinks compared to the 2½ per cent beer.

Col. Price—Would 5 per cent beer cut out bootlegging?

Mr. Kingsley—I think it would do so to a large extent. Five per cent. beer is not intoxicating. Give the hotel men something to encourage us. Give us a monopoly on some things. If we had five per cent. beer it would help much.

Col. Price—If the government gave 5 perc ent beer for say six months and go to the people would they support it?

Mr. Kingsley—I think they would.

Mr. Jenkins—The city should protect the hotels which are needed in this city.

Mr. Watson—Is it not a fact that many in the hotel business are not hotel men?

Mr. Jenkins—We have none such in this city. All are good hotel men. I have spent $960 in a year on soap, towels, stationery from which I did not get a cent of revenue.

Mayor Hanna—A good hotel is an asset to the city and should be protected even.

Mr. H. F. Ketcheson—Some of the hotel men in this city could make more money if their hotel premises were converted into stores etc. The keepers of hotels should be protected more than they are.

Mr. Watson—It seems that in some places hotels have a cafeteria in connection with their places and it is found profitable. Would there be a justification to put a tax on restaurants? Would this help the hotel business?

Mr. Kingsley—No it would not. Every hotel keeper should be encouraged and taxes should not be increased as has been done. We are entitled to something.

Mr. Watson—We are financing farmer's industries and why should not hotel men be assisted to improve their premises and up-keep of same.

Mr. R. Johnson—We could keep up our hotels better if we had a monoply of soft drinks. Hotel men here could do better if there was not so much opposition in restaurants.

Mayor Hanna—We have allowed too many Chinese restaurants and too many pool rooms in this city.

Col. Price increase licenses on restaurants and pool rooms and take some of the taxes off the hotels.

Mayor Hanna—I would favor the hotel premises being on a fixed assessment. The hotel men should receive all help possible. He would favor government control of the hotel business.

Mr. H. Bateman—They might take business tax off the hotels.

At this stage of the proceedings an adjournment was made until afternoon.

HOOVER APPEALS FOR UNITY

Says States Must Co-operate for Self-Defence Against Coal Famine

Washington, July 27.—Secretary Hoover yesterday appealed to the Governors of the states on behalf of the "Presidential Coal Distribution Committee" is the "First step toward decentralization to equitable distribution and maintenance of fair prices for coal," for co-operation with the Federal Government.

Under this plan it was announced, "the distribution for railway use will be directed from Washington, but, with the possible exception of a few interstate public utilities. The responsibility for all other distribution will rest upon organizations set up under state control."

Mr. Hoover's call upon the governors followed one sent to the various state commissions by Commissioner Clyde B. Aitcheson of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in which he describes the situation as most critical.

Bound to Be a Shortage.

It is generally conceded that even if both the rail and coal strikes were settled in the immediate future there will be a considerable coal shortage next Fall, even with production quickly restored to normal. This is indicated in the telegram addressed by Commissioner Aitchison to the Railroad and Public Service Commission of all states, calling their attention to the seriousness of the situation and the fact that even with all commissions working under a common plan they can hope only to ameliorate the fuel shortage which is certain to come.

The "Hoover plan" for moving coal will be given a careful tryout before further consideration is given the strikes. There is a disposition here to mark time on the differences between the coal operators and the miners while the program of distributing available coal is being launched. By moving the coal at non-union mines encouragement will be given for greater production there.

BOOZE "BALLAST" ON BRITISH SHIPS

Sail From West Indian Ports Under Bogus Clearance Papers

London, July 26.—In its efforts to put an end to rum running from the British West Indies, the United States Government has practically asked this country for the right to search suspected British vessels outside the three-mile limit. Negotiations on this point are now being conducted through Ambassador Harvey.

It is certain these negotiations will be protracted over a long period. However anxious Great Britain may be to help make the United States bone dry, she can hardly see her way clear to consenting to search.

Furthermore, it is believed here Canada and the various colonial Governments concerned will soon be involved in the negotiations.

Canada as a self-governing Dominion will have to be negotiated with directly from Washington, then America's charges of rum-running from the West Indies will have to be taken up by the Colonial Office here and with the respective colonial Governments. This is one of the chief reasons why the negotiation will assuredly take so much time.

It is certain, however, that America's allegation that certain vessels flying the British flag have sailed under bogus clearance papers will be investigated. In some instances it is claimed certain ships have left one West Indian port with a cargo of booze for Halifax. It then puts in at another West Indian port and gets papers for clearance to some American port in "ballast."

It has been just the sort of ballast the United States Government has been anxious not to have come within the three-mile limit.

But it was said that unless the West Indies consent to ration the amount of hooch consumed annually, the British Government cannot take action to shut off the supplies of those possessions. What John Bull is anxious to do, however, is try to prohibit the use of British craft for illicit liquor traffic. This will be a hard job in view of the prices [illegible]n bootleggers are willing to pay [illegible]ng that floats.

SCHOOLS GROW IN PROVINCE

Need for More Money Worries Education Department

TEACHERS RETURNING

Economic Conditions Drive Ex-teachers Back Into Profession

Toronto July 28.—Confronted with an expansion of the Province's educational system, which during the past year has gone on at an unprecedented rate, the Ontario Department of Education is literally at its wit's end to know how to meet the demands now being made for payment of the routine Government grants to the public, separate, and high schools. Apportioned on the basis of inspectors' reports sent in following the close of the school year, these grants are sent out annually during the month of August.

The returns from inspectors for the present year, now being tabulated at the offices of the Education Department, show that the abnormal growth, which commenced in the public schools last year, has now spread to the high schools and normal schools. The result is a very large increase in the demands for Government assistance from all branches of the system. No change has been made in the bases of payment, but the year's growth so far exceeded what would normally be expected, that the Minister of Education is wondering how he will satisfy the demands of boards of education and not run up a bill for the routine expenditure of his Department, which will give his colleagues in the Cabinet the scare of their lives and provide further ammunition for those Government opponents who are in the habit of unearthing a farmer Government's extravagances. The unfortunate, or fortunate feature of the Minister's predicament is the fact that the increases are entirely uncontrollable.

More Teachers.

Curious enough, the supply of qualified public school teachers, in spite of the unusual increases in the number of scholars and rooms, is almost sufficient to meet the demand. So marked has been the improvement over past years, in this respect, that Hon. R. H. Grant has intimated that permits for the employment of untrained teachers will be issued only in cases where it can be shown that the school board concerned has made every effort to secure the services of a qualified teacher. This policy is in marked contrast to the policy of the years during, and immediately following the war, as the supply of qualified teachers available at that time fell short of meeting the demand.

In discussing these two changes in the educational situation in the Province Hon. Mr. Grant threw some interesting sidelights on the movements in the educational world, which, in the whole or in part, have grown out of the Great War, and conditions arising out of it.

One of the notable reasons for the unparalleled demand for educational facilities of all sorts and descriptions which has made itself felt since 1919, in his view, lies in the fact that one of the results of the unrest growing out of the war has awakened interest in education. The renewed intest and its resultant demand has made itself felt in all countries of the world. In Ontario it is being felt all the way from the public schools to the universities.

The immediate reason for the Department's troubles, states the Minister, is the fact that the increase is so widespread. "Last year its influence was felt more largely in the public what in the world we are going to do with the people that want to go to normal school," he said.

Then, too, the local provincial situation has been affected by the Adolescent School Attendance Act, which raised the school limit in urban centres to sixteen years of age. The Department's policy, as carried out so far, has not been to enforce the new law too drastically, consideration being given the fact that increased accommodation does not grow over night.

But where the war has brought troubles in one direction, one of its results has brought relief in another. So severe has been the strain from unemployment that many qualified ex-teachers has felt the occupations which they entered on leaving the profession and are now seeking reappointment as teachers.

This movement, which is a direct consequence of the economic conditions arising out of the war, has had mere effect on the public schools than on the high schools, there still being some little shortage of the supply of qualified high school assistants.

GENERAL FENG IS A CHRISTIAN

Personal Picture of the Governor of a Chinese Province

New York, July 28.—A personal picture of General Feng Yuh-siang, known as the Christian general in the forces of Wu Pei-Fu, is contained in a letter from Bishop F. R. Graves of Shanghai which has been received here by Protestant Episcopal leaders. Bishop Graves is said to have known General Feng for a number of years.

"Feng has been elevated to the governorship of Honan province," writes Bishop Graves, "and it is characteristic of him that when he attended a big reception recently in his honor he rode to the Y. M. C. A. hall on a bicycle with a few unarmed attendants, instead of being surrounded by the customary mounted cavalcade. His first Sunday as governor found General Feng attending a joint service of all the Christian denominations in Kaifeng at the Shend Kung Hui, or Episcopal church. Here the Christian general preached a sermon from the text: 'To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin.'

"He appropriated out of his private funds a sum sufficient to care for the beggars who infested the city until employment could be obtained for them, at the same time announcing that those who wouldn't work for a living must leave Honan."

Feng, according to Episcopal missionaries, became a convert to Christianity 11 years ago when, attacked by a disease which native physicians declared incurable, he was restored to health by the ministrations of a Christian medical missionary. Thousands of his soldiers have embraced the religious faith of their leader and victory on the field is frequently followed by a service of thanksgiving of a Christian character which is led by General Feng himself, it is reported.

"General Feng is somewhat of a Cromwell in his religious ideas," Bishop Graves said, "but there is no question at all of his sincerity. He shares hard conditions with his men."

TRENCH CAVES IN AND BURIES MAN

Newmarket, July 27.—Frank O'Halloran, second engineer of the town, had a narrow escape from death on Tuesday morning. With other men he was engaged in digging trenches for the new water line on Timothy street, and was digging at the bottom of one of the deep ditches, when without warning, it caved in, completely burying him, save his head. His fellow-workmen went to the rescue immediately, and had to use picks and shovels to liberate him.

It was nearly half an hour before he was released. Dr. S. W. Otton was called and rendered first aid. An X-ray examination should no bones broken. The accident occurred just in front of O'Halloran's home on Timothy street.

Shortly before this another man, working a little farther down the street, found it necessary to get a wedge to tighten the handle of his pick. He climbed to the surface and was just out when a cave-in occurred which, had he been in the trench, would have completely buried him.

BELLEVILLE'S OPPORTUNITY

Our local Chamber of Commerce will be interested in the news that comes from London, stating that the campaign of Canada's Trade and Commerce Department to attract British branch factories to the Dominion has resulted in the sending of representatives of four important British firms to Canada for the purpose of locating sites, while fifteen other companies have the matter under consideration. Of these latter, nine or ten are expected to send out men to look over the ground in the course of next year.

British manufacturers are waking up to the fact that the best way to promote British trade with Canada is not to depend upon preferential tariffs, but to bring their industries out to the Dominion by establishing branch factories here. This has been the policy pursued by American manufacturers with considerable success. Belleville offers first-class facilities for the establishment of such branch factories, and we can depend upon our Chamber of Commerce doing its best to secure a fair proportion of them for the city.

STATION STREET PAVEMENT

Mr. Donald Campbell, our new City Engineer, is quoted as praising the street pavements of Belleville. There can be no doubt that the pavements of many of our streets will compare very favorably with those of any of the larger cities in Canada, and Mr. Campbell was of course referring to these. He could not have been over the pavement of Station Street, otherwise he would have qualified his remarks. The pavement on that street is a positive disgrace to the city It gives visitors to Belleville a jolt on the very doorstep, and the jolt is not easily forgotten.

What is the City Council going to do about the pavement of Station Street? Councillors have been heard to say emphatically "We must get that pavement done at once!" But what have they done toward that end? Has the Engineer been instructed to prepare specifications and call for tenders for the work? Mr. Campbell might well be asked to give immediate attention to this very important improvement. It cannot be done this year, but plans should be made for starting upon it next Spring.

CHAOS OR REASON?

Canada is to be thrown in a state of chaos if the word of the railway shopmen's leader is passed to that effect. The vote has been taken, and it is reported to be 97 per cent. in favor of a walk-out. This puts a weapon into the hands of the Union leaders that they will think twice before using, for it is a weapon that will smite the men whom they are leading, and, what is worse, it will bring suffering upon the wives and children of those men, as well as inconvenience and loss to the citizens of the country generally.

All leaders of men should consider the interests not merely of their own particular class, but they should realize the essential solidarity of the nation as a whole. The hand cannot say to the head: "I have no need of thee", neither can the head say to the hand: "I have no use for thee". Head and hand are inter-dependent, and the sooner these sectional leaders, whether they be railway men or miners, realize that all strikes are absolute dead loss to themselves and to their fellow men the sooner they will settle these ever recurring grievances.

The threat of the President of the Union to call an immediate strike because American engines and cars were being repaired in Canadian railway shops, is a pretty serious affair. We were told that the vote was taken on the question of the reduction of wages. It certainly had nothing to do with the railway strike in the United States. Any railway company has a right to use its shops for whatever purpose it deems fit and is not subject to the dictation of labor union officials.

As to the question of wage reduction, that is a matter that might well be left to arbitration. The reduction was based upon the supposition that the cost of living had come down proportionately. This is a moot point, and, possibly, some fair adjustments should be made. Whatever the merits of either side may be, there is only one sane and reasonable way to decide upon them, and that way is not to be found in chaos, but in calm and orderly discussion. There never was a strike yet that ended up in anything but all round loss and frequently has brought disaster upon industry.

THE HORSE AND THE AUTO

In these days of the glorification of the automobile, it is good to hear someone say a kind word about the horse. It seems that the New York authorities believe that the day of the horse is by no means over as a carrier on the city streets. Brooklyn Bridge has been set apart for horse traffic, so that he may wend his way unhurried by hooting automobiles.

Business firms in various parts of the United States are said to be going back to horse-drawn waggons, for the reason that chauffeurs are too careless with motor transport. "They seem to delight in sending the trucks to the repair shops", said a lumber dealer.

According to recent statistics, the horse is said to be gaining ground in farm work. One could not come to this conclusion from the increasing number of motor cars that drive into Belleville every day, and especially on Saturday. There can be no doubt that the motor car has superseded the horse as a roadster, and the facility with which farmers can transport their goods and their families to the more populous centres by this means goes a long way toward bringing town and country together. But the days of old Dobbin are by no means done.

HERE AND THERE

HOW CLEAN YOU SHAVE!

Here is a glimpse of Lincoln, from Mr. Chauncey Depew's new book, "My Memories of 80 Years." At a gloomy period of the Civil War a pompous Congressman named Ganson, a gentleman of great dignity but of unusual baldness, felt called upon to visit the President and formally to address him upon the state of the country. He concludes thus:—

"Though I am a Democrat I imperil my political future by supporting your war measures. I can understand that secrecy may be necessary in military operations, but I think I am entitled to know the exact conditions, good or bad, at the front."

Mr. Lincoln looked at him earnestly for a minute and then said: "Ganson, how clean you shave!" That ended the interview.

A PHRASE OF GREAT USE.

Sometimes a mere newspaper man invents, or blunders into, an expression worthy of a statesman. Lord Balfour himself might have devised the phrase used by the correspondent of The Associated Press who was reporting the attitude of the British Government toward the American proposal to prevent liquor-running from the Bahamas into the United States. He said that this attitude was "sympathetically noncommittal."

That is a very triumph of linguistic realism. "My dear Uncle Sam," says John Bull, "you know what a deep interest I take in all your affairs, aand how delighted I should be to please you in any way open to me, and I assure you that just as soon as my Crown lawyers tell me how to do the impossible I shall be only too happy to do what now I do not see my way to undertake."

Sympathetically noncommittal is just what thousands of us have wanted to be in our dealings with pushing agents of various kinds, with peddlers of financial nostrums and often with politicians. The desirable thing is to be able to say: "On me they smiled, but unbeguiled I saw the snare." We should so love to close with their offer, but unfortunately we cannot at the moment commit ourselves to anything new.

A correspondent in The New York Times offers a perfectly safe mental talisman against poison ivy in the following simple six-line jingle, which may easily be committed to memory and will prove an ever-ready guide in one's walks:

"Berries red,
Have no dread!
Berries white,
Poisonous sight!
Leaves three,
Quickly flee!

"The five-leafed ivy (Ampelopsis quinquefolia) also called Virginia creeper and woodbine, need not trouble one because it is not a sumac but is allied to the grape-vine, is perfectly harmless and is the one innocent victim that has to suffer from suspicion, being often destroyed under the impression that it is the poison ivy."

MIDSUMMER.

Fragrance, the poetry of lovely flowers,
  Is in the singing breeze as in the rose,
  Aristocrat of beauty, and in those
Unpampered children of the wilding showers.
A lark is whistling though a dark cloud lowers;
  In a thrush's song a tree, remembered, grows
  Fresh leaves for me, and at my morning's close
The red-winged blackbird gladdens blue-flag bowers.
Who so loves nature let him straightway fare
  To wood and field when the mid-summer bee
Pilfers a thousand sweets, and when the air,
  Sun-scented, dreams of Autumn; there shall be
Indulge his spirit, sensing everywhere
  The perfumed glow of Nature's poetry.

PRESS OPINIONS

STATE CHURCH IS ABOVE LAW EVEN IN ONTARIO

Toronto Telegram.

When The State Church wants to violate the law against raffles at one of its picnics Rev. Father Doherty telephones to or visits Hon. W. E. Raney, Attorney-General of Ontario.

Hon. W. E. Raney promptly fulfills the petitions and desires of Rev. Father Doherty's heart by a recourse to the almost unheard of policy of ordering Inspector Greer, of the Provincial Police, to attend the picnic.

Every class of church picnic is almost invariably left where it belongs—within the jurisdiction of the local police.

The Raney order that sent an inspector of the provincial police to invade the sovereignty of the local police was a violation of usage and a departure from precedent.

Effect of that violation and departure was to emphasize the suspicion that the Ontario Attorney-General's Department was down on its hands and knees to The State Church, represented by Father Doherty.

The effect of the Catholic vote-hunting tactics that sent an officer of the provincial police to supersede the local police at a local picnic was to popularize the belief that Hon. W. E. Raney had sent Provincial Police Inspector William Greer to Rev. Father Doherty's picnic, Not to enforce the law against raffles, but to prohibit the local police from interfering with violations of the law against raffles or from testing that law.

WIT AND HUMOR

A man whose boyhood home was in a river valley was wont to recall a very severe freshet that swept the old homestead away. "And the next thing I saw of father," he would say at a thrilling point of the narrative, "he was sailing down stream on the dining-room table." "And what did you do?" would be the invariable query. "Oh, I accompanied him on the piano."

Recently married woman (entering grocer's shop) : "Mr. Brown, I've called to make a complaint about that flour I had from you the other day."

Grocer: "Whatever was the matter with it?"

"It was tough."

"Tough, madam?"

"Yes, tough. I made a pie with some of it yesterday, and it was so tough my husband couldn't eat it."

Proud and pompous, the doctor was strolling down the street, when he was accosted by a poor woman. "I expect you are making a good thing out of attending to that rich Smith boy?" suggested the lady. "Oh, yes, fairly good." "Well," whispered the lady, "I hope you won't forget that it was my Willie who threw the brick that hit him."

The class in drawing was directed to draw a picture of a horse and wagon. When walking up and down the aisles, noting the various stages of progress, I saw that Charles had drawn the picture of the horse only. I asked, "Why have you not completed your picture?" to which the boy gave the somewhat pert but nevertheless witty reply, "Oh, the horse can draw the wagon!"

'Ye think a fine lot of shakespeare? "I do, sir," was the reply. "An' ye think he was mair clever than Rabbie Burns?" "Why, there's no comparison between them" "Maybe no; but ye tell us it was Shakespeare who wrote, 'Uneasy lies the head that wears the crown.' Now Rabbie would never have written sic nonsense as that." Nonsense sir," thundered the other. "Ay, just nonsense. Rabbie would hae kent fine that a king or queen either diana gang to bed wi' a croon on their head. He'd have kent they hang over the back o' a chair.

A GALLANT PRIEST

The witty parish priest of Ballybrack, Father Healy, once had an encounter with Gladstone that resulted in a spirited exchange of pleasantries. According to a contributor in the Boston 'Transcript,' the statesman, in order to tease Father Healy, told him that once when he was visiting Rome he had been offered a plenary indulgence for eight or ten lire. Father Healy immediately rejoined that all he could say was that Mr. Gladstone was being "let off very lightly.'

One of the characteristics of this genial priest was his gallantry—a trait that shows he was a true Irishman. On one ocassion Father Healy had met at Bray Station a young lady—one of the Dublin belles—in a donkey trap. She was in an exhausted condition and explained that her donkey, on the way to that station, had taken fright and run away with her.

"Faith, then, he is no ass," said Father Healy to the pretty girl.

What We Are to Our Ancestors

Yesterday marked the birth centenary of a man whose name deserves to stand with those of Galileo, Newton, Harvey, and all the other great discoverers by whose labours the wonderful ways of nature have been in part revealed to us. Gregor Mendel, son of a farmer of Heinzendorf, Austria, priest in the Augustinian Order, school-teacher, president of the Brunn Society of Naturalists, and later Abbot of the Monastery of Brunn, was the first to discover and formulate one of nature's primary laws, that of heredity, why "like begets like." Mendel was a keen and thorough student. He spent years carefully observing and recording the phenomena of plant life in his monastery garden; keeping exact records of more than ten thousand plants, a feat of patience and perseverance only equalled, perhaps, by Luther Burbank.

His Great Discovery.

Reproduction is effected in almost all forms of life, by the union of two germ-cells, male and female. The different qualities and characteristics of the resultant offspring are an inheritance, some from one parent, some from the other. The law governing this transmission of characters was Mendel's great discovery. A homely illustration will give the reader some idea of what this law is. To begin with, all heritable characteristics or traits fall within one or other of two classes. They are either "dominant" or "recessive." Let us suppose we mate a Manx cat with a common cat. Let us further suppose that the possession of a tail is a dominant character, and taillessness a recessive character. The offspring of this mating will then all have tails, as, being a dominant character, all individuals of the second generation will possess it. In reality, however, this second generation are all hybrids, and, though in possession of tails, they, nevertheless, have a strain of taillessness in their make-up. This appears in their offspring; for, mating hybrid with hybrid, we find the third generation variegated as follows: Out of every four individuals, 1 tailless cat, which will breed true (i.e. mated with its like, all offspring will be tailless); 1 tailed cat, which will also breed true; 2 tailed cats, hybrids, the same as their immediate parents. A hybrid, mated with a pure-bred, on either the dominant or the recessive side, will produce hybrids and pure-breds in equal numbers.

Important to Breeders.

The foregoing illustrates the mere rudiments of Mendel's law. The intelligent reader will at once see that, where two or several traits are involved, the working out of the law becomes most complicated. Where, say, two characters are involved, the proportions wil then be 1, 3, 3, 9, in place of 1, 1, 2, shown in the above illustration. Let us cross a breed of cattle, black and hornless, with a horned variety, red in color; black color and horns being dominant traits and the opposite qualities recessive traits. The second generation will be black with horns. The third generation will show, in every sixteen individuals, 1 hornless red, 3 hornless black, 3 horned red, 9 horned black.

That these principles, besides being a guiding light to every student of biology in all its branches, can be put to practical use, has been abundantly proved.

Wheat Experiments.

For example, in England, some decade and a half ago, experiments on quite an extensive scale were carried out on home-grown wheat. Some of the best varieties of British wheat are highly susceptible to a disease or blight, known as rust. Certain varieties of American wheat, though much smaller eared, were immune to rust. A cross was made. Susceptibility to rust proved a dominant quality, so much so that some difficulty was experienced in collecting sufficient matured seed to finish the experiment. Mendel's law, however, triumphed. In the third generation one ear in every 16 was a pure recessive, and bred true, producing a large-eared, rust-immune wheat. In 1909 at the Experimental Farm at Cambridge several acres of this were grown. The most striking application of this law to the human race is shown in the statistics on brachydactyly — which means literally, "short-fingeredness" —or a peculiar malformation of hands and feet, the middle bone (the second from the end) in each finger and toe being missing. It is literally true of these unfortunate individuals that "their fingers are all thumbs."

The Human Application.

The children of the brachydactylous and one normal parent average about fifty-fifty—normal and brachydactylous. This accords with Mendel's law. The abnormal parent is, in respect of this peculiarity, a hybrid, being (in all observed cases) the child of one normal and one brachydactylous parent; and, the short-fingered condition being a dominant trait, the progeny are hybrids and true recessives (normal individuals) in equal numbers. Mendel published the results of his life work in 1866. It attracted but little attention, and was soon forgotten. In 1884 he died. Sixteen years later his work was rediscovered, at first by Prof. DeVries, of Amsterdam, In 1902 it was translated into English by Prof. Bateson, of Cambridge. It is now known and followed by biologists the world over. In the study of such themes as sex-determination, eugenics, hereditary and chronic disease, plant breeding, and animal breeding, its principles must be the guide. It has been well said that Mendel's discovery means to biological science as much as the discovery of the mariner's compass in the XV. century, meant to the science of navigation.—E. A LITTLE PRAYER.

(By John Oxenham.)

Where'er thou be,
On land or sea,
Or in the air,
This little prayer,
I pray for thee—
God keep thee ever,
Day and night,—
Face to the light,—
Thine armour bright,—
Thy 'scutcheon white,—
That no despite Thine honor smite!—
With infinite
Sweet oversight,
God keep thee ever,
Heart's delight!—
And guard thee whole,
Sweet body, soul,
And spirit high;
That, live or die,
Thou glorify
His Majesty;
And ever be,
Within His sight,
His true and upright,
Sweet and stainless,
Pure and sinless,
Perfect Knight!

SUMMER HINTS FROM NEW YORK

The newest note in shoes is seen in the steel buckle, that chaste and smart ornament which has an air of distinction peculiarly its own. The touch of steel is not confined only to shoes, however, but appears delightfully on bags, which we have always with us, in long steel earrings, and even embroidered on black suede gloves, although these are very much of a novelty.

Midsummer nights in the city.. in spite of a quality of unreality, are anything but dreamlike. They suggest rather a brilliant scene in a play, and astonishingly vivid are the lights and crowds, music drifting through open doors of restaurants, roof-gardens with their unnatural background of palms and jazz and their beautiful natural ceilings of star-filled skies. Again one feels the necessity for something different in the way of clothes. Here again, color is rampant; on rarely see an all-black evening dress. Elaborate evening gowns are certainly out of place; they are too conventional for the strange air of nonchalance that pervades the city. A lace gown, either of black lace over a white slip, or over any other colour for that matter, or of a combination of chiffon or crepe with lace, is always the most attractive frock for the evening in town.

New York has at last taken her place beside her sister cities, London and Paris, as a stopping-off place for the fashionable world in midsummer, and beautifully gowned women are seen in its streets between visits. Truly the 'comedie humaine' is gaily and fascinatingly clothed, proving once more that 'the beautiful is often as useful as the useful." The American woman has grown more adaptable and, therefore, less easy to pigeon-hole. She has, in fact, found herself, and because nothing is really achieved by accident, her clothes have a greater sense of beauty than ever before, and they are worn with more distinction.—Vogue

The Sweeper Of Cherry Blossoms

(By C. B. Boardman and R. J. Templeton in The Canadian Magazine)

The sun splutters his golden rays in great and small patches over the orchards of blossoming cherry trees, blending them in a mass of color that ranges from the subtle pink of the sea shell to the faintest tint of lilac mauve, with a touch of melon red, and there the soft emerald of leaves peeping from behind the blossoms.

You hear the gentle sobbing of the wind as it passes through the valley. It has the sound of a woman's cry—a sad, low, vibrating note that sets the temple bells a-tingle—and carries far the luring perfume of the orchard.

A million cherry blossoms quiver in the breeze. Some break loose, to soar for a while and fall to earth; others cling still to their parent trees. At times a wondrous crooning echo comes from the low hills, sounding like the burden note of a great organ miles and miles away.

. . . .

Where the hill rises from the valley stood the hut of an honest, plodding pottery maker, Yong-Lo by name, of long and worthy ancestry, who lived there alone with his daughter, Sho-San.

Each morning, before even the dew had dropped from the camphor leaves Sho-San might be seen sweeping, with her awkward broom of reed grass, the winding paths in the orchard that led to the many-gabled palace of the Great Mandarin.

Sho-San knew the cherry orchard better even than its owner. She alone understood and reverently respected its powerful silences and listened in seemly awe to the deep voice of Huan Shi, the Wind, as he passed among the fruiting trees. And Sho-San held the secrets of the orchard close to her heart and spoke not so much as a word of them to others.

With the coming of spring the soul of Sho-Shan was bewitched by the cherry blossoms—by their perfume and their many hues—and by the low sensuous winds that quivered among them — winds that made strange sounds, that tugged fiercely at unknown, hidden cords within her.

Sho-San was young, and she listened and saw and dreamed—oh, so very much did she dream. To her fancy, the orchard became a fairy land of throbbing color and beguiling beauty, and Huan-Shi, she knew, was master of it all. It was he who swept her cherry blossoms far away and sprinkled them like snow flakes everywhere Some day, she dreamed, if she were worthy and faithful, she would go away, leave her father and the cherry orchard and the cobblestone paths, and live with Huan-Shi. Perhaps, if he wished it, she would marry him and help him to sweep the cherry blossoms and carry their perfume away, away, until it mingled with the many odors of far-off Pe-King. She was not quite certain about this latter thought, for, no doubt, Huan-Shi, the Mighty, had many wives, and perhaps he would take her only as a concubine. Yet Sho-San would be happy even as such.

It was in this manner that Sho-San grew to early young womanhood. During this time she continued to sweep daily with regularity and thoroughness, the many paths of the Celestial One's orchard. This mighty descendant of Yaou was not to be deceived by untidyness; in his walks he noticed everything, even the remote bypaths and nooks, and should there be found any remission of duty swift and powerful would be this wrath. Daily each afternoon, clad in long flowing robes of lemon-hued silk, he strode about in the orchard, accompanied by his household retinue, and Sho-San, crouched behind a gnarled chrysanthemum bush, watched them every day, and in her simple heart she was proud that her orchard should be honored by the presence of such mighty ones, and happy that her sweeping seemed to satisfy the Mandarin.

One afternoon, at the time when spring was young, Sho-San was discovered in her hiding-place by no less a person than Shan-Yu, bearer of the August One's reed mat. When she beheld Shan-Yu watching her as she crouched behind the low bush, a chill of fear thrilled her body and she was numb with terror, knowing the wrong she had committed and the punishment she had earned.

But it was otherwise with Shan-Yu. He sought her out not to punish her with lashes but to love her with strong passion.

Many times afterwards he would steal away from the great palace for an hour, and then for as much as two and even three hours, to plead his love to Sho-San, though, she was but a sweeper of paths while he was the Great One's mat bearer. And Sho-San noted Shan-Yu's firm, slim body and handsome face—and she thought much.

"Little Iris Flower," Shan-Yu would cry eagerly, "Come with me to the Shinto father that he may bind us as one. Then you will live in the great palace of Yuan-Lu, and no more will you sweep these many paths, but only rest and play. And you will always remain beautiful, as beautiful as you are now, for you will have rice powder for your face and carmine for your lips. And you will wear flowered silks and have the sacred chrysanthemum in your hair."

Sho-San pondered much upon his words. She loved the chrysanthemum and the flowered silks. She had seen the fine ladies of the palace as they minced daintily about, with their cheeks white as rice with powder and their lips, scarlet with carmine, seeming like little bleeding wounds cut upon their faces.

After each visit she was tempted to say, "Yes, Shan-Yu, we will go to the Shinto father and be made as one." But that was when he had gone. On his return next day, a voice seemed to ask, softly yet distinctly, "Will Sho-San then leave her cherry blossoms and Huan-Shi?" And her heart would speak out, "No!"

But the love of Shan-Yu would not be gainsaid. One day found him buried deep in thought. He had decided, he would drive Sho-San from her stupid orchard that he might have her for himself. Thereafter, for many hours, he whispered with Poo-King, keeper of the Celestial One's precious vases, and many yen passed from his hand until the keeper of vases nodded and was at last agreed.

On the next day, while taking his walk, the Mighty One beheld upon his pathway a thousand pieces of one of his precious vases. And there was no one at hand to speak, with downcast eyes.

The Mandarin's mind moved rapidly; the sweeper had broken the vase which she had stolen and had fled. Yuan-Lu rose like an angry typhoon, and straightway a message bearer was despatched to the hut of Yong-Lo, the pottery moulder.

When Sho-San saw the messenger approaching she thought at once of Shan-Yu, and wondered expectantly. But when she beheld the great seal of the dragon, used only by officials of the highest rank, she trembled so that she could scarcely unfold it. They crashed in her mind with a sound like the unleashed fury of mad seas. Banished from her cherry orchard and from her father's house! For what cause, she knew not, nor must she ever learn. She had no recourse but to obey.

So Sho-San took leave of her father and in the gathering shades of night-time wandered away, knowing not where she went nor giving heed. Her mind was like that of one stricken delirious by fever. All night she wandered, and morning found her upon the crest of the great cliff overshadowing the valley. The sun was just beginning to mount the turquoise heavens. Far down beneath her—it seemed leagues away, so distant did the view appear—was her cherry orchard aglow with fresh sparkle of morning. And, rising above it, Sho-San beheld also the gilded gables of the palace of the Mandarin.

She listened for a momen to the sounds of the awakening valley. Then, from far below, her ears caught the anguished "Hiai—Hiai" of a wailing man. Sho-San recognized the voice of Shan-Yu, crying loudly for her. Borne upon the wind, it sounded strangely like the crooning echo of Huan-Shi.

Her breaking heart thrilled to know that there was one who still wanted her Peeping in the direction of the sound, she stepped out upon the overhanging ledge. Her head reeled dizzily.

"Sayonara," she whispered, "Sayonara." It was all she could say. And then . . . in a moment her mind became clear as she felt her fevered brow being cooled by whirring air . . . . . and then a great light dawned upon her . . . . and Sho-San was happy.

In the season of the cherry blossoms, when the low moaning of the wind falls upon the ears, there is silence in the ways of Seoul. And when the little ones fret and cry their mothers whisper: "Hush! 'Tis time for sleep, for Sho-Shan is crying—crying for her cherry blossoms."

"But a skeleton-key—" Manvers began.

"O you?" said Iff with a withering glance. "The door to Miss Landis' suite opens directly opposite the head of the main companionway, which is in constant use—people going up and down all the time. Can you see anybody, however expert, picking a lock with a bunch of skeleton-keys in that exposed position without being caught red-handed? Not on your vivid imagination, young man."

"There may, however, be duplicate keys to the staterooms," Alison countered.

"My dear lady," said Iff, humbly, "there are; and unless this ship differs radically from others, those duplicate keys are all in the purser's care. Am I right, Mr. Manvers?"

"Yes," said Manvers sullenly.

"And here's another point," resumed Iff. "May I ask you a question or two, Miss Landis?" Alison nodded curtly. "You kept the handbag locked, I presume?"

"Certainly."

"And when you found it had been tampered with, did you unlock it?"

"There wasn't any need," said Alison. "You can see for yourself the opening in the side is so large—"

"Then you didn't unlock it?"

"No."

"That only makes it the more mysterious. Because, you see, it's unlocked now.".

There was a concerted movement of astonishment.

"How do you make that out, sir?" demanded the captain.

"You can see for yourself (to borrow Miss Landis' phrase) if you'll only use your eyes, as I have. The side clasps are in place, all right, but the side on the lock itself is pushed a trifle to the left; which it couldn't be if the bag were locked."

There was a hint of derision in the little man's voice; and his sarcastic smile was flickering round his thin lips as he put out one hand, drew the bag to him, lifted the casps, and pushing back the lockslide, opened it wide.

"The thot plickens," he observed gravely. "For my part I am unable to imagine any bold and enterprising crook taking the trouble to cut open this bag when the most casual examination would have shown him that it wasn't locked."

"He might 've done it as a blind. . . ." Manvers suggested.

"Officer!" piped Iff in a plaintive voice —"he's in again."

The purser, colouring to the temples, took a step toward the little man, his hands twitching, but at a gesture from the captain paused, controlled himself and fell back.

For a few moments there was quiet in the cabin, while those present digested Iff's conclusions and acknowledged their logic irrefragable. Staff caught Alison staring at the man as if fascinated, with a curious, intense look in her eyes the significance of which he could not fathom.

Then the pause was brought to an end by the captain. He shifted his position abruptly, so that he towered over Iff, scowling down upon him.

"That will do," he said ominously. "I'm tired of this; say what you will, you haven't hoodwinked me, and you shan't."

"My dear sir!" protested Iff in amazement. "Hoodwink you? Why, I'm merely trying to make you see—"

"You've succeeded in making me see one thing clearly: that you know more about this robbery than you've any right to know."

"Oh, you-all make me tired," complained Iff. "Now you have just heard Miss Landis declare that this collar of pearls vanished, say, five-thirty and five-forty-five. Well, I can prove by the testimony of three other passengers, and I don't know how many more, to say nothing of your smoke-room stewards, that I was playing bridge from four until after six."

"Ah, yes," put in the purser sweetly, "but you yourself have just demonstrated conclusively that the robbery couldn't have taken place at the hour mentioned."

Iff grinned appreciatively. "You're improving," he said. "I guess that doesn't get you even with me for the rest of your life—what?"

"Moreover," Manvers went on doggedly, "Ismay always could prove a copper-riveted alibi."

"That's one of the best little things he does," admitted Iff cheerfully.

"You don't deny you're Ismay?" This from the captain, aggressive and domineering.

"I don't have to, dear sir; I just ain't—that's the answer."

"You've been recognised," insisted the captain. "You were on this ship the time of the Burden Hamman robbery. Mr. Manvers knows you by sight; I, too, recognise you."

Annual Re-union of Belleville Boys and Girls in Vancouver

THOSE PRESENT

Many Compliments Passed on the Famous old Belleville Recipes

Many old friendships were renewed after a period of many years separation, during the course of the second annual picnic of "Old Boys and Girls", of Belleville, Ont., and the Bay of Quinte District, held Wednesday, July 19th, at Stanley Park, Vancouver, B. C.

Nearly 250 people attended, with adults and children about equally divided. The races run under the shade of the big cedars, proved a great attraction for both contestants and on-lookers and resulted in some excellent contests. Mr. A. B. Weeks photographed the whole group on the sloping lawn near the Pavilion. A happy spirit pervaded the party afterwards when seated around the picnic tables where ample justice was done to the home cooked food and many a compliment passed about the famous old "Belleville recipes". The children were well supplied with free ice cream and balloons. Sufficient money was collected to defray all expenses and provide the nucleus of a fund for next year's outing.

The committee in charge of arrangements included: Miss E. F. Sills, Mrs. A. B. Weeks, and Messrs. Robert Hay, W. E. Dobbs, J. F. Elliott, Howard Butterfield, S. Wright, A. B. Weeks, Arthur Lewis, Col. H. D. Hulme, D. S. Wallbridge and Charles Dickens.

PETERBORO WINS FROM MARMORA

One-Sided Lacrosse Match at Peterboro on Wednesday

The Peterboro Lacrosse team defeated the Marmora boys 13 to 1 in a rather ragged game at Riverside Park Wednesday evening. The local boys showed a decided superiority from the start and were able to score virtually at will. In addition to the scoring done by the members of the Peterboro team, Brown who was in goal for Marmora put two into his own net and so helped to increase the already big lead of the local boys.

Peterboro was on the offensive from the start and carried the ball into Marmora territory for three goals in the first period. They followed this up with five more in the second period, three in the third and two in the last. Marmora's lone tally was scored in the second frame.

The players were: Marmora—Brown, Bleecker, Cross, O'Neill, P. Clement, Reid, Clairmont, McWilliams, S. Clement. Subs—Neal and Wells.

Peterboro—J. LeBarr, Johnson, Wolfe, Sims, Miller, Porteous, Ranger, O'Toole and Killeran.

COBOURG COMES FROM BEHIND.

Cobourg, July 27 —Cobourg spotted the champion Peterboro team three in the first inning of the Central League game at Horse Show Park this afternoon and then won the fixture by 11 to 3. Manager Solomon of the Petes used his second string slab artist, McCarney, saving Heckman for Belleville on Saturday The liftlock city team got three runs off Punch Derry in the first inning on a couple of hits, assisted by an error, but after the first the Cobourg right-hander held them safe. Cobourg scored in every inning except the second and eighth for a total of 11 runs. Score by innings:

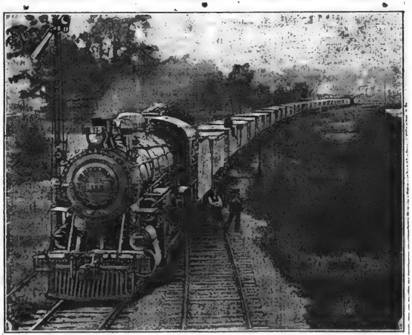
ROTARY PICNIC AT COBOURG

Good Program of Sports and Races Was Run Off

Cobourg, July 28.—The first annual picnic of the Rotary Club of this district was held at Cobourg, Tuesday, when nearly 400 Rotarians, Rotary-Anns and their children spent a most pleasant day. Rotarians were present from Toronto, Oshawa, Trenton, Peterboro, Port Hope, Belleville and Cobourg. The day's sports opened with a soft baseball tournament, in which Cobourg defeated Toronto, Oshawa defeated Port Hope, and Belleville defeated Trenton. In the next round Peterboro defeated Oshawa 7 to 0 and Cobourg defeated Belleville 6 to 5. In the finals Peterboro defeated Cobourg 6 to 2, and won a handsome shield presented by Toronto Rotary Club. The prize for attendance, presented by Hope Rotary Club was won by Trenton, which had an attented to the number of 62 per cent. A good program of races was run off and a most enjoyable time was had by all. From 5 to 6 tea was served, each club having a table, at which everybody appeared to have a delightful sufficiency. A good program of community songs, led by Sandy Burrows, of Belleville, solos by Mrs. Sommerville, of Toronto, and solos by individual members of the various clubs helped to make a most enjoyable hour. All the outside speakers were very enthusiastic over the arrangements made by Cobourg Rotary Club, and it is hoped to make the event an annual one.

BUILDING UP CANADA'S EXPORT TRADE



IN Canada's gradual return to industrial activity and resultant prosperity, the automobile factories of the country are taking a by no means unimportant part. Their shipments to foreign countries, and particularly to other parts of the British Empire are an increasing factor in trade development. The above photograph shows a train of 25 cars of Studebaker automobiles which recently left the Studebaker factory at Walkerville, Ont., where the automobiles were built, on a long journey over the C.P.R. to London, England. This was only part of the shipment, fifteen other carloads having gone forward very shortly afterwards.

Cars shipped overseas require far different treatment than those shipped by rail. In the first place, an export car is enclosed in a huge wooden case, sturdily bound and bolted together so that it has ample strength to withstand the rough handling it must contend with in being hoisted into the hold of a ship, then rehoisted out upon the wharf and perhaps shipped overland if its destination happens to be an inland town.

In order to crate the car, the wheels are removed, top and windshield taken off, and every device employed toward making the packing as compact as possible. Compactness is desired for two reasons. First, to prevent play in the case; and second, to minimize the ocean freight charges, for steamship companies differ from the railroads in that they fix their rates on the basis of cubic feet, instead of so much per pound of weight. Many precautions in export boxing are exercised in order to regulate the contact of salt air with the finish of the car. The surfaces of all metal parts are protected by a coating of grease. The lining of the case with tar paper lends further protection.

HEALTH IN OLD AGE

When one grows old the digestive organs lack vitality, the blood is thinned, appetite fails and the general health may suffer. CONCERT AT OLD FOLKS' HOME.

Last evening a number of people from the Kingston Road Church gave a concert to the inmates of the Home for the Aged. The program of singing and recitations was much enjoyed and refreshments were served during the evening.

WANTS UNION OF OLD PARTIES

Ottawa, July 28.—La Presse, which has a large circulation in the French-speaking region of Canada, publishes on the front page a prominently displayed editorial appeal entitled, "Let Us Face the Music."

It lectures the two historic parties for having, by their political opportunism, by considering the needs of Western Canada from a political instead of an economic viewpoint, been responsible for the creation and rise of the Farmers' party. It is then, in the mind of La Presse, an easy step in political reasoning to assume that the two old parties would unite against what it describes as a "manifest menace to the future of Canada." A Liberal-Conservative alliance is the hope of La Presse for checking or destroying Progressivism and for heading off the slow but steady movement of the Liberals and the Progressives toward a common goal.

La Presse associates selfishness and a "sectional spirit" with the Farmers' movement, "the pretensions of which are a manifest menace to the future of Canada," and its concluding paragraph is as follows:

"The worst error, and the most dangerous, surely, would be to persist in seeking by electoral strategy some alliance with the Progressives. The time has come to face the music. The politicians of the older Provinces have too long wasted their breath by trying to play in the Western orchestra."

During the past few weeks it has occasionally been whispered that flirtations between the Conservatives and certain Liberals were in progress, but no one in the Capital took these intimations seriously. What is more important, there is no disposition now to regard this latest move of an influential Montreal paper as "a manifest menace" to the healthy movement of forward-looking political opinion. Moreover, it is believed here that such propaganda may, after all, serve a good purpose in further solidifying Liberalism and Progressivism against advances from the opposite camp, and at the same time notifying Conservatism that it is welcome to any members of the other parties it can attract to it because of their holding really reactionary views.

CYCLIST IS DRAGGED BY AUTO ALONG ROAD

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., July 27.—Richard Crawford, Wellington street east, Scarboro' House, stenographer for R. M. Olsendam, Secretary of Industrial Relations for the Spanish River Pulp & Paper Co., lies in the General Hospital with two ribs on his left side broken, a sprained back and bruises to his legs, arms and head, as a result of his collision at the intersection of Queen and Gore streets, while riding a bicycle about 5.25 o'clock, with an auto driven by Mrs. Duncan Campbell, Albert and Andrews streets.

By actual measurement Mr. Crawford was dragged 52 feet by the car before it finally came to a halt.

BRITISH SHIPS FEAR NO BOMBS FROM AIR

London, July 28.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Lieut.-Col. Charles Amery, Parliamentary Secretary for the Admiralty, said that as far as the Admiralty knew, there was no airplane in any navy capable of sinking a British ship by bomb or torpedo.

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glass-wearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, nervousness, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON - WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

CALLED BY DEATH

MR. WILLIAM PECK.

Mr. William Peck died last evening, July 27, at his home on the first concession of Ameliasburg, Prince Edward County, in his 91st year. He was born in Prince Edward County and had been a farmer there nearly all his life, except for a time spent as telegraph operator at Trenton and Napanee. In religion he was Methodist, and was a member of Albury Church. He leaves his wife, who before her marriage was Sarah A. Dempsey, and five daughters: Mrs. Harry Anderson, Rednersville; Mrs. Ernest Redner, Rednersville; Mrs. (Rev.) Geo. Rowland, Long Branch, Toronto; Mrs. Earl Bonter, Albury, and Miss Harriet C. Peck, at home.

PUTS 16-FOOT WALL AROUND BIG ESTATE

Chicago, July 28.—Mrs. Edith Rockefeller McCormick, daughter of John D. Rockefeller, and divorced wife of Harold F. McCormick, does not propose to be stared at by a lot of mere bungalow dwellers in Lake Forest. An enterprising real estate agent has plotted off a subdivision adjoining Mrs. McCormick's estate, and bungalows are going up on all sides of her. The result was that Mrs. McCormick summoned her architects and instructed them to erect a 16-foot wall around the entire estate. Contractors are preparing bids on the work. Not only that, but Mrs. McCormick has purchased twenty additional acres adjoining her grounds to prevent further encroachment by bungalow dwellers.

RARE PICKWICKS IN TORONTO

Toronto, July 28.—Of great interest to collectors of rare volumes, and to admirers of Dickens in particular, is a book in the possession of G. W. Winckler, 421 Jarvis street. It is a copy of the first edition of the Pickwick Papers published in collected form, and bears the date of 1868. It is believed to be the only one of its kind in Canada. The binding is of excellent quality and workmanship, and the volume is in a remarkably good state of preservation. It is illustrated by more than forty wood-cuts by R. Seymour and Hablot Knight Browne, two clever artists who drew for Punch, the famous London comic paper.

Mr. Winckler secured the book in Muller, India, about the year 1866, when he was engaged in railway construction work. He was sent to relieve a fellow-engineer who was seriously ill, and who, leaving the country, presented Mr. Winckler with the book, along with many other volumes. Some time afterward it was nearly destroyed by white ants a formidable Indian pest. As it happened, the book was packed at the top of a box containing other books, and the ants, starting from the bottom of the box and working upward, damaged it only very slightly. A few holes may be seen in the cover.

Another unique book in Mr. Winckler's library is the "Initial History of the New Testament," by Richard Simon, a Roman Catholic priest, who was the first Higher Critic. The treatise, which was published in 1689, is printed in the old-fashioned type. Three hundreds copies of the volume were subsequently destroyed by the command of the Vatican, and the author subjected to such relentless persecution that, it is said, he died as a result.

LIFE IN RUSSIA A "LIFE OF BEASTS"

Pathetic Letters Are Received From Suffering People in Moscow

London, July 28.—Pathetic letters are received here every day from prominent Russians in Moscow and other large Soviet centres depicting the plight of the population under the present regime. Writing to one of the London newspapers Professor Christevitch, an eminent physician, says that everyone is anxious to come to Europe or America to see how human beings live.

"We are living a life of beasts," says the latter, "and we think only of wood and food. We are cut off from all civilized life and sympathetic people. You cannot, perhaps, understand how heavy life is without intellectual impressions, without books and newspapers and friendly conversations.

"Our hearts are so hardened by sufferings and losses that deaths of friends and relations make no more impression upon us than trivial events. Nevertheless we continue to hope to be human beings again! In the old Czarist days my wife and I longed for political freedom. To-day my wife's ideal is to have a pair of stockings at 2,000,000 rubles a pair.

"We are all alive. That is the principal thing these days. We sold all our things in the hope to buy new ones when we moved from Kazan to Petrograd, but we ate all our money. We are very rich now in Russia, but only in numerals. You see that the stamp upon this letter cost 100,000 rubles. A loaf of bread costs three times that.

"We live, and we are satisfied that we live ,and that the winter has passed. I fear to give you all the news for it is such a long list of dead from maladies and ruin."

BETTY COMPSON SHOWS REMARKABLE CHARM AND SKILL IN "THE GREEN TEMPTATION"

A good detective story; a colorful picture of Apache life in their underground haunts in Paris; a charming star in several beautiful dances; the regeneration of a woman who by force of circumstances, first appears in the story as a thief, and a group of highly interesting characterizations portrayed by a cast of favorites, including Mahlon Hamilton, Theodore Kosloff, Neely Edwards, Edward Burns, Mary Thurman, and others, are the features which have established "The Green Temptation," Betty Compson's new Paramount vehicle ace high with patrons of Griffin's last night.

The picture was directed by William D. Taylor. It was adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn from Constance Lindsay Skinner's story in Ainslee's magazine. It contains a number of successful dramatic elements-tragedy, beauty, suspense, and superb characterization. Betty Compson is beautiful, appealing, a remarkable dancer and an actress who gets the utmost out of every dramatic situation. She has a difficult role and she portrays is with consummate artistry.

"The Circus Clowns" a very clever and original comedy with Baby Peggy and Brownie the trained dog in the stellar role, an interesting Travelogue, and George Walsh in the gripping chapter play "With Stanley in Africa" preceded the exhibition of the feature offerings.

NEARLY CRAZY WITH PAINS IN BACK

Read How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Mrs. Beecroft

Hamilton, Ontario.—"I have suffered for three years from a female trouble and consequent weakness, pain and irregularity which kept me in bed four or five days each month. I nearly went crazy with pains in my back, and for about a week at a time I could not do my work. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the 'Hamilton Spectator' and I took it. Now I have no pain and am quite regular unless I overwork or stay on my feet from early morning until late at night. I keep house and do all my own work without any trouble. I have recommended the Vegetable Compound to several friends."—Mrs. Emily Beecroft, 16 Douglas St., Hamilton, Ontario.

For nearly fifty years women have been telling how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored their health when suffering with female ills. This accounts for the enormous demand for it from coast to coast.

If you are troubled with any ailment peculiar to women why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It has helped others, let it help you.

FARM LABOR HARD TO GET

Deaf Mute Goes to Farm—Higher Wages Offered

Toronto, July 28.—A young man who is deaf and dumb and has had some farm experience was hired yesterday at the offices of the Government Employment Service by a farmer as a farm laborer. The farmer had taken the advice of the Superintendent of the Service, who had been unable to fill his written application for a laborer, to come to the Bureau and pick his man from the workers who pass through the office daily.

The willingness of the farmer to take the young man is indicative of the extreme shortage of farm labor. Before the young man was hired, two farmers, who had left their farms to secure a farm hand in the city, had bid with one another for the services of another individual who went away with one of the farmers on a contract for three months at $50. a month.

Acting Superintendent Hamilton said yesterday he was unable to express an opinion regarding the amount of labor which Toronto could supply to the west this year to harvest the crops. Usually many hundreds of workers leave the city for Western harvest fields each year.

"We are receiving letters daily from different parts of the Province and occasional communications from the States of Michigan and New York inquiring for the dates of and information concerning the annual excursions to the West. It is hard to say how many will take the excursion. The farmers in the west are offering $3.50 a day, while those in Ontario are willing to pay as high as $50 a month. The excursionist usually loses time through wet weather and must pay his fare, which makes the offer of the Ontario farmer just as good. On the other hand, men go West who would never think of going to the local harvest fields."

CANADIAN HENLEY OPENED TO-DAY

Dons and Argonauts Enter the Final—Dons Won By 20 Lengths

(Canadian Press Despatch.)

St. Catharines, July 28.—The opening of Canadian Henley Regatta here today was marked by fine weather with a slight breeze blowing from the northeast causing only a slight ripple on the course. In the first heat of the junior fours Brockville was first, with the Dons second and Argonaut third. Brockville rowed a great race and crossed line three lengths ahead of the Dons. Hamilton was out-classed and did not finish.

St. Catharines—(Later)—The Junior Fours, second heat, Don, first and Argonaut second. Ottawa withdrew entry in the second heat so that the Dons and Argonauts enter the final. The Dons won by about twenty lengths.

St. Catharines—It was decided at a meeting of the C.A.A.O. late last night to row preliminary heats of the senior singles this evening. This means that Bob Dibble, Toronto, and Hilton Belyea, St. John, will meet to-night as they have been drawn together. Brockville is drawn in the first heat of junior fours with Argonaut, Don and Hamilton. In 130 pound Maiden Brockville is drawn with Don, Ottawa, Argonaut, Westside.

JUMPED FROM WINDOW

New York, July 20.—Dr. Archer B. Johns, a chiropractor, flung himself from a ten-storey window at number 135 Madison avenue, and was instantly crushed to death in 34th street, ten storeys below.

His body crashed on the sidewalk four feet behind two women who were walking toward the avenue. They turned at the sound and became almost hysterical.

The suicide, occuring at a time when shoppers and the luncheon hour crowd thronged the neighborhood, caused a jam of people.

"He Died For Freedom and Honour"

Handsome Medallion Received from the King by widow of a Belleville Soldier.

Mrs. Susannah Woods, 59 South John street, has received from the King a beautiful medallion in recognition of the heroic service and sacrifice of her husband, the late Private William Woods, who was killed in action in France in 1918, while serving with the 235th Battalion. The late Mr. Woods was a native of Norwich, England, and before enlisting he was engaged at the Grand Trunk shops in Belleville.

The medallion, which is of fine bronze, has in relief the figure of Brittania holding a wreath over the inscription of the name "William Woods," while in the foreground is the figure of a lion. At the base is a smaller lion with its teeth buried in the neck of the Prussion eagle. Around the medallion is the inscription, "HE DIED FOR FREEDOM AND HONOUR."

A letter from Buckingham Palace accompanied the medallion and reads as follows:

"I join with my grateful people in sending you this memorial of a brave life given for others in the Great War.

GEORGE R.I.

WALKS INTO POLE FRACTURING HIS SKULL

New York, July 28.—Felix Thorley, 73 years old, of 514 Jamaica avenue, Long Island City, inadvertently walked into an iron trolley pole at the curb in Washington avenue, near Second avenue, Long Island City, yesterday afternoon and fractured his skull. He was taken to St. John's Hospital unconscious.

PERISHES IN BLAZING BARN

Farmer Sets Fire to His Barn After Quarrel With His Wife

Kitchener, July 28.—After a quarrel with his wife, Joseph Scheurman, a farmer of Lexington, near here, set fire to his house and barn, and walking into the blazing implement shed attached to the barn, perished in the flames. His watch and a few charred bones were all that was found to identify him by High Constable Hiber and provincial officers investigating the fire this morning. Mrs. Scheurman was not on the premises at the time of the fire, which is believed to have been started about 11 o'clock last night, as Scheurman's watch found in the ruins of the implement shed this morning had stopped at 11.10 o'clock.

Cattle, horses and implements to the value of over $3,000 were destroyed in the flames. Although he set fire to the house, the structure did not burn, owing to the fact that his incendiary attempt consisted of lighting the feathers of pillows which burned slowly and died out.

Scheurman quarreled with his wife yesterday afternoon and threatened bodily harm. She took refuge with neighbors who telephoned for the high constable and the provincial police. They reached the farm last evening, but no trace of Scheurman could be found. He was hidden in a nearby bush and came out after the police left, consummating his terrible deed. Coroner J. F. Hunsberger has ordered an inquest, which will be held at Bridgeport Monday evening. Scheurman was sixty years of age.

LARGE NUMBER ATTEND MARKET

Prices Are Stationary in Nearly All Produce Offered or Sale

One of the largest markets held here for some time was that of today. Buyers and sellers were present in exceptionally large numbers and much produce was offered for sale. There were not many changes to note in prices. Butter has taken a considerable advance in price. The display made of garden produce was excellent, as was also the display of fruit. Fresh dairy butter sold at 48 to 50 cents per pound. In a few cases basket lots were procured at a slightly lower figure. Fresh eggs sold at 28 c and 30c per dozen and the offerings were large.

Dressed chickens in price remain stationary, selling at $1.50 to $2.50 per pair. Spring chickens sold at $1.00 to $1.50 a pair.

Cabbage, onions, beans, peas, cucumbers were in abundance and found ready purchasers at reasonable prices. New potatoes sold at 40c per peck.

Red raspberries, blue raspberries, were sold at 18c and 15c a box, respectively. Huckleberries sold at 25c a quart, and cherries at 10c a box and 90 cents by the basket lots.

TOURIST TRADE IS OUTLINED

Advertising of Ontario's National Resources Advocated by Speakers

After luncheon yesterday at the Chamber of Commerce building which was presided over by Mr. H. F. Ketcheson, President the Hotel Investigators Commission continued in session, it being in the nature of a round table discussion.

Col. Price, M.P.P., in speaking of the Commission said that the Legislature were agreed upon this matter of having this commission appointed in referring to the tourists coming through Canada Col. Price stated if any company or organization owned the Province of Ontario with its vast forests, lakes and mining interest, how quickly it would advertise the same. We know what we got. Switzerland is a country that capitalizes its territory. The State of Maine gets 40 or 50 millions of dollars which is expended in that state by tourists. We should try and tap the motor traffic and let us capitalize what nature has given us. We have not been as aggressive as we should have been in this matter. We have good roads and more are coming. The commission is in earnest in trying to evolve something that will be of benefit to the Province of Ontario. He was in favor of advertising what we have. The Commission is desirous of getting views that will assist them in making their report which will be presented to the Legislature.

Good Hotels Here

Mr. J. Elliott was much interested in the proposition outlined by Col. Price. In Belleville we have the Hotel Quinte which cannot be surpassed in Canada and we have other good hotels. There is nothing in Canada better than in Ontario in regard to scenery and natural resources. Mr. Elliott referred to photographs which are displayed of Belleville at the Government office in London, England the immigration office. He would ask the Commission not to forget the dairy interest in the Bay of Quinte district. We will uphold the hands of our representative in the Legislature Mr. W. H. Ireland in this matter.

BURNING FEATHERS COSTS THREE HOUSES

St. Catharines, July 29.—Three houses of good size were destroyed by fire in the foreign section above Thorold near the Ontario Paper Mills. The loss will exceed $7,000, well covered by insurance.

Thorold fire brigade fought the flames and prevented them from sweeping the section.

The fire was caused by the burning of the feathers off a a chicken, according to a foreign custom, as explained by the people interested.

OUTLOOK WORSE IN GERMANY

Financial Situation in Other Parts of Western Europe Also Bad

Berlin, July 29.—I have searched in vain for hopeful features in the German financial situation.

Financial disintegration which is proceeding here is not, unfortunately, confined to Germany. It has progressed still further in Austria, and is progressing inevitably into Hungary. Bulgaria is in its grip. Italy, despite well directed, heroic efforts is facing a most serious situation.

The thing that stands out with increasing plainness is that the true cause of trouble is not direct losses entailed by the war, but the nature of the peace. Mistakes made in Paris are proving almost as disastrous to the victors as to the vanquished. Not until serious attempts are made to rectify these mistakes will real construction begin.

Up to the present moment, there has been no progress made towards reconstruction. Rather there has been distinct retrogression.

The European situation at no time since the armistice has been as grave as at the present moment. The inevitableness of Germany's financial collapse unless radical changes in indemnity demands are made is now obvious to anyone.

Apparently the unsolvable difficulty lies in the inability of France to discuss reasonable readjustment of indemnities. France, a victim of the war, is also a victim of illusion.

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS MUCH IMPROVED

The unemployed situation in this district shows a marked improvement during the last thirty-day period, states Mr. Green, of the Government Employment Bureau. This office has received a steady demand for unskilled labour for work on the numerous buildings now under construction, as well as for contractors of the Government Highways.

The demand for experienced Farm Help still continues, with very few of the right class of workers offering themselves.

The class of help most difficult to obtain is the Female Domestic for private homes, hotels, etc., but of course, we have this same difficulty in all our offices throughout Ontario.

RAILWAYMEN'S CHARGE UNTRUE

Companies Claim They Are Not Unlawfully Forcing Anything on Employes

THE ENGINE REPAIRS

No More Than Usual Being Fixed in Canada, Says Grand Trunk

Montreal, July 28.—The railways have not and are not unlawfully forcing anything on their employes either in the way of reduced wages or changed conditions of work, nor are the railways as alleged by some of the union leaders trying to hide behind technicalities and evade the law in an effort to delay the reference of the present controversy to a board of conciliation, according to a statement issued by the Railway Association of Canada in connection with negotiations with the locomotive and car department employes.

"The objections raised by railways toward the men's application for a board of Conciliation were made not with a view to hampering or delaying final settlement, but solely with the view to protecting their side of the dispute against the establishment of dangerous and irregular precedents," explained General Secretary C. P. Riddell, who went on to state:

Perversions of Truth.

"A great deal has been said by certain of those claiming to represent employes in the locomotive and car departments of Canadian railways to the effect that the railways recently forced the acceptance of radical changes in working conditions under the threat that unless accepted they would be arbitrarily put into effect without respect for lawful procedure, and that the railways are now attempting to force the acceptance of reductions in rates of pay regardless of the requirements of the law. Both of these statements are perversions of the truth, and when made by men to whom thousands of railway employes in Canada look for guidance in matters affecting wages and working conditions must tend to create a state of mind that leads to strikes and all the atendant evils which these same leaders always claim they so greatly deplore.

Grand Trunk Denial.

A denial was made at Grand Trunk headquarters here to-day of statements made by Mr. J. Tallon, president of Division No. 4, Railway Employes' Department, American Federation of Labor, to the effect that the Grand Trunk Railway was "practically forcing the men to strike by their determination to have more and more United States engines and cars repaired in Canadian shops."

"This declaration of Mr. Tallon's is misleading and altogether at variance with the facts," said the official statement. "No engine or cars are being repaired in Canada which, under ordinary conditions, would be repaired in the United States."

BAND CONCERT

In order to clear the way for the Wednesday attractions the Band Concert will be given on Tuesday evening next at Victoria Park.

WHAT ABOUT MOIRA RIVER POWER?

W. C. Mikel, K.C., Urges the Development of Powers on Moira River—Watershed Higher Than Niagara

To The Editor:—

Dear Sir,—In 1918 the proposal was made to take advantage of the report of the Hydro engineer to develop the storage possibilities of the Moira River so that Belleville might have a generous flow of water down the river day and night all the year round.

Four reasons were advanced:

1st—Health.

2nd—Power.

3rd—Minimize the damage from annual floods.

4th—Appearances.

Those who assumed to know, attacked the power proposal for the alleged reason that we already had more power available from the Trent system of the Hydro than could be used. Nobody seemed to think that the health, flood damage and appearance proposals were worth considering, so the matter dropped.

The Globe of the 26th inst. reports the Chairman of the Hydro Electric Commission of Ontario as saying: "In a year or two the whole of the power available from the Trent will be gone." "We think the Municipalities ought to know just where they are at in connection with power matters." "This shortage has been apparent for some years."

We are asleep on this question in Belleville and we only wake up when our industries get a swat.

I again urge the development of the storage possibilities of the Moira for the four reasons given above. The storage basins of the source of the Moira are located at an altitude above Belleville over three times higher than Niagara Falls. The Moira will not produce the power that the Niagara or the Trent produces but it would be better to have the water of the Moira, whatever its extent, dropping on power wheels from this elevation above Belleville instead of flooding merchants' cellars and people's homes in the city. It should be borne in mind that the city itself owns a power site on the Moira which is unutilized. This would not involve expense to the taxpayer, as the revenue would take care of the expenditure.

W. C. MIKEL.

THE REASON WHY ANAEMIA PREVAILS

The Strenuous Conditions of Life Today Responsible.

Mothers who remark that girls today are more prone to anaemia than the girls of a generation ago, should look back at the surroundings in which they and their companions lived. They would easily see the reason in life's altered circumstances today.

Now the school girl's life is more strenuous; her more numerous studies are a severe tax upon the strength. Also, girls enter business soon after leaving school—at an age when they most need rest and outdoor life. Their womanly development is hampered by the stress of working hours, hurried and often scanty meals. Girls are more liable to bloodlessness today, but there is this consolation that this condition is now more easily remedied than in the years past. Such medicines as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have helped thousands of weak, anaemic girls and women, simply because they contain the elements necessary to enrich the blood which means good health and vitality.

This is proved by the statement of Miss Eldora Acker, Lake Pleasant, N.S., who says:—"I shall be glad if some other ailing girl will profit by my experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was very much run down; my face was pale and there was dark circles around my eyes. My appetite was bad, and I had no ambition to do anything or go about. I had once before been helped by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to try them again. It proved a wise decision, for in less than two months time I felt in every way better; had a splendid appetite, the tired feeling disappeared, and I can work with enjoyment. Naturally I think there is no better medicine for young girls than Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

You can procure Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or they will be sent to you by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

STAMPS WORTH $30,000

George W. Sulman, ex-M.P.P. has valuable collection and travelled the World to collect them.

The recent auction sale in Paris, in which the wonderful stamp collection formerly owned by the late Phillipe Ferrari was sold under the hammer to the highest bidders, attracted the attention of stamp collectors all over the world, and the fact that the sum of $32,077.50 was paid for a one-cent stamp—one that had been used at that—has brought home to a good many people the important place that stamp collecting has gained in the world. The stamp which brought that magnificent sum is the most famous postage stamp in the world, it being the only one of its kind in existence today, and the value of stamps to a collector is estimated by the difficulty in securing them.

Among those most interested in reading of the Paris auction was George W. Sulman, the popular ex-M.P.P., of Chatham. Mr. Sulman is himself a stamp collector of some note, having in his possession a collection of stamps which have a catalogue value of over $40,000.

Upon the open market, or at a stamp auction it is estimated that the Sulman collection would bring between $25,000 and $30,000. In his collection are 30,000 different varieties of postage stamps, the most of them unused. He has at least one stamp for every stamp issuing country in the world and while he hasn't in his collection a stamp which can compare in value with the Ferarri $30,000 specimen, he has many which are valued up in the hundreds of dollars. The most valuable stamp in his collection is an Argentine stamp, which was purchased by the person who used it for 15 cents. But since that time this stamp has become very scarce in the world, and the one in Mr. Sulman's possession is valued at the magnificent sum of $300. He has many others which closely approach that value, and which are highly admired by those who know the value of a postage stamp collection.

Mr. Sulman became interested in the collecting of stamps 25 years ago through his son George, now deceased. At that time the school boys were interested in stamps and young George, who was one of the brightest boys of his age among his youthful companions, took it up as a hobby and was successful in getting a number of stamps that his father had never seen, and in which he immediately became interested. The father, who all through his life has ever been looking for information and new fields to discover, got his curiosity aroused, and then and there he started the collecting of the postal franks which today make him one of the most noted collectors in Canada.

One of the most remarkable features about the collection is that Mr. Sulman himself has purchased a large number of them in the countries where they have been issued. This adds to the sentimental value of the collection which makes them still more valuable to him. It is well known that Mr. Sulman is one of the most extensive travellers in Canada. He has been all over the world in the various trips which Mrs. Sulman and he have taken at various times in their lives, and as he was an enthusiastic stamp collector before he started to travel extensively, he took occasion upon his various trips to foreign lands to add to his store of stamps, never failing to pick up the valuable ones which would be a credit to a select collection.

Mr. Sulman enjoys the distinction of being one of the few men in Canada, or probably in any other country, who has taken a foreign trip covering 8,000 miles. For a year and a half he was away from his native city, and during that time he and Mrs. Sulman visited 47 different countries, establishing a record for a trip around the world which has very seldom if at any time been equalled by any other globe trotter. He has during his lifetime visited every country on the face of the globe, with the exception of Norway and Sweden, and even he himself is unable to say how he happened to overlook these two countries. During his last trip from which he has only recently returned, and which was the longest he has ever taken, it is interesting to note that he added no less than 15,000 different varieties of stamps, which by the way are among the most valuable he now possesses, so that while his trips were taken chiefly for health and through a life-longing to extend his knowledge of places and people, he has through his hobby been able to make it profitable in a monetary way as well.

A representative of The Free Press had the privilege of viewing the collection and also had the pleasure of hearing an account of Mr. Sulman's experiences in securing them, which was even a greater privileeg. It is not surprising to learn that such a valuable collection is not often placed on exhibition, but is usually locked in the vault of a local bank for safe keeping.

Mr. Sulman's favorite stamp country is Canada and Newfoundland and he has in his possession all of the stamps issued in these countries since 1870, in unused blocks, usually four of a kind. If the favorite national indoor game were played stamps Mr. Sulman would still find his stamp collection a real winner.

But it is at the same time a general collection, containing stamps of all countries. He has an ambition to keep nothing but unused stamps, and he is now perfecting his collection in this regard by exchanging when possible the stamps which have been collected for the unused variety.

Troubles of the Collector

Some of his experiences abroad in securing the additions to this remarkable collection are very amusing and go to show some of the difficulties with which a stamp collector is confronted in carrying on his expensive, but very interesting hobby

In Samoa Mr. Sulman was particularly anxious to secure a special issue of stamps of that country, but when he presented himself to the postmaster he was told that the issue had been sold out. Evidently the postal authorities were wise to the operations of stamp collectors and themselves knew the value of this particular issue in a foreign country. Mr. Sulman, however, always has been a man of great resource and knew that when all other arguments failed, very often the smiles of a pretty girl would obtain the object desired. He went back to the ship and selecting the best looking girl on board suggested that she should try to do what he had failed to do, namely, to induce the postmaster to part with samples of the rare stamp issue. The smiles won, and the young lady brought the stamps back to the delighted Mr. Sulman, who gallantly adds that his Samoan stamps have therefore a peculiar and intrinsic value all of their own.

In Tonga Island he didn't experience the same difficulty. There the natives usually have the stamps all done up in packages ready for sale to the collectors. Some of these stamps are particularly beautiful and the reason why the dealers have them always on hand in convenient shape for purchase is that the tourists' boats stop for such a short time on the island.

At Teneriffe, on the Canary Islands, he visited a post office and found that the particular sheet which was being offered by the postmaster contained stamps which were badly centred and unsuitable for a choice collection. He tried to induce the official to give him some stamps from another sheet but the latter stubbornly refused. Mr. Sulman was forced to stand outside the post office and wait until a sufficient number of people had entered to buy stamps so that the badly centred sheet was sold out and the unobliging postmaster was compelled to start selling from a new sheet.

Mr. Sulman was lucky enough to be in Siam when the king of that country was issuing a special issue of stamps to the Boy Scouts. The boys were selling the stamps upon which they received a commission for their various troops. These stamps were all surcharged with a tiger head. Mr Sulman seized the opportunity to procure several sets of these stamps which now comprise a part of the 19 volumes which go to make up his collection. There is no doubt that in future years these stamps will be worth a great deal of money as the issue was not a large one.

He was also on Samoas Island at the time when the celebration was held to mark the Greek occupation the country having been taken from the Turks after the war. A special set of stamps was issued for that occasion, and they were all initialled by the postmaster, and Mr. Sulman had the privilege of seeing his own stamps personally initialled.

It is strange thing, Mr. Sulman states, that in many countries it is impossible to secure at the post offices all of the sets of stamps issued by that country. For instance in Costa Rica he asked for the highest value of stamp, but was told that it was not in stock. Moreover the postmaster with whom he was conversing had not seen the particular stamp which was asked for. Mr Sulman met the president of the country and asked if he could secure one of the desired stamps, and the president also was forced to confess that he had never seen one either. Mr. Sulman finally got one of these stamps from a dealer in New York after his return home.

(To be concluded next Saturday.)

MADE FAMOUS BY COLUMBUS

Island of Porte Santo Known to Moderns as Place Where Great Explorer Once Dwelt.

Off the north shore of Madeira lies a misty strip of island which accounts itself famous because Christopher Columbus once lived there. Porto Santo, as the mist-covered isle is called, consists of huts and houses in the form of a town known as the Villa, scattered vineyards and grain fields, a steep range of hills and a shore line now edged with spiky crags, now sinking into a level stretch of sand.

If it had not been for Columbus the island would be altogether dull and commonplace. As it is, the place is often dull, but it lives in history, and sometimes travelers come over from Madeira to see the island where the discoverer once lived and where he is said by some to have received his first clew to the existence of an unknown land in the West.

Porto Santo was discovered by accident early in the fifteenth century by a Portuguese explorer who was driven there during a storm. As the day happened to be All Saints' day, and as he was particularly thankful to have found a safe refuge from the wind, the navigator named the little island Porto Santo. He then returned to Portugal and spoke in such enthusiastic praise of the discovery that a colony was soon formed to take possession of the land of promise. Among the colonists was Bartholomeu Perecstrello, an Italian sea captain serving with the Portuguese government, who was to be governor of the island.

Columbus fell in love with Bartholomeu's daughter in Lisbon. So when she departed for Porto Santo, Columbus followed, and there, in time, he married her.

DR. SHOREY'S MINISTRY WORK

A Former Belleville Methodist Preacher is Superannuated

The Rev. S. J. Shorey, D. D., who has just closed his pastorate in Trinity Methodist Church, Napanee, and has retired from active ministry in the Methodist Church, has had a somewhat unique career, as the following facts will show:

When a student-at-law in Napanee in the office of W. A. Reeve, K. C., then County Crown Attorney of Lennox and Addington, he decided to enter the ministry of the Methodist Church. He supplied at Madoc from February to June in 1873, then entered the ministry in June of that year. His first appointment was as junior minister at Sterling, then a large double circuit of ten appointments.

His first two years were spent there at the request of the circuit. From there he went to Picton as the junior minister, and then for two years to Victoria College, Cobourg. Having thus completed his probation he was ordained at Toronto in 1878. His first charge as Superintendent was Cherry Valley, and then the following places in the order named: Belleville, Holloway Street; Oshawa, Simcoe Street; Toronto, Sherbourne Street; Peterboro, Charlotte Street (now Trinity); Napanee, Trinity; Lindsay, Cambridge Street; Peterboro, George Street; Picton, First; Oshawa, Simcoe Street (second time); Cobourg; Lindsay, Cambridge Street, (second time); Port Hope; Napanee, Trinity (second time), where he retired from the ministry of the Methodist Church, after forty-nine years of service.

During that time he was honored with every office in the gift of his brethren. He was a delegate in every general conference since 1890. He was chairman of the district in which he was stationed for thirty-eight years, and on the Stationing Committee of the Bay of Quinte Conference for thirty-one consecutive years. He was President of the Conference in 1894, a member of the General Mission for twenty years, and of the Court of Appeal for twelve years.

At the Conference, on his superannuation, when he was called upon to speak, he said his brethren would bear him witness that whatever of office or honour had come to him during all these years, had been those that followed, and not those that had been pursued. He held a very high place in the confidence and counsels of both ministry and laity of the Bay of Quinte Conference.

At his closing service in Napanee, both St. Andrew's Presbyterian, and Grace Methodist Churches withdrew their services, and their congregations came to Trinity as a token of the esteem in which he was held by all. His own people presented him with a cheque for $400.00, as he took the train for Picton, where he expects to reside. Prior to this, Mrs. Shorey had been the recipient of a cheque for $100.00 from the Ladies' Aid Society.

Mrs. Shorey, daughter of the late Rev. Daniel McMullen, has been a most worthy companion and helpmate in all these years, and they will be followed by the prayers and good wishes of their numerous friends in the Bay of Quinte Conference.

Montreal, July 28.—John Valicuff, alias Valet, arrested in Thorold, Ont., last Monday under suspicion of being implicated in the $29,000 robbery from the paymaster of the Dominion Textile Company, was brought to local headquarters yesterday. Another man held here since July 15 in connection with the hold-up is now thought to be the man who held up and robbed the paymaster of the Dominion Steel Company of $3,800 on April 18 last at Hamilton.

BORROWINGS IN 1922 FROM BRITAIN

London, July 28.—Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Sir P. GANDHI IS WELL TREATED

Prisoner Spends One Half-Hour Each Day in Spinning

Bombay, July 2.—That Mahatma Gandhi has been receiving every possible consideration from the authorities of the Sabermati jail, where he is confined, is evident from the reports of the many friends who have visited him there. Gandhi spends at least half an hour each day in spinning, and is devoting his remaining energy to literary work. He is allowed to have his own food brought to him. Goat's milk, toast, oranges and raisins constitute his usual diet.

One who visited Gandhi in jail recently describes his life as follows:

"Ever since his arrest, the authorities have been very kind and considerate. They place no restrictions on interviews, but grant as many as it is possible to arrange for. At these interviews, either the superintendent or the jailer is present.

"Gandhi sits in the veranda in front of his cell with a quilt on the floor and with two pillows at his back, in the same style as in his own home. Visitors are taken inside the jail, and Gandhi receives them in his veranda. They discuss all sorts of questions, no restrictions being made as to the subjects for conversation.

"The Mahatma is allowed to receive all his letters, and even to reply to them, with the condition that the letters are countersigned and passed by the superintendent.

"The prisoner's usual food consists of goat's milk, toast, oranges and raisins. These are brought to him three times a day. Several months ago Gandhi made a vow not to take his second meal without spinning for at least half an hour. He has been able to observe this, even while in jail.

"I was really surprised to see the progress he has made in spinning. Last year, when he was in the Punjab, he was a mere novice, hardly turning out yarn of five counts. But now he has improved so much that he not only spins faster but the yarn is of 25 to 30 counts. I do not think there will be any difficulty for the government in providing him the simple food he wants, as it will not cost the authorities any more than they are prepared to spend on an ordinary prisoner.

"One noticeable fact was that at no time did he break any of the jail regulations. If he is treated differently, it is not due to any request on his part, but due rather to the initiative of the authorities themselves, who are very courteous and anxious to oblige.

"He was always cheerful, and looked upon his arrest as a matter for great rejoicing to the country. To all questions as to what would happen in the future, he gave the answer that non-co-operation, if carried on properly, was bound to succeed.

"Gandhi intends to devote much of his time to writing about his past experiences. He may even write an autobiography. His immediate task in this line is the writing of a pamphlet on the movement in South Africa."

BRITAIN ALWAYS PAYS HER DEBTS

Lord Birkenhead's Reference to the Honor and Stability of Finance of His Country

London, July 28.—Sir Auckland Geddes, British Ambassador to the United States, and Lord Birkenhead, Lord High Chancellor, took occasion yesterday at the dinner of the English-speaking Union in farewell to the Ambassador on his return to Washington, to reiterate and underscore previous ministerial assurances of the inviolability of the obligations of Great Britain to her creditors.

The Lord High Chancellor's reference to Anglo-American financial affairs, which he termed "a delicate subject", was the only materialistic note entered upon, which otherwise was a most felicitous exchange of good-will and amity between "the two greatest English-speaking nations."

"When we look back upon our long history, we find no occasion where we ever failed to meet a bond to which we had set our hand," Lord Birkenhead declared. "Honor and the stability of the finance of this country require that we should be ready to meet any proper and reasonable charge which can properly and legally be laid upon us.

"I only touch upon this delicate subject because it is proper I should say plainly for the understanding of the citizens of this country and the United States, that we are not today the unworthy legatees of those who for generations had charge of the security and financial hegemony of the world."

STRUCK AN ICEBERG

Canadian Pioneer Has Hole Below Water Line

North Sydney, N. S., July 28.—The Canadian Government Merchant Marine steamer Canadian Pioneer, which collided with an iceberg, about nine miles east of the Straits of Belle Isle on Monday night, arrived here this evening under her own steam. A hole was opened in the starboard bow below the water line and the forepeak is flooded, but the water is under control of the ship's pumps. The forward bulkheads are intact and no cargo is damaged.

The collision occurred in the dark and fog. The berg was sighted and the ship veered, but a submarine spur ripped her plates about ten feet below the surface. When the fog lifted at daybreak fifteen bergs were seen in the vicinity.

WELSH COAL AT $13 PER TON

Toronto, July 28.—An offer of Welsh anthracite coal that can be laid down in Toronto for approximately $13 a ton was received by Mayor Maguire to-day in a telegram from the Acting Deputy Minister of Mines, which stated:

"Dr. C. Camsell, Deputy Minister of the Federal Department of Mines, at present in the Old Country, has cabled to-day to his office in Ottawa as follows: 'Advertise Welsh anthracite, chestnut size, five-eighths of one inch, available thirty-eight shillings freight Montreal. Apply Pascoe Colliery, proprietor, Swansea.'"

The price quoted means that the cost of the coal and the freight to Montreal totals $11.28, and the freight from Montreal would total approximately $13.

The Mayor has wired asking that the offer be held open for a few days.

TOURIST TRADE IS OUTLINED

pitality members received at the Hotel Quinte. Earl Grey, Duke of Devonshire and Sir Gilbert Parker are continually preaching up Canada and its natural resources. We want to leave the impression on tourists that our hotels are good hotels and friendly. The Col. referred to the lakes in the Northern part of Hastings County which are teeming with fish. Immigration should be encouraged not only from Great Britain but from the country south of us. This is a note we should strike in addition to having good hotels. A warm welcome in a inn does much to attract attention to travellers.

Chambers of Commerce clubs etc. should co-operate in this matter and we will do all we can to assist you.

The personal touch of hotel keepers will do much to increase trade and keep it.

Co-Operation Assurred

Mr. W. H. Ireland, M.P.P., for West Hastings was pleased to be present at this gathering. He will be looking with interest for the report of the Commission and he would favor of the, issuing of pamphlets by the Government. If the hotels throught the province were as good as those in Belleville this tourist trade would not be so complexed. He would do all he could to support the proposition.

Our Water Front

Mr. Sam. Clarke, M.P.P., spoke enlogistically of the late Hon. Corby who did much to advertise Belleville. The Quinte Hotel in Belleville was a hotel that cannot be surpassed. The traveller's home is the hotel. We want the hotel men to copy the Hotel Quinte in its environment and the hospitality the proprietor exercises. Mr. Clarke referred to the fact we had good roads which meant much for the Province. We must spend money in publicity. The water front of the Bay of Quinte and Lake Ontario cannot be surpassed. We want the endorsation of all in this matter and give us all the suggestions you think of. The best undeveloped asset that Ontario has is its natural playgrounds, fishing and hunting grounds.

Col. Ponton—We want boats here on the bay. We do no realize our natural resources. Systematize in this matter should be the watchword.

Mr. Watson, M.P.P., Chairman gave figures showing the number of automobiles which entered Canada in two years from the United States. In 1919 the number was 60,300 and in 1920 the number was 93,500, which meant that some millions were spent by those tourists. What enormous possibilities we have in advertising Canada through this source.

Col. Ponton suggested that the time of allowing foreign autos to remain in Ontario should be extended from 30 to 60 days.

Mr. S. Clarke—The committee will take cognizance of that matter.

Mayor's Appreciation

Mayor Hanna appreciated the Commission who were out to do good work and are doing it. We are getting good roads and every effort should be made to improve our hotels and they should be assisted. He was in favor of a booklet being issued setting forth the advantage of Ontario to tourists. All were pleased at having the Commission visit Belleville.

Will Assist the Committee

Mr. H. F. Ketcheson and members of the Chamber of Commerce were unanimous in assisting the Comission and will back the members up in publishing the playgrounds of Ontario and do not forget Hastings County with its wonderful natural resources. We are Canadians and we want to support what is in the best interest of this Province.

Mr. Watson on behalf of the members of the Commission thanked all for the hearty reception accorded them and the courtesy which had been extended to them.

"BOBBED" HER HAIR THEN TOOK HER LIFE

New York, July 29.—Two weeks ago Miss Ruth Evans, attractive, high-salaried private stenographer for an executive of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, at 195 Broadway, "bobbed" her haid in the prevailing mode.

Almost immediately, according to Mr. and Mrs. John Brown, with whom she lived in Brooklyn, she regretted the act and grieved.

When she failed to appear at table for breakfast or luncheon, Brown tried the door of her room, smelled gas and summoned a policeman. They broke in the door. The girl's body, fully clothed, was found stretched out on the bed in a gas-filled room. Three letters on the dresser left no doubt of her suicidal intention. One, addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Brown, gave no hint of her reasons, but the Browns said that Miss Evans had seemed to go from regret to depression and then to despondency in the two weeks since she had her hair cut, speaking frequently and regretfully of the step she had taken. She had, they said, beautiful blond hair reaching to her waist.

CRAZED YOUTH IS BESIEZED

Taken After Holding Out 13 Days, Kills One and Wounds Four

Hinton, W. Va., July 29.—John Fredeking, the insane man who barricaded himself in his house and for thirteen days resisted the efforts of Deputy Sheriffs and State police to arrest him after he had killed one man and wounded four others, this morning appeared at the front door, threw up his hands and asked for a drink of water.

Two troopers, who with other officers have resorted to every known means short of firing the house to dislodge Fredeking, stepped up to the door, got him the water he craved and then led him to the county jail. He refused to answer their questions, and appeared to be dazed. Physicians were summoned from the Hinton Hospital, where they had been treating the men wounded in the firing of the past days, and dressed a bullet wound in Fredeking's right arm and another injury to his right shoulder.

Fredeking's worst wound was on the right elbow, the point of which had been shot away, and this was in such condition that the physician who attended him feared he might lose the arm. Two slight wounds on the right hand and a cut on the top if his left shoulder, which might have been caused by either bullets or glass, were also treated.

During the night Fredeking telephoned to relatives asking that a physician be brought to the house where he withstood the siege of peace officers since he killed Deputy Sheriff Lew Matty. They found the young man so weakened by his long vigil and wounds that he could have offered little further resistance.

Fredeking said he had been living mainly on a supply of nuts. The house was ideal for a fort, a two-storey brick house situated on a steep terrace in the centre of the city. In upper rooms he kept watch from all sides on his besiegers and was secure from attack because he made his headquarters in a room at the head of the stairs.

City and county officials who sought to capture the young man were hampered by a ruling of the County Judge that to kill him would bring a charge of murder, and State police held themselves in reserve, but were in charge when the surrender was made.

At the time he killed the deputy who sought to take him to the hospital, Fredeking also wounded his father, and since he retreated into the house he had wounded two of the men who attempted to capture him. One of these, Charles Koke of White Sulphur Springs, is in a serious condition, having been shot through the lungs after he succeeded in getting into the house, by advancing behind a metal shield.

GEDDES LIKELY TO LEAVE POST

He is Strongly Opposed to a Canadian Mission in the U.S. Capital

Washington, D. C., July 29.—In spite of denials from the British embassy and the state department the rumor is insistent that Sir Auckland Geddes is about to give up his post as British Ambassador at Washington. It is no secret that Sir Auckland has desired to retire for some time past and held over during the peace conference at the request of the Imperial government. He is entitled to a peerage any time he chooses to accept it, but his acceptance will signalize the close of his diplomatic career. Senator Ransdell, of Louisiana, declared in the Senate the other day that Sir Auckland had gone upon a vacation that might be prolonged indefinitely. He joined in the assault made by Senator Watson, of Indiana on the ambassador's Chicago speech as an interference with legislation notably the tariff bill and the ship subsidy bill now before congress. It was announced at the state department that Sir Auckland's explanation of the speech was satisfactory to the administration, but the criticism directed against him by members in the Senate must have been distasteful to the ambassador.

This rumor is, of course, interlaced with the rumor of Canada's direct representation in the near future at Washington. When Premier King was here he contented himself with saying to the press that the subject of establishing a Canadian embassy was under consideration. Sir Auckland Geddes has been outspoken in his opposition to the appointment of a Canadian ambassador and his rumored retirement is therefore associated in the public mind with the Canadian mission. It is thought likely, however, that the Canadian representative will bear the title of high commissioner. Mr. King, it will be remembered, in discussing the subject pointed out that Canada had high commissioner at London and Paris.

MAY STRIKE OUT OBEY AND ENDOW

U.S. Episcopal Commission Considering Changes in Marriage Service

Chicago, July 28.—The joint commission of Bishops, clergy and laymen of the Protestant Episcopal Church not only has recommended that the word "obey" for the bride be omitted from the marriage ceremony, but also proposes to cut out the bridegroom's 'with all my worldly goods I thee endow." Numerous other changes are also set forth in the revised "form of solemnization of matrimony" in the Book of Common Prayer of the Church. These changes will be put before the Triennial General Convention of that communion. This will open in Portland, Oregon, on September , and continue for three weeks. If the revision is adopted, not only will the woman no longer have to promise to obey her husband, but she will no longer have to take a vow to serve him. The proposed new ceremony makes the vow of the woman identical with that of the man, and a reason given by the commission is that this is in keeping with the new position of woman as the civic equal of man.

One reason for the proposal to cease asking the bridegroom to endow his bride with all his 'worldly goods" is that the law takes care of that anyway. Another reason is that there are bridegrooms who have no worldly goods with which to endow the bride.

A striking omission in the revised service is that the clergyman will no longer ask in his prayer "that as Isaac and Rebecca lived faithfully together," so may this newly married couple. The principal reason for this is that some modern thinkers have come to doubt whether the married life of Isaac and Rebecca furnishes a perfect model, because Isaac represented her to be his sister when they went to Gerar to live.

HOTTENTOTS BOMBED

Led to Protest by Col. Wedgwood in British House

London, July 28.—In the House of Commons today Colonel J. C. Wedgwood (Labor) drew attention to the "proceedings in the mandated area of Southwest Africa including the bombing of Hottentot villages containing women and children by an aeroplane dropping from a low altitude no fewer than forty bombs and spraying with 2,000 rounds of ammunition, a party of 500 Hottentots, involving heavy loss of life."

Colonel Wedgwood asked whether the Government proposed to take any steps to stop these proceedings.

Right Hon. Winston Churchill, Secretary of State for the Colonies, replied that he was aware that the administration of Southwest Africa found it necessary to take military action against one of the native tribes. He pointed out that the mandate for Southwest Africa was held by the South African Union Government, who was responsible to the League of Nations.

Replying to a further remark by Colonel Wedgwood, Mr. Churchill said he hoped Britishers would find something beter to do in the League than attack their own dominions.

FARMERS OVER ALL

The Montreal La Presse has been bemoaning the mix-up in Canadian politics, and suggests the amalgamation of the moderate Liberals with the Conservatives, and the merging of the official Liberal and Progressive Parties. The Globe regards this proposal as impracticable at the present time, but believes that it may come into effect later, and goes on to say:

"The probability is, that the present relations of the parties in the Federal field will be continued for a considerable time, in fact as long as the Progressive party exists. Some may desire that they should be more definite, and that there should be less fluctuation in the Government majority. But this result cannot be brought about by any deal, or hard-and-fast agreement. The decision rests with the people of Canada, not with any group or groups of politicians at Ottawa. So long as the people continue to vote for three or more parties, instead of two, their will must prevail. Any attempt to defeat that will by combinations such as La Presse suggests would be regarded with suspicion and hostility, and would tend to discredit Parliament in the eyes of a large body of electors."

Just what The Globe means when it says that "the decision rests with the people of Canada" we do not know. It is one of those platitudes that slip smoothly from the editorial pen; it sounds democratic, and at the same time evades the issue. The fact of the matter is the people do not make new parties, and the people of Canada are not responsible for the creation of the farmers' party, which is merely made up of a combination of men of one section of the community for purely selfish ends. Are the leaders of the Farmers' Party above suspicion? They, more than all other men in politics, have a particular axe to grind, and they have the effrontery to admit it.

Only the other day L. P. McNamee, Chairman of the newly-formed Farmers' Union of Canada, at a convention in Saskatoon, gave utterance to the following amazing statement: "The Farmers' Union is purely in politics in every way legislation affects its members". The sentence is rather bad English, but its meaning is unmistakable. It is a frank and open confession and Mr. McNamee is to be commended for his candour. This statement sums up the entire farmer movement throughout the Dominion. The motto is the same as that of the Sinn Fein—"OURSELVES ALONE" and is very like the motto of "Germany Over All".

Mr. Drury has been saying some straight things to his fellow-farmers about the necessity for a party system, and he has on several occasions spoken of "broadening out". The fact that the farmer-Premier gives expression to such sentiments indicates a growing consciousness on his part of the utter selfishness of the Farmer movement in politics.

STARVING FOR A "LIVING WAGE"

The prospects of a settlement of the railway shopmen's dispute without resorting to the extreme measure of striking are reported to be favorable. If the men did walk out they would lose far more than they would gain, and they would have to agree to arbitration in the long run. Arbitration first is better than arbitration last. Labor and Capital should be forced to settle their dispute by arbitration and not be allowed to hold up the industrial life of the country.

The coal strike in the United States has dragged on in a state of indifference for months, and now that the winter is within sight the authorities are beginning to wake up to the seriousness of the situation. What has been gained by the miners by obeying the advice of their leaders? The result has been the loss of half a year's wages by the men and the endangering of the lives of thousands of poor people this winter through lack of fuel. Whatever the men may get in the way of concessions from the masters these can never make up for the loss incurred. The talk about a "living wage" is gross hypocrisy in the mouths of men who would bring men and women to the point of starvation for a mere theory.

PASSING COMMENT

A "Dry Germany" campaign is reported to have been launched in the Fatherland. If the toast to "Der Tag" had been drunk in water we should have had no Great War.

HERE AND THERE

OXFORD AND TORONTO.

"When I was a student at the University of Toronto," writes Prof. Stephen Leacock in the Morning Post (London, England), "I lived from start to finish in seventeen different boarding houses. As far as I am aware, those houses have not, or not yet, been marked with tablets.

"I was not alone in the nomadic life that I led. There were hundreds of us drifting about in this fashion from one melancholy habitation to another. We lived, as a rule, two or three in a house, sometimes alone. We dined in the basement. We always had beef, done up in some way after it was dead, and there were always soda biscuits on the table.

"They used to have a brand of soda biscuits in the Toronto boarding-houses that I have not seen since. They were better than dog biscuits, but with not so much snap. My contemporaries will all remember them. A great many of the leading barristers and professional men of Toronto were fed on them.

As for Oxford, Leacock describes there also "the distressing conditions under which the students work.."

"On the day when I saw their kitchen, four cooks were busy roasting an ox whole for the students' lunch; this at least is what I presumed they were doing from the size of the fireplace used; but it may not have been an ox, perhaps it was only a cow.

"On a huge table, twelve feet by six, and made of slabs of wood five inches thick, two other cooks were rolling out a game pie. I estimated it as measuring three feet across.

"In this rude way, unchanged since the time of Henry VIII. the unhappy Oxford students are fed. I could not help contrasting it with the cosy little boarding-houses on Cottage Grove Avenue, where I used to eat when I was a student at Chicago, or those charming little basement dining-rooms of the students' boarding-houses in Toronto. But then, of course, Henry VIII never lived in Toronto."

AIX-LES-BAINS.

Savoy is one of the most beautiful districts in France. In many ways it resembles both Italy and Switzerland, possessing as it does all the attractions of the finest mountain scenery of these two countries. This lovely French province with its sun-kissed valleys, mountains, lakes, streams, forests, old-world castles, monasteries, and the exquisite panorama of the snow-capped Alps, is an ideal holiday retreat for those in need of rest and change during the summer months.

Savoy, writes a Morning Post correspondent, is easily accessible, either by rail from Paris, Lyons, Marseilles, Grenoble, Geneva, Bordeaux, or Strasbourg during the season, or by motor. The roads are in excellent condition at this time of the year. It may also be reached from the Riviera by the famous "Route des Alpes." Aix-les-Bains is perhaps the most convenient headquarters on first visiting Savoy, as it is a splendid centre from which all parts of the province may easily be visited.

This delightful watering-place, "the Queen of Resorts and the resort of Queens", is not only world-famed for its medicinal facilities, but also for its unique charm, both as regards situation and climate. Nestling in a beautiful valley, at the bottom of which Lake Bourget stretches its blue waters, it possesses every attraction that pleasure-seekers can wish for. Its altitude is 780 feet above the sea, and about 100 feet above the level of the lake immortalized by Lamartine in his famous ode.

Has a Wonderful Setting.

The town is overlooked on the east by Mount Revard (5,000 feet), and is bounded on the north and west by the Jura range (Mont Colombier, Mont du Chat, Mont de l'Epine, and the Chambotte). To the south we have the Chartreuse Masses and the Granier; while in the extreme distance is the chain of the Maurienne and Dauphine Alps, whose summits are covered with eternal snow.

The air of Aix is pure, and, owing to the mountains which protect the town from violent winds, the temperature is equable. Naturally it is hot in summer, but the refreshing breezes from the mountains and lake temper the heat, and render it quite bearable. No dew falls on summer evenings, so one can enjoy the cool nights without any fear of taking cold. On first arrival Aix strikes one most favorably, owing to the clean streets, the general appearance of luxury, the number of fine hotels and handsome shops, while the well-tarred roads leading out of the town reduce dust to a minimum. The centre of animation is the Place du Revard.

FAINTHEART IN A RAILWAY TRAIN

Thomas Hardy.

At nine in the morning there passed a church,
At ten there passed me by the sea,
At twelve a town of smoke and smirch,
At two a forest of oak and birch,
And then, on a platform, she:

A radiant stranger, who saw not me.
I queried, "Get out to her do I dare?"
But I kept my seat in a search for a plea,
And the wheels move on. O could it but be
That I had alighted there!

BEING A DESCENDANT.

The well-known English cricketer, the Hon. L. H. Tennyson, was pointed out to a spectator one afternoon at a cricket match, and the spectator was greatly impressed.

"So that's Tennyson, eh?" he exclaimed.

"Yes, that's the man."

"A fine bat, and no mistake."

"Yes, and he's a descendant, you know, of the poet, Tennyson."

"You don't say so," said the other. "Well, well. If only his ancestor could have known who was coming after him he'd have died a proud man!"

PRESS OPINIONS

HIGHER FARES, FEWER PASSENGERS

La Patrie finds the most significant fact mentioned in the annual report of the operations of the Montreal tramways is the decreased passenger traffic, notwithstanding that there has been, if anything, an increase in the number of available passengers."

"The only reason which appears susceptible to cause such a diminution in the traffic," La Patrie observes, "is the excessive cost of transportation. At one time workmen obtained eight tickets for twenty-five cents. Today twenty-five cents will buy only four tickets. It inevitably follows that many workmen who formerly did not hesitate to ride to their work now walk the distance. The enhanced prices constitute an inconvenience for the public and manifestly result in a loss to the tramways company. A reduction in the price of passage would inevitably increase the passenger traffic, and public and company would alike benefit. The tariff is automatically governed by the terms of the tramways contract, but if, as many think, less costly transportations would result in added receipts, surely the company and the city could easily come to an understanding whereby united demand could be made to the Legislature for the needed modification of the tramways contract."

AN ILL WIND, ETC.

The miners' strike in the United States is bringing sorely needed relief to the coal industry of Wales Conditions in this industry have been so bad for months past that the companies have been unable to operate profitably on the basis of market prices, with the result that unemployment has increased and the wages of the men who are at work have fallen to what in many cases is described as little better than a starvation level. The agreement entered into between the miners and the operators last year, after the general strike, was expected to restore prosperity in the industry, but it proved to be an instrument of mischief and misfortune. The succession of wage increases in British industry created a condition in which business could not be conducted successfully, and this condition contributed in large measure to the commercial depression which became prevalent. Unemployment increased and wages declined. The domestic market for coal was affected by this general depression and the export market suffered from similar conditions abroad. The result has been a renewal of strike talk and a revival of the suggestion that the industry be subsidized at the expense of the country as a whole.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

"Give Us Barabbas!"

We are a wasteful and extravagant people. Go out into the country any afternoon where they are harvesting and you will see good grain wasted by slovenly methods. It is claimed that there is enough stuff goes to waste keep a family in France, Germany or on every 100 acre farm in Ontario to Poland. They kill a hen and only eat part of it; they butcher a pig and only devour a little more than half of him; they dress a beef and give all the tit-bits to the dog . It seems impossible to cut a field of wheat anywhere west of Quebec boundary in this country without trampling it and spilling it by the way. There is some of it being wasted from the time they swing open the field gate for the binder till it is finally bagged up for market.

But if we waste the golden grain, we also waste something that is more golden than grain. They found a precious baby among a lot of burdocks in a vacant lot the other day; they found another one in a culvert on the fifth line just west of Gumbo and another one was rescued in time from a battered old suit-case in the station at Jericko Junction.

We can't afford to throw away anything or waste anything in this country. Keep a thing seven years and if you haven't found any use for it in that time you throw it away with a clear conscience.

It was when his Aunt Em was keeping house for Medad Duckunder that a couple came along one day with an old horse and wagon and a little big-eyed boy, and they asked dad if they could leave the outfit the boy included, with him for a day or two, or while they looked around for the site of a market garden, and Dad he hemmed and hawed for quite awhile before he took them in, and the couple went away and he never saw them again. They had buncoed him. I remember the incident quite well, the neighbors held that Dad was not stuck so awful bad seein' he had got the old horse and wagon, but the boy was a dead loss. He was worse than that, he was an outrage, whatever that is and he was a responsibility and probably an imp of Satan, for no one knowed who his parents was.

I take notice that in cases like this that people are strong believers in heredity. The Children's Shelter and the Infants' Home would be empty before night, but folks think that very one of the inmates is a incipient cut-throat and thief and all round terror. I am always truly sorry for pretty Della Teeple. Her foster parents took her out of a refuge before she was a year old and Della is a lovely young woman now but everybody is sitting round on the fences waiting for her to go bad. They consider it a miracle that so far she hasn't done some dreadful thing. And yet those very people sitting round on the fences have been taught that they were born of sin themselves. That they are all children of iniquity, and how poor Della can be any worse than that because she was found on a clean doorstep beats me.

In time, the ancient wagon fell to pieces and the old horse died, or rather he got so stiff and lame, that he was afraid to lie down to sleep, so he contracted the habit of sleeping standing up. This was all very well as far as it went, but he dreamed one night that the wolves were after him and he fell down and broke a leg and the poor ole feller had to be shot. But while the old wagon and horse went to decay the boy didn't. Aunt Em died, but the boy kind of took her place and kept house for Dad and tended the garden and looked after the cow and fed the chickens. Dad had only one fear, and that was that that couple would return some day looking for the old horse and wagon and the little boy. If in the middle of the night he heard a rig stop at the gate a cold sweat broke all over him. He would go to the boy's room and call to him "You stay where you be Abner, don't you come downstairs no matter what happens." He was leary of all visitors to the neighborhood. He watched over Abner with the jealous care of an old fox guarding a young one.

Bildad Teeple never regretted keeping the boy. Abner was good to him. The astonishing part of it was, that though he was born in sin and was a child of iniquity he was a good boy. There was nothing vicious about him and the annoying thing about it was that he was an example to the boys in the neighborhood whose parents had been married to Hoyle.

This world is full of contradictions and things like Abner Teeple happen every day. Bildad is satisfied that it was the Lord that put that little boy in the old wagon and sent him seven years ago.

It was market day and the shop was full of people waiting to be shaved.

A farmer entered, who was very careful of his cash, and said to the barber:

"I say, Joe, farming's very bad nowadays; I think you should shave us at half-price."

Nay, nay," was the barber's reply. "I think I should be paid double, 'cause farmers' faces are twice as long as they used to be."

FRANCE FRESHENS UP NAPOLEON'S LAST HOME

Paris, July 29.—The French Government having been persuaded to allot $125.00 for the purpose, Napoleon's last home, on the Island of St. Helena, is to have a new coat of paint. It needs it, for the last coat was spread on eight years ago.

The old house, at Longwood, is under the care of the French Minister of Domain. He it was who induced the government to make the financial allotment. The new coloring will be exactly as in Napoleon's time, light grey for the house itself, with the shutters, cornices and doors in olive green and dark brown.

DODGE BROTHERS COUPE

You will realize, the moment you see this coupe, how perfectly it fulfills a very real need.

It was designed and built by Dodge Brothers in response to that need—long-standing and often-expressed by people in all parts of the world.

With Dodge Brothers chassis as a starting point, it only remained to create a coupe body which would unite the usual coupe refinements with greater lightness, hardihood and economy.

The world now knows how this was accomplished. An entirely new precedent in closed car construction was established. The body is built of steel.

Moreover, the deep comfortable seat is upholstered in genuine leather. The doors are exceptionally wide. The rear compartment will hold a small steamer trunk and other luggage. The enamel, baked on the steel at high temperature is readily restored, after hard usage, to its original lustre.

In every detail the car reflects the purpose of the builders—to make it a practical car of universal appeal.

WHAT TO SERVE SUNDAY DINNER GUESTS IN SUMMER

BY BERTHA E. SHAPLEIGH

Cooking Authority for N E A Service Columbia University

To every housekeeper and cook once a week comes the question of what to have for Sunday night supper, especially when guests are coming.

In winter there must be one dish which will be satisfying and hot. In summer what will be satisfying and cool is the question.

The cook must be considered also and it is always wise to have those dishes which to a large extent may be made on Saturday.

Cold meat, cold cooked eggs, molded meat, fish, vegetables and fruit all offer suggestions.

Sandwiches and desserts, as custards or jellies, which may be made ahead of time and served with little trouble are all good to have.

Following are a few suggested menus:

I
Cold Ham with Potato Salad
Plain Bread and Butter
Cut-up Fruit (served in glasses)
Cake Iced Tea

II
Sandwiches
(One with meat or egg, one sweet or plain)
Iced Cocoa with Beaten Cream
Cake

III
Stuffed Eggs with Tomato and Lettuce
Baking Powder Biscuits, hot
Cookies Tea

IV
Molded Fruit Salad
Cream Cheese Sandwiches
Layer Cake Tea or Coffee

V
Hot Chicken Sandwiches
Olives or Pickles
Cold Coffee Souffle
Wafers Tea

In the first menu the cut-up fruit is very good and uses up a small amount of fruit, as one banana or one orange, or half a melon, which have been left.

Also any canned or preserved fruit left over, or a few strawberries, all may be mixed together and sprinkled with sugar. Half a cup of loganberry juice or ginger ale improves the taste.

Allow the fruit to stand in a cool place and at serving time put in glasses, and on top of each a spoonful of beaten cream.

Iced tea and coffee are best when made fresh and poured hot over the ice. Cocoa, however, is not improved by being served that way.

Make the cocoa several hours before serving and let it become cold, than serve with ice if necessary and beaten cream on top of each glass.

Town or Country?

The strange part of living in any place is that no matter how highly we regard it—and wouldn't for the world live anywhere else—we soon begin to be a little careless and patronizing about it. No one would willingly go so far as to quote the pompous old proverb about familiarity breeding contempt. We are not in the least contemptuous, but we are rather offhand in our treatment of accustomed localities. For example, it has never been admitted good form for a gentlewoman to walk out of her town house pinning her veil, putting on her gloves, or buttoning her coat—though since few coats are coats, and fewer gloves have buttons in these days, this must be taken as simply symbolic. She is not supposed to give the outside world the view of a lady performing the last rites of even so respectable a toilette. But if she is urban, born and bred, she feels a little about her city as the naughty child in Punch felt when threatened with the nearest policeman, 'Oh, g'on! That's father.'' In other words, she takes her ease in habitual surroundings, and might even choose to saunter along for miles with her gloves in her hand and her coat flying open.

The country mouse, on the contrary, has a reverence for the city; either because she does not usually live in it, or because, having removed herself from it for the hot season, it has suddenly lost its familiar air to her and become the home of formality. If she come to town for the day she dresses much more carefully than she would if she were still living there. Of course, this may be considered as due to the fact that for all the varied schemes of her metropolitan hours she must be generally well costumed. But, as a matter of fact, if she only came to interview the tenth new cook and buy buttons for her baby's aprons, she would still wear something good and modish. The day in town is an event; an effort, perhaps, but an event, an expedition, almost an adventure. There are other women in the morning train with their menkind, husbands and other. Plans are made for luncheon, and they naturally settle upon one of the smart restaurants in order to see who else is in town that day. Many will be, all in their best or near best, and all with the same feeling of demure revelry, which transcends any natural fatigue.

But of all the mice who enjoy the great metropolis in summer, those who enjoy it most come to town from a distance; who take rooms in some vast, cool caravansary, where they are known only by their key numbers and spare themselves nothing in the way of sightseeing, shopping, dining, theatregoing, and general money-spending. More power to them! Let no dweller in Gotham think she knows it as they do, sees it as they do, enjoys it as they do. She may love it more, feel more affection for the silhouette of its great buildings at sundown, for the slant of the rain over its roofs, the moon on its church spires, the sound of its street cries. But stand in awe of its grandeur, its extravagance, its fashion, its fiction, its music, its art, its stupendous power, she never will because she lives in it and is a part of it. It is just her home-hole to the town mouse, and she never quite loses her haughty sense of possessive ease.—Vogue.

Paralysis is a break-down of the Nervous System and affects the victim in various ways. Sometimes, nervousness makes itself known by hysteria, insomnia, constant headaches, or it may be so bad that one is partially or completely helpless in some part of the body, just as Mrs. Heacock was.

SAULT STE MARIE, ONT.

"When I was twenty-eight years of age, my doctor advised me to have an operation, which I did and it proved very serious, leaving me weak and unable to walk for a year. Seeing your "Fruit-a-tives" advertised in the papers, I decided to try them. I continued to use them regularly, and today I am able to go about my home duties and care for my family".

MRS. J. W. HEACOCK.

Any form of Nervousness is often caused by, and is always aggravated by, Constipation, which poisons the blood, irritates the kidneys and inflames the nerves. "Fruit-a-tives" stimulates the action of liver and bowels, kidneys and skin—tones and sweetens the stomach—keeps the blood pure, and builds up the entire nervous system.

In a word, "Fruit-a-tives" has proved that it is the most scientific and effective remedy in the world for Nervousness or a disordered condition of the nervous system.

PORT OF MISSING MOTORS

Montreal, July 28—What may prove to be the graveyard of many missing automobiles was discovered yesterday by agents of the Merchants' Insurance Association of Montreal, who have been searching for stolen cars since last fall. The remains of three cars have been dragged from the bed of the St. Lawrence River, and are now on a small island opposite St Jean de Dieu Asylum at Longue Pointe. How many more lie submerged remains to be ascertained. It is believed that some of the cars, if not all, were driven into the river so that their owners might collect the insurance.

NEIGHBORS IN NEED

By SAIDEE R. BALCOM

(Copyright, 1920, Western Newspaper Union)

With a quiet appreciative smile upon her expressive face, Margery Dale bent her ear in the direction of the room adjoining her own. From observation and audible demonstration she knew that it held four young men. The partition was thin and she could easily catch sounds beyond normal.

One of the group started a mournful tune on a flute. There was a whizzing noise, evidently made by a pillow vigorously flung. A dodging body grazed the wall. An easel or a chair was upset. A scramble and a scuffle ensued.

"That horse-play will do, fellows!" rang out a mellow, pleasing voice which Margery loved to hear, and which she knew from what the landlady had told her belonged to Nevil Barry, "the leader of that turbulent, happy quartette," as Mrs. Parton had put it. "Poor fellows! I'm thinking they are on the ragged edge of nothing, having lost their positions. Jolly enough, though, and honest, for they've paid me all up, but I think went without regular meals to do it."

"I'm going down to the old office, to see if there's any chance of the resurrection of our dismal failure, the Weekly Chit-Chat," went on that same engaging voice. "They were to sell the wreck of the layout at auction today, and it may bring enough to settle up the debts and leave us a dividend. If it does, you shall eat tonight."

Nevil Barry had disclosed enough to advise Margery of the circumstances surrounding himself and his friends. It appeared that he had become ambitious as the editor of a country paper, and had managed to get together sufficient to start one in the city. His three friends had literary ability, and they got out four issues of a very creditable sheet. Then Barry's capital gave out, and the audacious quartette found themselves on the verge of bankruptcy.

Margery knew of all this and pitied these exiles of fortune.

Now she smiled indulgently at the echo of some caper or bit of badinage from the trio in the next apartment, and rather enjoyed her silent companionship with them. She recognized from their conversation that they were clean, clever young fellows, experienced a true sisterly sympathy in their ups and downs, and amid her loneliness somewhat imbibed their spirit of bohemianism as an attractive phase of life. It was two hours later when she heard Barry return from his mission. A turbulent babble arose from his confreres.

"No sustenance!" cried one. "Where's the promised milk and honey, the succulent roast, the toothsome dessert?"

"They're coming, all of them," declared Barry. "For a week we've had nothing but promise of work. I've got something better—prospects. Fellows, there is no dividend from the sale of our former princely possessions, but the assets of our princely venture were sold at auction for a mere pittance to a rich junkman, so rich, indeed, that when I went to see him he considered investing ten thousand dollars in Chit-Chat revived as a mere bagatelle."

"You mean you've found an angel, a backer?"

"Just that; a humble old money-grubber willing to shine as a patron of struggling literature. Next Monday morning all four of us are to enter upon a salary and half interest basis with this ambitious Croesus."

Cheered comment and exuberance greeted the welcome announcement. Amid a merry, excited babble, the tones of Barry arose once more in direction and counsel.

"The landlady is paid up, so we haven't that on our minds," he observed. "All we have to worry about is the food. If we can stick it out until Monday, we are made men. My watch is about the only thing left that is pawnable. Ho, then, for our illustrious uncle!"

Margery acted on an uncontrollable impulse. She went to the door as that of the next room opened. She faced Nevil Barry as he neared her.

"Wait," she said, flushed and excited. "I am your next-room neighbor."

Barry raised his hat with the grace of a finished courtier.

"I have been an eavesdropper unconsciously," she went on. "The watch—don't! And getting through until Monday? I'll help you. I have a little money ahead. And a two-plate gas stove. And if you will be content with my cooking why not have breakfast and supper with me?"

Nevil Barry stared at the lonely girl as if an angel had abruptly crossed his path.

"It's wonderful!" he said simply. "You can't mean it!"

"I do," smiled Margery. "Like yourselves, this is my first city experiment. The landlady is your friend. Let me be the same please!"

Decorously, gratefully, admiringly, at eight every morning and six every evening the boyish quartette filed into the room that held the two-plate gas burner. It was a holy of holies, a haven of friendliness and comfort. And the waiting week was bridged over, and the brotherly four were at work again, and the Chit Chat became a success!

And through it all Margery Dale gained a loving husband and three staunch, adoring friends.

THE BANDBOX

By—
Louis Joseph Vance

"Sorry," murmured Iff—"so sorry, but you're wrong. Case of mistaken identity, I give you my word."

"Your word!" snapped the captain contemptuously.

"My word," retorted Iff in a crisp voice; "and more than that, I don't ask you to take it. I've proofs of my identity which I think will satisfy even you."

"Produce them."

"In my own good time." Iff put his back against the wall and lounged negligently, surveying the circle of unfriendly faces with his odd, supercilious eyes, half veiled by their hairless lids. "Since you've done me the honour to impute to me guilty knowledge of this—ah—crime, I don't mind admitting that I was a passenger on the Autocratic when Mrs. Burden Hamman lost her jewels; and it wasn't a coincidence, either. I was with you for a purpose—to look out for those jewels. I shared a room with Ismay, and when, after the robbery, you mistook me for him, he naturally didn't object, and I didn't because it left me all the freer to prosecute my investigation. In fact, it was due to my efforts that Ismay found things getting too hot for him over in London and arranged to return the jewelry to Mrs. Hamman for an insignificant ransom—not a tithe of their value. But he was hard pressed; if he'd delayed another day, I'd 've had him with the goods on. . . . That," said Iff pensively, "was when I was in the Pinkerton service."

"Ah, it was?" said the captain with much irony. "And what, pray, do you claim to be now?"

"Just a plain, ordinary, everyday sleuth in the employ of the United States Secret Service, detailed to work with the Customs Office to prevent smuggling—the smuggling of such articles as, say, the Cadogan collar."

In the silence that followed this astounding declaration, the little man hunched up his shoulders until they seemed more round than ever, and again subjected the faces of those surrounding him to the stare of his impertinent, pale eyes. Staff, more detached in attitude than any of the others present, for his own amusement followed the range of Iff's gaze.

Captain Cobb was scowling thoughtfully. Manvers wore a look of deepest chagrin. Jane's jaw had fallen and her eyes seemed perilously protrudant. Alison was leaning gracefully back in her chair—her pose studied but charmingly effective—while she favoured Iff with a scrutiny openly incredulous and disdainful.

"You say you have proofs of this—ah—assertion of yours?" demanded the captain at length.

"Oh, yes—surely yes." Iff's tone was almost apologetic. He thrust a hand between his shirt and waistcoat, fumbled a moment as if unbuttoning a pocket, and brought forth a worn leather wallet from which, with great and exasperating deliberation, he produced a folded paper. This he handed the captain—his manner, if possible, more than ever self-effacing and meek.

The paper (it was parchment) crackled crisply in the captain's fingers. He spread it out and held it to the light in such a position that Staff could see it over his shoulder. He was unable to read its many closely inscribed lines, but the heading "Treasury Department, Washington, D. C." was boldly conspicuous, as well as an imposing official seal and the heavily scrawled signature of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Beneath the blue cloth, the captain's shoulders moved impatiently. Staff heard him say something indistinguishable, but of an intonation calculated to express his emotion.

Iff giggled nervously: "Oh, captain! the ladies—"

Holding himself stiff and erect, Captain Cobb refolded the document and ceremoniously handed it back to the little man.

"I beg your pardon," he said in a low voice.

"Don't mention it," begged Iff. He replaced the paper in his wallet, the wallet in his pocket. "I'm sure it's quite an excusable mistake on your part, captain dear. . . . As for you, Mr. Manvers, you needn't apologise to me," he added maliciously: "just make your apologies to Captain Cobb."

TRIO OF BOXERS ARE DISAPPOINTED

Three Australians Came to England, Saw, and Were Conquered

London, July 28.—Three Australian boxers, Albert Lloyd, George Cook and Franks Burns, came to England, saw, and have been conquered, in fact so much so that they are ready to pack up for the long journey home.

Filled with high expectations on the basis of what they had heard about the lack of real boxers in the British Isles, the trio of Australians came here and found they were not nearly as proficient as they believed they were. Then they met some English boxers and the facts were demonstrated.

Most English critics say Frank Burns is the best of the trio. He was defeated by Kid Lewis but he exhibited real pluck and undeveloped ability that won him admirers. He is being urged to remain in England or to go to the United States, where, assert the critics, every boxer should acquire the finishing touches to his pugilistic education.

The most recent defeat of Lloyd, cruiser-weight champion of the Antipodes, was administered by Arthur Townley, who won on points.

WILL TRY TO RUN THE LACHINE RAPIDS

Ogdensburg Seaman to Try For Record With Dodge Boat

Ogdensburg, July 27.—Captain George Fleming, who piloted the Dodge palatial yacht from Port Dalhousie to Montreal and stopped here for several hours Saturday, returned Tuesday from Montreal after a successful trip.

Horace E. Dodge, Jr., who was one of the persons on board the yacht, will leave the Delphine at Philadelphia, Pa., and will return to Detroit, where he has had an 80-foot motor boat completed for his personal use. It is equipped with twin Liberty motors with 750-horsepower and a speed of 45 miles an hour.

Captain Fleming will go to Detroit and pilot the boat to this city early in September. From here he will pilot it to Montreal outside all the way, including the shooting of the Long Sault and the plunge through the dangerous Lachine rapids.

On reaching Montreal it wil turn back and will make the attempt, for the first time in the history of navigation on the St. Lawrence river, to run up through the Lachine and Long Sault rapids. This feat has never been accomplished by any craft. There will be six members in the party to make the attempt and moving pictures will be taken. Captain Fleming believes the attempt will be successful.

REGATTA MAY BE AT KINGSTON

Prinyer's Cove Beauty Spot But no Place for a Regatta

Toronto, July 27.—Yachtsmen who have returned to Toronto are all loud in their praise of the way the arrangements were carried out at Prinyer's Cove by Commodore Wm. Casey, Kingston Yacht Club; Commodore T. A. E. World, Queen City Yacht Club; the R.C.Y.C., as hosts of the yachtsmen; Secretary A. B. Bowen, of the L.Y.R.A.; Transport and Supplies Officer Blake Van Winckel, of the Queen City Yacht Club; Sailing Secretary W. J. T. Wright, of the R.C.Y.C., with his work-launch Oplonga; and all the other officials concerned.

Of the scenic charms of Prinyer's Cove and the Bay of Quinte there can be no dispute. The Cove does not, however, appeal to all as an ideal centre for a regatta. It is four miles from where the yachts have to sail and fifteen or twenty miles from any place with a population large enough to take a noteworthy interest in the sport.

Yachting is built up only by bringing new suporters into the sport, and this can better be accomplished by a series of regattas at different ports in succession than by a prolonged regatta in the wilderness. Races at Cobourg, Charlotte, Sodus, Oswego, Chaumont Bay—home of the Crescent Yacht Club, of Watertown—Kingston and Belleville are talked of for next year's L.Y.R.A. effort, and the idea is a good one.

OLD YACHTSMAN DEAD

Three Months' Illness Ends in Death—Was Director Canada Permanent Mortgage Co.

Toronto, July 28.—John Henry Grasset Hagarty, managing director of the St. Lawrence and Chicago Steam Navigation Co., and director of Canada Permanent Mortgage Co. died yesterday morning after a three months' illness at his home, 6 Chestnut Park.

Mr. Hagarty was the oldest son of the late Chief Justice Sir John Hagarty, and was a native of this city where he had lived most of his life; he was 77 years of age.

Last December Mr. Hagarty had a fall while walking down to his office on Toronto street, but it is not known whether this had anything to do with his death or not. He leaves a widow, three sons and four daughters.

Mr. Hagarty attended St. James Cathedral. He was an Oddfellow, and one of the oldest members of the Royal Canadian Yacht Club. He joined the yacht club in 1868, and assisted in their campaign for building funds the following year.

One of his early recollections in connection with the club was escorting Princess Louise and Christine Nilsen, the singer, across the railroad tracks to the old club house. They both made the remark, 'What a dreadful place."

Mr. Hagarty was educated at Leamington College in England.

KING OF EAST VISITS PARIS

Emperor Khai Dink Wanders Unidentified Through the Art Museums

Paris, July 27.—Dressed in a business suit of a sober black, a quiet, unobtrusive yellow-skinned man has been a constant visitor recently to the museums of art, painting and sculpture in the French capital.

Few people recognized Khai Dinh, Far East Potentate, Emperor of Annam, Indo-China, who adorned in flowing robes of silk, his hair decorated with gold lace, the Red and Yellow Order of the Dragon of Annam on his breast almost hidden by a large plaque of pure gold set with huge diamonds, was seen in the Presidential box at Longchamp on the day of the Grand-Prix.

A few years ago no one in his capital of Hue was permitted to stand erect before the Emperor or look him squarely in the eye, yet in the museums tourists pushed him about and elbowed him out of the way when he stood too long before a work of art.

One of the first questions Khai-Dinh asked after he had been installed in the Ministry of Colonies, his home while in Paris, was: "Where is there a first-class tailor in town?" A representative of a leading Parisian tailoring firm called, but the Emperor found his clothes too gaudy and requested him to return with blue, brown and black samples. The Emperor ordered six suits of the more sober patterns. His official robes show practically all the colors of the rainbow.

A great lover of Art, Khai-Dinh has had the entire row of Palaces used as the residence of royalty in Hue practically remodeled, both inside and outside, since his accession to the throne in 1916. His visits to the monuments of Paris have been made especially for the purpose of finding a plan for the reconstruction of the tomb of his ancestor, Dong-Khanh, the founder of the dynasty, 20 centuries ago.

A strict follower of the doctrine of Confucius, Khai-Dinh's respect for the memory of his ancestors amounts to religion, and the mausoleum which he intends erecting to Dong-Khanh will be one of the purest examples of far-east architecture known. Alexandre Marcel, official architect of the French government, is collaborating in the drawing up of the plan and the Emperor has made several calls upon the architect, suggesting modifications and ideas.

Khai-Dinh has given much trouble to the secret service men entrusted by the French government with the task of protecting his sacred person. He slips in and out of museums, attended only by a few of his entourage, all dressed in the European fashion and several times he has eluded their vigilance.

Khai-Dinh, before he was allowed to travel incognito in Paris, was the guest at several official functions, including many dinners, and luncheons. He was present at all in full regalia, but toward the end of his official stay, he evinced some impatience and an earnest desire to enter upon private life. To one of the last invitations to dinner, the Emperor replied:

"Yes, I'll go providing there are no speeches."

The Emperor will leave for Hue in August but the heir to the throne, Vingh-Ty, aged nine, will remain in Paris, where French tutors will teach him literature and western civilization and fit him for the high place which he is to occupy one day at Hue, one of the fundamental requirements of which is that he be a friend of France and a student of French literature.

TURKISH CITY UNDER GREEK RULE

Adrianople Has Become a Thriving City Since the Greek Occupation

Adrianople, July 28.—Adrianople, which has been one of the barriers to peace between the Greeks and the Turks, has become a thriving city under Greek military occupation. The Turkish shopkeepers and traders never were prosperous. The Greeks have decorated every store with a Greek sign, whether the owner be a Greek, Turk or Armenian.

The Hellenic army commanders have ordered their men to cultivate the friendship of the Turk population, but while the Turks have profited commercially from the presence of the army their strong sense of patriotism and nationalism would rather see the Greeks driven out. For by centuries of history and association Adrianople, once their capital, is as dear to them as Constantinople.

Except from a strategic point of view, Adrianople really is of little importance. It is a typical Turkish city, with its narrow streets, open bazaars, ill smells, dirt and indolence. Its houses are of wood, plaster and mud, and give the impression that if they are not soon burned up they will fall down. There is much poverty and misery which American Relief workers are trying to ameliorate. American automobiles and motor trucks, bearing Greek army officers or supplies, rush through muddy streets. In the midst of the bustle are the tall, loose-limbed, shiftless Turks, lounging about the streets, coffee-drinking and day-dreaming.

The Allies gave Greece a mandate to administer Thrace, of which Adrianople is the capital, for a period of years, but many of the inhabitants, especially the Bulgarians, are hopeful the United States may yet be induced to take an administrative and paternal interest in Thrace.

GERMAN CITIZENS COMPENSATED FOR WAR LOSSES

Tegucigalpa, Honduras, July 28.—The government of Honduras has allotted to certain German merchants resident in the republic the sum of $120,000 to indemnify them for 'losses suffered as a result of the 'black lists' and other measures taken during the war," in which Honduras sided with the Allies.

The comment of the local press is ironical. "Why," it is asked, "should the Allies compensate German citizens for losses as a result of the war? Honduras has many urgent local needs for all the money it can spare."

LEARN THE FACTS

It frequently happens that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread"—that some people will buy a stock before acquiring a full knowledge of it. Then if it goes "smash" they will denounce all others, not knowing whereof they speak.

One of the most important basic industries of the world is Gold Mining—and yet the public, generally, are prone to term it an out-and-out gamble! But mark you well: Legitimate Gold Mining today offers good opportunities for sound investment, and if you desire to avail yourself thereof your first duty is to get full information—and to get it from the proper source. Then you are in a position to: 1—Learn the facts; 2—Use your own reasoning powers; 3—Decide for yourself. Do not let others do it for you. They may advise you if they, too, have the correct information, but not otherwise.

If you are desirous of investing some of your money where it will have an opportunity of working to its full creative capacity it will be worth your while to secure information in regard to

COUNCIL STRIKES CITY TAX RATE

Referred to the Board of Health.

Committee rose and reported. Report received and adopted.

Enquiries.

Ald. Greenleaf asked how it was that garbage was being dumped on private property instead of on the dumps.

Ald. Robinson—The order was to have the garbage dumped in the marsh on the west side of the bay bridge road so as to help build up a road to Zwick's island.

Ald. Thompson asked who hired the rat catcher and who is paying him.

Mayor Hanna—The city did not engage him and therefore will not have to pay him.

The estimates for the year were adopted.

Estimates.

Ald. Ostrom said there was increase over last year in expenditures to a considerable extent which could be helped.

Ald. Robinson said the trouble with this and similar Councils is that every grant asked for is granted.

Bylaws.

Council went into committee of the whole on Bylaws, Ald. McCreary in the chair. The following Bylaws were introduced and finally passed and numbered:

A Bylaw to adopt the estimated receipts and expenditures for the year 1922.

A Bylaw to authorize the construction of sidewalks on certain streets in the city at Belleville as local improvements under the provisions of the Local Improvement Act.

A Bylaw to appoint a city engineer building inspector and superintendent.

A Bylaw to authorise the levying and collecting of taxes for the Roman Catholic Separate School, High School, public schools, and patriotic purposes.

A Bylaw to grant aid to the Women's Christian Association of Belleville, being a society incorporated for the maintenance of a general hospital for the treament of persons suffering from disease or injuries.

A Bylaw to authorise the levying and collection of taxes for the purpose of the municipality at the city of Belleville other than school purposes for the year 1922.

A Bylaw to authorize the collection of taxes for the municipality for 1922.

A Bylaw to provide for the appointment of a collector to collect the taxes levied for all purposes of the municipality.

The Bylaw granting $9,000 to the Women's Christian Association for the hospital caused considerable discussion.

Ald. Patterson wanted to know where the report is that has been asked for by the Council in reference to the hospital, and where the money is being spent. He did not object to paying the money if he knew what it was for.

Ald. Ostrom spoke in support of the grant being made as there is a deficit now of $12,000.

Ald. Thompson—Only two drug stores in the city supply drugs to the hospital. Why do not the other druggists have some of the trade.

Motions.

Ald. Patterson moved seconded by Ald. Donahue that the Hospital Board furnish to the Council a statement of receipts and xpenditures of the hospital for 1921.—Carried.

Council adjourned.

SUMMER HEAT HARD ON BABY

No season of the year is so dangerous to the life of little ones as is the summer. The excessive heat throws the little stomach out of order so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand the baby may be beyond all human help before the mother realizes he is ill. Summer is the season when diarrhoea, cholera infantum, dysentery and colic are most prevalent. Any one of these troubles may prove deadly if not promptly treated. During the summer the mother's best friend is Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels, sweeten the stomach and keep baby healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Would not be Without Zutoo Tablets At Any Cost

Mr. A. O. Norton, the millionaire Sack Manufacturer, of Boston, who recently died, was a great "booster" for Zutoo Tablets.

He suffered from headaches from childhood and when he found Zutoo Tablets stopped these headaches in a few minutes and left no bad effect, he began recommending them to his family and friends. In an unsolicited letter, Mr. Norton says in closing:

"My family use them when ever needed with equally good results. I have frequently given them to friends who were suffering from Headache and they never failed to give quick relief. I always carry Zutoo Tablets in my grip on the road and WOULD NOT BE WITHOUT THEM AT ANY COST."

AN EVERYDAY BLESSING

In answer to a circular letter recently sent out to thousands of people, including both glass-wearers and non-wearers, asking if they believe such troubles as headache, nervousness, stomach-trouble, or general fatigue, might if correctly diagnosed, be traced to their eyes; and if they thought glasses might possibly cure or palliate these troubles, seventy per cent. of the NON-WEARERS came out roundly with a "Yes" for answer.

An indication, we'll say, of the greater enlightenment of the present generation.

COTTON RAISING IN WEST AFRICA

Experimental Station is Located in the Niger River Valley

Cairo, Egypt, July 29.—Steady progress being made in the establishment of the Niger River Valley cotton experiment station, located in West Africa. The work is being done under the auspices of the French colonial authorities of Occidental Africa, who have selected Dr. Herbert H. Forbes, former dean of the College of Agriculture of Arizona, to report on the proposed irrigation project.

The French Consortium Committee has allotted the money for the station, and definite installations will be begun as soon as the credits are in hand.

Cotton seed and a selection of cotton plants have been sent to the station from the United States and Egypt. Cultivated lands in the vicinity of Kulikoro and El-Ouabadji, on the Niger above Timbuktu and bordering on French Senegal, are to be used for the experimental work. The first cultures will give returns during the winter of 1922-23. These will be used to secure a sufficient stock of pure cotton seed for the 1923-24 season.

The irrigation work contemplates ultimaely an irrigation dam similar to the Assouan dam on the Nile. Temporary pumping stations to care for the 1923-24 crop already have been installed. Every means or preventing cotton diseases and worm invasions will be adopted.

BETTY COMPSON RISES TO GREAT DRAMATIC HEIGHTS IN "THE GREEN TEMPTATION"

Betty Compson scores heavily in her latest Paramount starring vehicle "The Green Temptation" which was the feature attraction at Griffin's last night. Miss Compson proves herself a star of many well-developed talents. She portrays a versatile role of a woman whose life undergoes two big, vital, transitions. She has three names in the picture and in reality portrays three different characterizations.

First, she is the typical French Apache who loves the "game" and is one of the most notorious female crooks in Paris; then the theatrical dancer, the idol of the French Capital, and during and after the war, the broad-visioned woman, whose complete regeneration has been brought about by the tragedies and horrors of the conflict.

Theodore Kosloff, noted Russian dancer and screen actor, plays the heavy role—the Apache-Gaspard. Mahlon Hamilton is leading man and others of note such as Edward Burns, Neely Edwards, Mary Thurman and Betty Brice, make up an unusually clever cast.

An amusing comedy with Baby Peggy and Brownie the clever screen dog, a Travelogue, and George Walsh in the adventure play "With Stanley in Africa" were exhibited during the evening.

WALLIE REID AND FRANK MAYO HERE MONDAY

You who have had trouble with the landlord over raises in rent or who have found it impossible to rent a house at all, should consider the solution offered by "Rent Free", Wallace Reid's clever new Paramount comedy which is to be shown on the double feature program at Griffin's this Monday to Wednesday.

Mr. Reid plays the part of a young artist who is in low financial straits after a break with his father, a lawyer. He takes to the roof when his money gives out and lives and works there in a tent. He meets a girl (Lila Lee) who is in similiar financial difficulties and a love affair develops.

Possibly it may be news to some that in New York there are one or two fine bungalows built on the tops of skyscrapers in the heart of the city, but these would command big rentals.

However, a tent ought to come cheaply. Why not try it next time you are facing a housing problem? The air is fine and the summer days would be cooler "up in the air".

If a man's name is "Slipper Tongue", who ought to know it? A Woman! "Tracked to Earth", the 5 reel Universal photodrama starring Frank Mayo which is being exhibited on the same program, is the story of an intrepid young man with an eloquent "line". He argues himself out of being turned over by a girl captor to a posse wanting him for horse thievery. Of course the girl gets full blame for letting a nimble-tongued young Lochinvar get away from her, but that is the story.

A Fox Sunshine comedy will be exhibited in addition to the feature offerings.

HURLS CHILDREN FROM AUTO

Atlantic City, N. J., July 28.—The presence of mind of Mrs. Anna Rodkin, 31 years old, of 225 North Illinois Avenue, in hurling her two little girls out of her car and leaping after them probably saved the lives of all three when her automobile stalled in the centre of the railroad tracks at Illinois and Baltic Avenues. An instant after she jumped it was struck by an eastbound electric train from Philadelphia. The car was carried 40 feet and thrown alongside the tracks a twisted wreck.

Mrs. Rodkin and several witnesses blamed Charles Amdaloro, the flagman, for the accident. Both electric and steam trains pass at this crossing and there are no gates.

Mrs. Rodkin was driving up Baltic Avenue with her two small daughters Rebecca, 11 years old, and Dorothy, 9, on the front seat beside her. As she started across the tracks she saw the train rushing toward the crossing. At the same time, she said, the flagman came running out of the tower house waving a lantern and shouting for her to turn back.

Mrs. Rodkin stopped the car, but in her haste to shift gears and reverse the car stalled. Without even looking to see how near the train was, she picked up both children and threw them into the roadway. She jumped a moment before the train struck the automobile.

Amdaloro was unable to jump entirely clear of the car as the train hit it and was painfully bruised in the leg. He scrambled to his feet and picked up the children.

No Coal in City Conference Held On the Situation

Mayor, Aldermen and Local Coal Merchants, Confer on the Question of Keeping Belleville from Freezing up Next Winter

TO GET WELSH COAL IF STRIKE NOT OVER

Shall Belleville freeze next winter?

At the Schuster Company office this morning a brief conference was held at which Mayor Hanna, Aldermen Ostrom and Thompson were present, in reference to the local coal situation and the possibility of securing a supply for the use of citizens during the coming winter.

Mr. Schuster stated that it was no use denying the fact that the coal situation at present was serious but there was some evidence that the miners' strike in the United States would be settled within a few days. When mining was resumed in the States there was no doubt in his mind that Canada would get its quota. If however, it came to the worst, as far as his company was concerned, and he could not speak of the other coal dealers in the city, they were prepared to ship in British coal, but not unless this was found absolutely necessary. From May 1920 to May 1921 his company handled over 40,000 tons of coal which was by no means for local consumption as their territory was an extensive one in the line of jobbing. Roughly speaking some 20,000 tons was needed in the city for the season.

In answer to an enquiry from the Mayor Mr. Schuster was of the opinion that the situation could be better handled by the coal dealers of the city than by the City Council taking hold of it. The City Council the speaker stated had an experience one of dealing in coal and a considerable loss was entailed by the city, but through no fault of the members of the council at that time.

"How long would it take to get the coal from Britain?" asked the Mayor.

Mr. Schuster—"About three weeks." with the coal dealers in Britain since His firm had been in communication May last and there was no doubt that coal from there both anthracite and soft could be secured.

What about the price be was asked?

Mr. Schuster—That is not yet available but in a day or two he would have quotations and would give same to the members of the Council. This was a rather perplexed condition of affairs as Mr. Schuster explained. A cargo of coal might be ordered from Britain and before it arrived at Montreal coal from the United States might be available and it would possibly be laid down here cheaper that the coal from Britain. If the city was handling same and a loss occurred, citizens generally would blame the Council for the transaction.

Mr. Schuster also gave it as his opinion that the bringing in of British coal to Canada, would have a big effect on the strike which is now going on in the United States. In speaking of coal going to great terminals in the United States, Mr. Schuster stated that if Mr. Hoover should stop thte sending of coal to these places it would mean stopping works at the mines.

In concluding the interview Mr. Schuster stated that so far as his company was concerned it would put forth every effort to supply coal for the city and if at all possible would secure it from the United States.

The explanations made by Mr. Schuster were satisfactory to the delegation present and it was decided to leave the matter in his hands for a few days to see what turn the coal situation takes.

ALL OVER POTATOES.

Hamilton, July 31.—Arthur Stroud, Dundas Road, charged with using profane and insulting language on the central market, pleaded not guilty. Sam Simon, who laid the charge, said that the accused on Friday grabbed him by the neck and used vile language.

Stroud denied the rough language, but admitted threatening to punch Simon's nose for failing to live up to a bargain which he said had been made regarding some potatoes. He was allowed to go.

FRANCE FIRM WITH GERMANS

Hold Them to Agreement to Pay Their Debts

.... (Canadian Press Despatch).

Berlin, July 31.—France has rejected Germany's request for a reduction in the monthly payments on debts contracted by German Nationals with Allied citizens prior to the world war. The French note gives Germany ten days in which to signify that full payments will be continued in accordance with the London Agreement and the decision of the Allied clearing house offices, otherwise certain fixed measures will be applied automatically. A serious view of French reply is taken here.

AMERICAN APPETITES DOUBLE CANADIAN SALMON OUTPUT

Victoria, B.C., July 31.—Spring salmon caught in British Columbia waters is now being served as filling for "fish hot dogs", sold to industrial workers in the larger cities of the Eastern United States, notably New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

As a result of the popularity of the new delicacy, the British Columbia mild cure pack this year will double the 1921 output.

CONSTANTINOPLE NOT FOR GREEKS

Allies Will Prevent Occupation of Turkish Capital

Paris, July 31.—After announcing the Greek army would not cross the neutral zone in Thrace or attack allied troops occupying Constantinople the Athens Government yesterday formally requested permission to march into the Turkish capital.

This request was made of France instantly and firmly refused by all three.

It is not believed Greece will proceed now with any plans she may have had for entering Constantinople. This belief is held despite reports just received here that Greek patrols are penetrating the neutral zone, notably at Silevri on the Sea of Marmora.

Autonomy for India.

More important than the army movements is a Greek declaration of autonomy for the entire part of Asia Minor, occupied by the Greek army to which the Athens announcement gives the old name of Ionia.

The proclamation was issued at Smyrna by the Greek High Commissioner on instructions from Athens It declares that henceforth the country constitutes an autonomous state under the guarantee of the Greek army and will never be restored to Turkish rule.

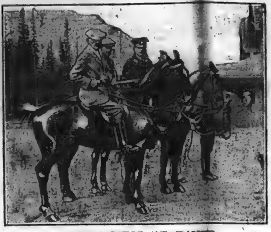
TRUTH TABOO IN TOGOLAND

London, July 31.—The natives of Togoland are a race of liars, says an official report on that British mandated sphere in Africa which was taken over from Germany. The report has just been issued as a "White Paper." Togoland was at one time a German Colonial possession in West Africa, and has a population of 900,000.

"The natives have no letters, arts or science," says the report. "Concealment of design is the first element of safety, and as this axiom has been consistently carried out for generations the native character is strongly marked by duplicity. Even in matters of little moment it is rare for them to speak the truth.



BARON BYNG AT BANFF

DURING his holidays at Banff in the Canadian Rockies, following his arduous tour of Western Canada, his Excellency the Governor General took an early morning ride each day, accompanied by Inspector Dennis Ryan, of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and members of his staff. Photo shows him returning to the Banff station of the Canadian Pacific, and his special train parked on a near siding. Banff is the capital of Rocky Mountain Park, and during his morning ride the Governor General saw wild deer, elk and mountain sheep, all of which find sanctuary in the park and show little fear of man.

CHILD PERISHES IN BURNING HOME

(Canadian Press Despatch)

St. Catharines, July 31.—The 22-months-old child of Thomas Barnes, of Louth Township, was burned to death last evening when the Barnes home was totally destroyed by fire. The mother was on her way to draw water and while a short distance from the house she rushed back to try and save her child, but she was prevented from jumping into the flames by campers from the nearby beach.

HOME RULE IS INDIA'S HOPE SAYS MRS. BESANT

Freemantle, Australia, July 31.—Home Rule for India, with Dominion status, is the objective of the Indian people, according to Mrs. Annie Besant, well-known Theosophist leader, who arrived here recently.

In the course of an interview Mrs. Besant said everything would be well in India, she thought, if Britain only would grant the country home rule.

The people, since Gandhi's imprisonment, were beginning to appreciate that he was not the divine being, able to work miracles, which they had believed him to be. She anticipated that agitation along constitutional lines would replace revolutionary tactics and would bring peace to India within a reasonable time.

LONDON THINKS OF NEXT AIR WAR

Appalling Picture of Future Raids by Fleets of Airplanes

London, July 31.—London is still thinking of what might happen to it in case enemy airships again ever flew over the city and the picture is not a pleasant one. The executive committee of the Parliamentary Air Committee has sent a letter to the Prime Minister in which, after referring to what was accomplished by air fighters in the European war, it proceeds to draw an appalling picture of the next war. The letter says:

"The bombs dropped in London during the last war averaged less than 100 pounds in weight. Bombs or torpedoes are now carried of 4,000 poundweight, containing a mass of high explosives. The effect of a dozen bombs of this character dropped in London can readily be conceived. There is not merely a possibility but a great probability that in the event of war, this country would be raided and London and other towns destroyed by squadrons or even fleets of airplanes travelling at 150 miles an hour at a height of 20,000 feet, silent as to their engines and certainly by night invisible."

The committee phrophysies that all great wars in future will begin with terrific battles in the air, and says that if the country suffers a real defeat in this first battle, the victor in a few days will destroy her ports, her railways, her munition factories and her capital by intensive bombardment from the air. It considers that at present England is not in a position successfully to combat an air attack, and that the government should appoint a strong commission to investigate.

ANTHRACITE IN ONTARIO

Toronto Geologist Claims That There's a Coal Field Near Sudbury

Toronto, July 31.—That there is anthracite coal which can be mined in Ontario is the contention of Alfred F. A. Coyne, consulting geologist of Toronto. Mr. Coyne produced a sample which he said was without doubt anthracite coal.

In describing the discovery of the samples, Mr. Coyne said that for years a country road had carried the inhabitants of Chelmsford over a rocky ledge, but as the ledge is just sandstone and shale no one had thought of digging in a few inches "If they had they would have found anthracite imbedded," he said In the opinion of Mr. Coyne, however, the structural formation of the ledge indicated the presence of coal and he investigated and brought to light the samples in question. Mr Coyne contends that the Sudbury basing has all the earmarks of a coal field.

The ambulance was called to the Kingsley Hotel Saturday, and one of the visitors who was seriously ill was taken o the Belleville General Hospital.

FOILS HIGHWAYMAN WITH BOTTLE OF INK

Peterboro, July 31.—A bottle of black ink was the weapon John Heron of this city used to defend himself when a hold-up man attempted to rob him in the early hours of Saturday morning. Heron was on duty as G.T.R. gateman at the time. He threw the ink bottle at the robber and when the latter fled notified the police and then gave chase. The hold-up man escaped.

ARCHDEACON BEAMISH RETURNS.

NO U.S. COAL FOR CANADA?

Dominion May Have to Rely on Its Own Fuel Resources

BIG SHORTAGE SURE

To-day Government Across the Line Assume Duties of Middlemen

Washington, July 31.—The requirements of Canada will not likely be taken into consideration in the Emergency Fuel Control Organization's plan. This was indicated Saturday by Secretary of Commerce Hoover, who is chairman of the recently appointed Federal Coal Distribution Committee. Mr. Hoover, in the course of a statement which was a broad outline of the scheme for emergency distribution of the coal supply announced that the committee has recommended to Canadian consumers that they import coal "for their own safety."

This is taken as an indication that the Dominion will have to rely upon its own resources.

Whether it will mean an embargo on the shipment of coal to Canada, or merely means that the various industrial sections of this country will have priority in the apportionment of cars for the shipment of coal is not known.

The Government, with the co-operation of the States, will assume tomorrow the duties of a middleman passing on the coal from the producing mines to the industries and localities which, in the eyes of the Government, need it most. Just how much coal the Government can count on remains a matter of speculation.

The total production for the past week of 3,900,000 tons of bituminous and 27,000 tons of anthracite is compared in the weekly report of the United States Geological Survey with a normal production at this season, including anthracite, of from 9,500,000 to 12,000,000 tons. Normal consumption at this time of year would be 8,000,000 tons of coal a week.

Covered by priority orders from the Interstate Commerce Commission all coal now being produced is to be bought under the fair price levels to be maintained by the Federal Fuel Distributor, freight cars being withheld from dealers who sell at advanced prices.

Railroads and interstate public utilities are to be the concern of the Federal Government. Bunker coal is to be kept to a minimum and foreign ships required to fill their bunkers abroad for the round trip, while exports will only be permitted in case of shipments destined for consumers who cannot otherwise supply themselves.

FIRE DESTROYS BARN AND GRAIN

During threshing on Thursday morning last fire broke out in the barn of David McAdams, 3rd Concession Rawdon, and totally destroyed both building and contents. There was a high wind raging at the time and the willing helpers were lucky in saving the threshing outfit. The barn was a comparatively new structure and contained about 500 bushels of old grain along with this seasons' crop of hay and a quantity of new grain.

STRIKE TO END DURING THIS WEEK

Washington Administration Looks to Settlement From Conferences

Chicago, July 31.—Peace terms have been agreed to in the country-wide railway strike, and formal ratification has been assured through President Harding's efforts, it was asserted tonight by a man in close official touch with the situation.

All that now remains before the strike, which has cost the workers upward of $40,000,000 in wages, passes into history, it was asserted, was the formal endorsement of the terms of settlement by the railroad executives, meeting in New York, and the strike leaders, who will convene in Chicago at the same hour on Tuesday.

PEOPLE SAFE ON STRANDED SHIP

Cargo of Breakfasts Taken to Passengers on Ship Grounded in Rapids

Montreal, July. 31.—The Canadian Steamship Lines steamer, Rapids Prince, which struck a rocky ledge yesterday afternoon while shooting the Lachine Rapids with over four hundred passengers, was still fast at an early hour this morning. Officials maintain that she is in no danger and state that the work of transferring the excursionists via another ship to terra firma will start almost immedately. Shortly after five o'clock this morning a relief ship was despatched to her with a cargo of breakfasts, which were served to the passengers.

Ogdensburg, N.Y., July 31.—Attempts to transfer four hundred passengers aboard the Rapids Prince when she grounded just after shooting the Lachine Rapids at 7 o'clock last night, will be made by the Rapids Queen, a sister ship, it was learned here this morning.

Montreal (Later).—J. W. Norcross, vice-president of the Canada Steamship Lines, left shortly after ten o'clock this morning for the scene of the accident, in a sea sled loaned by the Canadian Vickers Limited. As this novel craft has an engine of three hundred horse power and a capacity for about 25 people, it is expected that many, if not all the passengers on board the stranded vessel will be conveyed to shore by it.

aboard the Rapids Prince, which went aground in the Lachine Channel on Sunday evening, are being steadily removed from the vessel to Heron Island, from where they are being brought to the city in small craft. Over one hundred had been transferred by noon. Two Indians from Caughnawaga Reserve are assisting in the work.

MURNEY CLAIM ALMOST ENDED

Evidence all Submitted and Argument Dispensed With

On Saturday before the Board of Arbitrators in the Murney estate claim against the city the taking of evidence was completed.

Mr. Proctor, a civil engineer of Toronto gave evidence in rebuttal on some figures which had previously been submitted by Mr. J. D. Mill, former engineer of this city.

Mr. John Cornell gave it as his opinion that the entrance to the property on Bridge Street was an improvement rather than a detriment to the same.

Counsel engaged in the proceedings dispensed with arguments and the Board will meet tomorrow to consider the evidence submitted. It will in all probability be some days before judgment in the matter is rendered.

LLOYD GEORGE'S CLARION CALL

Calls Upon the Churches to Preach the Gospel of Righteousness

MUST FIGHT WAR

German Downfall a Lesson on the Futility of Force

London, July 30.—Addressing the National Free Church Council at a luncheon in his honor, Mr. Lloyd George declared that it was the duty of the churches to make a strong fight against war. He spoke in high praise of the League of Nations and revealed the fact that it was he who, at Paris, moved for its inclusion in the Treaty of Versailles.

"I speak as one who had something to do with war, and had to make a close study of it," he said. "During the war the cry was, 'Never again!' But there's a growing assumption that the conflict is coming again, sooner or later. That is the business of the Churches. What do I mean by that?

"The nations are building up their armaments; the nations that have been submerged and buried are building up new armaments. You have national animosities, national fears, suspicions, dislike, ambitions fostered and exaggerated. You have more than that to keep your eye on. What is happening? They are constructing more terrible machines than even the late war ever saw. What for? Not for peace. What are they for? They are not even to disperse armies; they are to attack cities unarmed, where you have defenseless populations, to kill, to maim, to poison, to mutilate, to burn helpless women and children. If the Churches of Christ throughout Europe and America allow that to fructify, they had better close their doors. The next war, if it ever came, would be a war on civilization itself.

A Sad Danger

"We have reduced our armaments, army, navy and air. We have reduced them beyond what they were before the war, and if all the nations on earth did the same there would be no peril to peace. But if is difficult for one nation to remain defenseless when others construct machinery which may be used for its destruction. Everything depends on the temper and spirit which is created throughout the world, and it should be a sad thing, a sad danger, if the people of the world came to the conclusion that Christianity, despite all of its principles, in spite of all its ideals, was perfectly impotent to prevent mischief of that kind."

LEAPS FROM TRAIN AND IS KILLED

Cayuga, Ont., July 31—Wm. Reid, of Dunnville, aged twenty-one years who with Wm. Fralick, also of Dunnville, was on a west-bound G.T.R. freight train, met with instant death by jumping from the train between Canfield and Canfield Junction, on Friday, at 11 p.m. Fralick also jumped but escaped with some bad cuts, falling on his face.

Reid's body was thrown some distance and was terribly mangled. Dr. Simpson, of Cayuga, when called, communicated with Harrison Arrill, Crown Attorney, at Caledonia. Dr. Quance, of Hagerville, Coroner, was notified, and, after viewing the body with a jury, gave permission for its removal. It was taken to Dunnville yesterday afternoon. The young men were bound for Widsor and jumped to catch an M.C.R. train.

CASTLE OF ROMANCE FOR SALE

Immortalized by Sir Walter Scott in "Marmion"—is Now Under the Hammer

London, July 31.—Tantallon Castle in North Berwick, for centuries the stronghold of the Douglases, is to be sold this summer.

In Sir Walter Scott's "Marmion" the battlements of the Tantallon are the meeting place of Clare and her lover.

Around its walls many fierce battles have been fought. At one time the castle was besieged by King James V., who failed to make a breach in its 12 feet walls and starved out the garrison. Later it was the scene of onslaughts by Cromwell and the Covenanters.

Conference held in Washington to se if legislation to prevent strikes is possible. Left to right: Samuel Gompers, Edgar Wallace, legislative representative of the A. F. of L.; Frank Morrison, secretary of the A. F. of L.; Senators Walsh, Borah and King.

SOME RARE OLD BOOKS

ANCIENT VOLUMES ARE WORTH A SMALL FORTUNE.

Collection of Old Canadian Press Products In the Toronto Public Library Possesses Much Historic Interest—Some Native Literature Prior to 1840.

The Toronto Public Library has some six hundred books which the general public does not see excepting after a special application. They are the rare volumes that have been gathered together since 1884 and repose in a special steel vault with a powerful lock. Dr. Locke and his assistants do not make a special point of collecting books because they are old or difficult to replace; their objective is early Canadian literature prior to 1840. To the layman the question of price is always of interest when the topic of rare books is mentioned, even before the covers are opened and the contents examined. There is no specific value placed on these books at College and St. George, but it is doubtful if they could be replaced from known collections for thirty thousand dollars. A few long companions have brought a hundred dollars apiece at auction sales where their proud owners have been forced to take them.

To look at a time-stained pocket volume that is worth more than a Victory bond stimulates a desire to ascertain what makes it so valuable. This depends upon its authentic date and the owners of the press. There were presses in Nova Scotia as early as 1750, but collectors do not value their product as highly as that which came from the first presses in Quebec and Montreal. Brown and Gilmour were the leading printers in Quebec, and Fleury Mesplet had a monopoly on the market at Montreal from 1776 until about 1790. Presses then followed at Kingston and a few years later in the little settlement from which Toronto grew.

The library has a copy of a book called "Nehiro." It is one of its greatest treasures, and was the first book printed in Canada in the Indian text. It is a prayer book in the language of the Montagnais. It came from the hand presses of Brown and Gilmour at Quebec in 1767. This firm printed a number of books on theological and government topics, and the library has in all some eight copies as well as agricultural papers.

Fleury Mesplet was supported for some time by Benjamin Franklin and was sent to Montreal by a number of Philadelphia gentlemen to attempt a movement to win the Roman Catholic clergy over to the side of the New England colonists who were planning revolt. He lost his stock of paper while crossing Lake Champlain and was obliged to use wall paper for his early Montreal publications. The library has one of his books printed for the Montreal clergy in 1777. The cover still retains something of the bright blue design of the wall paper.

In 1809 John Strachan, afterwards first Bishop of Toronto, published in Montreal a text book on "Practical Arithmetic." John Strachan taught school during his study for ordination and even for some time afterwards. Glancing over his questions in the book, one may readily see why boys of tender years slipped down the back stairs and ran away to sea. Imagine the sons of our sturdy pioneers struggling with this one:

"If twenty-four and five-eighths bales of cloth each containing seventeen and thirteen forty-fourth yards of cloth cost three hundred pounds thirteen shillings five pence and a farthing, what costs it for seventeen and three-fifths bales containing nineteen and three-seventh yards at the same rate?"

The next school book which appeared in Canada was a history by Wm. Smith. It covered the period from Jacques Cartier to 1791, and appeared in 1815. Wm. Smith was clerk of the Assembly at Quebec. His book was in two volumes and the library class this amongst their greatest treasures. As far as it is known the first book published at York (Toronto) was a small pamphlet covering the acts passed by the Legislature in 1818. This is followed in the library collection by a report of the Upper Canada Bible Society in 1818 and one on the formation of the York Bible Society in 1823. This was printed by Wm. Lyon Mackenzie.

The first Canadian romance, as far as is known, was printed at Kingston in 1824. It was entitled "The Nun of Canada, Containing Scenes From Real Life." It was written by a Miss Julia Beckworth, who went to Upper Canada from New Brunswick.

The following year, 1825, J. L. Alexander published a poem called "A Day at the Falls of Niagara." As far as known this is the first poem published in Canada, and the library has an excellent copy of it.

In 1832 David Thompson, of Niagara Falls, published a treatise on the war of 1812-1815, styled "The Late War." For many years this was thought to be the first book published in Upper Canada, but the research department of the library secured the earlier ones mentioned above.

The reader may wonder where these old books come from and how they find their way into the steel vault of the library. Auction sales are the chief source of supply, and sometimes exchanges are made where the library has more than one copy of a rare book. Nearly every Canadian collector issues a catalogue of his works, and it is indeed a poor book fan who does not know in which collection the choice gems are housed. Values are regulated by previous prices offered for similar works with due regard to the condition of the book and other details. These old books are of great value to historical students engaged in research work and the library officials are making every effort to encourage this form of literary endeavor.—L. B. Jackes.

A LINK TO THE PAST.

Bridgetown, N.S., Will Celebrate Centennial.

Arrangements now being made to celebrate the centennial of Bridgetown, N. S., in the first week of September will bring into prominence the fact that this community was originally settled by an ancestor, on the maternal side, of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Rene Foret, son of Michel Foret (or Forest), a native of France, and of Marie Hebert, was born at Port Royal in 1670. He married Francoise Dugas, and died in 1751. His brother Jean, born in 1677, and married to Isabella LaBarre, settled at Beaubassin and was the ancestor of Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Two bloody massacres in the vicinity of Rene Foret's river changed the name to Bloody Creek. In 1711 a party of 42 Indians in ambush in the woods fell upon a company of 80 British soldiers sailing up the Annapolis river from Port Royal, slaying 30 of the troops and taking the remainder prisoners. In December, 1757, more than 20 British soldiers belonging to an Irish regiment recently landed at Port Royal were slain at Rene Foret's river, being fired upon by French refugees who had escaped from the Acadian expulsion of 1755. The story of the massacre and the gallant fight of the British soldiers in crossing the river on their return march, under the enemy's fire, is graphically told in Knox's Journal, discovered only a few years ago in England. The prisoners captured at Grenville by the French refugees were carried to Miramichi, and the following spring the escape of one, named Easton, and his return to Port Royal, brought news of the fate of his companions.

This British soldier became the ancestor of a long line of settlers in the Annapolis Valley, one of whom is Charles H. Easson, now general manager of the Standard Bank in Toronto.

The ruins of the cellar of Rene Foret's farmhouse on the banks of Bloody Creek, as well as the cellars of a number of French houses demolished during the expulsion of the Acadians, still exist as historic mementoes. A memorial tablet will be erected at Bloody Creek during the centennial celebration, and there will be pageants with historic floats.

A PROBLEM IN PALESTINE

The British Government is Sandwiched in Between Two Promises

London, July 31.—The government is unremitting in its efforts to find solution of the Palestine problem. To this end it has, among other things, recently published the official correspondence that has passed between the government, the Palestine Arab delegation now in London, and the Zionist organization since last February.

Included is an official statement of British policy, as given out July 1 to the effect that a Jewish national home will be founded in Palestine and Jewish people will be in Palestine as of right and not sufferance. The disappearance of subordination of the Arab population, language or culture is not contemplated, and the establishment of a full measure of self-government in Palestine will be fostered. The special position of the Zionist Executive does not entitle it to share in the government of the country.

The Arab delegation has replied to this statement of policy as follows:

"Since its establishment in Palestine the Zionist Commission has very much interfered with the administration of Palestine under one pretext or another, all of which were based on solicitude for Jewish interests.

"One military administrator after another, and one British official after another, had to go because they could not and would not govern the country on lines laid down by the Zionist Commission.

"We see division and tension between Arab and Zionist increasing day by day and resulting in general retrogression, because the immigrants dumped upon the country from different parts of the world are ignorant of the language, customs and character of the Arabs, and enter Palestine by the might of England and against the will of the people, who are convinced that these people have come to strangle them. Nature does not allow the creation of a spirit of co-operation between the two peoples so different.

"The fact is that His Majesty's government has placed itself in the position of a partisan in Palestine of a certain policy which the Arab cannot accept because sooner or later it means his extinction."

Commenting on this official correspondence, a diplomatic correspondent writes in the Sunday Times:

"Briefly put, the British government finds itself uncomfortably sandwiched in between two sets of promises. Driven by the exigencies of the great war to demand on behalf of the Allies the co-operation of the Arabs against the turks, Britain agreed to recognize their independence within a territory which included Palestine and Syria. That was on October 4, 1915.

"On November 2, 1917, possibly with a view to obtaining other and equally necessary support, the Earl of Balfour made his famous declaration in favor of the establishment of a Jewish home in Palestine."

The passage by the House of Lords the latter part of June of the Islington motion, disapproving the Balfour declaration, was immensely popular in Palestine, where this incident is regarded as a notable Arab victory.

WANTS NO FIGURES IN SHINING ARMOUR

Berlin, July 30.—The former Palace grounds of the one-time Emperor William in the Lustgarten, where martial trumpet blasts a few years ago greeted the war lord of Monarchial Germany, today echoed and re-echoed with the shouts and speeches of some 50,000 Republicans opposed to war.

The gathering was part of the international movement to observe the eighth anniversary of the commencement of the world war.

It was held by the "No More War" Assembly. Similar meetings had been provided for in more than two hundred German cities and towns.

Railway News

Irish newspapers follow up the careers of Irishmen who leave the Green Isle. The Irish Independent had the following item a few days ago:

Sir Herbert Samuel Holt, of Montreal, whose eldest son, Capt. H. P. Holt, M.C., is to marry Aileen Elizabeth, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Cairns, of Montreal, is a man of considerable standing in Canadian commercial circles. He is a banker and railway engineer, and, besides being President of the Royal Bank of Canada, is a director of the C.P.R.

He is an Irishman, being born in the Co. Kildare in 1856, the son of the late Mr. Grattan Holt. Capt. Holt was in the 3rd Dragoon Guards.

J. M. Gilmour, chief clerk in the C.P.R. general offices at Lethbridge, has been transferred to the same position in the superintendent's office at Medicine Hat. J. H. Fairley, chief clerk at Edmonton, will succeed Mr. Gilmour at Lethbridge. The former is being replaced in Edmonton by S. C. Connelly of Medicine Hat. J. M. Gilmour was the first chief clerk in the Lethbridge division, having been placed here to open the office August 1, 1914. He has been with Supt. C. D. MacKintosh since that date. He has always taken a keen interest in the activities of the C.P.R. Social and Athletic club.

No man in Canada has the reputation of equalling Geo. H. Ham, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., as a raconteur and a wit. Sir Thos. White once called him "a great national asset."

Mr. Ham added that he was glad that Sir Thomas had fortunately not forgotten the "et." Even in the hospital undergoing an operation for appendicitis, Mr. Ham sustained his reputation, as his best story, probably, will show.

When he lost consciousness, he says, his last thought was "This is eternity."

"When I recovered from the effects of the opiate, I found myself in a darkened room, and wondered where I was and what it was all about. The kindly-featured nurse quickly discovered that my consciousness had returned, and came to my bedside, and then I remembered everything. 'But why this dark room? It was early morning when they operated on me, but now it can't be night.'

"'No, it isn't,' she seriously responded, 'but we were afraid of the shock you might get.'

"'Why, what shock?'

"'Well, there was a big fire just across the street, and we were afraid if you awoke, and saw the flames, you might think that the operation hadn't been successful.'

"That shows you what it is to have a reputation."

The Commercial Cable Company and C.P.R. Telegraphs have taken over the Postal Telegraph Service in Newfoundland and are now handling all business over the Newfoundland government's cables, and land lines.

Whatever the volume of the coal and grain business this fall, the Canadian Pacific would be in position to handle it. This was the assurance given by Grant Hall, vice-president of the company, at Calgary. Mr. Hall is on his annual tour. He is in a most hopeful frame of mind regarding the crop situation in the three western provinces. Present prospects, he stated, were that there would be a fair average crop.

"No, I do not anticipate any complications arising on this side owing to the strike among United States shopmen," he remarked in reply to a question. "There is no occasion to think this at the present time," he added.

Assistant Superintendent W. M. Neal of the C.P.R., who is leaving Toronto, to become general superintendent of Algoma district with headquarters at North Bay, and H. J. Humphrey, superintendent of the Trenton division of the C.P.R., who is to succeed Mr. Neal, were entertained to dinner by C.P.R. officials at Toronto recently. Mr. Neal was presented with silver candlesticks and Mr. Humphrey with an umbrella.

A meeting of a committee of citizens named to consider the building of a Seamen's Institute at Quebec, on the site in the harbor secured from the Government, was held recently at the Royal Bank building.

Mr. J. T. Ross presided over the assembly, and a letter was read from Commander Elliot of the Canadian Pacific Steamships, stating that he was authorized by Mr. George M. Bosworth, on behalf of Mr. E. W. Beatty, president of the C.P.R., to say that the latter company would subscribe $5,000 towards the building, provided that the remainder of the amount required for the purpose is obtained from other sources.

The plans call for an expenditure of from $25,000 to $30,000.

It was decided to accept this offer with gratitude, and preliminary discussion took place as to ways and means of collecting the balance of the amount.

BLIND ARMENIAN ORPHANS TO HAVE SCHOOL

Alexandropol, Armenia, July 29.—A school for the blind, the first of its kind in Armenia, will be opened here this summer by the Near East Relief, under the direction of Dr. R. T. Uhls, of Kansas City. The pupils will be 150 Armenian war orphans, aged 5 to 14 years. Most of them are victims of trachoma, the dreaded eye disease which is the scourage of the Near East.

The school, operated in connection with the American trachoma hospitals here, will be called "Cleveland House" in honor of the city of Cleveland. Funds for the maintenance of the school are provided out of the war-chest contribution which the city of Cleveland makes annually to the Near East Relief.

Cleveland will be represented at the dedicatory exercises by Miss Jane Hardcastle, of that city. The Armenian Soviet government will be officially represented by the Ministers of Education and Social Welfare.

BANKS DO NOT APPEAL TO THIS MILLIONAIRE

Petrograd, July 31.—Russia now boasts of several "trillionaires." These are men who have made fortunes in Russian currency, and count this wealth in astronomical figures. One speculator is credited with profits of $4,000,000 which amounts to 15,000,000,000,000 rubles. He is putting his wealth into gold, silver and jewels, and the stabler currencies of foreign countries.

DOUBT DISCOVERY OF COAL FIELD

Ottawa, July 30.—The statement made in Hamilton by A. F. Coyne that anthracite has been discovered in commercial quantities near Sudbury is received with incredulity at the Mine Department here. Similar reports have, it is stated, been made at intervals for several decades, and on investigation it has been found that the samples were anthraxolite. This is a mineral similar in appearance to anthracite, but of brighter lustre and of lower specific gravity. When it occurs without admixture, it makes good fuel; but ordinarily it is found mixed with quartz and calcite. In the pure form it has not been found in Canada in commercial quantities.

LLOYD GEORGE'S CLARION CALL

First Proposed the League.

Lloyd George then declared he was one of those who attached high hopes to the League of Nations, the covenant of which, he reminded his hearers, was in the first part of the Treaty of Versailles. He continued: "I am entitled to boast of that. I was the first man to propose in the Council of Ten at Paris that the League of Nations should be an essential part of the treaty. (Loud cheers). It is there in the forefront of this much-abused treaty.

"The League of Nations is an essential part of the machinery of civilization. If it succeeds, civilization is safe; if it fails—and I speak advisedly—civilization is doomed."

Lloyd George then insisted upon the folly of believing that the machinery of the League alone would save the world. It was the spirit behind the League that could alone give it the proper motive power in foreign relations.

Conflict Comes Swiftly

He spoke of the difficulty of speaking frankly on foreign relations.

"It is difficult, very difficult," he said. "You speak with strength and often with suppression which, you certainly would not exercise in matters affecting the political issues of your own country. Public opinion there is not amenable to public opinion here. The result is that a conflict comes very suddenly. How many men were there in August, eight years ago this week, who thought that the most terrible war in the world was just about to start? How many men who were supposed to be in the know thought so? Just you read the books that have been written, even in Germany, on that subject. Men supremely responsible thought a day or two before war was declared that the whole trouble was over. It comes with a suddenness which is appalling, perfectly appalling. Well, it is too late then to work the elaborate machine. The war germ is just like any other germ. You really do not know that it has got you until you are stricken down.

"It is no use," he went on, "reasoning with people once frenzy has seized them. You might as well reason with an epileptic in his fit. It is fear, and, most dangerous of all, there is distrust. There is no nation that will believe anything that is said by another nation They say, What are they up to? There is some deception behind it. They may be telling the truth, at least most of the truth. They might even tell the whole truth, and the more they tell it the less it is believed. There is that atmosphere in the world, and it is all explosive material littered all over Europe. When metal has been dropped into the explosives it is no good brandishing the Covenant of the League of Nations in the face of the explosion."

Lloyd George then pointed out that already a new generation was arising which knew not the hideousness and remorselessness of war.

Only the Gorgeous Picture Left

"These are always forgotten," he said. "I had to read up for the purpose of some debate or other the other day the history of the post-war period of 1816 1817, 1819, 1820 and 1821, when there were millions starving. Waterloo. You see pictures of it, gorgeous pictures of it, thrilling pictures, pictures that make you feel as if you could grasp a sword and dash along with those horsemen. What followed Waterloo? Nobody reads about that, nobody knows, and they forget the disorganization of trade and of industry.

"The difficulty of getting your daily bread; hundreds and thousands tramping the streets to find some opportunity of earning a living for themselves and for their children, and tramping in vain despair that filled the land; high taxation, high prices—all that will have gone, but the glory of war will always be blazoned forth.

For Russia and Germany

"A new generation will be judging the issue when the time comes and they will forget what happened in Europe. And Russia. No way out of the pit, and sinking deeper into it with every convulsive effort. Also a Germany clinging desperately to the rotten branch of debased currency, and when that gives way God help Germany. That is forgotten.

"It is the business of the Church of Christ to keep that before the eyes of the people. What was one of the great lessons of the war? I will tell you. Once there was a nation with the most perfect army in the world. It was beaten because it had a bad cause. There were nations with ill-equipped armies. They won. Why? They had righteousness on their side. (Cheers.) I remember Marshal Foch telling me that the German army that marched into France was the most perfect military machine that had ever been put together. Scattered Destroyed It is only now just a bare police force, barely adequate to keep order in its own land, without being a menace to any other country. Why? The consciousness of the world destroyed it because it fought for an unrighteous cause. (Cheers.) That is one of the lessons of the war. Trust not in force."

Then the Premier remarked: "I am glad that at the head of the greatest Church in Christendom at the present moment is a man who is a profound believer in peace. He exercises great sway on the consciences of millions in many lands in the cause of peace, and I rejoice in that fact."

His Life-Work for Peace

He added one personal note; "I have had," he said, "some experience of war. It was not my will. I was just like millions of othrs caught by the cogwheel of war and drawn into its horrible machinery. How I got there, why I got there, is not for me to say. I simply did my duty. (Loud cheers.) But what I saw of it for years filled me with horror. There is no more horrible alternative between devising the machinery of slaughter and abandoning, on the other hand, the cause of right, liberty and humanity. But what I saw of it, day by day, makes me vow that I will consecrate what is left of my energies to make it impossible that humanity shall, in future, have to pass through the fire, torment, sacrilege, horror and squalor of war."

HISTORY OF CAN. METHODISM

Canada Owes Political and Religious Freedom to Egerton Ryerson

(Written specially for the Canadian Press by one of the Leading Ministers of the Methodist Church in Canada.) With the forthcoming Canadian Methodist General Conference to be held in Toronto in September next, it is interesting to recall the contribution of Methodism to the religious, social and intellectual life of Canada. The romance of the founders of Methodism in Canada, of the hundreds of circuit riders, and of her famous orators, preachers and statesmen is one of the most glorious in the not inconspicious annals of a country whose origin and development have been a veritable epic of romance.

The fact has been repeated with monotonous regularity that the Wesleyan Revival saved England. The vitality of the spiritual experience of Methodism poured into the hardening arteries of the religious life of the world a spiritual life that has quickened it ever since. Into the New World it was borne along by the trader, the soldiers of the Imperial Army, by Loyalists and by a multitude of humble and courageous men and women seeking their homes and fortunes in the unexplored wilds of America. In fact Methodism has ever been a crusade faith.

When Canada was divided in 1791 into two provinces, Upper and Lower Canada, were thereby created, the former being Protestant and the latter being Roman Catholic. Pitt, through the instigation of Sir John Graves Simcoe, the Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada, secured by treaty one seventh of all public lands for the support of the clergy and for the erection of rectories. The establishment of the Church was deemed necessary in order to uphold the weight and influence of the Crown, and also to minimize the influence of democracy. The government of the new Colony was not thought complete without a Protestant Bishop.

The obvious intention of England was to fasten upon Canada a state church with special rights and privileges. Fox saw the motive at once and withstood it, maintaining that all churches were entitled to share in the benefits provided by the Imperial Government. Some time later the provision was expanded to include the Church of Scotland.

There now arose a champion for Protestant dissent in Canada in the form of a young man, a son of a strict Anglican home, Egerton Ryerson. Born in 1803 he was ordained a Methodist Minister in 1829 and in the same year founded the "Christian Guardian" a journal which has ever since stood out for truth, justice and independence. It started when there were only two other secular papers in Upper Canada, with a small capital raised by a few scantily-paid preachers and a circulation of three hundred. The editor and publisher, Egerton Ryerson, not only provided the print but supervised the mechanical work and folded the papers and mailed them himself. This modest publishing enterprize has developed into the Methodist Book and Publishing House, otherwise known as the Ryerson Press, and may justly be called the mother of printing houses in Canada. Men trained here have gone out and become founders of other publishing houses of world-wide repute. Ryerson was a man of great gentleness and kindness but when aroused his giant figure took on a menacing aspect and his words cut like whips. It is to Egerton Ryerson more than any other single individual that Ontario in particular and Canada in general owes its political religious, and educational freedom.

Presbyterians stood to win in any event so far as the money grants went, but the educational tests for the university harmed them as much as any other. It was because of this that Queen's University was founded. As the sense of rankling justice welded together the nonconformist sects in their determination to secure redress, Ryerson became the general of the opposing forces of the dissenters in Upper Canada, and he was a fighter who drew from his enemies the acknowledgement of his courage, ability and sincerity.

The results achieved in this struggle were many. All churches in Canada were placed upon equal footing; members of all denominations were allowed the protection of the law and were enabled to secure property and erect esbuildings; nonconformist ministers were authorized to solemnize marriages; all lands held by the crown were for the people, intellectual and political privileges were available for all classes.

With the passing of the Family Compact, the establishment and the Clergy Reserves, Upper Canada entered upon an era of unprecedented progress. Other strong men rallied to the standard principal among them being George Brown. With the establishment of religious freedom and the principles of democracy Ryerson and his followers now addressed themselves to government and education.

The military, legal and governing class insisted upon private schools, privately supported. This was distasteful to the Scotchmen and followers of Ryerson. Such a system was out of joint with the spirit of the new world. The next step was to place education as a charge upon the province and to provide free instruction in public schools for all. Again the forces of freedom went and Egerton Ryerson was commissioned to organize a system of education for the Province. This has become the basis of the public school system of Canada.

The beginning made by Ryerson was no isolated and singular performance in the history of the Canadian Methodist Church. Methodism has supplied the Dominion with a constantly expanding army of educators, legislators, public servants and crusaders in every walk of life.

Her colleges and universities number over a score and a half. Her periodicals have increased in number from the three hundred numbers of the first annual distribution of the "Christian Guardian" to over twenty-four million last year. She gave to Canada one of her greatest journals of Religion and the oldest and largest publishing house. Here members have not only moulded the destinies of our own land but have given invaluable service at the councils of the nations. Her orators have been famed over the earth. Her religious education organization has become an instrument of tremendous power and importance. Her missionary policies have placed her in the van of the world's benefactors. Her social legislation stands out unique in Christendom. Her spiritual life has leavened the life of the nation Her spirit of discovery and crusade have sent out her sons and daughters into every walk of life filled with passion for service. Artists authors, poets, educators, artificers of the spirit without number have first had their imaginations kindled and their minds disciplined in Canadian Methodist homes.

From the days of Ryerson there have stood forth an ever increasing army of men and women splendidly endowed in mind and heart, doughty champions of a country of free men, freely expressing themselves, freely educating themselves, worshipping freely as they chose and freely hewing out their own destinies. Ryerson brought the people freedom and equality before the law and laid deep and strong those institutions which should equip the new democracy to assume its proper place and achieve its rightful destiny In schools, in journals for the dissemination of independent opinion, in a publishing house and books were laid broad and well in the minds and spirits of the people of Canada, the foundations of truth, tolerance, reverence independence and nationhood.

HORSE'S SENSE SAVED DRIVER

"Stop, or I'll Shoot!" Had No Effect on Fiery Steed

Hamilton, July 29.—The bolting of a horse saved William Stewart, a driver for the Hamilton Dairy, from losing all his cash when two men attempted to hold him up at 3.40 o'clock on Macnab street north, near Colborne street. According to the report given to the police by Stewart a few minutes later, he had just reached the intersection of Macnab and Colborne streets when two men appeared. One stayed back in the shadow of a tree, while the other stepped in front of the wagon and said: 'Stick up your hands," pointing a revolver at Stewart. What might have happened then is hard to tell for the horse conveniently bolted down the street, leaving the "highwayman" much in the rear. "Stop or I'll shoot," yelled the would-be robber after the departing wagon, but the driver could not stop if he wanted to and so got away.

Constables Witthum, Gent, McGregor and Shaver made a hurried trip to the scene of the hold-up, but although the vicinity was searched systematically no trace of the bandits could be found.

Stewart was only able to describe the one man, who he said was dark, medium height, wearing a dark suit and a grey cap.

HOUSE MOTTOES.

Words That Welcome the Traveler and the Guest.

In a Memoir of Henry Nicholson Ellacombe, published by County Life, there is an interesting chapter on House Mottoes; the chapter is a reprint of an article written by the subject of the memoir himself some years ago.

Most of the English mottoes the author quotes he has either collected, or copied, himself, or had them copied by trustworthy friends. It is an interesting collection. He says that he can find nothing like our House Mottoes among the Greeks, yet the Greeks had a high opinion of the duties of hospitality; and it is from Homer that we get the much-used proverb: "Welcome the coming, and speed the parting guest."

Dealing with English house mottoes and inscriptions, the author gives the first place to those which tell of hearty welcome. The Romans contented themselves with Salve, and in thousands of houses at home, and abroad, that has been considered enough; especially by foreign hotel-keepers, who seem to think it essential to their large door-mats. But in England the word "Welcome" is much dearer. It comes home to us with the sound of heartiness. And so in many houses that one word by itself serves for the house motto.

This welcome "has been expanded into some hundreds of variants, all meaning the same thing, yet each conveying its own separate message, and many of them are very beautiful."

One of the best is over a door at Montacute, Somerset:

Through this wide-opening gate
None comes too early, none returns too late.

On a porch at Beddington there is this:

To those who cross the threshold of this door
A hearty welcome, both to rich and poor;
One favor only we would bid you
grant,
Feel you're at home, and ask for what you want.

To this may be added the following very appropriate Shakespearean motto, placed by Mr. J. Halliwell Phillips, on his house at Ditchling Road, near Brighton:

Come hither—come hither—come hither—
Here shall you see no enemy but winter and rough weather.
—"As You Like It."

And on the door leading to the library:

Open locks, whoever knocks.
—"Macbeth."

The author quotes several other mottoes which imply a welcome, but a welcome with a difference. For example, at Penny Hall, Almondbury, there is one of such doubtful meaning that the guest might almost interpret it as he liked:

Intret fides—exeat fraus.
(Enter faith: away with deceit.)

Again, at Losely House, Surrey, the old seat of the More family, we have—

Probis non pravis.
(For honest men, not knaves.)

There are many mottoes of good advice. George Herbert's at Bemerton comes first:

To My Successor
If thou chance for to find
A new house to thy mind,
And built without thy cost,
Be good to the poor
As God gives the store,
And then my labor's not lost.

At Alnwick we have this:

That which your father of old hath purchased and left you to possess, do you dearly hold to show his worthiness.

There are many good mottoes for wayside drinking places. Amongst them we have Sir Walter Scott's inscription on a wayside spring near Flodden:

Drink, weary pilgrim, drink and pray
For the kind soul of Sybil Grey,
Who buylit this cross and well.

The story goes that a publican close by asked Sir Walter to give him some lines like those on the well for his house; and that he gave him:

Rest, weary traveler, drink and pay.

Tavern and other trade inscriptions have been abundantly chronicled. The author mentions a curious one to be found on a public-house at Wymondham:

Non mihi glis servus, nec hospes hirudo.
(Here you will find no sleepy servant or blood-sucking host.)

A Fair Favorite of Fortune.

Miss Edwina Ashley, whose engagement to Lord Louis Mountbatten, M.V.O., R.N., was recently announced, is a granddaughter of the late Sir Edward Cassel, a large part of whose estate, provisionally sworn at $30,000,000, she inherited by his will. She was born in 1901 and is said to be the richest girl in England. Lord Louis Mountbatten is a cousin of the Prince of Wales.

Pauper's Death Recalls Scandal

Levi Wilson-Moen's recent death, friendless and alone in Newark, has recalled memories of a remarkable scandal with which his name was associated off and on for forty years, a scandal which interested millions of newspaper readers, seemed a dozen times about to become the occasion for drastic police action, but did not do so, and finally died out without anybody knowing exactly what it was all about. Just who Levi Wilson-Moen was we do not know. His name was partly assumed. The Moen part he tacked on after the death of Philip L. Moen, of Worcester, Mass., head of the great barbed wire trust. He may have been entitled to the name of Moen. Certainly he had some strong hold over the old millionaire, for he extorted money from him for years, the total sum being probably not far short of half a million dollars. The dealings of the men resulted in two suits at law. In one of them Moen denied that he was being blackmailed by Wilson; in the other he asserted that he was being blackmailed. One trial ended inconclusively, the other in favor of the millionaire, but the judgment against Wilson does not appear to have prevented him from continuing his extortions. Even after Moen's death Wilson received a large sum of money from the estate.

Nobody knows to this day when the relationship between the two men began. Moen was a millionaire, and Wilson a young roustabout in a livery stable when, so far as is known, they met for the first time. One morning Wilson walked into a bank and presented a cheque for a large sum signed by Moen. The clerk knew both Moen and Wilson, but being aware that the latter never had fifty dollars at any one time in his life before, telegraphed to Moen before he handed out the money. He received this reply: "Pay any cheque bearing my signature that Levi Wilson may present." The surprised clerk obeyed and in the next few months had many a substantial cheque to pay to Wilson, who spent the money as swiftly as he received it and became noted for his extravagances and profligacies. The local hotel did not suit him, so he had it rebuilt and sent the bills to Moen, who paid without a murmur. He ceased work and established a stable of fine horses, entertained lavishly and dabbled in politics. He married the daughter of a prominent manufacturer, making the stipulation that he should not be questioned about his paternity or the source of his money.

This stipulation suggests that he may have been the son of Moen. The latter was a man of little education or inventive ability, but he had business sense, knew much about organizing trusts and knew how to make his combinations pay. He began life obscurely, and drifted to New York as a clerk in a hardware store, where he sold, among other things, Ichabod Washburn's barbed wire, which was just coming on the market. Ichabod was a rough old mechanic and church deacon in Worcester. Moen met him and went to work in his factory, which was a small affair. Subsequently he married Washburn's daughter. Eventually the concern grew to tremendous proportions, and when Ichabod died in 1870 he had some millions to leave to his daughter and his daughter's husband, besides a business that was later turned into a trust.

Still less is known about Levi Wilson. He was supposed to have been the son of a coachman and his wife in a little place in Connecticut. It never was established that he had worked for either Washburn or Moen, although at the time he was drawing his blackmail from the latter the general supposition was that he had made some important inventions for the firm and that he was only now being rewarded. A search of the patent records failed to show Wilson as an inventor, and certainly Washburn was making barbed wire when Wilson was a baby, if not before he was born. Then the supposition was that Wilson had legal proof of some disgraceful act that Moen had committed and was simply a blackmailer. Moen was distinguished as a church worker and supporter and it was thought that disgrace would break his heart even if it had no appreciable effect upon the wire business.

But this theory has its manifest weakness. Moen was already besmirched, because Wilson had made no secret of the fact that he could get as much money from him as he wanted. The thing was a newspaper scandal. At one of the trials, Moen admitted that Wilson was being bribed for his silence. He said that the man had come to him and told him that he had been a witness of a certain disgraceful act and that he wanted $100 or there would be trouble. Moen denied that the act involved him, but said that he paid rather than have a scandal, and having made the first false step had to continue to pay. Wilson put forward a story about a breach of promise charge which he had settled at Moen's instance for a large sum of money which he was then trying to collect from Moen who had made a first payment and then had defaulted. These stories were generally disbelieved and seem to be discredited by the known facts. After Moen's death, Wilson returned from the West where he had been in seclusion and calling himself Levi Wilson-Moen secured considerable sums from the heirs or from a fund which had been left to provide for him, as some say, or which had been left to fight his further claims, as others say. Later this source failed him and he died a beggar.

CIVIC EFFICIENCY NEEDED

Belleville's tax rate has been struck at 38 mills, and many worthy citizens feel like striking. Another mill on the dollar seems like another mill-stone around their necks. Well might they retort to the Department of Labor at Ottawa—"and yet you tell us that the cost of living is coming down!"

A tax-rate of 38 mills is certainly too high for this city, but under the existing form of civic management it will continue to go up rather than down. If some man with a glimmer of financial genius could be persuaded to take hold of the management of the city's affairs and see that each department is conducted efficiently and economically we might see some improvement. At the present time the city's business is carried on in an antiquated and slip-shod fashion. There is no co-ordination between the various departments and the finances of the city need a thorough overhauling. We have reports to the effect that goods have been purchased by the different departments at different prices, and that the system of bookkeeping is loose and inefficient.

We do not contend that the appointment of a civic manager would bring the tax-rate down, but it would at least show us why the tax-rate is up, and whether it is justified or not. We are told that within the next year or so some of the old debts of the city will be paid off and our borrowing capacity will thus be increased. If this be so now is the time to get into our departments men who will not only be on their jobs but will be capable and wide awake to the best interest of the city.

A LEAGUE OF RIGHTEOUSNESS NEEDED.

Lloyd George has once more proved himself the master-spokesman for mankind. In his clear and ringing speech delivered on Friday before the British National Free Church Council in support of the League of Nations, the British Prime Minister sounded a clarion call for peace. Coming from one who threw himself heart and soul into the prosecution of the war against Germany, the call has greater effect than if it had been uttered by some weak-kneed and anaemic pacifist. The "little Welshman" is a fighter and has the courage of his convictions, but he has no time for fighting for its own sake.

In our news columns we reproduce a special despatch from London which gives the gist of the speech and it should be read and inwardly digested by all who are interested in the future welfare of mankind. Mr. Lloyd George points to the fact that the nations are constructing more terrible machines of war than even the late war ever saw, and he asks what these are for. They can be for nothing but the destruction of human life and property, and of that devilish business the world has surely had enough. The Prime Minister urged upon the church the duty of keeping before the people the futility of militarism as revealed in the last great conflict. He said the great lesson of the war was that big battalions were useless in an unrighteous cause.

This is one of the central truths of Christianity, that righteousness not only exalts, but will save a nation, and it will save the nations of the world if they will league together for that end. The League of Nations might more properly be called The League of Righteousness, for without that principle and motive it will become eventually a purely military combine.

SHALL WE JOIN THE ESKIMOS?

We are all relieved to know that there will be plenty of coal for the coming winter—at least, that is what we are told in a despatch from Washington. We had just about sorted out the particular articles of furniture which we would feed to the furnace next Christmas in case the coal-bin could not be replenished. Visions of the chopping up of chairs, sofas and pianos, the sawing down of doors and stair-rails, the burning of books, and even the sacrifice of precious manuscripts of immortal but unrecognized novels, tragedies and odes—all these dread fore-bodings have been ours during the last few weeks, but now all is well. Washington—a name which surely cannot stand for anything but the truth, has assured us that our fears were without foundation and that our household effects and our literary effusions are safe, plucked, as it were, as brands from the burning!

This question of fuel, however, is not solved by this assurance. We may be safe for the coming winter, but what of the winters to come? Scientists can see the end of the supply of coal, and if the United States' fuel resources should be so depleted that the American people would have to conserve them for their own use, we Canadians in these colder latitudes will have to take to snow huts, dress in fur combinations and live on blubber! In other words we shall become a new kind of blond Eskimo race to puzzle the explorers of the North in some new and far-off age of the world—b-r-r-ruh!

There are vacant lots in Belleville that are sowing the seeds of weeds for the benefit of next year's gardeners.

Is it in order to enquire as to when the instructions of the City Council for the taking of soundings for the baths on the Island Park will be carried out? It is an easy matter to pass resolutions, but we want a Council that has the initiative to put its resolutions into effect.

HERE AND THERE

THE STRENGTH OF THE HILLS.

By Gladys Head.

I know a village in the North,
A little village, gray and old,
That struggles down a hillside slope,
Upon a stretch of Yorkshire wold.

And twice a hundred folk live there,
And I have known them all by name,
And healed their hurts, and closed their eyes,
Kept open house, whoever came.

To eastward of the cobbled street
There broods the church of crumbling stone
Where still an ancient faith is kept,
And one red lamp burns dim and lone.

The doors stand open to the road
Where mothers and their babies sit
And chatter of the day's events,
Till sunset falls and lamps are lit.

And if you walk for half a mile
The village street is left behind,
And, eager is my heart's desire
To mount the fell and kiss the wind.

The joyous incense of the gorse,
The laughing heather 'neath my tread,
I'm not ashamed of these my tears—
You'd know, if you were Northern bred!

THE WORLD'S GREATEST MEN

Some time ago Mr. H. G. Wells gave his views in an American paper of the earth's six greatest men. This is how he compares them:—

Buddha
Asoka
Aristotle
Christ
Roger Bacon
Lincoln.

Arthur Brisbane, the brilliant writer of the column called "To-day," which appears in all the Hearst papers, took up the matter, and criticizing Mr. Well's choice, giving the following list:

1. Aristotle, greatest philosopher.
3. Michael Angelo, greatest in painting and sculpture.
2. Archimedes, greatest scientific mind.
4. Shakespeare, infinitely the greatest in writing.
5 Beethoven, greatest in music.
6. Newton, discoverer of the law of gravitation which rules the universe, greatest mathematical mind ever born on earth and a simple child outside of mathematics.

THE COLOR OF STARS.

Astronomers say that if the atmosphere were taken away and you could see what the heavens looked like then would you behold a gorgeous spectacle of yellow, blue, rose, red, violet and green colored stars blazing brilliantly in a black sky. Their hues would represent different stages in development of suns, and corresponding differences in amount of radiant energy given off. Blue stars emit about 2½ times as much heat as red stars of same magnitude. Great heat signifies an activity that engenders blue light waves; hence blue stars are hottest.

The sun is believed to be a blue star. It looks yellow because it is seen through gaseous atmospheric medium.

Sirius, the dog star, when seen through telescope, is very blue. It must, therefore, be extremely hot. In fact, though only a few times as big as the sun, its radiant energy is about 100 times as great.

Super-stars are bright red stars. They are red because they are young, i. e., in an early stage of development. They are masses of burning gas so diffuse as to have little weight in proportion to their vast bulk. Presumably the sun went through such a stage countless ages ago.

A TYPICAL QUAKER OF TO-DAY

(The Nation and The Athenaeum, London).

A Quaker soldier, as Fox himself recognized, is a contradiction in terms. The private duty of non-resistance, a duty which he, in his loyalty to the literal word of Christ, maintained from the first both by precept and example, can be no casuistry be made consistent with the public profession of arms. It was his refusal to serve in Cromwell's army at Worcester which earned for the founder of Quakerism his first long term of imprisonment. Yet he seems to have taken small pains to impress his own conviction upon his followers, and the negative character of his pacifist preaching is shown in his advice to William Penn on the carrying of a sword: 'Wear it as long as thou canst.' Once his followers had been directed to the Light Within, he was content that they should work out the details of their own conduct according to its guidance. This magnificent confidence was justified in the result.

There is no problem in psychology more attractive to the historian than the simultaneous development of the doctrine of non-resistance in the mind of the early Quakers, separated though they might be from each other and from their leader by leagues of sea or land. Quakerism was born amidst the last thunders of the Civil War: it found its readiest converts in the serious-minded soldiers of the Commonwealth—a soil one would have thought little adapted to the growth of pacifism. Yet it was Cromwell's Quaker soldiers who, in the last days of the Protectorate, refused the estates offered to them in Ireland, because they had been won by the sword; and it was a boatswain's mate on one of Admiral Blake's frigates who became the first Conscientious Objector amongst the Friends. This independent growth of conviction gives to the doctrine of non-resistance an authority, far higher than could have been imposed upon it from without, and stamps it as the logical outcome of a return to the message of Christ.

Through the centuries which have followed, this doctrine has continued to hold a central place in the teaching and practice of Friends. While their chief mission as a Society—the relief of suffering and the redress of injustice—has revealed itself more and more clearly, their testimony against war has developed as its almost inevitable corollary. When the recurring menace of war has brought them from time to time into conflict with the ruling powers, their refusal to take up arms has been made without hesitation and with practical unanimity.

But the call to arms which came to the youth of England in August 1914—the cry of Belgium, the threat of invasion of our own mother country—made a new and peculiar appeal to those whose sacred traditions involved the helping of the helpless and the defence of the weak. In those first days many young Quakers joined the fighting forces, and the Society of Friends, recognizing the purity of their motives and the difficulty of their choice, resolved to treat them with sympathy and not with excommunication, which has hitherto been the fate of those who renounced a Quaker principle. In 1916, however, when the Military Service Act became law, the glamor of the early months of war had faded, and any lingering illusion that evil could be overcome by the use of force was slain by a Bill which destroyed liberty of conscience. At a special Yearly Meeting the whole body of young men Friends, with very few exceptions, pledged themselves to resist the Act. Within a few months the majority of those who had thus pledged themselves were serving sentences of hard labor in prison—some had been condemned to death, a sentence which was afterwards commuted. Many even of those who had been willing to accept alternative work were confined in semi-penal establishments at Wakefield, Princetown, and other places. Amongst these Absolutists, who refused exemption and even peaceful service on the ground that they would thus be forcing others to fight in their stead, was George Lloyd Hodgkin, the account of whose short life has now been published by his sister. The story is presented with simplicity and candor, and wherever possible the subject of it is allowed to tell its own tale and expound his own thoughts. The result is most valuable as a record of the inner history of a Conscientious Objector, who was in many ways a typical example of the young Friend of today.

The youngest child of Dr. Thomas Hodgkin, the historian, and grandson on the mother's side of Luke Howard, the meteorologist and Quaker statesman, he was born into a wide inheritance, intellectual and spiritual. He was reared in all the best traditions of Quakerism, and the adoring friendship which he felt for his father—a feeling shared by every member of the family—combined to knit him to the faith of his ancestors. But it was during his years at Cambridge that he became a quaker by conviction, a change due in great part to his friendship with Caroline E. Stephen. This lady, the daughter of Sir James and sister of Sir Leslie Stephen, had been won to Quakerism by the attraction of its silent meetings, and her conversion is described by its latest historian as 'one of the most important events in the history of English Quakerism during the latter part of the nineteenth century.' The intimate correspondence, chiefly on religious matters, to which she admitted young Hodgkin was of incalculable help "And why not?" she countered. "Spil to him in shaping his judgments and defining his opinions, and was broken only by her death. A third friendship, formed somewhat later with a fellow Quaker who is still living and working, turned his thoughts and energies to social work and practical self-sacrifice.

Friendship is indeed the keynote of his life—a self-sacrificing love which set him by the side of the slum-dweller in Ancoats and Newcastle, which even during the Zeppelin raids could plead against reprisals, and led him finally to lay down his life for the starving refugees of Armenia.

For him when the war broke out there could be no question of compromise nor even of hesitation. His mind had been made up at least as long ago as 1909, when he had delivered in Australia an address on the subject of 'Peace and Patriotism.' He had appealed then not so much for a campaign against war, as for 'a patriotism not merely peace-loving, but hungering and thirsting for national righteousness.' This prayer finds an echo in his last letter written to his wife from Bagdad after four years' experience of the effects of war: 'I think a bigger ideal of what our country , and for is the thing to ask for.' The last sentences of his paper—an account of a pilgrimage undertaken by two members of the Fellowship of Reconciliation—form a fitting close to the memoir of one who himself stands in the true succession of Quaker heroes:—

'In quiet, home-like Meeting Houses the early Friends met together to shelter for a while from the blast of the world's hatred, and from out of these little sanctuaries they went quietly, ready to face every manifestation of that hatred. But they brought back a great hope into the hearts of men.

PRESS OPINIONS

THE CATTLE EMBARGO

The decision of the British Commons favoring the lifting of the embargo on the importation of Canadian cattle into Great Britain is generally looked on with a great deal of favor by men engaged in the live stock business. While the opinion expressed by local stock men when the news of the vote in the British House was received was to the effect that the Prairie Provinces would derive more benefit from the removal of the embargo, it was felt that it would have a beneficial effect on the raising of cattle in this Province. There is also a feeling that the removal of the embargo might be followed by the doing away with the Fordney tariff. If the Fordney tariff had not been in existence, the local markets would not have experienced the recent heavy receipts of unfinished Western cattle. Instead, they would have gone to the United States for feeding purposes, and, as it is, despite a 50 per cent. duty, American grazers have been active in the West lately. At the present time Alberta stockmen are asking for the support of the U.F.A. Provincial Government and various boards of trade, with a view to getting their influence to have the duty on feeders to the United States removed. It is urged that unless it is accomplished the stock-raising industry in Alberta will be ruined. One effect the removal of the English embargo would likely have here would be to advance the price of feeders. With present production the removal of the embargo might react on the consumer, but it is expected that it would result in a greater production, as farmers will feel that they will always have a market. With the embargo in effect, it was always more or less of a chance business; a decent price might be secured, and then, it might not. The embargo has been in effect for 30 years, and, while there has been an agitation against it all the time, it was only when the Fordney tariff came into effect that strenuous efforts were made to do away with it.

WIT AND HUMOR

KIPLING'S BAD BREAK

Simla is up in the mountains—the hills, as they say in India—and the women go there in the hot weather to escape the heat of the low country. One lovely cool morning at Simla, Rudyard Kipling was presented to a "grass widow." They call those women "grass widows" whose husbands are detained by work in the hot cities of the plains. She was very, very pretty and charming, and, as they talked together in the pleasant coolness, Kipling said: "I suppose you can't help thinking of your poor husband grilling down there?"

The lady gave him a strange look, and it was not until afterwards he learned that she was really a widow!

A Southerner recently saw at a rail way station in Canada an old negro, says the Columbia State looking helplessly about him.

"What's the matter, uncle?" he inquired. "Lost your way?"

"No, thank you, boss, not so you kin call it los, but I is lookin' for a colored ooman."

"Your wife?"

"No, boss, I ain't never seen her, but I ax de gemmum at de tocket winder how you git out huyh an' he say, 'You fin' a negress on dat side. And, boss, it been so long sence I seed a colored lady, I been mighty glad to know hit. An' I been goin' f'um side to side eber sence, an' boss, I cayn' fin' her nowhere."

Very Inconsiderate

A certain major bought a horse from a dealer and shortly afterwards the following conversation was heard:

"You have swindled me with that horse you sold me last week."

"How so?" asked the dealer, very much surprised.

"Well, I only had him for three days when he died.

"That's very strange. I owned him twenty-three years and worked him hard every day and never knew him to do that."

Since He Left

A country doctor, having obtained a better practice elsewhere, engaged the local grave digger and village factotum to remove his furniture.

Afterwards the doctor sent an account for medical attendance and the sexton sent his bill for the removal.

This the doctor said was a gross overcharge, and that if the man could get work removing furniture at the same rate he might as well give up grave digging.

The village dignitary replied:

"Dear Sir,—I would be very glad to get steady work at anything, as there has been almost nothing to do in the churchyard since you left."—Spare Moments.

THE KHAN, IN TORONTO TELEGRAM

The Mossback Measles.

It's going to run through the whole darn fambly. Lil' Sissie Ontario is first getting better or worse of these and now lil' Man Toby hes got 'em and they've got to keep the winder blinds down.

I suppose we've got to have the measles. The Mossback measles can't be any worse than the Tory chickenpox or the Grit itch. There is this about it, however; you're liable to get something out of the measles. You come acrost a deef person occasionally and if you make judicious enquiries you will learn that he "got" it out of the measles. Yes'n you can get sore eyes and glands and a whole lot of things out of measles, and that's what makes me uneasy about the case in the front bedroom. Our dear lil' Ontario is now to convalesce. But he had them bad, very bad. He broke out all over with Biggs, Drury, Doherty, and his poor lil' abdomen was all covered with Raney. But thank be, he is recovering slowly. He was delirious for a time and didn't want me to spend any holidays in Quebec this summer, but he is normal now.

It will be all right if he isn't permanently deef after this. There's plain measles and mossback measles and the latter are something fierce. The danger is that our lil' Ontario will emerge so deef that he can't listen to reason. His mind may be permantly affected. One of the worse deplorable symptoms of insanity is a violent hatred to one's best friends. When a person goes bughouse he appears to think he has a Divine command to take the good old shotgun or the axe and kill his old man, or his missus, or his lifelong friend. Sometimes nothing will do him but to go out and kill his girl.

This dear land of ours has many enemies, but who do you supose lil' Ontario when he was sufferin' from the mossback measles wanted to kill? He wanted to kill Adam Beck—the only friend he's got that's worth while. He wanted to kill Adam Beck, the man who has put this country in a position to look on the suicidal coal strike in the Beautiful States with complacency and fixed things so that our people can look forward next winter without an impulse to put on their flannel underwear and this the middle of summer! He wanted to go out and kill Adam Beck, the man who has fixed things so that the wheels will turn, by hedges, if never another sack of coal comes across Suspension Bridge!

Of course, the poor child was delirious. When you are off your nut you are not responsible, of course, but I hope we won't have to strap that husky young feller to the bed. He might kill Sir Adam—but Sir Adam's work is about finished—but he might hurt himself, that's what I am afraid of. In his old age he will have a lot of big regrets and I would protect him from that if I could.

When we quarrel with our best friends there is something the matter with our top storey. Sometimes we insist on quarrelling with our best girl. We accuse her of things she never did—we are unjust and brutal and cruel, but the secret lies in the fact that we love her. After all, we rarely quarrel with people whom we don't like.

One of these days young Ontario will be on its feet again, and I hope and pray that he won't be blasted with a Raney nose, or Drury eyes, Doherty ears or a Pete Smith mouth.

That the reason I dread the measles so. I believe that they have done more permanent harm than any other three diseases put together. And mossback measles are the worst kind.

That poor lil' Man Toby he's in for it for four years and I bet you the ice cream he comes out of it with glands.

This mossback measles is going to run through the whole outfit and our own Ontario, the banner province of the Confederation, will be the first to recover. We will be all the better for it. It is Nature's way to rid our system of poisons in the blood. One of these days we will wash off the goose grease and with the goose grease we will wash off the Raneys and the Dohertys and the Biggs, and the Pete Smiths and there will not be a pimple on us.

FOREST FIRES AND SPORTSMEN

Every forest fire destroys game and game cover. Less game means less sport.

Any lighted match, lighted cigar or cigarette or hot pipe ashes thrown down can start fire.

Different laws require guides, permits, or special times, places and ways for making camp fires. "Sports" neither know nor observe these things. A sportsman does.

Small fires are more comfortable and usable than big ones for cooking and warmth.

Fire is never out until it is dead. Smother out every spark with water or mineral soil before leaving it.

Act as though you were a forest fire warden in preventing and putting out fire and in demanding of others like care and like respect for forest fire laws.

It is to your interest and is a vital necessity to protect our forests from fire.

Woman's Sphere

MY HOME

This is the place that I love best,
A little brown house like a ground-bird's nest,
Hid among grasses, and vines and trees,
Summer retreat of the birds and bees.
The tenderest light that was ever seen
Sifts through the vine-made window screen
Lifts and quivers, and flits and falls
On home-made carpets and gray hung walls.

Although June, the west wind free,
The breath of the clover brings to me;
All through the languid July day,
I catch the scent of the new-mown hay.
The morning glories and the scarlet vine
Over the doorway twist and twine:
And every day when the house is still,
The humming-bird comes to the window-sill.

In the cunningest chamber under the sun
I sink to sleep when the day is done;
And am waked at mourn on my snow-white bed,
By a singing bird on the roof o'er head.
Far from the city's dust and heat,
I get but sounds and odors sweet
Who can wonder I love to stay
Week after week here, hidden away.
In this sly nook that I love the best
The little brown house like a ground-bird's nest.

SEASHORE MISHAPS

(By a swimming instructor.)

Are seaside bathing facilities preventable?

"Nerve" and the lack of it, is responsibl for many bathing catastrophes.

It is a common mistake to imagine everyone can bathe and swim with safety. Many who feel chilly, languid and depressed for hours after a "dip" should take it as a warning that sea bathing or swimming will do harm rather than good.

I have had numerous pupils seemingly fit in every way possible. But the heart was not strong enough to respond to all the calls made upon it. Such pupils took my advice and gave it up.

Defying Nature is unwise. It is responsible for scores of drowning accidents every holiday season. With a guiding hand they could not possibly happen.

Keeping a cool, clear head, knowing what to do, and doing it at the right moment will often avert the worst bathing-swimming mishap.

Few seem aware how efficacious is a common felt-hat when it comes to saving life from drowning. By placing the hat upon the water, rim down with the arm around it, and pressing it slightly to the breast, it can be made to support a person indefinitely.

Too often novices and inefficient swimmers, on finding themselves in difficulties attempt to swim instead of merely "floating."

Floating is not difficult. Lie face upward in the water, with the arms outstretched right and left to full extremity, and you will float like a cork. As the air may be inhaled without difficulty, the body is rendered buoyant and practically unsinkable.

Don't plunge, kick, struggle, or throw your arms out of water. Try treading water with your feet as in the act of walking upstairs, paddling with your hands all the time.

In seashore and river-bank mishaps, where rescue is sooner or later certain, never attempt to struggle out of your clothing. The air in it is only gradually displaced by water. Meanwhile it tends to buoy you up.—Daily Chronicle.

FASHION FANCIES

SUNSHADES AND HATS.

The sunshade has been revived.

With the advent of the automobile, the sunshade disappeared. Womenkind had enough to do to keep their chapeaux on while they were getting used to flying along the road in a "horseless" carriage, without trying to retain their grip on a sunshade, so they discarded it. Besides, no matter how carefully it was stowed away in the car, someone was sure to sit down on it or stumble against it and break the handle. For a time the umbrella makers tried to bridge the gap between a sunshade and an umbrella by giving us the latter with blue, green, purple, red or brown covers, but these no longer satisfy. We carry a red or purple umbrella on a wet day to brighten up the landscape, but for sunshine, we crave a sunshade, whether it be of chintz, gingham, printed silk or a fanciful affair of crepe de Chine or taffeta and lace.

The large, floppy-brimmed hats of rough, loosely-woven straw, timbo or even a leghorn, wreathed with wild flowers, are both practical and summery. They are to be had in sand shades which are considered very modish, and also in all kinds of bright colors, even a bright poppy red, no matter if it does look hot for midsummer. These shapes are sometimes used as a foundation for a silk crown or a leaf covering of georgette with long ostrich plumes dripping from the side in cavalier fashion. An all-white hat of this description looks very elegant.

For sports wear, the felt hat is very nice and decidedly fashionable. Traditions don't count for much where modern fashions are concerned. We used to think it a terrible disgrace if circumstances compelled us to wear our felt chapeaux any later than Easter Sunday, and now we wear them all summer. Most of these felt hats have rolling brims and are usually in the light colors such as grey, mauve, white and light jade.

The Daily Recipe

FRENCH TOAST WITH CHUSHED RASPBERRIES.

6 slices bread (stale).
1 cup milk.
2 tablespoons butter.
1 egg.
¼ teaspoon salt.
¼ cup sugar.
2 cups crushed raspberries, sweetened to taste.

Beat the egg slightly. Add milk, sugar and salt. Allow the slices of bread to remain, one at a time, in the egg and milk until thoroughly moistened.

Remove and fry in the butter in a hot frying pan until nicely browned Serve hot with the raspberries.

This is a good dessert for luncheon or supper.

BEAUTIFUL GIRDLES

Very beautiful girdles can be made when jade, ivory, amber, voral, cornelian and other fascinating and valuable materials are at hand, but very smart and pretty effects are to be gained with a judicious selection of colored wooden, china and glass beads and medallions.

Black, white, and red wooden beads, both round and oval-shaped, are a smart combination, while plaques in the form of Egyptian blue and green scarabs, joined by strings of small crystal beads, make an uncommon girdle.

The more unusual and barbaric the design, and the medium in which it is carried out, the more fashionable it is.

The girl interested in poker-work, filigree carving and painting has no difficulty in devising special novelties of her own. Small flat plaques of wood may be cut into quaint designs, or adorned with designs in vivid coloring, linked together with bone or metal rings, or separated by bright beads.

Be careful to use strong twine when stringing the beads, and secure them here and there with firm knots, since a girdle experiences a certain amount of wear and tear.—Daily Chronicle.

TOLD TO STEAL FROM PARENTS

A Peculiar "Frame up" by Parents to Get Son into Reformatory

Montreal, July 29.—To rid themselves of the burden of supporting their ten-year-old son, a mother and father "framed" the child and had him arrested on a charge which they hoped would land him in a reformatory for at least two years.

This is the story behind the arrest of a youngster on a charge of having stolen five dollars from his father and on a complaint laid by his own mother.

The officials of the juvenile court have taken the lad in hand and are keeping him away from his parents in the belief that he may be severely dealt with if he returns home. Action against the parents is being contemplated.

The whole story of a mother and father's duplicity came out at the boys ararignment in the juvenile court to-day

A few days ago the mother visited the court and asked that the boy be taken into custody as he had stolen $5 from his father. Court officials advised the woman to bring the boy to the court so that they might question him and deal with him according to the degree of his delinquency. But the mother protested that her ten-year-old was a "tough guy", and that he should be severely dealt with. Doubting the existence of so young a bad man, the official agreed to look into the case.

"Did you steal five dollars from your father?" the boy was asked. "Sure father told me to," the child answered. He then went on to tell how he had heard his father and mother discussing a plan for ridding themselves of him and how his father had ordered him to steal five dollars so that he might be arrested and sent to a refomatory. The parents apparently did not know that the youngster had overheard the plot.

FIGHTING RESUMES IN MESOPOTAMIA

British Have Landed Two Regiments to Reinforce Garrison There

Constantinople, July 29.—Fighting in Mesopotamia which many have liked to consider pacified since 1920 has been resumed.

Owing to Kemalist intrigues and the unpopularity of the ruling Moslem family, a nationalist anti-British movement has been started all over the country.

The Anti-British outburst, which at first was only local, seems to be growing general. Emir Abdullah, who is trying to restore his authority has asked the British to reinforce his army with British contingents.

Since the beginning of July the Mesopotamian situation has been growing worse. Abdullah's forces were defeated by Emir Ibnisound leader of the Nationalists, who claims the throne by virtue of his direct descent from the prophet while claiming Abdullah's family is on a branch. Many of the Arab tribes are dissatisfied with Abdullah's rule and disapprove the British interference with native affairs. They are supporting Ibnisound in consequence and he is reported to be nearing Mecca where King Husein will make an attempt to resist him.

The British have landed two infantry regiments to re-inforce the British garrison in Mesopotamia and have sent an ultimatum to Ibnisound demanding that he free Abdullah's messengers. Thus far there has been no reply to this ultimatum.

SMALL BOY SLEUTH SHADOWS HIS PREY

Toronto, July 29.—Pointed out to Constable Dunn on Queen street west on Wednesday night by a small boy, Patrick Murphy, 86 McCaul street, was arrested on a charge of theft. Murphy is charged with stealing two pairs of trousers from the store of S. Weisglass, 396 Queen street west. The youngster told the police he had seen Murphy put the trousers under his coat and walk out of the store and he followed him.

MINER'S WAGE AGREEMENT

Knoxville Tenn., July 29.—A wage agreement granting $2.50 a day increase to five thousand miners in 25 operations in the Kentucky Tennessee field was negotiated at Cincinnati yesterday between the unions and the Kentucky Tennessee Coal Operators Association, according to a statement given out here to-day.

TO BE EXECUTED FOR "ECONOMIC TREASON"

Moscow, July 29.—Four employes of Bobel Oil Co., tried for economic Treason have been sentenced to death by the revolutionary tribunate. One of them is Johan Harmsen, Dutch subject. Four bandits who terrorized Moscow inhabitants last winter have also been sentenced to death.

SAVED HER FROM AN OPERATION

So Thinks Mrs. Tracey of Ontario, Regarding Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Knightington, Ontario.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at the change of life for troubles that women often have at that time. I had not been well for a year and was not really able to do my work. A friend who had taken the Vegetable Compound herself recommended it to me and I think its use saved me from an operation. I highly recommend it to all women who have troubles like mine, and am willing for you to use my testimonial."—Mrs. Daniel J. Tracey, Knightington, Ontario.

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But the more common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing symptoms first appear take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles.

DARK THIEF TRAPPED

Theft of Razor Lands Colored Man in Toils—Bertillion Does Rest

Toronto, July 29.—Arthur Morlock, a colored man, was deported to the United States yesterday by the Canadian Immigration Department. Morlock left Toronto in custody of Detective James Leahley of St. Louis. The prisoner is wanted on a charge of assault and robbery, it being alleged that Morlock entered the office of a St. Louis manufacturing concern beat the cashier and stole $300.

Morlock was waiting trial in St. Louis, when he is said to have escaped, and making his way across the border came to Toronto, where he managed to avoid the police by staying in different cheap lodging houses.

Last week he was arrested by Plainclothesmen Davis and McArthur on a charge of stealing a safety razor from a branch of the Service Cigar Company at Queen and York streets. Morlock gave his name as Davis.

He was remanded, and during his stay in jail, the police had his Bertillion photo identified. He waived extradition and the immigration authorities communicated with the St. Louis police, with the result an officer came here to escort Morlock on from Black Rock, New York.

Wedding Bells

IRWIN — BROWN

On the evening of July 12th, Miss Edith H. Brown, youngest daughter of Mr. Marvel Brown, Thurlow, and Mr. Ross Irwin, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Anderson Irwin, Burford, Ontario, were quietly married at the Metropolitan Methodist Church parsonage by Dr. Trevor Davies, pastor of that church, Toronto. The happy couple spent their honeymoon visiting Niagara Falls, Buffalo and New York. A host of good wishes follows them from their many friends.

ON A HOT SUMMER DAY.

On a summer afternoon there is nothing more appropriate and certainly nothing more delicious than a cool refreshing drink of SALADA "ICED" Tea. The flavor is so distinctive and so appealing that "ICED" SALADA has become a most popular summer drink on all occasions. It is wonderfully refreshing. Ask for it today.

IN RIGA EVEN THE BEGGARS ARE ABLE LINGUISTS.

Riga, July 31.—There have been so many delegations of French officials and business men in Riga this summer that the French language is becoming popular, adding another tongue to the three others—Latvian, Russian and German—already recognized in the new Baltic state.

Because of the polyglot population of the country, Latvian money has the wording in Latvian, Russian and German. The telephone "hello" girls all speak these languages and some of them also English, French and Esthonian. Many of the Latvian government officials speak English and French. At the postoffice and at many other government bureaus the public notices are in the three official languages and this summer with inauguration of the aerial post, French has appeared on signs giving directions to the public for the proper posting of mail intended for the aviation service. In Riga the few beggars there are nearly all speak five or six languages, and some of them use very good English, picked up along the water front.

RUSSIANS ARE IN HOPEFUL MOOD

Lloyd George to Go on Conferring Until Peace is Established

London, July 29.—The debate in parliament on the results of the conference on Russian affairs at The Hague, although apparently only a repetition of previous statements regarding Russia, seems pretty clearly to indicate the British government's line of procedure during the next few months.

It appears to be settled Lloyd George will "go on conferring until peace is established in Europe and the world is restored to order." His statement that he has been allowing things to drift seems to be taking risks on matters which the world cannot possibly face at the present moment. This seems to reveal the intentions of the British government.

The United States can afford the luxury of not dealing with the Bolsheviki but Britain is so placed she must try everything even to the point of recognizing the Sovjet government and at the same time take no hasty action that might offend the other allied nations.

The government considers that the Russians are now in a much more hopeful mood and is prepared to proceed discreetly with independent negotiations if conditions warrant.

STORK WAS TOO LATE

Twins Arrive Just Too Late to Entitle Father to Allowance Comrade Injured

Port Arthur, July 31.—The star of ill luck hovered over the wigwam of Alexander Winigewasic one day last week, when Indian Agent W. Russell Brown visited one of the reserves to the pay the inhabitants their annual treaty money.

Winigewasic was one of the band and had received money for himself and wife. But, a few hours later, twins were born to his squaw.

Had the stork happened along before the money had been paid he would have received a further allowance for the children. He will now have to wait a year.

SON CHARGED BY HIS FATHER

Hymie Greenberg Accused of Tampering With His Father's Cellar

Toronto, July 31.—About a month ago, 130 bottles of liquor disappeared from the home of Dan Greenberg, 407 Manning avenue, Toronto. Soon after this disappearance of the liquor Hymie reenberg, son of the rightful owner of the missing liquor, also did the disappearing trick. He, it has now been ascertained, went to Hamilton. Among other places of interest he visited the Hamilton race track, where he contributed his fair quota to the provincial treasury. Further than that, he failed to establish a reputation for being anything like a good picker. Today Hymie stands in the unfortunate position of having to face a charge of theft of liquor, and that charge laid by his own father. Abe Stein is also charged with the same offence.

A Shock For Sam.

Sam Getlin of Sullivan street, Toronto, is another unfortunate in the case. Yesterday he came down to the City Hall to bail out a woman, guilty of a breach of the O. T. A., when, to his astonishment, he was arrested on the charge of having received stolen liquor.

BRITISH MINES BUSY

London, July 31.—Reports from Newcastle have been received to the effect that there are many Canadian enquiries there ffor coal for factories and railways. The demand from the Continent for coal continues, despite the increase in prices, and no reduction likely. A return to the three-shift working system at the docks, which ruled before the war, is being advocated as a remedy for the present congestion.

Home prices of coal, it is thought, are not likely to increase. The kind of coal used for household purposes here is not in great demand overseas.

The Miners' Federation, so far, is non-committal concerning the possibility of a sympathetic movement towards the miners in the United States who are on strike.

ONE DOLLAR CAN NOW BUY 2,000 CROWN IN HUNGARY

Budapest, July 31.—The fall in the crown is continuing. The value of the dollar is now nearing 2,000 crowns. Bread is 250 crowns a loaf. Hungarian money has lost 60 per cent. in value during the last fortnight. This is generally attributed to the collapse of the German mark.

STOLE AWAY!

And then (it seemed most astonishing!) nothing happened. The net outcome of all this fuss and fluster was precisely nil. With the collapse of the flimsy structure of prejudice and suspicion in which Manvers had sought to trap Iff, the interest of all concerned seemed to simmer off into apathy. Nobody did anything helpful, offered any useful suggestion or brought to light anything illuminating. Staff couldn't understand it, for the life of him. . . .

There was, to be sure, a deal more talk in the captain's cabin—talk in which the purser took little or no part. As a matter of fact, Manvers kept far in the background and betrayed every indication of a desire to crawl under the table and be a good dog. The captain had his say, however, and in the end (since he was rather emphatic about it) his way.

He earnestly desired that the matter should be kept quiet; it would do no good, he argued, to noise it about amongst the passengers; the news would only excite them and possibly (in some obscure and undesignated fashion) impede official investigation. He would, of course, spare no pains to fathom the mystery; drastic measures would be taken to secure the detection of the culprit and the restitution of the necklace to its rightful owner. The ship would be minutely, if quietly, searched; not a member of the crew, from captain to stoker, would be spared, nor any passenger against whom there might develop the least cause for suspicion. Detectives would meet the ship at New York and co-operate with the customs officials in a most minute investigation of the passengers' effects. Everything possible would be done—trust the captain! In the meantime, he requested all present to regard the case as confidential.

Iff concurred, somewhat gravely, somewhat diffidently. He was disposed to make no secret of the fact that his presence on board was directly due to the missing necklace. He had been set to watch Miss Landis, to see that she didn't smuggle the thing into the United States. He hoped she wouldn't take offense of this: such was his business; he had received his orders and had no choice but to obey them. (And, so far as was discernible, Miss Landis did not resent his espionage; but she seemed interested and, Staff fancied, considerably diverted.) Mr. Iff could promise Miss Landis that he would leave no stone unturned in his private inquiry; and his work, likewise, would be considerably facilitated if the affair were kept quiet. He ventured to second the captain's motion.

Miss Landis offered no objection; Staff and Manvers volunteered to maintain discretion, Jane was sworn to it. Motion seconded and carried: the meeting adjourned sine die; the several parties thereto separated and went to their respective quarters.

Staff accompanied Alison as far as her stateroom, but didn't tarry long over his second good-nights. The young woman seemed excusably tired and nervous and anxious to be alone—in no mood to discuss this overwhelming event. So Staff spared her.

In his own stateroom he found Mr. Iff half-undressed, sitting on the transom and chuckling noiselessly, apparently in such a transport of amusement that he didn't care whether he ever got to bed or not. Upon the entrance of his roommate, however, he dried his eyes and made an effort to contain himself.

"You seem to think this business funny," suggested Staff, not at all approvingly.

"I do," laughed the little man—"I do, indeed. It's a grand young joke—clutch it from me my friend."

"In what respect, particularly, do you find it so vastly entertaining?"

"Oh . . . isn't that ass Manvers enough?"

Further than this, Mr. Iff declined to be interviewed. He clambered briskly into his berth and chuckled himself to sleep. Staff considered his behaviour highly annoying.

But it was on the following day—the last of the voyage—that he found reason to consider the affair astonishing because of the lack of interest displayed by those personally involved. He made no doubt but that the captain was keeping his word to the extent of conducting a secret investigation, though no signs of any such proceeding appeared on the surface of the ship's life. But Alison he could not understand; she seemed to have cast care to the winds. She appeared at breakfast in the gayest of spirits, spent the entire morning and most of the afternoon on deck, the centre of an animated group shepherded by the indefatigable Mrs. Ilkington, dressed herself radiantly for the grand final dinner, flirted with the assiduously attentive Arkroyd until she had reduced Staff to the last stages of corroded jealously, and in general (as Staff found a chance to tell her) seemed to be having the time of her life.

"And why not?" she countered. "Spilt milk!"

"Judged by your conduct," observed Staff, "one would be justified in thinking the Cadogan collar an article de Paris."

"One might think any number of foolish things, dear boy. If the collar's gone, it's gone, and not all the moping and glooming imaginable will bring it back—why, that'll be simply good luck; and I've never found it profitable yet to court with a doleful mouth."

"You certainly practise your theory," he said. "I swear I believe I'm more concerned about your loss than you are."

"Certainly you are, you silly boy. For my part, I feel quite confident the necklace will be returned."

He stared. "Why?"

She opened her hands expressively. "I've always been lucky. . . . Besides, if I never see it again, it'll come back to me this way or that—in advertising, for one."

"Isn't that dodge pretty well worked out with the newspapers? It seems to me that it has come to that, of late; or else the prime donne have taken to guarding their valuables with greater care."

"Oh, that makes no difference. With another woman it might, but I"—she shrugged—"I'm Alison Landis, if you please. The papers won't neglect me. Besides, Max can do much as he likes with them."

"Have you—?"

"Of course—by wireless, first thing this morning."

"But you promised—"

"Don't be tiresome, Staff. I bought this necklace on Max's suggestion, as an advertisement—I meant to wear it in A Single Woman; that alone would help make our play a go. Since I can't get my advertising and have my necklace, too, why, in goodness' name, mayn't I get what I can out of it?"

"Oh, well . . ."

Staff abandoned argument and resting his forearms on the rail, stared sombrely out over the darkling waters for a moment or two.

WALLIE REID IN "RENT FREE" AT GRIFFIN'S

Wallie Reid's new Paramount picture, "Rent Free," which is being shown on the double feature program at Griffin's tonight to Wednesday, marks the beginning of the directorial career of Howard Higgin who for many years was production manager for Cecil B. DeMille. Lila Lee plays opposite the star and Henry Barrows, Gertrude Short, Lillian Leighton, Claire McDowell and Lucien Littlefield are also in the cast. An interesting scene is a set built upon the roof of one of the studio buildings, the set itself representing the top of a New York Apartment house. It is here that the star in the story, finds refuge after being driven right out on the roof of his own apartment by an irate landlady. Journeying over the roofs, he finally "squats" in a fine home, the owner being away, and takes possession and meets "the girl." The set was quite convenient for Mr. Reid for all he had to do to reach it was to run up a ladder from his own dressing room. Lila Lee is the girl.

Nimble wit and silver tongue kept the man of "Tracked to Earth," the Universal special attraction, starring Frank Mayo, the second five reel feature offering on the same program, out of the hands of a posse determined to hang him for stealing horses. On whom did he pour forth his eloquence?

A woman of course! She arrested him and on the journey to turn him over to the posse he argued her out of it. Supporting Frank Mayo are Virginia Valli, Harold Goodwin, Duke Lee and Jack Walters. "His Meal Ticket" a Fox Sunshine comedy is announced for exhibition on the same program.

AIRSHIPS MAY MAKE THEIR OWN CLOUDS

London, July 31.—Experiments shortly are to be made with a new type of smoke screen for the use of aircraft. A special apparatus will lay a trail of white smoke which, spreading rapidly downwards for a considerable distance, will form a curtain 40 to 50 feet hick. Behind this screen aircraft will be able to hide their movements from an approaching enemy.

FULL PANEL

The jurors filed into the jury box, and after all the twelve seats were filled there still remained one juror standing outside.

'If the Court please,' said the clerk, 'they have made a mistake and sent us thirteen jurors instead of twelve. What do you want to do with this extra one?'

'What is your name?' asked the judge of the extra one-'

Joseph Braines,' he replied.

'Mr. Clerk,' said the judge, 'take this man back to the jury commissioners, and tell them we don't need him, as we already have here twelve men without Braines.'—Tit-Bits.'

G.T.R. TEAM LOSE TO PETES

Eleven Innings' Game at Peterboro on Saturday Last

Before a large crowd of spectators at Peterboro, on Saturday, Belleville went down to defeat by 8-7 in an eleven innings contest. There was a good number of Belleville fans among the crowd who motored out to see the game and they sure got their money's worth. There was something doing every minute in Saturday's epochal diamond contest between the G.T.R. and Jakie Solomon's clients. Both teams stayed right to the finish, which was a sad one for Belleville to lose. No more remarkable game has ever been staged at Riverside Park. It was brimful of incidents and base hits as flies in a meat emporium, but hard luck prevented the G.T.R.'s from bringing home the bacon. It might be said right here that the game was lost and won a number of times for both teams by the umpires. There was quite a lot of kicking over the base decisions by both teams. Also the pitchers were not satisfied with the plate umpire's decisions as he was not giving them the corners. Belleville team certainly missed Bill Mills behind the bat, and if he had been there the score might have been different. But Goyer, who took his place, did very well, being his first workout with the team. He caught a fine game, but was a little off in throwing to second. Mallen pitched a fine game, as also did Heckman. Hagerman made a fine throw of Heckman's hit to left field fence, in the ninth, in which Belleville got a double play. COBOURG BY 12 TO 2 WIN FROM LEASIDE TEAM

Cobourg, Ont., July 30.—Leaside played its second section league fixture here at Horse Show Park on Saturday afternoon and the home team secured sweet revenge for the elimination they received at the hands of Lefty Maguire and his Toronto suburban team mates from first section honors. Lefty worked along until the seventh, when he was touched for singles and a home run and, sandwiched with a couple of walks, four runs was the result. After getting away to a bad start in the 8th, he was derricked, and Breckenbridge was sent to the rescue, but he fared no better, as Cobourg touched his offerings for three singles, a double and a circuit clout for four more runs. Derry, who worked for Cobourg, alowed Leaside two runs in the second on an error and a couple of bingles, after which he held the Westerners safe, pitching himself out of some tight places.

Batteries — Maguire, Breckenridge Clarke and Hoose; Derry and Tyson.

Umpires—Kay at plate; Rosevear on bases.

Saturday scores were:—

Cobourg 12, Leaside 2; Bowmanville 9, Port Hope 7; Peterboro 8, Belleville 7, (11 innings); Oshawa 5, Lindsay 3.

Wednesday games and umpires—Cobourg at Bowmanville, Rosevear and Wilson; Peterboro at Port Hope, MacDonald and Boundy; Belleville at Lindsay, Kay and Barnes; Oshawa at Leaside, Gloster and Butler.

BOWMANVILLE IS LEADING IN C. O. B. LEAGUE

Bowmanville, July 30.— Lloyd Chambers is proving to be the iron man of the Bowmanville ball team this season. After pitching his team to victory at Leaside on Wednesday, he stepped into the box in the fourth inning Saturday after Port Hope had secured a lead of four runs and piloted Bowmanville to a 9 to 7 victory. It was a batting feast for both teams but errors on the part of Port Hope were costly. Rowden replaced Hall behind the bat in the second inning when his finger was split by a foul tip. The Bowmanville players showed considerable improvement in their batting, which was weak during the first series games. After occupying the last position in the Central League in the first series, Bowmanville is now heading the league, and the town is to-night baseball wild. A record crowd is looked for on Wednesday when Cobourg plays here. Line-up:—

Bowmanville—Stark, 3b; Hicks l.f; Moise, c.f; Mingeaud, 2b; Piper and Bate, c; Corden, 1b; Mills, r.f; Williams, s.s; Somerville and Chambers, p.

Port—Rowden, 3b; C. Hills, 1b; Boyd, r.f; Hall, c; Teeple, s.s; McNeil, 2b; Micks, 3b; Fair, c.f; Deer, p.

POOR BASEBALL GOOD FINANCING

Bowmanville Team Has Big Bank Roll in Spite of Their Position

Bowmanville, July 27.—After occupying the cellar position for the entire first series in the Central Ontario League, Bowmanville starts at the top of the pile in the second series by defeating Leaside on their own grounds.

Bowmanville may not have the best ball team in the league, but in high financing they are winners. A losing team is generally a losing proposition, financially, but in the first series of games Bowmanville only won one game in fourteen played and still the treasury has a balance of over $200 to its credit, with everything paid to date.

BANTAMWEIGHT IS AFTER WORLD TITLE

London, July 28.—Thomas Harrison of Hanley, British bantamweight champion, may go to the United States in quest of the world's title, recently won by Joe Lynch from Johnny Buff. Harrison recently knocked out Jim Higgins, the British title holder, in the 13th round of their match.

Although Harrison has established himself as superior to other English 118-pounders, many of the boxing critics believe he should bolster his record before going after Lynch, one of the cleverest little men in the world. Higgins, defeated by Harrison, was a victim of Pete Herman's cudgels when the American invaded the Isles.

RIFLE SHOOTING

This will be the final shoot before going to Toronto where the team will commence on Monday, 7th August competing for the Ontario Rifle Matches.

STOLE CITY'S $20,000 TO GET MEDICAL AID FOR BROTHERS

New York, July 27.—Judge Johnstone in General Sessions remanded James T. Harris, former clerk in Controller Craig's office, to the Tombs until Friday, when he will be sentenced on a plea of guilty to the theft of $600 from the city. Harris, who lived at 622 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, was twenty-three years in the Finance Department.

Chief Assistant District Attorney Pecora said Harris actually stole about $20,000, had made a full confession and would appear as a witness for the city in litigation growing out of the clerk's disposal of the bonds deposited by bidders on city work.

Harris fled to Pittsburgh in December, 1920, and was arrested on his return on May 16, 1921. He told Mr. Pecora he stole to provide medical care for his two brothers, one of whom, he said, died three weeks ago. The second brother, Harris added, now is a patient in the Kings County Hospital.

LONDON MAY BECOME A CITY WITHOUT SLUMS

London, Jluy 29.—Twenty-two og the worst slum areas in London are to be wiped out by the London City Council. The work is to be spread over the next ten of twelve years and the government will assist in it.

"When the scheme, which involves nothing less than the clearance of all the slum areas in London, is completed," says Colonel Levita, chairman of the Housing Committee, "it will have entailed the displacement of some 45,000 people, and an expenditure of many millions of pounds. The main idea is to make London a slumless city.

"Such work cannot, of course, be done on a strictly economic basis but London will benefit greatly by the intensive campaign it is intended to pursue, for better housing all round will mean better health and therefore a happier people."

LONDON NOT READY FOR SKYSCRAPERS

Council has Made Some Concessions as to Height, However

London, July 31.—The London County Council has made some concessions to the demand of West End business firms that they be allowed to erect loftier and more commodious stores, but these concessions fall far short of permitting the construction in London of buildings modeled after American sky-scrapers.

"The concession as to height asked for was 120 feet maximum on favorable sites," explained the secretary of the Retail Distributors' Association which had been the prime movers in the matter. "We have been authorized to put up buildings that are 80 feet high to the ceiling of the topmost floor, and on favorable sites the municipality may permit buildings to be erected that are 100 or even 140 feet high.

"The London County Council has conceded greater space for departments. The old regulations restricted cubic capacity to 200,000 feet. This was imposed because the old-fashioned methods of displaying new materials in buildings of a conjested nature increased the risk of fire. fire.

"The concession of a cubic capacity of 500,000 feet which has now been made, or a limit of 40,000 square feet floor space for any one department, will enable us to secure floor space equal to that of any of the magnificent stores in America, with one or two exceptions."

How far London is from having attained the sky-scraper stage will be realized when it is understood that the highest building in London is Whitehall Court, the home of the National Liberal Club, which is 110 feet high. The highest building in the country is in Liverpool, and is 420 feet high to the top of the tower, but the actual main building is only 210 feet high. The next highest is a steamship company building, also in Liverpool, and is 140 feet high.

BELGIAN GOVERNMENT TOO POOR TO TAKE PART IN EXHIBITIONS

Brussels, July 28.—The depleted state of the public treasury prevents the Belgian Government's official participation in the international expositions planned for Belgium in the next ten years.

The last mentioned will commemorate the 100th anniversary of Belgium's independence.

RUSSIANS NOT SO STUPID

"Stupid" Peasants Assume The Attitude to Strike a Bargain

Kazan, July 31.—The Russian peasant, upon intimate contact, has been found to be not so illiterate or so stupid as it has been the habit to represent him. While he may not always be able to read, he possesses a natural shrewdness and intelligence which stand him in good stead. A practical common sense is often a good substitute for book learning.

American Relief Administration workers have had much to do with the Russian peasant in their various activities in these lands, and have come to regard him with respect.

"How is it", one of the Russian interpreters asked, "that although these peasants cannot read and write they seem to be able to make accurate computations, and to master the intricacies of the Russian currency? They seem to understand perfectly even the new bank notes in which those marked 100 rubles equal those put out last year which were worth 1,000,000.

"They appreciate the value of stupidity", was the answer. 'They like to appear simple, more simple than they are. It is partly a pose with them, but it has its practical side, too. They appear guileless and manage to drive a good bargain because their very guilelessness allays the suspicion of the person with whom they are dealing.

"I hand them a 1,000,000 ruble note, 'What is this', they ask. I tell them it is a million. They accept it. But try handing them a 100,000 ruble and say that it is a million. They will shake their heads. You may point out that it has many ciphers following the figure. They will not accept it. 'But', you persist, 'you cannot read, why do you think I am lying to you'. 'But I have never seen that sort of a million before', they answer and they will not take it.

"You take a paper to a peasant to be signed. He looks at it and asks what it is all about. You read it to him. He nods but protests that he cannot write. 'Let some one else write my name on it', he says and later he may repudiate the agreement, saying that he never signed it and did not even know what it contained.

"I believe that many of them who can both read and write are careful to conceal that knowledge, believing that it will be to their advantage to do so. They are not so stupid as they appear."

TAX RATE "A DISGRACE"

So Says Alderman Robinson

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir—When the rate of 38 mills of taxes for the present year was announced in the Council last Friday night, I took occasion to make a few remarks thereon in which was interspersed some allegory and a little hyperbole as seemed appropriate for the occasion. Among other things I said that the Aldermen evidently possessed backbones of the nature of sausages, they being too pliable when grants of different kinds were asked for by all sorts of people. I declared that backbones of the consistency of adamant were necessary for the protection of the financial interests of the taxpayers in muncipal affairs. I also said that thirty-eight mills was in my opinion a disgrace to Belleville or any civilized community where such high taxation was necessary. But on the contrary Ald. Ostrom thought this rate "very creditable." He also declared that "he wondered that Ald. Robinson could expect a lower rate when his own department of market and city property had jumped up a thousand dollars or so in the year."

I presume that Ald. Ostrom loomed up to a very high degree in the way of self esteem when he thought he was warranted in making this statement. But he should know by this time that it is necessary to be possessed of real solid facts instead of fiction when criticising Ald. Robinson.

Now the truth in this case is that the estimate for the department of Market and City Property for this year is well on to one thousand dollars less than it was last year instead of being a thousand dollars greater, as Ald. Ostrom sttaed.

My remarks were not directed particularly against legitimate expenditure, but rather against extravagant and unnecessary expenditure of the city's funds and lack of economy. So that Ald. Ostrom's argument was very weak even if his statement in reference to my department was true.

The Little Stenographer of Brockton

By WILL T. AMES

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"But, mother, I love her." Philip Gunter looked imploringly at his mother, an expression of suffering in his fine gray eyes.

"You don't really. No son of mine could possibly love a motorman's daughter. And think of the opportunities you have and are throwing them away for a little, middle-class, Brockton stenographer."

"Mother, I can't let you talk like that about Edith, and I'll ask you to avoid mentioning her in the future."

"Holty toity! How pompous we are, and as surely as you do marry her I'll disinherit you and you can have love in a cot—the real thing."

"I don't care a snap of my finger whether you disinherit me or not."

With finality he rose to go, and frantically Mrs. Gunter cast about for another line of tactics.

"Ah, but Phil," she exclaimed, dropping her haughty manner and holding out her arms pleadingly, "you know how I love you, my only boy, and this thing will kill me. It will grieve me to death—you know my heart is bad—and my whole life is wrapped up in you. I lie awake at night dreaming about you and planning your future."

Philip winced and a cloud passed over his clean open face as he rose and put his arm about his mother.

"There, there, Momsy, don't get so worked up."

A maid tapped at the door and presented a card.

"Heavens! Mrs. Mangston's downstairs. Go and talk to her, Phil. I'll come in a minute."

Grateful, for the escape, the young man greeted the caller warmly.

"How's it going?" the lady asked with motherly concern.

"Worse than ever. She's just made a dreadful scene and I feel like a murderer."

"Sh-h-h-h, here she comes."

"My dear Mrs. Mangston, what a pleasure this is!" said the hostess cordially.

With a bow Philip excused himself and soon the two were deep in conversation.

"Yes," said Mrs. Gunter bitterly, "the boy's determined to marry this little stenographer in Brockton and as surely as he does it I'll cut him off without a farthing."

Her voice shook as she spoke and the heavy diamond brooch sparkled and glittered with the rise and fall of her breast.

"Even if you do cut him off that won't prevent his marrying her. What you seem to want to do is to prevent the match," said Mrs. Mangston thoughtfully.

"But how?" asked the other desperately.

"Another girl is usually the best cure," remarked the caller.

"But he says he's sick of girls in his set. He calls them artificial and empty-headed and won't look at them any more."

"Of course not; it'll take some new girl that'll sweep him off his feet."

"But where can we find such a creature?"

"Let me think." Mrs. Mangston puckered her brow as she stared absently at the floor. "Now, I have a sister who has just moved here," she went on after a moment, "and it seems to me that she said that she was going to have a little girl visiting her next week. I might get up a dinner in her honor and invite you and Phil."

"That would be wonderful if you could," said Mrs. Gunter, enthusiastically.

"Good! This girl's coming Monday; let's make the dinner Wednesday."

"You're really too kind," smiled Mrs. Gunter as they parted.

"Not in the least. I'm simply so devoted to Phil that I would do anything in the world to help him out."

Anxiously Mrs. Gunter waited for the appointed time, and after much coaxing, persuaded her son to accompany her.

"Dinners are always a bore, and I know more girls than I want to know," he grumbled as he jerked on his dinner jacket.

They arrived punctually and with covered eagerness Mrs. Gunter watched the meeting between her son and the girl and was gratified to note a glint of admiration in Phil's eyes as he took Randolph Parker's hand. Later, she decided that she had never seen him so brilliant and entertaining as he was at dinner that night.

"It's working beautifully," she whispered to her hostess.

"But she's such a lovely girl, who could help being gone over her?" replied Mrs. Mangston.

"Who, indeed? Now, why couldn't he have fallen for a girl like that in the first place? How long's she going to stay?"

"Two weeks."

"Better than nothing."

As they took their leave the mother rejoiced to hear her son say:

"Have you any engagement for tomorrow afternoon, or may I take you out in the car and show you some of our points of interest?"

"I shall be glad to go," said Randolph, as she extended her hand.

"Isn't she the most fascinating thing you ever saw? And what beautiful hair and eyes she has!" raved Mrs. Gunter on the way home.

"She's all right," answered the man carelessly.

"I'm going to give a reception and dance for her Friday night," his mother babbled on. "We must show her a good time—let her see how hospitable our city is to strangers."

As the days passed Mrs. Gunter went into ecstasies to learn that practically every day her son took Randolph out, although he never mentioned it to his mother.

"I think they're simply crazy about each other," Mrs. Mangston told Mrs. Gunter toward the end of the visit.

"If we could only make a match of it before he gets his mind on his old flame again."

"It isn't wise to show eagerness," admonished the other woman.

"I know it, but how can you help it when your heart's set on a thing? I don't know a girl I'd rather Phil would marry."

Randolph was persuaded to extend her visit another week, but at last the day arrived when she had to leave. Mrs. Gunter upbraided herself for having foolishly hoped to hear of their engagement.

"Three weeks," she scoffed to herself. "I'm an idiot to expect them to do it in so short a time."

She was interrupted by the sound of suppressed laughter followed by a knock outside her door.

"Come in," she called, and in walked Philip and Randolph holding hands like two school children.

"Mother, I want to introduce my wife!" said Phil happily.

"What! Why, it can't be possible! My dear children," she laughed and wept as she took them both in her arms. "I loved you the second I saw you, Randolph, and how I wanted you to marry Phil!"

"Mother, this makes me so happy," said her son, "because she's really Edith, you know."

Mrs. Gunter opened her mouth to speak, but no sound came forth as she stared at the girl incredulously. At last she spoke:

"I understand now why Phil was willing to give up his inheritance and defy his mother. Under the circumstances I should have done so, too."

"Mother, you're a regular trump!" exclaimed her son as he gave her a bear hug and waltzed her across the floor.

Argonne.

The silver striper was an honest man, but he was in love with a girl who demanded deeds of daring.

"Tell me," she breathed, "what was the greatest battle you were in?"

"Ah, g'wan," he replied with embarrassment.

"My hero," she cried, falling on his neck, and they were married next month.—American Legion Weekly.

Useful Knowledge.

Farmer Anderson: "So your boy's got home from college. Does he take any interest in the farm?"

Farmer Bowley: "He's beginning to. He's been showing me where we could have a fine golf course an' how easy 'twould be to turn the barn into a garage."

Healthiest Year.

The year 1921, according to the records of thirty-seven insurance companies, comprising figures for 27,000,000 lives, was the healthiest year in the whole history of the United States and Canada.
